Materials used by the director of a project designed to assist key personnel in businesses, industries, and agencies with the educational counseling of their employees are presented. The objectives of the project, "Training Mentors as Educational Advisors of Adult Learners," were to: (1) provide two training sessions in educational counseling techniques; (2) create a linkage system between business and local educational institutions; and (3) raise awareness of the impact of high technology on assisting adults with career changes and educational goals. The manual is divided into three sections. Section I contains transparencies used in promoting support and assistance in participant recruitment. Section II provides summary analyses of the two workshops and suggestions for persons who wish to adopt the project as a model. Section III offers materials to assist in planning a similar program including a time line, letters, flyers, agendas, and evaluation forms. (DC)

EDUCATIONAL MENTORING: A PROCESS MANUAL FOR MANAGERS

INTRODUCTION

Three Products were developed for dissemination under Brevard Community College's 310 Special Demonstration Project for 1982-1983, "Training Mentors as Educational Advisors of Adult Learners."

- "Brevard County's Directory of Educational Options for Adults"
- "Educational Mentoring: A Quick and Handy Guide for Advisors"
- "Educational Mentoring: A Process Manual for Managers"

All three publications are important to the project's major objectives which were:

- to provide two training sessions for key personnel in local businesses, industries, and community agencies in educational counseling techniques by increasing knowledge about motivation and communication skills used with employees and clients.

- to create an educational linkage/brokering system between business, industry, and community agencies with local educational institutions.

- to raise the level of awareness about how high technology is producing a need for improved delivery systems to assist adults in meeting life career changes and set realistic educational goals.

This "Educational Mentoring: Process Manual for Managers" incorporates principal components used by the project director to implement the concept and project objectives. The manual is divided into three major sections. SECTION 1 comprises actual communications used with staff and the advisory committee to promote support and assistance with recruitment of participants for training. Large type was used for translation into overhead presentations. SECTION 2 provides the summary analyses of the training workshops, addressing strengths and weaknesses of each session. No attempt has been made to include material presented by the consultants since this information is summarized in the "Educational Mentoring: A Quick and Handy Guide for Advisors." (This booklet is an accessory to the educational directory). Included in this segment is a topic entitled, "A Few Suggestions for Planning a Mentor Training Program," which may be of interest to those contemplating the model's adoption. SECTION 3 reproduces the major project communications with staff, advisory committee, consultants, prospective participants for training, and local educational institutions. This accumulation of a time line, letters, flyers, agendas, and evaluation forms can assist... program managers in planning procedures. Added is information on how to devise the educational directory. The reference portion contains statistics and readings about educational mentoring which were useful in gaining allegiance to the project's objectives. Reprints were given as handouts to participants at the training sessions.

It is felt that a process manual for managers is feasible for any special demonstration model being considered for adoption by a district or community college. Although each district/college may differ in its needs and characteristics, an already developed model can save time, effort, and implementation costs.

If a plan for initiation of the educational mentor role is being given consideration and additional questions and consultant services are needed, please contact the resource provided in this document.

"Training Mentors as Educational Advisors of Adult Learners"

SUMMARY ANALYSIS - Training Session #1

The major emphases of the "Educational Mentor Training Program" were to involve key personnel in business, industry, and community agencies in a series of workshops to 1) increase their knowledge about educational options available for adults in the county, 2) enhance competencies related to counseling/advising adults who need or want a return to schooling, and 3) create a network/referral system between business, industry, and community agencies with educational institutions. An "educational mentor" on the job attuned to adult learner needs could improve employee/employer relationships and stimulate personal growth on the part of employees.

Assumptions were made that personnel directors and counselors would be willing to participate in two days of training with no registration fees charged. Limitations were recognized in that two days would be insufficient training for some and probably enough for others. It was at first considered that community agency personnel would be a separate group from business/industry personnel because of the varying needs of the participants and clients they serve. However, the grant was not sufficient to cover the cost of more than two sessions. It was also felt that the two groups needed to come together in at least one session in order to share information, concerns, and diversities. Because of these definite diversities, evaluation of the first training session reflected both positive and critical attitudes.

Out of the 49 registrants, 3 represented major hospitals, 7 city governments, 4 Child Care Association, 8 Vocational Rehabilitation and CETA, 2 from the Housing Authorities, 3 Social Services, 3 the military, 1 from a bank, 2 representing Sears and J.C. Penneys, 2 small businesses, 9 major companies, 5 adult and continuing education programs.

It was anticipated that community agencies would be the most responsive to training due to the fact that clients served are usually the least educated. Industries and companies on the most part hire postsecondary people with the minimum of a high school diploma. In many cases they feel employees are self-reliant enough to take care of their own educational goal setting. Also, companies offer much in-house training and normally target personnel for special training to benefit the company.
Recognizing this latter problem as regards to recruitment, a special consultant was contracted to assist with enlisting participants from local large companies for involvement in the training sessions. Twenty companies were selected and contacted by phone and a special invitational letter. Based on response, an announcement flyer was mailed. Ten of the companies expressed interest in attending. Three called a few days before the workshop to cancel due to legitimate problems. There were three (3) out of the ten (10) in attendance at the session.

A staff advisory group, representing adult, continuing and BCC programs, assisted in making contact with businesses and agencies. Since there had been some previous interaction for educational purposes with these businesses and agencies, response was more positive. Actual attendance, with four called-in cancellations, was 28. The grant called for a minimum of 30. Twelve (12) came from community agencies, 3 from city governments, 1 from a bank, 1 from a hospital, 1 from Sears, 3 from large companies, 2 representing small businesses, and 5 adult educators.

With approximately 15 participants sharing a background well versed in counseling undereducated adults mixed with a small group associated with better educated employees, there resulted varied attitudes toward the training session.

It was decided that evaluation would be completed through a follow-up mailout and phone calls. Fifteen forms were returned and those who did not return the form were called by phone. Most all participants reported to individuals or in a meeting about the training session. Several responded in a written report. Seven (7) said they discussed the training with other companies or agencies. Thirteen (13) had contact with clients whose educational level was below the 12th grade. Ten said they dealt with clients beyond high school and 4 indicated in-house training was their primary contact with adults as to educational pursuits.

Topics of major interest presented at the session were:
1. educational resources provided from local institutions
2. motivational techniques
3. communication skills
4. career goal setting
5. psychology of adult learning
6. group activities
7. packet information
8. film: "Private Lives"

There appeared a need for more information to be presented on motivation, communication skills, techniques for mentoring, and general knowledge about educational options available; specifically, vocational training programs.

Participants in general felt the afternoon session on motivation too "elementary" for their needs. The presenter had under-estimated their previous training. Information was considered too basic without enough group activities that challenged the "how to do" aspect. However, those representing companies found the topics discussed of interest to them and made favorable comments.

The morning session was rated above average. More group activities that involved interaction and specific problem solving were requested. Statements were made by the presenters on several occasions that there was a time limitation on how much could be covered and that "in depth" training was not possible during these short sessions. The group did perceive the educational mentor role as important to their jobs, but needed more clarification on how to implement this concept. The group requested a need for information on the following topics:

1. networking
2. motivational techniques
3. communication skills
4. educational/vocational training available
5. information on types and content of courses available
6. availability of waivers/scholarships
7. community resources
8. more on psychology of adult learning
9. demonstration on how to handle the mentor role
10. education of personnel from business/industry on the handicapped and deprived

Overwhelmingly, the group was positive about the availability of an "educational directory." In talking with companies, this booklet was recognized as a valuable document to be shared when recruiting out of state employees.
Several measures were taken by the project director to meet the needs, as expressed through the evaluation processes, for Training Session #2:

1. Follow-up phone calls were made to participants to assess evaluations of the first session and needs for the second training session.

2. A personal visit was made at Florida Atlantic University on December 10, 1982 with the two consultants to the January 28 workshop. An analysis of the first session was made through a sharing of information relative to evaluations and training needs of the group. A tentative agenda was planned.

3. A summary report was prepared on the first session and attached to an announcement and registration letter. This was mailed out on January 3 to not only the 28 original participants, but to the total number who had indicated they had planned to attend. Eighteen (18) additional businesses were targeted and issued invitations through the original flyer announcement. A total of 66 invitations were mailed. (Originally, it was felt that a person should be in attendance at both sessions, rather than one. However, the second session was planned in such a way that attending the final session would serve the grant's objectives. Also, by sending a summary report of the first session, new trainees would be knowledgeable enough to serve in a mentor role.

4. A panel presentation was organized representing adult basic education, high school completion, continuing education, BCC programs, the University of Central Florida, Florida Institute of Technology, and the Patrick Center (several university programs). This group will discuss educational program options on January 28.

5. The final draft of the "educational directory" was sent to word processing on December 20 with indications that this would be completed by January 7. A "draft" copy with an evaluation form will be made available to the participants at the January 28 meeting with assurances that the final product will be mailed out in March. Fifty (50) copies will be evaluated by the trainees, staff members, and key institutions. Budget restrictions will limit the number printed and distributed by the college, however contacts will be made with local banks and businesses to reprint the directory for distribution through their efforts.

The "Training Manual for Educational Mentors" will be composed of processes explored in the two sessions. A cassette tape was made of the first session, but because of the voice levels and movements, was not clear. It did serve to assist with written material. The manual will probably be more useful to a person or organization that wants to implement the project rather than for businesses and community agencies. The consultants have agreed to assist with the development of a brief guide to "educational mentoring" which could prove a valuable reference to those persons who want to work with employees or clients on educational goal setting. This should be available by April, 1983.

The "feedback mechanism," that is an essential part of this project, has evolved in the following ways:

1. Contacts made with key personnel in business, industry, and community agencies through implementation of the project.

2. The "educational directory" which contains information on educational institutions and programs available for adults within Brevard, as well as addresses of all state institutions, public and private. Contact persons are named for specific programs. Special emphasis is placed on adult education, continuing education, and BCC program.

3. Agreement with participants that they will be involved in responding to a written survey and follow-up phone calls as to the effectiveness of their educational mentor role on the job.

"EDUCATIONAL MENTOR TRAINING PROGRAM"

Training Session #2

SUMMARY ANALYSIS

January 28, 1983

The January 28, 1983 session of the "Educational Mentor Training Program" can be considered a success in the following areas:

1. The consultants were well prepared addressing a needs assessment conducted with participants after the first session.

2. The evaluations completed by participants indicated a very high degree of learning, involvement, and growth.

3. The nine new participants indicated positive attitudes toward the workshop and a desire to have attended the first session.

4. The panel composed of eight local educators presented relevant information and materials that were well received.

5. The educational directory (draft copy for evaluation) was available to participants and responses have been all positive as to its usefulness to the community and to the educational mentor role.

6. The session was well-planned and participants received additional resources for the mentor role.

7. Participants represented a good cross section of business, industry, and community agencies.

8. There was appreciation expressed for the "certificates of training" given out to each participant at the end of the session. (These serve as an "identifier" of a person available in a company/agency to assist with educational counseling).

Out of the 37 people who had originally indicated they would attend the January 28 session, 29 were in attendance. Three called in to cancel due to conflicts: two called in substitutes who came, and six did not call or attend. It is interesting to note that the six not responding were large companies in the area. Their confirmed attendance was made by telephone the previous week to the workshop. All participants in the first workshop were called to enlist their participation. None of those who attended the first session and not the second one gave the reason that the training was not worthwhile. All were interested in the mentor role, but had prior commitments. Because they were involved in the first training session, they received a certificate and a copy of the educational directory through the mail.
The following breakdown indicates the characteristics of the participants:

- 29 in attendance
- 60 invitations mailed out
- 9 new trainees (8 of the 9 completed the session)
- 21 completed
- 37 responding to attend the session
- 37 total number involved in training
- 6 no show, no notifications
- 3 called in cancellations

A Few Suggestions for Planning a Mentor Training Program

It is felt that the "Mentor Training Program" is a worthy model for any urban community to adopt with excellent cost effectiveness. Major benefits of such an effort are good community relations, closer ties with business, industry, agencies with educational institutions, and an enhanced referral/linkage system. The model presented here can serve to alleviate much of the research and initial planning needed for implementation. The following ideas and suggestions are presented to assist the planners of an "educational mentor program:"

1. Study the model carefully and adapt to local conditions. Present your ideas for a solid commitment from top level administrators' supervisors in the educational division where originating.

2. Discuss with colleagues who are working closely with business, industry, and agencies to enlist their support and contract with them for assistance.

3. Do a time management profile within your department. Determine how much time can be devoted by you and the staff to the project. For cost effectiveness, released time should be given to one staff member for a period of at least three months to devote to the project. A part-time assistant should be available. Clerical assistance will be needed at a minimum of part-time for the duration of the project.

4. The "educational directory" can be completed by the part-time assistant with clerical help. After a limited printing and distribution, local resources (banks or companies) can pick up the cost for printing and distribution. Companies find the directory useful for recruitment of out of county/state employees and to make it available for current employees. Banks use it for good customer relations and mailout in statements. A page should be set aside for them to use for advertisement. (Print a draft copy first for evaluation before doing the final one for distribution).

5. Identify and use your own institution's instructors for the workshop training. Staff development funds through Staff and Planning Development (community colleges) or Teacher Education Center (school districts) funds might be tapped for outside consultants. Be sure to involve your institution's counselors and teachers in the training if using these funds.

6. One important point to remember is that an invitational flyer and letter are not enough to insure participation in the training sessions. Personal follow-up phone calls and visits need to be made by you or the assistant to all persons being contacted for participation. The initial visit should be with top management.
personnel. They will be the ones to decide whether to release people from their jobs for this involvement. They have to be convinced it will benefit the company or agency.

7. Consideration might be given to doing follow-up training sessions on site at several large companies or agencies. This is where good communication skills and a commitment to the project's objectives need to come into play when dealing with top management. You have to convince them it's going to work.

8. Have a draft copy of the educational directory ready by the second training session in order to receive contributions from the participants. Any succeeding sessions, use the directory as a handout. The "Educational Mentoring Handbook" can be given out at the end of training. It can also be used to promote program participation before the training sessions. The directory and a program plan should be used also when approaching companies to assure involvement of key personnel in training.

9. Participants like to receive handouts. Be sure you have on hand plenty of program flyers for your institution and those of all vocational training and institutions of higher learning. Use the local phone directory to identify these postsecondary programs. (Review the directory developed by this project to see what was included).

10. Do research on articles written about change and high technology. Also there are numerous articles and books available on the "mentoring" role. Have several articles selected and reprinted for handouts. These serve to support your project's objectives. Make overheads that explain in a succinct manner the program and its objectives. Show statistics on population change and adult learning trends. In other words, build a good support base for why this training is needed.

11. Organize a cohesive advisory council representative of staff, business, industry and agencies. Usually these people are top level who will lend support and advise. Most likely they won't participate in training, but will suggest people and resources.

12. The consultants you select can make or break the project. If using local instructors, do extensive planning with them and involve them in all processes. It has been found that an all day session is perhaps too much. Try for a solid four hour session each time offered. You may want to consider separating businesses/companies from community agencies. Plan two separate workshops because the emphasis will be different. Community agency counselors have extensive training and often work with lower educational levels. Business and industry have need for training in human relations and counseling for those at a higher educational level. Do a needs assessment to determine the workshop format. This is important. Be sure to bring these groups together in one final session so that they can share information and understand each other's positions in working with employees and clients. This last session is a good time to have the "educational panel" give its presentation.
13. Once the project is completed, you will want to analyze the results and bring these results to the attention of your immediate supervisors. A report to the school board will be appropriate or a write-up in any communiqué that goes out to the district. Consideration might be given to a write-up in the local newspaper. (This write-up can also solicit more involvement in training).

RE: 310 Special Demonstration Project "Training Mentors for Educational Counseling of Adult Learners"

August 27, 1982

A preliminary planning committee is being organized to address the task of implementing this year's 310 Special Demonstration Project, "Training Mentors for Educational Counseling of Adult Learners."

Your assistance and continued support of this effort is requested. A copy of the grant is attached for your review. Some initial assumptions about this project are as follows:

1. Meetings for planning and implementation will be scheduled during work hours, preferably on Fridays.

2. After the initial planning session, the "planning" group will be increased to include all Deans, targeted people from related educational institutions, community agencies, and businesses.

3. Guidelines will be developed for those of us who will make personal contact with identified business and agency personnel to enlist their support for a minimum of two training sessions and obtain a commitment from them to the project.

4. Commitment to the objectives and strategies found on pages 6-9 are necessary to complete the project.

Arrangements have been made to have Ms. Susan Gunn serve as primary consultant to the project. Susan and I collaborated to develop this grant. Her expertise will be beneficial for successful implementation.

Susan will be at BCC on September 17, 1982 to meet with the planning committee. Would you please place on your calendar the following meeting date, time, and place:

September 17, 1982 - 9:30 a.m. - 12:00 noon
Conference Room - A-122A

Your suggestions and support of this effort are greatly needed to accomplish the objectives of this grant. Please respond as to your interest and commitment.

(310 Special Demonstration Project)

WHEN:                  Friday, September 17, 1982 - 9:30-12:00 a.m.

WE NEED YOUR HELP on SEPTEMBER 17th...to make this project a SUCCESS!

Allen Tough recommends that ..."a competent learning consultant" should be available to any person in a community who wants help in setting either life goals or learning objectives...learning consultants should also be provided by companies for their key personnel, and by associations for their members."

Project Objectives: Be thinking about how we can accomplish the following:
1. Develop and implement an Educational Mentor Training program for businesses and agencies in Brevard County.
2. Compile a directory of consistent educational opportunities.
3. Develop an educational counseling manual to be used in future training for the mentor program.
4. Develop a feedback mechanism to aid cooperating educational institutions in assessing learning needs.

BACKGROUND INFORMATION

"Training Mentors for Educational Counseling of Adult Learners"

310 Special Demonstration & Training Project - Federal Grant

Attention: The person making contact with businesses and community agencies can use the following information for discussion.

We have a special federal project sponsored through BCC that might fit some of your corporate needs. We are bringing in experts in the field of educational counseling to do training and help us coordinate our educational services with your company or organization. We are seeking to meet your employees present and future educational needs.

Basically, how it works is we will train or work with a person in your company in the areas of:

1. educational goal setting,
2. communications skills to use with employees,
3. understanding learning and educational needs of your employees,
4. provide information on all the educational options available in Brevard, both private and public.

What you will get out of this training is a person in your company or agency who is capable of doing educational counseling and a referral system that is company specific. Also, out of this project we are going to develop a directory composed of educational resources, public and private, that any member of your organization and the community can use.

You may be wondering what BCC is going to get out of this project. We will be better aware of employee educational needs, company or agency needs, and create a better cooperative working relationship. In other words, we want our programs to meet your human resources development needs!

What are we asking of you? Simply a person to be available for training, continue communication with us, and to provide us feedback. The most time this person will give is for two training sessions - 6 hours each and a follow-up meeting in the spring for evaluation. Also, we would like for this person to maintain some simple evaluation records. YOU WILL HAVE A TRAINED on the job EDUCATIONAL COUNSELOR for your employees and prospective employees!

The training sessions will be on November 19, 1982, and January 28, 1983, during work hours.

Dear Mr. Barber:

Allow me to take this opportunity to introduce to you a special program which will be presented soon to key members of the business community and public sector in Brevard County. This program is Federally Funded, and is therefore offered at no cost to the participants.

The objective is twofold: First, to provide a comprehensive directory of all public and private educational resources which are available to employees who may need to develop or upgrade basic skills; second, to provide additional in-depth training to a key member of your staff who is in a position to counsel others with regard to educational goal setting, communications skills, and available programs. For a minimal investment of time, your company will have greatly enhanced the counseling and information resources available to your employees. In addition, you will have a better-trained staff as the result of the expertise gained by the participating individual.

The program will be presented by Art Burrichter, Ph.D., Director of the Adult Education Division of Florida Atlantic University, Dan Gardner, Ph.D., Director of the Human Resources Division of Florida International University, and Susan Günn, M.A., Director of Federal Projects at Florida Atlantic University. We would very much like to have Barnes and Barber, Inc. involved in this program. If you would like to be, or desire any additional information, please do not hesitate to call. I look forward to hearing from you in the very near future.

Training Session #2 - January 28, 1982 .......... Susan Gunn &
Art Burrrichter
Dear

Thank you for participating in our first "Mentor Training Program" session on November 19. It is hoped that you have gained some information and techniques that will help you deal with promoting educational growth on the part of employees or clients you work with on a day-to-day basis.

In summary, our major goals for this special demonstration project are to (1) create a linkage or communications network between business/industry and community agencies regarding educational opportunities available in Brevard, and (2) assist you in increasing your knowledge about counseling adults in educational/career goal setting.

Having people like you in a company/agency who are committed to educational counseling and referral can be the key to meeting life changes occurring with adults and can promote increased productivity, better morale and self-confidence, release of stress and burnout, loyalty to a company, cohesiveness, and generally help people feel like they belong.

In many cases the person will come to you for the assistance he/she needs. There are times you will seek out those whom you feel may need your expertise in educational advisement. Whoever the person may be, employed or unemployed, the knowledge you have gained can be put to good use.

Adult Education has often used the slogan, "I CARE!" Your participation and commitment to the "Mentor" role through these training sessions certainly indicates that you and your company/agency CARES!

We are open to suggestions. Would you please complete the enclosed evaluation form and return within a week so that we can make the next session one that is directed toward your current needs for training.

We look forward to seeing you again on JANUARY 29, 1983.
Dear

Enclosed is a summary report on the "Mentor Training Program" training session held on November 19, 1982 at Brevard Community College, Cocoa Campus. This summary was compiled in order for you to have a reference regarding events that happened on that day.

The next training session on January 28, 1983 promises to give you practical techniques and a lot of personal involvement in counseling and interviewing adults. Your evaluations of the first session were used to design activities and choice of subject matter. After lunch you will have an opportunity to meet and listen to different presenters who will discuss adult and community education, continuing education, and college program offerings at BCC, Patrick, Florida Institute of Technology and the University of Central Florida.

This session promises to be one that will give you an opportunity to learn what you have always wanted to know about promoting lifelong learning!

If you plan to attend, please complete the form below and return before January 19, 1983. You may call in your reservation if you prefer (632-1111, ext. 206/230).

We look forward to seeing you on JANUARY 28, 1983 at Brevard Community College, Cocoa Campus, in the Community Dining Room located on the north side of the Student Center. The session starts at 9:00 a.m. and will end at 3:00 p.m.

RETURN TO: Bette Singer, BCC
TO JOIN the Advisory Group for BREVARD COMMUNITY COLLEGE'S Special Demonstration Project ...

"Training Mentors as Educational Advisors of Adult Learners"

Brevard Community College is interested in training a person who is capable of doing educational counseling as well as create a referral system that is company/agency specific. Also, out of this project an "Educational Directory" composed of Brevard County's educational resources will be developed which can prove useful to any organization and community member.

We are seeking to establish a feedback mechanism that will benefit the community; a system that meets human resources development needs, and create a better cooperative working relationship with the community college and local businesses, industries, and community agencies.

Ms. Earlene Wesley, Director

Merritt Island, FL 32952

Dear Ms. Wesley:

Brevard Community College, Open Campus, has received a special grant to provide training seminars related to meeting the educational needs of employees in Brevard’s businesses, industries, and community agencies. The project’s title is "Training Mentors as Educational Advisors for Adult Learners." Key personnel are being targeted to participate in two training sessions set for November 19, 1982, and January 28, 1983. Basically, participants will be trained to assist employees in 1) setting educational goals, 2) developing their own communication skills to use with educational counseling of employees, 3) better understanding learning and educational needs of employees, and 4) providing information on all the educational options available in Brevard, private and public.

You are being asked at this time to serve on an advisory committee with options for participation in the training sessions. This advisory group will assist the project director in 1) establishing business and community agency educational needs for employees, and 2) helping with the development of a feedback mechanism between educational institutions and the community.

If you or a designee can participate on this advisory group to the project, please let me know by sending in the attached form or a phone call will suffice. There will be two meetings of the advisory group, one this fall and one in the spring.

Thank you for any cooperation you can afford to offer us in making this special demonstration project successful in meeting the educational needs of our community.

Sincerely,

How you can help.

1. Evaluation Processes?
2. Feedback Mechanisms?

- How do we assure that what participants learn will be used effectively or at all?
- How do we assess (without "overload of paperwork") that the target groups are being counseled about educational options?
- How do we do follow-up on employees who take advantage of a "mentor" at a given site?

- What other ideas do you have about the "Educational Directory?"

- How can we continue this type of training for the community with minimal costs?

Dear Susan:

Thanks so much for agreeing to assist Brevard Community College, Adult Education Division, with its 310 Special Demonstration Project, "Training Mentors for Educational Counseling." We look forward to seeing you on September 16 and 17.

I have arranged a meeting with the initial planning committee for 9:30 a.m. to 12:00 noon on September 17 in the conference room in the Administration Building of the Cocoa Campus, #A-122. It is hoped that you can arrive on Wednesday evening or early Thursday morning so that you and I can have time for planning (Of course you will stay at my house).

Attached is a supplemental consultant contract. Please complete and return to me for processing. A copy of the 310 Grant is also attached.

I would appreciate suggestions prior to our meeting. After reviewing the Grant, perhaps you can give pointers on who should be at the meeting on Friday other than the ones listed in the memorandum. Any help will be gratefully received!

Give my love to Winston and Nora. I look forward to hearing from you soon.

With Affection,

Dear Dan:

It was our pleasure to have you as consultant to the "Mentor Training Program," 310 Special Demonstration Project, on Friday, November 19, 1982. Although the turnout wasn't as great as expected, the group present was responsive and appeared appreciative of yours and Susan's remarks:

An evaluation form will be mailed out this week along with follow-up phone calls. Once this data is in, I will share it with you. You should be receiving your poster information on "Organizational Analysis" within a few days.

Dan, thanks so much for all your help. I hope Ellen is feeling much better. Wishing you both the best.

Dear Ted:

It was our pleasure to have you as a major consultant for the "Training Mentors as Educators: Advisors of Adult Learners" on Friday, November 19, 1982. Although the turnout of participants wasn't as great as expected, the group present appeared appreciative and responsive to your presentation on "Motivation Techniques for Adult Learners."

An evaluation form will be mailed out this week and follow-up telephone assessments made next week with participants. It would be appreciated if you would contact those people in business and industry who had given you commitment to attend and didn't appear at the session.

I plan to do preliminary planning in Fort Lauderdale with Art and Susan before the January meeting. At this point, I'm looking to design the program in such a way that new participants can benefit even though they didn't attend the first session.

At your convenience, perhaps we can arrange time to discuss further plans for more participation of business and industry in the January program.

Thanks again for the help and support given to this special demonstration project by you and Martin Associates.

Sincerely,

Bette Singer, Coordinator of Adult Curriculum and Staff Development

Boca Raton, Fl 33432

Dear Art,

Although there hasn’t been time to thoroughly access the impact of Brevard Community College’s “Educational Mentor Training Program,” it can truly be said that the January 28 training session was a definite success. You and Susan were well attuned to the participants’ needs and performed tasks with your usual skill. The evaluations were all marked in the upper percentile with favorable comments made especially relating to your presentation.

I wish we could have had more time together before and after the workshop to exchange ideas and do some self-evaluation. The one thing I will need help with from you is the development of the “Educational Mentoring Handbook.” I have been giving some thought to this and will share ideas with you in a few weeks.

Let me know of any suggestions you have for wrapping up this project. I greatly appreciate your assistance and continuing support of adult education programs in Brevard County. Without your expertise, we in the field would be sadly lacking.

I look forward to seeing you again soon and sharing the results of the project.

With affection,

Dear

Thank you for your cooperation and participation on the "Mentor Training Program" Advisory Committee which met on November 10, 1982. Melissa and I found it very helpful to have a "captive" audience that was willing to give feedback and express enthusiasm about this special demonstration project.

It is hoped that you will find time to visit with us at the first training session on November 19th from 8:30 a.m. to 3:00 p.m. in the Student Center Community Dining Room. Several people on the Advisory Committee will be participating in the training sessions.

Our spring meeting promises to be more informative with an opportunity for those who were involved in the training sessions to share some of their experiences.

Please let us know of any ideas you have about how we can establish a meaningful follow-up system with the trainees.

Sincerely,

January 31, 1983

Dear

Brevard Community College, Open Campus, extends to you a special thank you for participating in its "Educational Mentor Training" session on January 28, 1983.

Your part on the "Educational Panel of Program Options for Adults" was well received by the trainees. We are sorry there was not enough time available for a question and answer period. However, with the verbal information and abundance of literature, the participants seemed well informed about your program.

Your evaluation and response to the new "Brevard County Director of Educational Options for Adults" will be greatly appreciated. It is anticipated that our programs for postsecondary students will be enhanced by this special demonstration project and its assessment of community needs in the area of education.

Sincerely,

Elizabeth Singer, Coordinator

RE: Compiling of a Brevard County Educational Directory for Adults

Brevard Community College has received a special federal grant from the Department of Adult & Vocational Education to assist us in compiling an Educational Directory of all the adult schools, post-secondary schools (public and private), and vocational training programs offered to adults throughout our community. This directory will include information relative to the types of educational and training programs available to adults, descriptions of each institution's special services, cost factors, and contacts for counseling and registration.

The purpose of this directory is to expand available information about educational opportunities within our county. The directory will be designed for adults who are considering continuing their education or upgrading job skills. It will assist them in choosing the most appropriate educational options. The groups to receive the directory are businesses, industries, community agencies, and libraries. Those institutions listed in the directory will receive free exposure to the community and a copy of the final product.

In order that we may have complete information, would you please complete the attached form and return it in the stamped envelope. We appreciate your assistance with this project and are confident that it will prove beneficial to both the community and your institution.

The "Brevard County Directory of Educational Options for Adults" was developed under a federal 310 Special Demonstration Project entitled "Training Mentors as Educational Advisors of Adult Learners." This project provided training sessions for key personnel in business, industry, and community agencies to increase their knowledge about educational options available for adults in the county, enhance competencies related to counseling/advising adults who need or want a return to schooling, and create a network referral system between business, industry, and community agencies with educational institutions. An "educational mentor" on the job attuned to adult-learner needs and knowledgeable about educational programs could improve employee/employer relationships and stimulate personal growth on the part of employees.

This draft copy of the educational directory is being given limited exposure for evaluation proposes before the final printing and distribution to the community.

You are being asked to evaluate and critique the directory as to overall appearance, form, style, and correct information. Your suggestions for improvement are important to creating a final product that can be useful to adults and educational counselors, as well as represent the college.

U.S. STATISTICS ON ADULT POPULATION TRENDS

Year 2000 ------------------------ 43% will be under 29 as compared with 52% in 1970

65 years & older ------------------------ 10% of population -- 22 million in 1980

1978 - 79 -------------------------- Approximately 60 million adults 25 years & older attended school

* 50% of 50 year old men & 58% of 50 year old women recently took classes or course work.

24% (1/4th) of 70 year old men & 35% (1/3rd) 70 year old women had recently taken courses.

The PHENOMENON is known as LIFELONG LEARNING.
REASONS FOR ADULTS RETURNING TO EDUCATION

1. No practical reason to retain an inherited value system that limits education to the young and locks the not-young into production and then retirement.

2. People have discovered they can be multi-participatory rather than restricted about life's activities.

3. Human impulses are to GROW, to find SECURITY, and experience the NEW.

NEED TO GROW..... "One Fundamental Need"... according to Carl Rogers.

☐ JOB CHANGE (Most adults will be employed in 6 to 8 different jobs in a lifetime).

☐ ACQUIRE NEW SKILLS (Breakneck pace of technological advancement - 5 year life span before becoming obsolete).

Recent Study reveals that 40 million adult Americans experiencing a career or job transition.

60% plan to avail themselves of additional education.

☐ QUALITY OF LIFE (Physical and material well-being, relations with other people, social, community, & civic activities, personal development & fulfillment, and recreation).

A NEED EXISTS.....
ADULTS SPONTANEOUSLY PARTICIPATE IN LEARNING EXPERIENCES

"Learning Project"..... according to Tough

"A highly deliberate effort to gain and retain certain knowledge, skills or to change in some other way."

Adults on the average conduct five (5) projects a year & devote approximately 500 hours per year or 10 hours per week to these projects.

Only 20% of these learning projects are planned by a professional: 80% are planned by the learner & the learner friends and peers.

As few as 10% of the projects may be associated with an educational institution.

THERE IS A NEED!
ADULT LEARNING TRAITS

☐ Adult's overall LEARNING APTITUDE or INTELLECTUAL POWER remains remarkably unchanged into old age.

☐ Adult's past experiences affect how this person approaches a learning project, and that past experiences serves as a learning resource data bank to which new experiences can be related.

☐ An adult passes through a complex process of change, a developmental sequence, that extends at least into the age 60's.

☐ Adults approach new experience with what we popularly call PREJUDICE but which is actually an organized set of FEELINGS and DESCRIPTIONS about SELF & about what SELF-EXPECTS the experience to yield.

It takes an act of considerable FAITH for the adult learner to enter or re-enter an institutional environment and to RISK exposing (what he/she perceives) as deficiencies within him/hersel
Educators and counselors... must assume a more practical role in guidance and counseling. Technology, the "baby" left on the doorstep of society after WW II, is now a high-bred sophisticated group of expanding disciplines. Educators and advisors can help... students take advantage of this phenomenal growth by ...

- counseling attuned to employment trends,
- program counseling which ultimately leads to gainful employment,
- encouraging program selection from several career options in post-secondary efforts.

With or without counseling credentials, educators can help ameliorate the crises of ... (the) unemployment and high technology. Practical guidance and counseling can use the technological explosion as a vehicle for human progress, and can thereby promote entry to the economic mainstream for may black (& white) Americans.

"ADULTS ARE WORRIED"
(The Learning Connection, Volume 3, No, 3, Fall, 1982)

A new study of the Americans age 25 to 49 shows that young adults are worried about the future—financially, physically, and emotionally. And it suggests that marketers can turn those worries into an opportunity for sales of new products.

The study "What Does The Future Hold and Who's Worried About It?" was done by the advertising agency Doyle Dane Bernbach and was released in New York. It reflects the results of two surveys of a sampling of 500 men and women, 25 to 49 years old, in 20 major markets. The first survey was conducted in August, 1980. The second took place a year later.

Ms. Ziff said there are major marketing opportunities for financial and career planning services, for what she called "ego supportives" to reassure people who are worried about their looks or have anxieties and for "self-accomplishment facilitators" to satisfy the do-it-yourself urge.
Aim Adult Training at Workers and Poorly Educated, Study Recommends

By Beverly T. Watkins

According to a new study, only 3.3 per cent of adults with less than a high-school education take part in educational activities, while 26.5 per cent of those who have completed four years of college are involved in adult learning at any given time.

The educational participation of black adults is considerably below that of whites, says the study, conducted by the National Institute for Work and Learning, a Washington-based policy-research organization.

Today, 6.5 per cent of black adults are enrolled in some learning activity, compared with 12.2 per cent of whites. Participation by blacks has declined steadily over the last 10 years, according to the study, which was financed by the National Institute of Education.

The research project, which concentrated on adult education and training available to workers through their companies, unions, and educational institutions, found that participation in learning increased with income. About 5.3 per cent of those with annual incomes under $5,000 are engaged in educational programs, compared with 17.5 per cent of those earning $25,000 or more.

The study also found, among other things, that an increasing number of women—12.5 per cent today compared with 9.9 per cent a decade ago—were in educational and training programs. However, since few women hold jobs that require additional training, they are less likely to have access to education on the job.

Continuing education is essential for adults who must adapt to the broad social and economic changes now under way, said Paul E. Burton, the institute's vice-president for planning and policy development and author of the study report. However, he said, if learning is to enable members of society to cope with these changes, educational opportunities must be "equally accessible."

“This is a developing consensus in the country among informed people that change will take place through the education process," said Willard Wirtz, chairman of the institute, at a conference held last week at the conclusion of the four-year project.

“Adult education is more effective if it is emphasized in terms of work life," Mr. Wirtz told representatives of federal and state governments, business and industry, labor unions, and postsecondary educational institutions who assembled to discuss the study's findings and policy recommendations.

He said the research project indicated that "women and seniors are profiting greatly from adult education, but I'm not sure how much we've done for minorities and the unemployed. The next step is to focus on those constituencies."

In its preliminary form, the project report includes more than 50 policy recommendations, many designed to increase access to education and training for workers from low-income and minority groups. Among them:

- Establish a National Educational Information Coordinating Committee to develop educational information, brokering, and advisement services for adults.
- Conduct pilot projects on child-care arrangements, "flextime," installment or deferred tuition payments, and class schedules and locations to find ways to overcome these barriers to participation in education.
- Eliminate restrictions in state constitutions and public-education laws that require persons to take 12 years of public education before age 22 or forfeit the right to free elementary and secondary education.
- Designate selected company personnel and union officials as "learning organizers" to provide educational advice and information to workers at job sites during the workday.
- Channel more information about education and training opportunities to workers through organizations that reach the working classes, such as the U.S. Employment Service, labor unions, and neighborhood associations.
- Set up councils with representatives from public agencies, private companies, labor unions, and educational institutions to develop federally financed programs to prepare low-income unemployed adults and workers displaced by economic change for jobs in the private sector.
HIGH TECHNOLOGY DEFINED

High Technology is a process which is knowledge based with intense concentration of technical skills and scientific knowledge. It merges scientific knowledge with the production system, and it reinforces innovative activity with new ideas and procedures from a high level of research and development. It is radically new in its scientific and technical content, and it incorporates an advanced level of automation in manufacture and production control (Wyllie 1981). Skilled persons in high technology usually are required to have two years of training at the postsecondary level.

This description confirms that high technology should be taught at the postsecondary level and suggests that the better prepared high school graduate will be among those most likely to succeed in technical studies. The description also points to important information which can be summarized here:

- TECHNOLOGY is presently expanding at an unprecedented rate in business and industry. Some areas in technology are doubling every ten years; others are becoming obsolete in record fashion only to be replaced with new technology (Toffler 1970).

- The COMPUTER SCIENCE field, which doubled employment in the 1970's is expected to double again by the 1990's (AVA Releases 1981). There are critical shortages of nurses, electronic technicians, machinists, tool and die makers, and many others (Professional News 1982). These shortages are likely to continue in the 1980's (Mandt 1978).

- BUSINESS and INDUSTRY contend that educators in general are still far behind the times in their attitudes about work. All available statistics support the fact that 80% of all job openings in the 1980's will be for persons who have some type of technical skill developed at less than the bachelor's degree level (Hanssen 1981). Despite this, most high schools continue to put more emphasis on preparation for a four-year liberal arts pursuit, rather than for studies in technical education.
Unfortunately, black students with above average high school achievement scores generally do not enroll in studies for high technology, and many of them enter college and the work force without adequate knowledge of good career opportunities. It appears that students who currently enroll in studies for high technology are significantly older than those who enroll in conventional programs (Murphy & Pringle 1979). Negative stereotypes and lack of current career information among better black high school graduates are factors which cause them to defer choosing technical studies until after a more mature age or after failure in the job market. Therefore, there appears to be a paucity of black students involved in high technology studies for all age groups...

Educators and counselors...must assume a more practical role in guidance and counseling. Technology, the "baby" left on the doorstep of society after WW II, is now a high-bred sophisticated group of expanding disciplines. Educators and advisors can help...students take advantage of this phenomenal growth by:

- counseling attuned to employment trends,
- program counseling which ultimately leads to gainful employment, and
- encouraging program selection from several career options in post-secondary efforts.

With or without counseling credentials, educators can help ameliorate crises of...(the) unemployment and high technology. Practical guidance and counseling can use the technological explosion as a vehicle for human progress, and can thereby promote entry to the economic mainstream for many black (& white) Americans.
"Does Change Trigger a Need for Training?"

Ever since Canadian researcher Allan Tough found that the average adult spends 500 hours a year learning something, educational investigators have been scrambling to find out a) if Tough's findings were a fluke and b) how their institutions can cash in on all that learning need.

A recent College Entrance Examination Board (CEEB) study sheds some light on these questions and also raises a bit of controversy. The study, conducted under the CEEB's Future Directions for a Learning Society program and funded by the Exxon Education Foundation, forms the basis of a new book, AMERICANS IN TRANSITION: LIFE CHANGES AS REASONS FOR ADULT LEARNING (College Entrance Examination Board, New York, 1980).

Authors Carol B. Aslanian and Henry M. Brickell work from data collected in 1,500 telephone interviews with adults who were asked whether they were studying or learning anything, or had in the past 12 months. Those who said no or seemed uncertain were asked again whether they were then or recently had been engaged in a learning activity—a television course, a study group at church or synagogue, a seminar or job-training course at work, lessons for anything from tennis to auto repair.

Responses to this insistent probe, according to Aslanian and Brickell, indicated that "half of all adult Americans 25 years old or older learned something in the past year...This is remarkable evidence that we have indeed become a learning society."

Though the 50% figure is considerably higher than most studies, it is consistent with studies that include formal and informal, learner and instructor centered learning.

The CEEB finding that may create a bit of a flap is based on the conclusion the researchers draw from answers to the question "Why?" When asked, "When did you start learning? Why did you start then? Why not earlier? What happened at the time to cause you to start then?" respondents gave a wide variety of answers.

Shifting through the responses, Aslanian and Brickell observe that almost 85% of all adult learners named some change—some transition in their lives as causing them to start learning when they did. The trigger transitions were randomly scattered across many areas of adult life, but job/career and family life changes dominate all others: 56% of those citing transitions named the former, 34% the latter.

The research initially hypothesized that Americans find their jobs/careers and family lives more turbulent than the other aspects of their lives, and therefore subject to more transitions and requiring more learning. But further analysis disproved that logic. The explanation is even simpler: 75% of all adult learning is traceable to changes in jobs/careers and family because Americans spend roughly 75% of their time with their jobs/careers and families.
For example, 46% of the sample gave job/career as a reason for learning, reflecting the 40% of their time devoted to work. Similarly, 28% cited family life as a trigger, corresponding to the 30% of their time spent at home. Only leisure, which accounts for 15% of time, played a significant proportionate role in the typical life schedule—and almost no one give leisure as a reason for learning. Aslanian and Brickell interpret that as meaning leisure, virtually by definition, is perceived as the absence of defined activity. Adults seem to regard it as just that—leftover time, free of anything else.

Adult learners gave dozens of examples of how changes in their work patterns either required or stimulated them to learn. That is, some wanted to learn; some had to learn. Most of their reasons came down to the desire to retain, obtain, advance and/or perform better in a job or career. Also mentioned, though by a minority of respondents, were employer requests or requirements, adjusting to a less demanding job and retirement.

The natural chronology of job career entry, progression and exit is quite evident here. Many adults had to learn in order to get their jobs or keep them or do better in them or advance in them. Some found they even had to learn in order to leave their jobs—to make a successful transition from working to not working.

Adult learners also gave a large number of examples of family changes triggering learning, including children moving through school, direction from friends or family, acquiring a new house or apartment, moving to a new location, getting divorced, getting married and death in the family. Among other, less prominent reasons, were increase in family income, retirement of a spouse, pregnancy and the rising cost of living.

Again, the natural chronology of family life—getting married, becoming pregnant, having children, moving to a new location, acquiring a new house, putting children through school, retirement of the husband or wife, death of a family member—is apparent in the family life transitions one-fourth of all adults mentioned as causing them to learn. Some family transitions required learning; others permitted adults to begin learning things they had wanted to learn for a long time. In either case, they saw learning as a way to succeed in their new status.

Even though such characteristics as age, race and sex didn’t seem, in general, to make a difference in who was learning and what they were learning, some of the small differences between learners and non-learners are interesting:

Learners are considerably younger than non-learners. Twice as many learners as non-learners come from the group aged 25 to 29, while only half as many come from the group aged 65 to 69. Half of all adult learners are under 40 years old.
Blacks supply considerably less than their proportionate share of learners. Hispanics supply their share; whites supply a bit more than their share; other groups supply considerably more than their share.

Learners are considerably better educated than non-learners. Adults who have gone beyond high school are twice as likely to learn as those who have not. Only about one of five with eight years of school or less participate in learning.

Adults with high incomes are more likely to learn. Twice as many learners as non-learners come from families earning $25,000 a year or more. The breakpoint comes at family incomes of $10,000 or more above it, learners outnumber non-learners, below it, non-learners outnumber learners. There is no income ceiling on learning; two out of three adults from families earning $50,000 a year or more are engaged in learning.

Employed adults are far more likely to engage in learning than unemployed adults. Those who are working full time are even more likely to learn than those who are working part time. Less than one out of three retired persons is engaged in learning.

In short, the more work a person does, the more likely he or she is to engage in learning.

Of all occupational groups, adults engaged in professional and technical work are most likely to engage in learning, while those in farm work are least likely. There is a clear relationship between the amount of training required to enter an occupation and the need or desire to continue learning.

There are no differences in adult learning according to sex or number of persons in the household aged 25 years and older.

One source of the controversy over the Aisalanian and Brickell conclusion is the lack of demographic differences found. And the College Board itself is generating some of the controversy. College Board ex-president Robert T. Kingston, an advocate of governmental "focusing" in the lifelong learning arena, is skeptical of the "trigger" theory. Writing in the winter of 1980 issue of "Continuing Higher Education," he suggests instead, that the real reason may be one of success begetting success.

"We Americans are a moralistic lot, and we always tend to look for socially acceptable justifications or at least for clear rationalizations, of most of our actions post facto," says Kingston. "Meanwhile, the information does not help to explain the preponderance of young, educated, relatively affluent white adults in the active learning society. That leaves us, I'm afraid, with only one other speculation, which may not be immediately helpful to our present endeavor. I fear that although people may pursue lifelong learning for reason rather than habit, nonetheless reluctance to learn, or the pattern of failure, may indeed be addictive. Those who have education and success continue to want them, and those who do well are particularly eager to maintain the practice"
Conversely, those who have been kept out or who did not perform well are reluctant to continue."

Regardless of how the academics finally choose to interpret the fine points and subtle implications of this and other studies of adult learning, one thing seems abundantly clear: We adults seem quite capable of deciding when, where, and how we need to learn something new, and we're equally capable of learning on our own if need be. That must be a frustrating notion to those pedagogues who believe that learning takes place only from teaching.--R.Z.
