Designed to investigate the types of responses given to a sentence completion task when constraint elements of word order, word form, redundancy, distance between lexical items, and the interaction among these elements are considered, this instrument consists of 34 sentences, half of which are high associative sentences, while the other half are low associative sentences. All the sentences follow the same syntactic form; and in each case subjects are required to restore one deleted word, although other words are deleted to study certain constraints. Validity and normative data are included. (This document is one of those reviewed in The Research Instruments Project (TRIP) monograph "Measures for Research and Evaluation in the English Language Arts, Volume 2," published by the Committee on Research of the National Council of Teachers of English in cooperation with the ERIC Clearinghouse on Reading and Communication Skills. The TRIP review, included here as an introduction to the instrument, describes the instrument's category (reading), title, author, date, age range (intermediate), purpose, and physical characteristics.) The Quality, Direction, and Distance of Within Sentence Constraints.

The measurement instruments contained in this document have been reviewed in a monograph (cited below) edited by William T. Fagan, Charles Cooper, and Julie Jensen, for The Research Instruments Project (TRIP), and funded by a grant from the Trustees of the NCTE Research Foundation:

Measures for Research and Evaluation in the English Language Arts Volume II

The purpose of the editors has been to select and review measurement instruments pertaining to all aspects of research and evaluation in the English language arts, e.g. language and language development, literacy, literature, reading (including comprehension, teacher-pupil interaction, etc.), writing, and teacher knowledge and attitudes. In order to make some of the actual instruments reviewed more readily available, the ERIC Clearinghouse on Reading and Communication Skills (ERIC/RCS) has cooperated with the editors by processing selected instruments into the ERIC system (see the 42 documents assigned Clearinghouse accession numbers CS 207 904-945).
Purpose: To investigate the types of responses given to a sentence completion task when constraint elements of word order, word form, redundancy, the distance between lexical items, and the interaction among these elements were considered.

This instrument differed from others in this area since it was designed to investigate the effects of lateral (forwards and backwards) constraints, it included the most potent forward constraining patterns from a previous study (Pike, 1969) for cross-validation purposes, sentence type was controlled, and it included sentences of low and high contextual constraint generated by a systematic procedure.

Date of Construction: 1977

Physical Description: The instrument consisted of thirty four sentences, half of which were high associative sentences, and half were low associative sentences. Each sentence was constructed so that the subjects were required to restore one word in each sentence (indicated by a line), although other words were omitted in order to study certain constraints. These words were designated by a line of dashes (xxxxxxx). All sentences followed the same syntactic form: Determiner - Adjective 1 - Noun 1 - Verb - (Determiner 2) - Adjective 2 - Noun 2. The constraints of one word form on another (and with different numbers of words intervening) were assessed. The base sentence (-:-A) contained only one omitted word. The spider carried the dead fly. In order to assess the constraining effect of Noun 2 on Adjective 1 (N2:A1), the sentence would look like:

The spider carried the dead xxxx.

The seventeen constraints for one sentence pattern are listed on the following page.
Sentence: A hot bath beats a cold shower.

Validity, Reliability, and Normative Data:

The following procedures were used in constructing the instrument.

1. A subject-noun was arbitrarily selected from the stimulus words on the Palermo and Jenkins' (1964) Word Association Norms. Examples would be "river", "cheese", and "doctor".

2. Next the entry in the Word Association Norms was scanned for the highest or lowest associates under the grade four to six headings. For example, "river" was selected for a LAS and hence the low associate adjectives (two or fewer entries under the grade 4-6 columns) "Muddy", "green", "pretty", could be considered, or from the Idiosyncratic Responses "turbulent", "moving", or "foam(ing)". Nouns of low associative status could be "canoe", "falls", or "rapids", or from the Idiosyncratic Responses in the Word Association Norms "rain", or "forest". The sentence resulting from the above possibilities was: The foaming river carried the little canoe (LAS).

A similar procedure was followed in constructing the HAS sentences only that the highest associates under each entry were used. For example, "spider" was selected for a HAS and hence the high associate adjectives possible were "big", "poison(ous)" and "dead". Possible nouns were "fly" and "web". The sentence resulting from these words was: The big spider carried the dead fly.

Every effort was made to construct meaningful and sensible sentences within the repertoire of intermediate grade students. Some of the transitive verbs from the Palermo and Jenkins stimulus list were used but more often the verb was arbitrarily selected to join the subject and object in a sensible manner.
3. The sentence paradigm used for this study was based on Riling's (1965) findings that the oral, written, and textbook language structure of sixth-graders were similar, and that the subject-verb-object pattern ranked first among them. For the present study, this high frequency pattern was expanded by means of adjectives preceding the subject and object. The resulting pattern was as follows:

\[
\begin{array}{cccccc}
D & A1 & N1 & V & (D) & A2 & N2 \\
\text{The work shoes had flat heels.} \\
\text{The pretty woman wore a lovely dress.}
\end{array}
\]

The determiner in the second position was optional as indicated by the parentheses.

4. All adjective-noun-pairs were checked by means of the American Heritage Dictionary of the English Language (1970) to avoid using compound nouns which would tend to inflate associativity. Several such pairs resulted during the preliminary stages of constructing the sentences and were subsequently omitted. Examples were: bald eagle, wheel chair, machine gun, work bench, and rye bread.

5. Since forward and backward-lateral constraints were of interest, two sets of deletion patterns were constructed. These two forms of contextual constraint may be conceptualized in the following manner:

\[
\begin{array}{c}
\text{The big spider carried the dead fly.} \\
\text{forward constraint} \\
\text{backward constraint}
\end{array}
\]

No reliability data are given.

INSTRUCTIONS

This is an exercise to see how well you can guess words which have been left out of sentences.

In each sentence you will find one blank like this _______. Try to fill it in by writing one word which you think would best fit the sentence.

Guess if you are not sure, but fill in every blank if possible. If you really have trouble with one, leave it, and then come back to it later.

Do not worry about the words which have been replaced by xxxxxxxxxxxxx. The xxxxxxxxxxxxx tells you that a word has been left out. The length of the blank or the xxxxxxxxxxxxx does not have anything to do with the length of the missing word.

If you are not sure of how to spell a word, just do the best you can.

If you need any help, please raise your hand and I will come and help you.

Let's try these examples together:

The huge _________ carried the crushed gravel.
A hungry dog _________ the xxxxxxxxxxxxx food.
