Title: Project BEST-PAL (Basic Education Skills Through-Parenting Affective Learning): Volunteer Sponsor's Leader's Guide.

Institution: Brevard Community Coll., Cocoa, Fla.

SPONS AGENCY: Florida State Dept. of Education, Tallahassee, Bureau of Adult/Community Education.

PUB DATE: [84]

NOTE: 165p.; For related documents, see JC 840 247-248.

PUB TYPE: Guides - Classroom Use - Guides (For Teachers) (052)

EDRS PRICE: MF01/PC07 Plus Postage.

DESCRIPTORS: *Adult Basic Education; *Adult Learning; *Child Rearing; Community Colleges; *Parent Education; *Volunteer Training

ABSTRACT: This handbook was developed for volunteer group leaders participating in Brevard Community College's Project BEST-PAL (Basic Education Skills Through-Parenting Affective Learning). Project BEST-PAL was developed especially for low socioeconomic parents who are in need of an opportunity to explore effective parenting, with a primary objective being recruitment for participation in adult education programs. Information is provided on adult learning, focusing on parent education for the undereducated; characteristics of undereducated adults; determinants in learning (i.e., stage of development and life situation of the learner); learner motivation; and appropriateness of the material. After a brief discussion of the principles for teaching parenting to undereducated adults, materials are presented to help train the group leader in communication skills, leading a group, keeping the group going, group stages and group dynamics. Next, leader's guides are provided corresponding to both levels of the BEST-PAL lesson plans, which were developed for parents reading at 2nd-3rd grade levels or at 6th-7th grade levels. Appendices provide quotations about parenting, a series of "Family Living" essays focusing on various parenting topics, an evaluation form, and a bibliography. [AYC]
PROJECT BEST-PAL (BASIC EDUCATION SKILLS THROUGH PARENT AFFECTIVE LEARNING) WAS DEVELOPED UNDER A 310 SPECIAL DEMONSTRATION AND TEACHER TRAINING PROJECT AWARDED BY THE BUREAU OF ADULT/COMMUNITY EDUCATION, DEPARTMENT OF EDUCATION, TALLAHASSEE, FLORIDA.

PROJECT WRITERS/CONSULTANTS

ALTAMESE DAVIS, LEVEL I WRITER, TRAINER
YVETTE ZGONC, LEVEL II WRITER, TRAINER
CYNTHIA BRUBAKER, PROJECT ASSISTANT & TRAINER
Marilyn VanderLugt, TRAINER
Dr. Ellen West, MODULE CRITIQUE

ADULT BASIC TEACHER/RECRUITER/COUNSELORS

BARBARA JENKINS
MARY G. BROOKS
RUTH BUGGS
CORA MATHIS
ALICE THOMAS
LOUISE ALBRITTON

ILLUSTRATOR

BUD SPRINGER

BREVARD COMMUNITY COLLEGE, OPEN CAMPUS
1519 CLEARLAKE ROAD
COCOA, FLORIDA 32926

DR. A. PERKINS MARQUESS, PROVOST
ELIZABETH W. SINGER, PROJECT DIRECTOR
TABLE OF CONTENTS

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Section</th>
<th>Page</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Introductory Statement</td>
<td>1</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Parent Education for the Undereducated</td>
<td>1</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Characteristics of the Undereducated Adult</td>
<td>1</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Determinants in Learning</td>
<td>3</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Stage of Development</td>
<td>3</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Life Situation of the Learner</td>
<td>3</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Motivation of the Learner</td>
<td>4</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Appropriateness of Material</td>
<td>5</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Principles for Teaching Parenting to Undereducated Adults</td>
<td>5</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Convey Acceptance</td>
<td>5</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Begin Where They Are</td>
<td>6</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Keep an Informal Atmosphere</td>
<td>6</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Empathize</td>
<td>6</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Partialize Problems</td>
<td>6</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Recognize and Use Strengths</td>
<td>7</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Make Use of Old Skills to Teach New Ones</td>
<td>7</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Recognize Progress</td>
<td>7</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Training Materials</td>
<td>9</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Communication Skills</td>
<td>10</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Leading a Group</td>
<td>18</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Keeping the Group Going</td>
<td>20</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Group Stages</td>
<td>21</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Group Dynamics</td>
<td>22</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Checklist for Group Facilitators</td>
<td>29</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Leader’s Guide - Lesson Plans/Level One</td>
<td>31</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Leader’s Guide - Lesson Plans/Level Two</td>
<td>63</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Appendix</td>
<td>87</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>If A Child Lives With</td>
<td>88</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Quotations : Dreikurs</td>
<td>89</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Parenting Education Evaluation</td>
<td>93</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bibliography</td>
<td>94</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Appreciation is always appreciated!
INTRODUCTORY STATEMENT

PROJECT BEST-PAL (Basic Education Skills Through Parent Affective Learning) is a Special Demonstration and Teacher Training Project awarded to Brevard Community College for 1983-84 from the Bureau for Adult and Community Education, Florida Department of Education, Tallahassee, Florida. The intent of this project is to establish a model program which can be adopted by other districts, State and nationally. PROJECT BEST-PAL is developed especially for low socio-economic parents who are in need of an opportunity to explore effective parenting. Parenting is viewed as a universal concern which serves as a vehicle to promote awareness about other educational needs. Recruitment for participation in adult education programs is a primary objective of this project.
PARENT EDUCATION FOR THE UNDEREDUCATED

The following excerpt is taken from the ABLE PARENTING-Adult Basic Level Education, developed by the Calvert County School District, Prince Frederick, Maryland. Since the characteristics discussed here are based on research, it is felt that a redundant effort to establish criteria for providing parenting education for the undereducated was unnecessary. This article serves as a reference to those contemplating implementation of any special education project for the undereducated.

CHARACTERISTICS OF THE UNDEREDUCATED ADULT

The socio-economic characteristic most synonymous with undereducated is low income. Low educational level and low income go hand in hand. Not all undereducated adults are low income, of course, but many are. Undereducated adults tend to be somewhat alienated from the mainstream of society. They move in a cultural sub-group which condones their behavior and standards. Lacking self-confidence, undereducated adults are not self-motivated and rely heavily on the recommendations of others in their social sub-group or of professionals they respect. They are generally distrustful, suspicious and fatalistic, and these attitudes extend to new ideas and the future. Their learning style is personal, physical, pragmatic and concrete. They learn through doing, largely by trial and error. They rely heavily on non-verbal communication and may say more.
IN GESTURES AND FACIAL EXPRESSION THAN IN WORDS. THEY CONCENTRATE ON THE HERE AND NOW; THEREFORE, THEY WANT PRACTICAL SOLUTIONS TO THEIR PROBLEMS RATHER THAN THEORETICAL OR PHILOSOPHICAL JARGON. (CANNON, 1965; SHOEMAKER, 1965; SONQUIST, 1975; AND ULMER, 1969).

THE IMPLICATIONS OF THESE CHARACTERISTICS FOR PARENT EDUCATION ARE MULTIPLE. LOW INCOME MEANS THAT THE PARENT WILL BE LIKELY TO HAVE TRANSPORTATION AND CHILD CARE PROBLEMS IN GETTING TO CLASS. IT ALSO MEANS THAT CLASSES HAVE TO BE FREE OF CHARGE. LIVING IN A CULTURE WHICH CONDONES AND ACCEPTS CERTAIN BEHAVIORS AND STANDARDS MEANS THE UNDER-EDUCATED PARENT IS LESS LIKELY TO SEE THE NEED TO CHANGE. A LACK OF SELF-CONFIDENCE MEANS THERE IS A HESITANCY TO TRY OUT NEW IDEAS AND TECHNIQUES AND THE RELIANCE ON OTHERS IN THE SUB-GROUP FOR GUIDANCE MEANS THAT THE PARENT EDUCATOR MAY BE "UP AGAINST" A WELL-ESTABLISHED AND ACCEPTED AUTHORITY THAT THE PARTICIPANT DARES NOT CONTRADICT. THE EDUCATOR MAY IN FACT BE IN THE POSITION OF RE-EDUCATING AN ENTIRE COMMUNITY. OVERCOMING DISTRUST AND SUSPICION BECOME A MAJOR GOAL OF THE FIRST FEW SESSIONS AND THE MAINTAINING OF AN OPTIMISTIC ATTITUDE BECOMES A CONTINUOUS EFFORT.

"Going begins where you are!"
The learning style of the undereducated adult dictates a hands-on, activity-oriented teaching approach that does not rely heavily on formal presentation. Practice must be provided when specific skills are being learned and reinforcement must be continuous (Shoemaker, 1965 and Ulmer, 1969). Specific principles for teaching will be discussed later in the Volunteer Sponsor's Instructional Manual.

Determinants in Learning

Any adult brings into the classroom a multitude of attitudes, preconceived ideas, and outside influences which help to determine receptivity and retention in the learning situation. Several things help to determine how effective the learning program is:

1. Stage of Development - Development does not stop when a person reaches physical maturity. Adults continue to progress through stages of life which vary depending on many things, including the presence or absence of children. Adults who have children go through stages of parenthood within the larger stage of young adulthood. The parents of newborn infants are at a different stage of parental development than are the parents of teenagers. The parent educator must be aware of the developmental stage of each participant so that a relevant program can be conducted.

2. Life Situation of the Learner - Differing slightly from the characteristics of the learner, the life situation of the learner refers to culturally significant factors such as:
   - Age
   - Marital status
   - Employment status
   - Number and ages of children
   - Housing arrangements
   - Health
   - Education

If all else is paralyzed, we can, at least, change ourselves!
IT IS IMPORTANT FOR THE PARENT EDUCATOR TO REFLECT UPON THE POSSIBLE INFLUENCE THESE FACTORS MIGHT HAVE ON THE PARTICIPANT IN ORDER THAT:

1. THE PROGRAM CAN BE APPROPRIATELY ADJUSTED TO MEET THE SPECIAL NEEDS OF SPECIFIC PARTICIPANTS;
2. ALLOWANCES CAN BE MADE FOR THOSE WHOSE LIFE SITUATIONS REQUIRE IT, AND;
3. CARE CAN BE TAKEN TO AVOID AREAS OF DISCUSSION WHICH MIGHT LEAD TO EMBARRASSMENT OR ANTAGONISM.

MOTIVATION OF THE LEARNER - HIGHLY MOTIVATED PARENTS USUALLY COME TO THE LEARNING SITUATION WITH SPECIFIC CONCERNS AND PROBLEMS. THEY EXPECT TO HAVE THOSE CONCERNS AND PROBLEMS RECOGNIZED, DISCUSSED, AND POSSIBLY SOLVED. OCCASIONALLY THERE WILL BE PARTICIPANTS WHO HAVE REACHED A POINT OF INTOLERANCE IN THEIR RELATIONSHIPS WITH THEIR CHILDREN WHICH LEADS THEM TO PARENT EDUCATION AS A "LAST RESORT." THE PARENT EDUCATOR MUST BE SENSITIVE TO THE MOTIVATIONAL SITUATION OF EACH LEARNER. KNOWING THE REASON WHY A PARTICIPANT HAS COME WILL HELP THE EDUCATOR PLAN A PROGRAM THAT RESPONDS TO NEEDS, AND THEREFORE ENCOURAGES CONTINUED PARTICIPATION.

AN UNDEREDUCATED ADULT WHO FEELS COMPelled TO ATTEND WILL NOT BE AS RECEPTIVE AS ONE WHO IS MORE WILLING. IF THE PARTICIPANT COMES BECAUSE SOMEONE ELSE THINKS HE SHOULD, AND NOT BECAUSE HE WANTS TO, HE WILL HAVE A BUILT-IN REASON TO RESIST LEARNING. HIS ATTITUDE MIGHT BE THAT HE "DIDN'T WANT TO COME, ANYWAY." IF HE FEELS PRESSURED INTO PARTICIPATING HE MAY RESIST LEARNING BECAUSE HE THINKS OF THE PARENT EDUCATION CLASSROOM AS AN ATTEMPT BY OTHER PERSONS TO CHANGE HIM, I.E., MAKE HIM A "BETTER" PARENT. HE MAY RESIST CHANGING IN SELF-DEFENSE. FOR THIS PERSON THE INSTRUCTOR'S TASK INVOLVES KINDLING INTEREST, REINFORCING THE SELF-CONCEPT OF THE LEARNER, AND ENCOURAGING PARTICIPATION. AN ACCEPTING ATMOSPHERE AND EMPHASIS ON THE UNIVERSALITY OF PARENTING PROBLEMS ARE ESSENTIAL WHEN A CLASS INCLUDES RELUCTANT PARTICIPANTS (CANNON, 1965).
ANY MATERIALS, WHETHER FILMS, WRITTEN, OR SUPPLEMENTARY, MUST BE OF INTEREST TO THE PARTICIPANTS. IF THE MATERIALS DO NOT SATISFY THESE CRITERIA, THE LIKELIHOOD OF A SUCCESSFUL LEARNING EXPERIENCE IS LESSENED. FOR UNDEREDUCATED ADULTS, THE MATERIALS MUST BE APPEALING, EASY TO UNDERSTAND, HEAVILY ILLUSTRATED, AND OF A REASONABLY SHORT LENGTH. THE SUBJECTS COVERED MUST BE OF VALUE TO THE PARTICIPANTS (I.E., THEY MUST BE BASED ON PROBLEMS WHICH THEY WANT TO SOLVE). THE PRESENTATIONS MUST BE DIVERSE BUT FOLLOW A CONSISTENT FORMAT.

PRINCIPLES FOR TEACHING PARENTING TO UNDEREDUCATED ADULTS

A METHOD OF TEACHING IS DETERMINED BY THE CHARACTERISTICS OF THE LEARNERS AND THE CONTENT TO BE TAUGHT. IT IS ALSO SHAPED BY THE PERSONALITY AND ABILITY OF THE INSTRUCTOR. CONSEQUENTLY, EVERY CLASSROOM HAS A DISTINCTIVE ATMOSPHERE AND WHAT GOES ON INSIDE IT MAY OR MAY NOT FOLLOW THE SAME PATTERN AS THE CLASS NEXT DOOR. FOLLOWING A RIGID PATTERN OR PLAN IS NOT AS IMPORTANT AS MAINTAINING AN ATMOSPHERE CONDUCIVE TO LEARNING. IN PARENT EDUCATION IT IS ESPECIALLY IMPORTANT FOR BOTH INSTRUCTOR AND PARTICIPANTS TO FEEL COMFORTABLE AND UNRESTRAINED; PARENTING IS A DOMAIN IN WHICH EVERYONE EXPECTS TO DO WELL, BASICALLY BECAUSE SOCIETY SEEMS TO ASSUME THAT ANYONE WHO HAS PRODUCED A CHILD CAN "RAISE" IT. THEREFORE, TO ATTEND A PARENT EDUCATION CLASS IS IN A SENSE AN ADMISSION OF FAILURE---ONE WHICH IS NOT EASILY ACCEPTED BY MOST PEOPLE. THE PRINCIPLES FOR TEACHING PARENTING SKILLS TO UNDEREDUCATED ADULTS ARE BASED ON THIS CIRCUMSTANCE AS WELL AS SEVERAL TECHNIQUES FOR TEACHING UNDEREDUCATED ADULTS IN GENERAL (AUERBACH, 1968; O'DELL, 1974; STOLTZ, 1967; AND ULMER, 1969).

1. CONVEY ACCEPTANCE- IN A SITUATION WHERE THE TOPIC OF STUDY IS EMOTIONALLY VOLATILE AND WHERE ATTITUDES VARY A GREAT DEAL, IT IS ESPECIALLY IMPORTANT THAT EVERYONE PARTICIPATING FEELS ACCEPTED. THIS SHOULD INCLUDE IDEAS AS WELL AS THE PERSONAL SELF. THE LEADER OF A PARENT EDUCATION GROUP SETS THE ATMOS-PHERE OF ACCEPTANCE IN THE GROUP BY AVOIDING JUDGMENTS OF PERSONS OR IDEAS AND BY STRESSING THE UNIVERSALITY OF PARENTING DIFFICULTIES.

2. BEGIN WHERE THEY ARE - Persons who attend parent education classes are motivated by many different things, but the commonality among them is that all have immediate concerns.
They each have a problem or problems which are causing stress to push them into a help seeking situation. If each one does not feel that his or her problem will be addressed and possiably solved, he or she is not likely to return. It is the leader's responsibility to find out what the immediate concerns of the participants are and steer the sessions in the direction of possible solutions.

3. KEEP AN INFORMAL ATMOSPHERE - Making participants feel relaxed and uninhibited is especially important when the topic of discussion is personal and emotionally charged. The leader should arrange the room in a casual fashion (chairs in a circle, not rows), should be well-dressed but not over-dressed, and should interact with participants before and after class in a friendly and casual way.

4. EMPATHIZE - Showing understanding and agreement as often as possible creates rapport between the leader and the participants.
Good rapport will make the participants more willing to discuss their concerns and share their ideas. The participants should learn that their concerns are not unique. The leader must employ techniques that will help the participants empathize with one another.

5. PARTIALIZE PROBLEMS - Participants are likely to come to class with numerous non-specific problems which lump together in a general statement such as "I can't handle my kids." One of the functions of the group leader should be listening to the discussion with the intention of extracting concrete, explicit problems which can be dealt with individually. Problems chosen for group discussion should be as specific as possible.
Leader should help the group decide which problems are most important, set priorities, and plan which ones will be discussed first and which may be set aside. The leader should also try to steer the group away from abstractions (such as, "what if's") and keep the discussion of problems as concrete as possible.

6. Recognize and use strengths—Groups of people vary almost as much as individuals do. Some groups are uninhibited, some are boisterous, some are indifferent, and some are hostile, and the opposite of each of these characteristics can also occur. Every group has strengths and weaknesses, just as do individuals. Group leaders should make use of group and individual strengths as much as possible, and should recognize strengths whenever possible, especially when weaknesses are brought out. Making use of group strengths help the sessions run more smoothly and enjoyable. Making use of individual strengths accomplishes the same goal as well as improving the self-images of participants.

7. Make use of old skills to teach new ones—Undereducated adults tend to rely heavily on non-verbal communication. Body language, gestures, facial expressions may mean more to them than verbal explanations. Since use of non-verbal communication is an "old" skill, it is more effective as a means of learning "new" skills than something totally new such as abstract verbal communication. Therefore, techniques such as "show me how you feel" are better than "tell me how you feel" when undereducated adults are learning how to communicate more effectively with their children. Group leaders will discover other such skills as the sessions progress and should make optimal use of them as they appear.

8. Recognize progress—Summary and evaluation are especially important teaching practices in working with undereducated adults. Continuity is important in order to overcome the "wait-and-see" attitude held by many. Therefore, it is important to try to "sum up" at every appropriate point in the PROCESS, AND TO SUMMARIZE, EVALUATE, AND RECOGNIZE PROGRESS AT THE END OF EACH SESSION. IT IS ALSO ADVISABLE TO INDICATE WHAT THE TOPIC OF STUDY WILL BE AT THE NEXT SESSION AND SHOW A RELATIONSHIP BETWEEN WHAT HAS PASSED AND WHAT IS TO COME. IN THE BEST-PAL PROGRAM IT IS ESPECIALLY USEFUL TO RECOGNIZE HOW THE "PLANS FOR CHANGE" ARE PROGRESSING. AT THE BEGINNING OF EACH NEW CLASS, A RE-CAP OF THE LAST SESSION SHOULD OCCUR WITH EACH PERSON RESPONDING TO HOW HE OR SHE HANDLED THE "PLAN FOR CHANGE". REINFORCEMENT SHOULD OCCUR WITH NEW IDEAS BEING DISCUSSED ON HOW A PARTICULAR PROBLEM CAN BE SOLVED.

IN SUMMARY, REMEMBER THAT PARENTS MAY INITIALLY DISPLAY ENTHUSIASM BUT HAVE TO RETURN TO A STRESSFUL SITUATION. GIVE THEM INFORMATION ON WHAT TO EXPECT: "BLOWING YOUR COOL" DOESN'T MEAN THAT THE PERSON HAS FAILED. LEARNING TO DEAL WITH THE "REALITIES" OF A PARTICULAR SITUATION IS IMPORTANT FOR THE INDIVIDUAL. SOMETIMES THE VOLUNTEER SPONSOR WILL WANT TO TAKE THE TIME TO TALK WITH LEARNERS ON AN INDIVIDUAL BASIS.
TRAINING MATERIALS

Communications

Leadership Skills

Group Dynamics
COMMUNICATION SKILLS

I. Free Information

II. Asking Open-ended Questions

III. Self-disclosure

IV. Listening
   A. Purpose
      1. To share
      2. To clarify
   B. Kinds
      1. Passive
      2. Active
         a. Summarizing
         b. Paraphrasing
         c. Emotion plus content
FREE INFORMATION

WHAT THE OTHER PERSON OFFERS

Articles of clothing

Physical features

Body language

Verbal information
QUESTIONS

Close-ended questions

Can be answered in one or at most a few words

Ex. Have you filled out an application form?
    Did you like being a nurse?

Open-ended questions

Worded in such a way that they call for a more detailed response

Ex. What have you done so far in becoming a student at BCC?

What were some good (or bad) things about being a practical nurse?

To do nothing is still wrong to do nothing!
Facts I know
Information Needs
Feelings Attitudes
Opinions Likes Dislikes
Talents

The self behind the uniform

What I can do

18
ACTIVE LISTENING

Reflect back

Thoughts - Feelings

Paraphrase

Body language

Attentive

Good eye contact
ACTIVE LISTENING

For use as follows:

* Before you act
* Before you argue
* When the other person experiences strong feelings or wants to talk over a problem
* When the other person is speaking in a "code"
* When another person wants to sort out feelings and thoughts
* During a "direct mutual conversation"
* When you are talking to yourself
* When encountering new ideas in a book, lecture conversation or at work
DEFENSIVENESS

First Assertion

Defensive Response

Diminuted Defensiveness

Continued Defensiveness

Second Assertion

Defensive Response

Diminished Defensiveness

Continued Defensiveness

Reflective Listening Response

Diminished Defensiveness

Third Assertion

Defensive Response

Reflective Listening Response

Defensive Response

Fourth Assertion

Reflective Listening Response

Defensive Response

Diminished Defensiveness

Reflective Listening Response

"Thank you"

Other person offers to alter her behavior.
SIX KEYS TO GOOD LISTENING

1. Be mentally prepared
   * Stop other activities
   * Minimize distractions so you can concentrate and pay attention
   * Listen face-to-face -- eye-to-eye
   * Turn off your own worries -- about yourself or your own problems
   * Omit interrupting unless it is to support or clarify
   * Limit your own talking

2. Practice active listening
   * Give supportive feedback, verbal or nonverbal
   * Report your understanding
   * Seek clarification
   * Summarize what you hear
   * Listen for the feelings behind the words

3. Listen for content -- listen for ideas -- what is the message?

4. Listen for intent of speaker -- what does the person want or need?

5. Give the speaker the right to have a different opinion from you and don't judge

COMMUNICATION PROBLEM

I know you believe you understand what you think I said, but I am not sure you realize that what you heard is not what I meant!
LEADING A GROUP

TO BE AN EFFECTIVE GROUP LEADER, THERE ARE SEVERAL BASIC ASSUMPTIONS WHICH NEED TO BE DISCUSSED AND ACCEPTED.

EFFECTIVE HELPERS WERE FOUND, IN SEVERAL STUDIES, TO MAKE THE FOLLOWING ASSUMPTIONS ABOUT PEOPLE.

1. PEOPLE ARE ABLE, NOT UNABLE. THEY HAVE THE CAPACITY TO SOLVE THEIR PROBLEMS.

2. PEOPLE ARE FRIENDLY, NOT UNFRIENDLY. THEY EXPECT AND WANT A GIVE AND TAKE IN THEIR FRIENDLINESS.

3. PEOPLE ARE WORTHY, NOT UNWORTHY. THEY POSSESS DIGNITY WHICH MUST BE RESPECTED.

4. PEOPLE ARE BASICALLY INTERNALLY, NOT EXTERNALLY MOTIVATED. THEY ARE CREATIVE AND MOTIVATED FROM WITHIN.

5. PEOPLE ARE DEPENDABLE, NOT UNDEPENDABLE. THEY ARE ESSENTIALLY TRUSTWORTHY, PREDICTABLE AND UNDERSTANDABLE.

6. PEOPLE ARE HELPFUL, NOT UNHELPFUL. THEY ARE SOURCES OF SATISFACTION AND JOY.

WHAT ARE YOUR ASSUMPTIONS ABOUT PEOPLE? WHAT IF THEY HAVE DIFFERENT VALUES OR LIFESTYLES THAN YOURS?
LEADERS ARE SENSITIVE TO THE NEEDS OF THE GROUP AND LEAD THE GROUP IN WAYS THAT PROMOTES COOPERATION AND COHESIVENESS.

LEADERS BELIEVE IN THE ABILITY OF PEOPLE TO GROW AND CHANGE.

LEADERS ARE NOT INTERESTED IN GRATIFYING THEMSELVES, BUT IN ENCOURAGING THE GROWTH OF THE GROUP MEMBERS. THEY AVOID THE ROLE OF EXPERT OR AUTHORITY FIGURE.

LEADERS ENCOURAGE AN ATMOSPHERE OF MUTUAL TRUST AMONG GROUP MEMBERS. THEY EMPHASIZE THINGS THAT INDIVIDUAL PARENTS ARE DOING THAT IS POSITIVE.

(The material in the Leader's Guide on Leadership and Group Facilitating is taken from Systematic Training for Effective Parenting Leader's Guide by Dinkmeyer & McKay, 1976.)
KEEPING THE GROUP GOING

I. First Stage of a Group

The members are enthusiastic and often believe the classes are going to solve all their parenting problems.

Some members will try to manipulate the leader into being an authority figure (avoid this). Some members will be very anxious and distrustful and need to feel safe in the group. The leader can reduce this tension by using gentle humor and by being relaxed and open.

II. Second Stage of a Group

The enthusiasm often goes away when group members realize that they are responsible for any changes that are going to be made. Some members will express discouragement and negative feelings about how the class is going. This can be helped by redefining goals, encouraging progress, and using techniques to heighten interest (like role-playing, games, etc.).

III. Third Stage of a Group

The group members generally are on task. The group has matured and assumed the responsibility for learning. The members also recognize their responsibilities to the group and to themselves.
GROUP STAGES

1. Preaffiliation
   Members mill around, try to get involved, sometimes members express concern with group activities, relationships are non-intimate, mostly getting acquainted activities.

2. Power and control
   Some conflict arises, members try to exert control, status, skills, etc.; leader is often tested at this stage.

3. Intimacy
   Togetherness, unity, a real group feeling develops, honest exchange of feelings and ideas, mutual recognition of group members and group contributions.

4. Differentiation
   High cohesiveness, members accept each other as distinct individuals, members see group as providing a unique experience.

5. Separation
   Group disbands, members move apart and may show anxiety at breaking up, need for closure and reassurance that their growth will continue.
LIST OF TYPICAL ROLES PEOPLE PLAY IN GROUPS

From Jack Gibb and colleagues

1. Harmonizer - agrees with the rest of the group, brings together different views, accepts what the group decides.

2. Encourager - friendly, responsive to others in group, makes others feel good, helps others.

3. Clarifier - restates problems or solutions to make them clearer for others, summarizes points for others.

4. Energizer - urges the group toward making decisions, prods the group to take action, adds energy to group.

5. Tension Reducer - helps the group by joking at appropriate times, makes members feel relaxed.

6. Dominator - interrupts others, goes off on tangents, tries to get the group to do things their way.

7. Negativist - rejects ideas suggested by others, argues with others, doesn't want to cooperate.

8. Deserter - withdraws from the group by being indifferent or aloof, daydreaming or whispering to others, can actually leave the group.
EIGHT GROUP LEADER SKILLS

I. STRUCTURING
   - Setting limits on discussions and redirecting group members when they wander from the group goals.
   - Establishing time, place and materials that are needed.
   - Making sure that the meeting starts on time and finishes on time.
   - Making sure that all the material that is needed is provided at each session.

II. UNIVERSALIZING
   - Pointing out that participants share various questions and concerns.
   - Encouraging listening and empathizing among group members.
   - Asking what others think about a question that is raised by a group member.

III. LINKING
   - Identifying common threads among the group. (Especially important in the early stages of the group or when members are not listening)
   - Showing group that they share some common feelings and beliefs.

IV. FEEDBACK
   - Getting reactions from other group members to what is said in the group.
   - Making sure group members give each other feedback to help them reach better understandings.
   - Modeling feedback to the group.
V. DEVELOPING THEORY
- TAKING GROUP MEMBERS THROUGH PROBLEMS AND HELPING THEM SEE THE VALUE IN LEARNING PARENTING THEORY.
- BEING FAMILIAR WITH ALL THE MATERIAL AND UNDERSTANDING THE BASIC THEORY BEHIND IT.

VI. FOCUS ON POSITIVE BEHAVIOR
- ENCOURAGING PARENTS TO TRY OUT NEW BEHAVIOR.
- RECOGNIZING AND REWARDING ATTEMPTS TO IMPROVE.
- REINFORCING GROWTH AND CHANGE WHEN IT IS POSITIVE.

VII. TASK-SETTING
- HELPING GROUP MEMBERS SET GOALS.
- HELPING GROUP MEMBERS MAKE A COMMITMENT TO WORKING ON GOALS AND CHANGES IN BEHAVIOR.
- SETTING OUT PROCEDURES FOR PROBLEM SOLVING.

VIII. SUMMARIZING
- HELPING MEMBERS UNDERSTAND IDEAS, ATTITUDES AND GROUP PROCESSES EITHER DURING SESSIONS OR AT THE END OF THE SESSION.
- LEADING THE GROUP TOWARD SEEING THE PROGRESS THAT HAS BEEN MADE AS A GROUP AND AS INDIVIDUALS.
- PULLING TOGETHER ALL THE LOOSE ENDS (IDEAS, THOUGHTS AND EXPERIENCES) EXPRESSED BY THE GROUP WHENEVER THERE IS A LULL OR AT THE END OF A SESSION.

(From S.T.E.P. Leader's Manual by Dinkmeyer & McKay, 1976.)
PROBLEMS IN GROUP LEADERSHIP

Here are some examples of problems which may arise in your group. You may find yourself faced with:

THE MONOPOLIZER

They want to be the center of attention and often challenge the leader. The leader can say things like, "I'm getting concerned about our time and think we need to move along with our discussion. If we have time, we'll come back to this topic." Then, the leader can meet with the individual privately after class and discuss the problem. It is important when confronting someone with negative information to use "I messages" and not criticize. If the monopolizer continues to monopolize the class time, the leader can ask him or her to leave or suggest to the person that they get individual parenting counseling where more time can be spent on their problems.

PROVE IT TO ME

These people play the game of challenging the leader, others in the group, the material, etc. This is usually done to assume a leadership role. If this is the motive, ask the group to help by asking, "How do you all feel about what Jim is saying?" The group will help the leader in these situations and then you can move along. If the person is just seeking attention, you can try encouraging the person by recognizing his or her contributions to the group.
We don't have a right to complain about mistakes made by those doing the work we should be doing!

YAKKITY-YAK

This person is similar to the monopolizer, but can be more easily redirected. You can ask that person in a private conversation if they can help you with the group. For example, you could suggest that they help in bringing out the quiet members. The "talkers" generally are enthusiastic and willing to help if asked to do certain tasks.

TRY TO MAKE ME

These members are only halfway involved. Often they want information that gives them control over their children. If some of the ideas you present go against their basic beliefs and values, they will resist actively or passively. You can help by saying, "We can't tell you what to do. You must decide that for yourself. You know what is best for you. Our purpose is to offer some new ways of parenting for you to consider." Resisters often feel threatened and need to know that nobody wants to change their basic principles. Remain objective and try not to get defensive.

HAVE YOU CONSIDERED...LET'S LOOK AT ALL POINTS OF VIEW

These members can bring new ideas and perspective to your group, but sometimes they bring up so much extra material that you can lose the focus of your class goals. These members are also resisters and find change difficult.
THEY CAN SOMETIMES STOP THE PROGRESS OF THE GROUP. YOU CAN HELP THIS SITUATION BY SAYING, "YOU HAVE A GOOD POINT (OR GOOD INFORMATION), BUT THE GROUP WAS ORGANIZED TO CONSIDER AND DISCUSS THE MATERIAL BEING PRESENTED." CLARIFY THAT THE LEADER'S ROLE IS TO HELP THE GROUP FOCUS ON THE MATERIAL AT HAND.

KIDS WILL DO THAT...IT'S ONLY NORMAL

These group members can often stop group progress by giving into their child's misbehavior. They, too, don’t really want to change or, at least, find the effort to change difficult. Or, they see no hope in helping themselves or their children. They have given up. You can help by saying, "You may feel it's impossible to change things, but that's not the experience of others. We're here because we believe we can change and improve relationships." Don’t get into an argument with them.

IF ONLY SHE OR HE WOULD....

Some parents shift their problems to a spouse, neighbor or some other person. They want to make someone else responsible for their problems and for the solutions. You can state, "You seem to be saying that nothing you do or say can help you or your child. Is this the way you feel?"

WHAT DO YOU DO WHEN......?

This person makes a catastrophe out of things.
They always see the "worst case" and make a mountain out of every molehill. They say "yes, but..." whenever anyone offers a solution and say it would never work. You can help by pointing this out to them by saying, "It sounds like you don't really want to change because every time anyone offers a suggestion, you have a reason it won't work. It seems as if you don't really want suggestions. What do you think (or how do you feel) about this?" If they get into making a catastrophe out of each situation you can say, "Let's look at what you have suggested in a logical way. What do the rest of the group members think about what Mary has said? Do you think it is as awful as she feels it is? If so, what do you think would help her right now?" If she won't move on, you can say that the time is short and the group must move along to some of the other material. Don't get caught in playing a game of offering solutions that won't be accepted.

These problems occur because people are being asked to change and they may not have the new skills or attitudes to replace the old games; yet. A leader can help by using patience and respect with the group. In addition, the leader can model new skills like listening, feedback, honesty, and openness with the group so that they can use them with their children. (From S.T.E.P. Leader's Manual, Dinkmeyer & McKay, 1976.)
CHECKLIST FOR GROUP FACILITATORS

1. All of the group members participate during the sessions.

2. All of the group members attend regularly.

3. I consciously try to refrain from dominating discussions.

4. All members assume responsibility for the group process.

5. I recognize hidden agendas and hidden attitudes of group members and draw them out.

6. I periodically summarize the progress of the group.

7. I review points of disagreement among group members.

8. I welcome and use suggestions from group members.

9. I do not try to sell the group a proposition with which it does not agree or like.

10. I accept individual differences in the group and encourage a variety of opinions.

11. I prepare for each session.

12. I leave time for evaluation of the group process at the end of each session.

13. I draw out timid and withdrawn people without making them feel self-conscious.

14. I give examples of things that I am going over for the group to get concrete evidence of what I am presenting.
15. I am honest about my own feelings in the group so that the group members can learn to trust me.

16. I encourage criticism so that I can grow rather than becoming defensive and hostile when group members make suggestions about ways to improve the sessions.

17. I bring ideas to the group regarding other groups and activities instead of becoming possessive toward the group.

-by Osbourne & Harris

If Someone has blessed your life
Tell him so!
LEADER'S GUIDE

Level One

PROJECT BEST-PAL
MODULES

1. COMMUNICATION

2. LOVE AND AFFECTION

3. PARENTS AS A ROLE-MODEL

4. COPING WITH SCHOOL

5. DISCIPLINE

6. FAMILY CRISIS: MONEY, LOSS OF JOB AND DRUGS

7. PROBLEM SOLVING

8. SEX EDUCATION

Time required: 2 hours for each module
Materials needed: pencils, paper, crayons, markers, 3x5 cards, tape and stickers Objectives:

1. To help parents gain a better understanding of their children as individuals.
2. To help parents gain a better understanding of the roles and responsibilities of children and of themselves as parents.
3. To help parents gain a better understanding of how to help children cope with growing up.

Introduction:

The group leader (volunteer sponsor) introduces herself and gives some information about herself and her own family. Each participant then introduces herself or himself and gives two or three facts about his/her family and himself or herself.

Schedule:

Each session will be 2 hours in length once a week. The time will be flexible to fit the needs of the group. A 15 minute break will be held during each session. Pass around a list for people to sign up for being in charge of refreshments each meeting.

Opening activity:

Give each participant a 3x5 card. Ask them to write their name and the names, ages and sex of their children. Then ask the participants to move around among each other and talk about their families. Have them tape the 3x5 card on themselves.
Example of card:

ALTAMESE DAVIS
One child - Glenda-female age 26 yrs.

Next activity:

Explain the modules and the use of them. Pass them out and tell them that they will do one each week. If there are any questions or problems, you, as the group leader, are always there to help. Try to explain that there are no right or wrong answers or ideas. Everyone is there to learn and they can learn from each other as well as from the modules and from you.
ACTIVITIES TO BE USED WITH MODULES

1. Each participant writes on paper or a card three good things about his/her family. Collect all the slips of paper. Nobody is to acknowledge his/her statements. The group leader selects several slips to read to the group. After reading, she leads the group in a discussion on the statements.

Each participant again writes three things that are sometimes difficult in his or her family. Following the same procedure the leader collects and selects several to read. Then, she leads the group in a discussion. It is very important to assure the group that their comments are anonymous.

The group leader asks the participants to think of one thing they could do at home to improve things.

2. Each participant will draw a family portrait. Stick figures are okay. In the picture, ask the participants to include all the members of their family. This means everyone who lives in their household (including pets if they wish).

After telling the group who is in their family, have each participant tell what his or her spouse is doing to provide love or attention to the children in the family. The Volunteer Sponsor asks all participants to share their family portraits.
3. Have the group members pretend that they have just won a lottery for $2,000,000. They may spend the money any way they wish. Discuss this for 2 minutes. Have each participant of the group discuss what he or she would do with the money. Let each member discuss this question for 3 minutes. "How would your family like to spend the money you won?"

Ask each participant what difference there would be in the way that member would want to spend the money and the way the rest of the family would spend the money.

This will lead to an examination of values and differences among family members. Point this out and assure the group that all families have differences in priorities and values. It is important to learn to compromise and to help all family members gain some satisfaction.

4. The group leader provides a set of pictures or cartoons from magazines about family life. Each participant selects one picture to which he or she relates and tells a story about it. Some questions that the group leader can ask are:

What feelings do you think the people in the picture are expressing?

What is each person in the picture doing to support other family members?

Can you tell us why you picked that particular picture?
5. Role-playing can help members understand others by pretending to be the person.

Have the group divide into pairs. One person is asked to pretend to be the parent and one is asked to be the teenager.

Situation: A 15 year old returns home at 2:30 AM after a football game. The game ended at 9:30 PM and curfew is at 11:30 PM. The story is then brought to a halt.

The group leader then asks one pair to provide an ending to the story or to continue the story until it is finished. When they finish the story, the other group members are asked to comment on the role-playing. After some discussion, another pair is asked to offer a different ending to the same story. If there is enough time, this can be done with the entire group with discussion following each role-playing.

The Volunteer Sponsor asks the participants the following questions:

How did you feel acting the role of a parent?

How did you feel acting the role of the teenager?

Discuss the parent reaction and teenager reaction expressed by the role-players. Talk about how it feels to assume a role, especially that of a teenager. What was learned by the role-players and the rest of the group?
MODULE I - COMMUNICATION

Leader opens with:

"It is important for children to feel worthwhile. Parents can do this by being on the lookout for good behavior and letting their children know when they approve. Good listening is the key to good communication. Letting children talk about how they feel enables them to cope with their surroundings and their feelings."

Here are some questions to think about:

 How do you communicate with others?
 Can you communicate without verbal responses?
 How do you communicate with your children?

On page 1 of the module:

Pronounce each word and discuss each one. Ask for any ideas on the word meanings.

Pages 2, 3 and 4:

Divide participants into 3 groups. The participants will do these 3 pages in their small group. After 20 minutes, have the participants share their findings and reactions with the large group.

Page 5:

Leader opens with:

"Emotions are strong feelings." Pronounce the words on page 5. Allow 10 minutes for the group to work on this page. The Leader then says, "The person that finds all the words first will get a prize (a sticker)."
Break: 15 minutes
Next:

When the group gets back together-
Ask the participants to demonstrate the many ways of communicating. How would you communicate the following sentences:
(Pretend you are communicating with a child)

"Clean your room right now!"
"Please clean your room."
"I would like it if you cleaned your room."
"If you don’t clean your room, you won’t go to the basketball game."

Discuss the different ways participants communicated their feelings.

Page 6 and 7:
Read these two pages aloud to the group. As the group leader reads aloud, she asks the participants to answer the questions. Allow participants to comment on each item and situation.

Page 8, 9, and 10:
Give the summary of Communication by reading the material aloud and briefly discussing Things To Remember. Ask participants to give their reactions to each pointer. The leader can ask: “How do you feel about children today expressing their feelings?” and “How did your parents communicate with you?”
A Plan For Change is personal. This is for self-awareness. Do not ask the participants to share. Explain this before they start on it. However, if someone wants to share something at the end of it, allow him or her time to do so. Always check to see if anyone would like to share or comment on an activity and give those people time to express their feelings. It's important for the group members to know that you are sincere in wanting their reactions or they will stop contributing.

Briefly explain Things To Do At Home. Read aloud what to do during the week. Explain that participants will share their experiences at the beginning of the next session.
MODULE II - LOVE AND AFFECTION

Ask each participant to relate one experience during the past week which helped improve the family relationships. Go around the group and have each person share. If they can think of no positive experience, then let them pass. Don't get into the negatives.

Leader opens with:

"Love and affection are important in the growth of all children. Showing your love and affection with words and actions gives children a feeling of importance."

Page 1:
Pronounce the words and read the word meaning. Ask for the participants to react to each word meaning.

Page 2:
Read aloud to the group. Then ask, "What does the word love mean to you?" Allow participants a chance to fully discuss their ideas. If nobody starts off, you can begin by what it means to you and then ask others to give their ideas. Ask the participants to do some role-playing (explain what it is). Have someone be the child and someone be the parent. While the child is acting very mean, have the parent show affection for this child.
Participants will then discuss how they would handle this problem and how they would show affection. During the discussion, it is important to say, "This child needs a lot of touching." Explain why touching is so important to all humans, and especially to children who are growing up and often feel confused and scared (even if they don't show it).

Page 3 and 4:

Leader opens with:

"Many times parents show love by trying to give their children everything they want. Sometimes parents feel guilty for not giving their children whatever they want. There are many ways to show love besides giving children things. Giving of yourself is even more important."

Read aloud pages 3 and 4. Allow enough time for discussion and time for participants to write down and answer the questions about the situations.

Break: 15 minutes

Pages 5, 6 and 7:

Leader opens with:

"Sometimes parents are not able to give love and affection when their child wants it. If the child feels safe and worthwhile, just a soft look or smile will be enough for the moment."
Read aloud pages 5, 6 and 7. The group will do these pages together. After reading each situation or sentence, pause for discussion. Allow time for group members to write down their ideas before discussion. On page 7, discuss the statement, "How affection helps a child grow."

Pages 8, 9 and 10:
Give a summary of Love and Affection by reading aloud and briefly discussing Things To Remember. Ask participants to give their reactions to the topic. Questions for the Volunteer Sponsor to ask are:

- How do you feel when your family shows you love and affection?
- How did love and affection help you grow?

A Plan For Change is personal. It is for self-awareness. Remind participants that they do not have to share unless they would like to do so. Allow time for this sharing if needed. Briefly explain Things To Do At Home. Read aloud what to do during the week. Remind participants that they will share their positive experiences at the beginning of the next session.
 MODULE III - PARENTS AS ROLE MODELS

Each participant will relate one experience of the past week which helped to improve family relationships.

Leader opens with:

"Children want to be like the people they love and admire. Children try to be like their parents. An example is, if you smoke or behave in an inappropriate way, the child will think that this is acceptable behavior."

(read cartoon)

Page 1:
Read aloud the words to know and the word meanings. Briefly discuss these words and their meanings. State that these words will be used many times during this session.

Page 2:
Allow each participant to read and write ways a parent can be a better role model. Read aloud page 2 and discuss with the group.

Page 3:
Leader asks the following questions of the group:
What is the role of the mother? What is the role of the father? What is the role of the children? What is the role of the others living in the family?
Have each participant write the role of the family members and ask them to share their ideas with the group.
Leader opens with:

"It is OK to disagree with each other, but when it gets out of control, it affects the children. Observe the family in the picture. How did this happen? Why did this misunderstanding get to this point?"

Discuss how this can be avoided.

Break - 15 minutes

When the group returns, do Activity # in the guide material.

Page 5:

Read aloud the entire page. Each participant will read and complete this page. Ask someone in the group to share his or her family with the group. Allow anyone that is willing to share the opportunity to do the same.

Page 6:

Ask each participant to write or draw a picture to describe his/her family each day. The group leader will do his or her family as an example. Ask some of the participants to share their family descriptions.

Pages 7, 8 and 9:

Give a summary of Parents as Role Models by reading aloud. Discuss Things To Remember. Ask each participant to give his or her reactions to the topic on Role Models. The Leader can ask the following questions: "How do you feel about parents as role models?" and "Do you find yourself doing the same things your parents did in raising you?"

A Plan For Change is personal. This is for self-awareness. Allow time for any discussion if a participant wishes to share any of his or her answers.

Briefly explain Things To Do At Home. Participants will be asked to share their positive experiences at the beginning of the next session.
MODULE IV - COPING WITH SCHOOL

Each participant relates one experience of the past week which helped improve family relationships.

Leader opens with:

"It is often difficult for children to adjust to school. The pressures and expectations, plus the demands of teachers and peers, make it very important for parents to help their children cope with school. If your child were to make a C in a subject at school, would you punish your child or would you ask if your child had done his or her best job? Why?"

Page 1:
Pronounce each word and briefly discuss the meanings. Ask for the comments of the participants after each word is demonstrated.

Page 2:
The Volunteer Sponsor will draw a "family shirt" and then will share it with the group. Ask each participant to then draw his or her own "family shirt". Encourage them to be creative. After drawing their shirt, everyone will share their shirt and will tell why this shirt is special.

Page 3:
Read the situation and ask each participant to answer the questions. Allow enough time for the participants to finish. Read the situation aloud again and discuss with the group.
Encourage each participant to comment by asking, "Do you agree or disagree?" and "Why do you feel this way?"

Page 4 and 5:
The Volunteer Sponsor will sketch or draw what the words 'school', 'bus', 'family' and 'teacher' mean to her. Then, the Volunteer Sponsor will share her sketch or drawing with the group. Ask each participant to do the same. Have larger pieces of paper available for some participants who need a larger piece. Encourage all participants to share and explain their drawings.

Page 6:
The Volunteer Sponsor will read this page aloud and will demonstrate drawing herself as a piece of school equipment. Try to make it as humorous as possible in order to relax the group. Each participant will be asked to draw himself or herself and then share the drawings with the rest of the group. The Volunteer Sponsor will ask, "Is it important for parents to be involved in their child's school? Why or why not?"

Break (15 minutes)

Page 7 and 8:
The Volunteer Sponsor will pronounce the words and will then draw a desk using graffiti. The Volunteer Sponsor will then say, "Many times children use graffiti to give a message about how they feel. Parents who are aware of this will have some understanding about how to help their child cope with school. Ask the participants to draw a desk and have them share their drawings with the rest of the group. Allow enough time for all participants to read and respond to questions on page 8. After the allotted time, read the questions aloud and discuss with the whole group. Encourage the participants to comment by asking, "How would you handle this situation?"

Page 9:
The Volunteer Sponsor opens with:
"The cooperation between the parent, child, teacher and community is the basis of helping children cope with school." Demonstrate this by making a poster as described and explain it to the group. Then, divide the group into smaller groups of 3 or 4 and ask them to make a group poster. One participant from each group will then tell the large group about the small group's poster.

Page 10:
The Volunteer Sponsor opens with:
"Social adjustment is very important to the child. It affects the child's relationship with his or her peers at school." Read the situation aloud and then have the group discuss the many ways that parents can help in this situation. The Volunteer Sponsor then says, "When you were a teenager did you have any of these problems? Did you have a similar problem? Who helped you to cope?"
The Volunteer Sponsor gives a summary of Coping With School by reading aloud and discussing Things To Remember. Ask the participants to give their reactions to the topic. The Volunteer Sponsor asks, "How do you help your child cope with school? Do you know your children's teachers? How often do you visit your child's school?"

A Plan For Change is personal. This is for self-awareness. Do not ask participants to share unless they wish to do so. If there is someone who would like to share, allow him or her time to do so.

Briefly explain Things To Do At Home. Participants will share their experiences at the beginning of the next session.

---

It is well to put off until tomorrow what you ought not do at all.

55
MODULE V - DISCIPLINE

Each participant relates one experience of the last week which helped improve family relationships.

Leader opens with:
"Children want and need limits. They expect this training from their parents. Here are some questions for you to think about:

- How am I training my child?
- Am I being consistent?
- Am I disciplining my child to meet my own needs or to help in the training of my child?"

Page 1:
Pronounce the words and explain each one. Encourage group discussion of the words.

Page 2, 3 and 4:
Divide the participants into 3 groups. The participants will do all 3 pages. Group 1 will discuss their decisions about page 2. Group 2 will discuss their decisions about page 3 and Group 3 will discuss their decisions about page 4. Any of the participants may give their opinions about any of the pages after the small group has given their report. Allow time for group discussion.

Page 5, 6 and 7:
Read page 5 aloud and ask the participants how often they allow their children to discipline themselves. Observe the illustrations and discuss what they think is happening in the illustrations on page 6 and 7. Allow the participants to respond to the questions. Discuss ways that they would solve this problem. What can the parents do to help this child? Ask them how they work with their spouses to discipline the children in their family.

Break (15 minutes)

Activity #1

Practice What You Pray

Page 8 and 9:
Read aloud. Allow enough time for participants to answer the letters. Ask someone to read his or her letter to the group. The other participants may respond to the letters written by the other group members. Remind them that there are no right or wrong answers. Explain that what is helpful to one person may or may not be helpful to another person. Allow enough time for all participants to share their letters with the entire group.

Page 10:
These open-ended sentences can be done aloud or written. If done aloud, ask someone to read one sentence and complete the sentence. Then, ask someone else to read the next one and complete it. Move around the circle in order to give everyone a chance to answer the sentences. If written, ask each partcipant to write his or her answers and then discuss them with the whole group after everyone has had a chance to write down their answers.

Page 11 and 12:
Give the summary of Discipline by reading aloud and then discussing Things To Remember. Ask participants to give their reactions to the topic. Example: "How are you setting limits for your child? How are you praising your child? How are you working with your spouse to discipline your child?"
The Plan For Change is personal. This is for self-awareness. Participants do not have to share their response, but give anyone who would like to share an opportunity to do so.
Briefly explain Things To Do At Home. Participants can share experiences at the beginning of the next session.
MODULE VI - FAMILY CRISIS: MONEY, LOSS OF JOB & DRUGS

Each participant relates one experience of the past week which helped improve family relationships.

Leader opens with:
"Crisis in the family will affect all family members regardless of the problem. When the family routine is interrupted, it puts stress on everyone. Children will feel more a part of the family if given a simple explanation of the problem. Example: "Daddy/Mother is no longer working. All of us are going to have to work together now. We don't have as much money to spend as we used to." Another example: "Sister or Brother has a drug problem and needs our help. It is important that we all work together in order for her or him to get better."

Page 1:
Pronounce each word and briefly discuss the words that will be used in this module.

Page 2 and 3:
Divide the participants into 2 groups. Ask the groups to discuss and answer the situations on page 2 and 3. Allow the 2 groups about 10 minutes for discussion. A participant from each group will report to the large group about what the group discussed and decided to do about the problems.

Page 4:
Read this page aloud. The Volunteer Sponsor will ask, "Which sentences would you draw a line under? Explain why you would draw a line under those sentences.” Allow time for comments and discussion.

Page 5, 6 and 7:
Divide the participants into small groups. There should be 3 or 4 people in each group. Nobody should work alone. After allowing 15 minutes for group discussion, the Volunteer Sponsor can ask, “Why do you think the child is acting that way? What decision would you make? How would you help this family learn how to handle its money problems?” Encourage group discussion.

Break (15 minutes)

The Volunteer Sponsor says: "The abuse of drugs creates major problems. Youth and adults are abusing drugs and alcohol more now than ever before." If possible, ask a resource person to come and talk to the class about Drugs and Alcohol to answer questions about abuse. Discuss some concerns the participants have about drug abuse (alcohol is a drug). Pass out pamphlets if they are available.

Page 9 and 10:
Read the letters on pages 9 and 10 aloud. Ask each participant to write his or her answer. Ask participants to share their answers with the large group.
Give the summary of Family Crises: Money, Loss of Job and Drugs by reading aloud and discussing Things To Remember. Ask participants to give their reactions to the topic. Some questions for them to consider are:

- How do each of them handle crisis in their own family?
- How can we all educate youth of today about the dangers of drug abuse?

A Plan For Change is personal. It is for self-awareness. Ask if anyone would like to share any of his/her responses. Remind them that nobody has to share, but if anyone wants to they are welcome to do so. Allow time for this sharing. Briefly explain Things To Do At Home. Read aloud what they are to do during the week. Participants will share their experiences at the beginning of the next session.
MODULE VII - PROBLEM SOLVING

Each participant relates one experience of the past week which helped improve family relationships.

Leader opens with:
"Children need to be taught to solve problems. Parents that do everything for their children don't give the children the opportunity to grow. Children need to know that they can work things out for themselves. Of course, there are times when the parents must help work things out."

Page 1 and 2:
Pronounce and briefly discuss the words. Talk about the picture on page 2. The Volunteer Sponsor can ask the participants what they think is happening in the picture. Ask them what they would do in this situation. Allow time for those who wish to comment a chance to do so.

Page 3:
Read each item aloud. As the Volunteer Sponsor reads, the participants will check the words 'usually', 'sometimes', or 'never', according to their opinions. The participants may comment on each item after they check their preferences.

Page 4 and 5:
Read aloud and demonstrate to the participants how to rate the sentences. Each participant will do page 4 and share the answers with the group. Participants will do page 5.
individually. Ask participants to volunteer to read his or her problem. The group will help with the solution. Remind them that there are no right or wrong answers.

Break (15 minutes)

Activity #2

Page 6 and 7:
The Volunteer Sponsor says, "No two people see things the same way. Members of a family see things differently, and they believe what they see to be true. Imagine that you are another member of your family. Write down what you think that member of the family would like to do." Allow enough time for the participants to write their answers. Have the group discuss the following question, "What have you learned about yourself from doing this exercise?"

On page 7, read the sentences aloud. Ask for comments on each sentence.

Page 8, 9 and 10:
Give the summary of Problem Solving by reading aloud and briefly discussing Things To Remember. Ask participants to give their reactions to the topic. Here are some questions for them to consider:

Do they give their children a chance to solve their own problems?
How do they let their children know that they have confidence in their decisions?

A Plan For Change is personal. It is for self-awareness. Ask if any participants would like to share their answers, but make it clear that nobody should feel as if he or she must share.

Briefly explain Things To Do At Home. Read aloud what they are to do during the week. Explain that participants will share their experiences at the beginning of the next session.
MODULE VIII - SEX EDUCATION

Each participant will relate one experience of the past week which helped improve family relationships.

Leader opens with:
"Sex education will not necessarily change your ideas or values about sex. Sex education helps an individual grow and learn to accept himself or herself. Here are some facts you might be interested in concerning teenagers giving birth:

* In 1979, 505 teenagers gave birth to babies in Brevard County.
* In 1979, in the United States there were 22,866 babies born to teenagers between the ages of 13 to 19.

Someone needs to help the young people of today with this problem. It is up to the parent to let their children know how their bodies change and what to expect about sex.

Page 1 and 2:
Pronounce and briefly discuss the words that will be used in this module. Discuss the picture on page 2. Allow participants enough time to discuss their ideas about sex education.

Page 3:
Read the sentences aloud. As the sentences are read aloud, ask the participants to mark 'yes' or 'no' after each one.

Page 4, 5 and 6:
Divide the participants into 3 smaller groups according to the ages of their own children. Group 1 will answer the questions about Early Ages. Group 2 will answer and discuss the questions on Middle Ages. Group 3 will discuss and answer the questions about Teenagers. After the small group discussion, each small group will relate to the large group what they discussed about their age group. Have one participant from each group agree to give the report from his or her group.

Page 7 and 6:
Divide the participants into pairs. The pairs will do the five questions together. The Volunteer Sponsor says, "We all have different ideas and values about how much a child should know about the development of the body." Ask someone to share his or her ideas with the group. The question on page 7 may be used. The Volunteer Sponsor says, "Everyone needs to be alone sometimes. Parents need to be by themselves sometimes, too. Do you spend every waking moment of your life meeting the needs of your children or do you find time for yourself and your spouse?"

Page 9, 10 and 11:
Give the summary of Sex Education by reading aloud and briefly discussing Things To Remember. Ask the participants to give their reactions to the topic. Ask them to consider the following questions:

How did you find out about sex? at home? at school? from friends?
Would you want your children to find out like you did?
A Plan For Change is personal. It is for self-awareness. If anyone would like to share his or her responses, allow enough time for this.

Briefly explain Things To Do At Home. Read aloud what they are to do during the week. Participants will share experiences at the beginning of the next session.

Suggestion: Try to get a resource person to come to your class to help with this module.
LEADER'S GUIDE

LEVEL II

OPEN HOUSE

WORKSHOP

PROJECT BEST-PAL
GUIDE TO LEADING EACH SESSION

1. DISCUSSION OF THINGS TO DO AT HOME ACTIVITY

The purpose of the "Do At Home" activity is to take the ideas discussed in the large group and try them out with their own children at home. Start by asking for any successful things that happened during the week using the new ideas. You should start this on the second week at the beginning of class. Go around the circle and give everyone the opportunity to contribute. Encourage members to continue trying these new things even if their attempts were unsuccessful at first. Often it takes several tries before these ideas start working.

2. VOCABULARY WORDS

Tell the group that the vocabulary words sometimes mean different things to different people. Read each sentence containing the vocabulary word to the group. After each sentence, ask the members what they think the word means. Encourage their discussion and point out the similarities and reassure the group that their differences are also positive. It brings more ideas to the group members.

3. DISCUSSION OF READING

Read together the information part of the session. Stop frequently and ask for questions or comments. Help members understand how to use the ideas by taking examples given and applying it to their children. (Refer to leader's guide directions for each session.)

4. ACTIVITIES OR EXERCISES TO DO WITH PARTNERS OR GROUP

When dividing the large group into smaller groups for activities, count off by two's, three's, or four's depending on how many you want in each group. When it's an activity that will be discussed later in the entire group, have the small group choose a leader to report what the small group came up with and they will report that to the entire group on behalf of the small group.

Assure them that for many of the activities, there are no right or wrong answers -- only opinions. For those activities that have definite answers, some of the answers are found on the page just after the activity. Those that are not will be given to them after the activity is completed. It is not a test -- only a practice exercise.
5. Things To Do At Home

Explain the "To Do At Home" pages. Be certain that the members understand what they are to do. Give examples if they are needed. Tell them that they will have a chance to talk about their experiences the next week. There are no right or wrong answers to those pages.

6. Things To Work On

On the last page of each session are two personal things for the members to do. One is to list things they did during the week that were helpful as a parent. The other is to write what they would like to work on. If there is time at the end of each session, discuss this page with the group members. Let them know they do not have to share if they do not want to. This is a good time for the leader and group members to encourage each other!
MODULE I - ATTENTION! ATTENTION!

INTRODUCE YOURSELF AND EXPLAIN THE NEED FOR PARENTING GROUPS.

A. MOTHERS AND FATHERS HAVE NOT HAD TRAINING FOR BECOMING PARENTS. Plumbers, doctors, secretaries, and ditch diggers all have had training to do their jobs. Parenting, the most important job of all, does not have any training schools.

B. WE OFTEN USE TECHNIQUES AND METHODS USED BY OUR PARENTS, BUT THEY OFTEN DON'T WORK TODAY BECAUSE SOCIETY HAS CHANGED SO MUCH. WE OFTEN DO THE THINGS OUR PARENTS DID AND DON'T EVEN KNOW WHY.

EXAMPLE:

ONE DAY THERE WAS A MOTHER WHO WAS CUTTING OFF THE ENDS OF HER HAM BEFORE SHE PUT IT INTO THE PAN. HER DAUGHTER ASKED HER WHY SHE DID THAT AND THE MOTHER REPLIED, "BECAUSE MY MOTHER DID IT. LET'S ASK HER." THEY WENT TO ASK GRANDMOTHER WHY SHE DID IT AND GRANDMOTHER REPLIED, "BECAUSE MY MOTHER DID IT. LET'S ASK HER." THE CHILD ASKED HER GREAT-GRANDMOTHER WHY SHE CUT OFF THE ENDS OF HER HAM BEFORE SHE PUT IT IN THE PAN AND SHE ANSWERED, "BECAUSE I HADN'T HAVE A PAN BIG ENOUGH!"

SOCIETY HAS CHANGED. WE NO LONGER CAN DO THE SAME THINGS OUR PARENTS DID BECAUSE THEY EITHER DON'T WORK OR ARE NOT NECESSARY.

C. THROUGH TIME, PARENTING HAS CHANGED FROM AUTHORITARIAN TO PERMISSIVE TO DEMOCRATIC.

AUTHORITARIAN -- KEEP POWER

PERMISSIVE -- GIVE AWAY POWER

DEMOCRATIC -- SHARE POWER

-66-
There is an effective method of parenting that works today that is built on mutual respect. We will be learning that method in the coming weeks. It is democratic.

D. We have tapes (like a message on a tape recorder) in our heads from things said or done to us since we were children. We often need to turn off these tapes. We can never erase our old ones, but we can make new ones. We want to put on our new tapes—parenting techniques that will work for us now. We also want to play those things on our tapes that our parents did that we liked and want to continue using with our children.

E. Parenting groups are a support group where parents find out that other parents share the same problems. It is a place to exchange ideas and feelings.

GET ACQUAINTED ACTIVITY

People Hunt. Give each person a copy of the People Hunt activity. Read it through first and then have the group "hunt" for the people on the list. When they find the right person, that person should sign his/her name in the correct place.

REVIEW THE VOCABULARY WORDS

Read over them and ask the group what they think the word means to them. Discuss the words as they are read.

DIVIDE INTO SMALL GROUPS FOR THE FOLLOWING EXERCISE:

Each person in the group gives his/her name and the names and AGES OF HIS/HER CHILDREN. THEY ALSO SAY ONE THING THAT WAS A SURPRISE ABOUT BEING A PARENT.

COME BACK TOGETHER INTO THE LARGE GROUP

EACH PERSON TELLS HIS OR HER NAME AND ONE POSITIVE THING ABOUT EACH OF THEIR CHILDREN. EXAMPLE OF POSITIVE STATEMENT:

"MY SON SAM HAS A REAL GOOD SENSE OF HUMOR," OR "SHEILA IS VERY HELPFUL."

TALK ABOUT GOAL SETTING AFTER READING PAGES 2 AND 3

GOALS NEED TO BE IN VERY SIMPLE LANGUAGE AND NOT TOO GENERAL. READ EXAMPLES OF GOALS IN THEIR MODULE. HAVE THE CLASS WRITE DOWN THEIR GOALS.

EXPLAIN ATTENTION-SEEKING BEHAVIOR

A. ATTENTION IS ONE GOAL OF BEHAVIOR.

B. ALL CHILDREN LOOK FOR A WAY TO BE NOTICED OR BELONG.

C. IF A CHILD BELIEVES HE OR SHE IS ONLY OK IF HE OR SHE IS BEING NOTICED OR SERVED, THEN THAT CHILD IS IN THE GOAL OF ATTENTION. (BEING SERVED MEANS THE PARENTS ARE ALWAYS DOING THINGS FOR THE CHILD OR REMINDING THE CHILD TO DO THINGS.)

D. IF A PARENT REMINDS, COAXES OR NAGS A CHILD TO STOP HIS OR HER BEHAVIOR, AND THE CHILD STOPS FOR A SHORT WHILE, BUT MISBEHAVES LATER, THE CHILD IS "INTO" ATTENTION.

E. REVIEW THINGS THAT THE PARENT CAN DO FOR THE ATTENTION SEEKING CHILD.
BREAK INTO SMALL GROUPS AND DO THE 6 STORY PROBLEMS

IN A LARGE GROUP, DISCUSS THE "QUESTIONS TO THINK ABOUT"

EXPLAIN THE "TO DO AT HOME" PAGES

READ THE FIRST STATEMENT TO THE GROUP. TO GET THE GROUP STARTED, GIVE EXAMPLES SUCH AS:

- CHILDREN DON'T CLEAN THEIR ROOMS.
- CHILDREN LEAVE THE HOUSE WITHOUT TELLING WHERE THEY ARE GOING.
PEOPLE HUNT

1. Find someone who has the same birthday month that you do.

2. Find someone who has either all boys or all girls.

3. Find someone who agrees with this statement: Parenting is harder than I thought it would be.

4. Find someone who was the oldest child or first born in his/her family.

5. Find someone who was the baby in his/her family.

6. Find someone who loves rock and roll music.

7. Find someone who remembers who Flip Wilson is.

8. Find someone who is not caught up with his or her laundry.
9. FIND SOMEONE WHO LOVES CHOCOLATE.

10. FIND SOMEONE WHO HAS WON A PRIZE AT LEAST ONCE IN THEIR LIFETIME.
MODULE TWO: EVERYBODY WINS

1. Review attention-seeking behavior. Ask the group to share experiences they had during the week. Ask if they tried any new methods.

2. Review new vocabulary words.

3. Introduce POWER as another goal of misbehavior.
   A. The child into power thinks he's only O.K. if he's boss or in control.
   B. He or she lets people know, "You can't make me!"
   C. The parent usually feels angry.
   D. The parent will either fight or give in.
   E. If the parent fights or shows power in return, the child will continue to show power.
   F. If the parent gives in, children begin to believe they can always have their way. The child learns not to respect the parent.

4. Discuss the other things a parent can do found in this module. Discuss the examples given in the module. Ask for other examples if needed.

5. In small groups, do the four story problems found in this module. Compare answers in the large group.

5. With partners, do the 5 sentences to be filled in. Compare in the large group.

6. Discuss TO DO AT HOME pages.
MODULE THREE: HUGS FOR EVERYONE

Part One

1. Review power, another goal of misbehavior. Ask the group if they discovered any of their children into power this week. What did they say and do?

2. Review new vocabulary words.

3. Explain IALAC (I Am Lovable And Capable) story. Pass around the IALAC sign. Have each parent tear off a piece and share what happened that caused their IALAC sign to tear. If they want to share something good that happened, that's fine. Have them add onto the IALAC sign if they share something good.

4. On page 4, review how we discourage and encourage children.

5. Discuss the pictures of ways children are discouraged using the discussion questions found after the pictures.

6. Discuss the Language of Encouragement. Explain how the Language of encouragement helps children feel good about themselves. It encourages children to do something because they want to do it and not because they expect praise. It helps children feel as if they are appreciated and that what they do is important. Children learn to believe in themselves.

7. Explain that adjectives or praise are overused. Children think that unless they please their parents they are not O.K. Children may not agree about what was said about them, especially if the words were not sincere. Children may think they are not deserving of the words or will worry they may not be able to continue to earn the praise. Adjectives or praising can be used sometimes, but not all the time. Encouragement can be used even before a child completes something.

Example: The child is cleaning his room. All the toys are picked up. Everything else is still messy. You can say, "I see all the toys are picked up off the floor. You have really made a good start into cleaning up this room."

8. With a partner, have them do the three story problems. Compare answers in the large group.

9. Exercise: Give each person two or three pipe cleaners. Have each person make something out of their pipe cleaners. Then, get with a partner and each person give encouraging comments to each other about their work.

Another option is to give each person a piece of blank paper. Have each person draw something such as a house, tree or the sun. Then, with a partner, share encouraging comments about the drawings.

10. Together, do Things To Write and Discuss.

11. Discuss the TO DO AT HOME pages.
1. Review their experiences using encouragement with their children.

2. Exercise:
   A. Have all but two parents stand on chairs in a circle. The chairs should be facing outward.
   B. Have the remaining two parents walk in front of each person standing on a chair, look up at each person and say, "I'm only a child and I want to belong."
   C. Have the person standing on the chair answer back with a put-down such as, "Don't bother me now. I'm busy." Or, "How many times have I told you to clean up your room. Get busy." Or, "Go wash up. You smell like a pig."
   D. Then the person who is not on a chair stands in front of the next person standing on a chair and again says, "I'm only a child and I want to belong."
   E. The person standing on the chair then gives the "child" a put-down.
   F. The person who plays the "child" doesn't respond to the put-downs. He or she only walks on to the next person and says, "I'm only a child and I want to belong."
   G. Each time the person on a chair gives a put-down.
   H. The person playing the "child" walks around the entire circle until he or she has talked to each person on a chair.
   I. The other person playing the child does the same thing at the same time. He or she starts at about half way around the circle and goes all the way around.
   J. Discuss how the people felt who walked around the group.
   K. Do again.
   L. This time ask how the people standing in the chairs felt.
   M. Have the two groups compare their reactions.
3. Parents need to encourage themselves. They often experience many stresses during the day. Discuss things that cause stress in families. Examples: children not cooperating, money problems, babysitting problems, single parenting, loss of a job, etc.

4. In small groups discuss ways to handle stress. Compare with the entire group. Include such ways as talking to someone, relaxing, going to an agency for help, etc. Share names and telephone numbers of agencies in Brevard County where parents can go for help. (Use pink cards from PERC).

5. One of the things we can do for stress is to relax. Do relaxation exercise. Parents sit comfortably in their chair. Turn down lights. Leader tells parents to tense certain muscles, hold, and let go. Go through the entire body. Discuss the experience.

6. Have the group write five things they like to do and when they did those things last. Share with each other in the large group.

7. Write contract for doing one of the five things written. Have another member of the group sign it. This will help the parent keep the contract.

8. Have twelve index cards ready with a positive word written on each one. Call out the cards one at a time. After each card is read, tell the group to think of someone in the group who fits the description of the card. Give that person the card to keep. Words to use: kind, caring, good sense of humor, good listener, friendly, good ideas, outgoing, thoughtful, interesting, helpful, willing to share, nice smile, warm, sincere.

9. Remind them to work on their contract this week.

10. Discuss the TO DO AT HOME pages.
MODULE FIVE -- COMMUNICATION

1. Discuss the contracts the parents made. Ask if they kept their contracts. If they didn't ask what got in the way. How can they honor it this week?

2. Review new vocabulary words.

3. Discuss the communication game explained in the module. You can use a real ball to demonstrate.

4. Exercise:
   Divide into groups of two. Give one person the picture of the domino puzzle. That will be person A. Person A describes the domino arrangement one at a time. Person B tries to place the dominoes the way person A describes them. He or she may not talk at all, just follow directions. The two sit opposite each other. They will see that it was difficult because:
   - No feedback was allowed, no two way communication.
   - Directions not clear without feedback.
   - Terms for different parts of the dominoes not clear.
Discuss what that means when communicating in daily life.

5. Read and discuss the three things that can stop communication. Get into groups of two. One person will be person A. The other will be person B. Person A starts talking. Person B uses one of the communication stoppers to act out. Then they switch.
6. Discuss ways of becoming better talkers and listeners. Refer to the pictures and the examples.

7. In a small group, do the three story problems. Choose a recorder. Have each recorder report the group's answers and discussion to the large group after ten to fifteen minutes.

8. With a partner, do the five questions. Compare with the large group.

9. Ask the group to review progress of goals set in Module during the week at home.

10. Discuss TO DO AT HOME things.
1. Review communication experiences over the past week.

2. Review the new vocabulary words.

3. Discuss the six steps to problem-solving. Under Step 2, explain that "I messages" describe the child's behavior, how you feel about it and how it affects you. It does not blame.

4. With a partner, change the four blaming messages into "I messages". Compare the results in the large group.

5. Discuss the problem-solving session between Mother and Billy in the module.

6. In small groups or with a partner, use the six problem-solving steps to solve the problem between Tamieka and Janey and how she and her mother solved the problem. Compare with the examples given in the module.

7. Discuss TO DO AT HOME page. Encourage parents to try the problem-solving steps with their children at home.
MODUL E SEVEN - DO AS I DO - ROLE MODELING

1. Ask parents if they tried the steps in problem-solving with their children. Discuss experiences.

2. Review vocabulary words.

3. Read page two together and discuss how we give children roles when we label them.

In small groups, answer the eight questions about handling feelings.

5. Exercise:
   A. Have two signs ready. One will say--YOU THINK I CAN DO MANY THINGS BY MYSELF. The other will say--YOU THINK I CAN'T DO ANYTHING BY MYSELF.
   B. Ask for two volunteers to help show how parents influence the way children feel about themselves.
   C. Tape signs on to the backs of the two volunteers.
   D. Seat them so that they can't read the other's sign.
   E. Give them an easy task to do, such as a simple puzzle, or coloring in a coloring book.

As they are doing the task, have the rest of the group walk around them making comments according to the sign on their back. Example: Next to the person wearing the sign saying--YOU THINK I CAN'T DO ANYTHING BY MYSELF, a parent might say, "Here, let me help you. That looks too hard for you to do." Next to the person wearing the sign that says--
YOU THINK I CAN DO MANY THINGS BY MYSELF, a parent might say, "You can figure that one out by yourself." Or, "Keep up the good work, that looks great."

G. The parents can make as many comments around the two volunteers as they want. (The more comments made the better.)

H. At the end of several minutes, ask the two volunteers how they felt. See if they can guess which sign they had on.

8. Discuss the many ways we can help children see themselves in positive ways. Refer to suggestions in the module and the pictures.

7. Children often choose the same attitudes that we have about things. Talk about the attitudes and feelings the parents had about school. Do this in small groups. Refer to the questions in the module.

8. In the large group, discuss things parents can do to help children have a good attitude about school. Refer to suggestions and pictures in the module.

9. Read the checklist to the parents. They can fill it out at home.
10. With a partner, do the THINGS TO THINK ABOUT. Compare in the large group.

11. Discuss the TO DO AT HOME pages.
MODULE EIGHT--DISCIPLINE=TO TEACH

1. Discuss their homework on roles children play. Ask parents to share their experiences from the past week.

2. Review new vocabulary words.

3. Together read page two. Discuss why we punish children. Here are some possible suggestions many parents have said:
   A. That's all they understand.
   B. What will people think if I don't?
   C. It teaches them right from wrong.
   D. How else will they learn?

4. Introduce natural consequences. Together with the whole group, come up with the natural consequences for the four situations given in the module.

5. Introduce logical consequences. Do the exercise on this sheet.

6. Discuss the steps in using consequences.

In small groups, do the four story problems. Have the members write what they would do or say in each situation. Discuss the questions together.
8. Ask the group if they accomplished the goals they set for themselves in the first session. Discuss the goal-setting and how it worked for them.

9. Fill out the evaluation form if this is the last session.

10. Go around the group and have everyone share 2 or 3 things that they learned in this class.

11. Finish it up by telling 2 or 3 things you learned from them during these sessions.

If it's a burden, it ought to be shared;
If it's a privilege, it ought to be passed around!
1. Review the vocabulary words.

2. Read "Parents Need To Talk To Their Children" with the group. Use the following discussion questions if you like:
   A. Why are parents uncomfortable talking with their children about sex?
   B. What should be included in the talks with children?
   C. Why do parents need to be clear about their own thoughts and opinions about sex?

3. In the large group, discuss what parents were told about their adolescent sexuality by their parents. Spend time talking about what things they want their children to know about sex that is different from what their parents told them.

4. Do the three exercise questions by letting them write the answers by themselves first and then get into groups to compare their answers.

5. Together read and discuss "Sex and Teens". Use the following discussion questions if you like:
   A. Why is it hard for teens to make decisions about sex?
   B. Do teens have control over their decisions about sex?
   C. What are the purposes of sex?
   D. Why should parents discuss pregnancy and V.D. with their teens?
6. After reading the general guidelines about the kinds of questions children may ask, divide the group according to the ages of their children. For example, one group may be made up of parents of teenagers, another group of parents of elementary school age children, etc. Have the groups compare the kinds of things their children have asked them about sex. Then have them share what things they think their children should know about sex. Do this in a small group.

7. In small groups, read, "Parents Can Help Teens Have Healthy Attitudes About Sexuality". Discuss how they might carry out each suggestion. You might have two parents act out a parent and a teenager discussing questions a teen may have about sex.

8. In the large group, read the seven signs children may use to show parents they need to talk with them about sexual matters. Discuss what other clues their children have given them.

9. Discuss TO DO AT HOME page.
I Asked
Why Doesn't
Somebody
Do Something They Realized
I Wao
Somebody

APPENDIX
IF A CHILD LIVES WITH CRITICISM,
HE LEARNS TO CONDEMN.
IF A CHILD LIVES WITH HOSTILITY,
HE LEARNS TO FIGHT.
IF A CHILD LIVES WITH RIDICULE,
HE LEARNS TO BE SHY.
IF A CHILD LIVES WITH JEALOUSY,
HE LEARNS TO FEEL GUILTY.
IF A CHILD LIVES WITH TOLERANCE,
HE LEARNS TO BE PATIENT.
IF A CHILD LIVES WITH PRAISE,
HE LEARNS TO APPRECIATE.
IF A CHILD LIVES WITH ENCOURAGEMENT,
HE LEARNS CONFIDENCE.
IF A CHILD LIVES WITH FAIRNESS,
HE LEARNS JUSTICE.
IF A CHILD LIVES WITH SECURITY,
HE LEARNS TO HAVE FAITH.
IF A CHILD LIVES WITH APPROVAL,
HE LEARNS TO LIKE HIMSELF.
IF A CHILD LIVES WITH BOTH ACCEPTANCE AND FRIENDSHIP, HE LEARNS TO LOVE THE WORLD.

author unknown
Equality means that people, despite all their individual differences, have equal claim to dignity and respect.

All human behavior has a purpose and is a movement toward a goal.

Encouragement is more important than any other aspect of childrearing.

A misbehaving child is a discouraged child.

The desire for undue attention is used by discouraged children as a means for feeling that they belong.

We must realize the futility of trying to impose our will upon our children.

Since punishment and reward are ineffective, what can we do when children misbehave? If we allow a child to experience the consequences of his acts, we provide an honest and real learning situation.
Be firm without dominating.

Show respect for your child.

Induce respect for order in your child.

Eliminate criticism and minimize mistakes.

Maintain routine. Establish and maintain a daily order.

Make time for training.

Win cooperation. Work together to meet demands of the situation.

Avoid yielding to undue demands.

Sidestep the struggle for power.

Withdraw from the conflict. If one person withdraws the other cannot continue.
Action! not words. If a parent really wants to change the behavior of their child, they will have to act.

If we want to influence a change in our child's behavior, we need to watch our own.

Use care in pleasing; have the courage to say "No".

Refrain from overprotection.

Stimulate independence. Never do for a child what he can do for himself.

Follow through. Be consistent.
LISTEN!

Have fun together.

Talk with them, not to them.

Stay out of fights between brothers and sisters.

Take it easy.
Parenting Education Evaluation

Read through the evaluation. Circle your response with (1) being LOW and (5) being HIGH. Turn in at the end of the last class. THANK YOU!!

1. To what extent did this course on Parenting Education help you to become a better parent?....1 2 3 4 5

2. To what extent was the following information useful to you?
   a. Communication........................................1 2 3 4 5
   b. Discipline..............................................1 2 3 4 5
   c. Love and Affection....................................1 2 3 4 5
   d. Encouragement........................................1 2 3 4 5
   e. Attention-seeking Behavior.........................1 2 3 4 5
   f. Problem-solving......................................1 2 3 4 5
   g. Role Modeling..........................................1 2 3 4 5
   h. Sex Education..........................................1 2 3 4 5
   i. Coping With School....................................1 2 3 4 5
   j. Family Crises..........................................1 2 3 4 5

3. How would you rate the overall effectiveness of this course?..........................1 2 3 4 5

4. How would you rate the overall effectiveness of your teacher?..........................1 2 3 4 5

COMMENTS OR CONCERNS:

Thank you for being a part of Project BEST-PAL. Happy Parenting!
BIBLIOGRAPHY

"You can only be as good a parent to your kids as you are to yourself. (If you are not taking good care of yourself, it is not possible to be a good parent.)"
"Do not make children your primary source of 'charge' in your life as they will feel responsible for your feelings. (This situation results in a 'struck symbiosis'.) Love them, enjoy them! They may be the most important people to you. Do not 'charge' your batteries from them."
"Parents make mistakes usually for two reasons:
A. They do not have good information on how to be a parent.
B. Because of their own hang-ups."
"Parenting requires time and energy!"

Give yourself time!
"YOU STROKE WHAT YOU GET, AND YOU GET WHAT YOU STROKE. STROKE IS A 'UNIT OF RECOGNITION' BETWEEN TWO PEOPLE. WE NEED STROKES FOR SURVIVAL AND CHILDREN WILL NOT BE IGNORED."
"SAFETY, SECURITY, AND SOCIALLY APPROPRIATE BEHAVIOR ARE THE RESPONSIBILITY OF PARENTHOOD."
"PROBLEMS ARE TO BE SOLVED, (RATHER THAN GRIPED ABOUT)."

-101-
“PARENTS DESERVE THEIR OWN PRIVATE TIME.”
"CHILDREN DO WHAT YOU DO, NOT WHAT YOU SAY."

-103-
"Violent people have violent parents. They relate by hurting. They didn't get rocking or holding as small children."
"SECRETS CAUSE TROUBLE."

-105-
"Kids most often blame the healthiest person for a divorce, they protect the weaker parent."
"DON'T SET LIMITS YOU CAN'T (WON'T) KEEP, OR MAKE A PROMISE YOU CAN'T KEEP."

-107-
List of Bulletins

| FL-1 | PARENTS AS ROLE MODELS |
| FL-2 | PARENTAL NEEDS |
| FL-3 | THE IMPORTANCE OF PEERS |
| FL-4 | PARENTAL EXPECTATIONS |
| FL-5 | HINTS FOR HANDLING SIBLING RIVALRY |
| FL-6 | TALKING WITH YOUR CHILD |
| FL-7 | AVOIDING CHILDHOOD LABELS |
| FL-8 | HELPING CHILDREN LEARN TO COPE |
| FL-9 | COPING WITH PARENTAL STRESS |
| FL-10 | SETTING LIMITS |
| FL-11 | CONSISTENCY IN DISCIPLINE |
| FL-12 | LISTENING TO CHILDREN |
| FL-13 | CHILDREN AND TELEVISION |
| FL-14 | WHAT'S THE RIGHT AMOUNT? |
| FL-15 | HELPING CHILDREN DEVELOP INTERESTS |
| FL-16 | PARENTS ARE THE EXPERTS |
| FL-17 | CHILDREN'S FEELINGS |
| FL-18 | UNDERSTANDING BEHAVIOR |
| FL-19 | GAINING COOPERATION |
| FL-20 | SHARED PARENTING INCLUDES FATHER |
| FL-21 | VITAL SIGNS OF PRESCHOOL DEVELOPMENT |
| FL-22 | CHILDREN'S FEARS |
| FL-23 | HONESTY IS THE BEST POLICY |
| FL-24 | SPANKLING AND DISCIPLINE |
There is no more important job in our society than being the unique combination of child psychologist/teacher called parent, responsible for rearing the next generation.

As a parent you are largely responsible for the formation and development of your child's self-concept. Self-concept is a basic mental picture one has of one's self. Ironically your feelings about yourself and your own self-concept influence your child's developing self-concept. Children are quick to pick up parents' feelings from non-verbal signals. They sense when you are confident, unsure, pleased or displeased. They know when you are experiencing emotional tension and unrest. Relaxed mothers and fathers help in the development of relaxed secure children.

Parents Have Needs, Too

Being a parent, responsible for meeting the needs of children does not mean our own needs can or should be ignored. We all need to feel good about ourselves. In fact, if we don't like and accept ourselves, it will likely be difficult for us to feel good about our children.

Sometimes parents look to their children to provide them with a sense of self-worth and adequacy. Children cannot and should not be expected to meet parents' needs for adequacy and self-esteem. When we look to our children as the sole source of self-worth we are apt to put unrealistic expectations and pressures on them as well as ourselves, because we view their limitations as a reflection on our ability to parent. Recognizing and accepting that we are each responsible for our own emotional well-being and feelings of adequacy is important for self-growth and effective parenting.

Set Realistic Expectations of Self

When we expect too much of ourselves as parents, we try to do more for our children than is humanly possible. Consequently, we may leave ourselves feeling emotionally exhausted and inadequate, because we can't conform to some idealized notion of what we should be doing for our children.

We all have limits. Honestly assessing our talents and capabilities, can help us develop more realistic expectations of ourselves as parents. Accepting our limitations can save needless feelings of guilt and anxiety.

Define what you can and cannot do in terms of time, effort and money to further your children's growth to maturity. Let promises to them come from realistic guidelines rather than the wish to do everything for them.
Like Yourself

Seek out people who treat you with respect, whom you enjoy and who enjoy being with you. Get involved in activities that give you a feeling of competence and achievement. Having personal goals and achievements can help guard against expecting children to be one’s only source of recognition and success.

Continue to Grow

As a person, parenthood is just one phase in your total development. Some of your resources must remain available for your own continuing personal development. Personal growth and effort provide a sense of self-worth. As we feel more adequate as individuals, we are apt to feel more adequate and confident in our role as parents.

Background Readings

* This document and others are available through the ERIC system. For more information contact ERIC/EECE.

Prepared by Lynda Harriman, Extension Child and Family Development Specialist and Nancy Wegler, Extension Assistant - Communications.
Are you familiar with the old saying, "Monkey see; monkey do?" We certainly don't think of our children as monkeys but this same principle does apply in most parent-child relationships.

Parental Influences

The influence of a living example on children's behavior is greater than many have believed. It is clear that children pattern much of their behavior after models encountered during their early years. In most cases the model that children strongly imitate and identify with is that of their parents. Our attitudes, ideas, opinions, and prejudices are quickly picked up by our children. Likes and dislikes, interests, manners and morals are learned mainly through imitation. How we cope with frustration affects how our children learn to handle problems. As parents we may safely act on the long-held assumption that our children will be affected more by what we do than what we say. Often our unintentional influences are as important as our carefully thought out techniques of child rearing.

Family Atmosphere

The child not only unconsciously imitates the behavior of a parent, but will also absorb the general atmosphere of the home; friendly and cooperative, hostile and antagonistic, or concerned with social status. A child's personality is influenced by these emotional undertones, making it important to look at the general atmosphere we are creating as well as the specific model we are furnishing. If we want our children to grow up in a desirable way, in most cases if we show good table manners, our children will imitate us as they grow. If we are persistent in what we attempt to do and don't give up at the first signs of difficulty, our children will imitate our persistence. If we want children to respect the rights and feelings of others, we can begin by respecting the rights and feelings of our children. A good example is a powerful way we can teach them.

Adult Roles

As children grow older, the need for role models does not decrease. Finding an adequate role model during the pre-teen and teen years is just as important as during the early years of childhood.

During the pre-teen years children usually benefit from a role model of the same sex. They are moving from the awareness of childhood to the issues of adults. It is as if a youngster thinks, "I'm moving from childhood; soon I'll be an adult, what are the ways of a grown man (or woman)?" The child needs close sustained adult contact, making the parent of the same sex the obvious choice in filling this modeling role.
Not only are pre-teens focusing on the roles of men and women, but they are developing attitudes toward these roles. Relying on the powerful force of unconscious imitation as a great builder of attitudes, we can furnish living positive models of what it means to be a man or woman. What are your children learning from you with regard to what men or women are like? Your adult roles and attitudes toward these roles as well as your attitudes toward the opposite sex are conveyed to your children.

Parental Values

Parents must identify and resolve conflicting values in order to establish a set of clear-cut values they can transmit to their children. One difficulty in transmitting a clear-cut set of values is our tendency not to practice what we preach. Sometimes we communicate double messages to children. For example, take the parent who spanks his child as punishment for hitting his brother. The parent actually imitates the behavior for which he is punishing the child. Here the parent is unconsciously being drawn to the same level as the child. The child may be confused by the double message received: "I'm not supposed to hit my brother, but it is o. k. for my parent to hit me."

If what a parent does and says is consistent during the child's formative years, such conflicts are not as likely to occur. Children are more likely to learn what we want them to learn from examples we set.

Remember children pattern much of their behavior as well as their attitudes and values from you. What you do often speaks much louder than what you say.

Background Readings

These documents and others are available through the ERIC System. For more information contact ERIC/EECE.

Prepared by Lynda Harriman, Extension Child & Family Development Specialist; and Nancy Weller, Extension Assistant - Communications.
One of the most important functions of parenting is to help children learn to control their behavior by establishing clear guidelines regarding what is acceptable. Setting guidelines is not too difficult. Consistently enforcing them may be, because of the potential of creating a conflict between parent and child.

Why Set Limits?

Children feel secure. Children need a clear definition of acceptable conduct. They feel more secure when they know the borders of permissible action. Limits tell the child what behavior standards are acceptable. They provide a framework in which the child can function comfortably. When rules are clear, the child has the opportunity to make responsible decisions. The consequences of both positive and negative actions are known. Choices can be made between alternative ways of behaving with a clear, predictable picture of what parents' reactions will be.

The unit values. Limits communicate to the child values considered important by family as well as culture. Parents set some rules, not because they personally disapprove of a particular behavior, but because they know friends, grandparents, neighbors and/or community in general would disapprove. Limits introduce children to a society that does have enforced regulations.

Guards against inappropriate behavior. Limits serve as a guide to prevent inappropriate behavior. Since children lack experience in judging the consequences of their behavior, they sometimes need to be protected from their inexperience and inability to judge situations and their consequences. Limits protect them from their own violent feelings and from expressing them in a destructive way. A general guideline is the younger the child the more rules parents will need.

Limits and Stages of Development

Limits established should take into consideration a child's individual needs and stage of growth. Sometimes a five-year-old can be trusted to cross a street alone. This would not be true of a two-year-old.

Special stress situations - accidents, illness, moving, separation from friends, death or divorce require additional leeway in setting limits. Children should be aware that their behavior is not accepted, but tolerated only because of exceptional circumstances.

Number of Limits

The number of limits you set will depend upon personal values and standards. A good rule to keep in mind is to set only necessary limits. These would include limits to: protect the health and safety of a child; protect the property and rights of others; and protect and support the child against his/her own strong feelings. Too many rules may interfere with the child's need for activity and learning, making the child less spontaneous and creative. Imposing too many restrictions may result in resent... ment, causing the child to resist and anxiously await the day to be out from under rules rather than accepting them as a part of self discipline.

How to Set Limits

Be clear and specific. A limit should be stated telling the child clearly what constitutes acceptable behavior and what substitutes, if any, will be accepted. For example, "You may not throw dishes. You may throw the ball."

It is preferable that a limit be total rather than partial. A limit that states "You may splash her a little, as long as you don't get her too wet," is inviting trouble. Vague statements leave the child without clear criteria for making decisions.

When setting limits point out the function of an object. "The chair is for sitting, not for standing" is better than "Don't stand on the chair." "The blocks are for building" is more positive than "Don't throw the blocks."

Respect feelings. When children request something we must deny, we can at least grant them the satisfaction of having a wish for it. Their feelings are important too. Just because we feel a rule is necessary, doesn't mean they feel the same way. Limits should be phrased in a language that does not challenge the child's self-respect. "It's bedtime" is more readily accepted than "you are too young to stay up that late. Go to bed."

Expect compliance. There is a tendency for adults to get what they ex-
COPING WITH PARENTAL STRESS

Rearing happy well-adjusted children is quite an accomplishment for any parent. Knowing that you are effective with your children and can meet their needs contributes to parents' feelings of satisfaction.

Hard work, responsibility, demands for time and attention are also part of parenting. This is the part of parenting that causes stress to mount and makes us feel caught and sometimes overwhelmed by demands constantly made upon us.

Feelings of Anxiety

The demands of a child are especially strenuous on new parents. It's a terrific adjustment to bring a baby home from the hospital and begin to take care of it.

A new parent may feel particularly worried and unsure. It's as if society suddenly says, "You're a parent now, we haven't told you much about how to parent but go to it and do the best you can." Most jobs require a training period to acquaint you with new job responsibilities. But for the job of parenting, practically no education is available.

Parental uncertainty doesn't necessarily disappear as children grow. Just as we learn what to expect of an infant the child becomes a toddler. Parental stress may increase, if parents are unable to change their expectations and demands as children grow. Children change the most rapidly during the first two years of life, and as they reach adolescence. Therefore parents may experience high levels of stress during these time periods, unless they learn to adjust to a changing child.

Parents need to realize that they are not magically equipped with "parental love" or a "mothering instinct" which enables them to automatically love and care for babies and children. It takes time, patience, experience and effort to build a positive parent-child relationship, and become an effective parent.

Feeling of Resentment

In addition to feeling inadequate about how to parent, mothers and fathers may sometimes be bothered by feelings of resentment. No one ever told you it would be like this. Taking care of children demands so much time and energy that it's not always possible to do some of the other things that are important to you. Interruptions come at the most inconvenient times. No matter how tired or ill you feel, children's needs must be met.

These feelings of resentment and anxiety are entirely normal. However, we must take care not to take them out on our children. When we begin to blame our children for our problems, it is time to seek help and make some changes in our lives.

Examining Your Feelings

When the pressures of parenting become great, they can cause us to overreact. Sometimes pressures are self-imposed because we try to run such a tight ship that neither we nor our children can relax. When you feel uptight with your children, ask yourself:

Do I expect too much - must they always stay clean, keep their room spic and span, stay quiet, or meet my demands immediately?

Can they do it their way sometimes? Does it really matter or must it always be my way?

Do they always have to act like adults? Why can't I let them be children?

Have I talked to anyone about my feelings? Have I talked to the children about theirs?

Relieve Stress

It is important for parents to sometimes make changes in order to cope with the daily demands of being a parent. Sometimes it helps to relieve tension when you:

- Talk to friends or spouse about your frustrations.
- Tell your children what makes you angry and what behavior the child needs to change to reduce your anger.
- Leave the room for a short time when you are losing control. You can deal more effectively with children and situations when you have time to collect your thoughts and calm down.
- If you are a new parent, have a relative, friend or paid help come in for the first few weeks.

Take some time for yourself when children are sleeping. Relax and forget what you should be doing.

Stress and strain are not conducive to good parenting. All of us need to find a way to relieve pressure, so it is not taken out on our children.

Enjoy Being a Parent

When things are going well, parenting can be a satisfactory experience. It's important that you share your positive feelings with your children, too. Let them know that you feel good about the way the day is going. Tell them when their behavior is making you happy. Make sure they know you appreciate the good things they do. Say thank you and remember to treat yourself and your children to something special when they are doing well.

Background Reading:

- Finding Time for Companionship: Couples with Young Children by Steven P. Schiavo (Oct. '76) (ED 142 890, 13p.)

The joys and sorrows of Parenthood formulated by the Commission of Training Parents to Help Other Parents in the Management of Their Children by Helen Collier (Dec. '77) (ED 156 942, 7p.)

These documents and others are available through the ERIC System. For more information contact ERIC/RECE.

Even three- and four-year-olds can have their share of problems: getting used to going to nursery school, losing a treasured pet, adjusting to a new babysitter, being called bad names by another child, and so forth. Adults know that these crises will pass and soon will be forgotten, and at such moments we try to offer comfort and reassurance that things will get better soon.

Offer Suggestions:

However, in many of these situations we adults can and should do more than just offer appropriate sympathy. We can often suggest tactics and strategies to help the childcope with the immediate problem as well as with similar situations which might occur in the future. When we cannot change the situation or the people who are causing the distress the young child is struggling with, we should think through some ways in which the child might be able to endure them less traumatically.

For example, suppose a young child is really afraid of a neighbor’s dog. It’s not always possible to persuade the neighbor to move, or to tether his dog at all times! What is appropriate here is to think of tactics that even a young child can carry with him to use in that particular (or similar) situations. You can explain to the child that whenever he sees a dog approaching he should stand absolutely still and be quiet and calm until the dog has finished sniffing and acquainting itself with him. Unless the dog is really and truly a vicious one, this tactic will usually be effective. (If it’s a vicious dog, other drastic action must be taken, of course.)

Be Understanding

If it is also important as you prepare the child to cope with this problem that you let him know that you understand his apprehension and that you are confident that it will pass; you are offering the child a strategy to use while he needs it, but he surely will not need it forever.

Similarly, if a neighborhood child persistsin calling your child upsetting names or teases your child cruelly, the best move you can make is to provide the child with a strategy for dealing firmly with the offender.

I know of a 5-year-old who was taunted by older neighborhood children who persisted in calling him “a stupid cry baby!” In helping the victim to cope with the problem his mother asked him gently and seriously “Are you a stupid cry baby?” The child of course replied “No!” The mother then suggested quite seriously that he say to the offenders something like “I don’t like to be talked to that way.” His own first hand knowledge that he did not have the qualities attributed to him allowed him to address his adversaries with confidence. Even aggressive name-callers find a confident 5-year-old intimidating enough to make them stop the behavior!

Experience is the Best Teacher

This example also illustrates... another useful principle in helping children cope with the ordinary stresses of their daily lives, namely, to teach them to use the raw data of their own previous experiences as a source of reassurance. For instance, if your child is highly anxious about another visit to the dentist, don't promise him that it won't hurt or that it will be fun. You can say something like "Do you remember the last time you went? You were uncomfortable for a few minutes, but it wasn't really so bad, was it?" The child's own memory of having survived the experience can become a source of courage to cope with the situation once more. If, on the other hand, you falsify the nature of what's ahead, you may unwittingly increase the intensity of his discomfort.

Help for the Future

Giving the child some practical suggestions on what to do, or how to approach a situation, what kinds of things to say, etc. helps that child get along when parents or other protectors are not there. This keeps the focus on helping children to cope with the world as they are likely to find it, rather than on trying to change the world to suit them.

Background Readings

*These documents and others are available through the ERIC System. For more information contact ERIC EECE.

Prepared by Lilian C. Katz, director ERIC Clearinghouse on Elementary and Early Childhood Education, with Mary Glockner, ERIC/EECE editor.
AVOIDING CHILDHOOD LABELS

The tendency in families to define a child's character fairly early in life can be a hazard for some children. Not only parents, but often grandparents; siblings; relatives and teachers get into the act, too. In this way a child may get defined as the "clumsy" one, the "shy" one; the "cry baby" or the "class clown."

Labels Stick

These definitions of character are often very powerful and enduring. Indeed, many adults report that when they go home on special occasions they almost magically find themselves behaving in exactly the way they were defined as children. As one woman put it: "When I'm with my own friends and colleagues I feel perfectly competent and intelligent--but among my family, every time I open my mouth I say something stupid, and feel stupid--just the way they expect me to!"

If you find yourself defining a child's character, you too may be locking that child into a set of behaviors and attitudes and a self-image he or she cannot escape.

How to Avoid Labels

One alternative strategy is to try to imagine what the child might be like with a different character. Try to picture in your mind how this child would behave, how he or she would interact with you, with others, how he or she would respond to various situations. For example, if a child has been defined as the "cry-baby" or as a "whiner" or as excessively dependent, try to imagine the child as a responsible, competent or cooperative member of the family. Then treat the child as though he or she were, in fact, like that picture.

Several interesting things begin to happen when you try this approach. You gradually become aware of the fact that, at least some of the time, the child does have those behaviors—you just hadn't noticed them very often.

You then begin to respond to this child's attempts at self-assertion (talking back to his brother, for instance) more positively than you had before. Once you see these competencies, you can more easily make room for the child to express his or her potential for another character. Your own new confidence in the child's alternative capacities has a way of strengthening his or her own confidence as well.

Remind Others

In the same way, it helps to remind other members of the family to acknowledge and respect this child's attempt to express his or her competencies; and to resist defining him or her into a "character corner."

Making opportunities for all members of the family to try out a variety of roles and characters is one way to enhance the future adaptability of each of them.
Background Readings

* Children's Behavior Problems and Parental Perceptual Style, by Gary E. Stollak and Others, National Inst. of Mental Health (DHEW), Rockville, MD (1977) (ED 153 117, 55p.)

* These documents and others are available through the ERIC System. For more information contact ERIC/EECE.

Prepared by Lilian G. Katz, director ERIC Clearinghouse on Elementary and Early Childhood Education, with Mary Glockner, ERIC/EECE editor.
one of the best ways to foster children's language development is to have conversations with them. (By "conversation" we mean a real verbal exchange between adult and child, not just an adult talking to a child.) But many adults find it difficult to talk easily with young children. Often they can't think of what to say, and the conversation "just doesn't seem to go anywhere."

Ideas That May Help

Be Interested. Solicit children's ideas and opinions regularly. If you show children that you are really interested in what they think, what they feel, and in their opinions, they will become comfortable about expressing their thoughts to you.

Avoid Head-on Questions. Ask children the kinds of questions that will be likely to extend interaction rather than to cut it off. Questions which require a yes or no or right answer ("What color is your sweater?") often lead a conversation to a dead end. But questions such as "What are some of the colors you like?" or "What are some other clothes you have of this color?" may extend the conversation.

Extend Conversation. Try to pick up a piece of a child's conversation and extend it. For instance, if a child says "I like to watch TV," then, in your response, use some of the same wording the child has used ("what are some of the TV shows you like best?"). If the child says: "Wonder Woman," then your next response could be "What does Wonder Woman do that you like seeing?" When you use the child's own phrasing or her own terms, you strengthen her confidence in her own conversational and verbal skills, and reassure her that her ideas are being listened to and valued.

Share Your Thoughts. Share with your child what you are thinking about. For instance, if you are puzzling over how to rearrange your furniture, or what to prepare for dinner, get your child involved with questions such as "I'm not sure where to put this shelf - where do you think would be a good place?" Or "What do you think Uncle John might like for dessert?" Be sure to take the child's comments seriously, thinking through with the practical implications of the ideas and suggestions offered.

Define and Reflect Feelings. When you suspect that something is bothering your child, make the best guess you can about what the problem is. Then phrase your questions indirectly: "It's the noise of the vacuum cleaner that bothers you, isn't it?" If you guessed right, you could talk about what to do, or how to cope with the problem. If you guessed wrong, you would be giving your child a chance to correct you and tell you what really is bothering him. Sometimes, just reflecting a child's feelings back to him encourages him to tell you what's on his mind. Saying: "You're really feeling sad today, aren't "you?" is more likely to invite a child to share and confide his feelings in you than asking: "What's wrong?"

Observe Cue. Watch the child for cues that it is time to end a conversation. When a child begins to stare into space, give really silly or way-out responses, it's probably time to stop the exchange.

Increases Understanding

One of the special values of adult-child conversation is that it gives children an opportunity to sort out and retrieve information they have already stored in their minds. In other words, they get opportunities to practice talking about thoughts, feelings, and impressions from experiences they have already had. At the same time, adults have a chance to find out about the children and how they understand those experiences. The more informed we are about how children understand their experiences, the more likely we are to help them to make the best sense of these experiences.

Background Readings

- Tuning in to Young Children, by Lynda Harriman (May 1978). (ED 160 228, 19p)
- Talking With Children, by Southwest Educational Development Laboratory, 211 East 7th Street, Austin, Texas (1976).
- Between Parent and Child, by Haim Ginott, MacMillan, New York (1965)

* This document and others are available through the ERIC system. For more information contact ERIC/EECE.

Prepared by Lilian G. Katz, director, ERIC Clearinghouse on Elementary and Early Childhood Education, with Mary Glockner, ERIC/EECE editor.
HINTS FOR HANDLING SIBLING RIVALRY

Most parents are uncomfortable and troubled when their children fight and tease each other. The popular view seems to be that this kind of behavior (generally called sibling rivalry) is both natural and inevitable.

However, while some rivalry among siblings may be inevitable, it is not apparent in all families in all cultures. The point here is that parents do not have to stand by and let their children go at it. They don't have to put up with it. Squabbling and teasing can have causes other than sibling rivalry. But if you are reasonably sure that the scrapping is due to sibling competition, some of these approaches might suggest ways to help you deal with it in your family:

Dealing with Sibling Rivalry

Stop the Fighting. If fighting between your children bothers you, stop it. Resist the temptation to lecture, moralize or nag about it. Whatever technique you use, (telling or commanding the children to stop, separating the children, etc.) stay with your resolve to stop the fighting until the episode is really over, since your persistence increases the credibility of your commands and strengthens your authority.

Keep in mind that often children are waiting for you to exert your authority, and by their behavior are saying, "Help me to be the kind of person you want me to be because that is the kind of person I want to be."

Pinpoint the Cause. Once the unpleasant behavior is stopped, think over the possible causes and ways of dealing with it. It seems to be a function of scarcity, when teasing and squabbling occurs with troubling frequency and intensity, ask yourself what it is that one or all the children perceive to be in short supply. It could be affection, praise, recognition or some other forms of attention. It is helpful to acknowledge your child's perceptions, even though you do not agree with them. For instance, if your child perceives herself to be less loved by you or less important to you than another child is, acknowledge her right to see things that way.

Give Undivided Attention. Try to spend time alone with the child doing what she or he really enjoys. A walk around the block. Reading stories, cooking or swimming. Make sure it is something the child enjoys. Ten minutes a day for a week can turn around the child's feelings of being left out or unimportant.

Respect Individuality. Remember that treating children alike is sure to be unfair. When you treat children alike you teach them to expect to be treated alike, and then they push you into giving them equal amounts of various things—although it's very unlikely that children within a family will ever all need the same things in the same amounts at the same time. If one child seeks comfort and another demands "equal time," reassure the second one that when he or she needs comfort, you will be right there ready.
to provide it—as you have done before many times. It is important to reassure a child that each individual person’s unique needs are responded to—not that all get the same response.

No Comparisons. Resist the temptation to motivate your children by comparing them to each other or to other people’s children. Avoid saying to children something such as “The Parker kids always help with the dishes,” or “You could get grades like your brother does if you work a little harder.” Comparisons of this kind teach children that they are in constant danger of coming out poorly in a contest, and a habit of competitiveness may develop.

Let Children Help. Take advantage of opportunities to let one of your children help you understand another. Children can often contribute valuable insight to parents on what a sibling is struggling with, thinking about or trying to express. If you ask a child to help you in this way, take any contributions seriously, and let the child know that you will reflect on the insights shared.

Counter Nasty Comments. If your children say genuinely nasty things about one another to you, use those occasions to indicate that you do not agree and to point out that “although we get angry with each other, we still belong to each other.” For example, if a boy describes his sister to you in unflattering terms, it seems to help to let him know that no matter how unpleasant the sister’s behavior may seem at the moment, she still is and always will be “one of us.” This kind of response reassures him that if a sibling had ill feelings toward him you would respond in the same way. When we consistently remind children of their unalterable belonging to us and to each other, we strengthen their inner sense of safety, which is perhaps a prerequisite for the development of the capacity for brotherly and sisterly love.

Background Readings

* Baby and Child Care, by Dr. Benjamin Spock, Pocket Books, New York (1968).

* This document and others are available through the ERIC System. For more information contact ERIC/EECE.

Prepared by Lilian G. Katz, Director, ERIC Clearinghouse on Elementary and Early Childhood Education, with Mary Glockner, ERIC / EECE editor.
"What a big girl you are!" "You've got your mom's red hair." Phrases like these give children a clue to the way people feel about them as individuals. They begin to develop an idea of what they can and cannot do. These ideas build into an image of being either lovable or not so lovable, capable or not so capable individuals. Parents play a special role in this development. Parents' feelings about and reactions to their children have a strong influence on children's feelings about "who they are."

Family Life Ought To Be Peaceful

Some people expect family life to be peaceful without friction or stress between parents and children. This idea is unfortunate since family peace is not always possible. It also promotes the notion that when there is friction, something has gone wrong. The very nature of child growth and change often produces stress. Periods of relative calm are attainable but are by no means permanent. As children grow and change, parents must also change, or at least adjust their expectations; if stress and friction are to be minimized.

Children as Second Chance

Parents sometimes expect their children to follow in their footsteps or reach goals they didn't have the opportunity to reach. A father who feels he was penalized because he lacked education might do anything to see that his son gets a college diploma, whether the son wants one or not. A mother who always had financial worries may want her daughter to be financially successful. These expectations may cause parents to push their children to achieve. Some push scholarships, others, athletic skill or music. Learning and sports become such serious business that little thought is given to enjoyment. If the pressure becomes too great, children may drop out entirely in reaction to expectations they can't possibly meet. It is better not to try, than to risk failure and not be able to live up to parental expectations.

Children as Extensions

Children are often viewed as extensions of their parents' lives, especially the highly valued aspects. Parents naturally take pride in their children's positive actions. Through their children, parents may see themselves extended into future generations. When parents expect children to be carbon copies of themselves, differences are not tolerated well. Viewing children as extensions of ourselves is an injustice to the individual child. Every person is unique in some way. Parents should expect differences in their children and accept differences as natural.

Children of baseball fans are not all natural athletes and beautiful mothers do have awkward children.
Expectations -- High or Low?

When expectations are too high or too rigid, parents set themselves up for disappointment, because their children may be unable to fulfill them. Disappointments can accumulate and may cause parents to react in negative, non-accepting ways toward children.

But parents must not throw out expectations lock, stock, and barrel. Just as expectations which are too high make children feel they are constant failures, low expectations may come through as lack of faith. Lack of faith wipes out the child's feeling of value.

Realistic Expectations

A parent's real challenge is trying to set realistic expectations for children. Realistic expectations are based on knowledge of children's developing abilities and interests.

Age is a helpful guideline, but should not serve as a hard and fast rule in setting expectations. Give the child opportunities to try different activities and tasks. Then observe carefully. Can the child succeed? Does the child need instruction and assistance? Is the activity extremely frustrating and upsetting to the child? Can the child succeed with encouragement and a little help? Treating children assembly line fashion is not respecting individuality. Each child is different and will react differently to expectations. Becoming a keen observer of your child's ability to meet expectations is a useful guide in judging how realistic your expectations are.

Parents need to consider past and present pressures affecting their children. Look at the world from your child's point of view. This can help you make allowances in what to expect.

Examine Expectations

Why do we have certain expectations for our children? Finding the answer might be done by observing our behavior toward each child, identifying our expectations and writing them down. Each expectation should be checked for fairness. Do the expectations meet parental needs alone? Images that do not fit the uniqueness of the child should be discarded.

Unfulfilled personal and parental needs may cause one to put undue pressure on a child. Ask yourself "Do I feel loved?" "Do I have a sense of personal worth and achievement, recognition and belonging in my relationship with adults?" Children must not be saddled with the burden of being the sole providers of these needs.

Analyzing what we expect and why we have certain expectations is an important step in becoming more realistic in our own parental behavior. How parents feel about their children influences how children feel about themselves. Realistic expectations offer parents an opportunity for gratification rather than disappointment, and allow children to be only themselves with their own set of unique qualities.
Background Readings

*The Effect of Expectations on the Transition to Parenthood, by Mary Lou Wylie, September 1977. (ED 150 530, 13p.)

For Parents of Young Children, "Do You Expect Too Much?" University of Minnesota Extension Bulletin 321-3.

*These documents and others are available through the ERIC system. For more information contact ERIC/EECE.

Prepared by Lynda Harriman, Extension Child and Family Development Specialist and Nancy Weiser, Extension Assistant-Communications.
"Twinkle, twinkle, little star, what you say is what you are."
"I'm rubber, you're glue; whatever you say sticks on you!"

These tongue twisters may seem silly, but for your child, knowing them is a part of belonging to the group. The feeling of belonging and the group contacts that result play an important role in the emotional and social development of your child.

Being able to relate to others is a basic human need. Your child's first attachment is to you, the one who most closely fills needs and nurtures. Usually between the age of three and four, children are likely to find a pal, a peer who has come into their lives in the yard, in nursery school, or in the park. From this point on, a child's destiny is determined in part by the power of peers. Through interaction with peers, important attitudes and behaviors are shaped.

Peer Influences

Relationship Skills. In the world of peers, children learn socializing skills, such as how to share, to wait, one's turn, to ask for something from another child, to put feelings into words. Learning to stand up for one's rights, to express feelings without fists, to participate as well as to observe, to develop self-confidence in relation to other children are important skills learned in relation with peers. Children are not born with these basic social and emotional skills. These skills are learned.

Self Image. Earning a place in the group has a real bearing on your child's self image. The child who is an outsider begins to feel inadequate. The longer negative feelings persist the less adequate a child feels and behaves.

Have you ever observed youngsters who seem to enjoy spending most of their time with adults, rather than their age mates? It may be a clue that these children are not making it in the world of peers. Not relating to the group is a misfortune in development. Children's peers are their generation. The child who succeeds in the world of peers during early childhood will enter the middle-childhood years with a solid sense of self-respect and self-confidence, enabling the child to better handle relationship problems.

Sharing. Peer groups help children learn to handle give and take relationships with other children. At nursery school a little boy wanted to play with the truck another boy was using.

"Gimme that truck!" he demanded. "I'm playing with it," retorted the other boy. "Gimme that truck!" he repeated. "I will not," said the other. "I'm sick--now gimme that truck."

The other boy made no response. As you watched, you could feel the wheels

Distribution by: Educational Resources Information Center/Clearinghouse on Elementary and Early Childhood Education, College of Education, University of Illinois, Urbana, IL 61801

A project of:
- Cooperative Extension Service, University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign
- Cooperative Extension Service, University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign
- Cooperative Extension Service, University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign boy's head. "This works fine on Mother and she gives in to me—why doesn't it work with this boy?"

Reality Testing. Group play provides important benefits. Playmates force children to face realities of their world. They teach what is acceptable and what is not. Many times you'll hear comments such as "you brag too much." "Drop dead," "Why don't you wash your hair once in a while? It stinks!" "You're a poor sport." Children are blatantly honest with one another, socializing with blunt sledge hammer comments.

Learning how to live and abide by rules which are a fact of life, if the child hopes to abide peacefully in this world, is partially learned through peer interaction. If you observe a group of children, you'll find they usually have a set of strict rules that are rigidly followed by group members. It may be only a game of hide and seek, but if Paul is "it" and doesn't say "Here I come ready or not" after he has counted to ten, his playmates will likely label him unfair. This situation illustrates the need for solid structure outside as the youngster edges away from the family unit.

Functions of Peers

Family Replacement. Peer groups provide a certain status, quite independent of one's family. They may also be a stabilizing influence during a time when adolescents are going through developmental changes. As one sixteen year old boy put it, "I hate these dumb pimples, but I'd hate them more if I was the only one who had them."

Belonging. Peers often provide a positive influence on one's self-esteem. It's a good feeling to be important to someone outside the family unit. In our culture, growing children need group support to gather necessary strength to eventually stand on their own. Acceptance from age mates and the mastery of physical and social skills, nurtures this sense of competence. Belonging and believing one has something to offer is vital to one's sense of well-being.

Transmit Values. Contact with peers exposes children and youth to the standards of others besides those of their parents. It is important for them to realize that these different standards do exist. This prepares them to interact and cope in a society which may not always agree with their views and ideas. Children who have a strong sense of self-esteem and who have learned to evaluate ideas and solve problems rationally, have skills which will serve as guides when they are exposed to their peers' ideas and values. Strong family values give a child a good basis for deciding whether to incorporate new and different values into their lives.

Parents remain primary figures as models and transmitters of values and attitudes. This is true even during the adolescent years. In most cases adolescents still turn to parents for help in decision-making choices considered difficult and having life-affecting impact. Parental influence generally outweighs that of peers in areas of moral values, deciding which college to attend and making career choices. Peer direction is sought more for "here and now" behavior, such as which record to buy, or with whom to associate. These are all situations where peer conformity is important in order to be considered part of the group.

Protection. The peer group offers protection to some extent from the world of adults. Being able to say "everyone" is doing it is more persuasive than "he" or "she" is doing it.

Experience. Peer groups provide an opportunity to practice by doing, to try out different roles. Dating, participation in extracurricular activities, bull sessions about life are all important rehearsal experiences for eventual adulthood. Feedback from peers is immediate. It provides cues and information which can be used to modify and refine one's emerging concept of who I am, and what roles can I play.

Background Readings

*The Relationship Between Children's Ideas about Helpfulness and Peer Acceptance by Gary W. Ladd and Sherri L. Oden, March 1977. (ED 139 533, 33 p.)

*These documents and others are available through the ERIC system. For more information contact ERIC/EECE.

Every parent has learned how important it is to be consistent in child discipline. Children find learning much easier when learning conditions remain constant. As a parent there are at least four aspects of consistency you need to consider:

Consistency from Situation to Situation

Results are predictable. Your predictable and consistent behavior gives children a sense of security. They need not spend all their energy figuring out what parents are going to do next. If rules are consistent results of disobeying them will be predictable.

Enforces Importance. The importance of a rule is learned by consistently having it enforced. John was punished for throwing the ball in the living room on Monday, but was not punished for the same action on Tuesday. The child was confused, not knowing why he was punished one day and not the next. Johnny isn’t really learning what rules or principles are all about. Consistent enforcement of rules tells the child that rules are important.

Consistency Between Command and Example

In teaching good behavior it’s very important for parents to “practice what they preach.” Children’s values and beliefs are learned more by examples set by adults than verbal instructions.

Screaming at a child to be more quiet or paddling a child for hitting someone smaller than himself is not doing an effective job. Decide what is important and what parental response reinforces what you are attempting to teach.

Consistency Between Verbal and Nonverbal Messages

Frequently there is a conflict of message between parent and child. As the little boy said to his mother, “Your mouth says you love me, but your eyes say you don’t.”

The child is receiving mixed messages—words that tell one thing and nonverbal cues that suggest the opposite. This leaves the child confused as to which message should be acted upon. Parents need to be sure they aren’t sending double inconsistent messages.

Children Change

Parents can't always be perfectly consistent from day to day or situation to situation. Parents' feelings, children's feelings and specific details are constantly changing. Sometimes your common sense will help you decide when bedtime rules should be modified or table manners relaxed. As children grow, rules and how we deal with them will change. The rules for a four year old will be different for the same child at age six. Some rules will be the same, others will be abolished and new ones will be introduced.

Children Need Consistency

Consistency in dealing with children's behavior is necessary for you to be an effective parent. While no parent can or should expect to be perfectly consistent, some level of consistency is necessary for a child to learn the lessons of social life and feel secure while doing so.

Background Readings

Consistency by James E. Van Horn, Ph.D., Pennsylvania State University, June (1977).

For Parents of Young Children "Consistency in Child Discipline," University of Minnesota Cooperative Extension Service Bulletin.

* Parents as Leaders: The Role of Control and Discipline by Herbert Yahracs, (1978). (ED 157 622, 11p.)

Your Child is a Person by Chess, Thomas and Buch, Parallax Publishing Co., (1965).

* This document and others are available through the ERIC System. For more information contact ERIC/EECE.

"No one really listens to me." Children in particular sometimes have this feeling.

Listening is an active process of hearing and trying to understand the message underlying another's words. Taking time to listen and encourage self expression are important in building and maintaining positive communication between parents and children. Listening gives you an opportunity to better understand how your children's thinking abilities and ideas are changing and progressing as they grow from pre-school to adolescence, and adulthood.

Guides on Listening to Children

Be interested and attentive. Children will tell whether they have a parent's interest and attention by the way the parent replies or doesn't reply. Forget about the telephone and other distractions. Maintain eye contact to show that you are really with the child. Showing interest in children and their activities will encourage them to express their feelings and make them feel important. Children tend to feel very close to an adult who, by expressing concern and caring, gets them talking about themselves.

Encourage talking. Some children need an invitation to start talking. You might begin with "Tell me about your day at school." Children are more likely to share their ideas and feelings when others think them important.

Listen patiently. People think faster than they speak. With limited vocabulary and experience in talking, children often take longer than adults to find the right word. Listen as though you have plenty of time. Hurrying children or calling attention to their use of the wrong word while they are talking is upsetting and confusing.

Hear children out. Avoid cutting children off before they have finished speaking. It is easy to form an opinion or reject children's views before they finish what they have to say. It may be hard not to stop them straight, but respect their right to have and express their opinions. Parents set an example of consideration by waiting their turn to speak. By letting children fully develop their ideas, parents also gain valuable insight into children's understanding and abilities to reason.

Reflect feelings. Perhaps the most important skill of a good listener is the ability to put yourself in someone else's shoes and to imagine what they are experiencing apart from your own thoughts and feelings. Try to mirror your children's feelings by verbally reflecting them back to them. Children feel like you understand when you accept and recognize their feelings as young children. They are not always aware of their feelings, nor can they express them as well as adults. You might reflect a child's feelings by commenting, "It sounds like you're angry at your math teacher."

Restating or rephrasing what children have said is useful when they are experiencing powerful emotions which they may not be fully aware of. Child: "School is dumb! I hate it!"
Parent: "Sounds like you're pretty angry at something that happened at school today." Young children need to learn that it is okay to have angry feelings but it is not okay always to act on them. You might say, "I know you are mad at her for breaking your toy and you feel like hitting her, but say it with words, don't hit."

Help clarify and relate experiences. As you listen try to clarify your child's feelings by stating them in your own words. Your wider vocabulary can help children express themselves as accurately and clearly as possible and give them a deeper understanding of inner thoughts and words. Child: I got so upset I didn't know what I was doing. Parent: You mean you panicked.

Parents can help children be aware of the relationship between their experiences, feelings and behavior by attempting to draw conclusions and generalizations; summarizing what has been said; making comparisons; and continually checking with the child to verify the accuracy of all understandings.

Listen to non-verbal messages. Many messages children send are communicated nonverbally by their tone of voice, the look on their faces, their energy level, body posture, or change in behavior patterns. You can often learn more from the way a child says something than from what is said. When a child comes in obviously upset, be sure to find a quiet time later in the day when he has his emotions under greater control to help explore his feelings.

Parents Set Examples

Communication skills are influenced by the examples children see and hear. Parents who listen to their children with interest, attention, and patience set a valuable example. The greatest audience children can have is an adult who is important to them and interested in them.

Background Readings

How to Influence Children by Charles Schaefer, Ph.D. Litton Educational Publishing, Inc. (1978)

*Improve Communications to Improve Behavior by Robert A. Blume and Delorys E. Blume, (Apr. '78). (ED 156, 602, 15p)

Tuning in to Young Children, University of Illinois Cooperative Extension Service Circular 1958.

*These documents and others are available through the ERIC System. For more information contact ERIC/EECE.

Many parents worry about what heavy television watching may do to their young children. Researchers have been studying the effects of television viewing on young children for more than 20 years. So far, the study results have been complex and controversial.

TV Good or Bad

Findings to date strongly suggest that the effects of heavy television watching are neither straightforward nor simple. Apparently, some children are affected more than others by the content of television shows, or by some aspects of programming, such as the pacing, music, the intensity and level of actions or special visual effects.

The evidence also indicates that children do learn behavior from watching television. However, it's not always clear how much of what they learn this way was new to them and how much was already available to them before hand and simply reinforced by watching someone engage in the same behavior on the screen.

Meanwhile, while the experts argue, parents continue to worry about how to handle this important aspect of their children's lives.

TV's Here to Stay

Since the chances of going backwards in time to living without the magic box are certainly small, the best approach for parents seems to be to make the best possible use of TV and to work toward improving it.

Parents and TV

Monitor Programs. Children learn "good" or desirable behavior as well as aggressive behavior from watching television. In order to increase the learning of desirable behavior, the programs being watched have to be monitored by an adult.

Check Child's Understandings. Take opportunities occasionally to probe your child's understanding of what he or she has been watching. In this way you can help to clarify mistaken ideas and interpretations of what has been seen.

Watch Television with Your Child. This will give you a good chance to observe how he or she reacts to the pace, the speed and intensity of the action and other elements in the program she watched regularly.

Turn the set off. If your child seems to be anxious or uneasy but remains glued to the set don't hesitate to turn it off. You won't harm a child by turning the program off.

You might be wrong in your analysis of what is upsetting the child. But make the mistake of being too careful.
There are distressing situations children have to confront which cannot simply be "turned-off" as easily.

Talk With Other Parents. If a program is being aired regularly in your community which you find objectionable in terms of your own values and preferences, try to locate other parents among those of your children's friends and agree to ban the program among the children who are friends. This may be hard to do, but is an important part of valuing your own values.

Voice Your Opinion. Don't hesitate to let your child know that you consider a given feature of a program to be in doubtful or bad taste, to be too gross, too noisy, fake or artificial. Your child does not have to agree with you, of course. But he needs to see you as a thinking and discriminating person.

Share Your Values. Let your child know what kinds of portrayals, music, visual images and so on you find satisfying, pleasurable, inspiring, enlightening. This kind of sharing lays the foundation for the development of discriminating aesthetic behavior. Parents often overlook the fact that the acquisition of "taste" is also part of learning and development.

Create Interest. Find out how well your child understands how a program is produced and how sound effects are created. Encourage them to guess or predict how the plot will unfold and develop.

Practicing these kinds of responses to what is being watched on television prepares the child for critical viewing habits that can be used throughout a long life of viewing.

Background Readings

*How to Treat TV with TLC, by Evelyn Kaye, Beacon Press, Newtonville, Massachusetts (1979).

*Influence of Television Commercials on Young Children, by Pamela Y. Y. Lam (May 1978). (ED 156 326, 77p)

*These documents and others are available through the ERIC System. For more information contact ERIC/EECE.

Prepared by Lilian G. Katz, Director ERIC Clearinghouse on Elementary and Early Childhood Education, with Mary Glockner, ERIC/EECE, editor.
Use in children is better! Even such essentials as affection, attention, and praise are good for children only in the right intensities and amounts.

Avoiding Extremes

For instance, everyone seems to agree that young children need love and affection. Children who receive too little may feel rejected. But those who get too much can suffer from what is called "smother love." Too little attention can result in feelings of rejection, while too much can cause demanding and whining behavior.

Children need recognition and assurance that they are important to the people around them. Too little recognition may lead to feelings of inadequacy, but too much may cause self-centeredness. Insufficient praise and appreciation can lead to discouragement and feelings of futility. But, in excess, praise loses its meanings.

Finding A Good Balance

As you think about what might be the optimum amount of affection or praise for your child, it is useful to remember that what is optimum for one child may be too much for another or insufficient for a third.

Actually, it's impossible to predict just what will be the right amount of something for all children, or all 3-year-olds or all girls, and so on.

One of the ideas, which may help, is the concept of threshold. The threshold refers to that point at which a child responds to a particular event such as praise or attention or affection when they get a hug and a smile once a day. Others seem to need lots of attention or praise before they respond to it. These differences can be thought of as differences in thresholds. By observing and listening to your child's reactions to events and experiences, you can get clues about how his or her threshold for praise, affection, etc., might be.

Thresholds Are Learned

While there are apparently inborn differences in such things as temperament or energy level, it seems likely that thresholds for many needs are learned from experience. In other words, some children learn to need a lot of attention (high threshold) while others learn to get along quite well with very little (low threshold). If the threshold is learned, it may be possible to modify it in several ways.

For instance, if you feel that your child expects too much attention from you, you can gradually reduce the... amount of attention or praise the child is given so that he or she can adapt to lower rates without distress. It also helps sometimes to explain to a child that even though you can't give him or her your attention at a given moment or "on demand," you are thinking of him or her and will get back after a specified period of time (after lunch, for instance.) It is important to follow through on such promises so that the child develops trust and confidence in you.

Background Readings

*The Dynamics of the One Child Family: Socialization Implications, by Bernice T. Eiduson (September 1976). (ED 130 785, 13p).

HELPING CHILDREN DEVELOP INTERESTS

"As long as the children are happy and having fun..."

This phrase, often used by parents of preschoolers to reassure themselves that they're doing the right things for their children, can sometimes be misleading.

Of course, we all want children to be able to enjoy a variety of activities and experiences. But the capacity to do this could be distinguished from another capacity of far-reaching significance in children's development—the capacity to find activities and experiences interesting and absorbing.

What Are Interests?

Interests are those activities in which we become deeply involved and stay with over time—those which we feel compelled to attend to in spite of the routine elements they frequently include.

A child growing up in an environment which fails to support and strengthen this capacity to find some things interesting and absorbing will surely be handicapped.

After all, almost every human endeavor that is worthwhile—including raising a family—requires of us the ability to become interested and absorbed in tasks over periods of time—and to sustain this involvement throughout inevitable periods of routine, and frustration the activity includes.

Guides Toward Helping Children

Be careful in the use of rewards and praise. Recent research suggests that excessive use of either praise or rewards undermines children's interests and their capabilities to find activities intrinsically satisfying. Apparently, when we promise children rewards ahead of time for doing something, we suggest to them that the activity couldn't possibly be rewarding in itself.

Praise can also shift the emphasis so that the spontaneous satisfaction the child originally derived from an activity becomes less important than the accumulation of praise.

Provide opportunities. Make sure your child has opportunities to participate in activities which require his involvement, attention and effort over increasingly longer periods of time. This would include activities that the child can return to after interruptions. Providing opportunities for the child to resume an activity after a break and continuing to elaborate, and develop the activity helps support and strengthen the capacity for interest.

Let your child see your involvement and absorption in your own interests. For instance, gardening, sports, music, cooking or photography, can be fairly easily understood by a young child. What's important is that you provide a model of someone who is interested in something in which knowledge, skill and satisfaction develop and grow over a longer period of time.

Happiness is a short and brief burst of good feeling--easy come, easy go. Interest involves energy and effort that can provide the satisfaction which comes from deep involvement, knowledge and renewed challenge over time.

Background Readings

*These documents and others are available through the ERIC System. For more information contact ERIC/EECE.

Prepared by Lilian G. Katz, Director ERIC Clearinghouse on Elementary and Early Childhood Education, with Mary Glockner, ERIC/EECE editor.
PARENTS ARE THE EXPERTS

The amount of information on child rearing available in magazines, pamphlets and books seems to be increasing week by week. Some of this information is useful, some confusing, some contradictory.

As parents, you may be able to benefit from such advice if you examine the recommendations from the experts in terms of your own goals for yourself, your whole family and each family member. (After all, your children have to learn to live comfortably with you -- not with the distant "experts").

Deciding What Matters

What may be more useful than reading what the "experts" say is to take a quiet moment or two occasionally, to think through what really matters to you -- what values, behaviors, habits, ideas, character traits you believe are worth fussing about. Different families have different values, priorities and preferences about many aspects of family life and life in general -- and it's up to the members of each family to decide what is important to them.

For example, table manners are more important in some households than in others; practicing the piano or attending Sunday School more serious commitments in some families than in others. How important is it to you, for instance, that your child remembers to say please and thank you, to put away toys or learn to play an instrument?

Ideas That May Be Helpful

Pick your issues carefully. Be sure you feel strongly and deeply enough about them to withstand fairly persistent challenges.

Limit the issues. Keep the number of issues down to a half-dozen or so. If you have too many issues, you will spend too much time and energy in contention. (Remember, you can always revise your decisions. And as children grow and develop, new issues emerge to replace old ones.)

Take your stand with calm courage and conviction. Once you have settled on what really matters to you. This approach is recommended not only for the sake of your own well-being but for your child's welfare, too. Your child's psychosocial development is greatly facilitated when you give him or her clear signals about what you think is appropriate, worthwhile and desirable. If you are fairly sure about the kinds of behaviors and habits you really feel comfortable with, and want to live with, then you are more likely to communicate your expectations effectively to your child.

Accentuate the Positive

Sometimes parents become too preoccupied with children's behaviors they don't like and things about their children that make them feel uncomfortable. They overlook their children's need to perceive clearly what their parents do want, do admire, and do consider worthwhile. Preschool children seem to gain a certain sense of safety when the important adults in their lives not only have values but take stands on them.

Children do not have to like the demands and restrictions we place on them. And they have a right to have their feelings about those demands and restrictions expected even while they yield to us. There may be some days when the comfort of the children is at the expense of the adults, and vice versa. But an optimum environment for young children is one in which both the adults and the children are comfortable most of the time.

What is useful to remember is that growth and development occur over the long run and are affected by the day-to-day quality of the experience of all the people who live together in a family.

Background Readings

*These documents and others are available through the ERIC system. For more information contact ERIC/EECE.

Prepared by Lillian G. Katz, Director ERIC Clearinghouse on Elementary and Early Childhood Education, with Mary Glockner, ERIC/EECE editor.
Emotions are an important part of being human. Part of our parenting role is helping children learn to recognize and cope with these emotions.

Emotions in children are often aroused when their needs are not being met, or when they are being inappropriately met. For instance, a child who wants to run and play but is being held on mother's lap, will probably become angry, and will manifest that anger by fighting, struggling or crying. But when the child is feeling dependent or hurt, he will snuggle up close to mother.

Dealing with Feelings

Parents need to understand the nature of emotions. Often it is difficult to realize that children's interpretations of a situation may differ from ours. Sometimes because we dislike the way children show their feelings, we punish, ignore or deny that their feelings are real and important. Children often get the message that they are bad for having angry or fearful feelings. Children need to be able to sort out and deal with their own feelings.

This helps children know they aren't bad for having such feelings. It also opens an important avenue of meaningful communications. When parents recognize children's feelings, they can say, "I know this is how you feel." This helps the children feel understood.

Recognizing. Children need to be able to sort out and deal with their own feelings. When children react to situations emotionally, rather than deny their emotions, we can recognize what they are feeling by saying, "I know this is how you are feeling, you might feel better if..."

Young children are very "me" centered. How "I" feel is the most important. Parents can help them see how their words and actions affect other people. Comments like, "When you do that, I feel so proud and good", or "Your behavior hurts me and makes me feel sad" tell children that others have feelings, too.

Coping. Children may have difficulty coping with their inner feelings. Parents can help children find acceptable and comfortable ways to deal with their feelings by showing understanding and suggesting possible ways of coping. You might say, "We don't kick the furniture when we are angry" or "I won't listen to you yell bad names at me." Then give instruction for dealing with the feelings. You might feel better if you go downstairs and bounce the ball; or go out in the garage and yell, or go and hit a punching bag, or run around the block." You can teach acceptable responses to anger that you and the rest of society can live with.

Accept Feelings

Strong feelings cannot be denied, reasoned with, or talked out of existence. Attempting to ignore them invites disaster. Acknowledging your children's right to have these feelings opens communications, and fosters mutual understanding. Respecting children's feelings will help them feel important as people.

Background Readings

Tuning in to Young Children, a University of Illinois Cooperative Extension Service Bulletin prepared by Lynda Harriman, May 1978.

Emotions in the Lives of Children by Wray Herbert (May 77) (ED 164, 133, 20p).

*This document and others are available through the ERIC System. For more information contact ERIC/EECE.

UNDERSTANDING BEHAVIOR

Children are not born with a sense of conscience, good manners, or an adult reasoning ability. As they struggle to learn the social ways of their world, they're bound to make mistakes. These mistakes are often labeled misbehavior.

Consider Individuality

Our understanding of behavior is increased when we watch children grow through one stage of development to the next and see some behaviors disappear and new ones take their place. Children's understandings, assumptions about life, self-concepts and feelings about others change as they grow. In turn, so does behavior. Trying to see the world from your child's point of view is helpful when it is necessary to redirect the child's behavior.

There is Always a Reason

Discover the reason behind children's behavior. Every psychological action has a cause or explanation.

Put yourself in your child's shoes.

Does the behavior work? Children don't like to be held back or stopped from doing what they want to do. Usually they will exhibit the type of behavior that gets them what they want. If whining is a successful technique, children learn to use it. Parents need to be sure children know what behaviors are acceptable. When children learn that socially acceptable behaviors have positive results, they learn to use them. Remember, children learn by doing and observing behaviors of others.

Is the child bored and/or tired? Children may misbehave if the weather keeps them indoors. If they are tired or hungry, their behavior is also likely to reflect discontent. Be patient with your child and try to change the situation when possible. Keep children busy with activities that are interesting and fun.

Is the child seeking attention? Often children misbehave when their parent's attention is taken away from them. Children need positive attention daily. They need to know there is some time reserved just for them. Praise children when they behave in acceptable ways. Saying "I was so pleased and know I could count on you" encourages children to try again.

Is the child frustrated? Waiting too long for things they want or not being able to do something themselves may result in an aggressive outburst, demanding or selfish behavior. Sometimes children have not learned another way to express their feelings or wants and have found that a negative display of behavior works. Parents need to set an example by showing a more appropriate way to express feelings and identify wants.

Is the child excited or anxious? If children become overly excited they may forget how to behave or simply lose control. You can prepare children for special events by telling them what to expect. Children should be taken away from situations they cannot handle, or they should be given help to handle the situation.

Consider More Than One Cause

Sometimes we may suspect there is only one cause for behavior when there may be several. Pause before you act. Consider all the factors which may be contributing to the behavior. Ask yourself, am I part of the problem or part of the solution? How do I react to the child's behavior? When parents give idle threats, preach and nag, children literally tune them out, becoming parent deaf. Changing your reaction or the way you handle the situation may help them to cope and behave appropriately.

Look at Total Behavior

Labeling behavior is helpful in identifying and understanding certain behavior characteristics. But be careful not to over do it. The same behavior may have quite a different cause in different children. One child may be labeled 'lazy' because he is anxious and afraid to try something new, while another child may be viewed 'lazy' because he is overly tired.

Avoid labeling a child on the basis of a single act. Cynthia at 2h is not necessarily brilliant because she recites nursery rhymes fluently. It's possible that her parents have spent many hours teaching her this skill. A child is neither untrustworthy, destructive nor brilliant on the basis of a single act. Labeling a child as completely meag, aggressive, or shy puts too much emphasis upon the act instead of the cause. The real danger is that the child may learn to accept the label as real.

Stay Calm, Appraise Fairly

Before reacting to a given behavior it is important to first stop and think "Why did the child do this?" Once we've identified some possible reasons we are ready to ask "What shall I do about it?" When we react to children's behavior in ways that give them experiences which help them become more self controlled they learn to be responsible for their own behavior.

Background Readings

"Children...Their Behavior and Misbehavior" University of Illinois Cooperative Extension Service Bulletin CHEP 301.

*Tender Topics: Children and Crisis by Annie L. Butler (April 1977) (ED 147 019, 16p).

Your Child is a Person, Chess Thomas and Birch, Parallax Publishing Company, 1965.

*These documents and others are available through the ERIC System. For more information contact ERIC EJCE.

When children's feelings are respected and we take time to show them what to do rather than waiting to reprimand improper behavior, it is easier to gain their cooperation.

Why Cooperation is Important

Gives satisfaction. Cooperation takes place when individuals coordinate their actions to obtain what they want. For example, when a child wants to use scissors, a parent can first show him how to do so safely. If the child follows the parent's suggestions both feel satisfied from experiencing cooperation.

Improves relationships. Parents all expect cooperation from their children and know that the ability to cooperate affects children's relationships with others. Effective group participation demands cooperation. Children are viewed by peers in a more favorable manner after participating cooperatively together in group play. Cooperation increases attraction toward cooperating others.

Family Participation

Cooperation does not develop by itself. It is attained slowly over time through daily practice in exercising judgment and making choices. Sympathy, tolerance, give and take, self-control and respect for others are all involved in the ability to cooperate. Parents who demonstrate these behaviors and can talk about them easily help children learn cooperation.

What Can We Do?

Give choices. When children have a choice, they feel they have some say about their lives. This makes it easier to cooperate. It is important for our children to learn how to make decisions. It builds their feelings of confidence and a sense of "I can do it." These feelings help children try new things and increase their confidence in similar situations. Decision making becomes easier for children when they have learned to make simple decisions between two or three alternatives; when children are given a choice, their decisions should be accepted, even when they seem not to be the wisest choice. Like adults, children also learn from their experiences. When health and safety are not in danger, experience can be a valuable teacher.

Builds responsibility. No family, community or nation can run smoothly without cooperation. Learning to cooperate involves living by rules. Abiding by rules teaches children a sense of responsibility. As our children grow we hope they will assume responsibility for their actions and rely less on the authority of others. This is important for your children's growth and security as individuals.
Show love. Show love to your children in ways they can understand. Give them your complete attention by reading a story, listening to them talk, or playing with them. Children who know they are loved want to please their parents. Be there to help and assist when needed. Give the security of limits. Children need to understand what is expected and how far they can go. Praise children for their efforts. It encourages them to keep trying to cooperate.

Be flexible. Change time, places, or procedures to change behavior. Often when we alter the situation, children are more cooperative. For example, telling children ahead of time that they are expected to do something, and giving them time to finish what they presently are doing, make it easier to cooperate.

Set examples. Focus on the "do's" instead of the "don'ts". Show children the way to act. Instead of "don't throw the ball" say "roll the ball on the floor," or say "just look" instead of "don't touch." It is up to parents to set the example and the guidelines. It is true that children "catch" much behavior from their parents.

Parents as the Stimulus

Children attain a sense of cooperation through their own efforts and experiences. As parents, our examples create the favorable conditions for learning to take place. The specific experiences and opportunities we provide are the basis for learning cooperation.

Background Readings

*Parents as Leaders: The Role of Control and Discipline by Herbert Yahraes (1978) (ED 157 622, 11p)

Pointers for Parents of Pre-Schoolers, "How to Get Your Child to Do What You Want Him to Do!" South Carolina Cooperative Extension Bulletin.

*This document and others are available through the ERIC System. For more information contact ERIC/EECE.

Prepared by Lynda Harriman, Extension Child and Family Development Specialist, and Nancy Weller, Extension Assistant Communications.
"Mommy, if the doctor brings the baby in his bag, and if Santa Claus brings us toys; if God will punish me when I am bad; and if money grows on trees, why do we need Daddy?" (Segal and Yahraes, 1978).

This child's question seems to reflect a commonly accepted social view of father's importance. The importance of mothers to the development of children has traditionally been emphasized. Research indicates that how fathers interact with their children makes significant impact upon children's lives.

Traditional Roles

Looking at traditional expectations of fathers, we are likely to see rigid customs and taboos. The traditional viewpoint suggests that fathers are unable or reluctant to play the caring role for their children. They are viewed outside of the realm of child-care activities. Mothers perform specific tasks which aid in the health and safety of their children and teach attitudes and values. Fathers are expected to be providers and disciplinarians. They are often viewed as unessential in many areas of their children's lives. The attachment between mother and infant is considered so important and so strong, fathers, too, may view themselves as unnecessary.

Fathers Become Involved

Today the role of fathering is beginning to change. Many of today's fathers are becoming involved right from the beginning with the care and supervision of their children. Attending pre-natal classes with their wives is becoming quite common. They are present at birth and develop an attachment with the baby early in life. Fathers' early involvement with children from infancy on has potential value for children and mother, as well as the marriage relationship. When fathers feel left out, they may become resentful, perhaps even jealous. When fathers are able to share in the joys and responsibilities of parenting, they feel a part of the expanded family unit from the moment of birth on.

Benefits of Shared Parenting

Gives Help and Support. One of the comforting aspects of shared parenting is the mutual help and support possible to each partner. Parents can often work out child learning difficulties by talking over the children's needs and abilities and sharing the responsibility of guiding and teaching children. Parents who support one another can provide more consistent and effective child guidance.

Partner Acts as Sounding Board. Often mothers are expected to be experienced in dealing with all kinds of child behavior. Emotional involvement with one's own children coupled with high expectations for them makes it difficult to maintain an objective viewpoint. When parents are able to talk over childrearing difficulties with one another problems are more likely to slip into proper perspective. Both parents bring a different point of view to the discussion helping insure some objectivity. Single parents who... have no partner need to find a friend or another parent who is willing to serve as a sounding board from time to time.

Understanding. By sharing some of the childrearing responsibilities fathers become better acquainted with their children. In turn fathers become more knowledgeable about the development of their children.

Provides a Breather. Shared parenting should provide each parent a chance to relax alone away from children. Most parents can do a better job of supervising and caring for their children if they have some time free of the responsibility. Some families have discovered how valuable it can be to plan a regular time each week when one parent takes charge of the children and the other can do whatever he or she likes.

Provide Positive Examples

Children learn the meaning of marriage and family life chiefly through observing their own parents. Parents who enjoy one another and have a happy and effective partnership provide a very positive example. Children also develop their ideas about the roles of men and women in our society from seeing how their own parents behave. In some families as the children get older, father takes responsibility for the boys and mother for the girls. Boys need companionship with both parents, and girls can profit from contact with father as well as with mother.

Father is Too Important

Fathers have an important place in the family. Those who view their parenting role as one which includes active participation with their children have the potential to develop strong satis-

Background Readings

Parents as Leaders: The Role of Control and Discipline by Herbert Yahraes (1978) (ED 157 622, 11p).

These documents and others are available through the ERIC System. For more information contact ERIC/EECE.

VITAL SIGNS OF PRESCHOOL DEVELOPMENT

Most parents have days when they wonder whether they are doing an adequate job with their children, whether their children will grow up to be competent and confident. What are the vital signs of development during the preschool years?

ASSESSING DEVELOPMENT

To assess the development of a preschool child, it is helpful to look at the child's functioning over a period of about a month. Children's feelings and behavior fluctuate: there are better and worse days: Over three or four weeks, parents might consider the following aspects of a child's behavior:

Sleep. On the average, over a period of about a month, the child should fall asleep easily and wake rested and ready to go. This does not mean that there may not be some nights when the child lingers, frets, and fusses before going to sleep, and some mornings when he wakes up cranky. Only if these behaviors and feelings are typical is it necessary to take a closer look at the child's situation.

Appetite. On the average, over a period of about two weeks, the child should eat with appetite. That doesn't mean that he won't skip an occasional meal, or even several meals in a row. If, however, you see few signs of real appetite over a period of a week or two, then take a closer look at the child's life.

Bowel and bladder control. Over all, the child should have or be progressing toward bowel and bladder control, especially during the day. That does not mean that there may not be occasional mishaps and accidents, especially at night and especially for the good, deep sleeper.

Spontaneous signs of affection. Over a period of a month or so, the child should spontaneously express affection for one or more of the people he is living with. It is fairly easy to get a child to give good-night kisses, and in some families such embraces are standard practice. But the kind of hugging or cuddling in which the child spontaneously lets you know that he loves you is a pretty reliable sign that he feels included and cared for and feels his life is worthwhile.

Confidence. Generally, the child should be able to sample the "good things of life" appropriate for his age. If a child is so shy or so fearful that he will not go to a neighbor child's birthday party, or visit the zoo, or play outdoors at the nursery school, then his "problems" may be getting in the way of his development.

Expressions of emotion. Over a period of a month, the child should express a range of emotions. Healthy development is indicated by the capacity to feel such emotions as delight, anger, or fear. If a child is able to express these emotions from time to time, parents can feel assured that his development is going well. If over a period of weeks the child expresses only a limited range of emotions, then parents may want to take a look at the child's situation.
DEALING WITH PROBLEMS

A problem in one of these six areas of a young child's life does not provide conclusive evidence of a disturbance in development. Rather, the overall pattern of functioning in all areas helps put the child's growth into proper perspective.

If the pattern suggests the need for a closer look, then what should be done? First, it is important for parents to remember that whatever may be disturbing the child is probably only temporary; his fate is not sealed by a poor turn of events in the third or fourth year of life. Keep in mind that children are very resilient.

Little disturbances in these areas of development often are simply a hint to parents that a child needs a little more of their attention, to reassure him that he is cared for and valued. If a parent spends some time alone with the child, doing something together that they both enjoy (taking a walk around the block, reading a story, etc.), it usually is easy to restore the feelings of security and self worth that every child needs in order to thrive.

BACKGROUND READINGS

Baby and Child Care, by Dr. Benjamin Spock, Pocket Books, New York (1968).

*A Comprehensive Mental Health Program for Preschool and School-Age Children in Rural and Non-Urban Areas, by William Gingold (1975). (ED 111 127, 12p.)

*These documents and others are available through the ERIC System.

For more information contact ERIC/EECE.

Most of us can recall some fears we had as young children: fears of monsters, of spiders, of dark corners. Such fears are very common among pre-schoolers, and it takes time for children to learn how to cope with them successfully.

Often parents can help a child along by accepting the child's fearful feelings and reassuring the child that he or she is safe. In other cases, however, the child is not completely safe from the feared danger, and a slightly different approach is called for.

In deciding how to deal with a particular fear, it may be helpful to think of childhood fears as falling into three groups: rational fears, irrational fears, and "borderline" fears that fall somewhere between the first two. Each group of fears may be dealt with in a different way:

RATIONAL FEARS

The world is full of things that any sensible youngster would be afraid of: vicious or loud dogs, hypodermic needles and their pediatric pokers, sly-looking strangers, and so forth. These fears are rational in the sense that their objects can indeed be dangerous. The parent's role is to protect the child from these dangers and, whenever possible, to teach the child some rules and strategies for dealing with them.

IRRATIONAL FEARS

The list of potential fears without realistic foundation is virtually endless. Children may be afraid of monsters, ghosts, witches, or other imaginary creatures.

One mother of a 3-year-old reported that her son called out during the night in great fear that there were snakes in the corner of his bedroom. She responded by fetching the broom and pretending to sweep them out of the room. This response is not recommended because the adult put herself in the ridiculous position of agreement with the child that the feared creatures were indeed there.

It is wise to acknowledge and accept the child's fearful feelings. Never make fun of them. But you should also assure the child that even if dangerous objects were there, you would be able to provide protection. Often the underlying motive of fantastical fears is the child's wish to be reassured that the adult is not fearful and is strong and brave enough to protect him, no matter what dangers might come along.

BORDERLINE FEARS

Some of the most difficult fears to deal with are those in this group. The causes as well as treatments of such fears vary.
Fear of the dark may be picked up from stories and fables as well as horror movies. The loss of light at night results in the loss of familiar points of reference that give stability and order to our surroundings. Familiar features get lost, distorted or exaggerated by shadows; noises unnoticed during the day seem louder and perhaps stranger in the dark.

A small night light, low-key, simple and consistent reassurance that an adult is in charge and can protect the child from harm are the best responses.

Fear of thunderstorms. Many adults are as afraid of thunderstorms as their children. It would be difficult and probably ineffective to try to pretend that you are not afraid of such things. If you are really fearful in storms, be sure to point out to your child the many adults she knows who are not so afraid, so that she does not think this fear is inevitable. It could also be helpful to remind the child of someone who used to be afraid but overcame the fear, thus providing a good model for the child.

Fears of injury, illness or handicaps. These fears are a bit more difficult to respond to because we cannot guarantee our children that they will never be seriously hurt or ill. Sometimes the fear stems from the child's belief that his own bad or "evil" behavior will be punished by injury. If you think this is the case, reassure the child that illnesses and accidents are not caused by misbehavior, and explain what some of the true causes are.

Fear of being afraid. Sometimes children fear their own fear. They become anxious in anticipation of being overcome by fear (e.g. of Uncle Jim's dog, or of visiting an old great-grandfather who is crippled or blind.) The child in this case can be reassured that the fear is "normal," that it happens to lots of us when we're little, and that we do get over it.

Also, you may help the child feel more confident by suggesting something like this: "If you feel yourself getting nervous or afraid, just think of me (or Dad or Grandma, etc.) and remember how I love you, and that will make you feel better."

BACKGROUND READINGS

*Tender Topics: Children and Crises, by Annie L. Butler (1977). (ED 147 019, 16p.)

*When Your Child Goes to the Hospital, by Peggy Daly Pizzo (1977). (ED 143 433, 43p.)

*Children's Fears: A Developmental Comparison of Normal and Exceptional Children, by Jeffrey L. Derevensky (1976). (ED 125 207, 22p.)

*These documents and others are available through the ERIC System. For more information contact ERIC/EECE.

Prepared by Lilian G. Katz, Director, ERIC Clearinghouse on Elementary and Early Childhood Education, with Charlotte Watkins, ERIC/EECE editor.
"Honesty is the best policy" is a value most of us strive to impress upon our children. Yet it is amazing how often we lie to them ourselves, probably without realizing that we do so.

Perhaps the word lie seems a bit strong for the statements we make to young children, but any assertion made as though it were true, even though it is known to be false, is a lie. Often, parents are not aware that the casual, "little" lies that seem harmless to them can create serious problems for children. Some of the most common casual lies and their potential hazards are discussed below.

The Teasing Lie. Generations of children have been told that swallowed mallow seeds would soon sprout in the stomach. We may find such tales amusing, but for some children they are a source of intense anxiety. These children may be afraid to ask for reassurance, partly because they fear their worst suspicions will be confirmed, and partly because they fear being ridiculed. Adults often forget the solitary anguish that can be caused by what they think of as casual teasing.

The Ultimatum. Then there's the "ultimatum" or threatening lie, as in, "If you don't come now I'll leave without you." This kind of lie has undesirable effects whether children believe it or not.

Many children, even by four years of age, know that the parent does not mean the threat and will not act upon it. Needless to say, for these children the threat will be ineffective. For a few children, however, there is always some doubt, an underlying insecurity or fear of being abandoned. For these children the threat may be effective, but at great psychological cost.

Because the potential risks are considerable, the best policy seems to be to avoid this practice.

The Bribing Lie. Statements like "If you sit still in church I'll buy you an ice cream sundae" often turn out to be lies, falling into the category of bribery or manipulation. This particular ploy is a tricky one, partly because the actual standard of behavior that the child must meet to get the reward is not clear to all parties involved. For example, how "still" is still enough to get the sundae? Unless parents are careful to make the standard unmistakable and to provide the promised reward when (and only when) it is earned, they will lose credibility.

It seems to be a better idea to make demands on children's behavior simply in terms of the behavior expected and valued. Firm, clear and serious statements usually have the power to obtain desired behavior in preschoolers, as long as they are used judiciously and implemented consistently. To say, "I expect you to sit still in church, even though I know it is very hard to do that," can bring about the desired effect in most children.

The White Lie. White lies may have at least two possible functions: first, to protect the feelings, self-esteem or self-respect of the child, and second, to minimize the likelihood of debilitating anxiety or panic.

The white lie told to protect a child's self-esteem may at times be necessary or desirable. But adults often underestimate children's capacity for realistic evaluation of their own behavior and their own efforts. Often adults lose their credibility when they flatter young children with these lies, even though they have the best of intentions when doing so. Furthermore, if adults behave as though children should always get praise, then children will eventually acquire a powerful "need" for praise and flattery. Neither individual development nor society as a whole is well served by such exaggerated praise seeking and the white lies involved.

The second type of white lie, intended to reduce anxiety, is probably the only type which should be told to children (and even then, only under special circumstances). If a parent has even a slight reason to believe that a child's life may be in danger (e.g., from an accident), and that the child's knowledge of that fact might intensify the danger because of the dynamic effects of panic, then a lie which convincingly reassure the child that he or she is safe seems both humane and strategically justified.

In all other respects, honesty really is the best policy. By being honest with children, parents not only avoid the possible harm lies can do; they also, by example, teach children the value of honesty.

BACKGROUND READINGS

*This document and others are available through the ERIC System. For more information contact ERIC/EECE.

Prepared by Lilian G. Katz, Director, ERIC Clearinghouse on Elementary and Early Childhood Education, with ERIC/EECE editors.
Most parents are concerned about how to discipline their children—how to help them develop self-control and a healthy respect for other people. When children misbehave badly, when tempers flare, another concern enters the picture: how to stop a certain unacceptable behavior for the moment. At times like these, many parents of young children are tempted to use a common but controversial method of discipline: spanking.

Is spanking harmful to young children? Is it effective in promoting discipline, in the short run or the long run? These are considerations that parents must take into account in deciding whether or not to spank.

Harmful Effects of Spanking

Some parents are quick to point out that they were spanked when young and were not damaged in the least. Other adults recall their own childhood spankings as moments not only of pain, but of deep humiliation, resentment, and complete powerlessness. In the latter instances, the punishment clearly had detrimental effects that lingered long after the experience.

Does Spanking Work?

It is hard to find reliable or agreed upon answers to the question of whether spanking actually "works." We cannot subject children—or people of any age—to different forms of punishment in order to obtain experimental data for determining what the best methods are. The clinical evidence now available (based largely on childhood memories) suggests that spanking has very limited effectiveness. It seems to be effective primarily as a way to clear the air for the moment.

In this respect, spanking is like other techniques of punishment: it is good only for the punisher—not for the punished. Clearing the air with a good spank may seem to be effective at ending a distressful situation. However, the short-term utility must be weighed against evidence that corporal punishment does not aid children in developing self-discipline.

Spanking Hot and Cold

Overall, spanking can be viewed as something we do despite our own better judgement. It is usually done in "heat" (as opposed to "cold") blood.

To spank in the heat of the moment is not recommended—though once in a while it may be unavoidable, and forgivable. But to spank in cold blood, as a matter of deliberate, premeditated policy, can be seen as sadistic, and it presents an undesirable model for the child, an example of an unfeeling attitude toward another's pain.

Discipline Without Spanking

There are many alternatives to spanking. Here are some recommended tactics that can prevent some of the problems spanking is associated with and that carry considerably less risk for long-lasting damage than does corporal punishment.

- Establish rules and limits that make sense to you, and make your expectations clear to your child. Do so firmly, warmly, and consistently. If, for example, you don't want your four-year old to play with your stereo, insist that she not touch it and stay with the situation until your daughter learns that you mean what you say.

- Make every effort to minimize the number of different situations that give rise to child-adult conflict. Conflict situations are inevitable, but if you find yourself settling disputes every 20 minutes or so, then the fault may lie in your child's environment. Perhaps the solution is to place that stereo equipment out of her reach.

- Resist the temptation to make empty threats, for they can undermine your credibility with your child. They may even lead to feelings of uneasiness or, for some children, to chronic anxiety about what is expected of them.

Keep in mind that the key to successful discipline is to foster respect and self-discipline in the child. This can best be achieved by exhibiting those virtues yourself, in dealing with your child.

BACKGROUND READINGS

How To Discipline with Love (From Crib to College), by Fitzhugh Dodson, New American Library, New York (1978).

If You Don't Stop Hitting Your Sister, I'm Going to Beat Your Brains In! by Suzanne Bordin-Sandler. (1975). (ED 123 538, 12p.)

Punishment: Parents' Rites vs. Children's Rights, by Norma Deitch Feshbach and Seymour Feshbach (1975) (ED 119 829, 31 p.)

Child Abuse in the Name of Discipline, by Vincent J. Fontant (1976). (ED 133 930, 6p.)

These documents and others are available through the ERIC system. For more information contact ERIC/EECE.

Prepared by Lilian G. Katz, Director, ERIC Clearinghouse on Elementary and Early Childhood Education, with ERIC/EECE editors.
ADULT BASIC EDUCATION CLASSES are offered at Adult / Community Education Centers and at many OUTREACH CENTERS located in churches and community buildings. An OUTREACH TEACHER / COUNSELOR can come to your home to discuss an educational program suited to your needs. Classes are inform-ial with a friendly and comfortable setting.

CLASSES & INSTRUCTIONAL AIDS ARE FREE!
CALL TODAY: 632-1111, Ext. 3180
Adult / Community Education
Brevard Community College
Cocoa, FL 32922

Cocoa Campus

BREVARD COMMUNITY COLLEGE
Maxwell C, King, President

BOARD OF TRUSTEES
Roger W. Dobson, Chairperson
Mrs. Irene H. Burnett, Vice Chairperson
Robert L. Nabors
Philip F. Nohr
Ralph M. Williams, Jr.

BREVARD COUNTY SCHOOL DISTRICT
Lloyd A. Soughers, Superintendent

SCHOOL BOARD
John William Baker, Chairperson
Mrs. Lynn Demetriades, Vice Chairperson
Dr. Larry A. Williamson
Dr. Robert A. Anderson
Mrs. Esther Baker

Brevard Community College and the
Brevard County School District are equal opportunity/equal access institutions.