Guides - Classroom Use - Guides (For Teachers) (052)

Designed to accompany all three levels of student books on television, this teacher's guide presents background material and suggestions for guiding the student lessons. An introduction describes the project. Ensuing pages outline teacher preparation for the unit, present suggestions for Catholic parish catechetical programs, and offer a guide for inservice teacher training. Tips on involving parents include a letter to parents and a list of things parents can do in conjunction with the in-school program. Guides to student lessons are included for each of the units in the student books. Objectives, scriptural references, and background readings are provided. When objectives or procedures vary for the different grade levels, this is noted in the teacher materials and alternative plans are offered. Tips for using the program in the elementary classroom are given; and catechetical text correlations for elementary, junior high school, and senior high school texts and a five-page resource manual are included. Note on the use of this Teacher's Guide to The Media Mirror:

This Guide is for use with all three levels of student books for The Media Mirror project. These levels—Elementary, Junior High, and Senior High—are identified only by the cover colors: orange for Elementary, blue for Junior High, and green for Senior High. Lacking any printed identification of grade level, the books may be used according to the needs of students regardless of their grade placement. Two distinctions according to levels are made in the Guide: 1) the “Objectives” in six of the nine lessons vary according to level, and 2) the “Catechetical Text Correlations” are different for each of the three levels. The other material is uniform and may be adapted for each level by the teacher.

Background on The Media Mirror project:

The Media Mirror began as a pilot program in 1981-1982. Originally funded by a grant from the Catholic Communication Campaign, the pilot was sponsored by the Department of Communication and the Department of Education of the U.S. Catholic Conference.

THE MEDIA MIRROR:
A Study Guide on Christian Values and Television

INTRODUCTION

You are pioneers in a nationwide movement to bring to Catholic students an awareness of the values infused into their lives through media.

Not just a generic awareness, of course. The Media Mirror adopts a specific point of view—the Christian point of view. Through this program, we hope that your students will come to recognize their own values and gain the ability to compare and contrast those qualities with the values portrayed on their own home television screens.

This is not an anti-television course. Television is a technological tool that can be used for good, as well as the not-so-good. It can broaden the perspectives of your students by introducing sights and sounds, concepts and experiences they might not find in their home communities. It is the most influential entertainment medium in the United States.

In this course you will have the opportunity to work with television for positive goals. Specifically, the goals set by the first project coordinators are to:

1. Develop an understanding of the role and influence of television on the values of elementary, junior and senior high school, and CCD students;
2. Foster constructive and positive use of television and related media by utilizing media to help develop the awareness leading to better citizenship within the community at-large and the Catholic community specifically;
3. Cultivate a better understanding of Christian values as portrayed in popular culture;
4. Involve participants in making choices by making them aware of the options available in the selection of programming; develop "demanding" viewers who will utilize choices;
5. Educate viewers to upgrade the quality of programming available on television and in other media;
6. Develop a cohesive national media education program reflecting values that are essentially Catholic in nature.

Nine lessons are provided with study questions and suggested activities. (You should receive one book for each student in your participating class.) These are by no means all-inclusive. If other activities are more appropriate for your class, they may be substituted or used in addition to the suggestions. This is an invitation to be as creative as your time and interest allow.

The lessons are designed to add up to a full unit. You may, however, use the topics out of sequence if it fits your class schedule better; also, you may elect to use some of the outlines, but not all of them.

TO THE TEACHER

According to the A.C. Nielsen Company, 12-17-year-olds, as a group, watch the least amount of television. Girls 12-17 watch approximately 18 hours per week on the average, while boys watch 22 hours.

In a 1983 survey, Nielsen found that the top shows for teenagers are the following:

1. "TV Sensored Bloopers"
2. "Mo Town 25 Year's Special"
3. "Charlie Brown Special"
4. "Life's Embarrassing Moments"
5. "Love Boat"
6. "Battle of the Network Stars"
7. "A-team"
8. "Facts of Life"
9. "Family Ties"
10. "NBC Sunday Night Movie"

The A.C. Nielsen rating for the top 10 shows viewed for the general public for the first week in January, 1984 were as follows:

1. "Hotel" ............... ABC
2. "Dynasty" ............... ABC
3. "A-team" ............... NBC
4. Sunday Movie "The Enforcer" ....... ABC
5. "60 Minutes" .......... CBS
6. Saturday NFL Playoff post-game show .... CBS
7. Friday Movie "Dixie: Changing Habits" .... CBS
8. "Dukes of Hazzard" ....... CBS
9. "The Fall Guy" ............ ABC
10. "Hart to Hart" ............ ABC

It is not necessary for you to become an expert on TV or even the above shows. But it is recommended that you view the programs popular with your students at least once in order to lead the discussions effectively and to stimulate students to think about TV and to analyze, not to condemn TV or even particular programs.

In the pilot program, teachers found it helpful to ask students to maintain a detailed log or notebook about the programs they watch during the week. It is not possible to assign viewing for each unit because young people have many commitments which preclude their watching programs on a particular night. In addition, some parents may be unwilling to give up viewing their favorite shows! But students generally have excellent TV memories and they can often rely on them in the discussions. Occasionally you may want to ask students to watch programs to note specific pieces of information, such as the way minorities are treated. Make your analyses of TV as concrete as possible as students in grades seven and eight still have trouble distinguishing between fact and fiction on the screen, and they are unable to philosophize about TV.

It is important to keep in mind that it is NOT necessary to do all of the activities. Select those which are best for your class and feel free to adapt them.

Notify the students' parents that the class is studying TV in order to obtain their cooperation. If possible, mail notices home to the parents instead of relying on the students to bring them home. We also suggest that you announce the critical viewing skills curriculum to the PTA and the local newspaper. Encourage students to discuss TV with their parents. Students watch TV alone or with their peers more often than with their parents.

SUGGESTIONS FOR PARISH CATECHETICAL PROGRAMS

The National Catechetical Directory, Sharing the Light of Faith, states: "Catechesis should seek to foster critical understanding of this medium (TV)." (p 262)

The elementary book could be used as a one week "summer school" experience. You could have the freedom of using the materials in a short block of time, along with a field trip to a local TV station, the viewing of parts of the kids' favorite shows, commercials and other experiences. This summer approach could give you more quality contact time with your students and fill a need to add meaningful activities to a rather long vacation. It also might be an opportunity for the junior and senior high students to volunteer as aides and helpers in this program.

The junior and senior high materials could be used in some kind of weekend retreat setting. The materials could be adapted, and then prayer, recreational and other experiences would have to be added.

The junior high and senior high materials could be used in a variety of weekend retreat settings. The materials could be adapted, and then prayer, recreational and other experiences would have to be added.

The junior high and senior high materials could be integrated into the regular curriculum. To assist you in doing this the appendix bibliography in this guide give some suggested lessons in common catechetical textbooks. These textbook references have been provided for all three levels.

This was done to help you use The Media Mirror content as enrichment material and further input on a given topic. For junior and senior high a wide range of options are available. The total program could be used for discussion groups. You could view together part of a program, or pre-recorded commercials and shows. Then you could look at the meaning and the message of a show in light of the material in a given chapter. The discussion questions and activities could provide the group leader with enough material to keep the effort going.

The participants could be asked to find biblical stories and values that either complement the material they view or present a different value. For example, they could be asked to compare and contrast one of Luke's gospel stories on wealth and riches and the message of one of the commercials.

Please note: Video material is copyrighted. If you video record any material, check with your local station to see what their regulations are concerning the educational use of the material and the permissions needed to use it in class.

A Contemporary Challenge to the Church's Educational Ministry

Excerpts from Sharing the Light of Faith

22. Communication.

The impact of the communications revolution, especially television, is very powerful in the United States. The influx of information is overwhelming. A person living in the United States today is said to be exposed to more information in a week than his or her counterpart of two centuries ago was in a year.

Many find that they are given more information than they can assimilate or evaluate. People need to acquire "literacy" in relation to the new media — that is, they need to grow in their ability to evaluate television and other contemporary media by critical standards which include gospel values.

261. Training media teachers

All who use the communications media in their work, "have a duty in conscience to make themselves competent in the art of social communication," and this applies in particular to people with educational responsibilities, including catechists. Theory, technique, and research are part of media training. In line with what has been said above, catechists should learn how to take media into account as a crucial part of the cultural background and experience of those being catechized; how to use media in catechesis; and how to help their students understand and evaluate media in the light of religious values.

262. Training media users

Catechetical instruction concerning media should help people become knowledgeable viewers, listeners, and readers. Such training is necessary for them "to benefit from the full from what the instruments of social communications have to offer." It is also required if they are to seek to improve the quality of media, either by advocacy directed at professional communicators, or by pursuing careers in media.

Because television occupies so much of the time of so many people in the United States, catechesis should seek to foster critical understanding of this medium in particular. Viewers need to know, for example, how programs are planned and produced; techniques used by advertisers and others to influence and persuade; whether and to what degree TV gives a true picture of life or distorts reality; and the role of profit motives in determining policy in commercial television.

Because people grow in maturity and because there are frequent changes in the media, continuing education is necessary to keep abreast of the changes.

An Experimental Model of Religious Education Based on Thomas Groome’s Model

There are many ways to do effective religious education. Each teacher will have her own style and skills. What is being offered here is a possible approach to help students experience the message at their own level and pace. This approach is an effort to help students become reflective. Thomas Groome in his book Christian Religious Education (Harper & Row, 1980) gives us a method of five steps to help us tie together our action with our reflection on gospel values. The five steps are:

1. Life experiences — what are we doing?
2. The reasons for our actions — why do we do that?
3. The Christian story and our lived experience of community.
4. Let’s talk about our life experiences and the Christian experience. Let’s look at similarities and differences.
5. What are we going to do now? What actions are needed to better live the Christian message?

Let us consider how we can relate our TV study to these five steps.

1. What are we doing? What is our experience? The purpose of these questions is to bring awareness of the group’s present action in regard to a particular focus of the Christian life.

Questions for the Media Mirror experience might be: What shows do you watch? How do you deal with the shows, violence, or experience of these shows? Tell me about a time you were really angry about a show and its direction — or really happy. When do you watch TV? Who shares the experience with you?

2. The reasons for our actions — why do we do that? We look critically at the issues; we try to get at the issues, assumptions, and consequences of our actions.

The questions might be: Why do you watch TV? Why do you believe, disagree, accept, challenge what you see on TV? Why do you spend the amount of time you do with TV? Why do you need to buy what you see on the commercials?

3. What have Christians done, and why has the community lived this way? This is the place where we look at content, scripture, tradition, belief and practice of the community. We talk about the Christian message and vision of our lives.

The questions might be: What did Jesus say about violence, conflict, forgiveness, love, peace, mercy, materialism? Can you find these stories in the Bible? What values do Christians hold and why?

4. Let’s talk about your life experiences and the Christian experience. Let’s look at the similarities and differences. We put the Christian story and values in dialogue with our personal experiences and values.

Questions might be: What do you hear from scripture, tradition, and Christian practice that affirms you, challenges you, calls you to change and growth, to conversion? Does your story add anything to the Christian story? Does the Christian story add to your understanding of life? Where do you and the Christian story and values agree and disagree?

5. What are we going to do now? What action needs to be done? The purpose of this step is to see if any present action is living up to the gospel message. We are called to make decisions for future action that will be more in line with the Christian life.

The questions should lead to action. What needs to be done in our life that will make us more Christian? For example, we study the conflict section and decide violence is a problem. We look at Jesus’ message and then determine actions that will make our school less violent. We decide to start a big brother, big sister effort to help the younger students find enjoyable fun activities on the playground. We help them organize safe games. When the commercials are too materialistic. An action would be to gather food, clothing, and toys for poor kids. The action steps will vary greatly according to the age level, but some concrete, positive action can be an effort to get our life more in contact with the Christian vision of life.

There is an old saying that religion is caught, not taught. It is caught in a believing community where kids are attracted to the values, attitudes, practices, and beliefs of others. They decide to become part of this community and to learn the gospel message and its application to their lives. This program is an effort to help you facilitate this process.
IN-SERVICE GUIDE

Advance Planning for Media Mirror Teacher Training

Registration

Advance registration is advised to provide for smooth operation of the session. You should know the number of teachers attending as well as the grade levels in order to ensure meeting their needs.

Design a registration form which best meets local needs. A suggested format for such a form is attached.

Designate responsible party (host/hostess at the site selected) to greet participants; have participants sign-in; make name tags; hand out materials.

Room arrangements

Please arrange tables/chairs in some comfortable arrangement. Provisions should be made to be able to break into smaller groups for presentation of grade level units.

Suggested arrangement:

(Screen)*

(Video Set)

(Overhead Projector)*

Podium

Equipment

*Screen and Overhead Projector plus transparencies which you have made to use in your presentation.

There are two programs which have been produced by USCC for use with The Media Mirror. One is an overview of the program entitled "The Media Mirror" and the other portrays student/teacher use of one lesson, "Heroes, Models, Groups." Each program is approximately 15 minutes in length. The charge for each is $35.00 which is the cost to duplicate the tape.

Plan the lead time necessary to have the tapes in time for the teacher in-service session.

To order tapes from USCC

Cost: $35.00 each (duplication cost)

Title: "The Media Mirror" (an overview of the program)
"Heroes, Models, Groups" (Lesson 6 in use)
Each tape available in 3-4 or 1/2 Beta or 1/2 VHF. (Please specify when ordering)

Order: Write to Ray Spellman
USCC Department of Communication
1011 First Avenue, Suite 1300
New York, N.Y. 10022
(212) 644-1895

Describe exactly what you wish to order. Give name, position, address and phone # of person placing order. Give exact mailing/shipping address where tapes will be sent. Plan enough lead time to assure arrival by date needed for use.

Time required for the session

Plan to meet with presenters in order to go over the lessons which they will present. Be thoroughly prepared at least one day prior to the actual in-service.

The in-service itself should be a maximum of two hours. Set the time of day which is best for your district. (Plan a time convenient for both school and religious education professionals.)

Coffee Breaks

Coffee/tea and some refreshments should be arranged. If necessary, charge a slight fee in the registration to cover these costs. Make arrangements with the host site to provide the refreshments.

ACTIVITY

Welcome and introduction of presenter(s). (If dealing with Primary, Intermediate, and Junior High/High School, two helpers are needed.)

Overview of the session so that you will know what we plan to do:

2. Experience one unit (UNIT 6) for use with 4th, 7th, and 10th grades.
3. Working knowledge of the resources which are a part of the Program.

1. DESCRIPTION OF THE MEDIA MIRROR
   (a) You may decide to use the video cassette available through USCC—DEPARTMENT OF COMMUNICATION which is an overview of the program. (See Advance Planning Sheet for ordering.)
   OR
   (b) Explain the Goals of the program (refer to the teacher's guide). Use of a transparency listing the goals would be helpful.

   Explain the format of the Program.
   —Briefly describe that the program consists of three nine-lesson study units, aimed for use at grades four, seven and ten.
   —Materials include questions for discussion, group activities, and parent involvement suggestions.
   —There are suggestions as to how to facilitate the adaptation of the material for parish catechetical programs.
   —There are teacher's guides and other resource materials.

"Before we examine all the materials in depth, we will go right into doing an actual lesson, with you (teachers) taking the role of students, and 1 and my helpers presenting the lesson."

2. EXPERIENCE ONE UNIT—HEROES, MODELS, GROUPS—UNIT 6
   (a) Break into groups teaching 4th, 7th (Junior High) and 10th grade. Each group will experience the appropriate grade level lesson.
   (b) Each presenter should be thoroughly familiar with the grade level lesson he/she is presenting to the group for which he/she is responsible. (PLEASE meet with the helpers in advance to designate areas of responsibility and to go over the lessons to be presented.)

BEGIN MINUTES ACTIVITY

PRESENT LESSON 6—HEROES, MODELS, GROUPS
—Direct participants to lesson 6. (You may wish to make and use transparency here.)
—Read, do discussion questions, and select an activity.

The purpose here is to familiarize the teachers with a lesson so that when they present the program to their students, they will be comfortable with the experience as well as with the materials.

10:05 10 COFFEE BREAK

3. WORKING KNOWLEDGE OF THE RESOURCES WHICH ARE A PART OF THE MEDIA MIRROR PROGRAM.
(a) 'Walk through' the workbook and teacher's guide.
   — Each participant should receive the Media Mirror Packet for his/her grade level.
   — Show how to locate lessons.
   — Show how workbook is arranged.
(b) Locate Resource materials.
(c) Discuss parent involvement techniques.

10:30

DISCUSSION OF WAYS TO INCORPORATE THE PROGRAM INTO PRESENT CURRICULUM
(a) Ask: "In which subject/s could you most readily use some or all of these units?"
(b) Suggestions: Religion classes; Social Science units; Language Arts classes, special enrichment units or 'mini-sessions.'
   Encourage group suggestions and interaction.

10:45

QUESTIONS and CLOSING
"Are there any further questions?" OR "If you have more questions, I will be available after this session and you may reach me at my office _________________."

END SESSION WITH A BRIEF PRAYER

Select an appropriate prayer or reading.

Suggestions:

In closing, a reading from Phil. 1:9-10
"My prayer is that your love for each other may increase more and more and never stop improving your knowledge and deepening your perception so that you can always recognize what is best."

(OR)

Ecclesiastes 3:1-8

... Send forth with a final prayer...

WITH A VISION OF A NEW DAY IN OUR HEARTS WE TURN TO OUR GOD. WE TRUST YOUR PROVIDENCE AND WE ASK YOUR SPECIAL BLESSING ON EACH OF US HERE. MAY WE CONTINUE TO ENCOURAGE OUR STUDENTS TO RECOGNIZE YOUR WAY, TRUTH, AND LIGHT IN THEIR DAILY LIVES.
REGISTRATION FORM SHOULD INCLUDE:

Some information on the workshop; what is the purpose of the session;
what is The Media Mirror

Some eye-catching art work, some quick reading, clear spacing.

LETTER TO PARENTS ABOUT MEDIA MIRROR

Dear Parents,

We are planning to begin using special materials with our child on media awareness. This material will look at various issues related to television viewing. We hope to open up areas of discussion, evaluate the qualities and values of a program, and challenge the students to reflect critically on what they watch.

Many are concerned about the overall time students spend watching television and the quality of the material. We want to begin to address this. We hope to give students tools that will help them choose quality over quantity. We hope also to help you as a parent to become aware of the issues and how to use television as a source for discussion and sharing values.

On __________ at ________ p.m., we will conduct an orientation program for you on the Media Mirror project. We will review the topics, suggest ways that you can help at home, and listen to your concerns about your child's viewing habits.

Thank you for your interest and cooperation in this matter. We hope to see you on __________ at ________ p.m.

Sincerely,

WHAT PARENTS CAN DO

1. Develop planned TV viewing with specific programs. Teach your children that TV viewing involves watching selected programs, not just watching TV.
2. Set a time limit for the amount of television you and your family will watch each day. Use the TV listings and special reviews to select the programs that you will watch.
3. Seek out programs which are made for children and which will involve them in stimulating, challenging, enriching and educational experiences.
4. Watch TV with your family and talk about the programs you see. Use sensitive subject matter to open up discussions with your children and to help them explore their natural questions. Express both your thoughts and your feelings about what is happening during programs.
5. Help your children distinguish between what is real and what is make-believe on television. Explain how television uses stunt people, special effects and animation to create fantasy. Explain how the evil portrayed on TV is happening to actors and how the effects are worse when it happens to real people in real life.
6. Expose the exaggeration and deception in TV advertising. Spend time with your children analyzing the message and method of commercials. Help them understand the power of their persuasion in the life of your family. Talk about the secular values they promote and contrast them with ideal Christian values.
7. Be your own TV by reading to your children and telling them your own true stories. Help your children develop reading and storytelling skills. Help them develop a deep appreciation for a variety of communications arts.
8. Don't let your children use TV as an excuse for non-involvement in other activities. Encourage your children to make lists of alternative activities — playing with friends, reading, working on a hobby, learning a new skill — and to make conscious choices from these lists before watching TV.

1. WHAT IS TELEVISION?
A Channel to Life(?)

Objectives

1. To become conscious of one's own TV experience and to recognize personal viewing habits and choices.
2. To identify major changes that have occurred during the short history of the television medium and their social effects.
3. To begin to understand the scope and significance of television as a contemporary communications system.
4. To become aware of the need for and value of experiencing television on a communal level, especially within the family context.
5. To begin to appreciate the potential of television technology for building human relationships and the kingdom of God.

Scriptural References

The following is a list of scriptural references that may be helpful in dealing with the media units.

John 8:12-20 (Jesus is the Light of the World.)
1 Cor. 3:16-23 (We are the temples of God.)
Eph. 1:3-6 (God chose us to be his in Christ.)

Background

Children spend more time watching TV than they spend in any other activity except sleeping.
By the time the average child enters kindergarten he has already spent more hours learning about his world from television than the hours he would spend in a college classroom earning a B.A. degree.

By graduation the average teenager will have watched at least 15,000 hours of TV, seen 350,000 commercials and vicariously participated in 18,000 violent deaths.

By the age of 65 the average viewer sees 3000 entire days, 9 full years, 18 waking years worth of television.

The annual American consumption of TV programs is in excess of 300 billion hours.

THE

sleeps 2500 hours a year

watches TV 1600 hours a year

AVERAGE

works 1400 hours a year or goes to school 1000 hours a year

AMERICAN

eats 700 hours a year

reads newspapers, magazines, books 400 hours a year

spends 50 hours a year in church

listens to homilies 8 hours a year

A thousand leaders of American life, asked to name the most powerful institutions in America, listed these top three: the White House, the Supreme Court, television.

According to a recent study, television leads all other traditional influences on our lives. Religion ranked 23 out of 24.

Cable: A New Chapter in the Television Communications Revolution

There are 5,000 operating cable systems in the U.S., serving some 14,200 communities. Another 2,500 franchises are approved but not built. Pennsylvania has the most systems (349) and California the most subscribers (2.4 million). Operating systems currently reach about 30.2 million subscribers, perhaps over 84 million people—37% of the nation's TV households. The largest (Cox Cable in San Diego) has about 210,590 subscribers. Some have fewer than 100. Tele-Communications Inc. is the largest multiple system operator (MSO), with more than 2,100,000 subscribers. Industry revenues last year totaled approximately $2.5 billion. Most systems offer 12 channels. Systems constructed after March 1972 must have a minimum 20-channel capacity. The average monthly fee (including pay cable) is $17.17. Costs of laying cable range from $10,000 per mile in rural areas to $20,000 in urban areas and up to $100,000 where underground cable is required. An estimated 3,250 systems originate programming in their own studios, the average for 23 hours weekly. Equipment costs are as low as $30,000 for a small black and white operation and $200,000 for a color studio. Over 2,050 systems (47% of all systems) accept advertising on their local origination channels, with rates from $5 to $400 per 30-second spot. Most cable systems derive less than 5% of their gross revenues from advertising. Pay cable is on approximately 3,700 systems and reaches 15.5 million subscribers in 50 states. Most pay cable operators are reporting close to 44% penetration of their subscriber count. Home Box Office Inc. initiated the first national satellite interconnected pay network Sept. 30, 1975, using transponder time leased on the Satcom satellite. Aside from contracting for packaged pay programs, like HBO, cable operators can lease a channel to a pay program operator or secure their own programming directly from a supplier. Over 30% of all cable systems have ties with broadcast networks, almost 21% with program producers and approximately 16% with newspapers. Many systems have multiple cross-ownership ties.

Using TV Technology in this Course

This course has been designed for use in a wide variety of educational settings and is not dependent on sophisticated equipment for its success. The only electronic technology required is the students' own home TV sets. But if you have classroom access to other equipment, here are some things you can do:

TV SET: Use a classroom TV set to sample programming and commercials during class time as a means of introducing a lesson or idea, of stimulating discussion, of providing concrete examples, of reviewing class material.

VCR: If you have access to a videocassette recorder, you can do all of the above but with time-shift and editing capabilities. You can record pre-selected programs for later class viewing and analysis. You could record a series of short excerpts from the students' favorite shows and use the tape to compare and contrast the content and characters of the programs. You could edit together a tape of the most common or popular commercials for use in Lesson Three. The possibilities are endless, so you need to decide how best to use this tool to support the learning process in a situation of limited time.

CAMERA: In addition to the above, if you also have a camera you could use it to record some of the student activities, for example, a bible skit, a public service announcement, a news show, interviews. A tape of such events recorded throughout the course would provide an interesting documentary for review by the students and their parents at the conclusion of the program. This hands-on experience can also help students develop the comfort and skills needed in the television production process. Although not directly a goal of this course, the active and proficient use of television tools in public communications is becoming increasingly a requirement of our media responsibility. Again, time is a practical consideration.

OTHER: Common classroom A-V equipment will also be useful in this course. An AUDIOCASSETTE REC-ORDER could be used as a substitute for the camera to produce an audio-only documentary. A 16mm FILM PROJECTOR is necessary to show the films recommended elsewhere in this Guide. It could also be used to show reels of commercials sometimes available free-of-charge from local TV stations. A SOUND FILMSTRIP PROJECTOR is needed for some of the recommended resources. An OVERHEAD PROJECTOR could be used in class presentations or for projecting TV art and graphics found in local publications.

"The medium is the message.” What is important is not what is said on television but television itself. This has reshaped man and influenced him in depth. The message, the content, has only a secondary rule.

PIERRE BABBIN

In only two decades of massive national existence, television has transformed the political life of the nation, has changed the daily habits of our people, has molded the style of the generation, made overnight global phenomena out of local happenings, redirected the flow of information and values from traditional channels to centralized networks reaching into every home. In other words, it has profoundly affected what we call the process of socialization, the process by which members of our species become human.

2. VARIETIES OF REALITY

Is It the Real Thing?

Objectives

Elementary

1. To become aware of the degrees of objective and subjective reality, fact and fiction in television programming.
2. To become aware that every show has many different kinds of messages, how we are influenced by them and how they influence our values and behaviors.
3. To discover some of the key elements of a good story and some of the techniques employed to create reality.
4. To appreciate how Jesus used stories to convey important messages about life and the love of his Father for every human person.

Junior High

1. To be able to explain through the use of specific examples the various kinds of reality on TV. For example, factual, fictional, docu-dramas, educational, and other kinds of programming.
2. To be able to see the difference between objective and subjective reality and explain it.
3. To become aware that every show has many different kinds of messages, how we are influenced by them, how they can influence our values and behaviors.
4. To discover some of the key elements of a good story and some of the techniques employed to create reality.

Senior High

1. To become aware of the degrees of objective and subjective reality, fact and fiction in TV programming.
2. To define the meaning of stereotype, to identify examples of stereotypes in current shows and to discuss the transfer of stereotypes to our relationships with others.
3. To gain critical viewing skills and prepare a list of questions that will help us rate TV shows.
4. To become aware of the various messages present on TV programming and the influence these messages have on our lives, and to compare and contrast these influences with our Christian values.

Background

TV Creates Impressions That Become Our Reality

Television creates stereotypes about many things but especially about the people who are the subjects of its stories. There are stereotypes about women and minority groups, the poor and the wealthy, religious groups and old people, etc. Some examples of the distorted picture of women which TV presents:

- Although about half the people in this country are male and half female, the majority (66-75%) of TV roles go to men.
- Women on TV are portrayed mostly in romantic, marriage and family roles and to lesser degree than is true in professional or career roles (especially those that are important).
- Women are given comic roles more than men, are portrayed as "nicer" people, but as passive and unable to accomplish tasks.

Television shapes our reality in other ways too. TV tells us what is important and what we should be concerned about. This means that if it’s on TV we tend to think it is real and that we should believe it.

Television teaches us some other powerful but distorted messages, for example:
- The more and better products we buy the happier we will be.
- Things are more important than people.
- It takes power over others to survive in this world.

3. COMMERCIALS

This Show Is Brought to You by . . .

Objectives

1. To identify ways television commercials influence buying habits and lifestyles.
2. To become aware of how television programs are used to attract audiences to commercial messages.
3. To learn common techniques of TV advertising and how to test the reality and truth of its explicit and implicit messages.
4. To develop the ability to distinguish between personal wants and needs and to develop the value of living with material simplicity.
5. To appreciate the value of and to exercise personal freedom and free will.

Background

The TV Advertising Circle

The television networks exist primarily to make money. To make money they sell advertising time to sponsors. For one minute of advertising time on a prime time national show, a sponsor must pay between $100,000 and $200,000. This does not include the cost of making the commercial itself. In 1983 the cost of buying 30 seconds to advertise during the Super Bowl was $400,000 — up from $345,000 the year before.

The company that spent the most to buy television advertising time last year was Proctor and Gamble: $569 million.

There are nearly 600 network TV commercials every day. The average person sees about 70 of them. More than half of the commercials children see have to do with food products.

In the price you pay for the things you buy is included an amount the manufacturer uses for advertising, such as paying the TV network to buy advertising time. Last year it cost every family $718 for its share of the $61 billion national advertising bill.

Since the networks exist to make money, it is important to them that everyone watch the commercials. So they use clever programs to draw an audience and keep people's attention for the commercial break.

It is not only the overall audience appeal that is important to the advertiser, but the way the program sets up the audience for the commercial break. As you watch TV shows, be attentive to the placement of commercials, the development of the script immediately before and after the break, and the use of special sound and visual effects to capture and sustain the attention of the audience through the series of commercial messages.

Watch also for examples of the deliberate correlation between program subject matter and the products being advertised. This is especially common in some children's programming where the content of the show itself is a thinly disguised extension of the sponsor's pitch. Remember that advertising rates, which produce the bread and butter of the TV industry, are set scientifically show-by-show according to the number of viewers the networks can deliver into the advertiser's grasp.

There is another possible area of discussion dealing with the relationship between explicit and implicit levels of influence in advertising, between manipulation and freedom of the individual. These issues are not so apparent to students and pose concepts difficult for them to understand. For example, TV commercials not only try to sway us from brand A to brand X, but the cumulative effect of their combined messages is to tell us that the generic product is essential to our life and happiness, that we aren’t really worthwhile unless we have one or the other brand. Either way, we become greater consumers and the lifestyle of materialism triumphs. Depending on the group and the amount of time available, the teacher may want to pursue these ideas with the following questions:

1. Are there things which you or your family buy because you saw them on TV but which you think you could do without? What are they?
2. If someone gave you $10,000, what products(s) advertised on TV would you want to buy? Would that be a good use of the money? Are there better ways to use it? Would you share it with people in need?
3. Jesus said he came to bring us the truth and that the truth would set us free. Can you think of ways that TV commercials mislead us, trap us and enslave us?

Television’s first mission is not to inform. It is not even to entertain. It is to move goods, to round up viewers for the main event—the commercial.

RON POWERS

Imagery, Language and Technique

“...advertising as it exists today could accurately be described as a craft that uses language and images to create the illusion of superiority.”

JEFFREY SCHRANK

To understand the persuasive power and effects on TV commercials it is necessary to probe their imagery, language and technique. Think of a commercial as a multidimensional structure with interlocking parts. Try to get inside it, to see it from the point of view of the architect. What is the purpose, the overall concept? Take the structure apart, piece by piece. Look at each piece separately, then in relationship to other pieces, then in the context of the whole. Select a commercial that is broadcast frequently and probe beneath its surface, considering the following:

1. VISUAL IMAGES. Turn down the volume—until the sound is off and look at the picture. What are the dominant images? What are the recessive images? How do they interact? What symbols are used? How are position, posture, expression, locomotion used? How are the images captured: What is the camera angle, the framing, the distance and size of the objects? How are the images put together: What is the sequence, the pacing, the method of transition from one scene or image to the next? What image do you remember the most easily after watching the commercial? What are its obvious and subtle messages?
2. COLOR: Again leaving the sound off, adjust the set so the picture is black and white. If possible, watch the commercial again in color. What is the relationship of color to the appeal of the product? What colors were used? Were they hot or cool? How did the lighting (daylight, dawn, dusk, night) affect the quality of the colors chosen (shade, intensity)? What emotional responses were created by the colors?
3. LANGUAGE. Listen, do not watch the picture. Concentrate on the spoken word. What figures of speech are used (simile, metaphor, hyperbole)? What are the denotation and connotation of the words? Are equivocal “weasel words” used, words which deprive a statement of meaning and avoid a firm commitment to truth (e.g., as much as, up to, the feel of, the look of, many or most)? What kind of voice is used? What is the tonal quality? What kind of inflection and pacing are used? Is the impression one of authority, humor, earnestness, sexiness? What is the main appeal of the argument used to sell the product: logical, psychological, emotional?
4. MUSIC. Again, do not watch the picture. Turn up the volume until the sound is dominant. Close your eyes, let your ears absorb the sound. What role does the music play: Is it primary (theme song) or supportive (background music)? What is the mood or emotion of the music? How does it affect the overall impact of the commercial? What other sounds do you hear: environmental sounds, special sound effects? What do they contribute to the commercial?

TV is chewing gum for the eyes.

4. ANATOMY OF A PROGRAM

It’s a Credit to Everyone

Objectives

Elementary

1. To begin to understand what it takes to create and produce a television program (people, ideas, resources, talent, skills, time, etc.).
2. To appreciate the value and results of cooperation and teamwork.
3. To become aware of the unity that is necessary for a production team to be successful.

Junior High

1. To identify what it takes to create and produce a television program (people, ideas, resources, talent, skills, time).
2. To recognize that the talent of the individuals involved is coordinated by the producer.
3. To appreciate the value and necessity of cooperation and teamwork.
4. To understand that unity is necessary in order for a production team to be successful and to realize the Christian dimension of teamwork.

Senior High

1. To understand what it takes to create and produce a television program (people, ideas, resources, talent, skills, time, etc.).
2. To begin to identify shows for their artistic and technical merit.
3. To appreciate the value and results of cooperation and teamwork.
4. To recognize TV programming as a business.
5. To understand the Christian dimension of teamwork and its relationship to a production team.

Background

Many Are Called But Few Are Chosen

PBS, NBC, ABC, CBS are the major networks in this country.

Every year they compete with each other to produce shows that large numbers of people will like and will want to watch.

The networks start with what people need and desire. They analyze their audience very scientifically.

From many ideas the network selects one that holds the most promise of success, and invites an independent production company to develop a description of a show and the show's characters.

If the network executives like the initial work, they will pay the executive producer to have a script written (about $20,000 for a 22 minute program). If they like the script, they will order a pilot show to be made, at a cost of $150,000 for 22 minutes. The executive producer then hires a program producer, the director, writers, actors and all the technicians necessary.

If they like and approve the pilot show, the network people then will order 13 episodes to begin to air the series.

Each network spends tens of millions of dollars every year for new program development. They will consider thousands of ideas, write hundreds of scripts and make numerous pilot shows. But out of 10 ideas good enough to become scripts, only four will make it to the pilot stage and just one will be seen on network television.

5. CONFLICT

Settling Our Differences

Objectives

Elementary

1. To recognize what conflict is and to define it.
2. To describe the role of conflict in a TV story and give examples of the various kinds of conflict.
3. To identify action, inner, and sports game-related conflicts.
4. To recognize the problems created for young viewers by excessive violence in television programming.
5. To begin to understand that religious values can help us in handling conflict.

Junior High

1. To recognize what conflict is and define it.
2. To describe the role of conflict in a TV story.
3. To identify how action and inner conflict keep a story going, and to be able to use specific examples of each of these conflicts.
4. To become more sensitive to the use of excessive violence in TV programming, and to become critical of its use in developing a story.

Senior High

1. To be able to give examples from specific TV shows of various kinds of conflict, i.e., inner, action, violence, sports.
2. To become aware of the problems created for some viewers by the excessive violence in TV programming.
3. To identify and describe various human emotions and feelings that both cause and result from inner conflict. Some examples are: fear, anger, greed, happiness, forgiveness, love, feelings of being successful, joy.
4. To discuss the value of sports and the areas of potential conflict in sports. Conflict may result from the need to win versus playing fair, or being a "winner" or "loser" because your team wins or loses. A discussion of the recreational values of sports, sportsmanship and teamwork may enter into this lesson.

Background

When Conflict Becomes Violent...

Violence is a negative and destructive way of working out human conflict. Unfortunately, many TV shows deliberately use violence to attract the attention of viewers. Even programming intended for children contains a great deal of violence, more than we might suspect. Take, for example, the 10 most popular Saturday morning children's programs, and note the number of violent acts per hour that each one typically contains:

1. "Thundarr the Barbarian"  ABC-64
2. "Daffy Duck"  NBS-52
3. "Bugs Bunny/Roadrunner"  CBS-51
4. "Superfriends"  ABC-38
5. "Richie Rich/Scooby Doo"  ABC-30
6. "Plasticman and Baby Blas"  ABC-28
7. "Heathcliff and Dingbat"  ABC-28
8. "Fonz"  ABC-28
9. "Tom and Jerry"  CBS-27
10. "Popeye"  CBS-26

The experts say that by the time children reach 14 they will have seen the violent destruction of 13,000 human beings on TV.

As Our World Spins

Since the early days of television one of the most successful forms of programming has been the soap opera. Eleven-and-a-half million people, men and women from every walk of life, watch the "soaps" every day. Many fans even arrange their daily schedules around their favorite shows. What makes them so popular? The answer can be seen in the never-ending series of problems which the characters confront and attempt to work through. This is the drama of everyday life, the ups and downs of living with one's self and with other people. In this interior landscape of our lives we experience other kinds of conflicts that don't have action necessarily, but which are nevertheless very real and important. The following are some of the interior conflicts that you will find portrayed in television programs and in your life:

- the struggle to know who I am and to be myself
- the need to be accepted by others despite the feeling I'm being excluded by them
- the challenge to tell the truth but also to respect the rights of someone who has confided in me
- the decision to take a big risk such as moving to a new city in order to find a better job

6. HEROES AND MODELS

Follow the Stars

Objectives

Elementary

1. To comprehend that different age groups have different heroes.
2. To appreciate the presence of Christian spiritual heroes and the role of saints in our lives.
3. To recognize that the heroes and models given on TV influence our lives.
4. To recognize that the heroes on TV are different from the Christian models of the saints.

Junior High

1. To appreciate the presence of Christian spiritual heroes and the role of saints in our lives.
2. To be able to identify current television heroes and to understand the attraction of each one.
3. To realize that heroes are important and that people model and pattern their behavior on them.
4. To identify stereotypes.
5. To identify criteria for heroes.

Senior High

1. To appreciate the presence of Christian spiritual heroes and the role of saints in our lives.
2. To identify current television heroes and to understand the attraction of each one.
3. To identify the role of the anti-hero.
4. To identify which heroes people are really trying to model and whether or not they are good models to have.

Background

Who's Your Hero

HERO: a mythological or legendary figure, often of divine descent, endowed with great strength or ability; an illustrious warrior; a person admired for his/her achievements and qualities; the principal character in a literary or dramatic work.

Heroes and heroines have played an important role in people's lives since the beginning of time. We have a natural tendency to look outside of ourselves and up to someone else. We find ourselves limited and incomplete and we search for others who are bigger than us, who motivate our lives and help us to grow to be better people. Heroes and heroines have a positive influence. Many times they come into conflict with anti-heroes. These are the villains and they have a negative influence. Because people like heroes so much, television creates them regularly and uses them to attract its audience of viewers. Consider the heroes of the following current top-rated TV series:

1. "Dynasty"
2. "Three's Company"
3. "Hart to Hart"
4. "M*A*S*H"
5. "Fall Guy"
6. "Dukes of Hazzard"
7. "Different Strokes"
8. "A-Team"
9. "Magnum P.I."
10. "Hill Street Blues"

Objectives

Getting Along with Others

7. RELATIONSHIPS

Elementary

1. To discover some of the main qualities and problems of family relationships as seen on the most popular family sitcoms.
2. To gain an understanding that problems in real life cannot be solved as quickly and cleanly as those seen on television shows.
3. To appreciate the beauty and goodness of all of God's creation, the unique importance of each individual, and God's plan of harmony for all living things as seen in the story of creation in the Book of Genesis.
4. To begin to identify the types of relationships seen on TV.
5. To identify some of the qualities necessary for a good relationship.

Junior High

1. To identify the types of relationships shown on television.
2. To identify qualities necessary for the development of good relationships.
3. To begin to realize that even the act of watching TV affects relationships.
4. To begin to understand how relationships are influenced by the models and images viewed on TV.
5. To identify how stereotypes influence role models and relationships.

Senior High

1. To identify the types of relationships viewed on TV.
2. To identify the qualities necessary for good relationships.
3. To recognize how to improve one's own relationships.
4. To identify how even the act of watching TV can inhibit developing relationships.
5. To relate the theory of inter-personal relationships to the effect that TV has on individuals, families and society.
6. To understand that the medium of TV cannot model a true image of relationships as they exist in real life.

Scriptural References

Background

Everybody Needs Somebody Sometimes

We are made for relationships with others. That's what it means to be human. Relationships are both common and unique. For example, children have a relationship to their parents, but each one is different and unique. Relationships are also both delicate and complex. Like tiny seedlings, they are half hidden from our view and difficult to understand completely. Each of us works at establishing and nurturing relationships as a life-long task.

Television can help us in this process because it puts us into contact with other people, everywhere on the face of the earth. Through TV we:

- learn about and get to know other people
- become more comfortable relating to people who are different from us
- observe the relationships of other people and how they get along together and work out their problems

However, to have a truly personal relationship there needs to be interaction, give and take. TV is only one-way communication, so it doesn't fill this need of ours. We have to get out to meet others and relate face-to-face.
8. PROBLEMS AND SOLUTIONS
To Be Continued ... Maybe

Objectives

Elementary
1. To understand the operation of the television story and the necessity to resolve developed conflict.
2. To recognize the need for rather simple solutions to the problem within a given period of time and how we sometimes carry this expectation into our life situations (fast food, getting well fast, etc.).
3. To appreciate the complexity of conflict with which Jesus and his disciples lived and how they handled it with faith, hope and love (i.e., story of coin, God's and Caesar's; story of the cure on the Sabbath; Peter's problem — why admit to the crowd that he belongs to Jesus?

Junior High
1. To study the “quick and easy solution” technique of TV problem solving.
2. To give specific examples of the “quick and easy solution” technique in the students' favorite shows.
3. To discuss the tendency to transfer this technique to other life situations such as relationships with family, friends and school.
4. To recognize the need TV has for rather simple solutions within a given time frame and to look beyond this to see the complexities of a given problem.
5. To appreciate the complexity of conflict with which Jesus and his disciples lived and how they handled it with faith, hope, and love.

Senior High
1. To become aware of problem solving techniques and to discuss their application to TV programs and also to student life situations.
2. To understand the operation of the TV story and to see the necessity to resolve developed conflicts.
3. To recognize the complexity of problems; to be critical of quick, violent, simplistic, or cheap tricks that can be used to solve a problem.
4. To discuss other options to solve problems, such as the power of negotiations, relational skills, compromise.
5. To reflect on gospel values that might help us solve problems and to look up the appropriate scripture passages.

Background

Elementary, My Dear Watson
Television has developed certain styles and patterns of telling stories. Docu-dramas, sitcoms and action-adventure are some of these formulas. They all work within tight time limits to present a problem, to develop the action and characters, and finally to resolve the problem and conclude the story. In a half-hour television program the script writer has exactly 22 minutes to accomplish all this.

No matter what the story is about or how complex the subject might be in reality, the writer is forced to wrap it up in 22 minutes. TV audiences like to have problems solved when the show ends. In order to meet this expectation in the limited time given, the writer must simplify the story, the plot, the characters, the action and the solution to the problem.

The real problem is that the solution often comes off as totally unrealistic. Unless we are careful and thoughtful, we viewers might accept the superficial TV solutions and apply them to similar situations in our own lives. In some other countries of the world, there is less danger of this both because the people don't expect such easy answers to problems and because TV programs don't have to begin and end on the hour or half-hour.

9. WHAT DO YOU WATCH?
Taming the TV Tube

Objectives
1. To become aware of one's own power over the television medium and the importance of one's individual viewing choices.
2. To develop skills in judging the quality of the programs to watch.
3. To acquire a taste for more challenging and informative kinds of programs.
4. To learn the value of one's time and to learn to exercise stewardship in its use.
5. To determine other specific alternatives to television viewing.

Some Tips for Choosing Good TV Programs

1. Is the program important to me, is it one that will help me grow, that I will remember long after having seen it?
2. Will this program teach me something new about the world and about other people? Is it different from others I have seen already?
3. Does the program present a realistic and truthful view of life?
4. Does it treat men and women fairly and equally? Does it respect people of other races, other cultures, other physical/mental conditions, other countries?
5. Does the program attempt to resolve conflicts and solve problems in peaceful ways, without using violence?
6. Is this program an experience I can share and discuss with others?
7. Does the program stimulate me to do worthwhile activities, such as playing with others, making things, studying about a new subject, learning to do something challenging?
8. Is the program an enjoyable experience, one that refreshes me and makes me a happier person?

Looking into TV's Crystal Ball:
Five Views of the 1980's

Television today is the primary source of both information and entertainment for the American public, the primary source of news and what is going on in the world. I think television has been able to bring about better understanding among the peoples of the world; better communication leads to better understanding. And the magic of television through its diverse informational and entertainment programs brings more knowledge to more people than ever before in history.

GENE JANKOWSKI
President
CBS Broadcast Group

The 1980s will be a decade of transition for television. The television set, which for the most part has been a passive device in the American home, will emerge as an interactive one, with the consumer having more to say about what is on his TV screen and when.

Satellites, cable TV, pay TV, video games, home computers, VCRs, videodiscs, will alter the viewing habits of millions of Americans. Through these developments the amount of programming available in the home is increasing and will continue to do so through the next decade.

HERBERT SCHLOSSER
Executive Vice-President
RCA Videodisc Project

The refinements in technology, such as home video devices, cable television, and pay television — combined with the influence of the fuel crunch, inflation, and a population with an increasing number of older Americans — will mean an increase in television viewing in the 1980s.

As this happens, television will become increasingly important as a home entertainment and information center, and the viewer's appetite for programming and expanded services will grow. Though audiences will continue to rely on commercial television's news, sports, and broad-appeal entertainment programming, they will want to augment these services with software that meets their narrow, specific interests as well.

FRED PIECE
President
ABC Television

Media is absorbing more of the individual's leisure time, and it will not be used strictly as entertainment but also as self-improvement.

I think it will provide individuals with a greater capacity for learning in a more comfortable experience, a more economic experience, and therefore it will increase development at a much more rapid pace, which will affect their working ability and their potential.

JAMES FIEDLER
Executive Vice-President
MCA DiscoVision

The commercial television share of household television viewing will remain high. The impact of any one of the alternative program sources will not decrease our audience but will increase the numbers of hours each household spends watching all televised services.

This is a time when our world has never been more complicated or difficult to understand . . . and we intend to search for ways to make television more responsive to the public's need for information and more helpful in sorting out the complications of their lives.

FRED SILVERMAN
President

TIPS FOR THE ELEMENTARY TEACHER

1. What Is Television?

Most elementary students seem just to accept TV in their lives. They have not yet learned how to make responsible decisions about which programs to watch and the amount of time to spend watching TV. This first lesson, then, is intended to have the students take a serious look at the impact of TV (both positive and negative), and to consider what they watch. The graphics are intended to focus on the content of the lesson.

The story about St. Mary's School is intended as the groundwork for a discussion with parents about TV. The chart "From Out of TV's Past" could be a springboard for a discussion on the impact of TV on society.

A major element of this unit is the log book for students to keep (Activity #4). Many teachers have noted that when students record the actual amount of TV they watch, they were amazed at the quantity.

As in all of the lessons, the questions and activities are intended as a starting point for you and your class. Your own creativity can lead to many other areas of discussion and activities.

You may decide to have the students keep their TV logs for comparison at the end of The Media Mirror unit. They could be used for:
1. Comparing the shows they watched earlier to what they are watching now;
2. Discussion with parents;
3. A basis for selecting quality programming to watch;
4. Comparing with the shows they choose to watch at the end of the course;
5. Comparing the amount of time spent at the end of the course to the amount spent at the beginning.

2. Varieties of Reality

Elementary students tend to believe that what they see is real, even though they will tell you in a discussion that a lot of TV is fake. They have difficulty distinguishing between the theory (TV is not real) and their perceptions (TV is real).

By its nature, the programming on TV presents strong visual images. So it is very difficult for elementary students to perceive these images and also determine whether or not such images are truth or a distortion of truth.

This lesson is intended to have students begin to analyze TV programming. On one level they may be able to carry on a class discussion about fantasy, fiction and fact. But it is important that, through the identification of characters and comparisons to real life situations, they develop this ability more precisely. They need to analyze reality as viewed through the media. Discerning viewers need to be able to identify the various elements of programs and to distinguish fact, fiction and fantasy as a show takes place.

Question #5 is crucial to this lesson. Other questions are intended to provide some content to help students make accurate decisions about reality.

3. Commercials

"How do you spell relief?" Try this as your opening for your lesson commercials. Don't be surprised if the class spells "R-o-l-a-i-d-s." Many classes do.

This unit will be one that the class gets very excited about. It seems that even memories of the commercials get an enthusiastic response.

The teaching task of this lesson is to help students understand that they are free to decide their own wants. Advertising is meant to influence these needs and wants. As Christians, we value free will. Elementary students are just reaching a point where they can begin to appreciate the influence of TV advertising in their lives.

Since the value of money is not always understood by students, it may help to compare the amount spent on advertising with more concrete examples, i.e., how many houses it would buy in their neighborhood, or with the amount collected each week in their neighborhood.

Kidvid Exploitation

Some children's shows are little more than thinly disguised commercials. The commercial forces behind children's programming are so strong that even one of the best shows this season, "The Charlie Brown and Snoopy Show," is first and foremost a marketing gimmick for advertisers.

4. Anatomy of a Program

Most elementary students readily recognize the stars of certain programs, but have not considered the necessity of the other people involved in the production. The text of this lesson is meant to begin this awareness. This lesson is divided into three sections of information: the text, the description of the play, and the Word Find. The discussion and activities that take place within your class will develop the importance of this information. You will note that the three activities listed develop each of these areas. Any encyclopedia gives a good description of the various jobs relating to TV production.

In selected regions of the country the CBS Reading Enrichment program provides scripts for special programs occasionally during the year. Your students may have participated in this program, or there may be a current program being made available. These scripts provide instructions for the camera and staging. This material could be referred to and/or incorporated into this lesson.

Since most classes have performed plays, moving to a TV production is a simple step. Students can freely create and produce the program by elaborating on the roles given. This is meant to suggest a framework, or to indicate the type of play that fourth-graders might create. It is not meant as a full production. This selection could also be used as a reference for discussion, if you prefer.

The following is from a trade publication urging advertisers to use the "Charlie Brown" characters in selling their products:

Backed by more than $20 million in consumer advertising, the show is the most highly charged merchandising impact ever made with a character property! Every Saturday morning, millions and millions of fans (read children) will enjoy the comic strip antics of the Peanuts cast. It's yet another part of Peanut's unparalleled worldwide media mix - a presold audience base that adds up to billions of advertising impressions annually!

In response to this phenomenon, Peggy Charren, President of Action for Children's Television, says: "Someone has to let broadcasters know that they can't get away with turning children's television into The Big Sell." She points to eight programs that are based on toys and other products:

ABC: "Monchhichi"
"Pac-Man"
"Rubik, the Amazing Cube"
NBC: "The Shirt Tales"
"The Smurfs"
CBS: "The Biskitts"
"Dungeons and Dragons"
"Saturday Supercade"

Continues Carren: "The problem of program-length commercials exists only on children's television. Soap opera plots do not revolve around the virtues of Tide vs. All. Commercial broadcasters and advertisers are working together to deprive children of their rights to TV entertainment and education."

5. Conflict

This is an extension unit. In the original pilot project this lesson was treated as two separate lessons, "Conflict in Action" and "Interior Conflict." The abstract perspectives of interior conflict were difficult for elementary students to comprehend. These elements are now combined into one lesson, since it is more graphic to compare them at one time.

As your class discusses the conflict in each of the scenarios, you may wish to stress that the action is one type of conflict, but the inner conflict is also real and needs to be identified.

The questions and activities are meant to help students reflect upon the daily situations real to them; they can then transfer this ability to recognize conflict in action and in inner feeling to programs watched.

6. Heroes and Models

Most elementary students have heroes who are given to them by the media. These heroes range from sports figures to TV personalities. Occasionally students name a hero as some person whom they know in their daily life. This lesson is meant to help students identify whom they look to as a hero and why. Hopefully, they can begin to develop criteria for having a hero. This lesson can help them begin to selectively consider the qualities of a real hero. How do TV heroes compare to real life people? How could a TV hero compare to Jesus?

A 22 minute situation comedy, or even a 44 minute program of quick action such as "Magnum, P.I.," cannot show the qualities that make real life heroes. As the class discusses their heroes, the heroism of their parents and of the church's saints, have them consider the elements of daily life that make real people heroes. For example, what did St. Francis do in his life? Discuss why he is pictured in the lesson. Could a movie show the reality of his daily life that truly makes him a model?

Since the quick action and violence seen on TV has such a powerful effect on children, it may be important to extend the discussion in your class to noting some of the heroes known in your local area. Are there any volunteer parents, handicapped individuals, kind and generous people who witness the gospel message? They can be identified by the students as heroes because of the way they live their daily lives. Sometimes these heroes are shown on local TV. If you make a class bulletin board as listed for activity #3, it would be good to include these people.

7. Relationships

These pages are intended to begin an initial understanding of TV and its effects on relationships. Both interpersonal relationships and intra-personal relationships are influenced by TV. As students begin to identify essential qualities of good relationships, they should be able to critique the relationships viewed on TV in a more realistic manner. The models and stereotypes presented on TV are considered real by some children. The upper levels of The Media Mirror project deal with this concept in a more advanced manner. However, elementary students need to begin recognizing elements of relationships and the manner in which TV presents these relationships. The 22 or 44 minutes of a program cannot adequately represent real life, but it can help us see the complexity of relationships. The final activity (#6) is intended to show the levels and depths of relationships. It may be most useful to do this activity as a class or in teams.

8. Problems and Solutions

The dilemma of portraying real life in 22 minutes or 44 minutes, as evidenced in the previous lesson on relationships, is heightened in the area of problems and solutions. While the first page of this lesson discusses the concept of solving problems in different ways, it is very important in this lesson that the questions be considered with the class. Happy endings, open-ended shows, "to be continued" shows, and quick or easy solutions are key elements for this lesson.

Elementary students would often like real problems to be solved as quickly as on TV. The second activity is designed to have them think about real solutions to problems and also to gain an insight into the time element involved.

9. What Do You Watch?

The real success of this total Media Mirror project hinges on how it influences students to make responsible choices in regard to TV. This ability does not happen instantly (remember, there are not quick solutions to problems in real life) and does not come with one unit on TV. However, the reflections, discussions and activities that students have participated in during the last eight lessons have created momentum to help them make some responsible choices.

The insert asking for alternative activities to watching TV is crucial to this lesson. This could perhaps be a game with teams coming up with 25 or 30 or more creative suggestions. Now that the class reflected on TV, it is important to continue understanding its impact upon the life of each student. They now have a chance to identify how they can allow TV a valid place within their lives. Helping students select shows that they think are most interesting and the best use of their time is a practical way to end this unit (activity #2). Many teachers also keep an ongoing bulletin board listing information about worthwhile programs.
CATECHETICAL TEXT CORRELATIONS:
ELEMENTARY

The following is a list of chapters from common catechetical texts that may tie in with one of the media visions. It can assist the teacher in integrating a given unit into an existing religion class. Many different approaches can be taken. Many other texts obviously could be used. In some cases, scripture stories can be the best resource.

Luke 5: 17-26 (some examples of problem stories)

9. WHAT DO YOU WATCH?

(lessons on stewardship, use of time, talent, and treasure)

Ecclesiastes 3:1-8

Understanding television requires that we understand ourselves. Controlling TV demands that we search out our values and needs. Our hand on the dial, our finger on the on-off switch, our signature on letters will mean nothing unless we are certain of our own attitudes and beliefs. Once we have determined them and made them our possessions, we can make television into an asset which will bolster our point of view, educate our children, and enrich our lives.

GETTING THE MOST OUT OF TV. Series of seven 16 mm films/12 min each/ABC Wide World of Learning 1981/Sale $305 film $135 (video from ABC Wide World of Learning, Inc./Rental $55 (first three films on one reel) $75 (last four films on one reel) from Mass Media Ministries. Titles: Among the Technical Side of TV, "People Make Programs," The Magic of TV, "Characters We See On TV," "Action and Violence," "The Real World of TV," "Commercials." This expertly researched, classroom-tested critical TV viewing skills program will help children from eight to ten years old understand the technology and impact of TV, and learn to distinguish between the reality and fantasy that co-exist on the screen. Children will enjoy the lively pace and upbeat mood provided by two talented young TV hosts for the series.

HELPING CHILDREN DEAL WITH TELEVISION. 16 mm film/28 min/Media Five 1981/Sale $450/Rental $50. Teachers and parents will find in this new film helpful information on the effects of television upon children's lives, especially in regard to scholastic growth. Critical viewing strategies are presented, along with a television reduction program for excessive TV watchers. Neil Postman, John Cullin and Patty Rooney-Rebeck provide commentary, along with several children who talk about the role TV plays in their lives.

HOW TO WATCH TV. Four 35 mm filmstrips/18 min each/cassette/Xerox Education Publications/Sale $75. Titles: "News and Documentaries," "Drama and Comedy," "Advertising," "Learning from Television." Because general TV programming makes up most of our viewing time, this filmstrip series is an ideal educational resource. Various types of television programming are analyzed for their teaching values. Students are told what to look for as they watch these programs. They are provided with techniques that will help make them active viewers and are shown the kinds of things each type can teach. Recommended for grades 5-9.

KIDS FOR SALE. 16mm film/20 min/Action for Children's Television 1980/Sale $300/Rental $30 (from Mass Media Ministries). What's happening on children's television? This powerful film looks closely at the discrepancies between what children's television is and what it could be. A representative sampling of the good and the bad is featured. Gooney cartoons, "harmless" violence, and exploitive commercials are contrasted with fine examples of good programming drawn from both commercial and public networks. The film is especially effective in showing parents how to help their children be discriminating in their TV viewing. Highly recommended for parents, professionals and PTAs.

THE MAKING OF A LIVE TV SHOW. 16mm film/26 min/Pyramid Films 1977/Sale $425 (film and video) Rental $50. A fascinating, behind-the-scenes view of the annual Emmy Awards Show. Months of planning and rehearsal are condensed into this short documentary, culminating in a revealing triple screen that shows rehearsal, live broadcast and the director calling the shots in the control booth. Junior/senior high.

MEDIA KIT-EXPLORING THE VALUES OF MASSES CULTURE. Two 35mm filmstrips/18 min each/cassette/25 copies of booklet. The Values of Media Culture/Leading Seed Co./$9. This stimulating kit helps participants realize how mass media have changed us and our society. It encourages an exploration of media culture, the values of mass media, and our own relationship with media. The filmstrip "Mass Media and Human Behavior" introduces Mediaperson and creatively explains acculturation, how specific behaviors like eating habits, family life, language, violence and emotions, and living patterns are influenced by the media. A discussion of traditional values versus media values is especially well presented. The second filmstrip, "The Day Television Died," is a fanciful story that provokes reflection on the effects of TV in our daily life. Highly recommended for senior high and adult groups.

PROMISSES. 16mm film/12 min/Ramsagate Films/Sale $315/Rental $30. Through a series of entertaining satires on television commercials, this humorous film explores the prevalent influence of advertising on our lives. Narrator Stacy Keach explains how certain advertising techniques are designed to appeal to the emotions while disguising the truth. Advertising, according to this audiovisual, shapes our society by selling us a system of values along with the product. Recommended for junior high through adult groups.

SEEING THROUGH COMMERCIALS. 16mm film/15 min/ Vision Films/Sale $220/Rental $20. This timely film helps young people cope with TV advertising in an entertaining way. Viewers are led through a point-by-point analysis of techniques used to make things look bigger, better, and more fun. The final sequence gives children the chance to critique a commercial themselves. Highly recommended for elementary and junior high and for the entire family in parishes and schools.

SHAPING THE NEWS FOR THE CONSUMERS. 16mm film 17 min BFA Films 1975/Sale $235/Rental $19. In our civilization, news is a commodity packaged to catch the eye of the consumer. This film shows that while more people believe in the truth of TV news than in any other form of news, its function is rather limited. Any source of news can be well used if the audience knows what to expect from it.

THE SIX BILLION DOLLAR GUIDE TO TV COMMERCIALS. 16mm film/15 min/Consumer Reports Films 1978/Sale $220/Rental $25. This film successfully examines basic techniques used by TV advertisers to get us to buy their products. It uses clips of TV commercials, original pop theme song, animation, comic sketches, and young people talking about their actual experiences to show children how not to be taken in by TV commercials. Recommended for grades 3-8.

60-SECOND SPOT: THE MAKING OF A TELEVISION COMMERCIAL. 16mm film 25 min Pyramid Films 1974/Sale $445/film and video/Rental $50. This well-made documentary traces the epic struggles that lie behind big budget TV commercials, in this case, a $250,000 7-Up take-off on old desert war movies. We sit in on actual casting sessions, observe a key planning session at the ad agency, watch rehearsals, overhear budget discussion, and experience on location problems in the Arizona desert. And finally, we see the commercial on television.

SOOPERGOOP. 16mm film 13 min/Churchill Films 1975/Sale $280/film and video/Rental-Inquire. This fast, animated story portrays two irreverent characters who concoct a TV commercial for a swee-e-t cereal. It reveals selling techniques and commercialism behind the fun. Highly entertaining and informative for primary and intermediate level students.

A TALE OF A TV MOUSE. 16mm film/14 min/Film Communicators/Sale $225/Rental $40. Lucille, a puppet mouse, is the star of this charming new film that presents to children and parents alike the problems of habitual TV viewing. Because Lucille's entire life revolves around the TV set, she refuses to play with her friends, forgets to do school work, is reluctant to participate in family outings and try new activities. By the film's end, however, her family helps her become a selective viewer and find alternatives to watching TV. Ideal resource for children as well as parent groups.

TEAK (Television Education Activity Kit). Multimedia kit/Project Focus/Sale $45. This integrated, positive approach to the television viewing experience of today's child will stimulate discovery of TV's role and place in the lives of young people and help give responsible direction to a medium which for the most part has not yet been developed. Two filmstrips, "Meet Terri Television" and "Terri Television Presents Commercials," each include sound on cassette, explain how TV works and how a commercial is put together. The Terri Television Coloring Book offers a unique and instructional approach to use with young people. Also included in this kit is a set of ten posters with conceptual drawings portraying practical ways of using TV for the viewer's benefit. Ideal for bulletin boards, parent meetings, and as instructional classroom visual aids. Recommended for primary and intermediate levels.

TELEVISION: THE ENCHANTED MIRROR. 16mm film/28 min/Mac: Media Ministries 1981/Sale $400/Rental $35. This interesting film is a documentary about TV in America's life. It features interviews with TV directors, writers, a network executive, a brain behavior of issues related to the TV medium: psychological impact, moral values, children and family life, social isolation, images of reality, ratings and advertising, new technologies and the future. For senior high and adult audiences.

TELEVISION AND VALUES FOR THE 1980's. Two 35 mm filmstrips/15 min each/cassette/24 project cards/Learning Seed Co. 1981/Sale $58. An in-depth study of the effects of television on our personal values and moral fiber. Some of the important areas discussed include television as a stakeholder of times, models and heroes, health and addiction, hidden ads, life in a TV environment, family life, exploitation, passivity and violence, the future of a plugged-in society.

TELEVISIONLAND. 16mm film/12 min/Pyramid Films 1971/Sale $275/film and video/Rental $35. This witty film is a look at television in the '50s and '60s, condensed and collated by Charles Baverman. In a fast-paced affectionate twelve minutes, viewers gain a perspective on the life and times of those two decades. An ideal resource to introduce a study of television and its impact on individuals and our society. Junior and senior high ages will experience TV as it began; adults will relive their early TV days with delight and amusement.

THE TELEVISION NEWSMAN. 16mm film/28 min/Pyramid Films 1978/Sale $445/film and video/Rental $50. An entertaining, face-paced look at a day in the life of a major city TV newsmen—Bill Redeker, when he was an eyewitness reporter for KABC in Los Angeles. All facets of the job are explored as well as the reporters personal views on his profession and on television news coverage in general. Informative audiovisual for junior high-adult groups.

TELEVISION VIOLENCE. 35 mm/filmstrip/13 min/cassette/ Learning Seed Co./Sale $24. A creative resource that encourages viewers to sit back and talk to themselves, "What is violence on television doing to me?" Unlike most audio-visuals which usually deal with the amount of violence on television programs, this filmstrip kit explores the messages of TV violence and its social effects. This provocative in-depth study includes worksheet masters and an extensive teaching guide. Senior high-adults.

THE THIRTY-SECOND DREAM. 16mm film/15 min/Mac: Media Ministries/Sale $220/Rental $25. A montage of contemporary TV commercials is used in this provocative film to demonstrate the seductive power of TV advertisers in four areas: intimacy, vitality, family life, and success. The film... shows how advertisers play on our hopes and fears to sell products. Recommended for junior high through adult viewers in classroom or community groups, PTA, faculty meetings, etc.

TUNED IN. Series of ten 16mm films/15 min each/WNET-Thirteen 1981/Sale and Rental Inquire. This series, originally broadcast on public television, is available for classroom and church use. It involves the continuing story of ninth graders in a language arts class who experience producing a television program and learn about the media first-hand. This series is designed to help middle school students become critical television viewers. An extensive study guide accompanies the series.
