Course Titles and Descriptions

OFFICE PROCEDURES (Year): Office procedures is often referred to as the "capstone course" of an office occupations program because it ties together the knowledge and skills acquired in other business courses. It also introduces the student to new, related subject matter, adding to his or her competence as a future office employee.

Office procedures should establish a link between school and business, and should, therefore, include all information, procedures and equipment typically used in an office. This includes training in word and data processing, mailable letters, letter writing, calculating machines, mail and shipping services, filing and records management, reprographics, financial records, telephone techniques and transcription. The course also includes job application and career information, emphasizing the development of productive attitudes and work habits.

Instruction may be provided through traditional classroom techniques, individualized instruction (open lab), model office, office simulation or a combination of these approaches. The course should be used as the related classroom instruction for office occupations students participating in cooperative work experiences. For those students, classwork is correlated with actual experience in a business office. Usually students spend half the school day in classes and the other half in an office. Classwork concentrates on office occupations skills and procedures, although additional work may be assigned to students in specific areas where job performance shows a need for it.

TYPOGRAPHY II (Year): In advanced typewriting, students develop employment skills. Production work is the major emphasis of the course, and includes typing manuscripts, stencil and spirit masters, programs, minutes of meetings, statistical tables and business forms. Students learn to dictate at the typewriter and correct errors. They perfect their typing skills through assignments that are typical of actual office work.

OFFICE MACHINES (Year): Schools can teach machine skills several ways. One is to offer a separate office machines course. Another approach is to teach these skills in other courses such as office procedures, business math and advanced typing. A third alternative is to offer office machine instruction in a skills laboratory with individualized teaching.

As a separate course, Office Machines teaches students to solve business problems by using various business machines such as the electronic calculator, reprographic equipment, dictation/transcription equipment and word/data processing equipment.

BUSINESS COMMUNICATIONS (Semester): Business Communications emphasizes grammar and writing for business letters. Students should also study the various types of oral communications, including listening, speaking, dictation and telephone techniques, as well as the process and theory of communications, nonverbal communication, reading for comprehension, proofreading and editing.

BOOKKEEPING/ACCOUNTING I (Year): Bookkeeping/Accounting I gives students experience maintaining financial records, along with interpreting and analyzing them. Practice sets with business papers may be used to emphasize record management. Instruction in the application of electronic data processing may also be integrated throughout the course. The fundamentals and terminology of accounting are emphasized.

This course usually includes the basic methods of computing, classifying, recording and maintaining numerical data involved in financial and product control records, including the paying and receiving of money. Career objectives related to bookkeeping and accounting are identified and discussed.

SHORTHAND I (Year): Shorthand I covers the theory of shorthand, emphasizing reading and writing skills, dictation and transcription. During the second semester, students increase their note-taking speed and learn to transcribe mailable letters on the typewriter. The course integrates shorthand, typing and language skills.

SHORTHAND II (Year): Shorthand II is designed for secretarial students who want further shorthand skills. Speed building and typewritten transcription of mailable letters usually are the two most important units following a review of shorthand theory. Emphasis is placed on the production of letters according to office standards. Students may also practice taking dictation using letters of increasing difficulty and length.

COOPERATIVE WORK EXPERIENCE: The term "cooperative" refers to the working relationship between office occupations, participating businesses and local schools. Office occupations instructors and employers work together to develop on-the-job learning experiences which will reinforce classroom instruction. Students are awarded credit for these experiences. Employers help coordinate on-the-job activities and supervise trainees. Students, teachers and employers plan and evaluate the program on a regular basis.

The office occupations instructor and employer outline individual student's responsibilities and training experiences on the job in a written document called a training agreement. Job experiences are coordinated with classroom instruction and opportunities are identified for the student to apply curriculum on the job. The agreement is usually signed by the employer, student, teacher, and parents or guardian; it requires school approval. A written learning program known as a training plan details the task to be learned by individual students, and may suggest learning activities for each task. Plans serve as a structure for learning experiences and can also help in evaluating student progress. Plans can be maintained by students to help them develop a sense of responsibility for their own progress.
