Revisions made in the 1981 Women's Educational Equity Act when it was extended in 1984 are outlined in this report. An introduction provides background on the 1981 and 1984 acts and briefly recounts the Reagan administration's opposition to the law. Various aspects of the 1984 law are outlined in separate sections. A description of authority and funding is followed by a section-by-section analysis of changes in the bill: purpose; grant and contract authority; local assistance programs; challenge grants; national advisory Council on Women's Education programs; and reports, evaluation, and dissemination. A final section describes what citizens can do to insure continuation of the law. (LP)
THE NEW WOMEN'S EDUCATIONAL EQUITY ACT:

The New Women's Educational Equity Act:* Still Alive and Making a Difference

The Women's Educational Equity Act of 1984, Title IV of the Education Amendments of 1984 (P.L. 98-511), became law in October of 1984. The passage of this law, which revises and extends the Women's Educational Equity Act (WEEA), marked the high point of four years of bitter controversy over the continued existence of the WEEA Program. Since 1981, the Program's budget has been decreased by over 40 percent, the Program Office has been downgraded to the lowest bureaucratic level in the Department of Education, its staff has been reduced in both size and status, the position of "Director" has been abolished, and the former Director has been fired. Indeed, in every fiscal year since 1981, the President has asked Congress to withhold funding for the WEEA Program; but Congress has continued to appropriate funds in each year.¹

Placed in this context, the continuation of WEEA for another five years represents a significant victory in the effort to save the only federal education program specifically designed to promote true educational equity for women and girls of all racial and ethnic groups, including disabled women and girls. Further, the revisions to the Act make important improvements in its purpose and programs. The following analysis briefly describes these changes in the new Women's Educational Equity Act.

The New WEEA

Authorization and Funding

Although the program's authorization level will increase, there is no guarantee that Congress will increase funding. For example, although Congress could have appropriated $10 million in 1985, they chose to appropriate only $6 million—the program's funding level since 1982.

Section by Section Analysis

Section 931(a)—Purpose. The original purpose of WEEA was to "provide educational equity for women and girls who suffer multiple discrimination, bias or stereotyping based on sex and on race, ethnic origin, disability or age." Since 1980, the Program's implementing regulations have included priorities for funding projects that address the particular educational equity needs of women of color and disabled women. But this marks the first time that the law itself has included this purpose.

In addition, in the "Findings" section (Section 931(b)(1)), the Congress has added a new statement that addresses the current education reform movement; it states that: "The Congress finds and declares that excellence in education cannot be achieved without equity for women and girls." Although this statement does not impose new requirements, it is the strongest statement of federal policy regarding excellence and equity in education that has been made during the past four years.

Section 932(a)—Grant and Contract Authority. The new Act requires that at least one grant or contract be awarded for each of the six authorized activities listed in the Act. These include demonstration, developmental, and dissemination activities in six general categories:

- curricula, textbooks, and other educational materials;
- preservice and inservice training;
- research and development;
- guidance and counseling;
- programs for adult women;
- vocational education, career education, physical education, and educational administration.

This requirement was inserted to ensure that the Department of Education would support a variety of demonstration, developmental, and dissemination programs—with particular emphasis on continued dissemination of equity materials and programs.

"Tier 2"—Local Assistance Program. When WEEA was reauthorized, for the first time in 1978, the Congress added a new purpose and program—to provide specific grants to local educational agencies, other educational institutions, and private non-profit organizations that would assist in implementing Title IX at the local level. Under the law at that time, funds could be used to support these local projects only if the total appropriation for WEEA exceeded $15 million. Any funds appropriated under that amount could be used only to support model "programs of national, statewide, or general significance."

The new WEEA amends this funding provision and allows appropriated funds to be used to support local implementation projects—at the discretion of the Secretary of Education—if appropriations reach $6 million.

Section 934—Challenge Grants. The new WEEA revamps the small grants program established under previous law. The maximum grant amount is raised from $25,000 to $40,000.

and the purpose of the program is clarified; challenge grants may include funding for:

- Comprehensive plans for implementation of equity programs at every grade level;
- Innovative approaches to school-community partnerships for equity;
- New dissemination and replication strategies for equity materials; and,
- Other innovative approaches to achieving the purposes of the Act.

Section 936. The National Advisory Council on Women's Educational Programs. The new WEEA establishes criteria for the selection of the members of the National Advisory Council to ensure that all members have some demonstrated expertise in issues of women's educational equity and that the Council's membership is representative of minority, disabled and older women.

This is a significant change from previous law, which simply required that members of the Council be "individuals, broadly representative of the general public who, by virtue of their knowledge or experience, are versed in the role and status of women in American society." This general language proved insufficient to ensure that individuals with a commitment to educational equity and expertise in its implementation were appointed to the Council.

The new language reflects Congressional intent that the Council members should include "experts in a wide range of issues of educational equity for women at all levels of education," "individuals who are representative of and expert in the educational needs of racial and ethnic minority women, older women, and disabled women," and "both women and men who have demonstrated commitment to and expertise in the purposes" of the Act.

Section 937. Reports, Evaluation, and Dissemination. Under previous law, the WEEA Program Office was required to submit an Annual Report to Congress every second year (in 1980, 1982, and 1984). Under the new WEEA, the Department must produce an Annual Report every year. Further, the Department is required, for the first time, to evaluate and disseminate—at low cost—all materials and programs developed under the Act.

Again, this is a significant revision, reflecting Congress’ intention that the products of WEEA grants should be made available to educators and activists throughout the country who can replicate and use them in a variety of settings.

What You Can Do

Technical amendments to the WEEA regulations, designed simply to implement the specific changes in the new law, were published in the Federal Register on March 22, 1985 and take effect as final regulations 45 days later. Because these new rules simply restate the new provisions of the law, no public comments are required.

Although the Act has been reauthorized and extended, threats to its continuation remain, including:

Defunding: The President's 1986 budget request continues the Administration's earlier policy and requests "zero funding" for the WEEA Program. The legislation and the Budget Committee also assumed that there would be no funding for WEEA when they developed budget recommendations. However, compromises appear to be in the making and WEEA may be included among the programs that have their funding restored.

Deregulation: The Department of Education plans to rewrite the WEEA regulations during the coming year. The law requires that new regulations be promulgated to implement the "Tier 2" program of grants for local equity projects. At the same time, the Department probably will propose new funding priorities and evaluation criteria to replace those in the current regulations. This "deregulation" process includes the opportunity for public comment on the proposed regulations.

As an advocate for WEEA and educational equity for women and girls, you can be involved in this process and take the following actions to ensure that your views are heard by the Congress, the Administration, and your State and local educational policymakers.

- Ask your Congressional representatives—both your Senators and Congressperson—to support funding for WEEA.
- Submit comments on the proposed WEEA regulations when they are published in the Federal Register.
- Spread the word about the importance of the WEEA Program by publicizing the Program’s accomplishments in your local community, through letters and articles in the newspapers and appearances on radio and television stations.

PEER, the Project on Equal Education Rights of the NOW Legal Defense and Education Fund, is one of the leading national advocacy programs for educational equity for women and girls of all racial and ethnic groups, both disabled and non-disabled. PEER’S National Affiliate Network links activists and educators in a national community of concern for the advancement of women and girls.

Created in 1974, PEER has received support from various sources, including the Carnegie Corporation, the Ford Foundation, the Rockefeller Family Fund, and several corporations.
