A directory of collections of audio recordings of varieties of American English spoken in North America and including English-based creoles contains information about collections of any size, classified according to the primary state in the U.S. represented by the speakers in the sample and cross-referenced when more than one state is represented in the collection. Collections covering areas outside the United States are grouped separately, and include the Bahamas, Canada, Central America, Puerto Rico, and world-wide sources. The data, based on a survey, include information on each collection's location, institutional affiliation, content, characteristics of the sample, number of subjects recorded, number of hours recorded, dates and locations of taping, average length of the samples, contexts (free speech with or without interviewer, directed interview, data elicitation, reading, or other), predominant or outstanding features of the content, subject or technical characteristics, access to collections, and available research reports concerning the collection. The survey questionnaire is provided in the introductory section of the directory. (MSE)

PREFACE

American English Dialect Recordings: A Guide to Collections was compiled during the first phase of a project funded by the National Endowment for the Humanities (Grant #RC-20500-83) and the Center for Applied Linguistics. The generous support of both organizations is gratefully acknowledged.

The guide has benefitted from the help of many individuals. The project's Advisory Board consisted of Dora Johnson, Roger Shuy, G. Richard Tucker and Walt Wolfram, all of whom regularly provided counsel and encouragement. Gwendolyn Sadler assisted in preparing the mailing list for the survey and in processing the questionnaires that were returned. Jamie Draper skillfully typed and arranged the entries in the guide, dealing cheerfully with my requests to add "just one more". Many friends and colleagues contributed recommendations for sources to check and encouraged others to participate in the survey. To all of these people, I extend sincere thanks.

Finally, there is a group of over 170 people without whom there would be no guide. The survey participants, whose names appear in the pages that follow, provided the main ingredient in the success of the survey. Their cooperation and support in answering my requests for information is an encouraging documentation that data collectors can and will share their rich resources for the advancement of the field. I am grateful to them all and I hope that this guide will provide them with a useful return on their investment.

INTRODUCTION

History

Within the community of language, history and folklore scholars, a resource exists which has not been utilized well, if at all. This resource is the extensive set of recordings of speech which have been made by investigators who use spoken dialect data of some kind. Typically, the resource cannot be tapped to any significant degree by anyone other than the holder of the tapes and a few close associates.

This guide presents the results of a survey undertaken for the project "A Survey and Collection of American English Dialect Recordings" (September 1983 - May 1986). This project was designed to improve access to spoken language recordings that represent varieties of American English. The information contained in the guide was obtained through a comprehensive survey of extant taped language samples. A questionnaire was mailed to all scholars who might have or know about recordings; these scholars were identified in a number of ways, including use of mailing lists from relevant organizations, searches of literature for studies using language data, and requests for cooperation published in a wide variety of newsletters and journals. In all, over 1,000 questionnaires were sent out. 169 responses were received, reporting on over 200 collections which are listed individually in the following sections.

The questionnaire elicited information about the size, format, method of collection and sample of speakers of each collection of recordings. Most of the items were multiple choice checklists or short answer, but a section of each page was allocated for additional comments or explanations related to the responses. The full questionnaire is given in Table 1, at the end of this section.

Scope

The working definition of "American English" used for the survey included all varieties of English spoken in North America (the United States and Canada, for the most part), including English-based creoles (Gullah, in particular). There was, in addition, clear interest in documenting both varieties of English elsewhere as well as varieties of other languages spoken in North America. However, within the limits of the current project resources, it was not possible to expand the scope in either of those directions.

A "collection" was defined as any number of audiotapes of any number of speakers. In some cases, the population of speakers was homogeneous (all from the same community in a given locale, for example); in others, the speakers were extremely diverse (a group of samples from all over the country). The size of collections ranged from several tapes to several thousand. The collections were essentially defined by the contributors, and these characterizations are represented in the guide entries that follow.
Organization of the Guide

Entries in the guide from the United States are grouped by state. Each collection has been classified according to the primary state represented by the speakers in the sample. This categorization is used to locate the entry (within states, entries are listed alphabetically according to the contributor's name). When more than one state appears in a collection, the entry is cross-referenced at the end of the other states involved (giving both the state under which the entry appears and the collection holder's name so that the entry may be easily located). Collections from areas outside the United States (including Canada) are grouped together in one section since they are not as numerous as those from the United States.

In cases where a collection spans a large number of states, or in a few instances where world-wide coverage (including, but not limited to, North America) is indicated, these entries are grouped together under the headings of "United States--General" and "World-wide", respectively.

Although other arrangements of the entries might have been possible, it was decided that listing by state was the most neutral and accessible way of classifying the collections. Other bases for categorization, such as region, or social group, are not equally applicable to all collections. In addition, there are alternative formulations for subgroups within these categories that would require arbitrary decisions for particular entries. For example, the delineation of region may be more or less detailed (north/south vs. New English, north midland, and so on). Thus, the decision was made to group entries by state, for the collections from the United States.

In addition to the entries and cross-referencing which organize the guide, there is also an index which provides information related to other methods of categorization as well as listing contributors' names. As a result, the guide may be approached for the identification of collections by region, social group, particular collector, or institution.

Format of the Entries

The information provided in the questionnaires returned by respondents to the survey has been transformed into entries utilizing a standardized format, with one collection of recordings per entry. The format is shown in the chart in Table 2, at the end of this section. In that table, abbreviation conventions used in the entries are also presented.
