This annotated bibliography of commercially prepared training materials for management and leadership development programs offers 10 topical sections of references applicable to school principal training. Entries were selected by using the following criteria: (1) programs dealing too specifically with management in sales, manufacturing, finance, etc., are omitted, while only those designed for training private sector managers are included; (2) only "packaged programs," i.e., programs developed by commercial training or management consultants and made available to a broad market, are included; (3) only "stand-alone" programs, i.e., those that do not require a vendor-supplied trainer, are included; and (4) a maximum cost limit was arbitrarily set at $5,000. The 12 skills identified by the National Association of Secondary School Principals (NASSP) for assessing principal effectiveness served as a basis for categorizing the 49 entries under the following headings: judgment, organizational ability, decisiveness, leadership, sensitivity, stress tolerance, oral communication, written communication, personal motivation, and general. Information for each entry covers program title, vendor, price, topics, format, materials, methods, and references. An index of programs and an appendix of NASSP skills for assessment conclude the guide. (CJH)

INTRODUCTION

This publication was developed in response to requests from leaders of programs designed to increase the effectiveness of educational administrators to help them select package training materials.

There is, of course, an enormous volume of commercially prepared training materials available for various forms of management and leadership development programs. The present manual makes no claim to be an exhaustive list. On the contrary, the aim of this bibliography has been to reduce the size of the materials offered to manageable proportions while retaining the best and most appropriate offerings available. To achieve this aim, programs were selected for this guide by employing a number of criteria. Some of the most important are the following:

First, the selection excludes all those programs dealing too specifically with such specialized functions as management in sales, manufacturing, finance, etc. and is restricted to those that might apply more generally to leadership per se. Included are programs that, although originally designed for training of private sector managers, are likely to be useful to managers of educational organizations.

Second, the present list consists exclusively of “packaged programs.” The term “packaged program” refers to programs developed by commercial training or management consultants and made available for use by a broad market. These programs may be purchased or rented. They may be used solely “in-house” by the purchaser, using the purchaser’s staff as instructors with a trainer supplied by the vendor, or at the vendor’s location by his/her own staff.

Third, in line with the approach of including programs of greatest accessibility and ease of use, this guide is limited to “stand-alone” programs, i.e., those that can be used immediately by the user, or at most, after a short period of trainer training. Thus this guide omits all programs requiring a vendor-supplied trainer.

Finally, a maximum cost limit was arbitrarily set at $5,000 for the programs included in the list. Cost is, of course, something that must be viewed in the context of other factors, such as the number of participants to be trained and materials provided. Nevertheless, budgets for the training of educational leaders do have a limit, and, indeed, some of the programs included may still be considered too costly for certain users.
This bibliography is the result of screening all available resources. Although there are dozens of publications in the management and training field that contain references for training programs, the primary sources for information on packaged programs are several trainer resource guides. The most helpful of these resources were Management Media Directory (Neal-Schuman Publishers), The Trainer’s Resource (Human Resource Development Press), the Directory of Management Education Programs (American Management Associations), and TRAINING magazine’s Annual Marketplace Directory.
Some 500 packaged programs from 140 vendors were examined before arriving at a final list of 49 programs.

One final note: this bibliography may prove useful to developers of training programs without funds to purchase any commercial materials. By reviewing the program outlines included in this manual, developers may gain insights about points to be included in their own programs.

Are Business Management Programs
Relevant to School Leadership?

All of the training packages contained in this list were developed for training corporate leaders in the private sector. The objection might therefore be raised that these programs are only marginally applicable to principal training. They may, it might be said, produce effective managers, but not leaders. Further, there is a fundamental difference in the role and the objectives of the principal and the corporate executive.

Though few, if any, would deny the importance of effective management skills in an effective principal, most educators would probably like to place stress on the role of the principal as a person who holds a “vision” for his or her school, and the principal’s role in shaping the conditions that make possible the achievement of that vision.

Surveying the literature and sampling the views of specialists in education and business reveal there is actually a remarkable coincidence in recent views of the qualities necessary for an effective leader in both fields. To put it one way, to a very large degree, what we define as “leadership” is generic. The list of 12 skills identified by the National Association of Secondary School Principals (NASSP) as the basis for assessing the effectiveness of school principals could, with only minor modification, be applied directly by the nation’s leading corporate "head-hunters" seeking a top executive for a Fortune 500 company. ¹ Since this list of skills, or competencies, is widely used in the region, it has been used by this guide to categorize each of the entries.

This does not mean that the entries exactly match the NASSP category definitions. Many of the programs in the present guide provide training that overlaps categories, and the decision as to which category to place them in was based on determining their primary emphasis. In certain cases, the business programs addressed the topic as defined by NASSP very directly. In others cases, they are merely similar, but were deemed appropriate enough to include. The entries under the "Judgment" category, for instance, are largely related to making personnel decisions and do not speak to the topic of how to make decisions on other matters from the available range of alternatives. Additionally, there are no entries under the NASSP categories "Range of Interest" and "Problem Analysis." It is certainly debatable whether someone can be trained to have a range of interest, and, in any case, no entries were found to fit in this category. Several programs that touched on aspects of the "Problem Analysis" definition had a primary emphasis that determined they should be placed in a different category.

It should be emphasized that the present bibliography is intended to be descriptive, not evaluative. It was not possible to properly evaluate all of these programs, nor were evaluation reports available from developers. It is hoped that the references provided will aid the person consulting this reference in soliciting evaluative comments from past users of the programs listed. Although references from educators were specifically requested from vendors of materials that are included, there was relatively little experience reported from trainers in the field of education.

The interested reader should note that the Southeastern Educational Improvement Laboratory has developed a set of 23 competency-based training modules specifically for principals. Anyone desiring additional information about these materials should contact Naida Tushnet Bagenstos at the Southeastern Educational Improvement Laboratory.

¹ The 12 NASSP skills, described in greater detail in Appendix A, are: (1) problem analysis, (2) judgment, (3) organizational ability, (4) decisiveness, (5) leadership, (6) sensitivity, (7) stress tolerance, (8) oral communication, (9) written communication, (10) range of interest, (11) personal motivation, and (12) educational values.
How to Use This Manual

Entries in this manual have been grouped into sections according to the main topic dealt with by each program. The topics chosen for the classification have been taken from the list of personal abilities and competencies defined by the National Association of Secondary School Principals (NASSP) as "skills to be assessed" in the evaluation of the effectiveness of principals. Within each of the sections, the program descriptions are listed alphabetically.

The entries have also been given a standard format for ease of comparison. The information for each entry includes the following:

1. TITLE OF THE PROGRAM

2. VENDOR. The name, address, and telephone number of the company providing the program are listed, with the name of the individual at the company to contact for further information.

3. PRICE. Four sub-headings are listed under this heading for each program. Purchase price includes the total cost of delivering the program to a group of ten participants. Rental and Preview prices are noted where applicable. Training of an in-house instructor is noted in cases in which additional trainer training is required or optional.

4. TOPICS. The topics covered by each program are listed as described by the producer of the program.

5. FORMAT. The length of the program and the recommended size of the participant group.

6. MATERIALS. The principal media used to deliver the system, plus any auxiliary materials provided for the instructor and participants.

7. METHODS. The instructional strategies employed in the program, as well as information on whether or not the course can be customized to suit the needs of individual users.

8. REFERENCES. Names and addresses of companies which have used the program in recent years. To make this section as relevant as possible to school leadership training in the Southeast, a special request was directed to each vendor listed in this manual to provide references to (1) users of their programs in the southeastern states and/or (2) users in the field of education anywhere in the United States. Some vendors, it is to be noted, have a general policy of not publishing names of clients; however, they have agreed to furnish references upon request.
