A guide to the Logan Pearsall Smith Collection at Trinity University Elizabeth Coates Maddux Library in San Antonio, Texas provides a descriptive overview of the collected works of this renowned epigrammatist, critic, essayist, biographer, and authority on the English language. The guide includes a brief biography of Smith (1865-1946), detailed descriptions of his publications and papers at Trinity, two appendices (a list of his principal works, and Smith material in the United States), and an index. The 48 items in the publications section are arranged under the following headings: (1) Essays and Aphorisms; (2) Poems; (3) Autobiography; (4) Writings on the English Language; (5) Literary Studies; (6) Short Stories; (7) Biography; (8) Editor (works edited by Smith); and (9) Books about Logan Pearsall Smith and His Family. The papers, numbering 108 items and containing more than 2,000 pages, consist mainly of letters, manuscripts, miscellanea, and typescripts. Notable among these are letters from Sir Kenneth Clark, art critic; Sir Humphrey Milford, publisher, Oxford University Press; Hugh Trevor-Roper, historian and critic; and several unpublished manuscripts. (Twenty-one references are appended.) (MM)

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

I am deeply indebted to all those sources listed under the heading, "References." I wish that I had had access to the primary resources of some of them. Since that was not feasible, I made every effort to reword and paraphrase, to make the information as much a part of my style of writing as possible. If I have succeeded, I am thankful; if I have failed, I beg the pardon of those concerned. "Mea culpa, mea culpa, mea maxima culpa."

LOGAN PEARSALL SMITH

The Last Patrician of Letters

Other scholars, other critics, may stimulate or even provoke; Mr. Pearsall Smith inspires a mood of gentle regret, a mood almost of remorse. We see his virtue, and fester inwardly at the thought of our own vulgarity: we determine to do better next time: we reflect how calm, how scholarly, how nice is Mr. Logan Pearsall Smith: we reflect how salutary, amid the clang and sirens of our age is this still small voice.

—New Statesman & Nation
Sometimes my soul floats out beyond the constellations; then all the vast life of the universe is mine. Then again it evaporates, it shrinks, it dwindles; and of that flood which over-brimmed the bowl of the great Cosmos there is hardly enough left to fill a teaspoon!

-Logan Pearsall Smith
Logan Pearsall Smith (October 18, 1865 - March 2, 1946), one of the last of the gentlemen-authors, and a renowned epigrammatist, critic, essayist, biographer and authority on the English language, was born in Millville, New Jersey, to a family of prosperous and prominent Quakers. He was named in honor of his distinguished ancestor, James Logan, and his father, Robert Pearsall Smith. His cousin, Martha Carey Thomas, was president of Bryn Mawr College (1857 - 1935); his younger sister, Alys, the first wife of Bertrand Russell, played a notable role in furthering the Fabian Movement; and his older sister, Mary, first married to Benjamin Francis Conn Costelloe in 1885 - whom she deserted, together with their two little daughters, to study art with Bernard Berenson, the American art critic, and later married in 1900 after the death of Costelloe - became the celebrated hostess of I Tatti. His parents, Robert Pearsall Smith and Hannah Whitall Smith, were both evangelists of note. His father, a somewhat unstable individual given to outbursts of enthusiasm followed by sharp descents into the pit of unexplained depression, was influential and much respected in England and in Europe. His unusual success as an evangelist, however, led to scandalous rumors and calumny, and he retired, at an opportune time, from the work of conducting revivals and applied himself to running the family's glass-manufacturing business. His mother, a tigress in a Quaker bonnet and famous throughout the English-speaking world for her inspirational best-sellers, published under the initials "H.W.S."

Logan, a pious boy who distributed religious literature in the Philadelphia horse-trams, developed into an ordinary, healthy lad - fond of games, sports and, above all, of camping trips. He spent his youth in Germantown (1307 Arch Street), a suburb of Philadelphia - secluded in a community of Quakers, entrenched and guarded against the ways of "world." He gave up an early plan of holding an hereditary family librarianship (his uncle, Lloyd, was the current librarian), with its meager income, in the Philadelphia Library and looked forward to a career in the family business, the Whitall - Tatum Company, located in Millville, New Jersey. (This business was eventually merged in the 1930s, with the American Cork Company.)

He received his early education at the William Penn Charter School in Philadelphia, later being admitted to the Quaker school, Haverford College (1881 - 1883), at sixteen years of age. He showed no unusual intellectual interest at first, the scheme of teaching having little influence on him, but his early love of reading took hold of him again, and his desire to imitate his ambitious sister, Mary, prompted him to read Carlyle, Emerson and Ruskin. The presence of Walt Whitman (a frequent visitor) in the Smith home, and particularly the reading of Leaves of Grass, opened to him a new source of wonder.
In 1884, when he was nineteen, he went to Harvard for a year, where he was elected a member of several exclusive societies or fraternities of the "good set," and became engulfed in the essence of snobbish pleasures—the animating motives of his life there. He fell into the custom, which then prevailed at the university, of attending miscellaneous, unrelated courses. Consequently, he got almost nothing of intellectual value from Harvard. For all his assumption of superiority, the crudeness of his mind at the age of twenty amazed him in later reminiscences. Only the family friendship with William James and the teachings of Matthew Arnold served to justify and ennoble the extremely many-sided studies which engaged his attention at the university. His later comments concerning this period offered some excuse: "Youth is a kind of delirium, which can only be cured, if it is ever cured at all, by years of painful treatment."

In this state of ignorance and folly, he finished his year at Harvard and joined his family in an European jaunt, returning in 1886 with the expectation of beginning his business career. A short-lived, though not entirely unhappy experience in the New York branch of the company, and the persistent promptings of his cousin, Martha Carey Thomas, made him hunger for a life of cultivated leisure in Europe. Desiring to make the transition from the assured money of the glass-manufacturing enterprise to the uncertain world of writing, he began to prepare himself by spending his evenings writing an account of a sailing expedition he had taken from Newport to New Bedford. This he sent to the Evening Post which, to his amazement, printed it. With the support of his mother and younger sister, and with another story (crude, full of pathos and unpublished) as proof of his writing ability, he asked his father's permission to leave the business (and all claims thereto) in order to devote his life to literature.

After some protest, his father offered him a good allowance or, if he preferred, the sum of twenty-five thousand dollars with which he could purchase an annuity. He chose the annuity which supported him through Oxford, enabled him to spend years in Paris, Italy and England. He lived very happily on it, in fact, for nearly thirty years, during which time he devoted himself to the study of literature and the English language.

Going to England in 1888, he entered Balliol College at Oxford, where the great Benjamin Jowett still lived and reigned, albeit those were his declining years. The Dons of Balliol, the "Greats" tutors were just what he needed to knock out of him his pretentious superficiality. He became interested in Liberal politics (having direct contact with George Bernard Shaw, Sidney and Beatrice Webb and other reformers), and in charitable and social movements. He was best known at Oxford as belonging to the type of social reformer who combined extreme democratic views with no really pronounced dislike of the society of Lords. He took his bachelor's degree in 1893 and, thirteen years later, his master's, when he had passed the age of forty and three years after the publication of his first volume of Trivia.

On leaving Oxford, with a clipped British accent (spoken with a slight lisp) and a vast appetite for culture, he divided his time between Paris... and Vetheuil, working on his book about Oxford. The resulting product of his endeavors was a rather lifeless book, The Youth of Parnassus and Other Stories, which was published by Macmillan and Company in 1895 and which, of course, fell completely flat. It did, however, bring him three friends—Robert Bridges (with whom he and others founded the Society for Pure English), William Lyon Phelps (Dean of Oriel College) and Henry James. (One of Logan Pearsall Smith's later distinctions in literary London was voiced in the words, "He knew James!")

Soon after, he returned to England and settled in Sussex in his first home, High Buildings, a gray, eighteenth-century farmhouse set among great trees and meadows. (11 St. Leonard's Terrace in Chelsea was his last home, shared with his mother and his sister, Alys.) For the next ten years, this was his home. Summers were spent at Friday's Hill in Fernhurst, a place frequented by the Alfred Whiteheads, the Michael Fields, and the great Gertrude Stein, with her entourage of admirers. Thus, he settled down to practising the art of writing, Walter Pater being his model. In many ways, he could not have chosen a worse model since Pater had developed a style suitable to presenting his own sense of life. The more appropriate for him, the less appropriate for others. Something like Baudelaire's form of expression was what he was after, but one more idiomatic, more colloquial. As to what he wanted to express, he knew they were intimations—latent meanings—dormant until the words gave them life.

At last, he published a view of his experiments in a petentious little review, the Golden Urn (three issues of which were printed—March, September 1897 and July 1898), which he and the Berensons privately published in Fiesole. The review contained, in addition to bits of reverie or meditation or "wanton thought," a list of the best Italian paintings in galleries and private collections, as well as anthologies of what they considered the finest lines of Shakespeare, Milton and Keats. Always fond of anthologizing, he later published several of such volumes, his favorite being, Little Essays from the Writings of George Santayana.

In 1902, he felt that his own book of prose could not be improved upon and was ready for publication. However, since no publisher would accept so odd a book of illuminations—things which seemed to want to be said—he printed it privately in a small edition, of which thirty copies were sold. Trivia: Printed from the Papers of Anthony Woodhouse, Esq. was regarded as a failure. Logan Pearsall Smith thought a pseudonym was necessary; hence, his use of the name "Anthony Woodhouse, Esq." His mother agreed. She thought the book was very quaint and interesting, but that it "began nowhere, ended nowhere and led to nothing."

Sixteen years later, as fate would have it, his friend Desmond McCarthy, literary editor of the New Statesman, asked for more of the same for his magazine. Logan Pearsall Smith, of course, was glad to comply. Finally, all of this material was gathered together and published in 1918 by Constable & Company, Ltd., as the revised Trivia. (The title was borrowed from John Gay ((1685–1732)), an English poet and dramatist.) This delightful book of "incidental diversions and amiable absurdities," born in the solitude of the Sussex woods, sold handsomely for many years, its author becoming famous on both sides of the Atlantic. Translations of it were made into several languages. It was especially popular in France, where it had a larger circulation than in England.

In 1921, he published More Trivia; then came Afterthoughts in 1931 and, in 1933, all of his "trivialities" were collected into one volume, All Trivia (containing the never-before-published Last Words). Logan Pearsall Smith continued to revise this work, with a view to a subsequent edition. He was, in fact, still working on it at the time of his death in 1946.

Although Trivia was the center of his life, he did write other books. His biography, The Life and Letters of Sir Henry Wotton, two volumes, published in 1907, was followed by The English Language in 1912, and Words and Idioms in 1925. During this time, he also authored several tracts for the Society for Pure English. His other books included The Prospects of Literature (1927); On Reading Shakespeare (1933); Reperusals and Re-Collectons (1936); his autobiography, Unforgettable Years (1938); and Milton and His Modern Critics (1940). He also edited and wrote a preface to the revised edition of Boyer Nichols' Words and Days (1941), and edited several anthologies. In his autumn years, he was preparing, among other things, a selection from his mother's letters, which was published posthumously in 1949, with a preface and "Memoir" by Robert Gathorne-Hardy, as A Religious Rebel.

For eighty years, Logan Pearsall Smith did exactly as he pleased, using England and Italy as bases for his European adventures - a lengthy stay in Paris, brief excursions into the French countryside in search of twelfth-century, Gothic and seventeenth-century manuscripts. These wanderings, however, never disturbed his world - the ancient cities of Oxford, Florence and Venice.

He visited the United States for only brief periods of time. He never married (considering marriage fatal to the artist), choosing, instead, to share his home with his mother and, after her death, with his sister, Alys. In 1913, he became a British citizen. It was not merely his love of England and his admiration of English aristocracy and wealth which motivated him, but his dislike of his native land (that "sandy Sahara of culture").

Bald, thin and aquiline-featured in his later years, his physical condition deteriorated into massive incapacitation. He was, in addition, cursed by his own self-indulgence and undulating moods of elation and depression which hounded him for life. ("...I have faded away into one of my intermittences and dull periods. I had a fine spring of delightful madness, and am paying for it as usual by sanity and dullness...") His final days were marred by insanity. Yet, despite his tragedy, he succeeded in winning a place in English letters. He died at his home, 11 St. Leonard's Terrace, Chelsea, March 2, 1946. Only five people were at his funeral.
The story of his life is told with complete frankness by his secretary-companion of eighteen years, Robert Gathorne-Hardy, in Recollections of Logan Pearsall Smith: The Story of a Friendship (1950), and in masterly ellipses by Logan Pearsall Smith in Unforgotten Years (1938), the latter being more an evocation of his memories than a record of his life.

Logan Pearsall Smith won a remarkable reputation as one of the most fastidious, pithy and witty of writers. His mind and temperament, and the tone of his writing were of a certain kind: finicky, neutral, ironic in the sense of being carelessly detached— a self-mocking defensive, intellectual withdrawal. His style, chiseled and polished, condensed and concentrated into the fewest words possible, was a rare and precious talent. As a literary craftsman, he loved the sentence and the brief paragraph (small in scale and perfect in form, surrounded by the virgin whiteness of the page) and compressed into them thoughts cynical, sad, humorous, wise. He was as Christopher Morley noted, the perfect Mandarin of English letters.

This collection of papers by Logan Pearsall Smith, writer and scholar, in the Elizabeth Coates Maddux Library, Department of Archives and Special Collections, numbers 108 items and contains more than 2,000 pages. The collection consists mainly of letters, manuscripts, miscellanea and typescripts. Notable among these are letters from Lascelles Abercrombie, poet; Sir Kenneth Clark, art critic; Sir Herbert John Clifford Grierson, scholar; J. Leslie Hotson, Shakespearean scholar; Sir Humphrey Milford, publisher, Oxford University Press; Una Pope-Hennessey, author; Angela Thirkell, novelist; Hugh Trevor-Roper, historian and critic; five "Miss Toplady" cards, and several unpublished manuscripts. All of this material is in the University Archives, Box: 86 - 60.

The collection is arranged into the following sections: Letters from Logan Pearsall Smith, Letters to Logan Pearsall Smith, Letters - Miscellaneous, Manuscripts, Miscellanea, and Typescripts.

Letters are filed alphabetically by addressee and then chronologically under each name. Every entry contains a brief description, address of writer, dates (when available), number of pages, heading and number of the envelope in which the material is found. The abbreviation ALS means Autographed Letter Signed, APS means Autographed Postcard Signed, TLS means Typed Letter signed, n.d. means no date is given, and n.p. means no place is noted.

44. THE CONSTELLATIONS. Ruled pages from a notebook. A written note on the cover states: "Essay by L. P. S. 1895?" Apparently an unpublished essay on the mythology of the stars. 11pp. Brief notes on two other pages. (Manuscripts 1 #1)

45. - 46. S. P. E. NATURALIZATIONS: DEPORTED WORDS. Manuscript notes. No date. 32pp. Notes begin with an introductory comment on the Society for Pure English: "The aims of the Society for Pure English were stated in general terms in its preliminary pamphlet, and there is no need to repeat them here. As, however, many questions have been asked about their definite application, it has been decided to issue occasional tracts in which special points can receive more detailed treatment..." This is followed by two sections: (1) Vowel-ligatures AE, OE, and (2) The Naturalization of French Words. These notes were published in S. P. E. Tract No. III (1920), A Few Practical Suggestions, pages 3 - 7. Together with S. P. E. Notes on French words incorporated into the English language. No date. 20pp. Believed to be unpublished. (Manuscripts 1 #2)

47. THE MAGIC OF WORDS. Dated January 8 - 12, 1924. 5pp. Handwritten notes in a minute hand, arranged on each page in three columns under such headings as "Magic," "Dead Words," "Diction in Poetry," "The Pleasures of Lexicography." Author notes that words in "newspapers, advertisements - millions and millions printed - (are) useful symbolic tools, tokens for politics - magical process - but darker and more potent magic in them - latent fires..." (Manuscripts 1 #3)

48. NEEDED WORDS: SOME NOTES ON THE INADEQUACY OF THE ENGLISH LANGUAGE. Another title, "MISSING WORDS," appears on the envelope in which the notes were placed. No date. 43pp. Micrographic notes, with lists of words and many cancelled passages. Possibly an early draft of his Needed Words, published in S. P. E. Tract No. XXXI (1928). Other contributors to this Tract were Roger Fry ("Words Wanted in Connexion with Art," pages 330 - 332), and Professor Graham Wallas ("Notes on Jeremy Bentham's Attitude to Word-creation, and Other Notes on Needed Words," pages 333 - 334). (Manuscripts 1 #4)

49. ITALIAN WORDS. No date, but circa 1928. 119pp. Minutely-written notes; many of them mounted. Approximately 30 pages of commentary on the history of Italian culture, and the Italian element in the English language. With various lists of Italian words arranged under such headings as "Literature," "Theatre," "Wines," "Games," and so forth. In some instances, dates of English usage are noted: buffoon, 1585; burlesque, 1656, and so forth. (Manuscripts 1 #5)

50. 19TH-CENTURY WORDS - 20TH-CENTURY WORDS. No date. 36pp. Handwritten lists of words arranged chronologically from 1800 to 1933. Logan Pearsall Smith dates such words as vaccination, gelatine and financier as 1800 words; intellectual as 1829; absolutism for 1829; re-incarnation, spiritualist for 1859; insulin and fundamentalist for 1922; Nazi for 1930, and ends with body-line for 1933. (Manuscripts 1 #6)
NOTES AND JOTTING: FOR A NEW EDITION OF WILLIAM, OR MORE LOVED THAN LOVING. Circa 1942. 5pp. Corrections and revisions to Lord Sudley's book, William, or More Loved Than Loving. Logan Pearsall Smith notes: "Use idioms and colloquialisms as much as possible and not in quotation marks...Elegant obscenities, as in Shakespeare and Proust..." Together with a typed note, signed by the director of Collins Publishers, W. A. C. Collins, giving permission to Cambridge University Press to re-print the book. The note is dated September 15, 1942. 1p. (Manuscripts 1 #7)

ADVERBOSITY. No date. 19pp. Notes on Tennyson, Wordsworth, Donne, Milton and others. Some pages consist of several draft passages superimposed upon each other. With a brief index. Preserved in an envelope bearing additional notes. (Manuscripts 1 #9)

DICTION. No date. 20+pp. Closely-written draft, with many deletions and corrections, of a long essay concerning the extension of vocabulary and the creative impulse. Together with an earlier draft. No date. 9+pp. (Manuscripts 1 #10)

ESSAY ON FALSEIFYING HISTORY. No date. 3pp. Manuscript of a short, humorous article. Title is written in blue pencil; the actual manuscript is entitled, "Geography." Logan Pearsall Smith notes: "...I think we will all agree that Africa is a mistake. It is too big and shapeless and flat..." (Manuscripts 1 #11)

EMERSON. No date. 11pp. Closely-written notes in a minute hand on Emerson's prose and thought. Preserved in an envelope marked: "Notes to Keep. EMERSON. The Further Reperusals." (Manuscripts 1 #12)

STEVENSON. No date. 3pp. Notes on Robert Louis Stevenson: "...deep seas and cannibal fish...the sound of the sea...great noise of the sails...the ringing of the wind and the flying of the spray in the moonlight." (Manuscripts 1 #13)

VOCABULARY. No date. 20pp. Very closely-written words, arranged alphabetically in three columns, with approximately 100 words per page. (Manuscripts 1 #14)

NOTES ON GIBBON. No date. 101pp. Draft of an essay on Edward Gibbon. Together with additional micrographic notes, possibly preliminary notes for the preceding draft. No date. 7pp. Also, an unfinished essay on Gibbon's style, entitled "An English Flaubert." No date. 4pp. (Manuscripts 1 #15)

Pearsall Smith. Together with a few pages of notes which appear to be quotations or summaries of portions of the text. (Manuscripts 1 #15a)

68. PHRASES. No date. 28pp. Draft index of phrases, with some notes and commentary. The phrases are from the Book of Common Prayer, Sir Walter Raleigh, and other Elizabethans, with further examples from John Ruskin, Sir Walter Scott, and others. Pages 11 and 12 concern Logan Pearsall Smith's ancestors. (Manuscripts 1 #16)

69. NOMITIVES. No date. 190pp. Manuscript draft for a work on this subject, the title being an Etonian term for adjectives derived from proper names, i.e., Edwardian, Johnsonian, and so forth. This study appears to have been inspired by Robert William Chapman's work, Adjectives from Proper Names (Society for Pure English, Tract No. LII), to which Logan Pearsall Smith refers in several drafts of the introductory papers. The notes include lists of hundreds of "Nom-atives," as well as commentary. The manuscript includes a typescript from a French correspondent (Paris, 58, Rue de Maubeuge, le 21 Janvier 33) on the scarcity of French examples. Many of the lists and notes may have been compiled before 1933, but the linking commentary appears to belong to the early 1940s. This work is believed to be unpublished. (Manuscripts 1 #17a)

70. - 72. NOMITIVES (AESTHETIC). No date. 4 pp. Related to "Nomitives," above. Synopsis or resume. Together with a typescript and carbon typescript of the same (both with hand-written revisions by Logan Pearsall Smith). No date. 3pp. each. With an autograph letter (signed Percy Lubbock, noted scholar and editor of Henry James' letters), Vevey, Switzerland, September 29, 1942. 2pp. Discusses, among other things, "Nomatives" and comments: "...How easy for you, with your own books under your hand and the London Library at your elbow, to ransack the ages in that grand manner. The only library at my disposal is Hobson's..." (Manuscripts 1 #17)

73. SHAKESPEARE TO KEATS. No date. 59pp. Manuscript of shorter English poems, consisting of 22 pages of poems transcribed by Logan Pearsall Smith, and 37 pages of printed poems from books, mounted, some with concluding lines in Logan Pearsall Smith's handwriting. This anthology is believed to be unpublished. (Manuscripts 1 #18)

74. BIBLE ANTHOLOGY. No date. 74pp. Over 700 quotations from the Old and New Testaments, ranging from one to nine verses, chosen by Logan Pearsall Smith for a future anthology. About half of the verses are written; the other half are mounted extracts from a printed Bible, with the name of the book of the Bible from which they were taken noted. This anthology is believed to be unpublished. (Manuscripts 1 #19)

"The Beneficient Shoes: A Story of a Cornish Ghost" (1944); and a review of the George B. Ives translation of The Essays of Montaigne (1926). Manuscripts 1 #20

MISCELLANEA

81. SELECTIONS FOR AN ANTHOLOGY OF ENGLISH AND AMERICAN PROSE. No date. 55pp. Pages from an anthology, mounted and numbered in pencil from 197 - 251. When not noted on the printed page, the author's name has been pencilled in at the head of each selection. The title page reads (in ink and pencil): "Pt. 5. Carlyle to Santayana. Done for L. P. S. by R. G. H. (Robert Gathorne-Hardy). With view to a new edition." Logan Pearsall Smith edited A Treasury of English Prose, published by Constable & Company, Ltd., in 1943. These pages appear to match pages 165 - 215 of that edition. (Miscellanea 3 #1)

82. SUGGESTIONS FOR THE B. B. C. ADVISORY COMMITTEE ON SPOKEN ENGLISH. Circa 1931. 14pp. Mimeographed typescript. Brief marginal notes in pencil and ink by Logan Pearsall Smith. One sheet of manuscript (a word list marked "SP - ST") inserted after page 10. These suggestions were probably duplicated for a meeting of the Committee, shortly after the death of Robert Bridges ("...our late Chairman, Robert Bridges..."), circa 1931. (Miscellanea 3 #2)

83. HINTS ON WRITING FOR BEGINNERS. No date. 49pp. Typescript of an essay. Title page has an index in Logan Pearsall Smith's handwriting (ink). Corrections made; certain pages have marginal scorings and vertical strokes. Logan Pearsall Smith presumably planned on expanding this essay into a book. The last paragraph on page 49 notes: "...The writer must first of all seek to express his ideas, describe his sensation or inner thoughts; the colours and music that his words bring him must enrich but not obscure his purpose. But in the chapters on 'Descriptive Writing' and on 'Bad Taste' I will explain what I mean by the subordination of words to thought or sensation." (Miscellanea 3 #3)

84. "MISS TOPLADY" CARDS (4) TOGETHER WITH "A. J. TOPLADY" CARD (1). The address on the cards is 50 York Street, Buckingham Gate. The cards are from a shop run by Logan Pearsall Smith, Philip Morrell and Percy Fielding in the early 1900s. "Miss Toplady begs to announce that she has taken a place at 50, York Street, Buckingham Gate, for the purpose of selling the antique Furniture, China, Silks, and Brocades she has collected in Italy and other Countries. The Collection includes a few old and elegantly written Books, whose Tone she approves of, and a certain number of Note-Books, suitable for recording the Sentiments and Reflections which the spectacle of Life and Nature inspires. Miss Toplady will be able to undertake the decoration of Houses, the purchasing of out-of-the-way Books, and the procuring from Abroad of objects not to be found in England. Miss Toplady requests to send this card to the Ladies and Gentlemen of Taste among acquaintances. The wording on each card varies, but the message is the same. (Miscellanea 3 #3a)

85. OUR MODERN VOCABULARY. 1911. 16pp. Pages 29 - 44 taken from The English Review of August 1911. Pages 30 - 44 have the printed text of Logan Pearsall Smith's essay, "Our Modern Vocabulary." He has made marginal scorings and provided notes and headings: "Scientific Creators," "Daughters of Time," "None of the words underlined to be italicized...," and so forth. An attached page lists thirteen headings; possibly a galley proof. (Miscellanea 3 #4)

86. - 89. GROUP OF TYPESCRIPT COPIES OF NINE LETTERS FROM HENRY JAMES TO JOCelyn PEINSE. 1903 - 1914. 11pp. With a letter from Henry James, Lamb House, Rye, Sussex, dated December 7, 1903, to Lord Wolseley. Together with one page entitled, "Duplicates E...purged, Henry James to Jocelyn Peinse...," and an index to the letters. Of the nine letters to Peinse, seven are carbon typescripts, and one is a "top copy" (with the greeting, "Dearest and most beloved Jocelyn" crossed out in ink and the lower page cut off). Page six, letter seven, is missing. The letter to Lord Wolseley, dated December 7, 1903, is a tribute to his two volumes, Story of a Soldier's Life. "...I feel I must absolutely not have passed these several last evenings in your so interesting and vivid society without thanking you almost as much as if you had personally given me the delightful hours or held me there with your voice. I have read your two volumes from cover to cover and parted from you with a positive pang. They form a 'human document' of a fascinating order, and I greatly rejoice that you were moved to produce them...But what, as a dabbler in the spectacle of life, I think I most envy you is your infinite acquaintance, from the first, with superlative men, and your having been able to gather them in, and make them pass before you, for you to handle and use them. They move through your book, all these forms of resolution and sacrifice, in a long, vivid, mostly tragical procession..." Together with a newspaper clipping of an article on Henry James, 'The Sense of the Past, and The Ivory Tower, published by Percy Lubbock, Henry James' literary executor. The clipping is mounted and has handwritten notes by Logan Pearsall Smith. No date. 1p. (Miscellanea 3 #5)

90. SOME SONNETS FROM THE GROWTH OF LOVE BY ROBERT BRIDGES. Circa 1889. 17pp. Transcript by Logan Pearsall Smith of sixteen sonnets and two fragments, with typed copies of nine additional sonnets and two fragments. The date of this transcript is c.1889, the year of the publication of the 79-sonnet version of The Growth of Love, privately printed at the Daniel Press, Oxford. Title page of the transcript has the heading (written in ink): "Some Sonnets from 'The Growth of Love' by UNTITLED PLAY WITH A WESTMORELAND SETTING. No date. 10pp. Transcribed by Logan Pearsall Smith, with a note on page one which states: "Westmoreland...(Barne-ide, Kendall), translated from dialect" and referring to Lake Country Rambles by J. Palmer, 1902. Preceding page notes: "For Scotch version see Popular Rhymes of Scotland by R. Chambers. Also, various versions printed in Scotsman, a few years ago..." Together with Peace-Eggin' Time: A Village Drama in Three Acts." Note on front cover: "Acted in Westmoreland. Printed by Miss Simpson." The songs in this play are variants of the folk songs in the dialect verse play transcribed above. No date. 39pp. (Miscellanea 3 #7)

LETTER IN LOGAN PEARSALL SMITH'S HAND. 1904 or 1914. 2pp. An exercise in the flowery style of the period of Henry VIII, purporting to be from the page of Adrian Fortescue, Knight, sometime horsemaster to the late King Henry VIII. Addressed to James Britten, Esq., K. S. G. Together with an humorous letter to "Logan Pearsall Smith, Commoner!" from "Shane Leslie, III, Bart. of Glaslough," concerning the "crying grievances of Baronets." The verso of the letter has a reply in Logan Pearsall Smith's handwriting in which he notes: "Even Sir Shane has not sounded to its depths the woes of his order..." No date. 2pp. With a carbon typescript from E. Hammond (11, St. Leonard's Terrace, Chelsea, S.W.3, December 22, 1944) to Miss Snoring, c/o Miss Lewis, Wychwood Broadway, Worcestershire. Another humorous letter in which it is stated: "...Send your letter...to the Baronet..." 1944. 1p. (Miscellanea 3 #8)

NOTES IN ROBERT GATHORNE-HARDY'S HANDWRITING FOR VARIANT USES OF THE WORDS "ADDRESS," "CONSEQUENCE" AND "COUNTENANCE" IN JANE AUSTEN'S NOVELS. No date. 9pp. First page has a list of books consulted. Handwritten note in pencil on front cover: "Done for L. P. S. by R. G.-H." (Miscellanea 3 #9)

Cousin Crowe. Stanford Dingley, Reading: The Mill House Press, Xmas 1959, New Year 1960. Untrimmed edges. 4pp. Cream-colored paper; paper cover. The eighteenth-century binding ornament, designed and cut by Mr. Reynolds Stone, was a favorite device of Logan Pearsall Smith, who had it stamped on many of his books. Presentation copy to John B(etjeman) from Bob G.-H. (Robert Gathorne-Hardy), author of Recollections of Logan Pearsall Smith: The Story of a Friendship. (Miscellanea 3 #10)

Typescripts

103. - 107. S. O. S.: A LETTER TO A MEMBER OF THE LEAGUE OF NATIONS COUNCIL. 1944. 34pp. Typescript and carbon typescript drafts of an essay on the naming of the new organization: "I imagine that you and the other Leaguers may now be giving your consideration to the naming of the new supermundane authority which we all hope will arise from the ashes of present conflagration..." Together with a carbon typescript of a letter to Gilbert Murray in which Logan Pearsall Smith presented his ideas on the naming of the League. 1944. 10pp. With additional handwritten notes on the subject. c.1944. 21pp. Together with typed letters (2) from "Samuel," (the Honorable Herbert Samuel, 1st Viscount Samuel, Liberal politician and author), 32, Porchester Terrace, W.2. December 13, 1944 and January 4, 1945, to Logan Pearsall Smith concerning the "S.O.S." letter. 1944 - 1945. 4pp. With a draft reply in Logan Pearsall Smith's handwriting. 1944. 2pp. (Typescripts 2 #1)

108. THOMAS CARLYLE AT THURSO CASTLE. No date. 45pp. Typescript; the title page has Logan Pearsall Smith's signature and notes. He has inserted an introductory sentence on page one: "D. A. Wilson, Carlyle's latest biographer, writes..." Page 42a is in Logan Pearsall Smith's handwriting. Title page reads: "Thomas Carlyle at Thurso Castle, August 1860." This essay concerns Carlyle's visit to Thurso Castle in his sixty-fifth year (during the writing of his Frederick the Great): "...He lay 'whole nights awake.' Once he was sitting smoking 'up the chimney' in the middle of the night, 'huddled in rugs, dressing gown and cape.' A dark terror crossed his mind, that he would never finish Frederick, the book would finish him." Included are lengthy quotations from Carlyle's letters. (Typescripts 2 #2)
