This guide provides teachers and administrators with strategies for implementing leadership development as an integral component of the home and family life curriculum. A rationale for integrating leadership into the curriculum is followed by a framework for integration. The framework criteria provided have been established to assist teachers in visualizing how students can be given opportunities to experience leadership as they prepare for home and community roles and responsibilities. A lesson plan for introducing leadership development is followed by three strategies that can be planned and managed as an integral component of the home and family life education curriculum. (A strategy is the planning and management of an operation.) The strategies are decision making, group process, and individual growth/extended learnings. Outlines provide analyses of how the strategies can be developed in the classroom. Steps, teacher/advisor role, and methods/techniques are detailed. The next section identifies how leadership can be developed through integration of Future Homemakers of America (FHA) into the classroom. The role of organizations is discussed, a lesson plan to introduce FHA is presented, and organizational structure is described. Suggestions are offered for developing the three strategies through FHA. Other information on FHA is also provided. (YLB)

Introduction

Most educators agree with the need for leadership development as an integral component of the curriculum. But many teachers have difficulty defining leadership and identifying how to make it a visible element of the classes they teach. In response to these concerns, the Vocational Home and Family Life Education Section of the Office of the State Superintendent of Public Instruction has conducted numerous workshops for teachers which focus on integrating leadership development in the home and family life curriculum. The concepts and suggestions included in this guideline have been developed, tested and evaluated by the many participants in the Leadership Development inservice workshops and by Seattle School District home economics teachers who participated in a special project focusing on leadership development.

Rationale

Nearly all adults - parents, educators, community leaders, employers - share a real concern about the youth of our nation. They question whether or not today's youth will be able to get and hold a job, whether or not they will be responsible parents and whether or not they will be able to function effectively as family and community members. Current statistics about youth unemployment, teen pregnancy, child abuse and juvenile crime support these concerns as critical issues facing our country.

A logical avenue for resolution of these concerns may be found in vocational education's objectives, which include preparing of students for the occupation of homemaking and entry level employment. But, job skills and technical knowledge are not enough for success in today's world. The roles of homemaker and wage earner demand more than the skills and knowledges required for minimum job performance. Vocational education has addressed the need for skills in addition to technical knowledge by emphasizing leadership development activities as an integral part of the vocational education curriculum.

The Washington State Standards for Vocational Education Programs also identify the need for leadership development in all vocational programs:

"Leadership development through planned activities, providing transition from school to job, must be an integral part of the instructional program."
Rationale (Cont'd)

The specific criteria for vocational home and family life education programs state that "Leadership training through planned activities to prepare youth for participation as responsible members of the community is provided" as an integral component of the instructional program. The standards and criteria identify the vocational student organization, The Future Homemakers of America, when it is organized as an integral part of the curriculum, as one way to meet the leadership development requirement.

The requirement for leadership as an integral part of the curriculum has been questioned by many teachers and administrators as they ask:

- What is leadership?
- Why should leadership development be a part of the curriculum?
- How can leadership development and/or FHA be incorporated?

Leadership development is the vehicle that enables students to fully utilize the subject matter content they receive through Home and Family Life Education. The roles of homemaker, wage earner and citizen demand skills and abilities related to communication, cooperation, decision making, managing resources and assuming responsibility. It is through leadership development activities that students gain these skills. The methods, strategies and techniques commonly employed to provide leadership development opportunities are supportive of effective learning. Students can learn more subject matter content and acquire leadership skills when teachers integrate leadership development.
Rationale (Cont'd)

An effective leadership development component needs to be:

Visible

Students need to know that leadership development is a course goal and that homemakers need leadership skills.

Ongoing

Opportunities for leadership development need to be frequent, ongoing and planned for. Methods of teaching and classroom management must insure that all students have opportunities to develop leadership skills.

Based on student concerns, interests and ideas

Increased involvement in planning increases interest and motivation. Students must be actively involved in their learning. Effective learning "cannot be a spectator sport."

Evaluated

Evaluation by students, parents and teachers will make leadership development more effective.

This guideline has been developed to provide teachers and administrators with strategies for implementing leadership development as an integral component of the home and family life curriculum.
Integrating leadership development may seem complex and difficult. However, integrating Home and Family Life teachers, counselors, advisory committee members, students, and all Home and Family Life teachers have a responsibility to create opportunities for students to develop leadership skills. This support ensures that leadership development will be visible, meaningful, and student-oriented.

Each of these groups must commit to providing support and evaluation of a total program. However, it is important to focus specifically on the roles and responsibilities of students and students in the leadership development process.

The following framework can be developed to assist teachers in visualizing how students can gain opportunities to experience leadership as they prepare home and family responsibilities.
Framework for Integrating Leadership Development in a Home & Family Life Program

Criteria I
Students are given an opportunity to identify and develop leadership skills needed on the job as homemakers and wage earners.

Checkpoints:
Students:
- Identify leadership skills
- Set goals
- Carry out planned activities
- Evaluate progress

Criteria II
Students are given an opportunity to make meaningful decisions regarding course content and learning experiences.

Checkpoints:
Students:
- Identify concerns
- Set goals
- Plan activities
- Assume responsibilities
- Evaluate progress

CRITERIA II:
STUDENTs ARE GIVEN AN OPPORTUNITY TO MAKE MEANINGFUL DECISIONS REGARDING COURSE CONTENT AND LEARNING EXPERIENCES

Teacher/Adviser Role

Manage the learning environment
Define course outline
Involve students in decision making.
Identify possible learning experiences.
Explore individual and group activities.
Assist with implementation of plan/plans.
Provide opportunities for evaluation of goals and activities.

Student Role

Contribute to the establishment and maintenance of the learning environment.
Share interest and ideas related to course outline.
Participate in the selection of specific course content.
Assume responsibility for planning and implementing individual and group activities.
Evaluate goals and activities.
Defining Leadership

Many definitions of leadership have been developed and used. Such definitions range from a single sentence to several pages, but most leadership definitions fall into three categories:

Trait definitions identify leaders through traits, or characteristics or abilities, i.e.: able to make quick decisions.

Style definitions identify leaders through the style or method of leadership used, i.e.: dictatorial or democratic.

Function definitions identify leaders by the functions they perform, i.e.: motivating others.

A focus on individuals and families suggests a functional definition of leadership: leadership is the ability to inspire, motivate and facilitate one's self or a group in moving toward mutually selected goals that affect the common good or purpose.

Acquiring personal leadership skills enable individuals to function effectively as a family member, community member and as an employee. The teacher must assess the skills of each individual and provide opportunities for each student to grow as an individual and group member. Students should develop an internalized drive or achievement motive for goal accomplishment.
Defining Leadership (Cont'd)

To function in leadership roles students should be able to perform the following tasks:

- Select goals
- Make decisions
- Assume and share responsibilities
- Communicate: listen, discuss, keep records
- Cooperate with others
- Plan for action
- Evaluate progress and accomplishments

The teacher will need to guide the students in defining the leadership roles that are a part of homemaking and related occupations.

CLASSROOM LEADERSHIP DEVELOPMENT PROGRAM

Introduction

Methods for implementing the criteria for leadership which ensure its visibility, continuity and its relevance to student needs and concerns have been designated as leadership development strategies. A strategy, by definition, is the planning and management of an operation. Three strategies which can be planned and managed as an integral component of the Home and Family Life Education curriculum include:

A. Decision Making;
B. Group Process; and
C. Individual Growth/Extended Learnings.

These strategies can be used independently or in combination in a variety of ways as the teacher/adviser manages the learning environment. Research has shown that leadership development skills are teachable in a relatively short period of time when the learning environment allows for goals setting and feedback of results. Leadership skills are self-regenerating in a supportive structure.
Decision making skills are essential skills for homemakers, citizens and wage earners. Skilled decision making takes practice and opportunities for practice can be integrated within the Home and Family Life Education curriculum. Decision making strategies create opportunities for students to learn to make effective decisions, plan action to implement decisions and to evaluate accomplishments.

Students must be given an opportunity to make decisions and not simply be given two or more teacher made decisions from which to choose:

I cannot learn to decide
If you make my decision
If you tell me
What to be.
Let me choose what
I must learn.1

The teacher/adviser will need to plan and manage to provide such opportunities, but the learning that is provided is critical to the development of decision making skills in students. It is necessary for the growth of students that they be allowed to make decisions and take on responsibility. They need to see themselves as active participants in their own learning and development, experiencing the outcome and integrating the results of their decisions.

A step by step decision making process is an effective teaching/learning tool. Many processes have been identified in home management and homemaking text books. The processes emphasize an orderly approach to making decisions.

and provide a framework that can be applied to a variety of decision making situations. The components of the process generally include:

- Identify the problem
- Assemble relevant facts
- Consider available resources
- Identify possible alternatives
- Weigh alternatives considering goals, values, resources
- Make a decision
- Act
- Evaluate the results

Students need to learn how to perform each step of the process as well as the entire process to make decisions. The teacher/adviser will want to introduce the strategy to students and then provide numerous opportunities for practice. It is important to remember that the process is a tool to be used, adjusted, changed and otherwise adapted for effective use. Help students see the benefits of the process and how it can be changed to meet individual needs. For example, one might need to evaluate throughout the process (especially in the learning stage), but the process shows it as the last step. The following outline provides an analysis of how the decision making process can be developed in the classroom.

Learning to function effectively as a member of a group is an essential leadership role. All individuals must participate as group members at home as family members, in school as students and in the community as consumers, citizens, and wage earners.

The environment in which students can learn to cooperate, communicate and assume and share responsibility can be created by the teacher/adviser in the Home and Family Life classroom. Our democratic society gives people an opportunity to participate; the educational system must give them the skills for effective participation.

Organizing a class of students into smaller groups has long been recognized as an effective teaching tool. This is also an effective learning technique, especially when students are given an opportunity to analyze the group process and evaluate skill attainment.

The task of using small groups in the classroom is not difficult. It is necessary, however, to do more than simply divide students into small groups for the process to be effective. The following key steps enhance the effectiveness of the group process:

</tbody>
</table>
A third strategy which fosters the development of leadership skills is personal growth/extended learnings. This strategy can be used to individualize and extend classroom learnings to foster personal growth that is unique for each student.

It is important that this component be carefully developed in order for it to be effective. It must:

Be a planned learning experience with an identified goal.

Have a direct relationship to a current curriculum unit.

Extend the beginning levels of learning beyond the scope of the normal classroom activity to the home, school or community where application and synthesis can take place.

To encourage personal growth and foster the development of leadership skills opportunities should be provided for students to:

Assess personal needs and abilities.

Work individually or in cooperation with those who share needs or interests.

Plan for action to facilitate achievement of identified goals.

Carry out plans.

Evaluate accomplishments.

The teacher/adviser role and suggested methods and techniques for integrating personal growth strategy are identified in the following outline:

<thead>
<tr>
<th>Step</th>
<th>Teacher/Adviser Role</th>
<th>Methods/Techniques</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Assess personal needs and abilities.</td>
<td>Provide students with opportunities to look at own abilities, needs and interests in light of personal goals.</td>
<td>Use a variety of techniques to encourage self-evaluation: personal interest inventories, questionnaires, unfinished sentences, etc.</td>
</tr>
<tr>

<td>Provide opportunity for students to share progress with others in class.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>Use a variety of methods of evaluation. Encourage sharing of both strengths and weaknesses.</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
Many techniques can be used to foster the development of leadership in students. But any experience, to be successful, must be based on the concerns and interests of students; must have a stated purpose of which the students are aware and must be analyzed and evaluated in terms of leadership development.

The criteria identified in the framework for integrating leadership development in a home and family life program on page 5 can also be achieved through classroom chapters of Future Homemakers of America. There are many resources to assist the teacher and student to integrate FHA/HERO into the classroom available from the State Advisor for Future Homemakers of America, Old Capitol Building FG 11, Olympia, WA 98504, and/or the National Headquarters of Future Homemakers of America, 2010 Massachusetts Avenue, N.W., Washington, D.C. 20036.

The Future Homemakers of America, as an integral part of the Home and Family Life Program is uniquely designed to encourage student leadership and develop the leadership skills of all students.

The Advantages of Integrating Future Homemakers into the classroom:

1. Time is available for meetings.
2. Ends competition with other organizations for available time.
3. Opportunity for all Home and Family Life students to actively participate.
4. When students participate in planning curriculum their interest and participating is heightened.
5. Students become more involved in the learning process.
6. Provides more opportunities for students to participate in leadership activities.
7. The activities help members develop their own potential.
8. Allows for individualizing instruction through program of work activities and degrees of achievement or encounter experiences.
9. Students and teacher/advisor can work together in non-threatening atmosphere.
10. State and National membership offers leadership opportunities beyond the local level.
The following pages identify how processes can be accomplished through integration of Future Homemakers of America into the classroom.
The Role of Organizations

As we move from families to the community and the world of work, organizations become a method of managing resources to achieve common goals - students need to understand their role as a member of an organization.

Mildred Reel, Executive Director of the Future Homemakers, addresses this issue as she describes how Future Homemakers of America prepares young people to function within an organization:

Youth members are learning how to be members of a group and how to lead; how to mold the concerns and problems of people into positive solutions, how to involve people in their own destinies and how to use personal and community resources to improve their lives.

Youth and adults alike realize that organizations make definite and unique contributions to communities, the nation and, in fact, the world. Ours particularly is a nation of organizations from kindergarten parents to neighborhood activist groups to the more sophisticated, highly developed systems such as the American Medical Association.

Individuals in our society in today's world exert their power or influence in the broad community through groups. Problems that surround us and threaten us as a nation, such as juvenile delinquency, alcoholism, child abuse, murder, and unemployment are problems of individuals, but are also problems that confront us all as a society. Neither government nor a police force can solve them without the commitment of individuals working together for a common goal.
It is apparent that tomorrow will place even greater demands on people to accomplish through organized groups. Groups will need to be organized. Community members will need to work along with community agencies to protect and build the society neighborhood by neighborhood.

Traditionally, organizations have been misunderstood and sometimes misused in our educational system. Adult and youth leaders of the Future Homemakers of America will find meaning for the organization as a part of education as they:

- determine the value of organization to school, society and the nation;
- determine the value of a national organization and a state association and help all members know these values and give support to each level of the organization;
- analyze the role of Future Homemakers of America as a part of Home Economics, what it contributes to the program, the members, the advisers, the school, and the families of the society;
- determine how to interrelate it within the Home Economics program; and
- understand the roles members and adult leaders play.

To motivate students to actively participate in an organization such as the Future Homemakers of America the students must realize that their commitment of money and time contributes to the achievement of that organization's stated purposes and goals. It is therefore important that the teacher assist the student in developing an understanding of the goals and purposes of the Future
Homemakers of America. Also, students must be helped to see the opportunities for personal growth and development that come through membership in the organization. The following sheet may be used as a guide for identifying the advantages of active membership.

Organizational Structure

The organizational structure of the chapter of Future Homemakers is a key to involvement of members. The organization of a chapter involves many decisions that need to be shared by members, advisers and school administrators. There are three basic alternatives for the organization of a chapter:

1. After School: This is the traditional method of chapter management. The chapter is an after school activity, membership consisting of those who can come and participate after school. Officers are elected by membership and work with adviser to plan and implement projects and activities. Most activities are done after school.

2. In Class: FHA is presented as a part of each Home Economics class. The chapter operates totally within the class and all class members participate. Each class has officers who work with the adviser(s) to plan class-related activities and projects. These chapters could be totally independent mini-chapters or function with an executive council to coordinate the program of work.

3. Combination of 1 and 2: One would be to integrate FHA into the Home and Family Life curriculum but make a provision for FHA participation for those who are not currently enrolled in a Home Economics class. The "after school" group could be organized the same as another class chapter. Another combination would be having the majority of the chapter meetings in class with one or two after school meetings a semester for all members focusing on the program of work topic.

HOME EC I.

HOME EC II.

HOME EC III

HOME EC IV.

Allow students to get involved in:

- making a decision on the chapter structure for the school
- thinking through what leadership position the class/chapter will need to function at the class level and at the executive council level
- planning for how officers will be selected
- planning the officer training sessions
- evaluating the organization structure on a regular basis
Teacher Role

Establish methods for getting at interests, concerns, issues. Set atmosphere for sharing and participating.

Possible Activities

Method #1: Surveys and Interviews. Develop a survey instrument or set of interview questions that will reveal the concerns, interests, issues related to course content, of chapter members, students, and/or community.

Method #2: Checklists. A checklist is a quick response sheet that could be used in a survey. Participants might be asked to rank or rate certain items or to select a certain number of items from the list provided.

Method #3: Discussion Groups; Rap Groups; Concern Sessions. Divide participants into small groups to discuss and share their concerns. You may want to divide them into interest groups so that they can discuss concerns that relate to a particular topic; i.e., dating, money, education, school, friends, future, jobs, etc.

Method #4: Collages, Posters. Have participants build posters or collages that depict their concerns, interests or ideas. TEEN TIMES and other magazines could be used for cutting and pasting.

Method #5: Open-ended Sentences. Develop a list of open-ended sentences for participants to complete. For example:
- My biggest worry about the future is __________________________
- My biggest hope for the future is __________________________
- Our chapter really should do something about _________________
- My greatest concern about young children is _________________
- Young peoples greatest money problems center around _________________

Method #6: Reaction Sheets. Post a large sheet of paper near the room exit and ask participants to "react". The large sheet of paper might be headed "How I Feel Now," "My Biggest Concern Is", etc.

Method #7: Brown Bags. Provide each participant with a small brown bag and a piece of paper. Ask them to write their concerns on the piece of paper, slip it in the bag and trade bags with at least three people. When each participant has traded bags, ask them to share the concerns listed in the bag they now hold. This way concerns can be shared without identifying the individual.

Method #8: Brainstorming. Have participants seated in an arrangement conducive to good discussion. Leader poses the question and recorders record all responses on board or large sheet of paper. No evaluation of responses should be done.
Teacher Role

Ask questions to clarify thinking. Assist class/chapter in grouping like ideas. Help find resources.

Possible activities

Method #1: Priority check. List all ideas, each member check three they are most interested in.

Method #2: Discussion Groups. Divide into small groups. Each group narrow down ideas to top two. Make composite list from groups then narrow down further.

Method #3: Rank order. From list of ideas each rank from 1 - idea to most interest to the idea of least appeal. Committee would score sheet and come up with top ideas.

Method #4: Ballot. From list of ideas each member will identify their priority on ballot.

Teacher Role

Teach goal setting. Help identify reasonable goals for time limits, resource available, etc. Assist in stating clear, obtainable goals.

Possible activities

Method #1: Group discussion. Class/Chapter work together in large or smaller group to state goal.

Method #2: Voting. Committee identify a number of goals from priorities then members vote on class/chapter goal.

Teacher Role

Explore possible activities, projects that relate to goal. Provide support and encouragement for trying new ideas.

Possible activities

Method #1: Program of Work Committee. Program of work committee or executive council make a tentative plan using the presented ideas then take back to members for approval.

Method #2: Group planning. All members involved in planning all program of work activities.
Teacher Role

Assist members in planning how to carry out activities. Set time line determine who will be responsible, from committees for action. See that all individuals are involved.

Possible activities

Method #1: Calendar. Have a large bulletin board in the Department to identify all the activities.

Method #2: Programs. Every student has an individual printed calendar of events for the semester or year.

Teacher Role

Support activities. Assist individuals to fulfill responsibilities. Follow up assignments as needed.

Possible activities

Method #1: All members participating in the plan of action.

Method #2: Small groups or committees assuming responsibility for the action.

Teacher Role

Help students see positive results as well as things to be improved. Assist in helping make evaluating continuous. Assist members in growth in leadership skills.

Possible activities

Method #1: Open-ended sentences. Develop a list of open-ended sentences to complete. For example:

New ideas to me were __________________________ Next time I'd like to __________________________
I really liked __________________________
Our chapter could improve by __________________________

Method #2: Reaction or Graffiti Sheets. Post a large sheet of paper near the exit for members to write comments.

Method #3: Discussion groups. In small groups identify 2 or 3 positive results and 1-2 things that could be improved.
Method #4: Listening teams. Have some members identified to be "listening ears" to listen to others for positive and negative feedback.

Method #5: Thumbs up sheet. Sheet with thumb up for listing what was liked, thumbs down for listing what could be improved.
Organize the class/chapter with a system of committees is a way to get members involved, a way to get more done and a way to develop leadership.

SYSTEM OF COMMITTEES

- FHA Chapter
- or
- Home Economics Class

- EXECUTIVE COUNCIL
- COMMITTEE ON COMMITTEES → ADVISERS

One person from each committee

INDIVIDUAL COMMITTEES DESIGNED FOR SPECIFIC NEEDS
One member of each committee should serve as a member of the Committee on Committees. This committee coordinates committee action and sees that each committee continues to function.

Encourage every member to serve on a committee of his or her choice.

Have a stated purpose and clearly identified responsibility for each committee.

Train chairpersons so that they are able to: lead a meeting, organize the committee, motivate others, develop leadership in others, develop and follow through on plans.
The three awards for achievement in the Washington Association Future Homemakers of America are the Junior, Chapter and the State Homemaker Degree of Achievement. The degrees encourage members to learn more about the organization and to improve as individuals, family members, and school and community members. Opportunities for personal growth are provided through the degree of achievement program and opportunities to individualize learning are provided through extended learnings. Extended class learnings easily can be integrated with degrees of achievement when the student identifies the growth encounter of the extended learning.

One example of an extended learning form that correlates with degrees of achievement:

NAME __________________________  DATE __________________________  CLASS __________________________

I AM WORKING ON:  JUNIOR DEGREE____; CHAPTER DEGREE____; STATE DEGREE____

Growth experience as:  An individual____;  Family member____;
Chapter member____;  Community member____.
