III. BACKGROUND AND NEED FOR LEGISLATION

Background

Federal concern for juvenile justice was expressed as early as 1912, when Congress created the Children's Bureau and authorized it to investigate juvenile courts as well as other issues related to youth. Congress sought to develop a federal concentration of effort around youth services as early as 1948. Despite presidential requests in 1955 and 1957, no legislation was enacted to help state and local governments address the problem of delinquency until the passage of the Juvenile Delinquency and Youth Offenses Control Act of 1961. Under this law, the Department of Health, Education and Welfare (HEW) was authorized to assist states and localities in demonstrating improved methods for the prevention and treatment of juvenile delinquency.

Subsequently, the Juvenile Delinquency and Youth Offenses Control Act was reauthorized through 1967, and then was replaced by the Juvenile Delinquency Prevention and Control Act of 1968. Broader in scope than its predecessor, the 1968 Act authorized HEW to help states and localities strengthen their juvenile justice programs and to coordinate intergovernmental activities.

In 1968, the Congress also enacted the Omnibus Crime Control and Safe Streets Act, establishing the Law Enforcement Assistance Administration (LEAA). Under this Act, prevention and control of delinquency was authorized among the categories eligible for funding by the states. In 1971, Congress amended the Safe Streets Act to focus greater attention on juvenile delinquency.

During 1971, Congress also approved a one-year extension of the Juvenile Delinquency Prevention and Control Act and, in 1972, extended it again for an additional two years. At that time, an attempt was made to more clearly delineate the respective roles of LEAA and HEW. LEAA was to assist programs inside the juvenile justice system, while HEW was to fund prevention programs.

The Crime Control and Safe Streets Amendments of 1973 required still more emphasis on delinquency programs and recognized the need to prevent juvenile crime through coordinated action at all levels of government. Each state planning agency was required to specifically address delinquency in its comprehensive plan.

In 1974, as the Juvenile Delinquency Prevention and Control Act was about to expire, several bills were introduced to extend or replace it. The Equal Opportunities Subcommittee of the Education and Labor Committee gave extensive consideration to three bills: H.R. 13737, which would have amended and extended existing law and placed an emphasis on addressing the problems of runaway youth; H.R. 9298, the Runaway Youth Act; and H.R. 6265, which provided for categorical and block grants to States and localities, required submission of a State plan, and mandated that 75 percent of the State funds be passed through to localities.

On June 6, 1974, after holding a series of hearings, the Subcommittee reported a clean bill, H.R. 15276, the Juvenile Delinquency Prevention Act of 1974. It was reported by the full Committee on Education and Labor, as amended, on June 12, 1974, and passed the House by a vote of 329 to 20 on July 1, 1974.

Earlier, in the Senate, Senator Bayh introduced S. 3148, the Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention Act of 1972, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. On February 8, 1973, Senators Bayh and Cook reintroduced S. 3148, with modifications, as S. 821. Following a series of hearings, the Subcommittee to Investigate Juvenile Delinquency reported S. 821, as amended, on March 5, 1974. On May 8, 1974 the Judiciary Committee reported the bill, which subsequently passed the Senate on July 25, 1974 by a vote of 88 to 1.

On July 31, 1974, the House considered and passed S. 821, amended, in lieu of H.R. 15276. President Ford signed it into law on September 7, 1974 (P.L. 93-415). The Act provided for an authorization of $350 million and the creation of the Office of Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention (OJJDP) within the Department of Justice, Law Enforcement Assistance Administration. Programs funded under title III of the act, The Runaway Youth Act, were to be administered by the Department of Health, Education and Welfare.

Other provisions of the 1974 Act included the creation of a Federal Coordinating Council to coordinate all federal juvenile delinquency programs, a national Advisory Committee for Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention to provide citizen input, and a National Institute for Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention to conduct training, evaluations, research, and demonstrations.

The Act provided for formula grants to States and to local public and private agencies. Special Emphasis Prevention and Treatment grants were also authorized to support innovative delinquency prevention programs and community-based alternatives to incarceration.

The Act further provided that status offenders must not be placed in secure facilities and that juveniles in correctional institutions must be held separately from adults.

In 1977, the Act was reauthorized for three additional years. H.R. 6111 was the primary House bill, incorporating administration amendments, as well as provisions from H.R. 1137, which proposed an additional focus on learning disabled children who become involved in the juvenile justice system. On May 5, 1977, H.R. 6111 was ordered reported to the House by the Committee on Education and Labor by a vote of 34 to 0 and was subsequently considered and passed by the House by a vote of 389 to 5.

On March 24, 1977, Senator Bayh introduced S. 1021 to reauthorize the Act. On April 1, 1977, he also introduced S. 1218, the administration's proposal. The Judiciary Committee reported S. 1021, combining portions of both Senate bills, on May 12, 1977. On June 21, 1977, the Senate considered and passed H.R. 6111, amended, in lieu of S. 1021. President Carter signed H.R. 6111, the Juvenile Justice Amendments of 1977, into law on October 3, 1977 (Public Law 95-115). These amendments added several improvements to the Act including an enhanced role for state advisory groups and new authority in Title III to serve homeless youth.

The Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention Act of 1974 was reauthorized in 1980 for an additional four years. S. 2441 was introduced by Senator Bayh on March 19, 1980 and subsequently considered and approved by the Senate on May 20, 1980. The House bill (H.R. 6704) was introduced by Congressman Andrews on March 5, 1980 and reported by the Committee on Education and Labor on May 13, 1980. On November 19, 1980, the House took up the Senate bill, amended it with the provisions from the House bill, and approved S. 2441, as amended, by voice vote. On November 20, 1980, the Senate approved S. 2441, as amended and approved by the House. On December 8, 1980, President Carter signed the bill into law (Public Law 96-509).

This legislation changed the provisions of the Act by requiring the states to remove juveniles from adult jails and lockups, establishing OJJDP as a separate administrative entity under the general authority of the Attorney General, adding the valid court order exception, and changing the method of distributing funding under the Runaway Youth Act.

In 1984, the Act was again amended and extended for a period of four years. On February 29, 1984, Congressman Andrews introduced H.R. 4971, which was subsequently approved by the Committee on Education and Labor on April 26, 1984 and passed by the House on June 4, 1984. The Senate bill, S. 2014 was introduced by Senator Specter and Senator Hawkins on October 27, 1983 and was approved by the Committee on the Judiciary on May 10, 1984. On August 10, 1984, H.R. 2175, as amended with the provisions of S. 2014 was passed by the Senate. Subsequently, the House and Senate used H.J. Res. 648 (the continuing appropriations bill, 1985) to complete the reauthorization of the Act. H.J. Res. 648 was approved by President Reagan on October 12, 1984 (Public Law 98-473).

The 1984 amendments made a number of changes in the Act including improvements in the Special Emphasis program and the provisions governing the review of applications, an enhanced emphasis on strengthening the family unit, and the addition of a new Title IV, Missing Children's Assistance Act.

Need for the legislation

The Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention Act authorizes three separate and distinct federal efforts: Titles I and II contain the juvenile justice provisions and are commonly referred to as the Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention Act; Title III comprises the Runaway and Homeless Youth Act; and Title IV comprises the Missing Children's Assistance Act. Each program has an authorization of appropriations and therefore receives its own line item appropriation. Each program fulfills a unique and important Federal function.

The Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention Act (JJDPA) authorizes a broad range of activities including federal policy coordination, research, training, and the development and testing of innovative approaches to prevent or treat delinquency. The centerpiece of the Act is the formula grant program which allocates funds to the states. In return, the states agree to make improvements in their juvenile justice systems, such as placing status offenders (e.g., runaways and truants) in nonsecure programs rather than in detention and removing children from adult jails and lockups. However, the Act does not specifically prescribe how these goals must be accomplished. Instead, it helps each state make changes and fashion programs that fit its unique needs and circumstances. Additionally, the JJDPA accords a high priority to approaches which maintain and strengthen the family unit.

The result in many states has been that fewer youth are being inappropriately incarcerated and more are receiving treatment in family or community-centered programs, while still protecting the public safety. According to a 1986 state compliance report from the Justice Department, the number of status offenders and nonoffenders held in secure facilities were reduced by 96.5 percent over the previous seven years. Additionally, the number of juveniles held in adult jails and lockups were reduced by 64.7 percent over the previous 3 to 6 years.

However, testimony and other information presented to the Committee clearly indicates that there is still much to be accomplished. Justice Department data shows that, as of 1986, there were still more than 50,000 juveniles held in jails and lockups nationwide. The witnesses testifying before the Committee overwhelmingly argued that continued progress by the states is greatly dependent upon the federal leadership and resources provided under the JJDPA.

The Runaway and Homeless Youth Act (RHYA), complements state juvenile justice programs by authorizing grants to support runaway shelters, coordinated networks of shelters, and a national hotline. These shelters provide a wide variety of emergency and support services for troubled youth. Because these youth are frequently running away from troubled homes, the shelters attempt to help them by immediately notifying parents and by providing individual and family counseling. According to the Department of Health and Human Services, the RHYA assisted the operation of 307 local shelters which provided shelter and crisis intervention services to approximately 85,000 youth and one-time or "drop-in" services to another 255,000 youth in 1987. Additionally, 53 percent of the youth who received services were reunited with their families and 37 percent were placed in other positive living arrangements such as in the homes of relatives or foster families. Only 5 percent were not positively placed, and information concerning the disposition of the remaining 5 percent is unavailable.

Frequently, the receipt of federal funding serves as a kind of validation and facilitates efforts to obtain financial support from other sources. As a result, federal assistance on the average comprises approximately one third of a local shelter’s operating budget. Despite a variety of funding sources, testimony before the Committee clearly indicated that many of the shelters have not been able to meet local demands for services and that the numbers of troubled youth and families requiring services continue to increase. Moreover, youth seeking services at runaway shelters increasingly have multiple, serious problems requiring intensive treatment and a wide range of services.

The Missing Children's Assistance Act (MCAA), authorizes support for a range of activities designed to address the difficult issues surrounding the problem of missing children. Generally, these activities are not provided or supported by other federal programs. Examples include the operation of a toll-free telephone system, a national resource center and clearinghouse, financial assistance to private, nonprofit missing children agencies, and research on topics such as the national incidence of missing children cases. During the period, 1984 to 1987, the national resource center and clearinghouse provided to the public more than 1,700,000 copies of various publications free of charge.

The Committee views these important programs as an investment. Those troubled or endangered youth that we can help today are less likely to appear in the juvenile and criminal justice systems later.

For the foregoing reasons, H.R. 1801 proposes a four year extension of the authorizations of each of these programs and prescribes improvements in their operations as described in the next section.

IV. EXPLANATION OF THE BILL

H.R. 1801 reauthorizes all titles of the Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention Act for four additional years at the existing authorization levels of "such sums as may be necessary." The bill contains numerous amendments designed to promote better administration of the programs, to facilitate congressional oversight of the programs, to focus existing resources more effectively, and to authorize transitional living programs for homeless youth as well as prevention and treatment programs related to juvenile gangs.

TITLE I—AMENDMENTS TO THE JUVENILE JUSTICE AND DELINQUENCY PREVENTION ACT

Office of Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention

H.R. 1801 makes a number of important changes in Part A of Title II of the Act. The first is the elimination of the provision requiring the position of Deputy Administrator within the Office of Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention (OJJDP). In so proposing, the Committee is not suggesting that there should not be a Deputy Administrator, only that a statutory requirement including specified duties is unnecessary.

The second change is to require the administrator to annually develop and publish in the Federal Register a proposed program plan for public comment. The purpose of the program plan is to provide a comprehensive description of the activities the Administrator proposes to support with the funding available for Parts C and D, with particular attention to how each of the required activities will be addressed. This provision requires that, after taking into account the public comments, the Administrator must publish the final plan by December 31, of the fiscal year to which it applies. This will result in a more timely and responsive program planning process. The new statutory requirement will ensure earlier publication of the program plan, enabling OJJDP to avoid lengthy delays in the publication of requests for proposals and the eventual awarding of grants and contracts. Additionally, timely publication will ensure an opportunity for input from the tremendous number of expert agencies, organizations, and individuals around the country that can be of assistance to OJJDP in developing a targeted and responsive plan.

The third change is to expand the mandate of the Coordinating Council on Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention, which is chaired by the U.S. Attorney General. Currently the Coordinating Council is authorized to review the programs and practices of other federal agencies and to report on the extent to which these programs and practices are consistent with the provisions of section 223(a)(12)(A) and (13). The bill makes this authorized review and report a requirement and adds paragraph (14) of section 223(a). Additionally, the bill requires the Coordinating Council to review the reasons why federal agencies take juveniles into custody and to make recommendations regarding how the practices and facilities of these agencies may be improved. The last comprehensive examination of this issue was begun in 1979. In September 1984, the Council received a report entitled, “Children in Federal Custody: An Assessment of Federal Policy and Practices” which stated:

The findings presented in the following pages support two conclusions which are applicable to all five agencies. First, children are not a major priority; the amount of resources and energy directed towards the development of programs for the treatment or handling of youths in custody is minimal, often inadequate. Second, possibly because youths are not a priority, the monitoring systems of these agencies neither attempted nor succeeded in accounting for the identification, detention, or disposition of children in the federal system.

Since the submission of this report, the Coordinating Council has done very little, if anything, regarding children in federal custody. The Committee feels strongly that federal agencies should be encouraged to meet the same goals that the JJDPA holds out to the states.

The fourth change is to eliminate the current annual reporting requirements found in sections 204 and 245 of the Act and to substitute a new annual report to the President and the Congress. Section 105 includes specific requirements in data collection and analysis. In this regard, the Committee encourages OJJDP to continue the annual Children in Custody survey and analysis. It should be noted that by requiring and expanding the activities currently authorized in section 242 (Information Function), the bill also makes provision for whatever resources may be necessary to collect the data needed to complete this annual report over and above the amounts provided for Part A. The annual report must also include information on the status, results, and evaluation of activities funded under the Act. The Committee is particularly interested in the “determination of the feasibility and advisability of replicating such program or activity in other locations” required in the new section 207(4) of the JJDPA. Finally, the report requires a description of selected exemplary delinquency prevention programs for which assistance is provided under this title. The Committee's intent is that this description should also include state and local programs and that the Administrator may wish to enlist the assistance of the state advisory groups for this purpose.

Technical assistance to States

Section 106 requires the Administrator, with up to two percent of the amount available for Formula Grants, to provide technical assistance to the states, units of local governments, and local private agencies to facilitate compliance with section 223 relating to implementation of the state plans. The Administrator must select a grantee or contractor with experience in providing this kind of technical assistance. Additionally, the grantee or contractor may not provide technical assistance to any local organization without first notifying the applicable state agency and appropriately coordinating its activities with that agency.

Minimum allocations to the States

Section 107 of the bill increases the minimum formula grant allocation to the states from $225,000 to $325,000 and to the territories from $56,500 to $75,000. In the event appropriations for Parts A, B, and C of Title II exceed $75 million, these minima would increase to $400,000 and $100,000, respectively.

The Committee received convincing testimony in support of providing an increase in the minimum allocations for states and territories, which have not been increased since the enactment of the Juvenile Justice Amendments of 1977 (P.L. 95-115). Moreover, the increase is necessary to ensure that all states benefit from the increased percentage allocation for Part B. At the same time, the bill protects against any state receiving a disproportionate reduction in funding as a result of the minimum allocation increase.

Indian tribes

Section 108(a) of the bill includes several new provisions related to Indian tribes. The first provision amends paragraph (8) of section 223(a) to include, in the state plan analyses of juvenile crime problems, those geographical areas in which Indian tribes perform law enforcement functions. The second provision amends paragraph (5) of section 223(a) to provide funds for programs of Indian tribes that perform law enforcement functions (as determined by the Secretary of the Interior). In order to receive funding, the tribes must agree to attempt to comply with the mandates. Funding should be allocated among tribes within a state, with tribal input and based upon demonstrated need. However, because of the unique legal status of federally recognized Indian tribes, there should be a minimal number of requirements that these tribes need to satisfy in order to receive portions of formula grant funding from the states. These amendments respond to an interpretation of the Act by the Department of Justice providing that states are not responsible for compliance in those geographical areas within the state boundaries over which they have no law enforcement jurisdiction. The Committee agrees with this interpretation and, therefore, seeks to ensure that those Indian tribes performing law enforcement functions and not subject to state jurisdiction are not excluded from the benefits of the Act.

Minority youth in the juvenile justice system

The bill contains three amendments designed to address the inequitable treatment of minority youth in the juvenile justice system. The first amendment requires that state plans "address efforts" to reduce the disproportionate incarceration of minority youth. The Committee intends that the states approach this in a comprehensive manner. They should employ a variety of strategies including: assessing the difference in arrest rates as well as the processing and handling (including rates and periods of incarceration) of minority versus white youth in the system; improving prevention and diversion programs in areas where minority youth are found; outreach to community-based organizations that serve minority youth; and reintegration programs for youth previously removed from the community so as to reduce the likelihood of recidivism.

The second and third amendments add a new required activity to the Special Emphasis Program and a new authorization in the National Institute for Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention to support research. In designing its program announcements, OJJDP should take into consideration strategies and activities similar to those mentioned in the preceding paragraph relative to state plans. In all activities regarding minority youth, the Committee intends that the term "minority youth" be interpreted to include youth from ethnic as well as racial minority groups. In addition, data collection and federally-assisted services should distinguish between minority groups and between youth by gender.

These amendments come in response to numerous recommendations made during the hearings. According to information made available to the Committee, Hispanic male juveniles are incarcerated at a rate 2.6 times that of white male juveniles. For black male juveniles, the comparison with white male juveniles produces an even more appalling ratio of 4 to one. Between 1977 and 1983, the number of incarcerated minority youth increased by 26 percent, even as the number of these youth being arrested was declining. Thus, even though these youth are not committing more crimes, they are more likely to be incarcerated. Furthermore, minority youth are much more likely than white youth to be incarcerated in public institutions as opposed to private facilities. OJJDP can provide important leadership and assistance through identifying, acknowledging, and disseminating for replication, policies and practices which are racially and ethnically neutral and which have proven to produce neutral results, such as adopting objective criteria for determining the appropriate placement for youth.

Jail removal

The bill proposes several changes in the Act's provisions requiring states to remove juveniles from adult jails and lockups. The first is a four-year extension of the so-called "rural exception." This permits a state, which has complied with the applicable OJJDP regulations, to hold a youth accused of a criminal offense in a rural jail or lockup for a period of up to 24 hours (excluding weekends and holidays). The Committee, in extending this authority, recognizes that rural jurisdictions frequently face difficult obstacles to compliance involving distance, transportation, and staffing. At the same time, statistics clearly show that youth are many times more likely to commit suicide in a secure adult facility than in juvenile detention. For this reason, the Committee supports the "continuous visual supervision" language in the current regulations. The Committee also wishes to reaffirm the six-hour "rule of reason" set out in the Committee report of 1980, House Report 96-946.

The second amendment changes the jail removal compliance provisions. Section 108(d) of the bill amends section 223(c) of the Act to provide additional criteria for establishing whether a state is in substantial compliance. The current standard of a 75 percent reduction in the number of juveniles held in adult jails and lockups is retained primarily for the benefit of those states that have satisfied it. For those states still attempting to demonstrate substantial compliance, they may satisfy either the current 75 percent reduction standard or the new standard which involves an assessment and determination by the Administrator based upon four criteria. One of the criteria requires a state to demonstrate "meaningful progress in removing other juveniles from jails and lockups for adults." This criterion should not be interpreted too narrowly. For example, a state may be able to demonstrate meaningful progress by showing a large reduction in the number of local jurisdictions that still jail children. This amendment is necessary to ensure that states making satisfactory progress are permitted to continue participating in the Act. When the 1985 monitoring reports were producing some inconsistent results. At the same time, the new substantial compliance standard should not be construed to be a more lenient one.

The committee bill does not change either the requirement of unequivocal commitment to achieving full compliance or the December 8, 1988 deadline for full compliance with the jail removal requirement.

Section 108(c) of the bill also amends section 223(c) of the Act to provide the Administrator with greater flexibility with regard to sanctions for states that fail to comply with the jail removal mandate. Regardless of circumstances, under current law, the Administrator has no choice but to terminate a state's eligibility. The bill changes this by permitting the Administrator to exercise his discretion to waive termination of eligibility on the condition that the noncompliant state agrees to spend all of its federal funding (excluding funds required to be expended to comply with section 222 (c) and (d) and section 223(a)(5)(C)) on jail removal. It should be noted that the bill makes this alternative sanction available with regard to enforcing the substantial and full compliance requirements. However, the Committee expects that this alternative sanction will be applied carefully to those cases in which the Administrator determines that (1) the noncompliant states have already made significant progress, and (2) additional funding is likely to produce further progress toward ultimate compliance.

There are still too many states having difficulty. It is critically important that OJJDP periodically reaffirm the value of state efforts to improve the treatment of juveniles and to complement this with sufficient levels of technical assistance, including a stronger commitment of resources within the Office to its State Relations and Assistance Division. The Committee heard from many state agencies that frequent visits from OJJDP staff constitute a valuable source of technical assistance.

State advisory groups

Section 109 of the bill amends section 241 of the Act to improve the provisions regarding the national activities of state advisory groups (SAGs). This amendment requires the Administrator to provide technical and financial assistance to an organization composed of member representatives of the state advisory groups appointed under section 223(a)(3). It further provides that the organization receiving the assistance shall conduct an annual conference relating to the activities of the SAGs.

The Juvenile Justice, Runaway Youth, and Missing Children’s Act Amendments of 1984 (Public Law 98-473) required the Administrator to provide, at least every other year, a conference for several enumerated purposes including advising the Congress and the President with regard to state perspectives on the operation of the Act and OJJDP. The Committee is concerned that the implementation of the provisions inserted in 1984 has been insufficient to enable the SAGs to meet their statutory responsibilities. For this reason, section 109 provides for assistance to be provided to an organization representing the SAGs. The Committee intends that this be handled in the manner of a grantor/grantee relationship. Accordingly, the SAGs should receive sufficient funding to accomplish all of their responsibilities under section 241, including the conducting of an annual conference.

National program

H.R. 1801 consolidates the major discretionary programs and activities of Title II in Part C, which is renamed “National Programs”. This consolidated results in a more logical organization of the Act, simplifies the allocation of the annual appropriation among the various programs, and helps clarify the application of the competition and peer review requirements.

The Part C provisions of current law become “Subpart I—National Institute for Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention”. The bill amends section 242 (Information Function) to include the provision currently located in section 246(a) and makes the activities of section 242 mandatory. This is intended to strengthen OJJDP’s role as a national resource for information on juvenile justice.

The bill also amends section 244 (Training Functions) to include the technical assistance and training provision currently located in section 204(b)(60) of the Act. The movement of this provision from section 204 should not be construed to place a lesser priority on this authority.

Section 113 of the bill moves the Special Emphasis Prevention and Treatment Programs, currently located in Subpart II of Part B, to Part C as a new Subpart II. This section modifies the provisions of the Special Emphasis Program by expanding the provision regarding youth advocacy to include services which improve legal representation of youth. In the 21 years since the landmark decision of In re Gault (holding that certain due process rights apply to juvenile proceedings), it appears that there has been little improvement in representation for youth. Another modification to the youth advocacy provision is the addition of services which provide for the appointment of special advocates by courts. The Committee received compelling testimony showing the need for these services and describing the effective services provided by the Court Appointed Special Advocate (CASA) Program.

The bill makes a minor change to the Special Emphasis provision regarding law-related education. This change simply clarifies that Congress intends that these valuable programs be made available in a variety of community settings. Because of their effectiveness as a delinquency prevention strategy, the Committee believes their application should be expanded beyond elementary and secondary schools.

The bill also makes minor language changes to clarify congressional intent that grants under this program should be primarily directed toward the provision of services. OJJDP in recent years has funded a number of research and development grants under this authority. The Committee emphasizes that research and development should be funded under the National Institute for Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention (NIJJDIP). Once developed and tested, new programs or approaches should be funded to provide services under Special Emphasis. Once evaluated and proven effective, they should be introduced where possible into state and local programs through the Formula Grant Program in Part B.

During the reauthorization hearing, the Committee received compelling testimony relating to state subsidies and how they have supported important improvements in services for youth in such states as Oregon, Virginia, and Pennsylvania. While the bill does not make any changes in the Act regarding state subsidies, the Committee recommends that the Administrator pay closer attention to the current authorization in the Special Emphasis Program for such subsidies.

Under H.R. 1801, the new Part C, Subpart II also contains the provisions governing consideration of grant applications, currently found in section 225 of the Act. The bill makes several minor changes in the language of this section designed to clarify congressional intent. First, the competition and peer review requirements apply to all activities in the new Part C subject to the exceptions contained in current law. Second, the term “new” in paragraphs (d)(1)(A) and (d)(2)(A) has been removed. In doing so, the Congress intends that OJJDP apply the competition and peer review requirements to each application for a new grant activity as well as to each application which proposes to continue an activity for a new project period.

In response to the competition and peer review requirements added to the Act in 1984, OJJDP developed a Peer Review Manual which has never been published in the Federal Register. This oversight should be corrected as soon as possible.
Special studies and reports

Section 114 of the bill requires OJJDP to conduct a study of conditions in detention and correctional facilities for juveniles and the extent to which these facilities meet recognized national professional standards.

This section also requires OJJDP to conduct a study of how Indian and Alaskan native juveniles, accused of committing offenses on or near reservations or villages, are treated under tribal or village justice systems, what resources are available to support community-based alternatives to incarceration, and the extent to which Indian tribes and Alaskan native organizations comply with the mandates of the Act. The bill makes the funding to support this study subject to section 7(b) of the Indian Self-Determination and Education Assistance Act. Therefore, the successful applicant for this study must, to the greatest extent feasible, provide preferences and opportunities to Indians for training and employment in connection with the administration of the grant, and provide preference in the award of subgrants to Indian organizations.

Each of these studies must be commenced within one year following the date of enactment of this bill and must be completed 3 years after such date.

Allocations

H.R. 1801 changes the percentage allocation that each part receives from the total annual appropriation for Title II.

Under current law, Part A receives no more than 7.5 percent of the total appropriation. The bill moves the technical assistance and training authority out of Part A to Part C, and, therefore, reduces the Part A allocation to 5 percent.

The Act currently requires that Part B receive no less than 81.5 percent of the total appropriation. Within that amount, the Administrator is required to allocate no less than 75 percent and no more than 85 percent of the Part B allocation to the Formula Grant Program. The remainder of the Part B allocation goes to the Special Emphasis Program. The Administrator has consistently exercised his authority to allocate the minimum amount to the Formula Grant Program which computes to 61 percent of the total appropriation. Allocating the maximum amount would have resulted in 69 percent of the total being available to the states.

Since the bill moves the Special Emphasis Program to Part C, this isolates the Formula Grant Program in Part B. To reflect this shift, the bill reduces the allocation for Part B from 81.5 percent of the total appropriation to 70 percent, thereby making it possible to increase the minimum formula grant allotment to states and territories while still producing a modest increase for the other states. Allocations to states have been virtually stagnant over the last several years. Yet, the Act places the greatest burden on states to implement its goals. Therefore, an increase in the Formula Grant Program is warranted.

Current law provides an 11 percent allocation for Part C to support the activities of NIJJDP. Under the bill, NIJJDP becomes Subpart I and Special Emphasis Program moved from Part B becomes Subpart II of Part C. To reflect this change, the bill increases the allocation for Part C to 25 percent. Once the Special Emphasis and section 242 requirements have been met, the Administrator has complete discretion in expending the remainder of the 25 percent.

Juvenile Gang Prevention and Treatment Program

Section 117 of the bill establishes a new part D for prevention and treatment programs related to juvenile gangs. In establishing this program, the Committee does not intend to fund research projects. Rather, it is the Committee's intent to provide services to prevent and reduce the participation of juveniles in gang activities.

To carry out Part D, the Administrator is directed to make grants and enter into contracts with public and private nonprofit agencies, organizations, institutions, and individuals for the purpose of establishing and supporting programs and activities that involve families and communities. The Administrator shall give priority to applications from the areas which have high incidences and severity of crimes committed by gangs. Also, priority shall be given to those applicants who can demonstrate broad-based community support which include social service agencies, local education agencies and other community organizations.

The Committee believes that this amendment is particularly timely. The Committee is not only cognizant, but also concerned about the serious and increasing gang violence among our nation's youth. Recent studies have demonstrated that gang members commit crimes at a higher rate than nongang-related juveniles and that they also commit more violent crimes. Moreover, youth who join gangs at an early age have difficulty leaving the gang at some future point.

The problem associated with gangs are multifaceted. They include: weakening of the family structure, truancy and dropping out of school. Poverty is also a factor. The enormous amounts of money generated from drug sales is certainly attractive to poor youth who face the prospect of becoming poor adults. The lack of training and employment opportunities for youth plays a significant role, as does the absence of comprehensive prevention programs in the elementary schools.

In recent months, much has been written about gang warfare in Los Angeles and in Washington, D.C. However, gang violence and warfare is not an isolated problem. A 1982 Harvard University study confirmed that there were over 300 cities with populations of 50,000 or more with gang-related problems. Gang warfare is no longer concentrated solely on territory, rather it concerns markets and the illegal sale of drugs and other substances. Recent reports indicate that 46 states have a problem with violence associated with gangs and illegal substances.

Although the Committee is aware that this amendment is not a panacea for all of the ills associated with gang violence, it does believe that this amendment provides a critical component of a comprehensive approach to addressing this problem.

The Committee believes that intervention and prevention must be provided in addition to law enforcement activities and prosecution. In essence, this amendment will fill a void which currently exists in the Act. It is in the nation's best interest to address the serious problem of gang warfare and violence through prevention and treatment programs rather than through incarceration.

TITLE II—AMENDMENTS TO THE RUNAWAY AND HOMELESS YOUTH ACT

H.R. 1801 rewrites much of the current law to provide clear and distinct authorizations for each of the activities currently funded under the Act. While the bill contains a number of improvements to the Runaway and Homeless Youth Act (RHYA), it does not require any major redirection of the program as currently administered by the Department of Health and Human Services (HHS).

As a result of testimony, visits to local programs, and receipt of related information, the Committee is convinced that this program should be considered a model in the federal government. In general, the programs assisted under this Act are providing services in the manner contemplated by the Congress. As will be further discussed later in the section on homeless youth, the RHYA is designed to primarily assist runaway youth and their families.

Troubled youth find their way to local shelters through a variety of methods, including telephone hotlines, recommendations from peers, referrals from other community agencies, and on an increasing basis from law enforcement officers. When they arrive at a shelter, these youth encounter trained professionals who meet their immediate physical and emotional needs, contract and obtain permission from the parents to provide treatment, and provide individual and family counseling. The goal is reunification with the family unless the circumstances show an abusive home environment. The services are free and may include aftercare counseling for the family for up to six months. The program strategy reflects the understanding that troubled youth frequently come from troubled families, and that unless the family situation is improved, the youth will likely run away again.

Grants for runaway and homeless youth centers

Section 201 of H.R. 1801 amends section 311 of the Act to direct the Secretary to make grants to public and private entities to establish and support local runaway and homeless youth centers. This simply mandates what the Secretary is currently authorized to do. While the bill speaks generically, these grants are what the Department calls “basic enter grants.” This section of the bill does not change the method of allotting funds to centers within states, except to establish minimum allotments. Under this bill, each state shall receive not less than $75,000 and each territory shall receive not less than $30,000. At the same time, section 201 also protects any state from receiving a reduction in funding as a result of the minimum allotments.

National communication system

Section 205 of the bill separately and distinctly provides for a national communication system to assist runaway and homeless youth in communicating with their families and with service providers. While the authority is not new to the Act, H.R. 1801 makes several significant changes. The first is that this is now a mandatory activity. Secondly, the bill requires gradually increasing levels of support to the national communication system.

The Committee was very impressed with testimony regarding the National Runaway Switchboard. With only $350,000 from the federal government, it handles over 400,000 calls per year. However, the Committee understands that, given the increasing cost of telephone bills alone, the National Runaway Switchboard will not be able to maintain this level of service at the current level of federal assistance.

The Committee has also learned that in 1985, the Department assigned the National Runaway Switchboard the additional responsibility of serving as the Adolescent Suicide Hotline. However, the Department has never provided additional funding to support this service. Suicide prevention services are not authorized under the RHYA and, therefore, RHYA funding should not be diluted to support them. However, given the importance of the Adolescent Suicide Hotline, the Committee strongly encourages the Department to provide the necessary funding from other sources to properly support it.

Technical assistance and training

Section 206 of the bill amends the RHYA to authorize grants to statewide and regional nonprofit organizations to provide technical assistance and training to organizations eligible to receive basic center grants under section 311. This amendment distinctly authorizes the so-called “coordinated networking grants” currently funded under the Act. No change is intended expect to clarify that such grants may be made on a statewide or regional basis. There are some states that have a large number of shelters (some of which may not be federally assisted) and the Secretary should consider whether these states would be best served by statewide rather than by regional networks. In any case, this provision should not be construed to require the Secretary to make only statewide grants or only regional grants. The Committee contemplates a combination may be most effective.

Discretionary grants

Section 207 of the bill authorizes the Secretary to make grants to states, localities, and private entities to support research, demonstration, and service projects designed to increase knowledge concerning, and to improve services for, runaway and homeless youth. The bill also lists a number of types of projects to which the Secretary shall give special consideration and requires that the Secretary give priority to applicants that directly provide services to runaway and homeless youth.

Section 208 requires the Secretary to publish annual proposed program priorities in the Federal Register. The public must be given 45 days in which to comment on the proposed priorities. The Secretary must take the public comments into consideration and publish the final program priorities no later than December 31 of the fiscal year to which they apply.

These requirements are designed to ensure that grants made by the Secretary address needs identified by experts and service pro-providers and that the grants assist local shelters to the maximum degree.

Coordination with health agencies

Section 209 of the bill requires the Secretary, with respect to communicable diseases, to coordinate the activities of the various health agencies with the activities of entities eligible under this Act.

The Committee's intent is to facilitate mutually beneficial grant arrangements between runaway shelters and health agencies in the Department. Because the shelters frequently assist youth exhibiting high-risk behaviors, they are in need of information, training, or other assistance in regard to communicable diseases. For this same reason, the system of federally supported runaway shelters present the Department with an excellent avenue for outreach and information dissemination.

Authorization and allocation

Section 210 authorizes appropriations for Part A of the RHYA for an additional four years at the current level of "such sums as may be necessary."

Additionally this section requires the Secretary to allocate 90 percent of the annual appropriations for Part A for section 311 basic center grants. This is designed to make more funding available to local shelters and to ensure sufficient funding to support minimum allocations to states and territories.

Testimony before the Committee clearly showed that the major challenge facing most of the local shelters is sufficient funding. Despite their successes in obtaining additional money from other sources, many find themselves barely able to stay ahead of inflation. A program director from Grand Rapids, Michigan testified that, while she knows that there are many more youth who need services, she is reluctant to advertise because her agency simply cannot handle the increased demand. A shelter director from Cleveland, Ohio testified that she can only afford to pay her youth workers around $10,000 and her counselors around $12,000 per year; long hours, high stress, and low salaries result in high staff turnover.

The Committee also received testimony regarding the Department's practice in recent years of steadily increasing the number of local shelters receiving federal assistance. While there are still many unserved areas of the country, it makes little sense to increase the number of grants by taking funding away from current grantees. Therefore, the Committee strongly encourages the Secretary to refrain from increasing the number of grants in those situations where the allotment for the state has not commensurately increased. If the Secretary decides to make an additional grant award from an increase in a state's allotment, the Committee encourages the consideration of the extent to which applicants demonstrate support from other organizations within their respective communities.
Section 203 of the bill amends the RHYA to authorize a new program of assistance for homeless youth. The Secretary is directed to make grants and to provide technical assistance to public and non-profits private entities to establish and operate transitional living projects for homeless youth 16 to 21 years of age. In order to be eligible, an applicant must submit a plan and agree (among other things) to: provide for appropriate shelter and a variety of services including counseling in interpersonal and life skills; provide shelter and services for not more than 18 months; provide proper supervision; accommodate not more than 20 homeless clients at a time; develop an outreach program; and submit an annual report to the Secretary. In making grants, the Secretary must give priority to entities with experience in providing these types of services.

The bill authorizes $5 million for FY 1989 and "such sums as may be necessary" for FYs 1990, 1991, and 1992. In order to ensure that funding is not taken from the regular RHYA appropriation to fund this new program, the bill requires that the appropriation for Part A of the RHYA must first reach $28 million.

The Runaway Youth Act was amended in 1977 to authorize services for homeless youth. Since that time, homeless youth have been eligible to receive services at runaway shelters, and many have done so. However, because the service goal for homeless youth is not the same as that for runaways (i.e., family reunification), and because youth can only stay at a runaway shelter for up to 15 days, the shelters have been able to provide only very limited assistance to homeless youth. With the availability of some discretionary grants under the RHYA, limited private funding, and occasional state funding, a number of local private agencies operating runaway programs have been able to establish separate independent living programs for homeless youth. However, as testimony before the Committee clearly indicated, due to the absence of federal funding, these programs face difficulties in getting established and are limited in the number of youth they are able to serve. This new program fills that void by authorizing a program designed to meet the special needs of homeless youth and to provide federal funding without taking away from services for runaway youth.

Title III—Amendments to the Missing Children’s Assistance Act

The Missing Children’s Assistance Act (MCAA) was enacted in 1984 as a part of the Juvenile Justice, Runaway Youth, and Missing Children’s Act Amendments of 1984 (Public Law 98-473). Accordingly, this is the first reauthorization of the MCAA.

In terms of being able to quantitatively describe the nature and extent of the problem, the Committee remains frustrated by the lack of empirical research and reliable data on the missing children issue. Even after three and a half years, the Office of Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention (OJJDP) still cannot give the Congress results from a completed national incidence study or from the study on the psychological consequences of abduction.

Consequently, H.R. 1801 contains relatively minor amendments to the MCAA.
Annual report

Section 301 of the bill amends section 404(a) of the Act by eliminating the currently mandated summary of research and demonstration projects related to missing children and by substituting a much more comprehensive annual report which must be submitted to the President and the Congress within 180 days following the fiscal year to which it applies. The information required by this amendment will be of great value to professionals in the field and to the Congress for oversight purposes.

The information required by paragraphs (B) and (C), relating to model programs, will undoubtedly be difficult for OJJDP to satisfy without the benefit of local project results. Thus, these requirements should be viewed as an encouragement by Congress to fund these types of projects under the MCAA grant program.

Paragraph (D) requires a description of how the Administrator provided adequate OJJDP staff and resources to carry out the MCAA. The Committee is concerned about the frequent turnover in the Missing Children Program Director position and delays in completing required activities.

The information required in paragraph (E), regarding the number and types of calls received in the preceding year over the toll-free telephone line, should be provided in a very detailed manner. At minimum, this should include the number of calls to request information, to report a missing child (and what type), to report a possible sighting of a missing child, and for other purposes. Regarding calls on runaways, the report should indicate the types of persons who place calls (parents, friends, other youth, etc.), the number of calls providing sufficient information for a runaway child to be considered "missing," the number of cases referred to the Title III national communication system, and the number of cases in which information was provided on the availability of runaway services under Title III.

National toll-free telephone line

Section 301 amends section 404(a) of the Act to remove the statutory limitation providing that information received over the toll-free telephone can only be shared with law enforcement agencies. This still permits the Administrator to provide for the sharing of such information with "appropriate entities."

Section 301 amends section 404(b)(1) of the MCAA to require the national toll-free telephone line to be operated 24 hours a day. Parents of missing children who call late in the night should have the benefit of immediate assistance.

The bill also requires the national toll-free telephone line to coordinate and cooperate with the Title III national communication system. The Committee's intent is not to require any kind of automatic switching device, but to facilitate the ultimate handling of calls regarding runaways by the Title III hotline.

Quarterly reports and other information regarding the activities of the toll-free telephone line indicate that it is being used to take calls on child exploitation and child pornography. Unless properly funded from other sources, these activities appear questionable in light of the criteria in section 404(b)(1). The Committee strongly suggests that OJJDP review this situation.

National resource center and clearinghouse

Section 301 of the bill further amends section 404(b)(2) to consolidate two of the current requirements regarding technical assistance and to add two new provisions. The first requires the national resource center and clearinghouse to maintain information on free or low-cost services which may be available to missing children and their families.

The second new provision requires the national resource center to maintain information on other federal programs which assist missing children. Accordingly, the national resource center should not expend scarce resources developing materials and information on runaways. Instead, it is more cost-effective and appropriate to use materials developed by the Department of Health and Human Services and their grantees.

From quarterly progress reports, it is apparent that a substantial amount of training has been provided by the national resource center and clearinghouse regarding missing children cases and child abuse cases. The Committee notes that current law contains no authorization for the national resource center and clearinghouse to provide training, especially for child abuse activities not related to a child’s disappearance. The Committee strongly suggests that OJJDP review this situation. The activities of the national resource center and clearinghouse should be confined primarily to cases involving the abduction of children and should not duplicate activities of other agencies.

Record checks

Section 301 of the bill amends section 404(b) of the Act to provide information to state and local entities to facilitate the lawful use of school records and birth certificates to identify and locate missing children. By “lawful,” the Committee means taking into account any applicable federal or state privacy requirements.

Advisory Board

Section 302 of the bill amends section 405 of the MCAA to repeal the authority establishing the Advisory Board on Missing Children. In the three years of its existence, the Advisory Board made one report and that report did not in any way comply with its mandate under the Act. To the extent that the Administrator wishes the benefit of advice and recommendations from professionals in the field, authority exists to provide for a conference on missing children issues.

Grants

Section 303 of the bill amends section 406 of the Act to authorize two new eligible grant activities. The first is aftercare services. Over the last several years, the Committee received convincing testimony regarding the need for counseling services for abducted children and their families following recovery of the children.

The second new eligible activity is mediation services for divorced or otherwise estranged parents. The object is to prevent a possible abduction by helping such parents reach agreement regarding the sharing or treatment of their children.

State clearinghouses

The Committee also received testimony relating to the establishment and operation of state clearinghouses on missing children. The Committee notes that approximately $1 million under the Missing Children's Assistance Act has been expended for this purpose. To date, all but 11 states have such programs. The authority in the MCAA is sufficiently broad to allow further assistance if necessary, and the Administrator is encouraged to evaluate the need for, and benefits of, additional federal assistance.

Definition

While the bill does not modify the definition of "missing child," the Committee nevertheless has some concerns in this area. The definition in current law provides that a missing child is any individual less than 18 years of age whose whereabouts are unknown to such individual's legal custodian if—(1) the circumstances suggest that he/she may possibly have been abducted, or (2) the circumstances strongly indicate that the child is likely to be abused or exploited.

It should be noted that for a runaway child to come within the definition, clause (2) must apply. In the October 4, 1984 Senate debate, during the consideration of the conference report to accompany H.J. Res. 648 (making continuing appropriations for the fiscal year 1985, and for other purposes), Senator Specter explained clause (2) of the definition as follows:

It is intended that, in general, the need for actual evidence of a likelihood of abuse or exploitation should increase in proportion to the age of the child involved. Thus, for example, where credible evidence provides a strong indication that a 15-year-old is engaged in prostitution, the child would be considered a missing child, but not flat pre-supposition that the child is at risk solely by virtue of being a 15-year-old runaway would be in order. Conversely, it would be appropriate to presume that a 7-year-old runaway is at risk, unless credible evidence indicates to the contrary.

The Committee concurs with this interpretation of the existing definition. Thus, for a report on a runaway to be taken over the toll-free telephone line, the circumstances must include a strong indication that the child is likely to be abused or exploited and the need for actual evidence of that likelihood increases with the child's age. If the circumstances of the case do not establish the requisite level of likelihood, then the information should not be taken and maintained by the organization operating the telephone line. Moreover, as required by the bill, the caller should be referred to the Title III hotline.

The Committee strongly encourages OJJDP to develop whatever guidelines are necessary for the proper use of the current definition in all of its MCAA activities.
Special study and report

Section 306 directs the Administrator to conduct a study of non-custodial parental abduction situations to identify and describe the obstacles that prevent or impede the custodial parent from recovering his/her child. Obstacles should include (but are not limited to) those that are financial and legal (e.g., intrastate, interstate, or international).

The Administrator is directed to begin the study within one year following the date of enactment of these amendments and to make a report thereon to the Congress within 3 years of such date.

V. Committee Approval

In compliance with clause 2(1)(2)(B) of rule XI of the Rules of the House of Representatives, the committee states that on April 28, a quorum being present, the Committee favorably ordered reported H.R. 1801 by voice vote.

VI. Oversight Statement

In compliance with clause 2(1)(3)(A) of rule XI of the Rules of the House of Representatives, this report embodies the findings and recommendations of the Subcommittee on Human Resources, established pursuant to clause 2(b)(1) of rule X of the House of Representatives and rule 18(a) of the Rules of the Committee on Education and Labor. Pursuant to its responsibilities, the Committee has determined that legislation should be enacted as set forth in H.R. 1801.

VII. Inflationary Impact Statement

In compliance with clause 2(1)(4) of rule XI of the Rules of the House of Representatives, the Committee estimates that the enactment into law of H.R. 1801 will have little inflationary impact on prices and costs in the operation of the national economy. It is the judgment of the committee that the inflationary impact of this legislation as a component of the Federal budget is negligible.

VIII. Oversight Findings and Recommendations of the Committee on Government Operations

In compliance with clause 2(1)(3)(D) of Rules XI of the Rules of the House of Representatives, the committee states that no findings or recommendations of the Committee on Government Operations were submitted to the committee.

IX. Cost of This Legislation

A. Congressional Budget Office Estimate

In compliance with clause 2(1)(3)(B) and (C) of Rule XI of the Rules of the House of Representatives, the estimate prepared by the Congressional Budget Office pursuant to section 403 of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974, submitted prior to the filing of this report, is set forth as follows:
U.S. CONGRESS,
CONGRESSIONAL BUDGET OFFICE,

Hon. AUGUSTUS F. HAWKINS,
Chairman, Committee on Education and Labor,
House of Representatives, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: The Congressional Budget Office has prepared the attached cost estimate for H.R. 1801, the Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention Amendments of 1988.

If you wish further details on this estimate, we will be pleased to provide them.

Sincerely,

JAMES L. BLUM,
Acting Director.

CONGRESSIONAL BUDGET OFFICE COST ESTIMATE

1. Bill number: H.R. 1801.
4. Bill purpose: H.R. 1801 would reauthorize appropriations for programs under the Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention Act of 1974, the Runaway and Homeless Youth Act, and the Missing Children's Assistance Act, for fiscal years 1989 through 1992. The bill would also establish two new authorizations. Under the juvenile justice act, $10 million for 1989 and indefinite amounts for 1990 through 1992 would be authorized to fund grants for prevention and treatment programs related to juvenile gangs. Under the runaway youth act, the bill would authorize $5 million for 1989 and indefinite amounts for 1990 through 1992 to support transitional living programs for homeless youth, provided that other runaway youth programs are fully funded in appropriations acts. Additionally, the bill would make numerous amendments to these acts, and would require the General Accounting Office (GAO) to study the use of the valid court order.

The costs of this bill fall within budget functions 500 and 750. This table does not include the cost of the GAO study required by section 401 of the bill.

Basis of estimate: For each of the reauthorizations, this estimate assumes that funding would continue at the level of current appropriations, with adjustments for inflation. The estimated levels for the new authorizations established by the bill assume funding at the level authorized for 1989, with adjustments for inflation for...
1990 through 1993. Detailed information is shown in the table below. The estimated outlays are based on historical spending patterns.

Based on information provided by the GAO, CBO estimates that the study required by section 401 would cost roughly $500,000.

*Because the estimated authorization level for the other runaway youth act programs is under $20 million in 1989, H.R. 1801 would not authorize appropriations for this program for 1990.

6. Estimated cost to State and local governments: Historically, between 70 and 80 percent of the funds appropriated under the juvenile justice act and runaway youth act have funded grants to state and local governments. Assuming these trends would continue, CBO estimates that the funds allocated to state and local governments would total roughly $90 million annually if the full amounts authorized are appropriated.

7. Estimate comparison: None.

8. Previous CBO estimate: None.

10. Estimate approved by: C.G. Nuckols, for James L. Blum, Assistant Director for Budget Analysis.
