This report provides materials from the second meeting of the International Task Force on Literacy (ITFL), which focused on specific goals and targets for nongovernmental organization (NGO) mobilization for 1990, International Literacy Year (ILY). Section 2 discusses issues that emerged as central to work in literacy, including literacy, democracy, and empowerment; images of literacy and the illiterate; technical/pedagogical goals versus political/ideological goals; role of teachers in literacy, illiteracy in industrialized countries; women's experiences of literacy; UNESCO's vital role in literacy; how high a priority literacy really is; literacy actions by NGOs; and a research agenda for literacy. Section 3 summarizes these reports to the Task Force: International Council for Adult Education Needs Assessment Survey of Member Associations, a project proposal for a video-based resource package linking the theme of peace to literacy; a proposal to create a special book for ILY written by literacy learners; and proposals to educate and mobilize world public opinion about literacy through the arts. Chapter 4 sets forth the framework of a common strategy for ILY. Components are identified for five broad areas: creating public awareness, creating and strengthening literacy structures, stimulating a "great debate" on literacy, encouraging literacy research and evaluation, and ITFL Coordinating Office activities. Outlines of plans of action of international NGOs prior to, during, and beyond ILY 1990 are appended. (YLB)

1. Introduction

BUILDING THE MOMENTUM FOR 1990, INTERNATIONAL LITERACY YEAR, AS A “PEOPLE’S YEAR” — this set the tone for the second meeting of the International Task Force on Literacy (ITFL). International Literacy Year was seen as a year to deepen the links between literacy and the achievement of social, political and economic democracy, a year to strengthen permanent structures for work in literacy at both government and NGO levels, a year that will increase empowerment and not dependency, and a year that will mark the beginning of a ten year intensive effort through to the year 2000 to dramatically reduce illiteracy on this globe.

The first meeting of the ITFL held in Toronto in October 1987 brought together 20 prominent adult educators from around the world representing some key international and national NGOs, Unesco and the Unesco Institute for Education plus the literacy networks of ICAE’s regional member associations. From this first meeting came a set of general objectives, namely:

- To provide a forum and a structure for NGO mobilization for ILY 1990
- To chart out broad NGO strategies for ILY 1990 between now and 1990
- To find ways to support NGOs in promoting ILY 1990
- To strengthen communication and cooperation among NGOs in relation to ILY 1990

The second meeting of the ITFL brought together a slightly expanded group of just over 30 adult educators for a week in Berlin and moved from general objectives to more specific goals and targets. The progress reports presented to the meeting focussed on actions planned prior to ILY, during ILY and during the forthcoming decade. The International Council for Adult Education presented several special projects along with the results of a Needs Assessment Survey sent to its member organizations after the first ITFL meeting. There was a session designed to stimulate thinking about literacy research which contributed towards both a demystification of research and the decision to undertake a “state-of-the-art” review of NGO literacy activities as part of ILY 1990. As the reports were presented and debated, the issues and elements of a broader strategy were noted. These became the basis for further work on building a joint plan of action for ILY 1990. The framework of a common strategy was divided into four broad areas, each with a series of tasks. The four areas include:

- Creating Public Awareness
- Creating and Strengthening Literacy Structures
- Stimulating a “Great Debate” on Literacy
- Encouraging Literacy Research and Evaluation

The Berlin meeting designated ICAE as the Task Force Coordinating Office, charged with implementing and monitoring the plan of action, including the production of a quarterly newsletter.

Further ITFL work sessions were planned for, for Naivasha, Kenya in April 1989 and for Asia later during that year. These meetings will be designed to build the momentum for ILY 1990 yet further. This will be done by advancing with the concrete tasks already defined in the joint plan of action and identifying new ones. The evaluation carried out at the end of the week indicated a general feeling of accomplishment in having laid the groundwork for a significant NGO contribution to ILY 1990.
2. Deepening the Issues and Objectives of ILY

The opening remarks of ICAE Secretary-General Budd Hall set the framework for the ITFL work session in the direction of probing questions and a search for more adequate ways of understanding literacy.

"Can we use the year to deepen the debate about literacy, to see how it works, what strategies are effective, what is the actual link between literacy and empowerment? Can the ITFL set a tone for candour and frankness? Can we democratize the debate about literacy, bringing more learners into the discussion? Can we reduce the level of paranoia about literacy? We present success stories rather than setting a tone of frank, critical debate. Yet we know that many mass programmes don't succeed. We have analyzed those that did succeed but what about the others? We also know that community-based literacy programmes are not all accomplishing their goals, both in terms of numbers and time frames claimed. And what about the vague and mysterious relation with statistics?"

During a week of intensive discussion and debate, there was further work on defining the goals and objectives for NGO mobilization for ILY 1990. The International Task Force on Literacy envisions a year which:

* Marks the beginning of a 10 year intensive effort to dramatically reduce illiteracy in the world
* Mobilizes resources from the grassroots and factory floors through to government and educational institutions
* Recognizes that illiteracy is a problem of both industrialized and non-industrialized nations
* Will not confuse a campaign against illiteracy with a campaign against illiterate people
* Links literacy to the achievements of social, economic and political democracy
* Strengthens organizations of women, the poor, the jobless and landless
* Results in increased empowerment of people, not increased dependency
* Results, most importantly, in strengthened permanent structures for promoting and enhancing literacy and adult education at both governmental and non-governmental levels

These ITFL goals complement and support Unesco goals for ILY 1990.

A number of issues emerged as central to our work in literacy at this moment, with repeated interventions underscoring the need to use ILY 1990 as an opportunity for reflection and systematization of where we really are in literacy. The expectation was that ILY 1990 would not so much take us to "definitive answers" about literacy but to asking "better questions." The main issues that emerged were as follows:

Literacy, Democracy and Empowerment

The close links between literacy, democracy and empowerment were underscored, with a strong reaffirmation of literacy as integrally linked to the broader quest for social, economic and political democracy. Empowerment through literacy was seen as having to do not only with empowerment in the larger society, but also within the power relations of learner/teacher/facilitator in the literacy classroom. If literacy is understood not only as reading and writing skills but also as having a "voice," a space for action in one's society, how do we understand the forces that impede literacy? In what ways do new literacy skills actually bring empowerment within families, communities, workplaces and societies? Does this work differently for women than for men? And what chance is there of using new literacy skills in the current economic crisis which means there are no books, no literate environment anyway?
Images of Literacy and the Illiterate

There was persistent concern about the images of literacy and the illiterate. There are war metaphors ("campaigns to eradicate illiteracy," "the battle of the book," "pencils as weapons.") There are health metaphors (illiteracy as a "plague", or a "scourge.") Illiteracy often becomes part of a broad social pathology that implicitly or explicitly blames illiteracy for the social problem of unemployment, poor health, low productivity, weak family management, and school failure. What would more adequate images of literacy and the illiterate look like? How will this be different in the North and the South? Given the stigma of illiteracy in the industrialized countries, is there a danger that ILY publicity will result in driving illiterates underground? How can we build a communications strategy into the ITFL?

Technical/Pedagogical Goals vs. Political/Ideological Goals

The need for better articulation between governments, NGOs and popular social movements was underscored. Integrally related was the question of finding the right mix for realizing both technical/pedagogical goals and also political/ideological goals. Literacy programmes understood as a process of liberation at times have shown more concern over conscientization than over actual reading and writing skills, while in reality both must be accomplished simultaneously.

Role of Teachers in Literacy

Are trained teachers a huge potential resource for literacy — or a guarantee of failure? Many participants spoke to the complex link between formal and non-formal systems. Trained teachers are often seen as the worst informal educators. In some countries teachers are seen as inextricably tied into authoritarian, traditional, vertical teaching processes, the antithesis of the questioning and pedagogy of empowerment espoused by popular educators. Professional teachers have been known to question the validity of literacy workers as teachers. On the other hand, there are recent experiences of teacher involvement in literacy that have resulted in broader pedagogical debate and a questioning of authoritarian practices in the formal system.

Illiteracy in the Industrialized Countries

The question of strategies for the illiterate in the industrialized countries came up recurrently, with recognition of the need to distinguish between illiteracy in North and South, defining both differences and similarities. Clearly there are very different uses for literacy skills in the literacy environments of industrialized and non-industrialized countries. There was recognition of the need to combat the feelings of marginalization experienced by literacy workers in industrialized countries, within the world literacy movement in general, and in the specific context of ILY 1990 preparations. There was also a recognition of the usefulness of South-North exchanges in order to feed the long and rich experience and action in the South into the literacy experiences in the North.

Women's Experiences of Literacy

It was recognized at various points during the discussions that women's experience of illiteracy and the doors opened to them by new literacy skills were fundamentally different from those of men. In many societies with high levels of illiteracy, new abilities to speak, read, write and count work for men in different ways than they do for women. And clearly the willingness of illiterate women and men to make a time commitment to literacy is determined largely by their assessment of what kinds of areas will be opened to them by literacy. The need for ILY 1990 to create opportunities for women to speak about their experiences of literacy was strongly expressed. This included attention to the assumptions concerning women’s role in society that continue to silence women even after becoming literate and also the specific structural constraints around domestic labour and child care that impede women’s participation in literacy.

Unesco’s Vital Role In Literacy

The key role of Unesco in promoting literacy action was recognized. There was also enormous appreciation of the Unesco contribution to the proceedings throughout the second meeting of the ITFL. Many aspects of Unesco’s policies and procedures were clarified in the course of the discussions. A number of questions were posed about how to work more effectively with Unesco. One set of questions had to do with UN-promoted international years in general. How do we counter the “ho, hum, one more international year” syndrome? Do UN years have their own internal logic, regardless of what NGOs might hope to accomplish? Can/should NGOs involve themselves with these years? If they should, how do we best alert NGOs not specializing in literacy about ways to get involved?

Concern was expressed about difficulties in working relations with Unesco bodies at regional level and within National Commissions. Another persistent issue was the incomprehensible language of Unesco documents. There was a strong plea for Unesco to leave aside “jargon” and work in accessible language.

Literacy — What Level of Actual Priority

Troubling questions were posed about how high a priority literacy really is — or indeed can be, at government, local community and family level. For many governments in the South, the place of literacy in national priorities is very low. Perhaps this must be so, given the urgent pressures to respond to questions of international debt servicing, defence, agriculture, health etc. All too often, literacy efforts depend almost entirely on foreign donors. Many governments in the South are in the situation where one NGO grant for literacy may be more than the entire national budget allocation to literacy! What are the implications of this kind of dependency on foreign donors for literacy? At community level, where questions of survival are so high on the agenda, can literacy be dealt with before the urgent questions of food, land, water supply, children’s education, health, etc. At a family level, can time be made for literacy classes against time needed for farming, fetching water, child care, and food preparation?

It was felt necessary to underscore that none of this questioning was meant to indicate a crisis of conviction about the “why” of literacy. What it does point to is the need for much clearer strategies about “how” and “when” and “with whom” literacy is effective, within the larger process of strategies both for survival and economic/political/social change.
Literacy Actions by NGOs

Active scrutiny was given to the role of NGOs in literacy, and the forms of literacy action organized by them. There was a common acknowledgment that there are widespread practices of literacy throughout the world in very small groups, often of ten or twelve people, at local level. Given that NGOs tend to be very weakly linked, often this work in literacy finds NGOs re-inventing the wheel. In some regions such as Latin America, there has been a widespread NGO abandonment of literacy, with priorities now put on conscientization, cooperatives, women, health, etc. How do we understand this? And are these other activities appropriate points of entry for literacy at a later phase?

In theory there is talk of a divorce between NGOs and government in literacy. In Latin America there is even a well-developed language of polarities, although in practice, the links with government are often rather strong. It was recognized as important to tap into government resources, programmes and sympathetic bureaucrats.

The Great Debate — A Research Agenda for Literacy

There was a strong feeling expressed about the need for more research on literacy, both at the local level and also at the global level. There were recurrent expressions of anxiety about not having a more solid base of data, both quantitative and qualitative, about actual literacy practices today. There was a concern that the research be carried out and communicated in such a way as to have immediate usefulness for those involved in literacy at the grassroots. There should be concrete case studies of real successes and failures. Consideration should be given to research methodology, opting for approaches based on action research and participatory evaluation models. Full use should be made of already existing research and evaluation structures, including existing ICAE networks, universities, institutes etc. From these discussions came the idea of using the ILY as an opportunity for promoting a “Great Debate” about literacy, recognizing that much of the accepted wisdom about literacy needs to be critically examined in relation to advances and retreats in literacy over the past decades. It was felt that the period prior and during ILY could be seen as a time for intense questioning and debate, along with a solid programme of research and evaluation. The findings from these activities would allow the international literacy movement to launch a decade of work on literacy between 1990 and 2000 on a much surer footing.
3. Reports to the Task Force

A. ICAE Needs Assessment Survey of Member Associations for International Literacy Year 1990

The International Council for Adult Education reported on the Needs Assessment Survey of its member associations, undertaken as part of its contribution to promoting International Literacy Year 1990. A nine page questionnaire was sent out in early January, designed both to inform and mobilize for ILY 1990, and at the same time to seek information about plans and possible areas needing support. Almost 50 percent of the member associations responded, giving a strong indication of the degree of energy and commitment ICAE members are prepared to devote to literacy.

ICAE members’ perceptions of the major tasks for ILY 1990 clustered around three poles:

- strengthening and broadening participation in literacy at the grass-roots, i.e. mechanisms to build national and regional networks of literacy workers in order to share experiences, training, materials etc.;
- increasing government commitment and support for literacy;
- gaining greater public support for literacy.

Other ideas of major tasks for ILY included strengthening programmes, training and regional linkages.

The vision of what kind of a year ILY 1990 should be converged mainly around using ILY 1990 to create greater public awareness about illiteracy and greater political will to tackle it. Another fairly large group of member associations see it as a year for dramatic advances toward actual eradication of illiteracy (some in 1990, others by 2000) and/or expansion of literacy programmes. Smaller numbers look forward to the year as one to establish national and regional networks, strengthen training, carry out workshops and symposia, develop mother tongue literacy, encourage NGO involvement and develop methodologies and theorizations of “popular literacy.”

The main fears for ILY were that it would be a year characterized by a lot of words without any concrete programmes and resources to back them up. “No budget” was stated by some as their greatest fear. Closely related were fears of ILY 1990 as a purely ritual occasion,” remaining as the “monopoly of government” and, in the end, “siphoning off resources from the local to the international plane.” Yet another fear was that a narrow concept of literacy, reducing it merely to reading and writing, would emerge, or worse still, that a “pathology” of the illiterate would be constructed. Several respondents feared that, with success, their countries would not be able to meet the demands of a literate society.

Implications for Action For ICAE

Amidst the richness and diversity of the replies to the questionnaire, a number of themes began to emerge which are important for shaping ICAE’s programme for International Literacy Year. The survey results point to a wide diversity of assumptions about how to approach literacy, and at the same time an underlying anxiety about where we are really going. There is a recurrent need expressed throughout the survey for more comparative studies of actual experiences of literacy, more opportunities to look closely at the impact of increased literacy skills on the lives, communities and societies of real women and men.

Our main fear is that there will be a false sense of euphoria, accompanying international conferences, loaded statements and a waste of resources. Euphoria followed by apathy and complacency has been the experience of most UN-sponsored International Years and Decades.

CEAAL wants to have an interdisciplinary, multi-programme project of popular education for indigenous populations in Argentina, Bolivia, Peru, Ecuador, Guatemala and Mexico.

(CEAAL)
The situation in Nigeria, which now has more than one hundred million people, 80% of whom are illiterate, must be taken into careful consideration. One out of every four Africans is a Nigerian, yet the country is still battling to feed itself...”

(Nigeria)

Maybe a “Women and Literacy” conference can be organized in the context of ILY.

(Hong Kong)

The main recommendations for action from ICAE from the analysis of the survey results include:

1. Supporting national and regional workshops, seminars, participatory research etc. in which different experiences of literacy can be analyzed, paying special attention to their impact on the larger community and society and on women.

2. Carrying out a “state-of-the-art” study of literacy for ILY 1990 through wide spread consultations and investigations, organized through participatory processes, from which would come an NGO/popular movement assessment of where we are in literacy and where we should proceed.

3. Establishing a “clearing house” for human resources for literacy, identifying committed and experienced literacy experts who are prepared to make themselves available for 1-3 month consultancy contracts during ILY 1990, financed as short-term cooperants by various funding agencies. Member organizations of ICAE, both national and regional, could request these consultants, individually or in teams, for particular workshops, evaluation studies, training events, participatory research projects, etc. during ILY.

4. Supporting a programme of publications and documentation on literacy, including collecting, commissioning, translating and disseminating useful studies. Materials should include teaching materials, documents, videos etc. Innovative strategies for getting these materials into circulation should be included, taking into consideration the limited foreign exchange resources of possible users.

5. Supporting specific regional and international initiatives that allow literacy workers at the base to share their experiences. The desire for more contact with others involved in literacy came up recurrently, with such exchanges not seen as the prerogative of senior planners, policy makers and experts, but of literacy workers at the grass roots, the women and men actually learning to read and write, the voluntary teachers, the young coordinators and technical assistants.

6. Organizing a special consultative process on women and literacy, recognizing that women’s experience of illiteracy, the structural impediments to their participation in literacy, and the impact of literacy skills for their lives differ markedly from each of these for men. Women themselves would be the primary participants in this process.

7. Encouraging use of ILY as a year of investigation, reflection and debate from which would come an NGO/popular movement analysis of where we are and what the issues are in literacy. This could contribute to a more solid planning process for a decade of action against illiteracy between 1990 and 2000.

8. Mobilizing a significant flow of new financial and material resources for the programmes of its member associations in literacy, recognizing that one major impediment to effective literacy action is the scarcity of material inputs — paper, pencils, transport, A-V material etc.

B. Special Projects

Video on Literacy and Peace

ICAE presented a project proposal for a video-based resource package linking the theme of peace to literacy. It will include a 15-20 minute video, accompanied by printed guidelines for incorporating the theme of peace in literacy materials. The package is designed to assist in developing local programmes focusing on the theme of peace. Peace is understood not just as the absence of war but as the absence of the structural violence that creates poverty, hunger and illiteracy. The film hopes to capture the thoughts and feelings of the newly literate, and the way literacy skills bring them new capacities to control their own lives. The film will be produced without narration, with the message conveyed solely by the subjects themselves, speaking about the effects of structural violence on their lives. The target audience includes governments, non-governmental agencies, literacy organizations, peace educators, educational advisory associations, networks for literacy and Unesco project staff.

Discussion about the project included questions about why the peace theme was chosen in connection with literacy and the difficulty of combining two themes, "peace" and "literacy," each of which is itself rather complicated in terms of prevailing usages in different parts of the world.

Book Voyag... Project

ICAE also presented a proposal to the Task Force for creating a special book for ILY written by literacy learners themselves. The basic idea is that during ILY, participants in literacy programmes throughout the world, including facilitators and coordinators, be encouraged to write for a special ILY 1990 book. Contributions to the book could be on any theme (life in our community, what it means to be literate, our ILY 1990 project, personal stories) and in any form (messages to other literacy participants in other countries, letters, poems, designs, photos etc.) The book could pass from country to country within a region or literacy center to literacy center within a country, with participants having a chance both to read the messages already written and to write new ones.

The World Assembly of Adult Education in Bangkok in 1990 could be a point to launch the project, with a set of "chapters" sharing a common cover (some form of notebook with a hard cover or loose leaf binder) presented to regional representatives. These regional representatives would have the responsibility of circulating the book from country to country, where special events could be staged to receive the book, read from it, add new messages, etc. Individual countries could promote campaigns to encourage literacy learners to write for the book throughout International Literacy Year, even writing a national book, out of which some messages would be chosen for the international book.

Some special event like International Literacy Day in September of 1990 or a special event at the end of 1990 to culminate ILY and launch a Decade for Literacy could be designated as the day to bring the chapters together. They could be presented to Unesco. The contributions to the book could then be edited to publish one or several international readers for use in post-literacy work throughout the world.

The proposal had an enthusiastic reception with the suggestion that a smaller group be constituted to work out the practicalities. Unesco expressed an interest in playing an active role in this project.

ILY 1990 Through the Arts

ICAE presented to the Task Force a number of suggestions of ways to educate and mobilize world public opinion about literacy and to place literacy on the public agenda at international, regional, national and local levels. While the presentation was entitled ILY 1990 Through the Arts, the document tabled went well beyond arts and the arts community to include ways to involve other sectors such as labour, sports, the communications industry and the corporate world.

The ideas suggested had not been assessed or costed in detail, except to verify that they were implementable. Several were adopted immediately as part of the programme of action outlined by the Task Force. Others will be considered during ongoing programme planning activities for ILY 1990.

The proposals included:

1. Development of a theme song and symbol for ILY 1990. These would give a popular focus, broaden visibility and recognition while at the same time providing something to radio, TV and print media for education and publicity purposes.
2. Media. Develop an active, person-to-person programme to get media commitment to ILY 1990, with targets of 75 percent of all national media and 25 percent of all medium-sized media committed by June 1989 to “hard and soft” contributions and support.

3. World-wide popular music telethon. This would feature top-flight musicians with national and international content, providing a focus for ILY 1990, reaching the general public through a known medium, raising funds for national and regional literacy organizations and involving the arts community.

4. Travelling Art Show. A multinational art show could be mounted to tour the world and participate in local shows, events, specials and festivals, thereby stimulating the artistic community, reaching art lovers and providing media attention and vehicles.

5. Literacy Film/Video Festival. Film/video makers could be encouraged to help focus world attention on literacy through organizing at least ten national film/video competitions and an international literacy film/video competition.

6. Literacy Literary Competition. An international writing competition, special publications and national strategies could be organized to encourage the writing community, the literacy community itself and the educational community to take up the theme of literacy.

7. Travelling Theatre Troupe. A multinational theatre show could be mounted to tour the world and participate in local shows, events, specials and festivals.

8. Corporate Support for Literacy. Corporations could be invited to participate as ILY sponsors, paying for the right to use the logo, sponsoring events, contributing in general, purchasing media time to promote ILY 1990.

9. Trade Union Support for Literacy. Major trade union bodies could be approached soliciting their participation in ILY 1990, in order to focus the support of working people world-wide, celebrate trade union promotion of literacy over the years, etc.

10. Sport Community Support for Literacy. The sports community could be involved including TV commercials using high-profile athletes, an “international mini-soccer” championship for literacy, involvement of sports figures in national programmes.

11. One Event. Some kind of world-wide petition and torch run culminating in either Greece or at the United Nations could be organized to involve millions of people in the literacy dream and focus world media attention on literacy.

12. Merchandising. ILY 1990 could contract a major merchandising firm to market and sell ILY 1990 theme materials including T-shirts, hats and other paraphernalia.

13. Sculpture. A sculpture competition could be organized, with winning sculptures to be placed at the UN and before as many national parliaments as can be encouraged to participate.

14. Public Opinion Research. ILY 1990 could commission a world wide instrument of public opinion research in order to have the public opinion data to support the ILY case in the media and before government, and to have bench marks against which to measure ILY success.
4. A Common Strategy for ILY

During its second meeting in Berlin, the ITFL developed the framework of a common strategy for the period prior, during and after International Literacy Year. The strategy is divided into five broad areas:

- Creating Public Awareness
- Creating and Strengthening Literacy Structures
- Stimulating a "Great Debate" on Literacy
- Encouraging Literacy Research and Evaluation
- ITFL Coordinating Office Activities

A number of components within each area were identified, with an indication by the various ITFL members of where they wished to put their energies and resources. It was recognized from the outset that the actual implementation of the strategy would depend on many people and institutions in addition to those serving on the ITFL. Enlisting their active participation, both for the tasks already indicated and many others still to be identified, is a fundamental next step.

Creating Public Awareness
1. Information kit (common)
2. Dialogue with major donors on ILY 1990
3. Special kit to inform learners
4. Core message
5. Logo
6. Song
7. Mobilizing/informing primary partners
8. Mobilizing/informing secondary partners
9. Mobilizing/informing tertiary partners
10. Informing South Commission
11. Youth International Literacy Day (week?)
12. Making use of all existing channels and opportunities (meetings, newsletters, etc.)
13. Video on Literacy, Development and Peace
14. Mobilize women's organizations for literacy
15. Develop media resources for mobilization
16. World Assembly of Adult Education
17. Book Voyage
18. Telethon
19. Week on literacy in schools
20. TV spots on literacy
21. Video on literacy, Development and Peace

Creating and Strengthening Literacy Structures
1. Identify and strengthen existing groups
2. Create linkages between existing networks
3. Regiona./country inventories
4. Information sharing
5. Identify assistance needs
6. Preparation of donor agency directories
7. Tutor training
8. Translation of relevant documents
9. Literacy with women and girls
10. Reach out to literacy in industrialized countries
11. Methodological guides for teachers/NGOs/programme organizers
12. Exchanges (regional, South-South, North-South, South-North)
13. Involve popular groups in literacy
14. Films and videos (identify, make and distribute)
15. Creation of adult education committees for workers
16. Collections of stories of grassroots literacy (learners, teachers and organizers)
17. Set up donors' consortium NGO fund for ILY 1990

Stimulating a “Great Debate” About Literacy
1. How and when of literacy
2. Popular education
3. Lexicon of literacy
4. Literacy and empowerment
5. Ideology, methodology, technology
6. Illiteracy expensive
7. Literacy = catalyst to enable, accelerate
8. Illiteracy = symptom of other causes
9. Integrate literacy into other sectors of development
10. Focus on women’s role
11. Post-literacy
12. Language and literacy
13. Numeracy

Encouraging Literacy Research and Evaluation
1. Women’s experience of literacy and illiteracy throughout the world
2. Training and funding for research/evaluation
3. State-of-the-art review of literacy from an NGO perspective
4. Promote regional action research seminars
5. Encourage micro studies of literacy
6. Collect and analyze existing research
7. Collect regional and local, unpublished documents
8. Catalogue of research activities/institutions
9. Identify major research issue
10. Voices of literacy participants
11. Collection of stories (learners and teachers)
12. Visual impact
13. Study need for clearing house for literacy research
14. Preparation of project proposal for state-of-the-art review

❖ Form a committee of facilitators and learners to redefine and organize activities for the year
❖ Have members groups prepare teaching activities on the theme of ILY 1990
❖ Participate at different public activities to promote ILY 1990 and the general message related to it
❖ Collaborate with NGOs, unions, popular groups, etc.
❖ Work with the media

—Message for ILY
❖ Reinforce our demand for long-term and medium-term commitment by government and a general plan of action involving all sectors of society
❖ Make use of the promotional materials already produced

NGOs and Literacy Strategies in India

Prior and During ILY

Government Commitment to Literacy

A National Literacy Mission was launched on May 5, 1988. Its target is 30 million literate by 1990 and 50 million literate by 1995. It shows conceptual soundness and indicates willingness to act. Operationalization and implementation leave themselves open to question in view of past performances. An NGO role will be necessary for monitoring, interventions and support where possible.

NGO Commitment to Literacy

This needs assessment and will require a number of steps.

— Survey NGO priorities/programmes/methods. Analyze and disseminate findings both to NGO sectors and government. (Attempts are underway with government support sought. Financial and human resources are urgently needed. The timeframe is 1988/1989)

— Build up an effective NGO network around literacy and adult education since none exists at present. Given the size of the country and the problems, this is essential for progress. Urgent action is required in several areas:
❖ Strengthen/revive existing bodies, e.g. Indian Adult Education Association, all India committee for the eradication of female illiteracy
❖ Identify NGOs, by state, to take on certain leadership and coordination functions in developing these networks
❖ Liaise with government departments of adult education at various levels, namely central, state, state resource centers for adult education and local departments of adult education
❖ Organize workshops, one-day meetings, and other events to bring a cross-section of people together to consider policy perspectives and plans for literacy and adult education 1988-1990

— Training and research collaboration and intervention
❖ Make energetic efforts to link and activate existing Participatory Research and training facilities to plan more constructive and meaningful interventions in government and NGO adult literacy programmes
❖ Share concrete suggestions on a wide range of research possibilities with groups in university and participatory research areas, and facilitate more and innovative research initiatives into critical aspects of literacy, adult education and development

— Mobilize other NGOs with focus other than literacy for linkages and to build in literacy component e.g. women’s groups, health education, peace, environment, worker education, trade union, other activists
— Education with/of women and girls (Special plans of action for this group are essential in the Indian context. Government and NGO programmes exist across the country. They need focus, materials and content. They also need analysis and infusion of consciously progressive values, countering patriarchal and feudal customs and traditions. New literacy materials must be produced).
Facilitating academic and activist inter-relations to build a lobby for literacy. Academics have remained significantly aloof from the problems of literacy and development at the grassroots. Activists have become suspicious and almost hostile to academic positions and responses on initial questions of poverty, development, adult education and literacy. A small beginning is being made through a seminar organized by the Indian Association of Women's Studies for December 1988 on the theme "Rural Women — Poverty, Struggle, Survival — Education." The sub-theme is being coordinated by Lalita Ramdas and will involve an examination of the problem of illiteracy, non-formal education, and gender as a factor in education. All of this will be in the context of ILY and the National Literacy Mission.

Mobilizing service men from the Armed Forces

- Tentative discussion begun with officials from the Ministries of Education and Defence.
- Target — those learning series every year
- Recommendation — use these men b) motivated and given orientation for action in areas of literacy and health
- Use educated wives of service personnel in teaching/learning programmes

Locate films, stories, plays around the issue of literacy. Encourage more productions such as the film from India shown to participants in Berlin, “Thumb Print.”

Find human and financial resources.

Mobilize youth. Preliminary suggestion made to education ministry regarding utilizing educated youth team to work on literacy on a state-wide basis. Needs more contacts with universities, students' unions, etc.

Use trade union networks. Needs concrete attempts to build contacts and send the message of ILY 1990. One possibility is to mobilize ICSE local worker education network.

(Government and media, public opinion mobilizing for ILY 1990 can only begin effectively once Unesco effectively communicates the official information to the government of India. This must be done immediately).

National Association for Adult Education of China (NAAEC)

It's not a question of a crisis of conviction about literacy. The question is not why, but how and when. Can literacy create conditions for economic, political and social change— or does economic, political and social change create the conditions for literacy?

* Lalita Ramdas

We hear that literacy is not a high priority for various governments. But who sets these priorities? We talk of empowerment, but what do we mean? Basically, empowerment means people taking their affairs into their own hands. When that happens, what have we to do but support it — and make sure stronger powers don't take it over.

* Doreen Boyd

It is easier to make people literate than to make them aware of their basic rights — and how to make government provide them.

* Radha Kumari

ILY should not be marked by new campaigns or new discourses, but by the opportunity for working towards a general policy, seeing illiteracy as a complex and global problem.

* Andree Boucher

Methodologies lead to ideology; ideology leads to methodology. Who has control over what is to be taught and how to teach?

* Harbans Bhola

The official language is recognized as the language of mobility and access.

* Didacus Jules

Literacy is a question of learning. Teaching has to take place. We cannot focus on the promotional questions to the exclusion of the actual teaching/learning process. And we should not shy away from specific targets. Have we defined specific objective, such as reduction of illiteracy by a specific percentage by the year 2000?

* Ravinda Dave

In Latin America, NGOs have practically abandoned literacy. It is seen as just one more activity, with few economic resources devoted to it. Within the context of popular education, literacy is not a high priority compared with conscientization, cooperatives and women.
