A unique aspect of the Arizona career ladder project is the fact that each district was allowed to develop its own program design at the local level; to be evaluated on its own merits; and to initiate improvements cyclicly throughout the duration of the pilot-test. This document depicts outline descriptions for each of the 15 pilot-test districts. Each district has developed its own design, tailored to local direction. However, all programs contain: (1) developmental and competency steps or levels; (2) evaluation criteria for placement based on performance, personnel involved in making evaluations, quantity of classroom observations for evaluation, and the variety of sources of performance assessment other than classroom observations; (3) plans and procedures for showing student achievement; and (4) other key components unique to each district. PROGRAM DESIGNS AND STRUCTURES

One important and interrelated component which has been identified through the career ladder research and evaluation project relates to the way in which programs are organized, structured, and/or designed. In her dissertation study, Bierlein (1985) initiated an "outline description" of career ladder program structures for the Phase I districts. This procedure has been continued and expanded to include Phase II and Phase III districts with involvement of the efforts of the legislative research staff in cooperation with all pilot-test districts.

Differing from reform movements of this type in other states, a unique aspect of the "Arizona approach" is the fact that each district was allowed to develop its own program design at the local level; to be evaluated on its own merits; and to initiate improvements cyclicly throughout the duration of the pilot-test. Most plans and policies in other states were basically set at some bureaucratic/governmental level, far removed from local initiative. Furthermore, the important factors of professional input and ownership were lacking.

It is interesting to note the similarity of general program structure and design across locally developed district plans with insured teacher input. This document depicts outline descriptions for each district, organized in a standard sequence as follows:

I. Career Levels. This component shows the number of levels or program steps and the minimum and maximum number of years required to proceed through the ladder sequence.

II. Evaluation. The evaluation section identifies and includes: (1) the total number of input criteria and their descriptors or components for placement of teachers at evaluated competency levels, including steps within each level; (2) the procedures and quantity of evaluation observations, conferences and personnel conducting the evaluation, i.e., administrators or other trained evaluators; and (3) teacher performance documentation involving factors related to growth plans, portfolios, accomplishment of teaching objectives, self-assessment, focused and accredited study, professional conferences, leadership activities and curricular and instructional program participation.
III. Student Achievement. The central focus conveyed in all career ladder plans for all districts relates to enhancement of student learning and achievement.

IV. Other Key Components. There are a variety of components which tend to be unique to individual district plans. Allowance of widely varying districts (in terms of size, resources, etc.) to develop key components, fitting their own local conditions, is found to be an extremely positive factor when one makes comparisons to other state plans.
