Over the last several years, educators have emphasized the need for students to become involved in service programs for others. An effective Catholic educational program must emphasize the message of the Gospel and encourage students to live in harmony and serve each other. Students who participate in service activities on a regular basis develop these qualities. The purpose of apostolic service programs is to help students acquire the Gospel values of justice to others, love of neighbor, and service to the world. Successful programs are developmentally appropriate, provide continual challenges, are part of real-life situations, and are sufficiently developed so that both students and teachers are fully prepared for the experience. Activities are described for primary, intermediate, and upper elementary grades students. They include collections, service in the school, and service outside the school. Addresses from which to obtain further information are provided. Primary grade activities include collecting for World Hunger Day, cleaning the school yard, and adopt-a-family programs. Activities for intermediate grade students include a walk-a-thon for the homeless, a big brother/big sister program within the school to assist younger students, and a foster grandparent reading and visitation program. Upper grade activities include a Christmas basket collection, cross-age tutoring, and service to the community kitchen. (GEA)

This book is made possible through a grant from the Father Michael J. McGivney Memorial Fund which is sponsored by the Knights of Columbus in honor of their founder. The fund encourages new initiatives in Catholic education.

In September 1987, all the Catholic elementary schools that are members of the Department of Elementary Schools of the National Catholic Educational Association received invitations to submit explanations of their apostolic service programs for primary (K-3), middle (4-6) and upper (7 and 8) grade students. Hundreds of teachers and administrators from schools across the country took the time to write an explanation of their programs. The Department expresses its gratitude to those Catholic educators who so generously willed to share their experiences with the other educational ministers of the Department. The Department also expresses its gratitude to those schools that contributed photos for this publication.

This publication emerged from these explanations and photos. All the responses submitted were read and the activities were classified according to the object of the activity, i.e., collections for others, service activities that assist the school community, and service activities that assist the larger community. These became the subdivisions for the three grade levels.

Many educators submitted entries similar to other programs. In many cases in this publication credit for a particular project is given to two individuals. In such instances, the written explanation contained in this book may represent a combination of the two programs credited with the suggestion.

While the activities are grouped according to primary, intermediate and upper grades, teachers may find that some suggestions are appropriate for other levels. Some teachers will be able to take a primary grade activity and alter it to suit the developmental needs of the older students. Likewise primary grade teachers will take an activity suggested for the upper grades and adapt it for the younger students.

The Department offers this book with the hope that teachers will encourage students to undertake on a regular basis apostolic service activities and that teachers may be encouraged to develop additional service programs for elementary school students.

SECTION I
APOSTOLIC SERVICE PROGRAMS IN THE ELEMENTARY SCHOOLS

Over the last several years, educators have emphasized the need for students to become involved in service programs for others. This is not something new in Catholic education. At the Last Supper Jesus washed the feet of his apostles and told them, "I have set you an example that you should do as I have done for you." (John 13: 15) After the resurrection Jesus specifically commands his disciples to "Feed my lambs... Feed my sheep." (John 21: 15 & 17)

Service was to be a distinguishing part of the Christian life.

To Teach as Jesus Did

In 1972 the American Catholic bishops published their pastoral letter on Catholic education. In To Teach As Jesus Did the bishops identified three characteristics of quality Catholic education: message, community and service.

An effective Catholic educational program proclaims to the students the message of the Gospel. Students so internalize this message that they live in harmony with each other, they have community with one another. This shared life impels the students to serve each other.

The bishops expressed it in these words.

The experience of Christian community leads naturally to service. Christ gave his people different gifts not only for themselves but for others. Each must serve the other for the good of all. The Church is a servant community in which those who hunger are to be filled; the ignorant are to be taught; the homeless to receive shelter; the sick cared for; the distressed consoled; the oppressed set free—all so that people may more fully realize their human potential and more readily enjoy life with God now and eternally.

But the Christian community should not be concerned only for itself. Christ did not intend it to live walled off from the world any more than He intended people to work out their destiny in isolation from others... No human joy, no human sorrow is a matter of indifference to the community established by Jesus. In today's world this requires that the Christian community be involved in seeking solutions to a host of complex problems, such as war, poverty, racism, and environmental pollution, which undermine community within and among nations. (National Conference of Catholic Bishops, 1972, sections 28 and 29)

Community Service Activities

One question on the application form for the 1987-1988 School Recognition Program sponsored by the United States Department of Education specifically asked schools, "What efforts are made to involve students in community service activities." (Elementary School Recognition Program, 1987, p. 39)

Thus, even public education recognizes the importance of involving students in service programs.

Purpose of Service Programs

An old proverb states, "Repetition is the mother of learning." Students who participate in service activities on a regular basis develop the habit of service to others. Such external actions lead them to reflect on the actions and the purposes of their actions. These actions and reflections help students place the value of service to others in an appropriate place in their hierarchy of values. Therefore, the purpose of apostolic service programs is to help students to acquire the Gospel values of justice to others, love of neighbor and service to the world.

Catholic schools commit themselves to integrating value formation practices into the entire curriculum. The goal of the Catholic school program is to produce students who live the Gospel message in their daily lives. Students learn values from being exposed to the message of the Gospel, by participating in programs that help them to live out the teaching of Jesus, and by accepting the challenge to live the Gospel message when no one is present to direct them.

Apostolic service programs give students an awareness of the many different ways of serving their neighbors. They remind students that service to others is not something that happens only periodically, and they challenge students to live their baptismal commitment.
Characteristics

Successful apostolic service programs have four characteristics.

1. Developmentally Appropriate

   Effective instruction progresses in a developmental sequence. A later step depends upon a previous one and the previous step lays the foundation for the next one. Teachers have different expectations for first grade students than they do for third grade students. Teachers use different instructional strategies for fourth grade students than they do for eighth grade students. Teachers pose different challenges to second grade students than they do to sixth grade students. This same principle of learning applies to fostering attitudes, values, virtues. Therefore, the apostolic service programs for students on different levels in school are quite varied.

   To always have students only visit a nursing home will not give breadth to the students' sense of care for the elderly. To merely have students contribute to collections for vague purposes will not sharpen their decision making skills. To only suggest apostolic service to their peers in their own school hinders students in reaching the goal of service to all peoples that the bishops mentioned in To Teach as Jesus Did.

   Faculties set a sequence of apostolic service activities for each grade level. The activities of the lower grades prepare the students for the more challenging demands of the upper grades. In setting these activities the faculty carefully sees that the students experience a wide variety of activities both inside the school and outside the school.

   While over a number of years the students may have the same general experience, the specific demands for the students change from grade to grade. Primary grade students may visit the nursing home periodically to sing songs for the residents. Intermediate grade students may also visit the nursing home, but they talk to, listen to or play games with the patients. Upper grade students may also visit the nursing home, however, they may deliver meals, walk with residents on the grounds, or help the patients with their various forms of therapy. Such a list of activities forms a developmental program which calls upon students to respond according to their level of maturity. Such a program prepares students for the next more challenging task.

2. Continual Challenges

   Most programs are not one action or one event during the year. Programs extend over time. In education many steps form part of a program. If a school only has a clothing drive at Thanksgiving, this is not an apostolic service program. If a school sends cards to the patients in a hospital only at Christmas, this is not an apostolic service program. If a school has a mission collection only during Lent, this is not an apostolic service program. All of these activities together with other activities form an apostolic service program.

One of the aims of the school's apostolic service program is to develop in students the habit of service to others. Habits are developed only after repeated actions.

Initially, teachers may be quite directive in working with their classes in the area of apostolic service. This is very similar to the clear and precise directions that early childhood teachers give young students in regard to their behavior in the classroom. As the students mature and learn the purposes of school and their responsibility to others, teachers become less and less directive and pose more and more challenges to students, calling them to respond to situations in responsible ways. After students have been introduced to apostolic service activities for a number of years, the teachers also become less and less directive. Teachers present many challenges to the students and provide the students with the freedom to respond to those challenges in the ways they see fit.

In such a program, teachers do not cease providing many and varied challenges. In a certain sense, the older the students, the more they should be challenged.

3. Real-life Situations

Apostolic service activities flow from the real world in which students live. Teachers need not, nor should they, manufacture contrived situations. Enough situations exist in the students' world to challenge them to respond to them. In the school's apostolic service program, teachers seek to have students deepen their value of service so that when they leave school they will regularly respond from this value to the day-to-day situations that they experience.

Teachers discover in the content they are teaching sources of ideas for activities to challenge their students. A story in the basal reader of a new family moving into the neighborhood suggests many and prolonged forms of apostolic service. An instance of racial injustice discussed in the social studies class poses a variety of activities that the students can undertake both in their local area and on a national level. A description of environmental pollution observed in the science class calls the students to examine and correct local disregard for environmental safety. Accuracy in mathematics class tests students' sense of justice in dealing with merchants, the telephone company or in athletic competitions.

This integrated approach mirrors what Catholic education proclaims, i.e., the integration of values in all areas of the curriculum. This approach over eight, nine or thirteen years of Catholic education forms students committed to Gospel values.

4. Fully Prepared

Teachers concern themselves with three distinct aspects of preparedness for apostolic service activities.

Students need to know exactly what they are expected to do in this forth-coming experience. Many students have great difficulty dealing with vagueness. Therefore, part of the preparedness that the teachers give the students is an exact accounting of what they will do. How are they to help younger students with their reading? What is the subject of their conversation with patients in a nursing home? What subjects are in their letters to children in a youth shelter? Many times teachers will role play the actual experience in order to give the students concrete ideas of what they are to do.

Some forms of apostolic service activities are in and of themselves frightening to some students. The more details that teachers give to students the less anxiety students experience. The goals of these activities are both to provide a real assistance to the people served and also to deepen in students their attitudes of service and their value of love. These cannot be achieved if undue anxiety exists.

In addition to the details of the experience, teachers prepare students intellectually and affectively for the experience. Students want to know very clearly why they are engaging in this experience. This intellectual knowledge provides the data upon which students freely assent to carrying out the task. Too often some teachers spend so much time on the details of the experience, that insufficient time remains to deal with the formation of understanding and attitude that are to flow from the experience.

If teachers use the experiences that naturally arise from the context of what is being studied in the various classes, this aspect of preparation has already begun. At times, this form of preparation may be very teacher-dominated. At other times, this form of preparation may involve greater student participation. Before students begin such activities teachers ask themselves if the students truly understand and appreciate why they are about to have this experience.
The last aspect of the preparation follows the experience. When students return to class, teachers give them time to reflect on the experience. During the activity the students become so concerned with the details that they have no time to reflect on what they are doing. A few moments of quiet when they return help them to evaluate their conduct in the situation. These moments of quiet and self-examination foster the internalization of the values.

At times, teachers may pose some rhetorical questions: What did you feel as you were wheeling the patients to the chapel? Why did you write those sentences on your cards to the sick parishioners? How would you have responded if you were students in that school?

At other times, teachers may conduct class discussions. These discussions enable students to share their feelings with others. The verbalization of inner thoughts helps students more clearly understand themselves. By listening to others, students affirm their own thinking, alter their thinking or challenge other students. All these activities foster growth.

Special Note

Because so much attention is focused on liability and so many people bring law suits against schools, teachers observe certain cautions. Students should not engage in an apostolic service program, especially one that requires the students to leave the classroom, without the explicit knowledge and consent of the students' parents.

Teachers regularly check with their principals regarding the type of insurance coverage the school has for field trips and also check with host institutions regarding their regulations and coverage. While these are realities that teachers must deal with, the added burden of acquiring this information should not deter teachers from challenging students to engage in apostolic service projects.

Conclusion

A school is not a Catholic school unless it has an effective apostolic service program. This program dares the students to practice the principles of the Gospel. Like any program in a Catholic school, this program is well planned. The entire faculty has agreed on a sequence of learning activities. The individual teachers have made the necessary contact to insure the success of the program. The teachers have prepared the students well for the particular experience.

Jesus challenged his followers to manifest an active love for their neighbors. The world today needs people who openly manifest their concern for other people. Catholic school students can bring about the redemption of the world by internalizing during the elementary school years the value of service to others and then spending a lifetime practicing it.

ACTIVITIES

COLLECTIONS

Food for the Third World

Third grade students conduct a bake sale during the month of October in order to raise money for needy families in Haiti. This money buys goats for families. Goats provide a cheap supply of milk to the families. The goats cost $50.00 and are provided by INSA which also provides veterinary service for a year. Those receiving the goats also receive instruction in how to care for them. A presentation on Haitian life motivates the students to take part in this activity. Frequently a pen pal relationship springs up between the students and the families.

Working for the Missions

Kindergarten students contract with their parents to do certain jobs around the house for which they will be paid. These are jobs over and above their regular home responsibilities. The students then contribute the money earned to the school's mission fund.

Mission Awareness

The purpose of this week-long program is to give students a greater sensitivity to the life of missionaries and the people they serve. Kindergarten through third grade students learn about the life of a mission land through films, slides, and presentations by guest speakers. The children attempt to walk in the steps of the missionaries as they carry out their duties. The students prepare simple food staples that people in different countries eat. Students also dress up as the people of the land being studied. These activities motivate students to contribute to the mission collection.
Hunger March

In special recognition of World Hunger Day, primary grade students participate in an annual hunger march around the school block. The children solicit pledges from people who agree to donate a set amount of money for each time the students complete the trip around the block. The students wear name cards which are stamped each time they complete a trip. Rest areas are set up where juice is provided. At the end of the march, which is done to march music, a prayer service is held in the school yard for the students, parents, and teachers. During this prayer service helium balloons are released.

Mission Helpers

During the school year the third grade students assume leadership in planning and carrying out a number of activities aimed at creating greater awareness of all students in the school. These activities motivate student contributions to the mission collection. The program emphasizes the words care and share.

Students collect posters depicting foreign lands from airlines and travel agents. These posters are used in mission displays. On World Hunger Day students who make a donation to the project receive a school-made badge. A cake sale is sponsored at Valentine's Day. A "Gift for Someone You Love Raffle" is held in June.

First Friday Collection

Each first Friday at mass students contribute money to the offertory collection. This money is taken from the students' allowances, and money earned by shoveling snow, washing cars, raking leaves, or other tasks that they perform. The money is sent to the shelter for abused children, the Indian missions, or other worthy charities.

Can and Penny Day

Once a month all the third grade students bring one can of food and one penny to class. The can of food is used to fill baskets for the poor of the parish. The penny is collected and used to light a vigil light in the church. The students go to church for a short prayer service during which one student lights the vigil light.

Gifts for Saint Nick

On December sixth or the closest school day to that date, St. Nicholas visits the classes to receive gifts instead of give gifts. The students make donations of new or used clothing for young children. This clothing is given to Birthright, an agency that works with mothers as an alternative to having an abortion.

International Fair

Classes choose different third world countries. For six weeks students study the geography, people, customs, and occupations of the country. They also attempt to learn the language, songs and dances of the country. At the end of six weeks, students invite their parents, parishioners and the entire community to an international fair. Each class performs songs, dances and skits which they have written about their assigned country. Local foods of each country are sold to the guests. The students and guests are asked to contribute clothing, toys, games and school supplies for the children of the various countries. Arrangements are made with various mission groups to send the materials to the countries.

Adopt Migrant Workers

The students adopt children living in a neighboring parish who are the children of migrant workers. The money offered at the weekly children’s liturgies is used to purchase food for the migrants. Monthly, two students from each grade go shopping for basic foods. During the year clothing collections are held for school clothes, clothes for adults working in the fields, and summer clothes for the children. One of the people who ministers to the migrant workers visits the school monthly to explain how the offerings of the students help these poor people.
Stocking Tree

During Advent the primary grade students buy stockings and hang them on the class Christmas tree. On the last day before the Christmas holiday, these are taken down and wrapped with a card indicating the sex and age of the person who could wear the stocking. The students and the teacher bring them to the local St. Vincent de Paul Society for distribution to needy people.

Adopt-a-Priest

The kindergarten students adopt a priest from the parish who is a long distance from his relatives. At the start of the school year the class designs an adoption certificate which is presented to the priest. During the year the priest is invited to all class parties, field trips, assemblies and other special functions. The class creates special cards for different occasions. The class becomes the priest's family.

Adopt-A-Family

Each year, third grade students participate in an adopt-a-family program. The students make a year long commitment to assist this family. The class provides Trick-or-Treat bags at Halloween, food baskets at Thanksgiving, outgrown clothing and new gifts at Christmas, small remembrances on Valentine’s Day, and baskets at Easter. Money is earned for this project by the sale of snacks at lunch time and bake sales after Sunday masses. The students plan the program, shop for the materials and deliver the packages.

Adopt a Poor Child

Names of poor children living in missionary countries can be obtained from different missionary organizations. The students who agree to adopt one of these poor children agree to help the child for two years.
This help consists of a monthly sum of money, regular letters sent to the child by the members of the class, and prayers for the child and his/her family. The correspondence between the children gives them a deeper understanding of each other.

Adopt a Missionary

Each child receives the name and picture of a missionary. These can be gotten from the religious community involved in the parish or school or by writing to a religious community. During the year the students are encouraged to remember this person in their prayers. They are also encouraged to write regularly to this person. This gives the students a deeper understanding of the vocation of a missionary and makes more real for them the life of the missionary. During the various mission collection drives the students recall that they are working for their missionary.

Adopt a Grandparent

The students in grade three adopt a resident in a neighboring nursing home. This is called their "grandparent." The children and the adults correspond and exchange cards, letters and seasonal art objects. Twice during the year the students meet their "grandparents". The first visit is to the home of the "grandparents" where they meet them and tour their home. The students also arrange a seasonal party, bingo, or sing-a-long. During the second visit the "grandparents" visit the school. At this time the students have various displays for the guests and some type of entertainment. At the end of the school year, the students send their home addresses so their "grandparents" can write to them during the summer.
Care for the Cemetery

In early spring the third grade students spend some time picking up twigs and papers that have accumulated in the parish cemetery during the winter. This is done under the direction of the janitor and the supervision of the classroom teacher.

Visit to Nursing Home

Second graders take turns visiting the elderly in a local nursing home. On the one day each week that a group of children visit the nursing home, that group has reading first. While the other two groups are having reading, a volunteer walks with the students to the nearby nursing home.

Prior to the start of this program the students receive instruction in what they will encounter. This is done so they will not be scared by seeing someone in a disheveled condition. The students also receive instruction on how and what to say to the people. Some students prepare artwork or stories for the patients.

Prayer Pal

Students in grade three visit a local nursing home in the early fall and become prayer pals with the residents. As a sign of this sharing, the students make small paper apples and place their pictures on them. One apple is given to each patient. The patients also make apples with their names on them. One is given to the student who will be the patient’s prayer pal. This serves as a reminder to both that they should be regularly praying for each other. Later in the year the students will visit wearing their first communion clothes, attend mass together and share a party.

March of the Saints

The first and second grade students dress like the saints and march into church with the priest for the All Saints Day liturgy. During October the students have been studying about the saints and have taken books out of the library to read and share with their parents. After mass, the students march around the neighborhood. This is done for the benefit of the shut-ins who have been told of this event. Many of them are at their windows watching the march.

Greeting Cards

Students design and make Christmas cards. After they have completed these, they receive the names of persons living in a local hospital, nursing home and rehabilitation center. The students write a personal note to these people and send the cards to them. The same activity is carried out for Halloween, Thanksgiving, Valentine's Day, St. Patrick's Day, first day of spring, Easter, first day of summer and 4th of July. If the person receiving the card writes back an additional card is sent on that person's birthday. By doing this on a regular basis throughout the year students learn that concern for others is not limited to a few days each year.

Get Well Cards

Because young children are not allowed to visit hospitals, the students in the primary grades send greeting cards. Each student decorates the front of a 6" x 6" piece of construction paper. On the inside the students handwrite a message which includes a promise of prayers. The cards are sent weekly to the parishioners who are listed in the rectory prayer book as being sick. During the day, the students remember these people in their prayers.

Art for the Shut-ins

Each month students in the primary grades make a special piece of art for the home-bound members of the parish. Some of these art projects include paper-plate flowers, pumpkins, Pilgrims, wreaths, snowmen, hearts, shamrocks, Easter eggs, flags, and pictures of the saints. Students write little messages of greetings on the back of each art work. The priests and Eucharistic ministers cooperate by delivering these when they visit the homes of the shut-ins.

Extending Sympathy

Students seek to find ways to practice the corporal and spiritual works of mercy. Third grade students reflect on the meaning of comfort the sorrowful. They receive from the rectory the names of the recently deceased members of the parish. Cards of sympathy and promises of prayers are sent to the families of the deceased.

ACTIVITIES

INTERMEDIATE GRADE STUDENTS
Tuition Fund

Students develop a sense of stewardship by participating in the tuition fund or the "angel fund." The students contribute their own money by giving up candy, ice cream, other snacks, movies and other wants. The donor and amount of the contributions are kept anonymous. The fund is used to finance the education of students in the school who cannot afford to pay full tuition.

Gifts for Children of Prisoners

In early December the students learn of the needs of children whose parents are in prison. They learn how old they are and what they would like for Christmas. Each student assumes the responsibility for getting a gift for one of these children. These gifts are wrapped and an appropriate card is attached. The gifts are delivered to a central place for easy distribution.

Walk-a-thon for the Homeless

Fifth and sixth grade students conduct a walk-a-thon for the homeless. The students themselves develop all the rules and regulations for the program. They solicit sponsors for their walk. The proceeds are presented to the director of a shelter at a special school liturgy.
Care Kits for Third World Children

Students collect soap, toothbrushes, toothpaste, pencils, erasers, crayons, etc. These are made into little kits for students living in a third world country. They are brought back to the country when one of the missionaries of the same religious community that teaches in the school is returning to the country. Eye glasses can also be collected since many third world people have poor eyesight and lack funds for glasses.

Toys for Needy Children

Grade six plans a special mass in November for the entire school. Each student brings in a treasured toy in good condition or a new one. At the offertory these are brought to the altar. After mass the sixth grade students set a modest price on each toy. The toys are brought to a New Directions office where people can purchase the materials without having to feel that they are receiving charity.

Big Brothers and Big Sisters

Students in the intermediate grades work with students in the primary grades. This assistance is in the areas of reading or writing folk tales, mathematics drill and spelling. When the students attend assemblies or liturgies, the younger students are brought to them by their big brothers or sisters who remain with them through the session. The big brothers or sisters teach the little brothers or sisters to bless themselves, pledge allegiance to the flag and other such activities.

SERVICE OUTSIDE THE SCHOOL

Pen Pals with Prisoners

Sixth grade students are pen pals with prisoners. Each month Sojourners magazine publishes a list of prisoners who would like correspondence from people outside of prison. Students decide to participate after checking with their parents. The return address of the school is used. The brief letters tell about events in the school and the community. Discouragement may take place because some students will not receive a return letter. At this time, the teacher explains to the students that they are doing this for the prisoners not for themselves.

Foster Grandparent Reading and Visitation Program

Working with the activity director of a local nursing home a program is established to help both the patients and the students. Early in the year the students complete a card indicating their name, hobbies, birthday, interests and preference for a grandmother or grandfather. These are matched with patients in the home. An orientation visit is held to the nursing home in which one of the doctors explains some of the handicaps of elderly people. Visits with grandparents are scheduled for forty-five minutes once a month beginning in October. During this time the students must spend at least 10 minutes reading to their foster grandparent. The remainder of the time is spent playing checkers, putting together puzzles, talking or playing some game. Periodically, the students will give a special performance for the patients. Greeting cards are exchanged on the traditional holidays. Parents are encouraged to join their children in these visits. Sometimes children visit their grandparents on their own.

Advent Box

During Advent, fourth grade students circulate among their families an Advent box. This contains an Advent wreath, a manger scene, a Bible, Advent songs and a gift for the family that receives the box. The fourth grade students lead their families in the short prayer service. At the end of it, the family opens the gift which is from the family who had the Advent Box the previous evening. They then place their gift for the next family in the box. Toward the end of Advent, all fourth grade families come together to celebrate the liturgy. During the offertory children's clothing is collected for distribution to needy families. After mass the students and their families enjoy a social together.

Cleaner Environment

During the fifth and sixth grades' science unit on environment which lasts nine weeks, the students engage in nine hours of service to improve the environment in the neighborhood. Among the tasks that students do are: cutting grass, collecting bottles and cans, raking the lawn and leaves, washing graffiti, replanting bushes, collecting trash in vacant lots, sweeping sidewalks and washing windows. Parents and students sign a contract on the agreed upon work prior to the start of the project and a report of the work actually done at the end of the nine week period.

Pen Pals with C.C.D. Students

One teacher in the full-time Catholic school program and one teacher in the part-time religious education program team up to develop pen pals between the two groups. The students begin writing to each other by leaving notes on the blackboard. This leads to their sharing of addresses and phone numbers. At holidays, the students leave cards and treats for each other.
Birthday Party for the Elderly

On a given day each month students visit a nearby nursing home and conduct a birthday party for all the patients whose birthdays are that month. This activity includes decorating the home, writing cards and developing a program for the party.

Letters to Homebound Parishioners

Once a week the students select a homebound parishioner and write letters to that person. These letters are written on paper that the students decorate with a seasonal border. The students share the things that have happened in school. The letters provide the students with an opportunity to practice their best penmanship. "Happy Day" cards can be sent to these parishioners throughout the year.

ACTIVITIES

Advent Giving Tree

At the start of Advent a beautiful tree is erected in the church which is decorated by ornaments made by the students. The St. Vincent de Paul committee writes labels stating the needs of certain people. These are attached to the ornaments. After liturgy, students take an ornament from the tree and accept the responsibility of purchasing and wrapping what the label on the ornament requests. When the gifts have been purchased and wrapped they are placed under the tree and the ornament returned to the tree. All Advent long the students see the tree redecorated and the gifts accumulate. Just before Christmas a group of volunteers distribute the gifts.

Mission Lunch

On each Wednesday of Lent the students may eat a Chilonga lunch. The students wrote to this mission area and asked what the daily diet was. It consists basically of corn mush and greens. Those who voluntarily eat this lunch donate their lunch money to the mission fund. The older students periodically prepare box lunches for the younger students. The younger students pay $1.00 for this lunch. After they have selected their lunch, the older student who prepared the lunch eats with the younger student who picked it. This money is placed in the mission fund.

Christmas in a Box

Students in one school act as Santa Claus to families in a companion school. Each class agrees to create a Christmas box for one family. Students in the class pick out of a hat a particular item to be included in the box. These items include food, clothing, small toys and school supplies. Prior to this, the school receiving the boxes has told the other school the needs of the particular families who will receive the presents.

SERVICE TO THE SCHOOL

Cross-age Tutoring

Students in grades 5 thru 8 apply for the job of being a helper in a classroom for students in grades 1 thru 4. After obtaining the written permission of their parents and their teachers, they are "interviewed for the job." Those students who are accepted into the program are PALS (Partners Always Learn Something). They are permitted to leave their classroom two or three half-hours each week to assist a teacher in the classroom or playground. They must be able to keep up with their own school work. After acceptance into the program PALS attend a training session which explains to them and their parents their responsibilities. As they go to and from their assignments, they must "punch in and out" by stopping at the office. A special button for PALS has been developed for their identification when they are working.

Attention to Others

To build an awareness for others, the seventh grade students prepare colorful candy holders for the pre-kindergarten children for major holidays throughout the school year. The pre-kindergarten teacher instructs the seventh graders in how to make the materials. At the end of the school year, the seventh graders make finger puppets to give to the younger children on the last day of school. The puppets are presented personally and the young children learn who have been helping them all year.

Reading Partners

Throughout the school year the seventh graders devote twenty to thirty minutes each week in reading to the first graders. The first grade students bring their books to the seventh grade classroom where this activity takes place. After the seventh graders have read to the younger students, the first grade students spend a few minutes reading to the older students. At times the seventh and first graders develop a one sentence summary of what was read. During the year the older students may create books for the younger students and leave treats for them. The first grade students write thank-you notes to their helpers.

Student Supervisors

At the start of the school year, eighth grade students are invited to become helpers around the school. A letter is sent to the parents requesting their permission for their children's involvement in this program. The students select one of several options such as lunchroom monitor, parking lot attendant, morning school yard monitor, dismissal attendant, office clerical assistant or library aide. Teachers approve students' participation in this program. Students wear a school service button to identify themselves. Whenever students are supervising students at least one adult is also present.

St. Patrick’s Day Tea

The seventh grade students sponsor a St. Patrick’s Day for the senior citizens in the neighborhood. The students serve the traditionally fresh baked deserts, coffee, tea and punch to the guests. They also spend time chatting with them. Finally, the students provide a talent show or a sing-along. This can also be held at other times during the year.
Dinner for the Elderly

The elderly of the parish are invited to a dinner hosted by the eighth grade class. All the classes in the school donate food for the occasion. The eighth graders organize and conduct the entire day. They prepare the menu with the eating habits and needs of the elderly in mind, suggest to the classes what to donate, prepare the food, set the table and serve the food. The seventh graders assist by preparing the auditorium for the event. If any food remains, it is delivered to a nearby nursing home.
Monthly Visit to the Nursing Home

After attending mass on Friday, students visit the local nursing home. Some of the students bring the patients confined to wheelchairs to the room for Bingo. During the game the students assist the people with their cards and numbers. After the game the patients are brought back to their rooms by the students. Some students fill water pitchers and take them to the rooms, others deliver the weekly newspaper. Some of the girls help the women with their hair and manicure their nails; the boys play cards or checkers with the men. Prior to the monthly visit the students make little gifts for the patients. These gifts include bookmarks, greeting cards, or little designs to hang in their room according to the season.
