A Multi-Cultural Women's History Elementary Curriculum Unit.

This curriculum unit for elementary students contains five short biographies of American women from different cultural groups. (1) Mary Shadd Cary--teacher, newspaper editor, and lawyer--was a free Black active as an abolitionist, a proponent of black migration to Canada before the Civil War, and a suffragist; (2) Frances Willard--teacher and the first American female college president--worked for prohibition and woman's suffrage and traveled the nation speaking about the need to start kindergartens, improve prisons, and strengthen child labor and worker protection laws; (3) Tye Leung Schulze--first Chinese-American woman voter and first Chinese-American federal civil servant--worked as an interpreter with newly arrived Chinese immigrants and helped young Chinese girls escape from conditions of slavery; (4) Felisa Rincon de Gautier--first female mayor of San Juan--worked throughout her life to improve the living conditions of poor Puerto Rican people; (5) Ada Deer--first woman chief of the Menominee tribe and now a university teacher and speaker for the American Indian women's leadership network, OHOYO--lobbied Congress to pass the Menominee Restoration Act, which reestablished tribal land and rights. Follow-up lessons for each section include defining and discussing vocabulary words, finding and using root words, reading comprehension, and discussion and writing activities. Closure projects include individual, small group, and whole class activities in math, art, creative writing, public speaking, history, and geography. The unit also contains teacher's answer sheets and descriptions of other curriculum resources developed by the National Women's History Project. (SV)

Dear Colleague,

We are pleased to offer this multi-cultural curriculum unit for elementary school use. The development of this unit was brought about by numerous requests for multi-cultural women's history materials for elementary students. We have designed the unit to be stimulating and easy to use. It is our hope that these materials will enhance your classroom celebration of National Women's History Month, and encourage the inclusion of women's history into the curriculum year 'round.

The unit contains five short biographies of women from different cultural groups. The vocabulary exercises and follow-up lessons provide an opportunity for skills building in the language arts and for critical thinking. Closure activities include art, math, and "extender" projects.

The first section of each follow-up lesson follows the following format:

LANGUAGE DEVELOPMENT SKILLS

A. Define and discuss the vocabulary words. This may be done as a whole class exercise or in small groups with each group taking part of the list, defining the meaning and then reporting back to the class.

B. Alphabetize the vocabulary words. This is a life skill that needs to be reinforced because it is the way of unlocking access to information in our reference materials and libraries.

C. Language Potpourri. Includes such activities as finding and using root words, reading comprehension, syllabication and vocabulary development.

D. Discussion/ Writing Experience. These activities allow and encourage the child to process the information and ideas presented in each biography.

BEYOND BIOGRAPHY BONUS

This section offers ideas for exploring creative thinking and suggestions for culminating projects.

Each story mentions several cities, states and other locations both within and outside of the United States. Place names are listed in the vocabulary section. Places mentioned in the biography of each woman can be located on a map while the story is being read, or afterward as an enrichment exercise. Suggestions for a class project using the place names are included in "Suggested Activities" at the end of the unit.

This curriculum unit covers a spectrum of ability levels. It will be necessary to adapt various parts to your own students needs. In order to assure each child success, we suggest a cooperative learning approach to the tasks that may be beyond a student's present ability level. Forming study groups which reflect a cross section of learning styles and levels would work especially well for the concluding activities - "Above and Beyond Biography", "Made to Order Math", and "Making Changes--Each in Her Own Way".

Some of these activities require special materials such as daily newspapers, and advanced preparation. We encourage you to read through the entire unit to familiarize yourself with the organization and content.

Since we have been teachers for many years, we know how great the demands are on your time and energy. We hope this unit will make teaching Women's History easier for you and more enjoyable for your students.

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

Several people were responsible for bringing this unit to its final form.

The concept for the unit originated in a conversation between Bonnie Eisenberg and Barbara Tomin. Bonnie served as the overall project coordinator; Barbara Tomin and her colleague, Carol Burgoa, researched and wrote the biographies and accompanying student activities.

Claudia McKnight, as in the past, arranged for the materials to be field tested. Following their use she suggested further activities which were incorporated in the final draft.

Lark Lucas contributed the art work; Dave Crawford developed the computer formats; Sunny Bristol and Marylynne Slayen served as copy editors.

COVER ILLUSTRATION

MARY SHADD CARY
"Decades of Dedication"
1823-1893

Teacher. Principal. Newspaper Editor. Army Recruiter. Suffragist. Abolitionist. Lawyer. This was Mary Shadd Cary, a Black woman, born in 1823, who dedicated her life to helping her people.

In 1823, when Mary Shadd was born, most Black people in America were slaves. There were many free Blacks, though. Some had earned money to buy their own freedom, and some who lived in the North had been freed by state law. Thousands had escaped slavery by running away from their slave masters in the South to the free states of the North. Others were free because abolitionists (people who believed that slavery was wrong) sometimes bought slaves and gave them their freedom. Many of these abolitionists risked their own safety by working as part of the Underground Railroad, the secret route of safe houses for slaves escaping to the North.

Mary was the oldest of the thirteen children of Abraham and Harriet Shadd, both free Blacks in the state of Delaware. Her father, a shoemaker, was a well-known abolitionist. He spent his whole life working with the American Anti-Slavery Society to free other Black people from slavery. Her father's dedication to the cause of freedom was passed on to Mary and her brothers and sisters. They, too, worked to improve the lives of other Black people.

Mary went to a Quaker school in Pennsylvania. At the age of 16, she became a teacher. Teaching was one of the few jobs women were allowed to have in those days. From 1839 to 1850 Mary started and taught in schools for Black children in Delaware, Pennsylvania and New York.

In 1850 a new law was passed called the "Fugitive Slave Act". It offered a reward for anyone who turned in runaway slaves. This same law also increased the punishment for anyone who helped runaway slaves get to freedom in the North. Because of this new law, people sometimes kidnapped free Blacks so they could turn them in as escaped slaves and collect the reward. This was a very dangerous time for both free Blacks and runaway slaves.

After the Fugitive Slave Act became law, runaway slaves had to go all the way to Canada, where slavery was illegal, to be sure they could be safe. Many free Blacks also went to Canada because they felt they could no longer be safe in the United States. Mary Shadd went to Canada to see if it really was a better place for Black people to live. She decided it was and she became a leader and spokesperson for Blacks moving to Canada. She traveled all around the United States speaking to groups of Black people, telling them about life in Canada and why they would be safer there.

In 1851 Mary moved to Windsor, Canada. She opened a school for Black children and started a newspaper to encourage other Blacks to come to Canada. It was not long before she became well known as the first Black woman in North America to edit a weekly newspaper. She was said to be "one of the best editors in the province, even if she did wear petticoats."

Mary married Thomas Cary, a barber who was from Toronto, in 1856. During the Civil War she often traveled from Canada to the United States, to Indiana, Ohio, Michigan and Pennsylvania. She recruited Black soldiers to join the Union Army to fight against slavery. While traveling from state to state she became quite famous for her strong anti-slavery speeches.

In 1865 the Civil War ended and the slaves in the rebel states were freed. When Mary's husband died she and her daughter moved to Washington, D.C. There she worked as a teacher and school principal for the next fifteen years. She became an active suffragist and spoke at the National Woman's Suffrage Convention in 1878. Suffragists were women and men who worked to get the right to vote for women.

After all Mary had done, she still had one more goal for herself. Mary Shadd Cary wanted to become a lawyer! At the age of 60 she enrolled in Howard Law School. She graduated and practiced law until her death ten years later.

It is sad that a woman who did so much for her people should be left out of nearly all of our history books. Don't you agree?

LANGUAGE DEVELOPMENT SKILLS

A. Define and discuss the vocabulary words and key phrases. This may be done as a whole class exercise or in small groups with each group taking part of the list, defining the meanings and then reporting back to the class.

B. Alphabetize the vocabulary words. This is a skill that needs to be reinforced because it is the way of unlocking access to information in our reference materials and libraries.

C. Reach for the Roots. (See next page).

D. Mary Shadd Cary accomplished many things in her lifetime. She was well known and respected. However, she is not mentioned in most of today's history books. Discuss why you think she was left out. How is it decided who will be included in history books?

BEYOND BIOGRAPHY BONUS

A. Collect the new history books in your school. Look in the index of each. Count and compare the number of women listed to the number of men. Find some history books which are more than ten years old. Count again and look for any changes. Make a graph of your results. Has the number of women increased!? Why do you think this has happened?

B. List 10 famous Black people and tell why you think they should be in your history books. List 10 famous women and tell why you think they should be in your history books.

C. At your school or local library, count the number of biographies written about women and the number about men. We suggest the use of the card catalog rather than looking on the shelves. Using the figures, graph the results. What conclusion can you draw? Give a minimum of five reasons to explain your conclusion. Compare this data with your findings in exercise A. Is there a cause and effect relationship? Support your answer. Write a summarizing conclusion combining your findings for both exercises.

FRANCES WILLARD
The "Do Everything" Woman
1839-1898

From a lonely pioneer girl to the leader of the nation's largest women's social change organization, Frances Willard grew up to make a difference! She led over 200,000 women to become active in public life.

Frances Willard was born in 1839 in New York. Her family moved to Ohio and then to the sparsely settled Wisconsin frontier. There were no schools there. She and her brother and sister almost never saw or played with any other children.

Frances did not like housework. She thought it was a lot more fun to hunt and share her brother's outdoor life. She wore her hair short and insisted on being called "Frank". Pioneer life was very lonely. It was especially hard because her father wouldn't allow Frances and her sister to ride horseback to visit their distant neighbors. He thought horseback riding was unladylike. Her mother was her teacher. Frances loved to read. Her favorite books were pirate tales and Wild-West stories.

Her parents weren't the only people who treated females and males differently. Many laws kept women from being able to do things they wanted to do. One law would only let men vote. When Frances' brother cast his first vote, she was furious! She knew that just because she was a female, she would never be allowed to vote. This was very unfair, she thought.

Frances was allowed to do one thing that was unusual for a young woman -- she went to college. She graduated from college with honors even though she had only gone to school for a total of four years. What a good teacher her mother must have been! Wanting to be financially independent, Frances worked as a teacher for several years. Teaching was one of the few jobs women were allowed to have at that time.

Frances became a famous educator and the first American woman college president. But it was not until she was 35 that she found her life's most satisfying work -- organizing people to improve the lives of America's women and children.

During the late 1800's life for women and children was quite different from what it is today. Wives and children were both considered to be the property of their husbands and fathers. Very few women worked outside their homes except as teachers, or in factories under very poor conditions. Often children worked many hours a day for very little pay. The law said all of the money earned by any family member belonged to the husband or father to spend in any way he wanted.

Frances Willard understood these problems and knew they were bad for women and their children. Two major problems concerned her very much. One was alcohol abuse. Many men would spend much of their time after work drinking in saloons. Some even spent the grocery and rent money on liquor. Sometimes men would return home drunk and beat their wives and children.

The other problem that concerned Frances was that no women could vote for lawmakers or vote to make or change local laws. She saw an important connection between these two problems. She thought that if women could vote they would vote for temperance laws. Such laws would make buying, selling and even drinking alcohol illegal. By getting the vote, women would gain power and independence. The women and men who worked for temperance were called "prohibitionists" because they wanted to prohibit (stop) the use of liquor. The people who wanted women to vote were called "suffragists". (Another word for voting is "suffrage").

Frances Willard got busy. She became active in the Women's Christian Temperance Union (WCTU). Very soon she was the leader of that organization, a job she held for 20 years. With Frances Willard as its leader the WCTU grew to be a very large organization. In fact, it was the biggest women's organization in the whole country. Because Frances made the WCTU so popular and so successful, she was called an "organizational genius."

She convinced thousands and thousands of women that they needed to become actively involved in the world in order to improve conditions inside and outside of their homes. She was famous for her persuasive speeches that convinced women of their power to take action. In one year, 1883, she made speeches in every single state and territory in the nation! In these speeches she talked about the need to start kindergartens for young children, improve prisons, improve child labor and worker protection laws, as well as the importance of working for prohibition and woman's suffrage.

No wonder she called it her "Do Everything" policy! Frances Willard worked for any change that would help women and children. For ten years she traveled about 18,000 miles a year speaking to huge crowds and making headlines wherever she went. She wanted women to change from timid, isolated housewives into politically aware, self-reliant citizens. She knew this would happen when women started working outside of their homes for temperance and woman’s suffrage.

Later in her life she changed her idea away from total prohibition of alcohol to the need for alcohol abuse education. She believed that it was better for people to learn about the effects of drinking too much rather than to forbid them to drink at all.

Frances Willard was such a popular and well respected woman that when she died in 1898, 20,000 people came to say "goodbye" to this great woman as she lay in state for six hours at the Women's Temple in Chicago. Because she had become such a respected national figure, the State of Illinois honored her by placing a statue of Frances Willard in Washington D.C. It was the first statue of a woman in Statuary Hall at the U.S. Capitol.

Today we still have problems with alcohol and drug abuse and family violence in the United States. Thousands of women, men and children are killed each year by alcohol, drunk drivers, drug overdoses and family violence. Just as there was a temperance movement in the days of Frances Willard, we have a movement against alcohol and drug abuse today. Mothers Against Drunk Drivers (MADD), was started by Candy Lightner, a mother whose teenage daughter was killed by a drunk driver. Now there are SADD groups, too (Students Against Drunk Driving). They want to keep teenagers who have been drinking from driving. Other groups work to educate people about drug abuse. There are shelters (safe houses and refuges) for battered women and their children to go to when they are in danger of being beaten by their husbands or other male friends. Today many people are still working hard to solve these problems.

LANGUAGE DEVELOPMENT SKILLS
A. Define and discuss the vocabulary words and key phrases. This may be done as a whole class exercise or in small groups with each group taking part of the list, defining the meanings and then reporting back to the class.
B. Alphabetize the vocabulary words.
C. Frances' Facts (See page 14)

BEYOND BIOGRAPHY BONUS
A. Familiarize your students with the organization and sections of the telephone book. Then have them use the phone book to locate the agencies and services in your community that help individuals and families with alcohol, drug abuse, and family violence problems. Example: Alcoholics Anonymous, Mothers Against Drunk Drivers, Al-Anon, Al-Aten, Child Protective Services, Battered Women Services, etc. Write or call these agencies to obtain literature to be shared with the class. (County, state and federal agencies have a wealth of materials.)

Generally, these agencies have a Speaker's Bureau. Depending on the interest of the students, schedule speakers to address the class. Older students can do the scheduling. We suggest the students prepare a list of sample questions ahead of time to be shared with the speaker. This will allow him/her an opportunity to assess the class's depth of understanding of and sensitivity to the topic.
B. Collect articles and information about drugs and alcohol and family violence from newspapers, magazines and pamphlets. Use these and the literature you receive from the agencies to make a bulletin board. Divide the bulletin board into two sections -- "The Problems" and "The Solutions." Categorize and post the information.

C. Frances Willard was a well known and respected national figure for twenty years. Discuss what it means to be a "national figure". What women, active in public life today, might be considered national figures?

* Special Challenge: Rewrite each false sentence to make it a true statement.
TYE LEUNG SCHULZE
First in Many Ways
1888-1972

This Chinese American woman lived within two cultures and helped create a better life for herself and other Chinese women living in the American West.

Tye Leung lived with her parents, her sister and her six brothers in a tiny, crowded two room apartment in San Francisco’s Chinatown. Her family was unusual. Nearly all of the Chinese people in the United States at this time were men who had come to work on the railroads. It was a "bachelor society," because most Chinese women were not allowed into the United States.

In 1901, when Tye was only 13 years old, her parents decided to follow the Chinese custom and arranged for her to marry an older man. They were going to send her to Butte, Montana, to marry someone she had never met. Tye wanted to choose her own husband. Being very smart and feeling "westernized," she did something very brave. She refused to go to Montana. Instead, she ran away to the Presbyterian Mission Home run by Donaldina Cameron. The mission was a refuge for young Chinese girls in San Francisco. There they were taught English, sewing and American customs.

Tye had gone to school for six years in Chinatown. She was very educated for a Chinese girl. In fact, she was one of the very few people in America at that time who could speak both English and Chinese. At the Presbyterian Mission Home Tye started to use her skill as an interpreter.

At this time in China, poor families sometimes had to sell their daughters to get money to buy food. They loved their girls, but hoped they would grow up in nice families. Unfortunately, many of these young girls were sold again and sent to the United States to work as slaves and servants. Often they were mistreated and were very unhappy. Some of the slave girls sent secret messages to Miss Cameron at the Mission asking her to help them escape. The girls were told to wear a yellow ribbon on the day of the planned escape, so Miss Cameron and her helpers would be able to know who they were.

Tye Leung's first job was a dangerous one--interpreter on the rescue team. Miss Cameron, Tye and the police would find the girl wearing the yellow ribbon and rescue her from slavery. Then she would go with the two women to live and study at the Mission Home.

Tye got her next job because she had become an expert interpreter and had a special understanding of her people. She was hired to be the assistant to the Matron of the new Angel Island Detention Center in the middle of the San Francisco Bay. There she would help the new Chinese immigrant women and children while they waited for their entry papers to be completed so they could live in the United States. When she took this job, in 1910, Tye became the first Chinese-American civil servant for the United States government.

SAN FRANCISCO EXAMINER
May 15, 1912
San Francisco Has Only
Chinese Woman Voter in History

This was one of the many newspaper headlines about the first American-born Chinese woman voter, Tye Leung. Women had only been allowed to vote in California for one year, and never before had a Chinese-American woman voted anywhere in the U.S. Tye knew that voting was a way to influence the government and help her people.

While working at Angel Island, something good happened, and something bad happened. Tye met Charles Frederick Schulze, who worked as an immigration inspector. They fell in love and wanted to get married. That is when the trouble began. Their parents and California law were all against their marriage because Charles was White. From 1906 to 1948, California had laws which made it illegal for White and non-white people to marry.

Tye and Charles had to go all the way to Vancouver, Washington, to get married. When they returned home both of them were fired from their jobs because of the terrible prejudice against mixed marriages. The Schulzes were a brave couple, marrying for love and willing to face the cruel discrimination of that time.

Tye's special skill as an interpreter helped her to find work in Chinatown. She had many interesting jobs in her lifetime: social worker and bookkeeper at the Chinese Hospital, a hostess at the Chinese Tea Garden and, for twenty years, night operator at the Chinese telephone company. She and Charles raised four children, two boys and two girls. 'rye Leung Schulze was a loved and respected member of the San Francisco Chinese community. She was always willing to volunteer when someone needed an interpreter. She died in San Francisco at the age of 84. Tye Leung Schulze, a special, tiny woman, only four feet tall, was brave, kind, and a "first" in many ways.

In 1898, when Felisa Rincon was born, girls were expected to become mothers and homemakers. They were not sent to school to learn to read or write. Who would believe that a girl growing up at this time would become the Mayor of San Juan, the largest city in Puerto Rico?

Felisa was lucky because her parents allowed her to go to school. She was a good student. She also loved to visit her uncle, Tio Paco. He was a pharmacist. She liked to watch him at work, mixing medicines, and giving advice and injections to heal people. She dreamed of becoming a pharmacist, too.

When Felisa was eleven years old, two terrible things happened! Her mother died while giving birth to her eighth child. Not only did Felisa lose her mother, but she also lost her dream. Her father insisted on following the Puerto Rican custom of having the oldest daughter stay at home to raise the younger brothers and sisters. Felisa had to quit school. How sad she was!

Her father bought a big sugar cane farm, and the family moved out into the country. Unlike the children of most plantation owners, Felisa became a good friend of the workers and their families. She was educated and knew a lot about cures for illnesses. Her new friends depended upon her advice and help, especially when their children were sick. She was able to use many of the things her Tio Paco had taught her.

When Felisa was a young woman her family moved back to the city of San Juan. In 1932, Puerto Rican women were finally given the right to vote. Her father, like most Puerto Rican men, felt that women would lose their femininity if they voted or became involved in public life. Felisa insisted on voting and was the fifth person in line to register. She then went out to register other women to vote, too.
At that time, most people in Puerto Rico were either very rich or very poor. Felisa was rich, but she wanted to work with the poor women. They began to trust her to help with their many problems. This was the beginning of her life-long work to improve the living conditions of the Puerto Rican people.

In 1934, Felisa went to New York City to learn the sewing business. She returned to San Juan and opened her own clothing store. She wanted to give jobs to the poor people from the slums. Families living in the slums had many problems: crowded living conditions, disease, not enough good food to eat, poor schools, low pay and not enough jobs. She tried to help them solve these problems in any way she could.

While some people were talking about whether Puerto Rico should become a part of the United States or be an independent country, Felisa and others were more concerned about improving the living conditions of the workers and people in the city's slums. She started taking action. It was also then that she met and married Jenaro de Gautier.

Because of her ability to solve problems, Felisa was chosen to be the Mayor of San Juan. She was the first woman mayor the city ever had. She had been offered the job in 1940 and in 1944, but had to say "no" both times because her father and husband did not want her getting into politics. But the people really needed someone who cared about their city and its problems. Felisa decided to say "yes" when she was asked the third time in 1946. This was what she wanted to do.

During the twenty years she was "Alcadesa" (Mayor), more government housing, schools, day care and health care centers were built than ever before. Every Wednesday Felisa held an open house where any citizen could speak to her about their problems. Many people asked for her personal help and advice, which she gladly gave. She was well known for involving herself in the everyday problems of the people and for finding solutions.

Felisa Rincon de Gautier's work in San Juan gained her world-wide attention. She went on many goodwill tours and received awards from many countries. She often visited the many Puerto Ricans living in New York City to help them become better adjusted to living in the United States.

At the age of seventy, Dona Felisa retired from her job as Mayor, but she has remained active in politics. She is thought of as a warm and caring political leader who proved that women can take an equal part in public life, become powerful leaders, and make permanent improvements in the life of a big city!

LANGUAGE DEVELOPMENT SKILLS
A. Define and discuss the vocabulary words and key phrases. This may be done as a whole class exercise or in small groups with each group taking part of the list, defining the meaning and then reporting back to the class.

B. Alphabetize the vocabulary words. This is a skill that needs to be reinforced because it is the way of unlocking access to information in our reference materials and libraries.

C. Match the Meaning (See next page)

BEYOND BIBLIOGRAPHY BONUS
A. The class brainstorms what they feel are the major problems either at school or in the community. The students then break into interest groups to explore the problem and its possible solutions in greater depth. After all groups report, the class chooses one of the problems to be a class project. After reaching consensus on strategies and solutions, the group plans and carries out a presentation to whomever has jurisdiction over the situation. The students need to be involved in the democratic process and to learn that their ideas do have value.

"My name is Deer, like Running Deer. I'm an Indian from a reservation. I don't let people walk on me. I fight back."

One night in Washington D.C. a forty-seven-year-old woman was walking home from her job at the Native American Rights Fund. Out of the dark came two muggers who snatched her purse and ran down the street. She thought, "I'm not going to let these guys get away with this. It's wrong."

She began yelling and ran after them. During the chase, she found two police who stopped the bus the muggers were on. One of them was caught. When she talked about it later she said, "I thought about the problems of losing my purse. But I was also acting mostly instinctively. My reaction to life is not to let things go by me. My reaction is to act."

This courageous woman is Ada Deer, a Menominee Indian from Wisconsin. She lives her life by taking risks and fighting back. Ada was born in 1935 on the Menominee Reservation, and grew up with her brother and sister in a one-room log cabin with no running water or electricity. When she finished high school her tribe gave her a scholarship so she could go to college. A few years later Ada Deer became the first person from her tribe to graduate from the University of Wisconsin.

Ada was proud of this achievement! She promised that one day she would repay her tribe for sending her to college. She knew how valuable her college education could be--for herself and her people--and she was grateful for what they had given her.

Ada didn't stop there. She also earned a Masters Degree in Social Work from Columbia University. Then she went to Minneapolis and began working in the public schools. She even started to go to law school! But the time had come for Ada Deer to keep her promise to her tribe.

The Menominees were in trouble. Because of an old law, they were in danger of losing their land and their rights as a tribe. Ada Deer and other Menominees were very angry at the government's unfair and unjust treatment of American Indians. They decided to use their power to take action. They held meetings and demonstrations to tell the press and the people what they wanted. They wanted to get their land back and they wanted to continue to have important services such as health clinics and schools.

The Menominee needed a leader. They looked to Ada Deer because she was educated and understood how the U.S. Government works. Together they wrote a new law which would restore their rights as a tribe. Ada worked very hard to lobby important and powerful people in Washington D.C. to pass this new law.

All her hard work paid off! In 1973, the Menominee Restoration Act was finally passed into law by the U.S. Congress. It returned their land and restored their right to live as a tribe. This was not only good for the Wisconsin Menominees, but it also made it much easier for other tribes to keep the government from doing the same injustice to them. Convincing the United States Congress to change its own unfair law was Ada Deer's biggest success!

In 1973, Ada Deer became the first woman chief of the Menominee tribe, even though some of the men didn't like the idea of a woman leader. In 1978 and in 1982, Ada Deer took risks again by becoming a candidate for Secretary of State in Wisconsin. She was the first American Indian to run for such a high office. Although she came in second both times, Ada learned many valuable skills that she is now teaching to other women. She knows the difference one person can make by becoming involved in the working of our government. She knows that it is important to try. That is what risk-taking is all about! She said, "I had fun--even if I didn't win."

In 1982 Ada Deer won the Wonder Woman Foundation Award for "Women Taking Risks." She won this award because she had so many of the same special qualities as Wonder Woman: compassion, honesty, courage, strength, and wisdom. When she was given the $7,500 award, she was quoted as saying,
"Wonder Woman converts her enemies, she doesn’t conquer enemies. That’s what I try to do in my work." She chose to use her prize money to pay her campaign debts.

Today Ada Deer teaches at the University of Wisconsin. She is also a leader of the American Indian women's leadership network, OHOYO (which means "woman" in the Choctaw Indian language). She travels all over the country and is often asked to talk to groups about American Indians and Indian women. In her speeches she says, "One of our precious rights as American citizens is to speak up...to speak out...and to work for change within the system."

Ada Deer has never forgotten her goals:
--Protecting, restoring and fighting for Indian rights
--Helping Indians and non-Indians understand each other
--Teaching Indians how to become active in our government

When Ada was asked what she was planning to do in the future, she said, "In my heart of hearts, I think it would be great to be a United States Senator, but that’s something else again. Our society needs risk-takers, don’t you think?" We wouldn’t be surprised someday to read about Senator Ada Deer from Wisconsin. Would you?

I. INDIVIDUAL ACTIVITIES

A. "AUTO"BIOGRAPHICAL SPEECHES (writing, public speaking)
   1. Students choose one of the five women and write an "auto"biographical speech, as though she/he were the actual person speaking to a crowd. The speech should include facts and feelings about her life as well as persuasive statements about the movements or issues with which she was involved. If possible, students can videotape the speeches and distribute the videotape to other classrooms to be shown during National Women's History Month.
   2. Put together teams of six students; one will be the introductory speaker/poster bearer (see Small Group Activities), the others will each represent one of the five women. These teams of six then present their speeches to other classes during National Women's History Month. Materials developed in the small group assignments can accompany these presentations.
   3. Put together research teams for each woman. One is the woman presenting the speech, another is the reporter who interviews members of the audience after the speech to find out their reaction to what they heard. Have students research the popular views of the era so their responses will be realistic. This would provide an excellent opportunity for students to process the information and ideas they have just heard. This would be especially effective as a video tape with the speech and interviews.

B. WONDER PERSON AWARDS (creative writing)
   1. Students write Public Service Announcements for the local radio stations honoring each of the five women for release during National Women's History Month. These PSA's (Public Service Announcements) are generally 30 seconds. Prepare one for each day educating the public on the deeds of many women. As an extender, have them prepare one for each day of Women's History Month which would educate the public on the deeds of many women. Radio stations are very receptive to this type of activity if they have enough lead time. Schedule a representative from the local press to show the class how to write PSA's and press releases.
   2. Students project into the future and win an award for an outstanding achievement in their career. They then write a press release summarizing their life and their career. Be sure to include: the specific contribution or achievement for which the award is given, what the prize is and how it will be used. These press releases can be read orally and then assembled into a class newspaper or into an "Award Winning" bulletin board. Include a photo or illustration of the award winners. A bulletin board like this will delight parents at Open House and help build the students' self esteem.

C. WOMEN'S HISTORY MONTH MAP (geography)
   1. Choose a color and symbol for each of the five women.
   2. Identify and locate on the map the places where the women lived and traveled.
   3. Mark the various locations for each woman using her color and symbol.

II. SMALL GROUP ACTIVITIES

A. Divide the class into five groups, one for each of the women. The tasks for each group are:
   1. (Art) Design a poster/chart/collage that represents the life and work of that woman. (This should be a group effort, so be sure to allow time for planning, layout, and discussing different media.)
   2. (History) Design a timeline for the woman including her birth and death dates (where applicable), major events in her life, and significant historical events during her lifetime. The timeline may be illustrated.
   3. (Art) Design a bulletin board "quilt" where each student designs a square to represent herself/himself. Interspersed are squares representing the accomplishments of the 5 women. Use this year's National Women's History Month theme as the title.

(These completed projects will be used to accompany the speakers in Individual Activities # 1)
III. TOTAL CLASS ACTIVITIES

A. TIMELINE (art, history)
1. Create a timeline incorporating the data from the timelines developed for the individual women (See Small Group Activities #2). Use paper which comes on a large roll, or computer paper.
2. Color coding for each woman will be helpful. One method is to use crayon for the various dates illustrated and then, using a water-diluted paint (light wash) brush over the time span of each woman in her color. This will clearly present the overlapping of each woman's life period in a crayon resist effect. Another approach would be to list the dates in black marker, from first date to present, with each woman having her own colored strand in a different colored marker. (Do not use crayons, they do not show up well at a distance. Also it will show up better if the writing is done with a wide black marking pen.) This creates a highly visible display that everyone can help design and maintain.

B. MEET THE PRESS PANEL (oral and written language)
(This is an activity especially designed for your "hams" and "verbally active" students.)
1. Simulate a "Meet the Press" program with a cast consisting of the five women, one announcer and three to five reporters. The reporters should write down their interview questions in advance. Questions should be factual as well as opinion-based.
2. A class assignment to precede this activity: Students should watch "Meet the Press," "McNeil-Lehrer Report," "David Brinkley," "Face the Nation," or a similar program to gain an understanding of the format and questioning procedure of such programs.

C. NEWSPAPER WATCH (reading comprehension)
1. Contact your local daily newspaper and ask for a free subscription during National Women's History Month. (Usually newspapers are happy to supply single or class sets for classroom use.)
2. Divide the class into teams, one for each week during NWHM. Assign at least one student each day to be responsible to read and clip all of the news articles and pictures (not advertisements) about women for each day. Especially look for articles about women's achievements and contributions, women in history, changing roles and status on legal or economic issues effecting women, or articles about women's participation in your local community or in state, national, or world affairs.
3. (See Frances Willard--Beyond Biography D for additional Newspaper Watch activities).
4. Have each week's Newspaper Watch team select from their articles one local woman to invite to speak to your class about her life and achievements. The class should prepare questions in advance of her visit. Don't be intimidated by the person's fame or high office. Most people will be flattered, especially if the students handle the invitation and explain the project.
5. Invite the press. Contact the education/public affairs editor of your local newspaper and tell her/him about your project. Perhaps they would like to cover one or more of the visits to your class. The publicity will benefit your school, your class, and promote National Women's History Month. Newspapers are always looking for positive local education stories, and pictures.

D. HERE AND NOW WOMEN
It is important for children to realize that women are making history today in all of our local communities. This activity is designed to bring women into the classroom as role models for motivation and inspiration. It is one thing to read about women's contributions in history, and quite another to talk with today's achieving women.

It would be an excellent classroom exercise to choose the community speakers. This should be done at least a month in advance of the desired speaking dates. Also, the speaker should have adequate background information on the project and the class so that she will plan accordingly.
This can be a time consuming project, so you might want to enlist the help of a volunteer or a classroom committee to assist with phone calls, scheduling, etc. Contact one woman whose life can, in some direct way, represent each of the five poster women.

Mary Shadd Cary: Contact a Black civil rights organization in your area for a woman representative to talk to your class about current civil rights and discrimination issues, the changing roles of Black women or other current issues.

Frances Willard: Invite a representative of Mother’s Against Drunk Drivers, an alcohol or drug abuse agency, or a family violence prevention program to give a presentation to the class on the effects of alcohol/drug abuse or family violence on family life. Ask the person also to talk about how national organizations go about increasing public interest and support for their cause.

Tye Leung Schulze: Invite a Chinese woman to give a presentation on the changing role of Chinese American women, the history of Chinese women in America, or current issues related to Asian immigration and cultural issues.

Felisa Rincón de Gautier: Invite a woman who holds a public office in your community, City Council, County Supervisor or state office. Ask her to talk about what her branch of government does, her training, her job responsibilities, what it is like to run for public office and any special problems or successes she has experienced as a woman in public office.

Ada Deer: Invite an American Indian to speak about their tribal customs, Indian rights, history, or other current issues.

When making your contacts for speakers be as specific as possible about the topics or issues you would like to have addressed. The speaker will be more comfortable knowing exactly what you want her to cover, and the presentation will be more likely to meet your expectations. Encourage the speaker to talk about her own life in addition to talking about issues, and to bring in family pictures or other items which will enable the class to get a sense of her as a “whole person.”
Math skills are always needed, even when you are learning to understand history. You will need your five biographies close at hand to complete these problems. You will also need to be a careful reader.

LOOKING TO THE FUTURE

Let’s design the National Women’s History Month poster for next year! Whose pictures shall we put on the poster? Choose five women from history or who are currently alive to be on the poster next year. Include your reasons for choosing these particular women. What is it about their lives that makes them "historically significant" in your mind? Find pictures of these women and design a poster displaying them. Send your poster ideas to the National Women’s History Project, P.O. Box 3716, Santa Rosa, CA 95402. All submissions will be acknowledged!
Dear Student,

You have just completed a study of the lives of five historically significant women—five women of different races and cultures, five women of different eras and different achievements. Each woman contributed in her own way using her own skills to change or influence what she saw to be an injustice. Each woman made a difference by taking her energy and talents out into the world. Each woman had the ability to convert her feelings into action. We hope their stories will inspire you to use your feelings and talents to make a difference, too!

Sincerely,

the authors

This unit is one of the many types of curriculum materials developed by the National Women's History Project for use at all grade levels. Our Project exists solely to promote a multicultural awareness of women's history in schools and communities nationwide. We are delighted with the public response to our efforts.

National Women's History Month, originated by members of this Project, has become a regular feature on school, workplace and community calendars. It is our goal to eventually have the study of women's history included as a regular part of the K-12 curriculum.

The Women's History Network, coordinated out of our office, includes hundreds of individual and institutional participants working together across the country to write women back into history. A quarterly newsletter keeps current information in circulation; directories make each participant accessible to the others.

The Women's History Resource Service, also operated from the Project office, has been expanding rapidly since its inception in 1983. Through its Resource Catalog a plethora of classroom materials--books, curriculum units, posters, records, games and more--are available by mail order.

The NWHP consulting staff conducts inservice training workshops and curriculum conferences for school districts throughout the country. Our four and five-day Curriculum Conferences, held each summer in California, draw educators and community activists from across the nation.

Continuous expansion of our Resource Service is a necessary part of our plan for financial self-sufficiency. We are a non-profit, educational corporation; your donations above the price of the items ordered are tax deductible, and will greatly facilitate our organizing work.

It is our hope that the services and materials we offer will be a useful resource and support for your efforts to write women back into history.
