PEER-RECOMMENDED BOOKS FOR THE YOUNG: A CATEGORIZED ANNOTATED BIBLIOGRAPHY SELECTED FROM CHILDREN'S CHOICES

Elizabeth C. Webre

Teachers of young children want to share books with their charges for many reasons. First, they want to share with children the wonderful world of words, giving them opportunity to appreciate such phrases as "with a bangety, bumpety, rattle-y song" (Wright, 1954), "but Drummer Hoff fired it off!" (Emberly, 1967), "hundreds of cats, thousands of cats, millions and billions and trillions of cats" (Gag, 1928). Also, teachers of young children want to share the tales that have delighted other children, traditional tales that are now considered classics.

In sharing books with the young, teachers may also have in mind more specific objectives, such as the reinforcement of letter names or counting from one to ten, or the further development of such basic concepts as size and shape. At a more advanced level, teachers may share books appropriate for beginning readers.

Many sources of books are available to teachers of young children. One useful source is Children's Choices, an annotated list of books chosen by children. Each year since 1975 the International Reading Association -- Children's Book Council Joint Committee -- has published a list of new children's trade books -- books to which children have responded enthusiastically.

Knowing which trade books appeal to children is helpful in making available books that will provide pleasure to young children and that will reinforce and expand the concepts of concern to teachers of the young. For example, letter knowledge can be reinforced through the use of Ed Emberly's ABC in which animals involved in a variety of activities introduce the letters of the alphabet.
In The Guinea Pig ABC, guinea pigs illustrate each letter. In a distinctly different alphabet book, On Market Street, a little boy strolls down Market Street to see what he can buy for a friend.

On the other hand, math skills and concepts are reinforced in such counting books as Hippos Go Beserk, Counting Sheep, and Demi's Counting the Animals 1, 2, 3. In The Shopping Basket, an array of mathematical concepts is explored.

Several books included in Children's Choices are related to holidays. For example, many of the holiday-related books revolve around Halloween. Grinkles: A Keen Halloween Story abounds with rhyme and rhythm and ends with a recipe for a magic brew. Cranberry Halloween also includes recipes. Christmas-related books include It's Christmas, a colorful easy-to-read book, and The Night After Christmas, a read-aloud book for after the Christmas holidays.

Many of the concerns of teachers of young children revolve around social living: family relationships, friendship, self-acceptance. Such books as I Want a Brother or Sister, If I Had My Way, and She Come Bringing Me That Little Baby Girl center around a new baby in the family. Friendship, on the other hand, is highlighted in such books as Lobel's Frog and Toad All Year, Marie Louise and Christophe, and I'm Not Your Friend Any More.

In a similar vein, teachers realize the child's real need for recognizing and overcoming fear. Several of the favorites listed in Children's Choices investigate fear: fear of the dog next door as in The Biggest, Meanest, Ugliest Dog in the Whole Wide World, fear of swimming as in Hooray for Pig, and fear of being forgotten as in Waiting for Mom.
Books dealing with more concrete concepts can be located, as well. Such books as The Animals Who Changed Their Colors and Is It Red? Is It Yellow? Is It Blue? reinforce color concepts. More complex concepts are presented in such books as Mr. Bear's Chair in which Mr. Bear demonstrates the process of building a chair from a simple tree and Town and Country, a comparative study of bustling city life versus quiet country life. A study of transportation could be enhanced through the use of Donald Crews' School Bus and Freight Train, and Amy Ehrlich's The Everyday Train.

Finally, books abound in Children's Choices which are simply books to be enjoyed. Rum, Pum, Pum and Jump, Frog, Jump are read-aloud books which encourage children to join in the refrain. Brown Bear, Brown Bear, What Do You See? and Animals Should Definitely Not Act Like: People are delightful books for beginning readers. Ten Copy Cats in a Boat and Other Riddles stimulate the funny bone and Everett Anderson's Year stimulates the poetic ear.

Many books have been suggested in the preceding discussion -- all of which have been culled from the fourteen lists published in Children's Choices between 1975 and 1988. Since the original lists were categorized according to age levels, books were selected from appropriately labeled lists, i.e., "All ages," "Beginning independent reading," "Young readers," or "Seven years and under," and "Seven to ten years." The resulting compilation was then categorized according to interests, needs, and objectives of teachers of young children, primary level or below.
ALPHABET

The animal illustrations for each letter of the alphabet are cleverly hidden behind the bold black letters. A young child will delight in pulling, pushing and turning each letter to discover an animal whose name starts with that letter.

Look closely at the drawing of the small animal in the box on each page, then find that same animal somewhere in the drawings. Answers to the picture puzzles are given at the end of the book.

An alphabet book starring guinea pigs in all their various poses and predicaments. Young readers delight in their cuddly appearances and funny antics as the guinea pigs illustrate each letter.

Animals involved in a variety of activities introduce the letters of the alphabet. Children love finding objects that begin with the featured letter such as "ant," "alligator," and "airplane" on the "A" pages.

Bold bright graphics and artful alliteration enliven this ABC book of comical combinations -- e.g., "an Egg with Ears... a Jellybean Jump- rope."

It's not the large black letters that intrigue readers of this book, it's the animals that accompany each letter. Unfamiliar animals keep viewers guessing.

In this distinctively different alphabet book, a little boy strolls the length of Market Street to see what he can buy for a friend. Kindergarten children enjoy identifying all the things they would buy for friends.

Appealing illustrations delight younger children as they try to predict what the king's cat is like. A further source of enjoyment for the more mature student lies in discovering the pattern of alphabetical characteristics attributed to the cat by the town's people.

Children find these lovable, roly-poly monsters, performing various antics representing each letter of the alphabet, hard to resist. For example, these cuddly comical creatures can be found “eating eggs,” “frightening frogs” and “gobbling grandmas.”

COUNTING

An array of mathematical concepts is explored in this story about Steven's experiences with a series of beasts on his way home from the store. Line and wash illustrations help readers differentiate between the boy's real world and his flights into fantasy.

Demi. Demi's Count the Animals 1, 2, 3. Ill by the author, Grosset, 1986.

The appealing, rhymed text and two-page-spread animal designs entice young children to count again and again from 1 rhinoceros to 20 pangolins. A “grown up” challenge is also offered -- count to 100 by 2s.

The old counting rhyme has never been more appealing, according to many teachers and their pupils, who expressed approval of the gently cartooned animals and soft spring-colored scenes.

In this 1-20 counting book, a shepherd who regularly counts sheep as he falls to sleep is troubled by dreams featuring his sheep engaged in all sorts of unusual adventures.

Young children learn by playing with this book. While they follow the story, they place numbered cards on a game board, unknowingly "building" bear's house on the flip side of the cards.

This popular book is a series of two-page spreads, illustrating the counting song. Beginning with ten, animals fall out of bed until only one -- a boy -- is left. The music is included at the end of the book.
