Winnipeg School Division No. 1 is an urban school division with 80 schools serving a population of approximately 33,000 students, nursery to grade 12. The instructional staff totals approximately 2,400. Divisional support staff include 32 content and process consultants with responsibility for staff development in relation to Division priorities.

All schools have central libraries staffed by teacher librarians and technical/clerical support staff. Staffing allotments are full-time or part-time, based on enrollment and local needs. For 1987-88 the total school library staff in the division is 65 teacher librarians, 13.5 library technical assistants and 39.5 library clerks.

In addition, the division has a central library resource centre which provides both technical and professional development support for library programs and staff. The Teachers Library and Resource Centre (T.L.R.C.) isstaffed by a Chief Librarian and a Library Media Services Consultant, with a technical services team consisting of two (2) professional and twenty-six clerical positions.

Schools are given a designated budget, based on enrollment, for library materials. In addition, other budgets may be used to purchase library materials, at the discretion of the principal. Selection is the responsibility of the professional staff at the school. Ordering, acquisition and cataloguing are handled centrally by the Teachers Library and Resource Centre. A large professional reference library provides significant support to school staff. A Film, Video and Kit Collection of approximately 3,000 items is heavily circulated via daily courier service. Two equipment repair technicians service all formats of audio visual and computer equipment in the system.

Teachers in Manitoba are allotted eleven professional development days per year. Winnipeg School Division No. 1 allows members of special interest groups, such as librarians, to reserve three of these days for sessions organized by divisional consultants in their specialty area. This commitment by the division supports a comprehensive professional development program for library media personnel which aims to apply the principles of effective staff development identified below.

PRINCIPLES OF EFFECTIVE STAFF DEVELOPMENT

Principles of effective staff development programs, as identified by the Rand study, include:
- collaborative planning
- initial training activities with long-term support for implementation
- institutional leadership
- active participant involvement in learning.

Wood and Thompson, writing in Educational Leadership, February 1980, emphasize the importance of:
- identifying learner interests and needs
- establishing clear objectives
- individualizing the program
- providing options and choices.

Dale, in Educational Leadership, October 1982, emphasizes the importance of a comprehensive staff development program including organization development, consultation, communication and coordination, leadership and evaluation as well as inservice education.

RATIONALE

The current professional development program for library media staff in Winnipeg School Division No. 1 is the result of a systematic approach to staff development that has been in place since 1965. Over this twenty-three year period the principles of effectiveness identified above have gradually become an integral part of the staff development program.

This has been accomplished on a limited professional development budget largely through the utilization of the skill, talent and energy of people within the Division. An analysis of this program provides a unique opportunity to identify significant stages of growth, based on principles of effective staff development. This analysis may help other systems develop long range plans for staff growth and change. Opportunity is provided to analyze this paper in terms of long term implications and trends or patterns in the staff development process.
HISTORICAL PERSPECTIVES

1962-63
School library staffing consisted of part-time teacher librarians in secondary schools only. In 1963 a Supervisor of Libraries, Harry Newsom, was appointed to devote full-time to the advancement of library programs.

1964-65
The division's librarians voluntarily gave up their materials budget increase for one year in order to provide funds to establish a Library Service Centre (L. S. C.), initially staffed by the Supervisor of Libraries and six clerks. From the beginning the LSC had a dual mandate:

- to provide technical support to school libraries in the system through ordering, cataloguing and processing services.
- to assume responsibility for professional development of library staff in the system.

Institutional leadership has been consistently exercised by the LSC over the past twenty years. This leadership began with the publication of the "Newsom Report" in 1964. This study of existing facilities with recommendations for action included both short term and long range objectives designed to build a total library program in support of developing educational programs.

In 1965 a Library Service Advisory Committee was established. Through this committee, which functioned until 1967, superintendents, school administrators, program supervisors, classroom teachers and the public library system had input into the formulation of library policy development for the division.

Two professional positions were added at the L.S.C., an Assistant Supervisor of School Libraries, Nan Florence, and a cataloguer, Gerald Brown. School library staffing was extended to the elementary level with the first elementary teacher librarian, Mickey Bastick, working in four schools per week.

A professional development program was initiated with the organization of monthly inservice education meetings which were held outside of school hours, from 7:00 p.m. to 9:00 p.m. Program topics focused solely on issues related to the organization and administration of a school library, for example:

- Reference tools
- Sears Subject Headings
- Organizing a pamphlet file
- Book selection

Both content and delivery systems for this inservice program have changed significantly over twenty years.
A number of staffing changes occurred in this period. Harry Newsom, then Supervisor of School Libraries, accepted a position in another province. Nan Florence and Gerald Brown were appointed Supervisor and Assistant Supervisor, respectively, with the positions later being reclassified to Chief Librarian and Assistant Librarian. The pattern of expanding school library staffing to meet program needs was established. Regular clerical assistance was provided on a part-time basis to enable teacher librarians to devote more time to professional tasks such as personal service to students and consultation with teachers. The first library and technical assistant, William Stewart, was appointed to provide audio visual services support to teacher librarians. In addition, the number of teacher librarians at the elementary level was increased to three (3) people working in nine (9) schools.

The staff development program was responsive to these changing staff patterns. The L.S.C. provided both orientation and in-service training for library clerks as well as orientation sessions for new librarians. Administrative support was obtained for holding monthly inservice study sessions for the professional staff from 3:00 p.m. to 5:00 p.m., using one hour of in-school time and one hour of personal time. Study sessions began to address educational program issues as well as administrative concerns. Active participant involvement took the form of oral book reviews and activity reports. Meeting agendas became more structured with three clearly defined sections:
- Administrative matters
- Program topic
- Oral book reviews.

The staff development program also moved beyond the provision of in-service education for library staff to become more comprehensive in nature. Professional staff at the L.S.C. provided consultation at the school building level for librarians, administrators and teachers as well as conducting workshops for school staffs and other groups. Organization development, communication and coordination functions were fulfilled by a number of activities:

1. Detailed job descriptions were developed which analyzed the complementary roles of the teacher librarian, library technical assistant and library clerk.

2. A library personnel handbook was compiled from existing documents and working papers used in training programs. This handbook, which was distributed to all school libraries in the division, included sections on
   - program goals
   - job descriptions
   - technical procedures.

3. A monthly newsletter was distributed to all schools in the division as part of the Bulletin from the Chief Superintendent's office.
4. The services of the L.S.C. were expanded to include a Reference Library with a loan collection of professional materials, a Materials Collection with expensive curriculum related kits, Canadiana, Manitobiana, etc. and a Display Library to assist schools in the selection process.

1968-69

The growing impact of multi-media resources on educational programs was recognized by the appointment of an Audio Visual Coordinator, Don Vickers, in 1968 and the establishment of a centralized film loan service in 1969.

Study sessions became more individualized as participants were "streamed" into three groups:
- beginners (regardless of their background or training in other systems)
- first and second year people
- "senior" staff.

This entailed organization of three study sessions per month. Administrative support was obtained for designating Day 5 of the 6-day school cycle for librarians' study sessions. Active participant involvement was extended beyond the actual study session with more direct follow-up, observation, and feedback in the schools. Oral book reviews were replaced by typed reviews which were submitted prior to the study session. The L.S.C. compiled the reviews into a publication entitled Appraisals which was then distributed to all librarians at their monthly session.

An evaluation component was added to the staff development program with the institution of an annual report form on library facilities and programs which was completed in June by library staff in consultation with school administrators.

1970-71

"Streaming" of study session participants continued but groupings were now linked to the grade level of school assignments rather than years of experience.
- elementary (N-6)
- junior high (7-9)
- senior high (10-12).

Study session topics began to focus on the teaching role of the teacher librarian and the integration of library into classroom programs. Topics included:
- Successful programs in Social Studies Curriculum
- In what ways do the abilities and skills of the teacher librarian complement those of the classroom teacher?

This emphasis on the teaching role of the teacher librarian was further clarified in a division-wide study session involving all school library personnel - librarians, technical assistants and clerks. Participation in a hands-on activity (using the Task Analysis Survey Instrument of the School Library Manpower Project funded by the Knapp Foundation of North Carolina, published by the American Library Association, 1969) increased understanding of the teaching, technical and clerical roles in the differentiated staffing pattern used in the division's school libraries.

Resource people from institutions outside of the division, such as local universities and the provincial Department of Education were recruited, as appropriate, for study session leaders. Use of a small group discussion format provided opportunity for more active participant involvement in reaction and reflection.

A divisional film preview and evaluation program was instituted with teacher librarians involved at the school building level in the recruitment of teacher reviewers and the completion of written evaluations. Approximately 30 schools participate in the program.

1972-73

As a result of effective leadership at the division level, school-based staffing now included a teacher librarian in every elementary school for a minimum of 2 days of each school cycle. A priority division goal was across-the-grades articulation and the pattern of streaming study session participants shifted to assist in achieving this educational goal. To keep group sizes manageable, participants were organized according to geographical areas in the division (north, central, south) with each group including elementary, junior high and senior high levels to preserve the K-12 articulation concept.

Study session topics continued to address the integration of library and classroom programs. For example:

- Development of research study skills, K-12
- What are we doing about the reading curriculum?

These sessions marked the beginning of a continuing emphasis in the division on the two curriculum related facets of a library program:

- Independent learning skills development (ILS)
- Literary and cultural appreciation programs (LCA)

An element of choice was introduced into study sessions with a variety of small group discussion topics offered at each session. Active participant involvement was expanded as teacher librarians were recruited as leaders for these discussion groups. Advance training sessions were held with group leaders to discuss the scope of topics and group leader skills.

At this time the appointment of a library media services program consulting-teacher, Jean Mackenzie, provided additional support for implementation of integration activities at the school building level.
1974-75

Teacher librarians were given assistance in goal-setting through the introduction of a form that could be used at the school building level to stimulate discussion of priorities for the library program. Study session topics were expanded to include personal skill development in the areas of management techniques and communication skills as well as curriculum related issues. Formal evaluation of the study session program was initiated at the end of the year. The first formal needs assessment was also undertaken as participants were asked to submit suggestions for the next year's study session program.

A name change took place in 1975 with the Library Service Centre being renamed The Teachers Library & Resource Centre (T.L.R.C.). T.L.R.C. Advisory Committee, with the representation from the division and outside education and library institutions, was re-instituted at this time to participate in planning and policy determination to reflect the needs of the educational community.

1976-77

Clarification of goals and objectives continued as a graphic design was developed to visually present the scope of library programs in the division.

Collaborative planning of study sessions was instituted with the formation of Program Planning Advisory Committee (PPAC) involving school-based personnel from elementary, junior high and senior high levels. Active participation in the study session program was further encouraged by the advance publication of study session agendas identifying discussion topics. Active involvement was also the focus for study sessions which resulted in the production of curriculum related materials such as:

- An Independent Learning Skills Scope and Sequence guide for librarians and teachers
- Activity card sets for individualized reading programs using library books.

1978-79

In 1978, with the retirement of Nan Florence, Gerald Brown was appointed Chief Librarian. Professional staff at the T.L.R.C. at this time included a Library Media Services Consultant, AV Coordinator, Head of Technical Services, Reference Librarian (half-time) and Cataloguer (half-time), as well as three teacher librarians who spent one third of their time as program consulting-teachers and the remainder of their time as school based librarians.

The study session format was reorganized to make it more responsive to participants' needs. A slate of topics organized under themes or "routes"

Route I  Literary and Cultural Appreciation
Route II  Independent Learning Skills
Route III Organization and administration was presented at the beginning of the year. Participants could then preregister for the "routes" of their choice, selecting either 1/4 day or 1/2 day sessions as available. The resulting groupings were still K-12, consistent with the goal of across-the-grades articulation. However they were no longer based on geographical boundaries but on participants' needs and/or interests.

The former Newsletter was integrated into a larger monthly publication, titled Inklings, which also included:

- agendas for study sessions
- notices of other staff development opportunities
- background reading related to study session topics and identified division priorities
- study session evaluations and reports
- reports of implementation activities and units of study contributed by librarians and teachers
- recommended reading from current periodicals
- resource bibliographies
- newsletters from subject consultants, e.g. Computer Education, Gifted and Talented, Language Arts, Multicultural, Pupil Services, Social Studies
- coming events and administrative notes and news.
1980 to present

Declining enrollments and budget restraints have impacted on library media services in the division to some extent. The three part-time Consulting-Teacher positions as well as the Audio Visual Coordinator position have been cut. These reductions in staff have minimized the amount of district-level support available for implementation activities at the school building levels.

School library staffing has remained relatively stable in the division. This can be attributed to the leadership at the divisional level and to the level of cooperative planning and teaching in the schools. Changes in staff in individual schools have been responsive to population shifts. The program needs in Inner City schools have resulted in increases in library staffing, as has librarian involvement in computer education programs in some schools. Expanding French language programs have created a need for bilingual teacher librarians and library clerks.

Collections at the T.L.R.C. have adapted to changing program needs. As all libraries in the system built base collections, the original function of the Display Library collection was no longer needed and it was disbanded. Displays of current material on short term loan from various distributors are now featured throughout the year.

The Materials Evaluation program is still in place. Over 1600 titles in all formats are examined annually, and the results are distributed as Appraisals.

As schools move into the information age, the T.L.R.C. has worked closely with the division's Computer Education Consultant, both in the area of inservicing for teacher librarians and in the development of a computer software Display Library. This collection is available for loan for consideration for purchase.

Two T.L.R.C. committees give librarians an opportunity for active participation at the divisional level:

1. In 1980 the Library Media Services Personnel Handbook Committee began the process of revising and expanding the original Library Personnel Handbook to bring it in line with current programs and practices.

2. The Literary and Cultural Appreciation Committee was organized in 1983 to develop a Literary and Cultural Appreciation program guide. In the current year the committee will be focusing on the implementation of this document.

Setting clear goals and objectives and evaluation of success in achieving those goals has always been a characteristic of the library media program at the divisional level. (See appendix)

More emphasis is now given to the communication of these divisional goals to school staffs through publication in Inklings. Structures have also been put in place to encourage a similar goal setting and evaluation process at the school building level through:

- a form distributed at the beginning of the year to encourage staff discussion and recording of goals and objectives
- revisions to the annual report form including a program evaluation activity for use with administration and staff and a section for reporting success in meeting identified goals. (See appendix)

Librarians' study sessions continue to be an important component of the total staff development program. For increased ownership the Program Planning Advisory Committee has been divided into smaller Working Parties with responsibility for planning only those sessions they will actually be attending. Cooperative planning and teaching in the implementation of new curricula has been the over-riding theme for the study sessions in the 80's. Emphasis has been placed on the development of personal skills in both communication and curriculum design. The value of peer teaching has been recognized in the recruitment of teacher librarians and classroom teachers as resource people. The high level of credibility of peer presentations encourages other participants to accept new ideas and processes. In addition, session leaders develop their own communication and leadership skills through pre-session planning with division consultant as well as post-session de-briefing sessions. Activities such as problem solving, unit planning, skill practice and sharing of implementation experiences have ensured involvement of participants in the learning process.

EVALUATION

Increased attention has been paid to the evaluation of the study session program with immediate evaluation of each session by participants. In addition a comprehensive year-end evaluation gives information on:

- the levels of implementation of study session programs
- group processes preferred by the participants
- recommended topics for the next year's program.

Two years ago feedback from librarians indicated they would like some sessions geared specifically for particular levels as well as more options in topics. As a result the "route" system was replaced by a slate of sessions offering options in level (elementary, junior high, senior high, K-12) and time (1/2 day, and 1/4 day).
As a member of a special interest group in the division, librarians have the opportunity to select study sessions to the equivalent of three days as part of their total allotment of inservice days. Classroom teachers, library technical assistants and library clerks have also been encouraged to register for sessions that are appropriate to their needs. Groupings now vary, with some groups streamed by level while others include all grade levels. In all cases the groupings are based on personal choice.

Special workshops are also offered for the library clerks and library technical assistants (LTAs) in the Division. One full-day is devoted to these activities in February. Clerks and LTAs assist in the needs assessment, data analysis, scope of session, recruitment of resource personnel, leading and recording in sessions and de-briefing activities. A sample agenda from February 1988 appears as an Appendix.

Specific workshops have also been organized in the area of computer applications for library clerks, partly on salaried time.

ADDITIONAL OPTIONS

A number of inservice options are offered in addition to the study session program: (See Appendix)

1. Special meetings for new librarians, starting at 3:00 p.m. (3 per year)
2. Special meetings for secondary librarians at 3:00 p.m. (4 per year)
3. Workshops for particular groups within the division, such as teacher aides or parent volunteers
4. Voluntary workshops, open to all division staff, held after school in the evenings
5. School-based workshops, at the request of the school.

In addition to inservice sessions, informal discussion meetings are also organized as need is indicated.

As the need arises, inter-school visitations are arranged by the Library Media Consultant for new staff, and for experienced staff who wish to see other programs in action. In each case, the visitor works with the consultant to clearly outline what is to be observed. Then an appropriate site is identified and the receiving staff member participates in planning the visit. A de-briefing session is scheduled involving all three people.

Many teacher librarians in the Division are recommended as resource personnel to other professional subject groups, and to other districts for workshops, conferences and training sessions.
In all cases District level staff are available to help these staff members organize their sessions, to facilitate materials preparation, and to assist in analysis of feedback and evaluation. The staff has grown immensely as a result of these opportunities.

Paralleling cooperative planning and teaching at the school building level, cooperative work with other subject area consultants in the division has been a priority for T.L.R.C. professional staff in the 1980's. This has included:

- distribution of subject area newsletters in Inklings
- preparation of bibliographies and research materials in support of subject area consultants
- joint planning and implementation of workshops and inservice sessions including librarians' study sessions and/or teacher workshops
- joint proposals for special projects such as a Writer-In-Residence
- participation in program reviews to evaluate the role of library materials and library staff in the implementation of curricula. e.g. Science, Social Studies, Language Arts.

These cooperative ventures have resulted in increased awareness of programs and shared expertise.

WHAT PART(S) OF THE PROGRAM DID YOU FIND MOST BENEFICIAL?

- All of it! Best workshop I’ve attended (next to the study session on illustrators).
- Interesting to hear about Helen’s clubs, and others YA Conferences.
- Sharing new ideas for YAD and Book Club ideas from Helen.
- Information on Clubs and various forms of Young Authors Conferences or Literature Fairs.
- Time devoted to large group sharing.
- Wealth of Resource People.
- Sharing of names of resource people and young author conferences held at the school level.
- Great just to get a chance to exchange ideas.
- Webbing techniques, library clerks, young Author Workshops.
- I found this discussion on Young Authors Days very helpful, especially as we are in the process of planning ours.
- Tips and ideas for a successful in-school Young Authors’ Conference, and resource people available. (7x over …

WHAT PART(Y) OF THE PROGRAM DID YOU FIND LEAST BENEFICIAL?

- Webbing seemed too nebulous but maybe I just wasn't on the right filament today.
- Could we take some time at other sessions to create other web on topics related to the session?
- No discussion of the larger question of further motivating intermediate students.

FURTHER SUGGESTIONS OR COMMENTS:

- Not enough time spent on school based Young Authors Conference.
- What preparation is necessary, prior to authors' workshops in schools? Is there a better way to interest students in a particular writer or books?
- Possibly a longer session on webbing would be beneficial to sharing further titles.
- A list of all resources mentioned during the study session (with phone numbers to contact these resource people).
