The purposes of this directory of existing industry-based training programs—for limited English-proficient (LEP) adults employed in those industries—are as follows: (1) to provide a sense of the types of existing industry-based programs available to LEP employees; (2) to identify programs with the potential of implementing bilingual vocational training (BVT) models; and (3) to provide a listing for the promotion of the BVT model in workplace settings. Programs were identified through telephone contacts. Of the 94 programs listed in the directory, most are partnerships between companies and public programs. The most common types of partnerships with companies are as follows: 33 with public school adult basic education (ABE) centers; 19 with community-based organizations (CBOs); 16 with community colleges or vocational technical schools; and 9 with college or university adult English-as-a-second-language (ESL) centers. Nineteen states are represented in the program descriptions. Each program description includes the following information: educational agency partner; company name and address; program title; program director or contact person; brief description of the program; duration, training cycles, and number of trainees; ethnic and language groups served; and starting date and project continuation. The fluid nature of the directory is stressed. (CML)

INTRODUCTION AND SUMMARY OF THE DIRECTORY PROCESS AND LISTINGS

Introduction

This directory is compiled as part of a larger project whose overall goal is to promote the implementation of Bilingual Vocational Training (BVT) in the private sector by developing and working with training partnerships between private industry concerns and educational institutions. Two major objectives are:

1. To demonstrate the effectiveness of BVT as a model for use in the private sector; and
2. To develop a handbook for use by company and educational institution personnel to establish and provide BVT in the private sector.

One preliminary task of the project is to compile a directory of existing industry-based training programs for limited English-proficient (LEP) adults employed in those industries. The purposes of the directory are to:

1. Provide our readers with a sense of the types of industry-based programs there are for LEP employees;
2. Identify programs with the potential of implementing bilingual vocational training (BVT) models and of being nominated as demonstration sites;
3. Provide a list of programs and contacts for the dissemination of the handbook and other developed materials, and for the promotion of the BVT model in workplace settings.
The sampling in the directory is by no means random or experimental in design, but represents clusters of programs provided by key contacts or educational providers in a number of geographically diverse states. These programs are frequently not institutionalized, but are pilot or temporary, depending both on employers'/employees' needs and commitment, as well as on available federal, state, local or company funding. Consequently, perhaps as many as half of these programs will not be in existence by next year. However, many of the educational providers and some of the companies are committed to workplace programs for LEP employees and will become involved in other partnerships or operate programs on their own. For proprietary reasons, a few companies and one educational agency requested not to be included in the directory. Other companies preferred the program contact be only through the educational agency.

From the programs for this directory, almost all of the companies contacted had vocational, job skill and on-the-job vocational training separate from general and job-specific language, literacy and educational training. Since LEP adults were not identified or treated as a unique group in the former job skill type of training, but were a major group in the latter language type of training, this directory is primarily composed of these industry-based general and job-specific language literacy and educational training programs for LEP adults.
Methodology and Sources of Information

To identify industry-based programs serving LEP adults, telephone contacts were made rather than attempting a formal survey. The types of contacts have been: state departments of labor, state and local Job Training Partnership Act (JTPA) offices, local Service Delivery Areas (SDA) and Private Industry Councils (PIC); state departments of education, including Adult Basic Education (ABE) and literacy offices, vocational education and community college divisions; specialists in the field and known contacts/networks; and advertisements placed in the Business Council for Effective Literacy Newsletter and the National Coalition for Vocational Education for Limited English Speakers Newsletter.

The contacts at the state departments of labor and JTPA offices knew very little about companies doing these types of programs but sent us lists of local SDAs and PICs and in some cases referred us to contacts in state education offices. Many of the officers at the local PICs and SDAs also knew little about these programs, with notable exceptions. The contact at the PIC in Seattle knew of ten JTPA funded programs serving LEP adults. Boston's mayor's office contact provided leads for JTPA and PIC programs for LEP adults. New Mexico's three SDA officers also yielded some preliminary leads. The hope of locating programs that are run by the companies themselves through these types of sources was not realized. Programs run by companies were difficult to locate since there is no centralized information about their existence. Also, some private companies requested that their programs for LEP employees not be included in the directory. In this sampling there are only a few programs that involve no partnership with an educational provider.

Contacts to state educational offices eventually led to key persons who were able to give us the names of local educational agencies that are involved in worksite educational programs. Some of these agencies have a number of partnerships with businesses and provide customized language (ESL, VESL, etc.) and literacy training on-site to LEP employees. The greatest number of the directory entries have come from these sources and thus the type of entry is skewed heavily in favor of the public/private partnerships.

Specialists in the field and other known contacts from organizations such as the Northwest Educational Cooperative in Illinois, the U.S. Department of Education (Division of Adult Education and Literacy), the National Center for Research in Vocational Education at Ohio State University, the Business Services Network of Connecticut Community Colleges, etc., have provided useful information for specific program contacts, and lists of other programs and contacts.

The final source of information on programs for LEP adults in industry, the request for information advertisements in the BCEL Newsletter and the National Coalition for Vocational Education for Limited English Speakers Newsletter, has not been very fruitful. Only two contacts responded, a company and an educational provider. They are included in the current listings.
Initial phone contacts were not made to all 50 states. Approximately 20 states with large populations of LEP adults on the East and West coasts, the Sunbelt and the industrial Midwest were targeted. A few other states were included where programs for LEP employees were thought to exist.

The search process by telephone contacts is worthy of note. When beginning with a state Department of Education, for example, it often took four, five or more calls and transfers to reach a knowledgeable person who could provide some local contacts. Only a few of these proved fruitful, and only after several calls to reach the key person at a local provider might we get information on one or more programs. Overall, approximately 700 calls/contacts (including inter-office transfers) were made to yield the programs described in the directory listings.

To be included in the directory, a company program had to address the needs of LEP workers. Workplace literacy, ABE and vocational programs with no accommodation for LEP employees (usually various types of ESL training) were not included. From the perspective of the educational provider, programs for LEP adults had to be products of partnerships with particular private companies (or unions and in a few cases, public organizations such as a municipal airport) and were usually conducted at the workplace. A few programs of public/private partnerships which happened to be run by and at the educational agency but exclusively for the company's employees have been included. Programs by and at the educational agency with open enrollment were not included.
Once the provider/implementer of an appropriate program was reached, the following types of information were requested about the program:

1. Educational agency partner.
2. Company name and address.
4. Program director/contact person.
5. Brief description of the program.
6. Duration, training cycles, number of trainees.
7. Ethnic/language groups served.
8. Starting date and project continuation.

Overview of Program Types and Characteristics

Of the 94 programs listed in the Directory, most are public/private partnerships. The most common types of partnerships are between:

- public (school) ABE centers and companies (33 programs);
- community-based organizations (CBO) and companies (19);
- community colleges/vocational technical schools and companies (16); and
- college/university adult/ESL centers and companies (9).

Less common public/private partnerships include:

- public ABE centers and companies on the school site (1 program);
- state vocational education departments and companies (1);
o public refugee service centers and companies (1);
o public ABE centers and unions (1); and o community colleges and 1 or more companies on the school site (2).

A few public/public partnership types are listed where the public educational provider is working with a public organization rather than a company. These include public ABE centers working with:

  o school districts (2);
  o state departments of education (1);
  o public universities (1); and o municipal airports (1).

Two types of private/private partnerships are represented:

  o unions and companies (1 program of a hotel union for a group of hotels); and o private educational agencies and companies (3).

Lastly, there are two programs in which the training is done by the companies' in-house training departments.

In practice there are a number of ABE centers, CBOS, etc., that have a number of partnerships with different companies.
Examples are the Wilson Adult Center in Arlington, VA, the Tacoma Community House in Tacoma, WA, and the Labor Education Center in South Dartmouth, MA. Some schools and adult centers are very involved in workplace education, others are not at all.

The ethnic and language groups served by these programs are quite varied. By far the most frequent group mentioned is Hispanic Specific nationalities such as Mexican, Cuban or Puerto Rican were only occasionally singled out. The next most frequently reported group is Asian (57 programs). Asians (or Southeast Asians), in general, were mentioned as clients in 15 programs and/or specific nationalities were given, such as Vietnamese (14 programs), Chinese (9), Koreans (6), and Cambodians (5). Some programs reported their students as being of various ethnic backgrounds (11 programs). Other commonly served ethnic groups include: Haitians (8), Portuguese, including Cape Verdeans (8), Polish (5), East Indians (5), and Italians (4).

The types of jobs held by the LEP employees are also varied. The most frequent job types reported are:

- factory assembly, heavy industry and production workers (30 programs);
- housekeepers/ domestics and stewards (19);
- food, beverage and restaurant service workers (20);
- electronics, computer and software workers (10);
- food, beverage and meat processors (9); and
- maintenance workers (8);
- custodians (6).

Other jobs reported less often are:

- textile/ clothing workers (4);
- hospital workers (3);
- managers/professionals (4);
- check processors (2);
drivers (2); laundry workers (2); and customer service representatives (2).

In addition, those reported for only one program each are:

- newspaper production workers;
- landscapers;
- airfield workers;
- mail room workers;
- data processors;
- agriculture workers; and
- warehouse employees.

Common across all these types of jobs is that many of the LEP employees are in entry-level positions.

The types of general and job-specific language, literacy and educational training for LEP employees in these programs include:

- ABE (Adult Basic Education);
- GED (high school equivalency diplomas);
- general ESL (English as a Second Language, including basic and survival ESL, as well as more advanced listening, speaking, reading and writing skills);
- workplace ESL (ESL for the work environment, including asking questions, making suggestions, group process skills, etc.).
workplace literacy (literacy for the work environment, including reading directions and safety rules, writing notes, etc.);

- VESL (ESL for specific jobs or job training);

- ESP (English for Special Purposes, such as learning the vocabulary for a particular subject area, the skills to take a particular test, etc.); and

- BVT (Bilingual Vocational Training, where, in addition to ESL and VESL, job skills instruction takes place in the native language and in English).

Most of the programs listed include at least several of the foregoing types of training for LEP adults. The most common combinations of training offered are:

- general ESL, workplace ESL and literacy (16 programs);
- the same three types with the addition of VESL (16);
- general and workplace ESL (7);
- ABE and general ESL (7); and
- ABE, general ESL and workplace literacy (5).

There are a number of other combinations with the usual elements being: general ESL, workplace ESL, workplace literacy, VESL and ABE. Infrequent types of training to appear are ESP (5 times), GED (2 times), and BVT which was present in only 2 programs.

Most program sites, except for a few very large programs, have only one or two classes going on at any particular time. One class cycle may include several of the foregoing LEP training models.

As stated in the Methodology and Sources of Information section, states with high LEP populations were targeted. The following list indicates the number of program listings by state.

Conclusions

In relation to the private companies, commitment to training LEP employees varies. Many have an interest in beginning worksite programs, (often with outside funding) but few have a long-term commitment on their own or with educational partners. Some companies' motivations appear not so much to educate and "empower" workers, but rather to enable them to read basic signs and understand basic directions. Others have the goal of raising all employees' literacy skills to a seventh grade level or above.
In larger companies, there often seems to be a lack of knowledge and communication about programs for LEP workers at various worksites. Some companies have adopted a proprietary attitude towards their training programs and prefer no publicity. Also, some companies (and a few educational providers) tend not to use the terms "ESL" or "literacy", but use terms like "English language training" and "language skills enhancement" instead. In fact, some potential program participants will not enroll in a "literacy" class because they feel that it is degrading. However, the same employees will enroll in a "skills enhancement" class.

Educational providers also lack knowledge of industry-based LEP training programs. State education agencies lack awareness of local providers' programs and of what other state agencies are doing. There is no centralized communication or comprehensive awareness of local providers' involvement with workplace LEP training within a state, let alone the country. Considering the variety of organizations involved and of federal, state, local and private funding sources, this lack of centralization of information is not surprising.

In some states or areas of states, such as Massachusetts and northern Virginia, educational providers actively promote the idea of workplace education for LEP adults. In other states, such as Utah, this concept does not appear to be widespread. Within states where there are workplace educational partnerships for LEP employee training, some educational agencies are highly involved and have a number of different workplace programs; others are not involved and offer programs only at their educational centers.

Some conclusions can also be drawn about the types of LEP employee training programs, classes and participants. In all the companies/partnerships contacted, vocational and OJT programs are separate from general and job-specific language, literacy and educational programs, and do not address LEP employees as a group. Many companies have general ABE, ESL and literacy programs, but those more strongly committed to the training of their LEP employees also have customized and job-specific language training. Only 2 programs reported the use of some BVT. Most programs are small (1 to 4 classes) and classes are small (6 to 20 students). A few have individualized instruction. Many programs serve only one or several ethnic groups. However, large programs serve employees of more diverse backgrounds. Many LEP employees are in entry-level (including manual and menial labor) positions. Some programs are oriented towards up-grading skills and retraining for internal promotion.

In conclusion, the fluid nature of this directory needs to be stressed. As noted at the outset, the intention was to do a sampling of programs, not to develop a stable and comprehensive listing. The programs come and go with funding and other circumstances. Even when programs remain, trainee characteristics change. As a result, this directory is best considered a snapshot of program status at one two- to three-month point in time. That snapshot may change in detail if taken at another time. Given the facts, however, that it was taken of the states with the largest LEP populations and that over 700 phone contacts were made, using leads from the best available sources, we suggest that the picture is a generally accurate one and, thus, quite representative of the overall trends nationally.
