Designed to encourage students in grades 7–12 to make reading a habit, this annotated booklist contains over 400 titles of fiction and nonfiction books published between 1987 and 1989. It is intended for students who are able to read but lack the motivation to do so because they have not encountered books that speak to their interests and concerns. The titles represent a variety of books of high quality, some series literature, and some "fast-read" books that deal with topics of interest to the average adolescent. Titles and annotations are arranged under the following categories: (1) adventure; (2) animals; (3) biography; (4) death; (5) ethnic; (6) family life; (7) fantasy; (8) folklore and legends; (9) friendship; (10) growing up; (11) health; (12) historical fiction; (13) history; (14) how-to; (15) humor; (16) love and romance; (17) mystery; (18) poetry; (19) science; (20) science fiction; (21) social problems; (22) sports; (23) supernatural; and (24) travel. A directory of publishers is included, as well as author, title, and subject indexes. (SR)

Foreword

The National Council of Teachers of English is proud to publish four different booklists, renewed on a regular rotation, in its bibliography series. The four are Adventuring with Books (pre-K through grade 6), Your Reading (middle school; junior high), Books for You (senior high), and High Interest—Easy Reading (junior, senior high reluctant readers). Conceived as resources for teachers and students alike, these volumes reference thousands of the most recent children's and young adults' trade books. The works listed cover a wide range of topics, from preschool ABC books to science fiction novels for high school seniors, from wordless picture books to nonfiction works on family stresses, computers, and mass media.

Each edition of an NCTE booklist is compiled by a group of teachers and librarians, under leadership appointed by the NCTE Executive Committee. Working for most of three or four years with new books submitted regularly by publishers, the committee members review, select, and annotate the hundreds of works to be listed in their new edition. The members of the committee that compiled this volume are listed on one of the first pages.

Of course, no single book is right for everyone or every purpose, so inclusion of a work in this booklist is not necessarily an endorsement from NCTE. However, it is an indication that, in the view of the professionals who make up the booklist committee, the work in question is worthy of teachers' and students' attention, perhaps for its informative, perhaps its aesthetic qualities. On the other hand, exclusion from an NCTE booklist is not necessarily a judgement on the quality of a given book or publisher. Many factors—space, time, availability of certain books, publisher participation—may influence the final shape of the list.

We hope that you will find this booklist useful and that you will collect the other booklists in the NCTE series. We feel that these volumes contribute substantially to our mission of helping to improve instruction in English and the language arts. We think you will agree.

Michael Spooner
NCTE Senior Editor for Publications
The committee has intended this book for students, although it may also be of use to teachers and media specialists, librarians. The students for whom the book may be useful are generally in grades 7-12 and generally nonreaders, although that is an indication of inclination, not ability. We believe that the primary audience for this edition, as in previous editions, is the student who can read—but often does not.

Entries are, therefore, written for students. We have not indicated a grade level or a sophistication level as a general rule, however, we have, in some instances, noted that a given book may contain mature subject matter. Nor have we suggested a reading level. We believe that reading levels are occasionally misleading and that interest will be the most significant factor.

We have looked for books that hold high interest for people in this age group and have been guided, to some degree, by accessibility. We have avoided books whose format suggests an elementary level, we have also avoided books whose content is too complex. While we have always looked for high-quality books, we have operated on the premise that the person who reads can always be helped in the search for better literature, the nonreader cannot. Thus, we have included some series literature and some “fast-read” books that will be of interest to less sophisticated readers.

Booklists generally provide information about what’s available rather than what must be read. This list is no different. We believe, however, that these books are worth the time and effort to read, students who have tested them agree. The final test lies with the individual reader.
1 Adventure

It is 1873, and seventeen-year-old Vesper Holly accepts an invitation to attend the diamond jubilee in the grand duchy of Drackenberg for her guardians, Brinnie and Mary. In Drackenberg, they meet Helvitius, an old enemy. By teaming up with the local gypsies, Holly fights Helvitius's plot to take the fortunes of Drackenberg as his own. Exciting adventures lead to an unusual climax.

Having risked her life in Illyria last year, green-eyed Vesper Holly, only seventeen, is now eager to explore her newest piece of property—a volcano in the republic of El Dorado in Central America. Amidst palm-thatched roofs, spicy food, and cantina music, Vesper struggles to protect her land from Alain de Rochefort, a villain who intends to use it in his plan to turn an Indian tribe's homeland into a swamp. In the jungle, her struggle with de Rochefort becomes a deadly game. Sequel to The Illyrian Adventure.

When an upstanding Mexican judge is exiled to uncivilized Baja California in 1876, his son Porfirio ("El Güero"), must travel through wilderness, storm, and silence. Indians to find him. El Güero must then win the confidence of the commandante of the army garrison in order to save his father and the village of Ensenada from mutinous soldiers and American outlaws.

One beautiful spring day, Maria Fremont puts her baby son down on his blanket for a few minutes in the sun. While she is distracted by a phone call, a golden eagle swoops down, grabs the infant, and heads for its nest. Near the eagle's nesting place, Necco Tufferelli, a shell-shocked Vietnam veteran, has taken refuge. The noise of the rescue helicopters spurs Necco to action; the whimpering of an infant brings him a different message. While Necco fights with the rescue forces, time begins to run out for the baby.

Alex Penrose faces a long summer in 1935. He's twelve, and his parents have shipped him off to his grandmother in Sheridan, Wyoming, while they take an Atlantic cruise. There's nothing for Alex to do in Sheridan and no one to do it with. Then he meets an old man who claims to be Kid Curry, a member of the old Butch Cassidy gang. Kid would like one more fling, one more bank robbery, but he needs a partner—and Alex fits the bill.

Dee's world has fallen apart. Gran, who took Dee in when her parents died, has just died herself, and Dee must go live with her commanding older brother David, a state trooper. In David's little mountain town, it's hard to make friends, so, to David's horror, Dee accepts a date with Will Snipes, the brother of a man David has sent to prison. Then David's worst fears about Will's need for revenge come true: Dee is kidnapped. Will plants a bomb, and Dee's chances of escape look slim.

Dusty finds a cave on Cobb's Hill and convinces Anne to explore it with her. When they do, they find a tunnel that takes them through the hill to the beach. There they meet a fisherman, Captain Jim, who tells them the story of Fast Jack, a pirate who may have buried treasure in the tunnel. Dusty decides that she will find the treasure. Later, Cobbie, a mysterious, pipe-smoking woman, clears up the mystery of Fast Jack's treasure, but the mystery of Cobbie still remains.

Thirteen-year-old Brian Robeson is on his way to spend the summer with his father in the Canadian wilderness. Brian's parents have recently divorced, and the court has determined that Brian will spend the school year with his mother and the summer with his father. As Brian is flying to his father's engineering camp, the pilot suffers a fatal heart attack, and the plane crashes. Brian is not badly hurt, but with only a hatchet his mother has given him, will he be able to survive?

Fifteen-year-old Wil Neuton was not excited about having to move from the life he had just established in Madison, Wisconsin, to a small house way out in the boondies. However, that was before he discovered the island—or it discovered him—he is not quite sure which way it happened. The hours that he spends there grow into days that are filled with keen observation, studying, and learning about the life and truth of the island and about himself.

Curt Carver has met his match. Lori is almost as tall as he is and can almost beat him at one-on-one, but the worst part is that she's his boss! It takes a couple of weeks, but Curt is finally settling into his job as a guide at Cathedral Caverns. Then terrorists strike, kidnapping rich Pauline and holding her hostage in the caves. Can Curt and Lori rescue her through a secret entrance? Curt discovers the courage and ingenuity needed to match Lori in this suspenseful story.

Nicky Brooks has big plans for Mitchell High's weekender at Camp Chautauqua in the Colorado Rockies, but those plans abruptly change on a scavenger hunt the first morning out. Nicky and a new student, Martinella Lee Prigmore, get lost when a surprise snowstorm comes in. They are joined by Nicky's archenemy, Sidney "Scruggs" Scruggman, who has been badly injured. The three are then forced to use all of their knowledge to survive.
Danger and fear stalk six young hikers in the Zion Narrows in Utah when a flash flood turns their perfect weekend into a nightmare. Amy and Rick fight for their lives and their future together as they learn more than they may have wanted to know about each other.

Fourteen-year-old Lorna Padgett, only daughter of an archaeologist working in Egypt, loves everything Egyptian. Ameni, son of the ancient pharaoh Senusert II, wants to travel and have adventures, rather than train as a priest of Osiris. Incredibly, Lorna's love of Egypt brings her together with Ameni when she revives him from the state of suspended animation he had been in since ancient times. Forming a friendship that bridges four thousand years, Ameni and Lorna travel to England, where they find themselves in an adventure that is more dangerous than either of them ever bargained for.

When their moor home breaks down in the Adirondack Mountains. Jenny Skinner's father decides that their family of six will become pioneers. They'll homestead there, with no electricity, no cars, and no boys for fifteen-year-old Jenny to date. As the Skinner family braves nature, some of them long for the comforts of the city, while Jenny considers overcoming her fear of snakes for a handsome college student doing rattlesnake research. All of them, though, learn about surviving, and Jenny and her sister Sarah find themselves the only people who can save their father's life. Second book in a series about the Skinner family.

The king of the Fortunate Isles has declared war, and all the healthy men of Eleni's village must join the army and fight. Hardly anyone is left behind to take care of the women and children, who are in the midst of a famine. But Eleni might be the key to an ancient prophecy. She begins a journey to the Holy Mountain of Ayos, where she hopes to find salvation for her people.
In the 1860s, Adam’s stepfather moves his family into the Wyoming mountains. When he then leaves for Cheyenne, twelve-year-old Adam and his dog Ruff are left alone to protect Adam’s mother and sister from a group of greedy prospectors. In bone-chilling action, Adam and Ruff give their family everything they have.
2 Animals

Meet the giant Kodiak bear as she moves her 700-pound body about Kodiak Island in search of food. Soar above cliffs with one of the few remaining California condors, and swim upstream with a salmon bent on returning to her birthplace. The author takes you into the wild and shines a spotlight on everything from pythons and elephants to panthers and wolves as they go about their daily lives.

JoBob knows he’s a misfit, he’s small for a fourteen year old, and, unlike the families of the other kids at the stable where he works, his family struggles to make ends meet. Blue, the pinto at the stables, is a misfit, too. Others think Blue is only good enough to use as a teaching horse, but JoBob has been secretly training Blue to jump. His work with Blue gives JoBob both the greatest joy and the greatest sorrow that he’s ever known.

Abundant wildlife is not limited to forests, rivers, marshes, and land far from civilization. For the keen observer, “wildlife” may be found in homes, backyards, parks, and the vacant lots of large cities. Illustrations and interesting facts about wildlife, dangerous and harmless, are presented in this “guide to the urban nature trail.” Index included. A Nova book.

On his first day at a new school, Ezekiel Silverstein gives all of the other students the silent treatment. One of the other students, Croaker Douglas, resents this so much that he takes matters into his own hands and attacks Ezekiel. When their teacher makes Croaker go to Ezekiel's house to apologize, Croaker finds a couple of big surprises, including Piccolo, a talking crow.

Whether as servant, traveler, messenger, game player, racer, or friend, the horse has been the most pampered domestic animal in history—and with good reason. The horse is "the only four-legged animal that has ever changed the way humans lived, fought, worked, and played." The horse is found in folklore, legend, religion, and every form of art the world over. Index included.

Janna loves animals and works as a volunteer in a veterinarian's office. She hates her new neighbor, Bramwell Hamilton, on sight because he leaves his dog Pepper outside even when it rains. In an effort to help Pepper, Janna becomes friendly with Bramwell, and she soon learns some very interesting things.

Horses died out on the American continent nearly 8,000 years ago, and it wasn't until the fifteenth century that the Spanish explorers reintroduced them. Today, wild horses are found in ten western states. In 1971, the Wild Horse and Burro Act was passed to protect horses and burros, and between 1971 and 1980, the wild herds grew from an estimated 17,000 to 64,000. Includes an index and a list of organizations dedicated to protecting wild horses.

Eagles are difficult to study in the wild because they are very swift and because they fly so high. However, scientists do agree that there are at least sixty species around the world and that only two of those species are found in the United States. Despite their power as hunters, their size, and their strength, these "lords of the skies" are threatened with extinction.

This book takes an important part of every circus—the horses—and gives them the center ring in a show of their own. Packed with colorful pictures, it explains how the horses are trained for such things as precision teamwork, carrying a human pyramid, and stunt riding.

Sea-lion beachmaster Daniel au Fond sets out on a quest to find Pacifica, a cove in an ancient sea-lion legend where sea creatures and humans once lived in harmony. To find this secret place, Daniel and his tribe roam the oceans seeking a wavebender and collecting unusual allies from different species of sea creatures. After several dangerous encounters with pollution and commercial overhunting, Daniel realizes that heroic action is necessary to preserve all sea life.

From the tiny, one-celled protozoa to the 150-ton blue whale, the animal kingdom is filled with many unique creatures. Their ways of living, playing, gathering food, mating, defending themselves, and nurturing their young are as varied as the animals themselves. Over a thousand color illustrations of animals in their natural habitats give you a glimpse of how they have evolved and how they survive. Index included.

Twelve-year-old Rhiannon DiAngelo has always loved horses, so when she sees the ad in the newspaper about the lost white Arabian, she hops on her bike and heads out to look for it. She spots the horse several times and develops a relationship with its owner, Chickie Miller, who begins to teach her about horses. This new outlet gives Rhiannon a focus for her life and helps her to deal with her father's alcoholism and abuse.

“Don’t play with your food,” Mama always said. “Unless it’s a mouse. Then it’s okay.” Kikki remembers her mother well, but Kikki and her brother Toby are alone. Abandoned by their mother and the other kittens, Kikki and Toby learn to live in the world of “people things.” Everything is wonderful until the children that Kikki and Toby live with invent a game called Snot Stew.

Old Father Pufftail may be getting on in years, but he’s still a proud old alley cat who is pleased to share his experiences with his grandson. Kitchener. Pufftail began life innocently enough but soon discovered that not all humans are good people nor can they all be trusted. He discovered that cats, too, are imperfect, and he tries to tell his grandson that life, though not always pleasant, is generally worthwhile.
3 Biography

Who would have thought a train ride sixty years ago would lead to the development of the popular biscuit mix, Bisquick? Or that in order to insult a resort guest who had made him angry, a chef would slice potatoes paper thin and fry them, thus producing the first potato chips? Similar stories about other products and businesses and the people who introduced them illustrate that not only does the creation of new products take hard work and ingenuity, but the success of these products also depends upon luck. Index included.

Is good help hard to find? Are you tired of straining vegetables to make baby food? Are you losing your hair and becoming bald before the age of thirty? Individuals who found creative solutions to these problems formed successful companies—Kitchen-Aid, Gerber, and Breck. These stories and others illustrate how familiar products were developed in response to a need. Index included.

If the names Earl Dickson, John Pemberton, James Spangler, Jerry Siegel, Joe Shuster, and Maria Innocentia were mentioned, would you know who they are? These people invented or helped create well-known products or businesses, but they often received little recognition—and sometimes little profit—for their ideas. However, if Band-Aid, Coca-Cola, Hoover vacuum cleaners, Superman, and Hummel figurines were substituted for the names above, you would know the products these people are associated with. Index included.
Samuel Goldwyn was a Jewish immigrant from a Warsaw ghetto who had little money and very little schooling and who didn't even speak English. Since his only talent seemed to be selling gloves, he appeared to be an unlikely person to produce some of Hollywood's finest films. However, entirely by his own effort, he earned fame and wealth and developed a reputation for paying people very well and insisting on the highest quality. Part of The American Dream series. Index included.

In 1876, thousands of Sioux warriors led by Chief Sitting Bull massacred a troop of United States soldiers led by General George Custer. Custer attacked the Indians, but Sitting Bull and his people were blamed. Who was Sitting Bull, and why did he gather his people for war? Part of Alvin Josephy's Biography Series of American Indians.

The son of Scottish weavers, Andrew Carnegie came to America at an opportune time and settled with his family in Pittsburgh. By chance the young Andrew became involved with the telegraph and, later, railroads. This led naturally to an interest in iron and steel, which made him the richest man in the world in his time. Carnegie believed that a rich person who died with a fortune intact died disgraced, so he gave most of his money away to charity, mainly to libraries, concert halls, and educational institutions. Carnegie was extremely interested in projects that would result in the improvement of society. Part of The American Dream series.

Because he was a poor student, Thomas Edison was taken out of school at the age of seven and taught at home by his mother, who had been a teacher before marriage. Edison's father taught him the value of hard work. Later, when Edison was called a genius, he often replied with his most famous saying: “Genius is 1 percent inspiration and 99 percent perspiration.” During Edison’s lifetime, and because of his inventions, the world changed from gaslights and still photographs to a “world transformed by electric lights, motion pictures, and the phonograph.” Part of the Pioneers in Change series. Index included.

Born in 1901, anthropologist Margaret Mead was considered a woman ahead of her time. Even getting a college degree in the early part of this century was unusual for a girl. At an early age, she was encouraged by her grandmother to observe human relationships and actions and to make a record of those observations. Energetic, dedicated, and enthusiastic, Margaret Mead traveled all over the world and wrote many books and magazine articles about her observations. Part of the Pioneers in Change series.

When the Pilgrims landed at Plymouth Rock, they entered the land of the friendly Chief Massasoit, whose name was later adopted by the state of Massachusetts. This book tells the story of Chief Massasoit’s son, who saw that his father’s friendliness toward the Pilgrims led only to loss of lands and death for his people. The colonists called him King Philip, and he fought his own war of independence against the newcomers. Part of Alvin Josephy’s Biography Series of American Indians.

When the first settlers pushed westward from the eastern seaboard, they ran into a large and strong Indian tribe, the Cherokees. The Europeans wanted to force the tribe to either give up their Indian ways and accept white culture or leave their land and move away. But Sequoyah gave his people a way to hold onto their culture even while living among more and more whites. Part of Alvin Josephy’s Biography Series of American Indians.

You've heard the textbook explanations about America's great leaders. Now experience the stories that the leaders themselves lived. From the founding fathers to our own times, this book lets you understand the famous, the not-so-famous, and the always-important lives of those who have led our country. Index included.

Did you know that Muhammad Ali boxed on television at the age of thirteen? That Louis Braille invented the Braille system of reading at the age of fifteen? That at thirteen Anne Frank wrote her famous diary depicting life during World War II? In this book, you'll learn the amazing true stories of these and many other amazing people who achieved great tasks before the age of seventeen, including Tracy Austin, Bobby Fischer, Wolfgang Amadeus Mozart, Pablo Picasso, and Helen Keller.

As the pioneers of the mid-1800s moved westward, their meetings with the Native Americans were not always peaceful. Red Cloud of the Oglala Sioux, Joseph of the Nez Perce, and Sitting Bull of the Hunkpapa Sioux are three of six Indian chiefs described in this book, chiefs who led their people in times of crisis. Their stories are ones of leadership, banishment to reservations, bloodshed, unkept treaties, and bravery.

Using carefully chosen photographs and prints, this biography illustrates the life of perhaps our most popular president. The vivid text of the biography traces Lincoln's life, focusing on the critical period during the Civil War.

Texas is the home of the Alamo. It is also the home of Henry Cisneros, San Antonio's mayor. This interesting biography, complete with photographs, highlights the life of Cisneros, the first person of Mexican descent to be elected as mayor of a major U.S. city. The book includes a chapter in which the mayor offers advice to young people who want to make the most of their education and future careers. Part of the People in Focus series.

What kind of person can build one of the largest business empires in the world and still be accused of physical cowardice? J. Paul Getty was that kind of person— a man with two faces. Why would such a rich and powerful man feel the need to lie about his ancestors? Why would he say he loved his son Timmy best of all his sons and yet remain in Europe while that son was dying in Los Angeles? These questions and others make J. Paul Getty a very puzzling personality. Part of The American Dream series. Index included.

Anthony Burns, age twenty, was born a slave in Virginia and escaped to Boston in 1854. For a while he lived and worked as a free man; but one day, his former owner appeared and invoked the Fugitive Slave Act, which allowed him to take Anthony back to Virginia. The ensuing battle between the slave owners and those who fought for the rights of fugitive slaves caused riots and made necessary the calling in of federal troops. And at the center of the struggle was Anthony Burns himself, the last fugitive slave to be seized on Massachusetts soil.

Albert Einstein was gentle and sensitive and believed in peace between nations, and yet he spoke in favor of developing the atom bomb. Considered by many people to be the greatest scientist in the world, he did not talk until he was three, and some of his teachers thought he was retarded. While he hated strict discipline at school, he imposed the strictest discipline upon himself while he studied. Indeed, Albert Einstein was a man of opposites. Part of the Pioneers in Change series. Index included.

Unique people expressing their hopes, frustrations, and rewards in word and image make the world of work truly understandable.
Twelve men and women from different ethnic groups and backgrounds share more than the typical "career" information. They describe what they like and what they don't like about their jobs, why they stay with them, and how they feel about their jobs when they go home.

The history books say what explorers have done, but they don't always tell why they have done it or how they have felt. Go along with twenty-five of the world's greatest explorers as they trek to the poles, sail around the world, and hack their way through jungles in search of treasure.

The Iroquois leader Hiawatha grew up in the area that later became New York. Before the Europeans arrived, he envisioned and created an Indian government based on democracy and cooperation among tribes. Later, Ben Franklin and other white colonists learned from the Iroquois League when they were forming the United States.

Ché Guevara rose from an asthmatic boyhood to become a popular leader of the revolution in Latin America. In this fictionalized biography, Neimark tells of Ché's treks through Latin America to his rise to international fame as Fidel Castro's close ally in Cuba to his defeat in Bolivia. Working until his death to free the oppressed, Ché Guevara became a hero to revolutionaries around the world. The author points out that this fictionalized account of Ché is faithful to the historical man.

You've heard of fairy-tale queens, but what is it like to be a true princess? Diana, Princess of Wales, shows us. Who was Diana before joining the royal family? How did she meet Prince Charles? What was their wedding like? What is her life like now? Being a princess means so much more than fancy clothing, but the clothing does help!

Alexander Graham Bell was born in Scotland and did not become a U.S. citizen until 1882. His interest in sound and speech came naturally because his father and grandfather were speech teachers, and he followed in their footsteps. As he worked with deaf students, he became more and more interested in the possibility of sending speech over an electrified wire, and in 1875, he invented the telephone. Part of the Pioneers of Change series. Index included.

A long-time associate of Nelson Mandela, Mafa Molapatene Kotoleelele Ramusi was one of the early members of the Pan Africanist Congress. In this book, Ramusi tells his own story— from his birth in a South African village to his eight-year exile in the United States because of his participation in anti-apartheid activities.

When American paratroopers jump out of airplanes today, they shout, "Geronimo!" Leader of the Apache Indians in the late 1800s, Geronimo's very name now stands for freedom fighting. But the nation Geronimo defended was his own Apache nation, and he fought to keep it from the United States. Why did he fight, and why did he earn such respect? Part of Alvin Josephy's Biography Series of American Indians.

In what would become the state of Indiana, Tecumseh, the crouching panther, became chief of the Shawnee tribe and worked toward his dream of creating an Indian nation. When the American Colonies began the Revolution, Tecumseh chose to join forces with the British because they promised the Indians a country of their own. In battle after battle, he proved himself brave and wise. Part of Alvin Josephy's Biography Series of American Indians.

Walter Payton was an exceptional athlete, always driven to excel. The author traces Payton's life from his childhood in Mississippi to his final game as a professional football player for the Chicago Bears. Photographs and tables help illustrate Payton's many achievements as one of the best runners ever to play football.

Think of the great events in sports history, and think of the people who made them happen: Babe Ruth, Muhammad Ali, Gordie Howe, Julius Erving, and many more. See the stories behind the people, and understand how the championship moments came to life.

Mikhail Gorbachev became the General Secretary of the Soviet Union on March 11, 1985. This book traces his amazing rise to power and provides an enlightening look at what's currently happening inside the U.S.S.R., including glasnost, the Chernobyl disaster, and recent summit meetings.

Phineas Taylor Barnum, born on July 5, 1810, is best known for his circus; however, in his life he had many other successful and not-so-successful business ventures. In his eighty-one years, he ran a general store and a newspaper, sold Bibles, operated a museum, and became famous for his love of a good joke and for his advertising feats. He also discovered General Tom Thumb and Jumbo the Elephant. This book is full of funny stories about the famous P. T. Barnum. Part of the People in Focus series.

In April 1861, Robert E. Lee turned down Abraham Lincoln’s offer to command the Union Army and decided to fight for the South. He was “the best soldier in America,” the man who altered the balance of the Civil War. Robert E. Lee’s leadership and military brilliance kept the South alive against insurmountable odds.
4 Death

Jerry Kinkaid doesn't care that he and Sheila are an unlikely couple. She's cute and sexy, and he has fun dating her. Then, on New Year's Eve, their world turns upside down when they discover that Sheila has cancer. Only Bonnie, the Tiger Shark whom Jerry has often fought with, is willing to support him while he watches Sheila die and while he learns some very valuable lessons about living.

Robin Gregory and Rick Winn meet in the hospital when she goes in for tests and he for chemotherapy. When Robin discovers that she, too, has leukemia, she relies on Rick's antics and his thoughtfulness to help her through the bad times. For eleven-year-old “Cat” Corwin, life is pretty easy as an only child. The fact that she was adopted has never bothered her because her parents have always said they were able to pick her. Then a drug helps Cat’s mother get pregnant, possibly with more than one baby, and suddenly Cat’s life no longer seems important to her parents as they prepare for children of their own.

High school junior Tracy Jensen is thrown into culture shock when her parents move from New York City to her grandmother’s farm. Most of the people she meets in her new rural school are kind, but ways are different there—perhaps less different, though, than they seem to Anya, a Russian exchange student also living in the tiny community. Together, Tracy and Anya endure Tracy’s grandmother’s stroke and try to raise enough money to help a family keep their farm. Fast friends, Tracy and Anya face cultural differences and life’s drama together.

In 1953 America has a kind of witch-hunt—a hunt for Communists. Ellen, whose family has just moved to a new town, must face the idea that her parents may be Communists. Ellen then must choose: her friends or her parents. Who is right? Or can there be another way?

Fourteen-year-old Fergy is tired of his family’s style. He’s tired of camping out and being dirty, but most of all he’s afraid of growing up illiterate and of being branded a thief. His dad says it’s all right to “reclaim” necessities from society, but Fergy no longer believes that. Fergy decides to run away, to try to find his grandparents, but he realizes that he cannot leave his little sister behind. He wants a normal life for both of them, but he hasn’t considered that his little sister may not feel the same way he does.

When she is twelve, Kelly’s life changes dramatically—and not for the better. She liked being an only child and living with her widowed mother. But now they are moving to her grandmother’s old house so her mother can open a restaurant. If that’s not bad enough, her mother’s partners and their children will all be living in the same house, and Kelly will have to share a room with a boy-crazy cheerleader. Only her friendship with the strange girl next door and the prospect of a relationship with one of the older boys in the house might make life more tolerable, maybe even interesting.

Fourteen-year-old Kendra is worried about the boy who is coming to New York to live with her family for the summer. She is not excited about having to spend her summer with her little brother and this unknown boy. Should the president of the United States be called His Highness? Or His Excellency? Or perhaps even His Elective Majesty? The First Congress of the United States was faced with making this decision and carrying out many other difficult tasks, as well. The important events and people of the early years of the United States are cataloged in this book including a discussion of the Barbary Pirates and the Whiskey Rebellion.

The proclamation of independence from Great Britain by the thirteen colonies was just the beginning of our new nation’s difficulties. By 1787, the Articles of Confederation were failing, and a new government had to be put into place. This is the story of both the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution of the United States as seen through the eyes of the children of Philadelphia.

The first president to live in the White House was John Adams. He and his wife, Abigail, moved in on November 1, 1800. The presidential home was originally designed by architect James Hoban during George Washington’s second term. From then to George Bush’s administration, the White House has had numerous changes, including the recent stripping of thirty-two layers of paint to get it ready for a new coat of gleaming white. The White House is the only residence and office of a head of state anywhere in the world that is opened to the public free of charge, even on a limited basis. Index included.

"Long live rock ‘n’ roll!" writes Graham Nash in this book’s foreword. The story of rock music, from its beginnings to the present, is recorded in this lively history, with special emphasis on the sixties. There are dozens of photos and direct quotes from musicians. Elton John tells how he felt when he zoomed to stardom and then hit a slump. Ray Manzarek of The Doors tells us that their music had timeless messages such as coming to grips with reality, with one’s own dark side, and with inner madness. The tragedy of Marvin Gaye’s death is just one of hundreds of stories about the people who have made rock-and-roll history.

This historical account of Americans fighting in the Spanish Civil War, 1936–39, shows the international enthusiasm for democracy pitted against fascism. The book is detailed enough to vividly portray the battles and the personalities of the American leaders. The response of artists such as Hemingway and Picasso is cited, along with the heroics of American volunteers. Reading the book is a reminder of a nearly forgotten war and the struggle for democracy that predated World War II.

Like it or not, politics affects every single thing in your life. This book explains how politics works in a straightforward manner. It begins with an explanation of the history of politics in the United States and finishes with both a discussion of the cost of corruption and a discussion of how individuals like you can make a difference.

After setting the stage with brief outlines of events and issues, the editor lets the words from newspapers, ballads, diaries, speeches, and letters tell the story of the Civil War. Causes of the Civil War, the war itself, and its aftermath are explored. Northern riots in protest of the draft, the loss of 38,000 black men in battle, the war at sea all have a voice here. A bibliography and an index are included.

Nearly all of us in the United States are immigrants. Whether our ancestors came by sailing ship in the 1600s or by jet just a few years ago, most of us came from somewhere else. Our ancestors may have been driven from their homelands by warfare, famine, or persecution. Tracing your family’s ancestry can be fascinating, and this book tells you how to begin the quest. An index and an appendix on how to gain access to public records are included.

Ashrita Furman of New York walked twenty-four miles while balancing a full pint milk bottle on his head. A boy in England was born with fourteen fingers and fifteen toes. The longest cooked noodle was 939 feet and 11 inches and was made in Colorado in 1985. This 1988 edition of the Guinness Book of World Records contains many amazing facts, as well as information on how you can create a world record.

Did you know that Richard Nixon had a bowling lane installed under a driveway leading to the White House? Did you know that in the State Dining Room no one touches a knife or fork until the president begins to eat? This book provides an insightful behind-the-scenes look at the workings of the White House.

Something always happens to Ned around holiday time. At Halloween, he's all set to do a magic show for his sister's party when an obnoxious cousin shows up and nearly ruins it all. After that, he has to decide how to deal with the live turkey his dad had given him in June, with instructions to fatten it up for the big Thanksgiving dinner. Taking care of the gobbler hasn't been easy, but killing him is not something Ned looks forward to. And so it goes. Each family holiday brings new problems and new insights.

Hobie is depressed when his best friend, Nick, has to go away to computer camp for the summer after fourth grade. Hobie's dad wants him to have a summer like Tom Sawyer's, but Hobie's at a loss until big-mouth Molly Bosco decides she's Hobie's friend. They win a pie-eating contest together, get mentioned twice in one newspaper, and change the mayor's idea about a time capsule.

Raymond Jardine has never had anything but bad luck, but he's convinced that if he wins Dewitt High's summer trip to Theamelpos, Greece, his luck will change. He tricks fellow junior Scan Delancy, who has also applied for the trip, into helping him with his schemes to be sure the two are selected. Unfortunately, Raymond's schemes involve a $33 million government project and a dead poet who must come back to life for Raymond and Scan to win.

In an attempt to win the "Bagful o' Cash" in a chicken-eating contest, Oscar Noodleman travels coast to coast in a picklemobile that belongs to his cousin, the inventor Dr. Peter Prechtwinkle. The contest gets interesting when Oscar and Peter are forced to pit their wits against an evil psychic with a grudge against Oscar's cousin. The psychic, Mrs. Gulbekian, has a huge appetite and is willing to do anything to keep Oscar from winning the contest.

Gerbil, Pennsylvania, was a sleepy little town until the inhabitants decided to put it on the map by building the First National Drive-Thru Museum of American Sightseeing and Clean Rest Rooms and by holding the Great Gerbil Roundup. These events fill Gerbil, Pennsylvania, with thousands of whooping tourists swinging tiny lariats, and only two kids, Elton Wazoo and McBeth McBeth, can save Gerbil from the destruction the tourists promise.

When Frank transfers to Griswold High, he is flattered that the Obnoxious Jerks ask him to join their group. All of them are bright, hilarious, and unlike any other boys in school. The Obnoxious Jerks' specialty is "Jerk Outs," in which they challenge stupid rules, like dress codes and conformity in general. When a girl, "Iceberg" Freeze, asks to join the group, she and Frank become the focus of the all-time greatest Jerk Out, and Frank even wears a skirt to school.

Rob and Soup are off on their tenth adventure. Soup's Uncle Virus has come to town with his motorcycle gang, the Hardboilers. The boys dream of riding Uncle Vi's motorcycle, but instead they uncover something strange in the barn next door to Janice Riker, the toughest kid in town.

In 1977, America sent millions of tons of wheat to the Soviet Union. The USSR sent us comedian Yakov Smirnoff. Upon entering the immigration office at New York's Kennedy Airport, Smirnoff asked a 400-pound woman in a green dress, "Are you the Statue of Liberty?" His perceptive and zany observations on life in the U.S. include chapters on becoming a citizen (or, "sworn in the U.S.A."). television and movies (or, "we've only just rerun"), and nice things about his homeland (or, "still crazy after all these years"). Mature subject matter.

In 1913, the Jackson Motor Company built a car with the pedals and the steering wheel in the backseat. The passengers sat in front of the driver, and the car was called the Duck. In 1910, the same company produced a car with headlights that doubled as bumpers. In this book, Encyclopedia Brown explains these and other bizarre and interesting facts from the real world of automobiles.

The Skinners are no ordinary family. When Dad launches head-first into his idea of the perfect summer vacation, the rest of the family thinks it might just be their ticket to adventure. At first, anyway. Their group includes Mom, Jenny, Marcia, Rick, Ben, a dog, two cats, and Brunhilda, their somewhat used thirty-five-foot motor home. Exploding appliances, a diet of wild foods, and other adventures await the zany Skinner family as they journey across America.

Zonker goes for Dudeship, Duke returns from Haiti, and Nancy Reagan's inaugural ball gown is stretching at the rate of half an inch a year. Through his cast of comic strip characters, Trudeau takes a humorous and often stinging look at the ironies of homelessness, Nicaragua, and relations between the sexes. Mature subject matter.
16 Love and Romance

From the noisy, squabbling sparrow to the “common” egret, from the lonely albatross to the immortal phoenix, these poems and the accompanying illustrations celebrate the sights and sounds of birds. Meant to be read by two voices (or by two groups of voices), the poems capitalize on rhythm and imagery to bring the birds dramatically to life.

The times have changed, but the concerns remain the same. Students, joined by a few graduates in this new edition, continue to be concerned about sports, success, sex, religion, and threats to world peace, and they continue to reflect honesty, hope, joy, cynicism, and despair. Their stories are universal.

With the ending of school comes the bonfire, speech lists, spiral notebooks, all the reminders of the year just completed go up in smoke. The narrator wanders through the summer thinking about high school. He becomes acquainted with all kinds of people in his hometown and discovers courage, vitality, and surprises. In reminiscing about his best friend, he learns that his strength is friendship.

This collection of 132 poems reflects impressions of everyday love and loss by such poets as Adrienne Rich, May Swenson, John Ciardi, and Stanley Kunitz. Topics range from the opening poem by Peter Meinke, “The Heart’s Location,” to a first kiss, to arm...
wrestling, to shooting crows, to a belly dancer, to the final poem by Ted Kooser, “At Midnight.”

America believes in sporting events and in sports heroes. The poem may be about Jackie Robinson or Casey’s daughter with the enthusiastic crowds, it may concern the player who says, “What I like best is shooting baskets by myself.” Some may want to go “out to the ball game”; others may be “Watching Football on TV.” Whatever the subject of the individual poem, this collection is firmly rooted in the American sports tradition.

The poems in this collection represent the past and the present and speak of many different cultures. Poems vary in subject and style from the nonsensical to the serious, from sonnets to haiku. All of the illustrations are reproductions from the collections of the Metropolitan Museum of Art.

What was it like to be in Vietnam, to wait, camouflaged, in ambush, to smell the stench of disease and excrement and death, to know that many comrades will not survive, to realize that going home may not bring release? Through these poems, Komunyakaa mirrors the anguish that war creates.

“To be successful And serene we must be at one with the universe.” Wagoner’s poetry reflects his thesis as he celebrates the flight of the hungry hawk and the loss of the snapping turtle. He writes of his father, the workman, the wage earner, and of his mother, the selfless giver. Greek mythology, childhood and young adulthood, fact and fantasy all are part of this celebration of life and of human experience.

If you want to know the how and why of music, this book is for you. How does a voice sing? How do instruments make their unique sounds? How do you make sense of the musical language? How do you make a record, and how does a record make music when it's played? What is sound, anyway? This book lets you understand, practice, and build your own music.

This book covers the history of the microscope, how to use a microscope, and what to look for when viewing everything from salt to bread mold to pond water to razor blades. A list of scientific supply companies, a list of books for further reading, and an index are also included for those curious about exploring the world around them.

"For hundreds of years, many people believed there were Moon people. In fact, in 1835, a newspaper printed a story describing the Moon people as having wings like those of a bat." In this book, distinguished astronomer Franklyn Branley discusses the significant research that has been done concerning the existence of intelligent life on other planets in our galaxy. Part of the Mysteries of the Universe series.

An explanation of telescope types, parts, care, and accessories is included in the opening chapters. The book then gives instruction for viewing land, the moon, the sun, the stars, and other deep-space objects. Magazines and books to read, sources of equipment, astronomical organizations, and an index are included.

Science comes from asking questions, and this book makes it fun to ask and answer those questions. Illustrations help you understand the rolling, swinging, spinning, falling, world of science. Try your hand at some experiments, and start asking questions and solving scientific puzzles of your own.

A survivor of the Ice Ages, the great auk, a relative of the puffin, finally became extinct about a hundred years ago after centuries of being hunted for its feathers and as a source of food. In 1835, naturalists believed that only about fifty great auks were left. Museums were alarmed that future generations would not be able to see what the great auk looked like and sent crews out to bring back specimens to stuff. They brought back forty-eight. Includes addresses to write for more information, a glossary, and an index. Part of the Gone Forever series.

Imagine a 500-pound lion with 9-inch fangs; that's the sabertooth cat of 12,000 years ago. Instead of biting its prey, the big cat drove its fangs home to the kill. This big cat roamed North America for thousands of years and disappeared with the Ice Age. Over 2,000 skulls of the sabertooth have been recovered from the La Brea tar pits in Los Angeles. Includes glossary, index, and address to write to for more information. Part of the Gone Forever series.

Several species of parrots are now extinct, among them, the Carolina parakeet, believed to be the only member of the parrot family native to the United States. In addition, many species of parrots are now on the endangered list. The parrots' popularity as a pet, the destruction of the South American rain forests, and the use of bird feathers as decoration are dangers facing the parrot family. Includes glossary, index, and address to write to for more information. Part of the Gone Forever series.

Animal language experiments over the last twenty years have proven that at least some animals are more than just "dumb" creatures. For instance, Koko, a gorilla has learned over five hundred signs and has even invented a number of signs of her own, including abstract ones for "above" and "below." Experiments with dolphins and whales often focus on the use of sound rather than signs and have proven that these animals recognize the significance of word order. These experiments have given science new insights into animal intelligence. Index included. A Nova book.

A type of manatee, the Steller's sea cow lived for thousands of years near the Bering Strait. Believed by some to be mermaids, the manatee females gave birth to live young and nursed them much as other mammals do. The Steller's sea cow was also unique in that it lived in cold water, other manatees require warm. Within twenty-seven years of its discovery in the 1700s, the Steller's sea cow was extinct. Part of the Gone Forever series.

The modern technology used in sports training centers today has helped athletes of all kinds to perform at their peak. Technology has also helped design the most effective sports equipment used for maximum performance and prevention of injury. Sports medicine and the technology behind it make significant contributions to the well-being of athletes in all arenas, but this book focuses on Olympic athletes and the work of the U.S. Olympic Training Centers. Index included. A Nova book.

Today animation, mapmaking, and video games all depend on computer graphics, a combination of technology and art. Computer graphics have dramatically changed the ways in which illustrations can be drawn and expanded the ways in which illustrations can be used. This book explains the how and why of the many applications of computer graphics.

Did you know that skin and bones, as well as eyes and blood, can be saved and transplanted? Sally Lee tells of case after case of organ and tissue transplants that have saved or improved lives. The problems, research, and processes involved in maintaining organ banks and in donating organs are carefully detailed. The book also contains a glossary, index, and list of further resources. The author concludes with information on how to become an organ or tissue donor.

Did you ever make a battery out of a lemon? This book teaches the basics of electricity and magnetism through experiments and projects that produce actual working models. The projects use common, inexpensive materials.

A space census indicated that, as of September 30, 1988, 7,122 objects were orbiting the earth. Of those objects, 1,734 were payloads, of which only 350 were still working. On top of that, the first moon exploration and the five later landings left behind a total of twenty tons of "junk." What is this junk? What hazards does it create? This book explores answers to those questions. A Nova book.

By studying fossils and sailors’ journals, scientists have patched together the story of the Atlantic gray whale and its extinction.
Fossils have been found in Europe and, between 1850 and 1979, ten fossils were found off the eastern shore of the United States. Other species of gray whales are currently at risk of extinction. Perhaps regulating whaling and recognizing present-day dangers to gray whales will help save them. Includes glossary, index, and addresses to write to for more information. Part of the Gone Forever series.

September 1, 1914, marked the death of Martha, the last passenger pigeon in the world. At one time, passenger pigeons numbered in the millions and flew in flocks large enough to block out the sun. As the eastern part of the United States became more crowded, the passenger pigeons moved farther west. The pigeons were easy to kill, and hunters pursued them for sport, for food, and for their feathers, which were used to decorate hats. By the time people became concerned about the pigeons' fate and passed laws to protect them, it was too late. Includes glossary, index, and addresses to write to for more information. Part of the Gone Forever series.

We live on perhaps the most amazing planet in our solar system. Astonishing facts about our planet are introduced and illustrated here: moving continents, the Great Rift Valley, the Arctic tundra, the La Brea tar pits, and many more. The mysteries of the saguaro cactus, ant farmers, and spider silk are also explored. Includes bibliography and index. Part of the Amazing Science series.

Before it became extinct, the dodo was found on three islands off the coast of Africa. Although it is classified in the same family as the pigeon, the dodo was a much larger, flightless bird, which was believed to have weighed around fifty pounds. The last dodo was seen about three hundred years ago. Its disappearance marked the first recorded extinction of an entire species. Includes address to write to for more information, glossary, and index. Part of the Gone Forever series.

The woolly mammoth stood taller than any elephant alive today and must have been a fearful sight to prehistoric peoples. Its coat of shaggy fur made the mammoth appear even larger. The first bones of this ancient giant were found over five hundred years ago, and since that time, more discoveries have led to various theories about the woolly mammoth, its life, and, finally, its extinction. Includes address to write to for more information, glossary, and index. Part of the Gone Forever series.

Beautiful photographs of rocks and minerals make this volume a good resource for readers who want to identify rocks. This book also contains photos of gemstones, some information on cutting, polishing, and collecting rocks and minerals, and even information on rocks from space. An Eyewitness Book.

Matt Hilton and his parents are kidnapped by aliens and taken to a galactic preserve for endangered species. In the Earth colony there, Matt meets Ryan and Sara, two young geniuses with plans to escape the preserve and return to Earth. As their adventure develops, Matt is forced to impersonate an alien from another colony of the preserve, and Sara and Ryan are “despaced”—converted into miniature black holes by the spherical robots that both imprison and serve the colonists. Part 1 of the Orb Trilogy.

Ahead of an ice age that has moved steadily southward, most North Americans have gone south, to stop finally in northern Mexico. James and his family are among the travelers; but now, in 2050, conditions in Mexico are rapidly getting worse. James’s family decides to return north. Although they know they will face primitive conditions and isolation if they go north, they prefer that to the terrorist activities of the fanatics who call themselves the Mexican Liberation Army. James initially decides to stay in Mexico; however, as destruction worsens, James begins the long journey to rejoin his family.

Katy Norris hates history. She can’t figure out why everyone is making such a big deal about the bicentennial anniversary of the U.S. Constitution. One day, however, a freak accident sends her back to 1787, and she has the opportunity to experience the big event for herself.

In the middle of the twenty-first century, the human race has solved numerous problems. War and disease are pretty much a thing of the past. Children are generally authority figures. Sam, age fourteen, makes the decisions in his family about his mother's being institutionalized for acute alcoholism, his brother's schooling, and his brother's adoption. Sam discovers that, although he's very bright and very caring, he cannot always have complete control and that his carefully made plans for his family's survival may go astray.

In the twenty-fourth century, Morgan Farraday is assigned to a job on the planet Jaspre, an Earth colony. Sent to Lumisland in the north, she is drawn to the colored snows, and there she meets Anders Ahlwen, a mystic who has the powers of the snow. When Morgan's daughter, Dee, joins Ahlwen's camp, her father tries to rescue her and, in the attempt, comes to accept Ahlwen's power. Morgan then finds a way to perhaps save the snows from progress.

On what had promised to be a routine orienteering expedition, fourteen-year-old Laurie and his friend Andy witness the first invasion of the Tripods. When that invasion is apparently repulsed, people relax, only to be invaded by a second attack far more subtle than the first. When Laurie and his family recognize that the Tripods intend to brainwash everyone with hypnotic caps, they desperately try to flee the country. Part of the Tripods series.

It sounds crazy, but Harry Newberry believes his own mother is the comic book superhero Tuatara. Can Harry, Tuatara, and a loony gang of misfit superheroes stop the dreaded Bonnie Android from destroying Yupitz and turning it into a supergalactical work of art? Other questions this book will answer: Can smelly gym socks destroy your brother? Can anchovies ever be loved? Can cheese blight cure the common cold? Can cold, day-old pizza be a commercial success? After this adventure, ordinary comic books will never be the same!

For Nick Swansen, Room 19 is a barrier and a haven. As a Special Ed kid, he knows he's different from the other students, but he's not sure why. His friend Shana has just "gone up" to regular classes, and Nick doesn't understand what that means either. While he might not learn some things as fast as other students, Nick does have the same emotional struggles and questions. How do you ask a girl to the prom? What do you do when she accepts? How do you deal with rejection? And in the end, how do you find acceptance for the person you are? Nick takes chances, loses, and wins.
22 Sports

Considered to be the purest of American sports, developed by Americans for Americans, basketball originated nearly a hundred years ago in 1891. Developed by James Naismith, the game originally had thirteen rules, some of which remain unchanged today. During the century of its existence, basketball has become one of the world’s most popular sports because of its simplicity—all that is needed is a ball and a hoop, and it can be played by a team of two to five people or simply by yourself. Foreword by Julius Erving.

This book gives not only various kinds of records for many games and sports, it also outlines short histories of many sports. Did you know that the earliest baseball game played under the Cartwright rules was in 1846 and that the youngest major league player started his career at the age of fifteen? Did you know that the longest Monopoly game lasted for 660 hours? Fascinating facts abound in sports and games from aerobatics to yachting.

in the Crazy Horse Electric baseball game. Those are the days when Willie believes his body is his friend, that he can make no demands that his body can't meet. The world is his. Then comes the waterskiing accident, and Willie is brain damaged, his speech is altered, and his physical coordination is destroyed. The world is no longer his, but he fights to hang on to the good things.

Seventeen-year-old Joe Faust is facing his last year of high school, and he wants to spend it in the public high school close to his home. His father, a renowned scientist, has other ideas and wants Joe to attend an exclusive private school. At first, Joe gets his choice, but a mistake in judgment lands him in the private school. A basketball star, he tries to make the team in his new school but doesn't do very well until one day, while he is practicing in an abandoned gym, he finds himself in an unusual situation and makes a bargain that he will ultimately regret.

Because Frank Gardner has a reputation as a winning coach, he has been brought in to lead the Aldridge High Panthers to a victorious season. The community has not had a conference championship in nearly a dozen years, and they want one. The problem lies in the team's not having a really good pass receiver. The coach discovers a solution when he realizes that one of the basketball players is a natural. It's an unusual solution, though, because the basketball player is a girl.

The statistics are staggering, but this book helps make them personal. This book looks at who takes drugs, from the pros to the amateurs, and why. The reasons range from muscle building to stress to pressure to succeed. Jonathan Harris talks about the effects drugs have on the player and on sports in general. He also discusses treatment and prevention of drug abuse.

When the county demands that all athletes be tested for drugs, Ron Woods, wrestler and star student, goes ahead with the test even though he believes his rights are being violated. When the test comes back positive, the entire community is shocked, because Ron is the straightest kid in school. Friends, teachers, coaches—all try to get him to retake the test, but Ron refuses. His moral stand creates problems for him, yet he stands firm. His mother defends him, but Ron strongly misses the support of his father who died in Vietnam, and his bitterness about his father's absence makes his decision even harder.

Shy Arthur Rinehart dreads a summer without his athletic best friend, Zan, and he's determined to spot as many birds as he can that are the blue of Zan's baseball bat. Determined that Arthur will see the birds on his hope list, Arthur's millionaire grandmother purchases a racing shell and pays her absent-minded chauffeur, Hal Slappy, to help Arthur spot birds near her Potomac River home. As Arthur confronts his fear of the water, Hal and Grandmother become obsessed with the idea of actually racing the shell, the Read More, in the President's Cup Regatta. Twelfth in a series of books about Zan and Arthur.

Cam Potter is a powerful quarterback and captain of the football team. His coach believes that he has a strong possibility of getting a college scholarship if he can gain thirty pounds in the next few months. The coach suggests that Cam take steroids and sends him to a supplier. Cam begins to gain weight, but other parts of his life deteriorate. When he realizes that his supplier, also a user, has developed cancer of the liver, Cam recognizes that he alone must make the critical decisions about his own life.

When students from Woodrow High steal the Millington High cougar, the traditional tomato, green pepper war is left behind, and the football rivalry between the two schools turns ugly. Beth O'Connor, a minor offender, is arrested and forced into a battle that could destroy her senior year.

To the superstars, spring training is like spring break, “a time for back slaps and wisecracks.” For other players, spring training is serious business. In this book, sportswriter George Sullivan provides expert insight into the ritual that all of the players must survive in order to play in the big leagues.
23 Supernatural

Whirl yourself away to England for thirteen quick visits with the strange and supernatural. The stories are about very real people. The bad guys are cruel, vengeful, or just plain mean. Their victims are mostly kids who win in the end. The supernatural elements include ghosts and muses, a Chinese duck, a strange owl, curses, and insanity. While these stories are definitely strange, a touch of English humor makes many of them rather fun.

Miss Potts remembers too well the dark magic of Professor Mephisto's performance at the Caledon depot fifty years before. She also remembers Freddie's death, and her feeling that it was somehow connected to his volunteering to go on stage during the magic show. Now, fifty years later, the handbill announcing the professor's magic show has reappeared, and it's up to her to save this new generation from his black magic.

Jeannie Warren, a practical, smart, just-turned-fifteen year old, is just crazy enough to make a wish when a genie pops out of her birthday-present lamp. But this genie is a little out of practice, and Jeannie gets her wishes in wild, crazy, and out-of-this-century ways. Love from an "older man"? Poof! He becomes her father! The surprises never stop in this light-hearted look at the teenager who can have it all... if only she can ask for it in the right way.

Tammy Jensen, fifteen, is thrilled that she can finally accompany her father on a logging trip. However, she has a frightening experians when they are at the site. Did the old man who warned the loggers to leave have special powers? Did the trees move around, and did Tammy ride a Kelpie? Not sure of anything when it's over, Tammy is left wondering about "places of power."

Meaghan Lake is not a typical junior in high school; she is a white witch. With her mother's help, she is learning to handle her powers so that she can take on the even bigger powers of the Matrix, her inheritance from her father. Then she meets Mal and immediately falls in love, but her attention is pulled away by Gemma, an evil black witch who challenges Meaghan's powers.

Anne Farrar and her family have rented a house in an ordinary, boring valley. Life seems normal until Anne discovers an old family Bible which contains the name Alice Jardyne and the phrase, "deid the 24 juin 1726 blottit owt of the Boke of Lyffe." Anne determines to find out why anyone could be subjected to such a cruel fate. When she learns that Alice was believed to be a witch and was murdered, she also discovers the cost of that knowledge.

Alyssa has always made wishes, but when she finds the old mirror in Aunt Reva's attic, her wishes start coming true. Then Aunt Reva starts warning her about the mirror. It had been her sister's mirror, and there are strange stories surrounding her sister's death. When Alyssa realizes the power of the mirror, her need for it is already too strong.

Ellen is bored and unhappy. She and her mother argue most of the time, and she believes that her father is a loser. One day she sees an old bus— with an unusual driver headed for Burnhope, a community that has no bus service. Intrigued but frightened, Ellen boards the bus, telling herself that she is in control and that she can stop the adventure when she chooses. The bus driver, Dagmar Schultz has a terrific crush on James Mann, but he barely acknowledges her existence. Then one night in the local bowling alley, Dagmar meets Edgar, who claims to be a warlock and offers her a deal. If she will get Edgar a date with her Aunt Gretchen, he will use his powers to capture James for Dagmar. Although she is skeptical, Dagmar agrees. Desperate situations call for desperate measures.

In this adventure, the Ghost Squad encounters Clem Jackson, a mild, unassuming man on the outside but an enraged paranoid killer on the inside. The Ghost Squad's efforts to stop Jackson from causing more "accidental" deaths are complicated by the appearance of an old enemy who returns as a super ghost, capable of entering other ghostly bodies. It is up to the Ghost Squad to prevent the spread of this supernatural menace. Part of the Ghost Squad series.

Jacob is a riddle. When he meets Andy Peterson, Jacob urgently tells Andy, "Someone's got my bed." Then he disappears into the woods. After other odd incidents with Jacob, Andy and his twin sister Kat decide to explore the riddle—a riddle that can only be solved in a graveyard.

As soon as Jim sets up a clubhouse on the second floor of the old house, his personality begins to change. First, Jim becomes very attached to a picture of an old man, and he won't let anyone remove it from the wall where he found it. Then his friends begin to notice that at times he talks like an old man, and an eerie secret begins to unfold.

I once has always wanted to be a magician, but he needs new tricks to impress his young friends. When he is asked to help Duncan the Great move his magic show for the school assembly, Lance sees his chance to learn some new magic. But when Duncan's evil marionette tries to end Lance's dream, Lance and Joe must search for a way to end the threat of runaway magic.

Chad is quite uneasy about the New York City townhouse that his family has rented. Although the house is very modern and extremely comfortable, Chad knows that the voices he hears after midnight do not exist only in his imagination. When he learns that his little brother Luke hears them too, the boys investigate and begin to slip in and out of their own time.

Thoughened and made wise by a series of foster parents, Siân is not an ordinary girl. When two elderly sisters hire Siân as a companion at their boardinghouse, "Cradle of the Winds," Siân is pleased and excited at the prospect of a more predictable life. The boardinghouse has a life of its own, though. winds whisper, and a far-away child sings lullabies. Then Siân finds the old diary of lonely Sarah Jane and reads tales of being locked in the cellar and seeing a devil. Realizing how alike she and Sarah are, Siân dares to go beyond a secret door to the cellar.

Did you ever wonder what would happen if you goofed when you mixed up a love potion? It's March 19, the night of dreams, and Miranda Taylor is about to find out. The result of her goof is Michael Oliver Newberry or MONday to his friends. Monday was a seventeen-year-old 'really hip dude' who died in 1958. Now he wants revenge on his old girlfriend and can't quite get the hang of the 1980s. Miranda agrees to help him, and the funny escapades that follow will keep you laughing. In the end, Miranda discovers the real secret ingredient in love potions.

It's Halloween, and Maxie hates wearing a costume. Every Halloween the director of the orphanage where he lives talks him into dressing up as a ghost Maxie complains that only first graders wear sheets. However, when Maxie gets struck by lightning and meets a special ghost of his own, things change.

All Ellen wants is to run in the Midsummer Sports Meet. But her witch friends, who just happen to live in her bedroom’s old chimney, want Ellen to do much more— all in fun, of course. What a mess they make! And what a wacky effort it takes to undo the mischief and get Ellen in the race.

The only good thing about the summer, according to Meg Korshak, is the terrific acting role she grabbed in the local summer theater. Maybe she'll be too busy to worry about her parents’ break-up or about her sick grandmother. Her summer plans shatter, though, when she finds herself reluctantly staying with her father in a small lakeside village because her mother “needs to get away.” Once Meg is there, she discovers the mystery of a bank robbery and the ghost of Caleb Larsen’s father, who tries to talk to Meg through her dreams. Sequel to A Secret Window.

When Mrs. Willet goes to tend the sacred sites of her people, the Australian aborigines, Jo sees no harm in tagging along. Her mother is gone, and she has stayed with Mrs. Willet before. What Jo doesn’t know and what Mrs. Willet had almost forgotten is that Balyet, a young aboriginal girl who had been banished by her people a thousand years ago, still roams the hills, desperate for companionship and love. These forces, combined with Jo’s rebelliousness, lead the two women—one young, one old—on a dangerous journey.

You will want to visit New Zealand when you discover this reference book for your history, geography, or culture report. The photographs are large and beautiful, and the book is easy to read and clearly organized. Like other books in the Countries of the World series, this one contains a wealth of up-to-date information. The author is a New Zealander and a former teacher.

If all the world has been explored, is there any adventure left for you? Climb the Scottish Highlands, descend into the Grand Canyon, cling to the ragged coast of Ireland, ski the icecaps of Greenland. In photographs and story, John Beatty shows what it means to seek out wild places.

Nestled at the base of the spectacular Rocky Mountains, Denver, the Mile High City, is an exciting center of culture, professional sports, education, and recreation. Visitors have access to museums, parks, theaters, and recreation facilities, as well as quick access to many fine ski resorts in winter and summer recreation sites. Includes statistics, addresses to write for more information, a map, and an index of people and places. Part of the See the USA series.

Nashville is perhaps best known for its country music. The Grand Ole Opry, a famous radio show, drew many performers to the city, and from that a large music industry developed. Opryland, a theme park, provides rides, adventures, and live musical productions. Visitors may also see showboats; record their own hit song; or visit parks, museums, or the world’s only exact-size replica of the Parthenon. Includes statistics, addresses to write to for more information, a map, and an index of people and places. Part of the See the USA series.

New York City is situated at the mouth of the Hudson River and has one of the best natural harbors in the world. That alone makes it one of the world’s best-known cities. Fondly called the “Big Apple,” New York City can provide the visitor with outstanding theaters, museums, sports events, and tours of the United Nations, the Statue of Liberty, the Empire State Building, and many historic sites. Includes statistics, a map, addresses to write to for more information, and an index of people and places. Part of the See the USA series.

Your report on West Germany will be easy and fun if you use this book by Barbara Einhorn. Clear maps, colorful photographs, and lots of interesting details make this a very useful reference for research in geography, history, or culture for middle school and junior high. Part of the Countries of the World series.

Los Angeles is the second largest city by population in our country and the largest in area. Boasting everything from ocean and beaches to mountains close by, La Brea tar pits to Hollywood, Disneyland to whale watching, Los Angeles is truly a visitor’s paradise. Includes statistics, addresses to write to for more information, a map, and an index of people and places. Part of the See the USA series.

A beautiful 200-mile stretch of wilderness in northern Minnesota provides a special place for those who seek solitude and natural beauty. Each year, many visitors come to the Boundary Water Canoe Area to enjoy canoeing, camping, hiking, fishing, swimming, snowshoeing, and skiing, as well as cooking over campfires, watching sunsets, and looking for plants and animals to photograph or draw. All without radios, fast food, motorboats, or comfortable beds! The book includes clothing and equipment lists, area statistics, a map, addresses to write to for more information, and an index. Part of the See the USA series.

Do you think you know everything about Great Britain because you know that the British drive on the “wrong” side of the road and that America was once a British colony? This small book will make you think again. With a wealth of fascinating, up-to-date detail presented in a clear, colorful format, this is an excellent reference. You will like the photography, the large, clear maps and charts, and the glossary and index at the end of the book. Part of the Countries of the World series.

One of the world’s most popular tourist attractions, Walt Disney World, is found in Orlando. More than ten million people visit Disney World each year. However, Orlando has more to offer. The NASA launch complex and the Kennedy Space Center are nearby, and St. Augustine, Daytona Beach, and many other interesting places are within easy driving distance. Includes statistics, addresses to write to for more information, a map, and an index of people and places. Part of the See the USA series.

Your report on Israel can start with this well-researched, easy-to-read, colorful book on that fascinating Middle Eastern country. The authors are American, but they have visited Israel more than twenty times, and their love of the country is evident. Sondra Henry and Emily Taitz write especially for young people and include many photos of young Israelis throughout the book. They also include a glossary, an index, and a list of Israeli consulates in the United States to help the reader who wants even more information. Part of the Discovering Our Heritage series.

A hard-working industrial city, Chicago was officially organized in 1831. By 1871, the year of the Great Chicago Fire, the village of 200 had grown to 300,000 people. Today it is a city of three million people that provides visitors with many interesting places to explore. Among these are the Museum of Science and Industry, the Adler Planetarium, the Sears Tower, the Lincoln Park Zoo, and the Shedd Aquarium. Includes statistics, addresses to write to for more information, a map, and an index of people and places. Part of the See the USA series.

Our nation's capital city has many points of interest, and walking tours are but one way of seeing some of them. Tourmobiles provide transportation for those who prefer not to walk. This book gives hints for enjoying Washington, including the Smithsonian, the memorials, and museums for kids. The book also includes a brief history of the city, statistics, addresses to write to for more information, a map, and an index of people and places. Part of the See the USA series.

From the great beauty of the Grand Canyon and the Rocky Mountains to the spectacular volcanoes of Hawaii, Washington, and Alaska, from lakes and forests to unusual cliff dwellings, the U.S. National Parks not only preserve many natural wonders but also give visitors a chance to participate in educational and recreational activities. The history of the National Park system is examined and the changes happening today which threaten the future of our national parks are discussed. Includes a map; a list of the U.S. National Parks with areas, features, and activities; and an index.

William G. McBride is professor of English at Colorado State University and executive secretary-treasurer of the Colorado Language Arts Society, Colorado's professional organization of language arts teachers. He has taught at all levels and in rural and suburban environments. In addition to articles and book reviews, he coauthored (with Ruth Cline) the book A Guide to Literature for Young Adults: Background, Selection, and Use. He has served on the board of directors for ALAN and for SGNAL and now serves on the local board of education and on NCTE's Secondary Section Committee.
