INTRODUCTION

This Guide addresses the three domains of learning: psychomotor, cognitive, and affective. The following is a brief explanation of each.

Psychomotor

Manipulative skills, such as sharpening a pencil and making a bulletin board display, are representative of activities that are psychomotor in nature. These tasks are identified by a group of teachers. Each performance objective has a performance standard which must be met to demonstrate student proficiency in the manipulative aspect of the task.

Cognitive

Cognition is the mental process by which knowledge is acquired. To perform psychomotor tasks, students must think. Effective thinking is necessary for successful performance of job tasks. Students gain cognition through real and vicarious experiences. This guide enables the instructor to provide decision-making opportunities for students, thus developing their cognitive skills.

Affective

The affective domain deals with attitudes, interests and values development. Desirable behavior is the learning outcome of the affective domain. This guide presents activities created to promote an understanding of self and others in a working environment. The instructor is encouraged to use the activities to stress how attitudes, values, and goal attainment influence working relationships and productivity.
USE OF THIS GUIDE

This Small Business Management Guide is designed to provide job-relevant tasks, performance objectives, performance guides, resources, teaching activities, evaluation standards, and criterion-referenced measures. It may be used with any teaching method the instructor selects. Although a guide contains suggestions for specific classroom activities for each identified task, teachers are encouraged to be creative in adapting the material to meet the particular needs of their students.

The student will write a definition of management to include the process of accomplishing the goals of an organization through the effective use of people and other resources.
COMPETENCY

Define management.

INFORMATION SHEET

The word management is used to mean the group of persons called executives who perform management activities. Management is defined as the process of accomplishing the goals of an organization through the effective use of people and other resources. Other resources include money, buildings, materials, and equipment.

By setting goals, determining which combinations of resources are needed to meet the goals, and then seeking the assistance of others in the organization, more work is accomplished.

Generally, organizations have work that is managerial and non-managerial. Managerial work involves planning and coordinating the work load for non-managerial workers. Non-managerial work is best described as work that directly produces goods or services. An employee making pastry dough or addressing an envelope is performing a non-managerial activity. On the other hand, an employee who is developing standards for the pastry dough to meet or making a request for the addressed envelope is performing a managerial activity. Large organizations have several management divisions to perform managerial responsibilities. The following are examples.

a. Finance

   the management of money and other assets.

b. Accounting

   the bookkeeping methods involved in making a financial record of business transactions and preparing statements concerning the assets, liabilities, and operating results of business.

c. Personnel

   an administrative division of an organization concerned with the body of persons employed by or active in it.

d. Production

COMPETENCY

Explain the role of management in operating a business.

INFORMATION SHEET

During the early years of American business history, a business could function without an exact plan for operation. But today with increased competition, managers make varied decisions based on carefully selected goals. Since management is responsible for the overall successful operation of the company, specific duties are difficult to assign. Consequently, the role of management is more easily explained by classifying these duties into functions. The four functions of management are planning, organizing, leading, and controlling. Each function is related and often overlaps with the other. As a result, management is a continuous two-way process as depicted in the following model.

Management Model

Planning  Organizing

Controlling  Leading

Planning

Planning refers to setting goals and determining how to meet these goals. Planning is the first and most important function of management. Basic tools used in planning are budgets, schedules, standards, policies, and procedures.

Organizing

Organizing involves arranging resources and relationships between departments and employees, and defining the responsibility each has for accomplishing a job. An organization chart is an example of an organizational function. The organizational function describes how people will work together.

Leading

Leading involves training and guiding employees in carrying out the plans of the organization. It is the role of management to motivate workers to achieve goals. Since most workers are interested in personal goals and not the goals of the organization, effective management will set goals that will allow the worker to meet personal goals while meeting the goals of the organization.

Controlling

The controlling function involves determining whether goals are being met and correcting actions if goals are not being met. Controlling takes place after the other functions have been implemented. It is the final process in the management model. The control process consists of three parts: setting standards, comparing actual standards with planned standards, and taking corrective actions if the standards are not met.

EVALUATION

The student will compose and write a company's philosophy, goals, and objectives as they relate to the beliefs and future of the organization.
COMPETENCY

Develop the company philosophy, goals, and objectives.

INFORMATION SHEET

#1 Characteristics of a Business Philosophy

A business philosophy should be the following:

1. brief;
2. general;
3. when possible, include the business tagline;
4. written and displayed in the store.

Discuss in class the following business philosophy: “We dedicate ourselves to keeping our customers happy.” We may infer that happy employees make happy customers. Consequently, philosophies such as this one serve as a foundation for developing policies in many businesses and stores. They usually deal with such topics as the services to be provided for customers, the public relations to be achieved, and the treatment to be afforded employees.

#2 Characteristics of Goals

Goals are general or overall statements for indicating the direction in which the organization plans to aim. These general statements are divided into subgoals. These subgoals become objectives. General or overall goals are made for the organization as a whole. From the organization’s goals, each department within an organization develops its goals. Review the following examples:

Organization’s Goal: To improve the image of the store.

Public Relations Department’s Goal: Improve the image of the store by increasing community awareness.

Accounting Goal: Provide funds to improve the image of the store.

In general, goals of a business should be written to allow flexibility and realistic attainment.
COMPETENCY

Develop the company philosophy, goals, and objectives.

#3 Characteristics of Objectives

Objectives are the specific aims of the organization. Each division within an organization must have clear measurable objectives. The organization objectives specifically identify the action to be taken, who is taking the action, and when the action is to be taken. Review the example in the section headed "Characteristics of a goal." The goal, "to improve the image of the organization," would have objectives such as these:

Objective of the Public Relations Department: Director will meet with local civic organizations next week.

Objective of the Accounting Department: Chief Financial Officer will provide donations for civic charities as specified by the public relations meeting with civic groups next week.
COMPETENCY

Develop the company philosophy, goals, and objectives.

EVALUATION

COMPETENCY

State the purposes of forecasting and of selecting marketing strategies.

INFORMATION SHEET

Forecasting means looking ahead anticipating opportunities and barriers and planning with certain assumptions about the future. Once forecasts are made, organizations may select or create the appropriate marketing strategies. Marketing strategy is best described as the skillful manner in which an organization chooses to market its goods and services and distinguish itself in the marketplace.

The purpose of forecasting and selecting marketing strategies is to provide the organization with information with which to make plans for future sales and the total operation of the organization. Before making predictions about the future, organizations rely heavily on certain factors such as sales records, strategies used by the competition, market research, and environmental considerations. The first important factor is sales records, which provide a wealth of information to an organization. Almost all of the organization's activities can be analyzed by reviewing sales records. For example, if sales were particularly high in January, the organization should find out why and repeat these strategies the following January. On the other hand, if sales were particularly low, organizations would not wish to repeat last January's strategies. The second most important factor is the competition. All organizations should learn as much about the competition as possible. Before forecasting and selecting strategies, a well-managed organization will seek to find what predictions competitors have made. How do the competitors plan to market their goods? What is the competitor's share of the market?

The third most important consideration to make is market research findings. These findings aid in forecasting and selecting marketing strategies by serving as a standard and control system and as a basis for sound decision making. Market research answers many questions for the organization such as:

What new or different things should the organization be doing?

How is the organization doing?

What are the best solutions to the organization's problem?

Market research may be as simple as a survey completed by store personnel and as complex as employing a consulting firm to conduct a series of activities. Many small organizations, however, seldom if ever conduct research activities. These organizations function quite well by reading information reported in trade journals. The fourth most important consideration to be made before planning for the future is change in environmental influences. These influences are categorized as economic, psychological, and sociological. These influences may present barriers as well as opportunities to the future development of the organization.
COMPETENCY

State the purposes of forecasting and selecting marketing strategies.

COMPETENCY
Planning and organizing work.

INFORMATION SHEET
Planning Work

Just as management sets overall goals and objectives for the company, each department within the company must have goals or objectives. Clearly stated, measurable goals or objectives provide a basis for standards to be met and help managers choose the best alternatives to accomplish their work. After goals and objectives are set, managers use certain instruments to evaluate progress and measure accomplishments. These instruments are often referred to as planning tools and each is described below.

Budgets

A budget is a systematic process that aids managers in planning and controlling the resources required in the achievement of objectives. The most important part of the planning process is the preparation of a budget. Each department within an organization should have a budget. In most organizations, the term budget refers to financial data, but can include personnel, units of production, and the number of sales.

Schedules

Schedules are used chiefly for planning time. Schedules identify tasks to be performed and the required time to complete each task. Schedules are used to plan the completion and shipment of orders and to maintain employee earning records.

Standards

A method of evaluating the completed work is referred to as a standard. An organization sets standards as part of the original plan. For each goal or objective planned, standard for measuring its effectiveness must also be set. There are different types of standards, and the type used depends on the type of organization. The basic types include quantity standards, cost standards, quality standards, and time standards.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Standard</th>
<th>Description</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Quantity</td>
<td>refers to the number produced in a given time</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Quality</td>
<td>refers to defects appearing in the work</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Time</td>
<td>refers to whether the work was completed on time</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cost</td>
<td>refers to the amount of money budgeted as compared to actual cost</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Even though management planning for the process of setting standards is under the planning function of management, the actual setting of standards is a controlling function. The process of controlling involves three activities.

1. Setting standards for each goal or objective.
2. Measuring actual performance with scheduled performance to see if objectives were met.
3. Taking corrective action when problems occur.
COMPETENCY

Planning and organizing work.

How Work is Organized

Before a plan for work can be carried out, the work must be organized. Organizing involves arranging resources and relationships between employees and departments and defining the responsibility each has for accomplishing the job. Each department within an organization has specific responsibilities and each employee within the department has specific duties.

General responsibility within an organization is visually depicted by an organizational chart, which does the following:

1. indicates each employee's area of responsibility and to whom each reports.
2. coordinates the division of labor.
3. shows the type of work done by the business.
4. indicates lines of promotion.

There are three elements of organizing: the division of labor, the facilities, and the workers.

Division of Labor

The division of labor refers to how work is divided throughout the organization by departments and then divided within the department between each employee. In dividing work and responsibilities, management takes measures to be sure that each job contributes to the goals or objectives of the organization, and that each employee has the necessary skills to perform the job for which he or she is using that skill. Once individual jobs are assigned, each employee should be given a written job description. A job description is a written account of the duties and responsibilities and the extent of authority involved in a particular job.

Facilities

Organizing includes arranging the facilities so that work may be carried out smoothly and for the comfort of the employees. Allocations must be made for cleanliness, bathrooms, parking, and lunch areas. Tools and equipment must also be maintained.

Workers

Workers comprise the major element to be considered in organizing. Workers must be satisfied if their productivity is to be high.
COMPETENCY

COMPETENCY

Develop short-term action plans.

PERFORMANCE OBJECTIVE

The student will be able to develop short term action plans on a day-by-day, week-by-week basis as they apply to management.

INSTRUCTIONAL ACTIVITIES

1. Discuss contents of the Information Sheet.
2. Discuss the planning model and the daily planning guide.
3. Have students read the Information Sheet and complete the Activity.
4. Discuss the completed work.
5. Have students solve the case study using the forms provided.
6. Hold a class discussion on the exercise.

INSTRUCTIONAL MATERIALS/RESOURCES

Vorndran and Litchfield. General Merchandise Retailing, Chapter 3.
Burke and Bittel. Business Principles and Management, Chapter 3.

EVALUATION

Given class discussion, the students will write short term action plans on a day-by-day, week-by-week basis.
COMPETENCY

Develop short-term action plans.

INFORMATION SHEET

Short-term action plans control the day-by-day, week-by-week operations of an organization. An organization develops short-term coordinated plans to meet the long term plan. Long term plans include those that cover periods of time longer than one year while short term plans cover periods of less than one year even though their actual accomplishments may take longer. Short-term action plans must be flexible and planned in detail. Each department within the company sets short-term plans. To meet the short-term objectives, each employee within each department has the responsibility of fulfilling day-by-day activities or strategies. In planning for a short period of time, the rules are basically the same as those used for developing long term action plans and the planning model is also the same.

Planning Model

1. Identify exactly what you want to accomplish. Write your objectives. Be specific. Instead of setting the objective “increase sales in the linen department” set the objective to “increase the sale of sheets in the linen department by 10%”.

2. Divide goals into short-term objectives. Prioritize your objective if you want to accomplish more than one. Write an “A” by the most important objective. Write a “B” by the next most important objective, etc.

3. Set strategies for accomplishing each objective and strategy.

After an action plan is developed, a smart manager will make use of a daily planning guide to keep him on course. A sample follows.

Monday Planning Guide

A. Prepare a display for table linen.
B. Meet with employees about want slips.
C. Prepare work schedule for next week.
D. Meet with general manager to discuss advertising.
E. Begin work on Thursday’s payroll.

NOTE: The most important objective for Monday is “A.”
COMPETENCY

   a. Identify exactly what you want to accomplish.
   b. Divide goals into short term objectives.
   c. Set strategies for accomplishing each objective.
   d. Train employees to identify their objectives.

#2 Case Study

Department managers are usually responsible for determining employees’ work schedules. When they make work schedules, department managers need to consider the department budget. They also need to consider the tasks that need to be done during the given time period.

Dalton De Ross is manager of the China Department of an Acme Store in Madison, Wisconsin. The store is open from 10:00 a.m. until 9:00 p.m. on Friday. On Saturday, the store is open from 10:00 a.m. until 6:00 p.m. Employees are expected to arrive a half hour before the store opens and to remain for a half hour after closing. They have an hour for lunch or dinner and also receive two 15 minute breaks during the 8-hour work day.

Dalton De Ross has four employees working in the China Department.

1. Susan Amato, assistant manager, who makes $5 per hour and works 40 hours per week.
2. Tom Benoit works 40 hours per week and earns $4 per hour.
3. Craig Caryle works 40 hours per week and earns $3 per hour.
4. Doris Giles works up to 20 hours per week and earns $2.50 per hour. She is a high school cooperative distributive education student who can work after 2:00 in the afternoons during the week. She can work all day on Saturdays.

Peak selling periods in the China Department are Friday and Saturday afternoons. Excluding Dalton’s salary, the budget for salaries this week is $500.

EVALUATION

The student will be able to state in writing the importance of performance measurements and recordkeeping.
COMPETENCY

Describe the importance of performance measurements and recordkeeping.

INFORMATION SHEET

The process of measuring employee and managerial performance is called performance appraisal. Almost all organizations have a formal method of evaluating employees. An evaluation system is used to assess an employee for salary increases and many other factors. Normally, once each year the manager will meet with each employee and discuss his or her progress on the job. From this meeting, employees learn if they are meeting company standards, and if not, what improvements are needed. Before an appraisal meeting is to take place, the manager completes the required forms (rating forms if this method is used) including time cards if applicable. The information contained in the form is discussed with the employee in the meeting. In completing the appraisal form the employer should pay close attention to the rules listed below.

1. Try to be fair.
2. Be objective.
3. Look at the facts.
4. Encourage the employee to talk.
5. Make the employee feel appreciated.

Method of Appraising Employee Performance

Several methods are used to evaluate employee performance. The approaches range from simple observation to highly technical systems. A discussion of the most commonly used methods follows.

1. Rating Scale

A rating scale is composed of a list of factors relating to the employee’s performance. Each factor is represented by a line or scale and the employer checks the space on the scale which corresponds most closely with the employee’s performance. (See Instructional Activity).

2. Group Evaluation Techniques

This method is most widely used when an employee reports to more than one supervisor. Each supervisor ranks the employee based on predetermined standards. This is a common method in department stores. A good example perhaps is a department manager who reports to the store’s buyer and the store’s general manager.
COMPETENCY

Describe the importance of performance measurements and recordkeeping.

3. Management By Objectives (MBO)

MBO requires that the employee establish individual objectives that are coordinated with the objectives of the organization. These objectives are then approved or modified through a joint agreement by both the manager and the employee. At the end of the evaluation period, the supervisor and the employee assess the employee's efforts to meet the objectives. The major advantages of MBO are listed below.

A. It allows employees to measure their performance according to predetermined standards.
B. Supervisors appear to be more interested in helping employees reach their goals.
C. Employees are evaluated on the basis of their performance rather than the performance of others.

4. Critical Method

This method involves recording both the good and the bad characteristics of an employee. The form contains a list of behavioral traits that should be observed by the supervisor. Next to the list of traits are positive and negative descriptive phrases; the supervisor checks the phrase that matches the employee's behavior. Read the excerpt from the critical incident form below:

COMPETENCY

State the importance of thinking ahead and planning for emergencies that might arise.

INFORMATION SHEET

Policies and procedures are often considered internal factors which may contain future planning for organization. Policies and procedures are essential for handling specific problems and dealing with emergencies. Policies establish procedures to be followed consistently in handling specific problems or functions. Procedures specify the methods to be used in carrying out policies. Policies and procedures coordinate and control the goals and objectives set by the organization. Suppose, for example, a store agrees to make customer purchase exchanges providing the customer presents a receipt for the purchases. This is referred to as a policy. When the salesperson voids the customer’s receipt and writes a return and allowance ticket, a procedure has been followed.

The establishment of policies and procedures beforehand to avoid confusion when problems occur. In addition to alleviating confusion, established policies and procedures frees the manager to handle other administrative responsibilities and allows for more control and consistency.

INSTRUCTIONAL ACTIVITY

Charles Morgan had been hired in the mail room of the Teletron Trading Corporation five weeks ago. His job was to collect mail twice daily from each office in the building, sort and process the outgoing mail, deliver outgoing mail to the local post office, and pick up incoming mail from the post office. He learned the job in one day by working with the outgoing employee, Tom Williams. Tom Williams was leaving the company because he was entering military service.

After one month, Morgan thought that he was doing rather well with such little supervision. In fact, the supervisor was seldom around. A week later he received notice that he was to be discharged effective next week. Since no explanation accompanied the announcement, he went to the personnel office immediately. The personnel manager pulled a folder from the file and began reading notes that had been placed there during the past month. Morgan responded truthfully to each of the items presented:

(a) An hour late to work on the thirteenth: “My car wouldn’t start, but I called to say that I would be in as soon as possible.”

(b) Two offices complained that the mail had not been picked up on the second of the month: “It was my second day on the job and I couldn’t remember all the stops. After the second day, I made a schedule and I haven’t missed an office since.”

(c) The Research Department complained that an important document had been sent regular mail that should have been sent airmail: “I didn’t know the policy for deciding when and how to send items until I found and asked the supervisor. Then he gave me a procedures manual to study. Tom Williams didn’t tell me there was such a manual.”

Several other similar complaints were included in the personnel file, each readily explained by Morgan. According to the personnel manager, Morgan was discharged in keeping with company policy. The discharge policy was that five or more complaints a month about an employee during the first year of employment were grounds for discharge.

Questions to answer.

1. What is your opinion on the corporation’s training program? Discuss.

2. What recommendations can you make to improve the training program?

Develop and maintain good customer relations.

INFORMATION SHEET

The goal of any organization is to satisfy the customer with merchandise purchased and services offered. Organizations must realize that customers are guests, and the purpose of the business is to serve its customers. In retailing, the most valuable resource is the customer. Therefore, huge sums of money are spent annually researching customer buying habits. Customers are usually quite knowledgeable and will ask many questions before buying. As a result, organizations should strive to build good will by creating a positive image and answering questions patiently. Customers are pleased when they are treated as individuals, greeted promptly, shown interest and concern, and shown courtesy.

Customers' moods change quickly. Successful organizations train personnel to anticipate these moods and know how to respond. This is imperative in striving to maintain and build good relations. The chart that follows summarizes customer moods and explains how the salesperson should respond:

INFORMATION SHEET

Marketing managers have many decisions to make when preparing to market products. One major decision concerns the four elements of marketing: product, price, place, and promotion; and the proper blend to use. The blending of these four elements is called the marketing mix. The marketing mix for one product may require high prices, sales, special orders and newspaper advertising. Another product may be produced in high quantities and sold by convenience stores with little or no advertising. Marketers must consider each element of the marketing mix separately in making their decision. A discussion of the importance of having the right product follows.

PRODUCT

The product is everything offered by an organization to satisfy customers. Services as well as physical products are included. An important question for marketers to consider is: What do customers want? By knowing what customers are looking for, more satisfying products can be produced. If an organization fails to offer products that customers are interested in buying, few sales will take place. Marketing researchers normally gather data such as the following to assist managers in making product decisions:

1. The features of the product include size, shape, color, and weight.
2. The quality preferred by the target market.
3. Features of packaging.
4. The brand name.

Suppose you were vacationing in Florida, reached for your swimsuit, and discovered that you didn’t have it. You decided, then, to go out and purchase one. On your arrival at the store, the salesclerk announced that bathing suits are not manufactured in Florida. What would you think? This is a hypothetical case but it points out the importance of having the right product in the right place at the right time. This is one additional decision to be made by marketing managers. They must decide which combination of the marketing mix is appropriate, relative to the best channel of distribution. Transportation has to be provided, since few customers can buy directly from the manufacturer. In selecting distributors, marketing managers must consider questions such as these:

1. Is the product perishable?
2. Will it require care during transit?

INFORMATION SHEET

Promotion is informing customers of the goods and services offered for sale and persuading these customers to buy the goods and services. If the promotion is to be effective, it must induce the customer to take some action. The action might be to visit the store and buy the merchandise; it might be to enter a contest. If the promotion is effective, the customer will take the intended action.

Promotion is the communication mechanism of marketing. The communication is designed to gain attention, inform, teach, remind, persuade, or reassure customers about a product or a service. The usual methods of promotion are personal selling, advertising, visual merchandising, sales promotion, and public relations or publicity. A marketing business combines these methods to create a promotional mix.

Promotion in marketing is important for several reasons. First, promotion is critical if products are to move along the channels of distribution. Promotional activities are an important part of making mass distribution. Second, promotion plays a key role in introducing new products or services to the marketplace. A business must demonstrate new products' usefulness and persuade buyers to purchase the new items through promotional activities. Finally, promotion provides employment opportunities for millions of people employed in advertising, visual merchandising, public relations, personal selling, and sales promotion.

FACTORS AFFECTING PROMOTION

Decisions made concerning particular promotional methods are affected by factors such as the product, the company's goals, and the company's capital position.

THE PRODUCT

The kind of product that the marketer is attempting to sell will have a great effect on the kinds of promotion utilized in communicating with the customers. For example, a product that is highly technical item, such as a computer, will not lend itself well to advertising or sales promotion, which are forms of mass communication, because it is difficult to explain the technical nature of the product through these methods. Personal selling, however, is a good choice of promotion to communicate messages for high tech products.

COMPANY GOALS

The goals which the business has developed for the particular promotion will also have an influence on the methods of promotion which are selected.

COMPANY CAPITAL POSITION

The amount of funds which the business has available for promotion will affect the methods of promotion selected. These methods need to be within the financial ability of the company to accomplish the promotional goals.
COMPETENCY

Identify the importance of having the product with the right promotion.

Identify the importance of having the product at the right price.

INFORMATION SHEET

Assume that you are a marketing manager and you are to determine the price for your product or service. What should the price be? Certainly the product should be priced low enough to attract a lot of customers, but high enough to cover all costs and provide a profit! Price decisions involve setting prices for goods and services that are acceptable to customers and profitable to the company. Remember, consumers do not buy on the basis of quality only. They compare prices and quality and then choose the best product for their use.

For most products and services there is an acceptable price range that consumers are willing to pay. Think of a price range as the area between the ceiling and floor. The ceiling is the maximum price consumers are willing to pay for the product and the floor is the minimum price that will cover the store's costs and still earn a profit. The marketing manager's job is to set prices within an acceptable price range, while considering the prices charged by competing businesses.

Managers consider certain factors such as supply and demand, discounts, and competition when determining prices. The value or amount of satisfaction received by the customer in relation to the price influences pricing decisions. Price will signal the value of a product or service. From the customer's point of view, the product must be worth the price charged.

Pricing and other parts of the marketing mix should always be pointed toward maintaining or building the image of the business. Customers often judge a business and its goods or services by the prices charged.

The "right price" is the price that is low enough to attract customers but high enough to cover the marketer's cost of doing business and still leave a profit.

The Principles of Planning.

1. Plans must be functional—they must be realistic and problem solving.
2. Plans must be flexible—since situations or circumstances change, plans must change.
3. Plans must be specific and achievable.

The Planning Process

Organizations have many different types of plans and each is tailored to meet a specific need. Each plan, however, utilizes the basic process described below after goals are set.

1. Setting objectives - This is the first major step in the planning process. The objective outlines what action is to be taken, by whom, and when the action is to be completed. An objective must be measurable.
2. List all alternatives - Discover ways to reach the objective. List all possible ways even if a few are not realistic.
3. Evaluate each alternative - Review the list that has been devised in step two and prepare to select the best alternative. Weigh the advantages and disadvantages of each.
4. Make a decision - This is the fourth and final step in the planning process. The best alternative must be selected.

Operational Planning

The operational plan differs from many other plans in that some other plans are usually filed and referred to as needed. On the other hand, the operational plan is utilized like a daily calendar. A sample of an operational plan follows.

INFORMATION SHEET

In addition to and in combination with other types of plans, a sales plan must also be developed. The sales plan is usually completed in the form of a merchandise budget, which shows inventory projections and other elements needed to implement the sales plan.

The merchandise budget provides management with information as to both short range and long range needs for financial resources. It provides tools for scheduling work and evaluating performance as well as means of control.

There are five (5) factors that must be considered in producing a merchandise budget:

1. The budget must be planned well in advance of the effective date. Retailing organizations spend the majority of their time reviewing the past, operating in the present, and planning for the future.

2. Planning periods must be small enough to be manageable. The major budget planning is usually done six months in advance. Retailers normally operate with two seasons rather than four. These two periods are spring, February 1 through July 31, and fall, August 1 through January 31.

3. The budget planner must be objective and realistic. The budget planner must realize that mistakes as well as successes occur and in forecasting the future projections are not always accurate due to environmental influences.

4. The budget must allow for changes. Continual evaluation must be carried out and if change is needed, provisions must be made in the merchandise plan.

5. Those responsible for implementation of the merchandise plan must be involved in the planning. If the various managers are going to be held accountable for production, planned stock, and sales volume, then managers should be allowed to assist with the planning. If they have input, the more highly motivated they will be toward accomplishing the objectives.

In planning the budget, the first element to be considered is the sales forecast. Forecasting sales is difficult and unscientific. A good sales forecaster recognizes the need for a budget that is as nearly accurate as possible, and one that takes into consideration the external and internal environmental influences that may affect projections.

Every organization employing salesworkers keeps records of the sales made by each salesworker. These records are used to measure employee performance and the organization's progress toward a predetermined goal. Selling goals vary from one organization to another and many organizations may use a combination of approaches to set goals. Two (2) basic approaches are described below.

1. Sales Volume

This approach requires the salesperson to produce a predetermined percentage increase over the previous year. For example, an organization may require a salesperson to increase this year's sales 10% over last year's sales. This approach is widely used but it has disadvantages. Factors beyond the control of the salesworker may occur creating a poor impression of the salesworker.

A few uncontrollable factors may be:

1. A salesworker working in new territory.
2. A salesworker may have difficulty obtaining a product that customers want.
3. A salesworker may be working in an area that is involved in a depression.

2. Quota

The quota approach refers to the amount of sales a salesworker is expected to make in a given period of time. In establishing a quota, certain factors are taken into consideration.

1. The past sales record of a territory.
2. The number of potential and actual customers in a territory.
3. The demand for a product.
4. The competition.
5. The economic trends.

There are numerous ways of establishing quotas. Some organizations use an average of the previous three years' sales in each territory as a guide in establishing the quota for each territory.
COMPETENCY

Identify how to set selling goals.

QUESTIONS

1. One approach for establishing selling goals is biased because
   a. it does not allow for uncontrollable factors
   b. it requires a percentage based increase over the previous year's sales.
   c. the salesworker may be classified as efficient.
   d. it allows for economic depressions in an area.

2. Which of the following is NOT a factor to be considered in establishing a quota?
   a. Potential customers
   b. Product demand
   c. Economic trends
   d. Salesworker's attitude

The owner thinks that if the selling price were reduced slightly more sales and more profits might be made since the operating expenses would not increase. The store has sold an average of 30 pairs daily.

Questions to answer.

1. If the selling price is reduced by 10 percent, how many more pairs of shoes must be sold to earn the same amount of gross profit?

2. Do you believe that the operating expenses will remain the same? Explain your reasons.

COMPETENCY

Identify ways to organize the sales staff.

INFORMATION SHEET

The sales staff is organized chiefly with regard to the product, the type of selling required to distribute the product, and the channel of distribution to be used. The type of selling required to move the product is the main determinant. Common types of selling are discussed below.

In-Store Selling

Retailers generally fall into this category. Salespersons are assigned to a particular department. Each department has a manager who reports to plan and evaluate performance. Most retail sales takes place in a store where customers can look at, feel, and touch the products.

Direct-to-the-Home Selling

This approach to selling requires the salesperson to visit customers' homes. Few retailers use this approach. Most direct-to-the-home selling is done by salesworkers working for companies that specialize in that area of selling. Avon is a good example of direct-to-the-home selling. The Avon salesworker seeks out customers, then calls on them in their homes to make presentations.

Salesworkers are usually organized by geographical districts. Each district has a manager. All managers report to a regional manager and each regional manager is supervised by the national manager.

Route Selling

Route salespersons are usually assigned much like letter carriers. They have a specified area to cover on a regular schedule. Good examples of route selling are bread and milk delivery persons. Route salespersons are also supervised by a territorial manager. The territorial managers are supervised by regional managers and regional managers are supervised by national and international managers. In stores, route salespersons put up displays, arrange fresh goods on store shelves, and remove stale products. They are required to fill out daily call sheets and sales reports.

Trade Show and Convention Selling

A trade show is a group of exhibits or showrooms. A convention is a program of speeches and discussion, sometimes featuring a group of exhibits or showrooms. Trade shows usually produce more customers, but both conventions and trade shows produce prospective customers who can be contacted later. Trade show selling is a common approach for industrial and wholesale merchants. Trade shows can be regional, national or international. Educational products are largely sold through trade shows and conventions.

COMPETENCY

State the importance of job definition and delegation of authority.

INFORMATION SHEET

When a business is operated by one person, there is little need for an organizational chart or assignment of specific duties. When two or more people work together, each can accomplish more work when specific tasks are assigned.

When the obligation to perform certain tasks is assigned, responsibility is assigned. In good organizations, responsibility has to be assigned so that all employees know the tasks which they are responsible for. The process of assigning responsibility is known as job definition, in that employees are made aware of what the job entails.

Authority is the right to make decisions about work assignments and to require other employees to perform assigned tasks. Each employee and each supervisor should know specifically (1) what each job is to accomplish, (2) what the duties are, (3) what authority accompanies the job, (4) who the manager in charge is, (5) who reports to the manager, and (6) what is satisfactory performance. Unless employees' jobs have been specifically defined (job definition), they are not likely to do their best work; furthermore, confusion, disputes, and misunderstanding will result.

The supervisor is a manager, though job definitions may vary from organization to organization. Supervisors in small organizations will have more varied responsibilities than those in large organizations because the larger the organizations, the greater the tendency to have specialization of duties. Regardless of the size of the organization, however, there are certain duties for which most supervisors are responsible. One of these is to counsel the employees. The supervisor provides encouragement, guidance, and direction. Major responsibilities of the supervisor include scheduling work and working hours, evaluating job performance, giving orders, controlling expenses, and handling and caring for equipment and supplies. In general, the supervisor is responsible for the total operation within his or her assigned department.

COMPETENCY

Identify the importance of communication and leadership styles

INFORMATION SHEET

Communication deals with the way a message is transmitted to a person and the way that message is received. All communications include these common elements:

1. Sender - the person who sends the message
2. Message - what is said
3. Medium - how the message travels to the receiver
4. Receiver - the person who receives the message
5. Feedback - the signals of message sent back to the sender.

Effective communication is a two-way process. When the sender sends a message and the feedback is adequate and appropriate, the communication is two-way and effective. Ineffective one-way communication occurs when the sender sends a message and a feedback from the receiver is inadequate or inappropriate. Fewer problems occur in communicating when there is an understanding of leadership style and communication methods match the style of the leader. Leadership style refers to the manner in which a manager gives directions, handles problems, and makes decisions. The manager’s background, personality, and beliefs about employees are factors affecting leadership style. Leadership styles have been placed in the following three categories:

Autocratic Style

The autocratic leader gives clear, direct, and precise orders with detailed instructions on how, when, and what work is to be performed. Employees do not make decisions about the work being performed. The autocratic leadership style is efficient. It is extremely effective in emergency situations, but it should not be used all of the time. An effective leader knows when to use this style. The major disadvantages are:

1. Human relations and communication problems may occur because employees like to take part in the decision-making process.
2. Employees lose interest in their work; quantity and quality declines.

Democratic Style

The democratic leader encourages the workers to share in the making of decisions about work-related problems. Managers discuss solutions with employees rather than merely announcing decisions. Workers who are allowed to participate in making decisions are more motivated to carry them out. These workers need less control and supervision. This style is effective when workers have the knowledge needed to perform their jobs. Certain disadvantages do exist:

1. Workers do not like to be consulted on unimportant matters only.
2. Many jobs are routine allowing little need for worker input.
3. The democratic style is time consuming.
COMPETENCY

Identify the importance of communication and leadership styles.

Open Style

The open style of leadership is one in which the manager gives little or no directions. Details and decisions are left to each individual. The open style works best with experienced workers in business. The shortcoming of this style is that it may lead to confusion, and a lack of management direction results.
COMPETENCY

INFORMATION SHEET

Evaluation systems serve two purposes. They assess an employee for promotions, salary increases, and other assignments. Evaluations are also used to inform an employee of the areas where improvements are necessary. Various methods are used to evaluate employee performance. One such method is management by objectives, also called MBO.

MBO requires the employee to establish objectives consistent with those of the organization. The employee lists the steps that will be needed to meet the objectives. The objectives and the proposed steps are discussed with the supervisor and modified until they are acceptable by both parties. Progress is monitored periodically, and at the end of the evaluation period the employee and supervisor appraise the employee's efforts to meet the objectives. Advantages of MBO are:

1. It allows employees to measure their performance relative to predetermined goals.
2. Supervisors become more supportive of the employee's efforts to achieve their goals.
3. Training programs can be developed that assist the employees in achieving their goals.

COMPETENCY

State the nature of marketing planning.

INFORMATION SHEET

Planning can be defined as setting goals and devising specific activities, procedures, and schedules for meeting the goals. Planning is the process of selecting and defining specific objectives and of devising concrete courses of action to achieve the objectives. The planning process involves four steps: (1) setting objectives, (2) discovering alternate ways to reach objectives, (3) evaluating the alternatives, and (4) making decisions. Planning means deciding what needs to be done and how it is to be done. The first and most important step in management is planning.

SETTING GOALS - Goals that are clearly established and properly communicated to employees stand the best chance of being reached. Well defined goals or objectives provide a basis on which managers can organize, lead, and control their departments or companies successfully. Goals must be specific and meaningful. They should also be clear and should be coordinated with each other.

Long-term goals are developed to cover a period beyond one year, and short-term goals are for one year or less. The planning process moves from long-term broad goals to short-term specific goals.

PLANNING TOOLS - There are several tools that help managers plan. These tools not only make planning easier, but if used correctly, should result in better plans for the company. Following is an explanation of management tools.

BUDGETS - The most popular planning tool is the budget. Managers use financial budgets to determine the best way to use available money to reach goals. Financial budgets, such as sales and advertising budgets, are especially helpful in planning ways to achieve short-term goals.

SCHEDULES - Schedules are of value in planning for the most effective use of time. For most business purposes, a schedule is a time plan for reaching objectives. Schedules identify the tasks to be completed and the approximate time required to complete the tasks.

STANDARDS - A standard is a yardstick or a measure by which something is judged. Standards are set to ensure that the quality of work completed is always acceptable.

POLICIES - Policies are guidelines used in making decisions regarding specific recurrences. A policy is often a general rule to be followed by business employees. Policies help to reduce misunderstandings and encourage consistent decisions for similar conditions.

PROCEDURES - A procedure is a list of steps to be followed for performing certain work. For routine tasks, procedures improve business efficiency and are of special help to employees who are learning a new job.
COMPETENCY

State the nature of marketing planning.

RESEARCH - Research is used to collect data for managers and to provide the information needed to improve their planning decisions. The most familiar type of marketing research is the analysis of market demand.

Planning is the key to marketing success. Marketing is future-oriented in nearly all its aspects; decisions must be made today if a firm is to have the products, promotion, and distribution methods needed for tomorrow.

INSTRUCTIONAL MATERIALS/RESOURCES

EVALUATION

The student will define a marketing plan and explain the concept of marketing strategies.
COMPETENCY

Explain the concept of marketing strategies.

INFORMATION SHEET

The marketing plan is a detailed description of all marketing activities that a business must accomplish in order to sell a product. It describes the goals a business wants to accomplish, the target markets it wants to serve, and the marketing mix it will use. The marketing plan is written for a specific time period (usually one year).

The main parts of the marketing plan are known as the analysis of the situation (where the product or service is now); the objectives (goals for the product at some point in the future); and the marketing strategy, which outlines the marketing mix the company will use to achieve the objectives.

A company cannot hope to succeed simply by manufacturing its products and putting them on the market. The best way a company can be sure that it is doing all it can for successful marketing is through the use of a marketing plan.

BASIC MARKETING STRATEGIES - A basic marketing strategy concentrates on market selection, product mix, pricing, and the marketing mix.

MARKET SELECTION - A market can be very specific or it can be very broad. A key part of the marketing plan is a statement of the target markets the company will compete in. The chief characteristic of a market that makes it attractive is that it contains enough unsatisfied demand to allow a company to sell a product at such a price and in sufficient quantities to make a profit.

PRODUCT MIX - A product mix is a combination of offerings to segments of different markets that will be profitable to the company.

PRICING - Market demand controls the prices of products: if consumers will not buy at a given price, producers will lower their price until buying starts. Prices are adjusted to market demand as determined by actual sales and by market research. Prices are also adjusted to maintain a competitive position. Buyers consider many elements in deciding on the specific product to buy, but a slight advantage in price may be sufficient to give one company a significant edge over competitors.

MARKET MIX - The object is to find the right combination of price and promotion costs (the marketing mix) that will produce maximum profits for the company. The marketing mix is the core of any company's marketing system. It is a blending of product or service, price, promotion, and place decisions.

Although each market segment calls for a different marketing strategy, there are some kinds of market information that are common to all marketers and must be evaluated to determine the total target market. Following are four kinds of market information managers evaluate to determine their target market.

KNOWLEDGE OF PRODUCT OR SERVICE - Marketers study the product's evolution from its beginning, through its development, to its present-day use.
COMPETENCY

Explain the concept of marketing strategies.

DEMAND FOR THE PRODUCT - Marketers must evaluate business conditions, changes in the demand that result from changing economic conditions, buying power of the target market and in what income group the probable buyers of your product are found.

BUYING HABITS OF PROSPECTS - When marketing foods it is necessary to examine the buying habits of potential customers. Marketers must evaluate when, where, and how much prospects are buying.

APPEALS TO BE MADE - Marketers study goods to determine what appeals can be utilized most effectively in putting the goods on the market. Goods lend themselves to an appeal to the senses, to the emotions, or to the intellect.

COMPETENCY

Identify target markets.

INFORMATION SHEET

Target market is defined as a specific group of customers that a company wants to serve. Businesses may have several target markets depending on the different products and services offered for sale. Determining target markets helps marketers sell more efficiently. Can you imagine what it may be like to design just ONE product (for example a car) to meet all customer needs?

Market segmentation is the division of a total market into groups according to customer needs and characteristics. A market may be segmented according to Age, Sex, Education, Occupation, Life-style and Income. Market segmentation attempts and often succeeds in meeting a major goal of the marketing concept. This goal is to offer a product or service distinctly tailored to the customer's wants and needs.

The ultimate objective of any business is the sale of its product or services at a reasonable profit. But sales usually don’t just happen, they must be planned. This planning is the responsibility of the marketing managers. When developing these plans, decisions must be made concerning (1) what product or service is to be sold, (2) the target market, (3) channels of distribution, (4) competitive pricing, and finally (5) promotion decisions. These decisions are all incorporated into a comprehensive written document known as the marketing plan. The marketing plan should give as much information as possible about the target market. It should identify the age, income, sex, education, family size, and life-style of the people in the target market.

Identifying the target market for a company's products and services is only one element of the marketing plan. Companies spend a great deal of money and time on market research before they begin to develop products.

Market research is used to identify target markets. A company that has adopted the marketing concept will use research to identify markets before products are developed. The research can help a company determine who the best possible customers are, what their needs are, and where they are located. That information should allow companies to make better production and marketing decisions.

INFORMATION SHEET

A budget is an estimated plan for the future that helps keep expenses in line with income.

TYPES OF BUDGETS

SALES BUDGET - a forecast of the sales for a month, a few months, or a year. A number of factors influence sales estimates. General business conditions can have an important bearing on the sales estimates. Economic trends, population shifts, buying habits, and sales force are among the factors to be used as a guide in preparing a sales budget.

MERCHANDISING BUDGET - a means to plan and control the supply of merchandise to be sold to customers. Too little merchandise can mean valuable cash tied up that could be better used elsewhere. Also, excess merchandise has to be stored, protected, and insured. These expenses add to the cost of doing business, therefore, it is important to properly manage the purchase of merchandise in relation to sales.

ADVERTISING BUDGET - a plan for the amount of money a firm should spend for advertising based on estimated sales. An advertising campaign can increase sales of a certain product and as a result, have an influence on the sales budget.

CASH BUDGET - an estimate of cash income from cash payments and all sources. Budgeting cash is a matter of making certain there is enough cash available to meet payments as they come due. Cash comes from either or both of two sources: (1) from the income of the business, or (2) from borrowing.

CAPITAL BUDGET - a financial budget for replacing fixed assets or acquiring new ones. Capital budgeting is important because large sums of money are tied up for long periods of time.

INCOME STATEMENT BUDGET - a plan showing projected sales, costs, and individual expense figures for a future period, such as for one month, three months, or a year. The projected total sales, less total projected costs and expenses, permits a business to estimate its net profit.

ADMINISTERING THE BUDGET

A budget is an estimate and cannot be followed exactly in business. Elements of a budget can be adjusted if sales increase was more than expected amount. Also, amounts set for the merchandising and purchasing budgets can be reduced if sales decrease more than what was anticipated. Business operations should be checked periodically to determine whether the budget is being followed. If the budget is not being followed closely enough to insure a profit, it may be necessary to reduce some items of expense or to find new ways of promoting business.

The use of budgets cannot guarantee the success of a business, but these management planning tools can help reduce losses or increase profits.

COMPETENCY

INFORMATION SHEET

A profit and loss statement is a financial document that reports total revenue and expenses for a specific period of time, such as a month or a year. A profit and loss statement is also known as an income statement.

Profit and loss statements have three major parts:
1. Revenue - income earned for the period, such as from the sale of goods and services.
2. Expenses - all costs incurred that helped to earn the revenue.
3. Profit or Loss - the difference between total revenue and total expenses.

A business makes a profit when the revenue is greater than expenses. The income statement shows a picture of success or failure (profit or loss) for a specified period of time.

Managers can learn a great deal about the business from examining the income statement. By comparing the income statement from previous months or years, the manager can determine the direction of the business.

INSTRUCTIONAL ACTIVITY

Assign the following for class discussion.

Carla and Juan Lopez have been making leather-type items, such as belts, purses, and wallets, for several years in their home as a hobby. They have sold many items to friends and neighbors. Because Juan has just lost his regular job, he and Carla have decided to go into business full time making leathercraft items. The items will be sold to retailers and, perhaps later, to wholesalers. A great deal of money will be needed, some of which they have saved. Both agree that they know a great deal about how to make leather items but neither knows a great deal about financial matters.

Carla believes they should hire a consultant before they do anything else to start the business. Juan, on the other hand, believes they should go to a bank to borrow as much as they can and “then set up shop.” “After the business is under way, we can hire an accountant.” Juan does not believe the consultant will know enough about the leather business to give advice and “besides,” he adds, “consultants are too expensive.”

Questions to answer.

1. Do you agree with Carla or Juan on the subject of the consultant? Explain.

2. Are there other sources of business information, such as the Small Business Administration, that could help Carla and Juan? Research the costs in your area for business consultants.

A balance sheet is a summary of the financial status of a business at a particular time. The balance sheet lists the assets, liabilities, and owner’s equity of a business.

Assets are items of monetary value that a business owns, such as cash, buildings, money owed to a business, and the value of merchandise on hand.

Liabilities are things owed by the business—the debts of a business.

Owner’s equity is the difference between what an owner has put into the business and what has been taken out—the difference between the assets and the liabilities of the business. The balance sheet can be represented by the equation, Assets = Liabilities + Owner’s Equity.

3. List methods of cost reduction.

INSTRUCTIONAL MATERIALS/RESOURCES

EVALUATION

The student will identify areas in business where costs can be controlled and reduced.
COMPETENCY

Identify available cost reduction techniques.

INFORMATION SHEET

Managers always want to increase sales and decrease costs. The success or failure of a business is measured in money - profit or loss. Most employees and managers are directly connected with work that influences costs. Wasting material or taking more time than necessary to perform a task adds to the cost of doing business. Increased costs will decrease profits without a proportionate increase in sales; therefore, business firms must be cost conscious at all times.

There are several areas in business where costs can be controlled and reduced. Some areas are inventory, credit, and theft. Inventory or stock costs can be reduced by maintaining the "right quantities" needed to meet customer demand. Too much inventory increases storage cost while too little inventory can mean missed sales. Keeping a clean stockroom can also reduce costs by preventing soiled, torn, or damaged merchandise.

Credit extended to customers can be controlled to reduce losses. Businesses must develop credit policies to reduce the amount of losses from customers who do not pay their bills. Customers should be checked carefully before credit is given to them. Billing and collection procedures should be developed so that most accounts are collected on time.

Establishing theft controls can reduce losses incurred by businesses. Procedures for the safe handling of cash should be followed by all employees of a business.

The theft of merchandise from warehouses and stores is a major concern of business. Shoplifting by customers and employees equals about 6% of total sales each year. Some methods for controlling shoplifting are the following: (1) hire security guards and store detective, (2) install cameras and mirrors at key locations, (3) attach special inventory tags to products, (4) station attendants at dressing rooms, and (5) post signs warning customers of the consequences of shoplifting.

Employee absence and health costs is another area in business where losses can be reduced. Safety training should be provided for all employees and equipment and work stations should be inspected regularly to be sure they operate correctly and safely. To reduce employee absences, incentives and recognition for employees could be developed.
COMPETENCY

Identify available cost reduction techniques.

QUESTIONS

1. A cost reduction technique utilized in the area of inventory control is
   a. properly checked credit application.
   b. giving incentives to reduce employee absenteeism.
   c. maintaining the right quantities of merchandise.
   d. developing the right promotion campaign.

2. All of the following are techniques used to reduce theft of merchandise except
   a. security guards.
   b. cameras and mirrors.
   c. dressing room attendants.

2. What are manager's opinions as to the costs of these devices?
3. What are the attitudes of store employees toward these devices?

INSTRUCTIONAL MATERIALS/RESOURCES

The student will list four areas in businesses where managers can anticipate cost problems. The student will explain in writing the importance of controlling cost. The student will explain in writing the effects of excessive costs in relation to profits.
COMPETENCY

Identify that seemingly small savings in some expense areas can mean a substantial gain in profits.

INFORMATION SHEET

Experienced managers know that excessive costs can reduce the profits of a business organization. Therefore, managers are constantly watching for areas in their business where costs can be reduced.

There are several areas in a business where managers can anticipate cost problems. They are inventory, credit, theft, employee health, and safety. Planning must be done in each of these areas to prevent excessive costs from occurring. Planning, observing, and evaluating these areas constantly can help management control and maybe prevent excessive costs from reducing the profits of a business.

INVENTORY Businesses need to keep enough products in stock to be able to meet customer needs. Managers must keep close track on inventories so they do not get too large or too small. What happens if inventory is too low? What happens if inventory is too high? Purchasing must be done carefully to select products that can be sold at a profit. Products must be purchased at the right time and in the right quantities to reduce the inventory cost of a business.

CREDIT Credit can be a good business tool if used carefully. It can reduce the amount of loss resulting from extending credit of customers. Customers should be checked carefully before credit is given to them, and billing and collection procedures should be developed so that most accounts are collected on time.

Most businesses use credit when buying products from suppliers. If credit is used too often when making purchases the company may be spending a great deal of money for interest payments. Managers responsible for purchasing must control the amount of money the company owes to other businesses.

THEFT Losses from cash and worthless checks can be reduced or prevented if procedures for handling money and cashiering are followed. Businesses should have written procedures for handling of money.

The theft of merchandise from businesses is a major concern to managers. Retail stores are hardest hit by such losses. Written procedures and policies concerning shoplifting are essential. Employee training in shoplifting practices can help reduce the loss incurred by stores.

HEALTH AND SAFETY Costs that result from health and safety problems can be reduced. Companies should provide safety training for all employees. Work stations and equipment should be inspected regularly to be sure they operate correctly and safely.

Even when employees are absent from work because of sickness or injury, the company must continue to operate. Other employees must be available to fill in for the absent employee, and usually the salary of both the absent employee and the substitute employee must be paid. Health insurance costs are often paid by the company as well.
COMPETENCY

Identify that seemingly small savings in some expense areas can mean a substantial gain in profits.

COMPETENCY

Identify functions of personnel management.

INFORMATION SHEET

Personnel management is the division of management which is concerned with obtaining and effectively utilizing human resources. The size of the business and the importance placed on personnel programs by management determine the extent to which personnel functions are performed. There are many functions of personnel management in business today; seven key functions are universal to all businesses.

SELECTING NEW EMPLOYEES - an important function of personnel management. Selecting new employees involves recruiting applicants, determining their qualifications, hiring those whose qualifications best match the job to be filled, and preparing employees for their new jobs.

TRAINING EMPLOYEES - Nearly all firms - whether self-service or full service - have some type of training program. Selection procedures need to be followed-up with effective training programs. Workers already employed also need additional training because of changes in jobs, machines, processes, and policies are constantly occurring. Also, training is necessary to prepare employees for promotions.

PROMOTING AND TRANSFERRING EMPLOYEES - Personnel management is responsible for developing policies and procedures for promoting and transferring personnel. Employees may be transferred to a different job because of not performing well or because a new job within the company is more challenging and exciting. If businesses do not offer opportunities for promotion, employees may leave the business and seek employment that offers advancement.

DETERMINING WAGES AND BENEFITS - Personnel managers administer wages and salaries to control personnel costs and to enable the organization to compete in the labor market for the skilled and creative employees it needs. The major decisions involved are the forms of compensation to be given for each job, the amount of pay, when pay raises will be given, and the amount of raise.

MAINTAINING HEALTH AND SAFETY PROGRAMS - Providing health and safety programs is an important concern of the personnel management. Employees must be healthy to be efficient, productive, and satisfied workers.

MAINTAINING LABOR MANAGEMENT RELATIONSHIPS - Handling relations with labor unions includes a number of different responsibilities. Among the most important are collective bargaining, contract administration, and grievance handling. In organizations which have labor unions, dealing with union matters is usually a specialized responsibility of the personnel manager.

ESTABLISHING A GOOD WORKING ENVIRONMENT - Providing employee services such as first aid medical services and maintaining employee facilities such as lounges and recreational areas, are functions of the personnel management division. A good working environment can help maintain efficient satisfied workers.

COMPETENCY

Identify the relationship between job satisfaction and productivity.

INFORMATION SHEET

Increasing production through people and employee job satisfaction are two goals of human relations in marketing. The motive of business organizations is higher profits. To increase profits, businesses are constantly seeking new ways to increase the productivity of employees.

Productivity refers to producing the largest quantity in the least amount of time using efficient methods and modern equipment at the lowest cost. Businesses establish policies, regulations, and working conditions that contribute to efficiency and well-being of the firm. Coffee breaks, clean and attractive work environments, good wages, and attention to employee's needs are means by which management contributes to employee productivity and employee job satisfaction. Job satisfaction is not totally dependent upon management. It also depends on the employee, employees' attitudes, expectations, and the employees' relationships with co-workers. Most employees are not totally satisfied or dissatisfied with their jobs. There are many causes of the differences in job satisfaction.

Employee job satisfaction is influenced by such factors as the personalities of the supervisors and co-workers, goals of the business, and the nature of the work itself. Managers realize that employees who are satisfied with their work and the environment are more productive than workers who show dissatisfaction.

The most satisfaction from work occurs when the average worker performs interesting tasks, has feeling of responsibility, gains recognition, and has a feeling of achievement. Workers are more concerned with needs relating to self-respect than with fringe benefits and salaries.

Management uses techniques to increase worker satisfaction among employees. By adding more variety into jobs and involving employees in decision-making managers improve employee satisfaction, which contributes to attaining the goals of a business.

INSTRUCTIONAL ACTIVITY

Assign the following for class discussion.

Sally Brown had supervised over ten stenographers in the marketing department for nearly two years. The workers thought a great deal of Sally. In fact, many of them said she was the best supervisor they ever had. Sally's manager, Juanita Sanchez, was most impressed not only with the good human relations among the stenographers but also with the excellent work her department did. The manager was so impressed that Sally was transferred to manage 20 typists and clerks in the Accounting Department. Since Sally had prior accounting training and experience working as a bookkeeper, Juanita Sanchez thought she would be perfect in the new job.

After two months human relations in the Accounting Department had gone down and work output had declined. "What's happening, Sally," Juanita asked. "Why isn't it working out?" Sally responded, "I just don't know. In the marketing department, I always discussed problems with the workers and as a group we worked out solutions acceptable to everyone. In the Accounting Department, no one wants to discuss problems and solutions. They want me to solve all the problems for them. That's not my style."

Questions to answer.

1. Can a person be effective in one situation but not in another? Explain your reason.

2. Should Sally change her leadership style to fit the situation in the Accounting Department? Discuss your ideas.

COMPETENCY

Identify how to interview and select potential employees, obtaining all necessary data and offering them information concerning the business.

INFORMATION SHEET

One function of personnel management is interviewing and selecting potential employees. Personnel management should be aware of the qualities needed for successful employment. The personnel manager needs to know how to conduct the interview, including the proper entrance behavior and departure of applicants. Usually, not all applicants are interviewed; therefore, personnel managers should be able to screen applications and determine likely candidates for the interview process. Once candidates are selected, an interview is scheduled.

In order to select qualified employees, personnel managers must obtain and review data from the applicant such as resumes, references, and the application form. This information is used by the personnel manager to determine if the applicant’s qualifications match the job position.

When interviewing potential employees, managers will ask questions of the applicant which reveal information related to the applicant’s attitudes, qualifications, education, work experience, and personal qualities. The applicant’s response to the questions helps managers determine if the applicant is suitable for the job position. These responses also give managers an indication of the applicant’s human relation and communication skills.

The following procedures are often done by the personnel department after applicants for a job have been obtained.

1. Applicants are interviewed to determine whether they have general qualifications for the job position. During the interview, applicants should be given information about the company and the job so that they will understand what is expected.

2. Tests are administered to the applicants who pass the preliminary interview. These tests are used to determine the applicants’ level of knowledge and skill.

3. If applicants are given a physical examination, the medical report becomes a part of the permanent record of the employee. In many cases, the physical examination is not given until the applicant is ready to be hired.

4. Applicant’s references are contacted to see if previous experience has been satisfactory.

5. Applicants who have thus far proved satisfactory to the personnel department are sent to the department head with the opening. The department head can then interview those applicants and give more detailed information about the job and also answer questions the applicant may have.

6. When the applicant is hired, the records for the personnel department are then prepared.
COMPETENCY

Identify how to interview and select potential employees, obtaining all necessary data and offering them information concerning the business.

INFORMATION SHEET continued

After an applicant has been hired, an orientation to the new job and to co-workers is very important. The new worker should be taken on a tour of the company, introduced to co-workers, and given a manual which states the policies and regulations of the business. Finally, the supervisor of the new employee should provide detailed information and directions about the job.

COMPETENCY

INFORMATION SHEET

When employees are hired that are not physically or mentally able to perform the job tasks, many problems can arise. Higher training costs, dissatisfied employees, and many other personnel problems can be expected from hiring employees who are not equipped to perform the job. Workers who fall in this category usually create low morale among workers which can slow down productivity. A worker who is unhappy and dissatisfied is not an efficient worker. The success of any business depends on people. It has been said that employees are one of the most important assets of a business. If a business is to make a profit, management must recruit and hire good employees who are qualified to be productive for the job position.

In 1938 the Federal Government enacted the Fair Labor Standards Act (FLSA). Since that time the FLSA has been amended several times and it is now referred to as the Wage and Hour Law. The provisions of this act cover workers employed in industries, engaged in interstate commerce, or in the manufacture of goods shipped in interstate commerce. The Wage and Hour Law also covers employees of certain retail and service establishments whose sales volumes exceed a prescribed amount.

Overtime payments and minimum wage rates are major provisions of the FLSA. For most employees covered by the act, employers must pay a minimum hourly wage for the first 40 hours of work during a week and 1 1/2 times the regular hourly rate for all work in excess of 40 hours.

In some cases, physical examinations are required by some businesses and industries to ensure that employees are healthy. Sometimes, businesses will require applicants to take a physical examination as part of the interview process.

Of all the regulations designed to protect employees, those regulations concerned with fair employment practices create the most problems for small business owners. An affirmative action program developed early in the life of a business will eliminate many potential problems.

A set of basic steps follows that the owner of a small business can take to develop an affirmative action program:

1. Develop a written equal employment policy and affirmative action commitment.
2. Designate an individual to direct the affirmative action program.
3. Publish present equal employment policy and affirmative action commitment and distribute it within the company and to potential sources of recruitment.
4. Review present employment system to identify potential or actual unfair employment practices.

COMPETENCY

Compare operational results to forecasted budget.

INFORMATION SHEET

For a single-unit retail business, the store is the first level of planning. For a multiple-unit retail business, the company is the first level of planning. Once the overall plan has been made, it is necessary to assign objectives to each of the store’s merchandise divisions. For example, the planners may decide that one division may do well just to maintain the previous volume of sales.

Sales opportunities differ among the departments within divisions as well as among the divisions themselves. For that reason, it unreasonable to expect each department to have the same amount of sales. Even at the department level, most plans must be divided into specific merchandise categories because all types of merchandise do not sell at the same rate.

Most retailers find that it works well to set up a general budget for one to three years and then to develop specific budgets for six months in advance. The six-month period is long enough to make specific budgets for six months in advance. The six-month period is long enough to make specific planning useful. The plan serves as a guide to definite action. The merchandise budget and the plan it controls for the upcoming period can be adjusted to meet expected market changes and the sales performance of the current period.

A six-month budget includes estimates of sales, inventory, purchases, expenses, and profit. For larger stores the budget also contains estimates of markup and gross margin, stock turns, average inventory, and stock reduction including markdowns, employee discounts, and stock shortages.

From time to time actual sales, purchases, prices, stocks, and expenses should be compared with budget estimates. Differences between operational figures and budgeted amounts should be carefully noted.

1. Operational results and forecasted budgets may be
   a. exactly the same.

As the manager of a variety store, you are preparing a 3-month merchandise plan for your stationery department. You are reviewing the actual results of last year's buying plan. This year, you plan sales increases of 10 percent for April, 10 percent for May, and 5 percent for June. You likewise plan similar increases for the planned stock at the first of the month. Because you intend to manage shortages and planned markdowns more effectively this year, you make no changes in these amounts. Your task is to complete the blank spaces on the following buying plan using the above information. Note that you can only compute retail purchases for the first two months. The planned stock for the first of the month has not yet been determined for July.

MANAGEMENT OF MERCHANDISE

COMPETENCY

Maintain vendor information and select appropriate vendors.

PERFORMANCE OBJECTIVE

Following classroom instruction, the student will be able to explain one method of maintaining vendor information and will be able to list at least four factors to consider when selecting vendors.

INSTRUCTIONAL ACTIVITIES

1. Define vendor.
2. Define resource files.
3. Explain method of maintaining vendor information.
4. Student activity -- design a resource file to include necessary vendor information.
5. Discuss selecting resources.
6. Students in small groups brainstorm and create a list of selection factors they would consider as a buyer.
7. Provide a list of selection factors to consider in choosing a vendor.

INSTRUCTIONAL MATERIALS/RESOURCES

EVALUATION

The student will describe a method used by buyers to maintain vendor information and list at least four factors to consider in selecting vendors.
COMPETENCY

Maintain vendor information and select appropriate vendors.

INFORMATION SHEET

A vendor or resource is a firm or person from whom the buyer purchases goods. A resource card should be made out for every vendor or supplier from whom the buyer purchases. The resource card should include information such as the name and address of the supplier, the terms allowed, the kinds of goods carried, the prices which the seller specializes, the name of the salesman, and the general impression of the firm. If a purchase is made from the supplier, the buyer should record on the card the promptness of delivery and the care exercised in filling the order. These cards should be arranged by classification and by price line. Keeping an accurate resource file will help the buyer when new stock is needed.

The selection of a merchandise resource requires careful thought. There are many factors that must be considered before a buyer decides from whom he/she will buy. The buyer's goal in selecting suppliers of merchandise is to find sources that will supply merchandise which will satisfy the wants of his store's customers at a price that will enable the buyer to realize a profit on its resale.

Some factors to consider in choosing merchandise resources:

1. Suitability of merchandise.
2. Completeness of line of merchandise.
3. Up-to-dateness of line.
4. Favorable prices.
5. Creativity.
6. Speed of delivery.
7. Credit terms.
8. Dealer aids.
10. Fairness in handling complaints.
11. Facilities for repairing products.
12. Profitability of merchandise.
15. Convenience of resource.

INSTRUCTIONAL ACTIVITIES

1. Explain the concept of markup.
2. Provide examples of markups and markdowns for students.
3. Assign Activity Sheet for class completion and discussion.

INSTRUCTIONAL MATERIALS/RESOURCE

EVALUATION

The student will compute the selling prices of merchandise using the markup based on retail method.
COMPETENCY

Determine selling price.

INFORMATION SHEET

Retailers usually express markup as a percentage of the retail price because expenses and other items such as profits are commonly expressed as a percentage of retail sales. The National Retail Merchants Association (NRMA) publishes an annual report of average markup and expense percentages for many different stores in the nation. By using markup and expense figures based on the retail price, retailers can compare a store's operations with national average reports such as the NRMA's.

Using the retail method of markup, the initial markup is expressed as a percentage of the unknown retail price. (The cost is known, but the initial markup is based on retail, not on cost.) The formula would read:

\text{Retail Price (retail method)} = \frac{\text{Cost}}{100\% - \text{markup}\%}

Example: If the cost of a dress is $80.00 and the initial markup percentage desired is 40 percent, the retail price would be determined as follows:

\text{Retail Price (retail method)} = \frac{$80.00}{100\% - 40\%} = \frac{80.00}{.60} = $133.33

Example: The cost price of a tape recorder is $90.00. The suggested initial retail markup is 40 percent. Determine the retail price using the retail method.

INFORMATION SHEET

Forecasting sales volume is the first and most important component of the merchandise plan. All other figures of the merchandise are based on the planned sales; therefore, it is most important that the planned sales be accurate.

Buyers must consider several factors when planning the sales volume for a period. One of these factors is analyzing past sales. A careful analysis of past sales records can indicate what customers want and are likely to buy again. Accurate and complete sales records can provide information as to the colors, sizes, prices, quantities, styles, and types of goods customers have bought. Past sales records can give a fairly reliable indication of recurring customer demand.

INFORMATION SHEET

Meeting customer demand is a basic goal of all business. Marketers realize that the customer is the most important part of their business. Some of the influences on today's customers include store image, advertising, services, and the merchandise available. Marketers will conduct customer surveys to determine what the customer likes and dislikes about the store. Surveys can also indicate the customer's feelings concerning merchandise assortment. Such customer surveys can be quite informal yet provide a clear indication of trends.

Merchandising trends are affected by changes in the nature of competition. The modernization or expansion of an existing business or changes in a competing store's promotional policies may cause a business to change their merchandising practices. The quote "innovate or perish" can be remembered as a warning to stay abreast of the activities of competing businesses.

Keeping informed of merchandising trends is important for a successful business. Customer demand and competition are among the factors considered when collecting data on merchandising trends.

INFORMATION SHEET

Selling is considered one of the most important parts of the promotional mix. It brings the marketer into direct contact with the consumer. Personal selling is defined as personal, persuasive communication between a marketing employee and a consumer that is designed to convince the consumer to purchase products or services. Selling takes place when a marketer determines the needs and wants of a consumer and then helps to satisfy these needs and wants for the mutual benefit of both parties. The key term in this statement is mutual benefit; both buyer and seller must be satisfied if effective selling is to occur.

Personal selling involves matching a consumer's needs and wants with the goods or services offered by a business. The better the match, the more satisfied the consumer. In the long run a good match means a lasting relationship between a business and a consumer.

COMPETENCY

INFORMATION SHEET

Promotion aims to inform and persuade consumers. Promotion involves both advertising and personal selling. Advertising communicates to potential customers through some mass medium the benefits of a good or service. Personal selling involves the art of persuasive sales on a one-to-one basis.

Although advertising cannot create demand for a product, it certainly can awaken the demand for a good. Its purposes are to create a brand image, to persuade customers to buy, and to develop brand loyalty. Federal Express developed a series of ads that performed these functions quite well ("When it absolutely, positively has to be there overnight"). Customers noticed the ads and identified with the situations they portrayed. Advertising can take many forms and is put before the public through a variety of media.

Personal selling may be more art than science. It is especially important to small businesses because of their limited (and sometimes deficient) advertising budgets. Therefore, it is critical that the small business owner hire qualified, competent sales representatives and invest enough money to train them adequately. To customers, sales representatives are the company. Impolite, impatient, or incompetent sales personnel reflect negatively on the business. The wise small business owner will maintain close contact with the firm's customers to get constant feedback on sales representatives' effectiveness.

COMPETENCY

INFORMATION SHEET

The press can be either a valuable friend or a fearsome foe to a small business, depending on how well the owner handles his/her firm's public relations. Too often, managers take the attitude, "My business is too small to be concerned about public relations." However, the wise small business manager recognizes that investing time and money in public relations benefits both the community and the company. The community gains the support of a good business citizen, and the company earns a positive image in the marketplace.

Many small businesses rely on media attention to get noticed. While such publicity may not be free, it definitely can lower the firm's advertising expenditures without suffering a lack of customer recognition.

Depending on the business, the manager will want to use a calendar to schedule advertising and public to coincide with traditional retail events (i.e., Christmas, Easter, etc.).

State the importance of maintaining a check on competitors' promotions.

INFORMATION SHEET

In most cases, the small business owner must match the prices charged by nearby competitors on identical items, unless the firm's customers perceive a difference in the quality and the quantity of "extras" provided. If the firm cannot justify an unfavorable price differential through a positive image, sales will suffer. For example, if a self-service station charged a nickel more per gallon for gasoline than another self-service station across the street, customers would simply go across the street to buy. Without the advantage of a unique business image--quality of goods sold, number of services provided, convenient location, favorable credit terms--the small company must match local competitors' prices or lose sales. While the prices that distant competitors charge are not nearly as critical to the small business as those of local competitors, it can be helpful to know them and to use them as reference points.

The nature of the goods competitors sell also influences the small firm's pricing policies. The manager must recognize which products are substitutes for those he/she sells and then strive to keep prices in line with them. For example, the local sandwich shop should consider the hamburger restaurant, the taco shop, and the roast beef shop as competitors since they all serve fast foods. Although none of them offers the identical menu of the sandwich shop, they all compete for the same quick meal dollar. Of course, if the small firm can differentiate its product by creating a distinctive image in the consumer's mind, it can afford its own line of prices.

Generally, the small business manager should avoid head-on competition with other firms that can more easily achieve lower prices through a more favorable cost structure, quantity discounts, and other factors. Most locally owned drugstores cannot compete with the prices of large national drug chains.

However, many local drugstores operate successfully by using nonprice competition; these stores offer more personal service, free delivery, credit sales, and other "extras" the chains eliminate. Nonprice competition can be an effective strategy for a small business in the face of larger, more powerful enterprises, especially since there are many dangers in experimenting with price changes. For instance, shifts cause fluctuations in sales volume that the small firm may not be able to tolerate. Also, price changes may damage the company's image and its customer relations.

COMPETENCY

Explain how attractive facilities help meet competition, encourage one-stop shopping, and attract customers.

INFORMATION SHEET

A small firm's physical facilities and layout can enhance or restrict its ability to serve customer needs and generate a profit.

The building must be large enough to accommodate normal business operations. Selecting a facility that is too small and cannot be expanded may force the owner to make several expensive moves as the business grows.

The building should be structurally sound and attractive. Often, this determines the customer's impression of the business, and the building's appearance must be consistent with the firm's image. The store front should be fresh and clean; it should offer customers a clear view of the merchandise for sale, inviting them to enter. There should be no barriers which discourage customers from entering the store. The building should provide easy access for handicapped customers.

Signs are an important part of a business's exterior environment. Signs tell customers who you are, where you are, and what you sell. They should be attractive and properly maintained.

Evaluating the building's interior involves many of the same considerations as analyzing its exterior. Floors should be sturdy, durable, and easy to maintain. The owner should check to see if walls and ceilings are soundproof and fireproof. Lighting should be bright enough to get the job done but not so bright that it glares or detracts from the merchandise being displayed.

Color can brighten the store's overall appearance and can create images and impressions in the consumer's mind. The manager can use certain colors to complement the merchandise displayed. Generally, the retailer should avoid bright colors that overpower the merchandise.

Layout for a retail store depends on the owner's understanding of customers' buying habits. Retailers have three basic layout principles to follow--the grid, the free-form, and the boutique.

Certain areas of the store represent a greater value than others. Main-level selling areas contribute more to sales than sites on other levels. Locations at the intersection of main shipping corridors provide greater customer exposure and are more valuable. The farther a selling area is from the store's entrance, the less valuable it is.

INFORMATION SHEET

Merchants must set four different categories of service policies: selling and shopping services, convenience services, profit services, and community services. The services most commonly used by customers are those associated with merchandise. Selling and shopping services include personal selling, self-service, self-selection, wrapping or bagging, returns and adjustments, delivery, and alteration target market factors determine which will be offered. Convenience services are non-merchandise efforts to make shopping more comfortable to customers. Examples of convenience services are information desks, parking, and appropriate store hours. Some stores provide services for the purpose of making a profit. Profit services include restaurants, insurance desks, and equipment rentals. Community services are contributions of money, staff time, or store facilities for the purpose of aiding some activity of interest to the community. These may include sponsorship of sport teams, contests, or entertainment programs. As important as the service policies is the way in which the services are provided. A store's customer relations policy states how, in general, customers are to be treated to maintain their good will.

   d. Take action. Be friendly, courteous, and fair.

INSTRUCTIONAL MATERIALS/RESOURCES

EVALUATION

The student will list the steps in handling customer complaints.
COMPETENCY

Identify and use acceptable techniques in handling customer complaints.

INFORMATION SHEET

There are three major kinds of complaints: (1) complaints about merchandise, (2) complaints about service, and (3) complaints about billing. A merchandise complaint may be about a gift article of clothing that does not fit properly or about a defective home appliance. A service complaint may be about late delivery. A billing complaint may concern an incorrect price recorded on a customer's charge account. Complaints may be caused by poor quality merchandise, carelessness in sales transactions, inefficient service, or poor supervision of new salespeople.

Customers should be allowed to explain their reasons for making a complaint, and the salesperson should listen attentively. The salesperson should then ask questions to uncover any facts that seem to be missing. Often, an adjustment is needed to satisfy the customer.

Whoever makes it, the adjustment will be influenced by several factors: (1) the cost of the item in question, (2) the value of the customer to the store, (3) how often the customer makes complaints, and (4) the validity of the complaint.

If a number of adjustments have already been made and if, upon examination, the goods do not seem to be in such condition as to warrant a complaint, the salesperson should refer the customer to the department manager or to the customer service office where the adjustment may be refused. The store may lose the customer's patronage, but the cost of making the adjustments demanded is probably greater than the loss of business.

Identify and use acceptable techniques in handling customer complaints.

Define entrepreneurship.

Entrepreneurship is a nonrestrictive term that means the process of organizing, managing, and being liable for a business. The following types of businesses are the most common.

1. Retail Stores - This is the most common and most visible of the new business enterprises. It is generally the most expensive to start and has the most competition. Retail stores that are independently owned and operated account for 95 percent of the retail sales. A few examples of retail stores are: convenience stores, specialty shops, clothing stores, hardware stores, auto parts firms, restaurants, fast-food establishments, and food marketing firms.

2. Service Businesses - The fastest growing segment of the small business community is made up of service firms. A service business employs people who specialize in skilled work that consumers need in the course of everyday life. Some examples are: barber shops, health spas, advertising agencies, service stations, laundromats and dry cleaners, appliance repair businesses, theaters, bowling alleys, educational services, consulting firms, and day care centers.

3. Wholesale Businesses - Wholesalers purchase large quantities of merchandise from manufacturers and then distribute smaller quantities to retailers. Examples of wholesalers are: distributors of auto parts, paint, and perishable items such as produce, flowers or meat.

4. Cottage Industries - With the high cost of beginning a business, many entrepreneurs have chosen to use their own homes to begin their business. A wide array of businesses now are categorized as cottage businesses and operate successfully out of the proprietor's home. Examples are: pottery and jewelry business, furniture refinishing, and distributorship of such products as Amway or Shaklee.

5. Urban Street Sales - Following ancient practices of street vendors, urban street sales are making a strong comeback in recent years. The entrepreneur peddles his or her wares to passing pedestrians. In some areas street vendors are controlled by city and state ordinances and require licenses, and in some cases, must pay rental for street space.

How Do I Rate?

Read each question. Read each answer carefully. Take a moment and reflect on your background and experience and answer honestly. Check the answer that actually reflects your honest reaction, not just the one that sounds good.

RATING SCALE FOR GOING INTO BUSINESS

1. Am you a self-starter?
   ____ I do things on my own. Nobody has to tell me to get going.
   ____ If someone gets me started, I keep going all right.
   ____ Easy does it. I don’t put myself out until I have to.

2. How do you feel about other people?
   ____ I like people. I can get along with just about anybody.
   ____ I have plenty of friends; I don’t need anyone else.
   ____ Most people irritate me.

3. Can you lead others?
   ____ I can get most people to go along when I start something.
   ____ I can give the orders if someone tells me what we should do.
   ____ I let someone else get things moving; then I go along if I feel like it.

4. Can you take responsibility?
   ____ I like to take charge of things and see them through.
   ____ I’ll take over if I have to, but I’d rather let someone else be responsible.
   ____ There’s always some eager people around wanting to show how smart they are. I say let them.

5. How good an organizer are you?
   ____ I like to plan before I start. I’m usually the one to get things lined up when the gang wants to do something.
   ____ I do all right unless things get too goofed up, then I quit.
   ____ You get all set and then something comes along and ruins it, so I just take things as they come.

6. How good a worker are you?
   ____ I can keep going as long as I need to. I don’t mind working hard for something I want.
   ____ I’ll work hard for a while, but when I’ve had enough, that’s it!
   ____ I can’t see that hard work gets you anywhere.
COMPETENCY

List the personal qualities and skills needed to be a successful entrepreneur.

INSTRUCTIONAL ACTIVITY continued

7. Can you make decisions?
   - I can make up my mind in a hurry if I have to. It usually turns out OK.
   - I can if I have plenty of time. If I have to make up my mind fast, I think later I should have decided the other way.
   - I don’t like to be the one who has to decide things. I’d probably be wrong.

8. Can people trust what you say?
   - You bet they can. I don’t say things I don’t mean.
   - I try to be on the level most of the time, but sometimes I just say what’s easiest.
   - What’s the problem if the other fellow doesn’t know the difference?

9. Can you stick with it?
   - If I make up my mind to do something, I don’t let anything stop me.
   - I usually finish what I start--if it doesn’t get fouled up.
   - If it doesn’t go right away, I turn off. Why beat your brains out?

10. How good is your health?
    - I never run down!
    - I have enough energy for most things I want to do.
    - I run out of energy sooner than most of my friends.

Now count the checks you made.

- How many checks are there beside the first answer to each question?
- How many checks are there beside the second answer to each
  question?
- How many checks are there beside the third answer to each
  question?

If most of your checks are beside the first answers, you probably have what it takes to run a business. If not, you’re likely to have more trouble than you can handle by yourself. Better find a partner who is strong on the points you’re weak on. If many checks are beside the third answer, not even a good partner will be able to help you.

COMPETENCY

Identify the factors in business failure and success.

INFORMATION SHEET

Successful small business owners usually have strong organizational ability, drive, and leadership. Since the typical store owner may work long hours, good physical and mental health are necessary. A successful owner-operator, on a daily basis, closely supervises the operations that can spell success or failure for a business, such as buying, selling, building and inventory supervision, recordkeeping and reporting, personnel supervision, and customer relations.

There are many characteristics that an entrepreneur must possess. But the time to evaluate these characteristics necessary for success is before, not after, a business is started. One way for the future retail operator to understand his or her own personal qualities better is through self-evaluation. Self-evaluation is an examination of one's own qualities, abilities, and background. Self-evaluation should reflect your honest feelings. Care must be taken not to allow emotions to influence your responses or answers unnecessarily.

Effective self-evaluation can often be accomplished by using a form of a rating scale or checklist. Frequently employers use this method to evaluate their employees. Perhaps you will evaluate future employees by a method similar to the one that follows.

The Small Business Administration (SBA) makes available a rating scale designed for self-evaluation for those interested in going into business. Although certainly not the only consideration for judging personal characteristics needed for retail ownership, it is at best one indication. The opinions of business associates, friends, and family members can also prove helpful.

EVALUATION

The student will be able to identify the major concepts of franchises.
COMPETENCY

Identify cooperative arrangements: franchise and investments.

INFORMATION SHEET

A franchise is an agreement by which a parent company gives an individual or another small company the right to do business in a standardized manner. The parent company is the franchiser. It can be a manufacturer, wholesaler, or service company. The person or company given rights by a franchiser is called the franchisee. These rights may include the authority to sell the franchiser's products and to use its name, trademark, and operating procedures. Rights may vary from franchise to franchise.

A franchise combines features of independent retail stores and chain stores. Franchise owners invest their own money in the business, enjoy the profits of success, and accept responsibility for failure. At the same time they are connected with a well-known company that can provide assistance in setting up and operating the business.

INSTRUCTIONAL ACTIVITY

Ten years ago Fred and Chrissie Washington started a small restaurant that sold mostly seafood. The high quality of the food, fair prices, and an attractive dining room caused the business to become very successful. Two years after the first restaurant was opened they opened an identical restaurant in a nearby community, which also was successful. Today the Washingtons have five restaurants, and each is doing well.

They would like to continue opening restaurants in other communities and in other states. However, they know they cannot operate any more restaurants because even now their time is much too limited. For that reason they have been thinking about operating other restaurants under franchise agreements. Both are concerned about franchisees who might not run their restaurants exactly the way the Washingtons do.

Questions to answer.

1. Do you think operating under a franchise type of arrangement will work for the Washingtons? Explain.
2. Is there any way the Washingtons can control the way franchisees will run their restaurants? Explain.
3. What added responsibilities will the Washingtons have in helping the franchisees run their restaurants?

EVALUATION

COMPETENCY

Describe the legal forms of retail businesses.

INFORMATION SHEET

When one person is the sole owner of a retail business, the form of ownership is known as an individual proprietorship. Two or more persons may join together to own a business. This form of ownership is called a partnership. When several people want to own a business, they can choose either the partnership form or the corporation form. In the corporation form, they obtain ownership by purchasing shares of stock. Since each of these forms of ownership has its advantages and disadvantages, the type of ownership must be selected carefully. Such factors as capital needed, experience of each prospective owner, type of retail business, goods to be handled, tax laws, and the financial risk that each person is willing to take should be considered. Of course, a business may be started as an individual proprietorship and later changed to a partnership or corporation. It may also be started as a partnership or a corporation.

About sixty percent of all retail stores are owned by individual proprietors. About fifteen percent of the retail stores are the partnership form of ownership; and the rest, about twenty-five percent, are the corporate form of ownership. The stores that are proprietorships or partnerships are mostly small stores with sales of $250,000 or less a year. The number of retailers using the corporation form is increasing because it seems best suited for large-scale operations.
COMPETENCY

Describe the legal forms of retail businesses.

1. The form of business which is smallest in total number but largest in terms of total sales of goods and services is a

2. The easiest legal type of business organization to form is a
   a. sole proprietorship.
   b. franchise.

Answers

1. b.
2. a.
COMPETENCY

Describe the legal forms of retail businesses.

INSTRUCTIONAL ACTIVITY

Legal responsibilities are a necessary evil of operating a small business. One of the first legal decisions a new owner/operator must make is what form of ownership is best for the new business. There are basically three choices: individual or sole proprietorship, partnership, and corporation.

There are advantages and disadvantages to each form of ownership. Factors such as capital needed (money to start and operate a business), experience of the owners, type of business, goods or services to be offered, tax laws, and the financial risk that each person is willing to take need to be carefully considered. It is good to be flexible and many businesses begin as a proprietorship, then move to a partnership, and later expand to a corporation.

1. Individual Proprietorship - When a person starts a business with no other person involved in the ownership of the business, it is called an individual or sole proprietorship. An advantage of this form of business is that it is relatively easy to start, given sound capital (money). Another advantage is that the business is managed by one person and business decisions do not have to be shared with other owners. Taxation and government supervision are relatively light. Problems develop in a proprietorship when business success demands expensive expansion and capital is invested already. Because there is only one owner, some business decisions are poor because there has been no opportunity to discuss the matter with other experienced people.

2. Partnership - A partnership is when two or more investors combine to form a legal agreement to do business together. Generally, combined skills result in a more efficient operation. Increased capital enables the business to stock more merchandise, purchase better equipment, and expand the services of the store. In addition, each partner assumes liability for his/her share of the debt, and any portion that another partner cannot pay. This can be avoided by forming a legal limited partnership where each limited partner has no voice in the management of the business, but is liable only for the extent of the personal investment. Also, the death of one of the partners causes a complete liquidation (dissolving the business). It may be reorganized under a new partnership, but the legal process is time consuming and costly.

3. Corporation - A corporation is an artificial being, a legal person in the eyes of the law. A corporation can make contracts, own property, borrow money, and perform other activities necessary to operate a business. A corporation is formed when a group of investors apply to the state in which they are doing business for a charter to do business as a corporation. Each investor or stockholder is liable for business losses only to the extent of personal investment.
