Designed for use by participants in the 1991 White House Conference on Library and Information Services (WHCLIS2), this guide begins with an overview of the White House Conferences on Library and Information Services, including background information on the 1979 Conference (WHCLIS) and an introduction to the 1991 Conference. Also in the first of five sections are summaries of the three conference themes—Enhancing Literacy, Increasing Productivity, and Strengthening Democracy. A map and a chart are included which indicate the number of delegates and alternates that each state may send to the conference. The second section provides photographs and biographical profiles of the following conference leaders: Charles Reid; Richard Akeroyd; Joseph Fitzsimmons; Phillip I. Blumberg; Jane Klausman; and Jean M. Curtis. The names and addresses of the WHCLIS II Advisory Committee and the National Commission On Libraries and Information Science (NCLIS) Commissioners are also included. The third section provides photographs of George Bush and Barbara Bush, and photographs and biographical profiles of the following speakers: Marilyn Tucker Quayle; Lamar Alexander; William Esrey; Mary Hatwood Futrell; Major R. Owens; James Billington; J. Michael Farrell; Janette Hoston Harris; Newt Gingrich; Deborah Kaplan; Paul Simon; Arthur Miller; Clement Bezold; Robert Houk; Charles McClure; Anthony Oettinger; Amy Owen; Charles Robinson; Jack Simpson; Phyllis Steckler; and Don Wilson. The fourth section contains maps and general information on the conference facilities, and a day-by-day schedule of events is provided in the final section. (MAB)
“If the United States is to remain a global leader in the 21st century, we must keep pace with rapid advances in technology, as well as with increasing trade and commerce between nations. Our ability to stay ahead depends, in large part, on our ability to stay informed . . .”

President George Bush
An Overview Of The White House Conference
On Library and Information Services

Information is becoming our country's most important national resource as the technology revolution takes hold. During the 21st century our ability to access, understand and use information will be critical to government, industry, educators, consumers, voters, parents - all Americans. Policy makers at all levels of government must deal with this explosion in information services.

The importance of library and information services has long been recognized by leaders in the field, resulting in the first White House Conference dealing with information delivery and library services in 1979. Authorized by Public Law 100-382 and called by the President of the United States to focus attention on this topic of national concern, this week's White House Conference on Library and Information Services continues the work begun over a decade ago.

Under a three theme umbrella - library and information services for enhancing literacy, improving productivity and strengthening democracy - the 1991 Conference will work to create policy recommendations on issues critical to our nation: a literate populace, a workforce with the productivity skills necessary to compete in the global marketplace of the 21st century, and a citizenship fully equipped to participate in the democratic system.

A White House Conference affords the average American the unique opportunity to play a hands-on role in the public policy making process. As a general rule, the purpose of a White House Conference is to involve a wide range of individuals in the development of recommendations for future public policies in the area of concern.
Among the many critical issues on which White House Conferences have been held are aging, a drug-free America and productivity.

During the past year, thousands of Americans have participated in preconference activities in all 50 states, the District of Columbia, six U.S. Territories and in the Native American community. Delegates to this national Conference were selected at the state, or unit level, and include library and information professionals; supporters of and volunteers in library and information organizations; local, state and federal government officials; and members of the general public.

Recommendations have been formulated by thousands of participants in the states and have been presented to state and local officials for improvements to library and information services at that level. In addition, their ideas were combined with other state proposals as well as those of other sources for deliberation at the Conference this week.
After debate at this week's Conference by some 700 delegates, a final set of policy recommendations will be adopted. This November, these policy recommendations will be presented to the President and Congress. In addition, the report will be widely disseminated to raise public awareness of library and information services and the benefits of these services for the individual, the economy, and the nation.

The 1979 White House Conference resulted in 64 recommendations. To date 55 have been acted upon in part or whole resulting in the following:

- The Library Services and Construction Act (LSCA): Twenty-two of the 1979 resolutions were incorporated into LSCA, including Title IV library services for Indian Tribes and Hawaiian Natives, and Title VI library literacy programs. As a result of Conference recommendations on library networking and resource sharing, LSCA Title III (inter-library cooperation) was given significantly more funding in the early 1980s.

- Intensified efforts to use new technology to preserve books and papers.

- Increased use of satellite communications, video techniques and cable television in the expansion of library and information services.

- Adoption of standards for publishing, producing, organizing, and transmitting information and for telecommunication and computer technology.

- An active role for libraries in adult literacy programs.

- The growth of grassroots activism on behalf of libraries. Today the Friends of Libraries movement has over 600,000 members and annually raises approximately $27 million in support of library programs!

- The formation of an independent, non-profit organization, The White House Conference on Library and Information Services Taskforce, which has worked throughout the past decade in support of the Conference resolutions.
Today the challenges that face the nation and our library and information resources are many. Among the concerns of delegates to the 1991 Conference are:

- How will the information needs of government, industry, small business, and average citizens in the 21st century be met?

- Is America in danger of losing its institutional memory? How can the survival of historical and important works be ensured? In the Information Age how can we determine what information should be archived for future generations?

- Will new information technologies create a society of information haves and have-nots?

- In the very near future, Americans will be able to visit their local library and, by computer, access information from a neighboring state or around the world. Are we ready and able to put this technology to its full use?

- What role can libraries and information services play in helping the Nation reach the President's "America 2000" education goals?

- What is the role that libraries and information resources must play in community economic development? How should partnerships be developed between libraries and the business community and between libraries and schools?

Society's ability to foster life-long learning and deliver information to people when they need it depends on our library and information services. The first White House Conference on Library and Information Services built a momentum in recognizing the importance of these services. This second Conference will find pathways to meet the information needs of all Americans and the world into the next millennium.
The problem of illiteracy - the absence of the ability to read and write - is one of the most vexing in the United States today. Our nation possesses one of the highest standards of living in the world; yet of the 149 countries belonging to the United Nations, the United States ranks 48th in literacy.

According to Project Literacy U.S. (PLUS), as many as 23 million adult Americans are functionally illiterate, lacking basic skills beyond a fourth-grade level. Another 35 million are semi-literate, lacking skills beyond an eighth-grade level.

Recent studies have shown a direct correlation between literacy skills and the ability of young adults to be productive members of the workforce. If this trend continues, two critical scenarios are on the horizon: an American workforce without the skills to be a competitive player in the international marketplace, and a growing disparity between the information “haves and have-nots” and, therefore, the economic “haves and have-nots” in our country.

In 1988, the Texas Department of Commerce estimated that illiteracy cost that state $17.2 billion each year through lost productivity, unrealized tax revenue, welfare, and costs associated with criminal activities.

In the Information Age, the definition of literacy must expand to include computer literacy, information literacy, cultural literacy, technical literacy, and global literacy. Today, for individuals to be productive and successful members of our society, they must be able to “read” - access and understand - information. Information which is important to them as workers, consumers, voters, and parents.

Dr. Patricia Senn Breivik, a leader in the field of information literacy, has written:

"Information literacy is a means of personal and national empowerment in today's information rich environment . . . It is, therefore, the next logical step in all current programs to combat illiteracy. After we teach people to read, we must teach them how to locate and use the information they need."
Conference Theme II: Increasing Productivity

Productivity is defined as the output of an average worker over a specific period of time in relation to the use of a given resource or input, such as raw materials.

Today that definition must expand to include information as a resource or raw material. In its final report, the American Library Association’s Presidential Committee on Information Literacy stated:

"Now knowledge, not minerals or agricultural products or manufactured goods, is the country's most precious commodity, and people who are information literate—who know how to acquire knowledge and use it—are America's most valuable resource."

Since the end of World War II, the growth of productivity in the United States has slowed. During the 1980s, some in both the public and private sector considered this declining productivity a serious challenge to America's status in the global economy.

As the American Library Association report states, the Information Era has created a new type of worker— the "knowledge worker"— whose tools are information and the ability to access and apply it. The approaching 21st century brings with it a multitude of new technologies and new demands on the workforce. Today’s "knowledge" worker has to possess lifelong learning habits, for it is estimated that he or she will have to learn new skills every three years.

As the providers of information, libraries and information services are critical participants in a community’s economic development. While no one business can afford to duplicate the vast network of library and information resources which exist across the nation today, each business must have access to the information those resources provide.
Conference Theme III: Strengthening Democracy

In his day, Thomas Jefferson warned that the success of a democratic society depended upon an “informed and educated” populace. Today, information is power. Access to information and the skills to apply it is how power is exercised.

Accurate information is the foundation upon which society can make informed judgements and good laws. Information has become so important to America that a large and growing part of the U.S. government and private sector workforce is engaged in information-related services. This national information delivery system includes more than 115,000 public, academic, special, and school libraries.

Historian Henry Steele Commager wrote that ignorance is slavery and that free states are those which provide their people the right of inquiry and the means to make that inquiry meaningful. Literacy and information access are a strong foundation for a democratic society. They allow people to be independent seekers of truth, to build their own arguments and opinions and to verify or refute ‘expert opinion.’

In 1731, Benjamin Franklin established the nation’s first library, the Philadelphia Library Company, a subscription library for tradesmen and mechanics. Joseph Leroy Harrison, author of The Public Library in the United States, wrote:

"Franklin’s very simple, but hitherto unthought-of, device was a new and radical departure. Its effect was toward a more even distribution of intellectual wealth, the establishment of an intellectual democracy."

Today United States Representative Major R. Owens of New York states:

"Information literacy is needed to guarantee the survival of democratic institutions. All men are created equal, but voters with information resources are in a position to make more intelligent decisions than citizens who are information illiterates. The application of information resources to the process of decision-making to fulfill civic responsibilities is a vital necessity."
Delegate Strength

The number of delegates each state may send to the Conference is the number of the state's U.S. Representatives and Senators rounded up to the next number divisible by four. The number of alternates is one-fourth the number of delegates, rounded up to the next number divisible by four. Territories, the District of Columbia, the Native American population and the Federal library community are each represented by four delegates and four alternates. Puerto Rico is represented by eight delegates and four alternates because of its population. Up to 64 additional delegates-at-large may be appointed by the Chairman of the National Commission on Libraries and Information Science.

"Together, we can keep America moving toward that first shining vision – a land of golden opportunity, where achievement is limited only by how big we dream, how hard we work, and how well we learn. And we know the path to that vision is through economic growth and new technologies and renewed excellence in American education."

Ronald Reagan

The Ronald Reagan Presidential Library will be located in Simi Valley, California and is scheduled to be opened to the public in November 1991.
July 9, 1991

Dear Delegates, Alternates, Honored Guests and Observers:

On behalf of the National Commission on Libraries and Information Science and the White House Conference Advisory Committee, we congratulate you on your participation in the 1991 White House Conference on Libraries and Information Services.

We are about to embark upon a truly exciting and important mission—improved library and information services for all citizens. We know that you share a strong concern for and appreciation of the vital role that libraries and information play in our society. This is our opportunity to add to the long history and legacy of libraries in our nation.

Today, information technologies and libraries are the "Carnegie" of 21st century America. Andrew Carnegie played a pivotal role in the birth of libraries during the last century, making books and literature commonly available. The library of today, one which through new technologies reaches beyond its walls, makes more and better information available to everyone.

We eagerly await the recommendations that this body will create. And we know that there will be real interest in your work at the White House and on Capitol Hill.

Our best wishes for a successful week and my thanks in advance for your efforts.

Sincerely,

Charles E. Reid
Chairman

Richard G. Akeroyd, Jr.
Co-Chairman

Joseph Fitzsimmons
Vice-Chairman

Charles Reid
Conference Chairman

Conference Chairman Charles Reid will lower the gavel on opening day to begin the week's activities.

A resident of Fort Lee, New Jersey, Mr. Reid's roots in library systems are deep. Chairman of the National Commission on Libraries and Information Science, Reid has been a library trustee, library consultant and member of the Library Archives and History Advisory Council. In 1959, he was honored as the first recipient of the New Jersey Library Trustee Association "Trustee of the Year."

A former three-term Mayor of Paramus, New Jersey, Mr. Reid is now Senior Vice President of Prodevco Group.
Richard Akeroyd
Conference Co-Chairman and Conference Advisory Committee Chairman

Connecticut State Librarian Richard Akeroyd brings a unique perspective to his role as Co-Chairman of the 1991 Conference.

Twelve years ago, Akeroyd was a staff member for the first White House Conference on Library and Information Services. Today, he is in charge of providing library services for the State of Connecticut and statewide planning of support services for local libraries.

He was previously Assistant City Librarian at the Denver Public Library and, before serving on the staff of the first White House Conference, he was Director of Planning and Research at the Connecticut State Library.

Mr. Akeroyd received a B.A. from the University of Connecticut and a M.L.S. from the University of Pittsburgh.

Joseph Fitzsimmons
Conference Vice Chairman

As President and CEO of University Microfilms International for 15 years, Conference Vice Chairman Joseph Fitzsimmons understands the importance the private sector plays in the development of new technologies for the advancement of library and information services.

Mr. Fitzsimmons' career spans more than twenty years of active involvement and leadership in the information industry. His training and background in engineering and management brought him to UMI in 1966 to head the company's microreprographics operations. He gained recognition in the 1970s as a micrographics expert, chairing two major Association for Information and Image Management committees and advising the U.S. Public Printer.

Mr. Fitzsimmons served as Chairman of the Information Industry Association in 1989. He is an advisory board member of the Library and Information Science Graduate Schools at the University of Michigan and the University of Pittsburgh.
Conference Leadership

Phillip I. Blumberg
Presiding Officer of the Conference

Harvard University School of Law Dean and Professor of Law and Business Emeritus Phillip Blumberg will be the Presiding Officer of the Conference. A resident of Hartford, Connecticut, he served as the Presiding Officer of the Connecticut Governor's Conference on Library and Information Services.

Professor Blumberg has been honored with the Distinguished Service Award from the University of Connecticut School of Law Alumni Association. He has received the Connecticut Law Review Lifetime Achievement Award; the Connecticut Moot Court Board, Alva P. Loisell Lifetime Achievement Award; and the Hartford County Bar Association Liberty Bell Award. He is a member of the American and Connecticut Bar Associations, the Society of American Law Teachers, Phi Beta Kappa, and the American Law Institute.

A noted author in the field of law, Professor Blumberg graduated magna cum laude from both Harvard University and Harvard Law School.

Jane Klausman
Chief Parliamentarian of the Conference

A Professional Registered Parliamentarian with the National Association of Parliamentarians, Jane Klausman will serve as the Chief Parliamentarian for the Conference and will advise the delegates on proper procedures, according to Robert's Rules of Order and the official Conference Rules.

Ms. Klausman is the owner of JMK Parliamentary Services in Liverpool, New York. She is a certified Professional Parliamentarian by the American Institute of Parliamentarians and serves as the organization's Second Vice President.

She also serves as a professional parliamentary consultant for Dahms & Bierman Associates, Inc., and is a charter member and Professional Parliamentarian of Parliamentary Associates.

Ms. Klausman is a graduate of Syracuse University's School of Management.
July 9, 1991

Dear Delegates, Alternates, Honored Guests and Observers:

It is an honor and privilege to welcome you to Washington and the 1991 White House Conference on Library and Information Services.

Before us is a unique opportunity and a large responsibility. Public Law 100-382, the bill authorizing this White House Conference, called upon this body to develop policy recommendations for the improvement of our Nation's library and information services and their use by the public. This Conference is your opportunity to participate in the public policy making process and suggest solutions for such critical issues as literacy, workplace productivity and the declining participation in the democratic process. The opportunity is large; the responsibility even greater and the end result a tribute to each of you.

Many, many people – too numerous to mention – have made this day possible and you, the participants, will make this week one of lasting impact.

My sincere best wishes for a productive and successful week!

Warm Regards,
Jean M. Curtis
Executive Director

Jean M. Curtis
White House Conference Executive Director

As Executive Director of the Conference, Jean Curtis has managed the day-to-day operations leading up to this week's activities. A resident of Hamilton, Ohio, Mrs. Curtis was appointed to the position last November.

Prior to her WHCLIS appointment, Mrs. Curtis was Acting Director of the U.S. Department of Labor's Women's Bureau, where she managed the 70th anniversary National Women's Bureau Conference. A former elementary teacher, she served as District Service Director for former Congressman Thomas N. Kindness (R-Ohio) and was four times elected Butler (Ohio) County Recorder.

Marilyn Tucker Quayle

Marilyn Tucker Quayle was born and raised in Indianapolis, Indiana. A graduate of Purdue University and the Indiana University School of Law, she is a member of the Indiana bar and is admitted to practice law before all Indiana courts, including both the Northern and Southern Federal District courts, and before the U.S. Supreme Court.

Mrs. Quayle is a member of the Special High-Level Council of the United Nations International Decade for Natural Disaster Reduction and is Chairman of the Agency for International Development's International Disaster Advisory Committee. She is on the Advisory Board for the Federal Emergency Management Agency, and on the Board of Trustees for the Eiteljorg Museum of American Indian and Western Art. Mrs. Quayle is the Honorary Chair of the National Mentor Program and the Honorary National Chairman of the Susan G. Komen Foundation.
The Secretary of Education
Lamar Alexander

As the U.S. Secretary of Education, Lamar Alexander is charged with implementing the President's America 2000 Education Strategy, a nine-year crusade to move the United States toward the six ambitious national education goals that the President and the Governors adopted in 1990 at the Charlottesville, Virginia education summit.

Immediately before taking office in March of this year, Secretary Alexander was President of The University of Tennessee, a position he had held since July of 1988. He served as Governor of Tennessee from 1979 to 1987.

As Chairman of the National Governors' Association, he led the fifty-state education survey, Time for Results. In 1988, the Education Commission of the States gave him the James B. Conant Award for "distinguished national leadership in education."

Secretary Alexander is a Phi Beta Kappa graduate of Vanderbilt University and was a law review editor at New York University.
Keynote Speakers

William Esrey

Utilizing library and information services to increase the nation's productivity is the subject of William Esrey's keynote address.

Mr. Esrey joined United Telecom in 1980 as Executive Vice President of Corporate Planning and subsequently served as Chief Financial Officer. He became President and Chief Executive Officer of US Sprint in July 1988, when United Telecom announced its agreement to purchase controlling interest in US Sprint and assumed management control of US Sprint's operations. He was elected Chairman of United Telecom in April of last year.

In addition to his responsibilities at United Telecom, he serves on the boards of The Equitable Life Assurance Society of the United States, Panhandle Eastern Corporation, and General Mills.

Prior to joining United Telecom, he was Managing Director of Dillon, Read and Company from 1970 to 1979. Earlier, he held management positions with AT&T, New York Telephone Company, and Empire City Subway Company.

He earned a bachelor's degree in economics at Denison University and a Master's degree from the Harvard Graduate School of Business Administration.

Mary Hatwood Futrell

A teacher's teacher, Mary Hatwood Futrell will draw on her extensive educational background to keynote the role of library and information services in enhancing literacy.

Ms. Futrell is Senior Fellow and the Associate Director of the Center for the Study of Education and National Development at the George Washington University in Washington, D.C. She is also President of the World Confederation of Organizations of the Teaching Profession and in 1989 completed an unprecedented six years as the President of the National Education Association.
Among her numerous honors are Wayne State University’s “Distinguished Educator Award” and the National Association of Bilingual Education’s “President’s Outstanding Achievement Award.” Ms. Futrell was named one of twelve “Women of the Year” in 1987 by Ms. magazine, one of the 100 most influential Blacks in America every year from 1985 to 1989 by Ebony magazine, and one of the country’s 100 top women in 1984 and 1988 by Ladies Home Journal.

This past year, Ms. Futrell served as an Advisory Committee member for the Virginia Conference on Libraries and Information Science and is a current member of the National Science Foundation’s Advisory Committee on Education and Research.

Major R. Owens

As the only professional librarian in the Congress, United States Representative Major Owens will bring a unique perspective as a keynote speaker on the role libraries and information services play in strengthening democracy.

Congressman Owens has won enactment of several library measures, including: amendments to the Library Services and Construction Act supporting family learning centers operated by local public libraries, and authorizing state library agencies to use a portion of their Title II construction grants to assist local public libraries in purchasing computer hardware and other new technologies.

During the 101st Congress, Congressman Owens was appointed to serve on the White House Conference Advisory Committee. In the latter part of that session, the American Library Association presented him with its prestigious Federal Librarians Round Table Achievement Award, “in recognition of his outstanding work in support of federal libraries and their programs, and of his efforts to inform his Congressional colleagues of the vital role such libraries play.”

He is a 1956 graduate of Morehouse College, where he received high honors as a mathematics major and an education and library science minor. In 1957 Congressman Owens received his Master’s degree in library science from Atlanta University. He is in his fifth term in the House and is a member of the House Government Operations Committee and the House Education and Labor Committee where he is Chairman of the Select Education Subcommittee.
Featured Speakers

James Billington

James Hadley Billington was sworn in as The Librarian of Congress on September 14, 1987. He is the 13th incumbent of that position since the Library was established in 1800. Prior to his tenure at the Library of Congress, Dr. Billington was the Director of the Woodrow Wilson International Center for Scholars where he initiated the highly regarded Wilson Quarterly.

A prolific writer, Dr. Billington has authored two books nominated for National Book Awards: The Icon and the Axe and Fire in the Minds of Men.

A recognized expert on the Soviet Union, Dr. Billington has been part of several congressional delegations to the U.S.S.R., and in 1988 accompanied former President and Mrs. Reagan to the Soviet Summit.

Dr. Billington earned his undergraduate degree at Princeton University, graduating as valedictorian of the class of 1950. Three years later, he earned his doctorate from Oxford University, where he was a Rhodes Scholar.

Dr. Billington will be the featured speaker at the Saturday evening banquet.

J. Michael Farrell

J. Michael Farrell is a partner in the law firm of Manatt, Phelps, & Phillips. Mr. Farrell’s primary activities with the firm include energy, trade, corporate, legislative and administrative law.

Farrell was appointed to the National Commission on Libraries and Information Science in 1991. He is also a U.S. Commissioner on the Commission for the Study of Alternatives to the Panama Canal and a member of the National Petroleum Council.

From 1985 to 1987, Farrell was the General Counsel for the U. S. Department of Energy. During his tenure at DOE he served on numerous interagency working groups responsible for policy recommendations in such areas as the transfer of technology, intellectual property, tort policy and commercial space. He also served as Deputy Director of Presidential Personnel and Assistant Counsel to the President from 1981-82.

Mr. Farrell will chair the open forum on Friday.
Janette Hoston Harris

Dr. Janette Hoston Harris was appointed the Director of Educational Affairs for the District of Columbia by Mayor Sharon Pratt Dixon this past March. In her position, Harris serves as the Mayor’s principal advisor on issues affecting the city’s primary, secondary and post-secondary schools.

Harris has taught nearly every grade level in the education system. She is a former Professor of the University of the District of Columbia, where she taught for 17 years. She has also taught in the District of Columbia Public Schools and at the community college level.

Dr. Harris will give welcoming remarks during the opening ceremony.

“Productivity really means getting more out of your work. When you have the latest technology to help you do your job, it means you can do more with the same effort. Think about what rising productivity means to you and to your family. It means that the individual worker gets a real increase in his wages, and not just a pay raise eaten away by inflation. It means that the consumer gets more for his money, the investor gets a greater return, and more money is available to help those who cannot help themselves in this country.”

Richard Nixon

The Richard Nixon Library is located in Yorba Linda, California and was opened to the public on July 20, 1990.
