I. BACKGROUND AND NEED FOR LEGISLATION

A. CHILD ABUSE

The first Federal programs specifically designed to address child abuse and neglect in this country were authorized under the Child Abuse Prevention and Treatment Act (Public Law 93-247), enacted in 1974. This legislation provided Federal financial assistance for identifying, preventing, and treating child abuse and neglect. The Act has since been extended through fiscal year 1991 and has been amended to expand the scope of activities.

The original Child Abuse Prevention and Treatment Act (CAPTA) authorizes the creation of a National Center on Child Abuse and Neglect to help establish the parameters of the problem and to provide incentives for developing effective methods of treatment. The Act also authorized demonstration grants and a State grant program for activities relating to preventing and treating child abuse and neglect. To be eligible for funding under the State grant program, States were required, in part, to establish systems for reporting child abuse and neglect, investigating such reports, and providing immunity from prosecution for persons so reporting.

In 1978, the Act was amended by Public Law 95-266, which extended the programs under the Act through fiscal year 1981 and, among other things, expanded the Center's grant making authority. It also required the establishment of research priorities and earmarked funds for the prevention and treatment of child sexual abuse.

In 1981, the child abuse prevention and treatment programs were extended through fiscal year 1983 under the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act (Public Law 97-457). In 1984, the programs were extended through fiscal year 1987 under amendments to the CAPTA (Public Law 98-457). The 1984 amendments expanded the Center's responsibilities to include additional studies and required, as an additional criterion for eligibility for the State grant program, that States implement systems for responding to reports of medical neglect. A new State grant program and other assistance were also authorized to help States develop and run systems for responding to incidents of medical neglect, including withholding of medically indicated treatment from disabled infants with life-threatening conditions.

In 1986, the CAPTA was amended by provisions of the Children's Justice and Assistance Act (Public Law 99-401), which established a new State grant program under this Act for improving the administrative and judicial handling of child abuse cases, especially those involving child sexual abuse. Funding for this program comes from fines collected from persons convicted of certain Federal offenses.

CAPTA was most recently reauthorized in 1987 (Public Law 100-294)—extending its programs through fiscal year 1991. The 1987 amendments established a new interagency task force and a newly constituted Advisory Board on Child Abuse and Neglect.

Testimony in hearings before the Committee in 1990 convincingly stated that child protection services have been severely strained and at times unable to provide adequate care for maltreated children and families in distress. In 1990, an estimated 2,508,000 children were reported as victims of child abuse or neglect, representing a 31 percent increase in reports between 1985 and 1990. Child deaths due to maltreatment have also increased—by 38 percent since 1985—with an estimated 1,211 children found dead from abuse or neglect in 1990.

The numbers of children requiring protective services have likewise surged. Nationally, 276,000 children were in foster care in 1985, but this rose to 407,000 in 1990. Even more alarming are current projections that 553,600 children will be in foster care by 1995. The Connecticut Department of Children and Youth Services served an average of 11,638 cases per month in 1987. This increased to over 14,000 per month by 1989.

The complexity of the cases, furthermore, has deepened. A 1990 Connecticut survey by The Children's Concern identified five leading contributors to child abuse and neglect: parental substance abuse, poor parenting skills, poverty, lack of affordable housing, and unemployment. These daunting root causes of child abuse and neglect have contributed to the recidivism seen in foster care. Thirty percent of children placed in 1985 had previously been in care—a near doubling of the estimated sixteen percent in 1983.

The ability of child welfare agencies to protect children, however, has not substantially improved in recent years. Over half the states in 1990 received no real increase in State funding to help meet the load of reported cases. Federal support has been inadequate as well. The U.S. Advisory Board on Child Abuse and Neglect reported in 1990 that Federal funds for child abuse and neglect have been "insufficient," leading to an "enormous . . . disparity between Federal appropriations and the rise in the child protection system caseload." Indeed, the Committee notes that since 1985 the Federal budget for the National Center on Child Abuse and Neglect has actually dropped below the 1985 level in real dollar terms.

The Child Abuse Prevention Federal Challenge Grants Act was enacted on October 12, 1984 as Title IV of Public Law 98-473, the continuing appropriations bill for fiscal year 1985. In enacting this legislation the Congress found that since 1980 certain States had begun to recognize the critical need for child abuse prevention efforts and had established Children's Trust Funds. These State funds were generated by surcharges on marriage licenses, birth certificates or divorce actions, or by a special checkoff on State income tax returns, to allow States to pay for child abuse and neglect prevention activities, in the face of depressed State economies and budget cutbacks. Money for child abuse prevention projects has historically been lacking because of the need to direct limited resources toward treating the increasing numbers of children already abused. Only one or two States had direct appropriations to support the broad range of child abuse and neglect prevention activities.

At the time, no Federal funds were directed specifically at assisting State Efforts to prevent child abuse and neglect. When the legislation was enacted, twenty States had set up special funds for child abuse prevention. The kinds of programs supported by these special funding mechanisms range from classes on parenting and coping with family stress to statewide public education campaigns and special sexual abuse prevention training for children. The Challenge Grant program was developed to encourage all States to establish and maintain significant funds supporting child abuse prevention projects. The number of States receiving child abuse prevention funding under the Challenge Grant program has increased from 33 States in fiscal year 1986, the first year of appropriations for the program, to 47 States awarded a total of $4,933,501 in fiscal year 1990.

The Child Abuse Prevention Challenge Grants Reauthorization Act of 1989 (Public Law 101-126) reauthorized the Challenge Grant program through fiscal year 1991 and transferred it to the Child Abuse Prevention and Treatment Act as Title II. The program is administered by the National Center on Child Abuse and Neglect (NCCAN) in the Department of Health and Human Services (HHS). HHS announces the availability of Federal funds and determines state eligibility for Federal challenge grants. Subject to appropriations, States are awarded the lesser of (1) 25 percent of State funds made available for prevention in the previous year or (2) 50 cents for every child living in the State.

To qualify for challenge grant funds, States must make non-Federal money available that is dedicated to prevention activities through a trust fund or "other funding mechanism." Thus, States funding prevention through other mechanisms currently also receive Federal support. Examples of other funding mechanisms that HHS has accepted as eligible for matching funds are (1) direct line-item state appropriations for prevention, (2) grants from private foundations, and (3) prevention programs funded outside of the State's Childrens Trust Funds through departments of social services and other administrative budgets.

The need continues for Federal grant support to encourage States to allocate funds for the prevention of child maltreatment. According to a May 1991 report from the U.S. General Accounting Office (Child Abuse Prevention: Status of the Challenge Grant Program) a few States expect legislative changes that could result in lower trust fund revenues. For example, changes in the State income tax form in Oregon and Indiana will likely reduce trust fund revenues. In Connecticut, the appropriation to the trust fund was cut so that the trust fund must now rely on private funding and challenge grants to fund prevention. Massachusetts reduced its fiscal goal because of State economic problems. A continuing recession or worsening fiscal crises in the States, as experienced in 1990, could threaten prevention spending in other States as well.

In each fiscal year since 1986, the challenge grant program has disbursed slightly under $5 million, the complete appropriation. To fully match funds raised by the States, $9 million would have to have been appropriated in 1989. After a decade of increases in trust fund revenue, fiscal year 1990 revenues totaled $28 million, excluding $5 million in Federal funds.

The number of grants awarded by State trust funds continues to increase, with 1,357 grants funded in fiscal year 1990. The average grant size ranged from a low of $1,700 in North Dakota to a high of $75,000 in Florida. Of those grants, 29 percent addressed general parenting education and support for all parents. Other types of programs funded included education and support for new parents only, child sexual assault prevention programs, and life skills training and pre-parenting instruction for teens and young adults. Highlights of the fiscal year 1989 programs included Montana's TOUCH project, in which a troupe of high school students performs a play aimed at preventing child abuse; it was performed 29 times in 13 different communities, reaching 1,065 elementary age students. Kansas funded a parenting education and child care training program for 95 teenage mothers in the Topeka public schools. New York established a team, made up of a social worker, a child development psychologist, and two pediatricians, to work with community agencies to offer home visits, parenting skills education, therapeutic play groups, individual counseling, and peer group counseling to young parents from East Harlem and South Bronx; the program ensures that the adolescent parents receive comprehensive medical, social, and educational services from the prenatal period through their child's first years of life.

B. FAMILY VIOLENCE

Recognizing the tremendous social cost incurred as a result of spousal abuse, Congress passed, in 1984, the Family Violence Prevention and Services Act (Public Law 98-457) as part of a bill amending the Child Abuse Act. As originally enacted, the Act authorized monies for projects to demonstrate the effectiveness of assistance to States to prevent family violence, provide shelter and related assistance to victims of family violence, and provide technical assistance and training to States, local public agencies, nonprofit private organizations, and other persons seeking such assistance.

Domestic violence programs had in fact preceded Federal legislation. Shelters were first established in 1975. The number of shelters in the United States has subsequently increased from just four to over 1200. Between 60 percent and 70 percent of women who utilize shelters do not return to their abusive partners after their stay (Strube, 1988). The availability of shelters has also been associated with a decline in the rate of female-perpetrated homicide against a partner (Browne & Williams, 1989).

Nonetheless, three out of four women who seek the safety of a family violence shelter are denied access due to insufficient space. Women continue to face the dilemma of living amidst violence or fleeing. Forty percent of the homeless women in New York are thought to be victims of family violence. Research has shown that lack of economic support and having no place to go are predictive of return to an abusive spouse after a stay at a shelter.

Victims of family violence need several sources of support to re-establish safe lives. Financial assistance is usually critical. Many victims, however, are intimidated by the process of obtaining assistance or uncertain about how to obtain such services. Shelters play a crucial role in linking victims to the appropriate services for transportation and technical assistance, helping to ease the transition between shelter residence and permanent housing and employment.

Federal and State programs offer victims and their children affordable housing, child care, and job training, but many victims of family violence also need health care and substance abuse treatment. Family violence programs, however, can only refer victims for these services; they do not directly provide treatment nor can they pay for outside counseling or health care services because of scarce resources. Directing money towards these ancillary efforts diminishes the ability of family violence programs to carry out their main objectives.

Current law does not specify legal advocacy as a service that shelters should provide. Such advocacy, however, is necessary for family violence victims to obtain legal protection. Many battered women are unfamiliar with or frightened by the court system. Legal advocacy programs, currently available in some family violence programs, inform victims of their legal rights and options. Legal advocates walk victims through the court system, diminishing their level of anxiety and helping to secure legal protection. Without advocacy, many victims would never enter the court system. Those who do are often threatened by their partner or discouraged by court personnel from completing the legal proceedings that they have initiated. Legal advocacy greatly increases the likelihood that victims will be able to use the court system to obtain protection.

Parental and children's needs were also excluded from current law. Victims of family violence need child care so that they can seek employment or housing. Their children, who witness family violence, are at risk for a variety of psychological complications such as poor conduct, aggressive behavior, low self-esteem, and depression. These children are themselves at greater risk of being abused. Many need immediate assistance in overcoming the psychological trauma of home violence. This assistance includes: protection, education, support, and counseling. Untreated children are at high risk for juvenile delinquency and abusive behavior themselves. Early intervention is critical to break the cycles of victimization leading to abuse perpetration.

Prevention services are also critical to the disruption of trans-generational abuse. Many studies have shown that male children who experience violence in their family—either observed against their mother or directed against themselves—grow up to become the perpetrators of family violence in adulthood and make up the overwhelming majority of those who engage in other violent behavior and are incarcerated for other crimes. Two types of prevention services are needed: prevention services to reduce the potential for future violence in individual families as well as primary prevention efforts and public awareness campaigns to reverse public toleration for this violence.

Despite the need for additional services, many women are unaware of the existence of battered women's shelters. Professionals, such as the police, physicians, nurses, social workers, psychologists, and psychiatrists are uninformed and therefore fail to provide victims with information about potentially critical community resources.

While the availability and effectiveness of shelters have improved, related professions and services (i.e. judges, lawyers, law enforcement, public assistance services, and health care providers) have lagged behind. Victims of family violence have been misla-belled or gone unidentified at health and legal institutions. Traditionally, battered women have been treated psychiatrically and then sent home to the abusing partners. Recent studies indicate that as many as 40 percent of women presenting to emergency rooms are victims of spousal assault (Stark and Flitcraft, 1988).

Widespread misconceptions about family violence make it difficult for victims to garner support and understanding. One study found that 50 percent of a middle class, well-educated community believed in several harmful myths about family violence, i.e. battered women are capable of leaving if they want to and are capable of stopping their partner's violence through counseling.

Proper training of professionals and service providers promotes effective and more appropriate responses to victims' needs. Amendments in this Act provide for increased funding for education and training, as well as wider public awareness about the nature and effects of family violence.

C. ADOPTION OPPORTUNITIES

The Adoption Opportunities program was authorized in 1978 as Title II of the Child Abuse Prevention and Treatment and Adoption Reform Act of 1978, Public Law 95-266. Its purpose is to assist the States by facilitating the elimination of barriers to adoption and the provision of permanent and loving home environments for children who would benefit from adoption, particularly children with special needs.

The initial thrust of the legislation was the development of a Model Code on Adoption. The Child Abuse Amendments of 1984, Public Law 98-457, mandated additional research and data collection under the adoption opportunities program, and created statutory requirements relating to newborn infants with life-threatening conditions.

Congressional hearings held in 1987 brought to light the lack of targeted, comprehensive efforts to obtain placement in adoptive homes for minority children who, along with children who were members of sibling groups, school-age or disabled children, were historically underserved. In addition, a growing incidence was cited of adoptive families in need of mental health services ranging from mental health counseling to out-of-home placement.

In response Congress enacted the Minority Children Placement program and the Post Legal Adoption Services program as part of Public Law 100-294.

Meanwhile, the proportion of minority children in the foster care system is not three times greater than the proportion of these children in the general population. According to the National Resource Center for Special Needs Adoption in Spaulding, MI, of the 31,000 children currently free for adoption and awaiting placement nationally, at least 50 percent are children of color. Data from the North American Council for Adoptable Children indicate an additional 40,000 children nationwide who have a plan of adoption but who are not yet legally free. The Center estimates that if current rates continue, the number of minority children and children with special needs who are waiting for adoption will more than double by 1995. Minority children, furthermore, are more likely to wait longer for permanent placement. One study notes that the median length of stay for African American children in foster care is one-third longer than the national median.

III. COMMITTEE VIEWS

A. CHILD ABUSE

Prior to the inception of the CAPTA programs, State legislatures and juvenile courts addressed the sensitive issue of medical neglect with the context of non-medical (including appropriate religious) practices. The States have evolved a reasonable balance on this issue, specifically matching their practices to local conditions and programs. The Committee notes that it has received information that the Department of HHS, or field offices, are attempting to change this by imposing a more stringent standard regarding these procedures and their relationship to State programs under this Act. This is a matter of concern to some members of the Committee who believe that States participating in the program should have the latitude to decide for themselves what constitutes adequate health care or medical care. The Committee will continue to monitor this issue.

U.S. Advisory Board

Congress established the Advisory Board on Child Abuse and Neglect in 1987 (Public Law 100-294) to evaluate national progress towards achieving the purposes of the Child Abuse Prevention and Treatment Act. The Board was also charged with making recommendations to Congress, the Secretary of HHS, and the Director of the National Center on Child Abuse and Neglect on ways to better achieve these purposes.

The Committee is impressed with the accomplishments of the Board. Their first report is the most comprehensive policy document on the problem of child maltreatment developed in the U.S.; the second report provides the basis for thoughtful reform of the child protection activities of the Federal Government.

The Committee concurs with the Board's view that the response to child maltreatment must be multi-disciplinary and believes that the Board should be supported in its efforts to promote interdepartmental and interagency cooperation. An annual appropriation for Board operations has therefore been authorized.

The work of the Board would also be enhanced by further autonomy; the Board should continue to elect its own officers and formally have the authority to establish its own procedures. This matter is important as it relates to the ability of the Board to render independent judgments. Current law is amended in this reauthorization so that all proposed and final regulations, guidelines, program announcements, and operating procedures developed to implement a Federal child maltreatment program may not be promulgated until the board has had 30 calendar days to review the documents in question. That review would include the opportunity to provide written comments on the documents to the promulgating agency.

The Committee, moreover, believes that the Board should have the latitude to render advice, even if it is not called upon to do so by a Federal entity. Such advice should be rendered to all relevant branches of government, including Congress and the Departments of Justice, HHS, Education, Housing and Urban Development, and Agriculture. Many important topics related to the protection of children warrant greater attention than can be given in an summary annual report. An example of such a topic is the coverage by health insurers of the treatment of child abuse. The Committee holds that the Board has the responsibility to develop and issue reports on such topics as it deems necessary.

The Committee expects the Secretary to continue to appoint the most qualified individuals to the Board, by establishing a vigorous recruitment, nomination, and selection process.

State grants program

The Committee believes that this legislation addresses many of the difficulties that States confront in striving to prevent the abuse and neglect of children. In reauthorizing the Child Abuse Prevention and Treatment Act, S. 838 focuses Federal grant support to States to improve overburdened child protective service systems. The bill changes the nature of the CAPTA State grant program from one of support for a broad range of discretionary activities to one which concentrates, at an authorized funding level of $100 million, on helping States improve their child protective services. While other Federal programs assist States in dealing with cases of maltreated children requiring intensive intervention, including foster care, no other Federal program specifically targets the primary operations of the child protective service agency. The Committee finds this to be a serious gap in federal assistance to the child welfare system which S. 838 seeks to address. Indeed, funds authorized under section 110 of the bill should help to respond in part to the national emergency in child protection which the U.S. Advisory Board on Child Abuse and Neglect identified in its 1990 report.

In redirecting the CAPTA State grant program, the legislation authorizes grants to assist States in improving their child protective service systems in: (1) the intake and screening of reports of abuse and neglect through the improvement of the receipt of information, decision making, public awareness, and training of staff; (2) investigating reports through improved decision making and training of staff, use of multidisciplinary teams and interagency protocols for investigations, and legal representation; (3) case management and delivery of services to families through improved response time and training of staff; and (4) general system improvements in assessment tools, automated systems, information referral, and staff training to meet minimum competencies.

The bill also would allow States to spend up to 15 percent of their grant allocations on current authorized CAPTA State grant activities in developing, strengthening, and carrying out child abuse and neglect prevention, treatment, and research programs. Because the Committee does not intend to disrupt State plans and programs in child abuse and neglect in directing the focus of the CAPTA State grant program to assistance for CPS systems improvement, States may continue to spend up to 100 percent of their grants on the kinds of general activities currently authorized until appropriations for this section exceed $40 million.

Under the new State program of CPS systems improvement grants, each State, to be eligible, must submit a plan to HHS describing which of the areas (intake, investigations, case management, etc.) it wishes to address with its Federal grant funds. The plan must describe the current capacity of the system in the relevant areas for which funding support is being requested, and the manner in which the State intends to apply the funds to make improvements. Upon review of the plans by HHS, funds will be awarded to States for the CPS improvement grants.

Change in title of grant program and purposes

When originally enacted in 1986, this legislation properly focused on an issue that was then first receiving prominent national attention: the need for multidisciplinary coordination to improve criminal investigations and prosecution of child sexual abuse. The legislation recognized the lack of legal training on child victimization, rapidly changing laws, and the need for specialization on child victim issues amid frequent personnel turnovers in district attorneys' offices, child protective service agencies, and law enforcement.

Since that time, because of this legislation, programs of the Department of Justice and other activities supported by NCCAN, the nation has seen much improvement in the criminal justice system's handling of child sexual abuse cases. The Committee commends the States and the organizations that have assisted them for such progress, but cautions that much attention to criminal prosecution and law enforcement investigation is still needed throughout the nation if children are to be properly protected under the law.

However, the Committee notes that the original legislative language's focus on child sexual abuse arbitrarily limits the training needs of investigators and prosecutors responsible for child abuse cases. The cases include: (a) the sexual exploitation of children (e.g., the use of children in pornography, sexual exhibitions, and prostitution); (b) the great volume of serious child neglect cases which are increasing as a result of substance-abusing parents; and (c) the pervasive problem of serious physical abuse, and (d) the estimated 1,200 to 5,000 children a year who die as a result of maltreatment by their parents. Each of these areas demand special understanding of medical, child development, and social service agencies, police, prosecutors, medical examiners and treatment specialists. Again, while progress has been made, the flow of new cases, medical and research development, and ever-changing personnel in resource-strapped agencies make training across the spectrum of criminal child abuse cases imperative.

Further, since some states have just recently begun to take advantage of this legislation, broadening the focus to include not only child sexual abuse but child physical abuse, child abuse fatalities and child neglect will permit task forces to plan comprehensively from the start.

Requirements for applying and reporting

This grant program is being further modified to clarify the necessity of annual applications from the States to NCCAN. Further, the Committee is seeking to eliminate a serious shortcoming in the original Children's Justice Act: the lack of any requirement for annual reports to NCCAN by the States on how they used their Federal assistance to further the purposes of the Act.

State task force

All of the States were required to establish special multidisciplinary, inter-agency task forces in order to initially qualify for Federal assistance under the Act. The Committee is clarifying in the amendments the need for States to maintain their task forces in order to continue to qualify for such assistance. Because of an extraordinary rise in the number of child abuse and neglect cases heard in the civil, juvenile courts of the nation, and recognizing that child protective service agency caseworkers repeatedly find themselves in civil judicial proceedings, the composition of the State task forces is being modified slightly to enhance the consideration of improvements in the civil child protective legal and judicial process. Judges, attorneys, and where applicable, representatives of Court Appointed Special Advocate (CASA) programs—all of whom have expertise and involvement in civil juvenile court proceedings—should be added to these task forces (where they do not already serve on them) so that civil as well as criminal justice system issues can be adequately addressed in State law and procedural reform efforts.

The Act is being further amended to clarify that law and procedural reforms must: (a) be comprehensive; (b) address both civil and criminal court proceedings; (c) address not only child sexual abuse, but also physical abuse, neglect, sexual exploitation, child maltreatment fatality cases, and interjurisdictional cases; (d) seek to improve the speed and outcomes for both court cases and agency administrative actions affecting maltreated children; (e) address ways in which the performance of court-appointed lawyers and guardians ad litem for children can be improved; and (f) result in changed protocols that affect actual practice. Finally, in recognition that these State task forces need not conduct every year a comprehensive assessment as detailed above, the Committee has proposed to permit the task forces to only have to undertake their law and policy review, evaluation, and recommendation requirements once every three years after a State has initially been found eligible for Federal assistance.

Community-based prevention grant

The Committee intends through the legislation to strengthen the Federal support for State-funded child abuse and neglect prevention programs by improving upon the administration of the grants at the Federal level and providing direction to State prevention efforts receiving Federal assistance.

In response to criticism from GAO and frustrations expressed by HHS in administering the challenge grant program of matching grants to States, the bill makes changes in the formula with the objective of making the program administration more efficient, as recommended by GAO.

As stated in the May 1991 report from GAO, "We found that about 26 percent of the funds used by States to apply for challenge grants came from trust funds and direct appropriations. However, many States applied using other funding mechanisms, including State social service programs, which accounted for 74 percent of State applications. This complicated grant administration because the Department * * * had to scrutinize these other funding mechanisms."

As stated by the Department of Health and Human Services, in a 1990 communication to challenge grant applicants, "The fundamental requirement for eligibility under this program is that the State established and maintained in the previous fiscal year a discrete funding mechanism for child abuse and neglect prevention only." The Committee finds this to be an appropriate definition of a children's trust fund. As the HHS communication goes on to point out, difficulty has arisen with States claiming matching funds for other State social service programs which may be related to the prevention of child abuse but are not even administered by the children's trust fund. According to HHS, "This flexibility has created undue burdens in preparation and review of applications, and has resulted in confusion and concerns expressed by a number of States about the equitable distribution of funds."

Consequently, the legislation deletes the phrase "or other funding mechanisms" from the statutory description of eligible State funds for Federal matching grants under the law to eliminate the confusion and administrative burden which has developed. In its place, the legislation would add "or dedicated appropriation", recognizing that it was never the intention of the challenge grant program to match State funds outside of a State children's trust fund, but that Federal matching grants would go to assist States which provide legislative appropriations in support of the broad range of child abuse and neglect prevention activities.

The bill maintains the matching grant approach of funding State prevention grants to provide States with the ability to leverage other public and private dollars for supporting prevention afforded by the Federal funds. At the same time, the Committee recognizes that some States with large child populations may not yet have developed a significant commitment on the part of State government to support child abuse prevention. Children in these States are disadvantaged by the existing formula. The bill, therefore, proposes a new formula by which half of a State's prevention grant is based on a match of State funds, with one Federal dollar matching every four State dollars, and half is based on the State's relative child per capita population.

In awarding Federal prevention grants, the Committee intends that, in matching State funds "made available" for child abuse and neglect prevention, the Department should recognize dollars deposited in a fund by a State where those moneys are used to build an endowment to support prevention activities, as well as dollars appropriated or otherwise generated by a State for direct awarding of grants to prevention programs.

Since the implementation of the challenge grant programs, Federal appropriations have been inadequate to fully meet the match authorized by the statute. With current funding levels, both State and Federal dollars combined, States are able to fund only a portion of community-based prevention efforts seeking State assistance—as few as eight percent of eligible applicants in some States. With the increase in authorized funding to $50 million annually proposed by the legislation, the Federal Government can help the States to better deliver the necessary resources to the local level. The Committee believes that support for prevention is the most effective weapon for combating child abuse, given the serious long-term repercussions of child abuse. Each case of child abuse costs at least $2,000 to $5,000 for an investigation and short-term treatment—significantly more when a child must be hospitalized or put in foster care. Other costs arise later. Overwhelming numbers of juvenile offenders, adolescent runaways, violent criminals, sexual offenders, and prostitutes report childhood histories of battering and exploitation.

In proposing an increase in authorized funding for the child abuse prevention grants, the Committee sets new requirements on States governing the distribution of the Federal funds. First, the bill requires that at least fifty percent of grant funds to a State be used to support community-based prevention programs. While this provision recognizes the essential thrust of grant-making activity by the children's trust funds from State to State, the Committee is aware that States also use the resources to support statewide programs, particularly in public education and training. For that reason, and in order not to disrupt State planning already in place, this provision would not become effective until Federal appropriations for prevention grants exceed $10 million.

By requiring that States demonstrate to HHS how they are working to coordinate State activities with local efforts, the bill seeks to promote, through the awarding of Federal prevention funds, better coordination of State and local efforts in child abuse and neglect prevention programs. The legislation also requires the reporting back to HHS the outcomes of services funded. The Committee does not intend to burden local prevention programs with the required, expensive, and involved evaluation models. The bill does require the provision of information such as numbers and kinds of individuals served, types of services offered, and outcomes which can be demonstrated. Prevention approaches that have not been evaluated must be tested. Other funds should be directed to support the necessary evaluations of community projects.

In order to improve upon the investment of non-Federal funding at the local level for child abuse prevention programs supported by Federal prevention grants, grantees are required to provide evidence of non-Federal assistance from public and private sources. The Committee hopes that this provision will encourage local contributions so that the community feels it has a stake in efforts to prevent child maltreatment.

Finally, the bill requires grantees to demonstrate the extent to which Federal funds are used to support child abuse and neglect prevention programs in underserved areas—rural and inner city populations which might lack access to family support services and other prevention approaches more widely available to other populations. In the case of program support to underserved areas, the bill would waive for three years the requirement that Federal funds be supplemented by local contributions, recognizing that underserved areas as such probably lack the financial and other resources needed to promote initiatives in preventing child abuse and neglect.

Families with children are the fastest growing segment of the homeless population; every day in the United States, an estimated 100,000 children are homeless. The unnecessary separation of children from their parents is one of the most devastating consequences of homelessness. Yet in communities around the country, children are placed in out-of-home care or cannot return home promptly because of housing problems—including homelessness.

Child maltreatment and homelessness

In 1990, Congress for the first time acknowledged that strong coordination between child welfare agencies and housing authorities can protect homeless children or children at risk of becoming homeless from abuse and neglect and help prevent the unnecessary separation of children from their families. Congress amended the CAPTA in Public Law 101-645 to create the Preventive Services Regarding Children of Homeless Families or Families at Risk of Homelessness programs to provide grants to public child welfare agencies, which are collaborating with housing agencies, to help prevent the initial or prolonged placement of children in out-of-home care due to homelessness or other housing problems.

Grant funds can be used to jointly train child protective service staff, child welfare staff, and staff working with homeless families on the connections between housing problems and out-of-home care and the resources available to assist families whose children are in or at risk of placement in out-of-home care. Other activities could include technical assistance to staff working with homeless families to help prevent child abuse and neglect and obtain necessary family support services; and a range of housing assistance to prevent family homelessness and help homeless families reestablish permanent housing in order to avoid unnecessary placement of children in out-of-home care. This program is the only Federal resource available to help family-serving agencies keep families intact when housing problems are threatening them with separation.

Child maltreatment and substance abuse

The Committee recognizes that child welfare agencies throughout the country are overwhelmed by drug-related abuse and neglect cases. In Connecticut, an estimated 65 percent of referrals on seriously abused children involve parental substance abuse. A recent study of substantiated abuse and neglect reports in Boston found substance abuse present in 64 percent of cases. Unfortunately, caseworkers are often too overburdened to provide these children with adequate attention and protection. Cases of child abuse and neglect involving a substance-abusing caretaker are complex and difficult to treat; traditional services are often resisted in these circumstances. The shortage of foster parents, particularly those equipped to care for special-needs children, means children who must be removed from their homes have no place to go.

The Committee is aware, furthermore, of the serious problem posed by infants exposed to alcohol and illicit drugs before birth. Drug-exposed infants, who are often difficult for the most experienced parents to handle, are often sent home with mothers unprepared to cope with their special needs. Children may find that their basic needs for food, safety, and shelter are secondary to their parents' addictions. These children are also at much higher risk for physical and sexual abuse and serious neglect.

Child Abuse Treatment Improvement Grants Program

The Committee has found that children who are abused or neglected are at risk for health, emotional, educational, and social development problems. Yet, services in abuse and neglect cases often are directed at protecting the child and focus mainly on the parents. Few services are directed at problems the child may be experiencing as a result of abuse and neglect or at the interaction between the parents and the child. This situation is particularly true of children in out-of-home care, who may lack continuity in health care and education. About two-thirds of all placements in out-of-home care are related to abuse or neglect. For many children, being removed from the home will not, in itself, solve the child's problems. Specific problems may not be identified because no assessment is given. Foster parents may not have the training needed to cope with problems that present themselves.

The legislation provides for a new grant program, the Child Abuse Treatment Improvement Grants Program, to fund innovative projects to address the needs of abused and neglected children. The Committee intends that these grants be used to demonstrate ways to better identify and address the problems (including health, educational, and social problems) abuse and neglected children experience, to better equip parents and out-of-home caregivers to respond to these problems, and to promote better interaction between the parent and the child. The Committee hopes that the projects funded will expand the child welfare system's ability to treat the effects of abuse and neglect on the child beyond simply supervising the child in the home or removing the child from the home. The Committee believes that, by improving the child's well-being, such a focus would help promote more lasting family preservation or reunification.

Emergency child abuse prevention

The Emergency Child Abuse Prevention Grants have helped child welfare agencies cope with the current crisis. Agencies receiving these grants are able to increase their staff and improve the quality of staff training. More foster and adoptive parents may be recruited, improving the likelihood that children who are removed from their homes are well cared for. The Committee hopes an increased number of grants will be offered—commensurate with the size and scale of local community-based programs.

B. FAMILY VIOLENCE

The Committee has made a series of changes in the Family Violence Prevention and Services Act (FVPSA) to increase public awareness and expand professional training, improve the general administration of the Act (e.g., distribution and allocation of funds, regulatory control), improve direct services offered to family violence victims and their children, and involve additional agencies to improve implementation and provision of services. All of these changes are meant to result in more comprehensive and effective services to victims of family violence.

These amendments are intended to address the following deficiencies in services to victims of family violence: (1) general ignorance on the part of service providers (e.g. police officers, judges, health professionals, mental health professionals) about family violence and how to intervene appropriately, (2) diversion of funds to unrelated services because of insufficiently clear language, (3) insufficient funds to maintain shelters, (4) inadequate services to assist family violence victims in the transition from the shelter to an independent life, (5) insufficient efforts to prevent family violence in future generations.

Even with improved laws in most States and the provision of emergency shelter to some women and their children, the vast majority of victims face courts, as well as social and health services providers that do not recognize the epidemic nature of family violence, how it affects provisions of services, or the dangers faced by its victims in their attempts to secure safety and freedom. Consequently, many of the laws, policies, or practices in these related arenas do not account for domestic violence and often place victims at increased risk.

One National and up to six "special issue" information and technical assistance resource centers would be established under the new law. The new language would incorporate the functions designated to the clearinghouse under the current Act, and add the functions of maintaining a central resource library as well as providing training and technical assistance services to public entities, state coalitions, and local service providers. The current clearinghouse has not been of optimal use to most of the States or programs providing family violence services; awareness of its existence and activities have been limited. The National Resource Center will be a private non-profit corporation and have demonstrated expertise in the issue. There are currently several national non-profit domestic violence organizations with the data bases and networking capabilities required to perform the amended functions under the new law.

The training and technical assistance amendment also establishes up to six special issue resource centers which would focus research and technical assistance expertise on some of the most difficult issues facing family violence victims and their dependents. These include such complex issues as the relationship between domestic violence and child abuse and the interventions of Child Protective Services in these cases; child custody issues involved in domestic violence cases; family violence as a public health issue and the response of health care professionals; and the effectiveness and coordination of the criminal justice response to this crime. In addition, the special issue resource centers are needed to research and highlight the problems victims encounter in these arenas, develop policy and intervention recommendations, and offer training and technical assistance to state and local programs attempting to implement solutions for the above-mentioned critical barriers to family safety. Funding for the national and the special issue resource centers would be limited to 5 percent of the total appropriation in order to ensure that the maximum funds possible be distributed to direct shelter and prevention efforts.

Without clarification regarding the expenditure of funds for family violence services, some States have allocated little to the priority areas intended under the Act, while others have devoted none to prevention efforts. A mechanism to ensure that state grant programs focus on family violence victims and their children is crucial to promote more effective, efficient, and comprehensive treatment. Although the scope of services available under this Act is limited, the nature of services for victims of family violence and their dependents is broadened so that victims will receive enhanced state of the art treatment and services to prevent further acts of violence against them and restore their lives to violence-free functioning.

New regulations remove unnecessary restrictions on States which impede their ability to effectively channel funding to the organizations that need it the most. The following examples demonstrate the need for state flexibility. A state, for instance, might determine that services for victims of domestic violence are sorely lacking or even non-existent in a particular region. This state may choose to devote a significant portion of its grant money to starting up a shelter in this region. Another example is a state which provides funding to a larger, umbrella organization which in turn provides a variety of direct services to battered women and their children. Limiting grant size encourages the growth of smaller, single issue organizations which might decrease overall efficiency and result in reduplication of programs. Finally, a State might determine that a particular type of service is greatly in need of expansion. If there is one entity in the State that has developed expertise in this area, providing one large grant to this entity for the development of materials and systems that can be used statewide would be the most efficient use of funding.

Also, it is important to note that there is currently no way of knowing whether or not the States are fulfilling the FVPSA requirement that they earmark the designated percentage of their FVPSA grants specified to fund immediate shelter and related assistance for victims of domestic violence. The assurances that the States submit to HHS merely state that they are meeting this requirement. The vast majority of performance reports submitted by the States do not include a breakdown of how FVPSA funds are spent within the State.

This Act was originally written as a demonstration act, but with reauthorization, the Committee has clearly stated its intent to provide on-going funds for the protection of family violence victims. A number of domestic violence programs will likely approach the $150,000 limit during the next FVPSA funding cycle and consequently be cut off from on-going support critical to protection of victims.

Moreover, FVPSA will soon enter into its sixth funding cycle. The vast majority of domestic violence programs that receive FVPSA grants are lodged at the third year level of a 65 percent matching fund required for sub-grantees. The incremental increase in matching funds was drafted with a four year authorization in mind. It no longer makes sense to freeze a subgrantee's matching funds requirement at such a steep level. This particularly disadvantages small and rural programs in poorer communities who have little access to other sources of funds. The Federal Victims of Crime Act (VOCA) which funds victim assistance programs requires a 20 percent cash or in-kind match from existing victim assistance programs and a 35 percent cash or in-kind match from new programs. This amendment is designed to make the matching requirements parallel with the related Federal victim assistance program, and more realistic for small and rural programs.

The current language also requires that a minimum of 50 percent in matching funds must come from private sources (cash or in-kind). In a number of the more rural States, the local communities have few private resources to support shelters or other social service programs, and much of the shelter's support comes from the State. This language restricts those funds from being used to meet the match requirement. In addition, the Federal regulations pertaining to matching funds are complex, and often limit the type of local funds that qualify for current match. The combination of these factors can dramatically limit the size of grant that a subgrantee can accept, again disadvantaging the smaller and rural programs. The recommended 25 percent "local share" language would make rural and small shelters eligible for more meaningful support under this Act.

In addition, the new authorization would increase the minimum size of the grant distributed to each State up to at least one percent of the total available or $200,000, whichever is less. The current minimum grant to a state of $50,000 was written when the original appropriation was $8.2 million. That minimum greatly disadvantages rural States. Even in the smallest and most rural States, $50,000 has very little impact on service delivery in that State, once it has been divided among 10 or more programs.

Money intended for victims of family violence has frequently been diverted to other services such as substance abuse treatment, spouse abuser treatment, child and elder abuse treatment, because the language has been insufficiently specific in the past. The related assistance is more clearly specified in this reauthorization so that much needed services, such as financial assistance, job skill training, legal assistance, police protection, child care, housing, and employment will be provided and reserved for victims.

In addition, the Act as currently written, authorizes the Secretary to grant 85 percent of the funding, with no specific amount of funding set aside for Indian Tribes. Since Indian Reservations cross State boundaries and are under Federal jurisdiction, they are not eligible for State funding and are dependent upon Federal support. Additionally, the critical need for social services on Indian Reservations, combined with the difficulty in procuring private funding, warrant this set-aside.

Recognizing the critical role played by the state domestic violence coalitions, the Committee has included a provision for their funding. These coalitions exist in 49 States and in the District of Columbia and provide invaluable roles in improving state services and legal protections available to family violence victims and their children. They coordinate the planning of services, training activities, and technical assistance.

In addition, state domestic violence coalitions establish Advisory Boards and networks among State leaders and service professionals to better coordinate changes in State law and policy. In some States such as Pennsylvania and Illinois, where the coalitions administer their State contracts, the coalitions have defined program methodology and have established state standards of service. There results a line of accountability for battered women that is maintained from state coalition through local programs to the battered women in the community. State domestic violence coalitions are the primary force behind improved services and laws for victims.

It is the intention of the Committee that, until such time as Section 317, Grants for State Domestic Violence Coalitions, receives its own appropriation as authorized in the bill, that 10 percent of the funds appropriated for the Family Violence Prevention and Services Act be distributed to State domestic violence coalitions in the manner specified in that Section. FVPSA funds will consequently be distributed in the following proportions: 70 percent for Grants to States, 10 percent for Grants to Indian Tribes; 10 percent for State Domestic Violence Coalitions; 5 percent for funding for Technical Assistance Centers; and 5 percent for Federal Administration.

C. ADOPTION OPPORTUNITIES

The Committee has strengthened the Adoption Opportunities Act to assure all children who would benefit by adoption—particularly children with special needs—will be found secure, loving homes. The reauthorization legislation includes enhanced authority for the recruitment of prospective adoptive families. It promotes professional leadership development, especially within the minority community, to unite minority children with families of similar ethnicity and culture. The bill provides for adoption training for professional agency staff and parents, and post legal adoption counseling and therapy services to help families cope with any problems that may arise. The Committee intends that once finalized, adoptive homes will be permanent, safe havens for the growth and development of children.

The Minority Children Placement program should continue to remove local barriers to same race placement (such as agencies which are not located in minority communities, a lack of minority agency heads and staff, culturally insensitive recruitment practices, and fees for adoption) by encouraging the development of minority-based agencies and programs supporting the new minority leadership and staff, by modeling culturally sensitive recruitment practices, and by eliminating fees for adoption. Minority-run programs funded through the Adoption Opportunities Act and programs such as those operated by Homes for Black Children in Detroit and the Institute for Black Parenting in Los Angeles have demonstrated that there is no shortage of same-race adoptive families for minority youngsters—only a lack of training and resources needed to identify families and unite them with children who need permanent homes.

Moreover, more children in substitute care are struggling with increasingly complex problems. Children have faced more severe trauma and abuse and stay in care longer, experiencing multiple placements. Also, the term "special needs" now includes a growing number of children who carry the added developmental burden of prenatal drug or alcohol addiction, or exposure to HIV infection in utero. Many could benefit greatly from the security and care provided by a permanent adoptive home, but they, and their adoptive families, require a more intensive mix of services in order to make a placement work for both the child and the adoptive family. Both pre- and post-adoption services are essential to recruit and retain homes for children in need.

Despite these difficult odds, however, the resources developed with Adoption Opportunities Act funds have aided not only in recruiting prospective adoptive families for minority and special needs children, but retaining these families as well. In reauthorizing the Adoption Opportunities Act, the Committee wishes to build on the past success of the Minority Children Placement and Post Legal Adoption Services programs in achieving stability and security for children.

Current reauthorization language stresses the ongoing recruitment of prospective adoptive families for children on a national level, through a national adoption information exchange system and the development of a national public awareness campaign. The legislation also authorizes the maintenance of a national resource center, whose functions would include promoting minority leadership in the adoption field and improving agency special needs adoption practices. Finally, the role of the Department of Health and Human Services role in providing technical assistance to grantees has been made explicit.

The costs of this bill fall within budget function 500.

Basis of estimate: S. 838, the Child Abuse Prevention and Treatment Act, authorizes appropriations through 1994 for all subsections except the Advisory Board on Child Abuse and Neglect, Grants for State Domestic Violence Coalitions, the National Center on Child Abuse and Neglect Center, and the Program for Educating Youth About Domestic Violence. Of these programs, S. 838 permanently authorizes the first three, and the latter is authorized to be appropriated at $200 thousand for 1992. The bill continues and increases authorizations of appropriations for the remaining Child Abuse, Domestic Violence, Adoption and Family Services programs. For the remaining programs in S. 838, there is a specific authorization for 1992 and an authorization at such sums as may be necessary in 1993 and 1994. We have estimated the 1993 and 1994 levels by inflating the stated 1992 level. The exceptions to this are Adoption Services, Adoption for Minorities, Post Legal Services for Special Needs Adoptions and Temporary Child Care/Crisis Nurseries programs, each of which are authorized a specific appropriation amount in each year.

There is one program that requires special treatment in the estimate. The Emergency Grant Program is authorized appropriations under current law at such sums as may be necessary for fiscal years 1991, 1992 and 1993. The funding level for 1991 remains unchanged. However, the bill authorizes appropriations for $40 million for 1992 and such sums as may be necessary for 1993 and 1994. The authorization levels for 1993 and 1994 reflect the difference between current law, under which the such sums authorization is calculated by inflating the 1991 appropriation level, and the new level proposed by S. 838. The new level is calculated to be the 1992 authorization level increased for projected inflation.

For the Advisory Board on Child Abuse and Neglect, in each fiscal year for which no appropriation is made no less than $1 million is required to be made available to the Board from the Department of Health and Human Services salaries and expenses accounts.

For all programs, estimated outlays assume full appropriation of authorizations and reflect the spending pattern of similar programs.

6. Pay-as-you-go considerations: Section 252 of the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985 sets up pay-as-you-go procedures for legislation affecting direct spending or receipts through 1995. Because this bill would not affect direct spending or receipts, there are no pay-as-you-go implications.

7. Estimated cost to State and local government: Payments for the Community-Based Prevention Grants may be made only in a fiscal year following the fiscal year in which any state has collected funds for child abuse and neglect prevention activities through a trust fund or other funding mechanism. For the Child Abuse Treatment Improvements Grant Program, the applicant entity is required to provide not less than 20 percent of the total amounts needed to pay the costs associated with the programs funded under this grant.

8. Estimate comparison: None.

9. Previous CBO estimate: None.

10. Estimate prepared by: Karen Watkins.

11. Estimate approved by: Charles E. Seagrove (for James L. Blum, Assistant Director for Budget Analysis).

VI. REGULATORY IMPACT STATEMENT

The Committee has determined that this bill will have little if any inflationary or regulatory impact.

VII. SECTION-BY-SECTION ANALYSIS

A. CHILD ABUSE

Section 103. Authorizes funds for three years ($1 million for fiscal year 1992) for the U.S. Advisory Board on Child Abuse and Neglect, within the Office of the Assistant Secretary for the Administration for Children and Families of the Department of Health and Human Services. The terms, duties, and method of appointment of Board members are defined.

Section 109. Expands the scope of support to States for improving judicial procedures by including instances of physical child abuse and neglect in addition to child sexual abuse—as well as sexual exploitation and cases of suspected child abuse or neglect fatalities.

Section 110. Authorizes funds for State Grants Program to support and improve State Child Protective Service (CPS) systems. Specifically, grant support is meant to improve State's CPS system in one or more of the following: intake and screening of reports; investigation of reports; case management; general system enhancement (e.g. automation, training, etc.); innovative research and demonstration grants to States in child abuse and neglect prevention and treatment programs.

A new requirement is the submission of State grant plans specifying the area or areas of the State CPS system to be improved, providing data on current system capacity, and indicating how funds will be used to make improvements.

Section 121. Authorizes funds for the Community-Based Prevention Grants which focus prevention challenge grants to support community-based programs to assist State children's trust funds in funding local child abuse and neglect prevention activities. An allotment formula (50 percent distributed on a child per capita population formula and 50 percent as a match to money in a state's Children's Trust Fund) is defined. Grant requirements include that: at least 50 percent of grants go to broad range of community-based child abuse and neglect prevention projects; coordination with other State and local prevention efforts exist; States demonstrate outcomes of funded prevention programs; Federal funds be supplemented at the local level with non-Federal funds; the extent to which grant support goes to community-based activities in underserved areas be demonstrated.

Section 131. Authorizes funds for preventive services for children of homeless families or families at risk of homelessness. Provisions are defined for preventive services for children of homeless families, with authority for housing assistance to prevent placement of children in out-of-home care.

Section 401. Authorizes funds for Child Abuse Treatment Improvement Grants and establishes a new program of grants to State and local agencies for treatment services to abused and neglected children in out-of-home care designed to promote reunification with their families.

CHILD ABUSE PREVENTION AND TREATMENT AND ADOPTION ACT OF 1978

[SEC. 201. The Congress hereby finds that the welfare of thousands of children in institutions and foster homes and disabled infants with life-threatening conditions may be in serious jeopardy and that some such children are in need of placement in permanent, adoptive homes; that many thousands of children remain in institutions or foster homes solely because of legal and other barriers to their placement in permanent, adoptive homes; that the majority of such children are of school age, handicapped, or both; that adoption may be the best alternative for assuring the healthy development of such children; that there are qualified persons seeking to adopt such children who are unable to do so because of barriers to their placement; and that, in order both to enhance the stability and love of the child's home environment and to avoid wasteful expenditures of public funds, such children should not have medically indicated treatment withheld from them, nor be maintained in foster care or institutions when adoption and families for them can be found. It is, therefore, the purpose of this title to facilitate the elimination of barriers to adoption and to provide permanent and loving home environments for children who would benefit by adoption, particularly children with special needs; including disabled infants with life-threatening conditions, by—

[(1) promoting the establishment of model adoption legislation and procedures in the States and territories of the United States in order to eliminate jurisdictional and legal obstacles to adoption; and

[(2) providing a mechanism for the Department of Health and Human Services to—

[(A) promote quality standards for adoption services, preplacement, post-placement, and post-legal adoption counseling, and standards to protect the rights of children in need of adoption;

[(B) coordinate with other Federal departments and agencies, including the Bureau of the Census, to provide for a national adoption and foster care information data-gathering and analysis system; and

(2) increasingly children entering foster care have complex problems which require intensive services;

(3) an increasing number of infants are born to mothers who did not receive prenatal care, are born addicted to alcohol and other drugs, and exposed to infection with the etiologic agent for the human immunodeficiency virus, are medically fragile, and technology dependent;

(4) the welfare of thousands of children in institutions and foster homes and disabled infants with life-threatening conditions may be in serious jeopardy and some such children are in need of placement in permanent, adoptive homes;

(5) many thousands of children remain in institutions or foster homes solely because of local and other barriers to their placement in permanent, adoptive homes;

(6) the majority of such children are of school age, members of sibling groups or disabled;

(7) currently one-half of children free for adoption and awaiting placement are minorities;

(8) adoption may be the best alternative for assuring the healthy development of such children;

(9) there are qualified persons seeking to adopt such children who are unable to do so because of barriers to their placement; and,

(10) in order both to enhance the stability and love of the child's home environment and to avoid wasteful expenditures of public funds, such children should not have medically indicated treatment withheld from them nor be maintained in foster care or institutions when adoption is appropriate and families can be found for such children.

(b) PURPOSE.—It is the purpose of this title to facilitate the elimination of barriers to adoption and to provide permanent and loving home environments for children who would benefit from adoption, particularly children with special needs, including disabled infants with life-threatening conditions, by—

(1) promoting model adoption legislation and procedures in the States and territories of the United States in order to eliminate jurisdictional and legal obstacles to adoption; and
