This packet of materials was developed for workshops provided to teams of school counselors and administrators for the purpose of developing knowledge and competencies in the delivery of a comprehensive, sequential, developmental guidance program. Section I contains a rationale, definition, and description of program components. In section II developmental student competencies are discussed. Included in this section is information about personal and social development, career and vocational development, and educational development. Section III provides sample role descriptions for the elementary, middle school, and high school counselor, and school administrator. In section IV resource organization and management are discussed. Consideration is given to the involvement of others and local district process. Section V includes information about program evaluation. A self study form and counselor evaluation form are included. Section VI examines the assessment of student needs. Specific concerns, categories of needs, and senior high needs assessment are discussed. A student concerns questionnaire and a teacher-administrator-counselor survey are also provided. Section VII provides sample forms for small group evaluation, an informational letter about groups, a small group sign-up sheet, a lesson plan design, and public relations material. (LLL)

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

The state of Iowa has recently established a new set of standards mandating counseling services for all students. These standards also emphasize the importance of a comprehensive, sequential developmental guidance program to be offered to these students.

In order to successfully implement and maintain such a program, it is imperative that school administrators understand the implications of the mandate and how these new standards impact the guidance program, as well as how the role of the counselor is affected at all grade levels.

Counselors must also be clear about the new concepts involved in a comprehensive developmental approach. Because program delivery is dependent on administrative support, the counselor/administrator team concept is an essential component of a quality guidance program.

In conjunction with the American Association for Counseling and Development Foundation, the University of Northern Iowa Department of Educational Administration and Counseling is delivering a workshop in three different locations to teams of counselors and administrators for the purpose of developing knowledge and competencies in the delivery of a comprehensive, sequential, developmental guidance program.

The project directors, Ann Vernon and Dick Strub, would like to acknowledge the Iowa Association for counseling and Development and the School Administrators of Iowa for their support for this project. Materials included in this informational packet were adapted from the work of Dr. Norm an Gysbers at the University of Missouri; the Indiana State Plan for Developmental School Counseling Program; the Iowa K-12 Career Guidance Curriculum Guide for Student Development; Dr. Ann Vernon's contributions through the AEA 6 and 7 Developmental Guidance Curriculum Writing Project; and numerous practicing counselors throughout Iowa who have contributed their ideas.
Children are growing up in an increasingly complex society, characterized by new demands and pressures and necessitating new understandings and competencies in order to adjust. Because many of the major events which affect children's lives are out of their control, they often feel powerless and insecure. The increase in childhood stress, depression and suicide is indicative of the difficulty many young people experience in trying to cope with contemporary issues and problems.

In the past, all children have at some time in their development wrestled with self-knowledge and decision-making skills, interpersonal relationship issues and questions related to one's future. Today these developmental aspects are more difficult, due in part to a changing society: (a) Children today are living in a less stable society in which roles and relationships are not as clearly defined as they once were. "Who am I?" becomes a highly relevant question for young people as they search to become more aware of their personal characteristics, values and behaviors. (b) Decision making is more complex given that there are more options. Advancements in science, medicine and technology have resulted in more choices, products and ideas which are often times confusing and present challenges which necessitate additional guidance. (c) Interpersonal relationships issues are different today and require a new set of understandings and skills. We are now a highly mobile society, which brings with it a certain amount of depersonalization and isolationism. Family structures have changed dramatically in the past two decades, and more and more children are experiencing traumatic and unstable interpersonal relationships due to family stress, violence, or alcoholism. (d) Thanks to technology, a multitude of new jobs have been created and other jobs have become obsolete in a matter of a few years. There are many more choices open to young people, and it is highly likely that they will be assuming a number of roles in their lifetime. Skills to make these transitions are necessary. Understanding the work-leisure connection and role as worker, parent, partner is critical and more complex than in previous generations.

Given these conditions, it is critical that we provide children with opportunities to "master" these tasks as they progress through life. A comprehensive guidance program is recommended as a systematic approach to equip students to master these stages of development in the personal-social, life planning and educational areas.

A comprehensive guidance program is based on the notion that all students need assistance in completing the developmental tasks necessary to achieve a sense of personal fulfillment and lead a satisfying life in a contemporary society. Furthermore, if all students are exposed throughout school to experiences designed to enhance their development, many of the developmental or situational crises can be prevented or minimized because students will have better understandings and skills with which to confront difficulties they may experience.
Comprehensive developmental guidance programs are goal oriented, accountable and pro-active. They include planned activities with primary emphasis on prevention. Developmental stages are systematically addressed, and the program structure anticipates personal, social, career and educational needs at various levels of development. Traditional programs, in contrast, are unplanned, unstructured, focus on crisis rather than prevention, are more reactive, and consist of isolated, ancillary functions.

ASSUMPTIONS

A K-12 comprehensive guidance program is based on the following assumptions:

... is for all students.
... is an integral part of the total educational process; supports goals of the total educational program.
... is not a fragmented, isolated function.
... is a team approach; the counselor is not the counseling program.
... is primarily developmental and preventative in nature but contains a remedial emphasis as well.
... is a planned, sequential program to assist students in healthy development.
... includes a comprehensive set of student goals and competencies independent of the total educational program.
... contains specified program components and specific activities designed to achieve competencies at each grade level.
... provides for accountability and is evaluated.
... provides consultation and coordination to staff, parents and community to assist in implementation of competencies.

BENEFITS

For Students:

1. Promotes knowledge and assistance in career exploration and development.
2. Develops decision-making skills.
3. Increases knowledge of self and how to relate effectively to others.
4. Broadens knowledge of our changing world.
5. Increases opportunities for counselor-student interaction.

For Parents:

1. Provides support for parents regarding their child's educational development.
2. Develops a system for a child's long-range planning.
3. Increases opportunities for parent/counselor interaction.
4. Enables parents to obtain resources when needed.

For Teachers:
1. Encourages positive, supportive working relationships.
2. Entails a team effort to address competencies.
3. Enhances the role of the counselor as a resource person.

For Administrators:
1. Provides a program structure with specific content.
2. Provides a means of evaluating school counseling program efforts (accountability).
3. Enhances the image of the school counseling program in the community.

For Boards of Education:
1. Provides rationale for implementing a comprehensive counseling program in the school system.
2. Provides program information to district patrons.
3. Provides ongoing information about student competencies attained through school counseling program efforts.
4. Provides a basis for allocating funds for school counseling programs.

For School Counselors:
1. Provides a clearly defined role and function.
2. Eliminates noncounseling functions.
3. Offers the opportunity to reach all students.
4. Provides a tool for program management.
5. Outlines clearly defined responsibilities for specific student competencies.

For Student Services Staff:
1. Provides school psychologists, social workers, and other student services staff with a clearly defined role and function of the counselor.
2. Clarifies areas of overlapping responsibilities.
3. Encourages a positive team approach which enhances cooperative working relationships.

For Business, Industry, and Labor:
1. Provides increased opportunity for collaboration among counselors and business, industry, and labor communities.
2. Enhances the role of the counselor as a resource person.
3. Increases opportunities for business, industry, and labor to participate actively in the total school program.
4. Provides a potential work force with decision-making skills, pre-employment skills, and increased worker maturity.

DEFINITION

The Developmental Approach

Comprehensive school counseling forms a partnership with the instructional program. Developmental by design, it includes sequentially presented activities and responsive services which address student growth and development as priority goals. Collaborative in practice, the developmental approach to school counseling focuses on the attainment of student competencies which accommodate the personal-social, educational, and career development needs of all students at each grade level.

The Personal-Social Domain

This dimension consists of the competencies which concentrate on successfully relating to others as individuals and in groups. The focus of intervention in this area has to do with developing personal-social skills which ensure healthy development.

The Career Development Domain

This category includes the competencies which target a positive attitude toward work and the development of skills which will enable students to make a successful transition from school to the world of work and from job to job across the life-career span.

The Educational Domain

Activities clustered in the area are designed to help students achieve educational success in each learning situation. Competencies include the "new basics" necessary for survival in this age of information and high technology: decision-making, initial thinking, information and one's time.
TRADITIONAL VS. DEVELOPMENTAL

The new emphasis in guidance programming is developmental vs. traditional. The following chart illustrates the comparison:

STRUCTURAL COMPONENTS

Program Definition and Philosophy

Local school districts are encouraged to develop their own definition of a comprehensive counseling program.

Advisory Council

An advisory council provides support, offers advice, reviews present activities, and encourages new activities to meet the goals of the comprehensive counseling program. Advisory councils may include school staff, parents, school board, human services agency personnel, students, and business and community leaders representing Pre-kindergarten through Grade 12. It may be organized at the district or individual building level. Responsibilities of an advisory council may be assumed by or organized within an existing group such as:

1. School or district-wide advisory council.
2. School or district-wide vocational advisory council.
3. Counseling program advisory council.
4. Combination of the above.

Budget

An adequate counseling budget shall be established to reflect program needs. The counseling staff shall be included in budget planning. Counselors should provide information regarding funds needed for:

- Supplies, materials
- Equipment, i.e., computer
- Media, i.e., films, videos

A counselor's professional commitment includes maintaining current knowledge of funding sources, i.e., local, state, and federal. Some sources for funding include: Chapter I and Chapter II Grants, Carl Perkins Vocational Educational Grants, Job Training Partnership Act (JTPA), At-Risk Student Program Grants, and business and industry funding.

Counseling Program Facilities

A counseling center should be established in each school to implement a comprehensive counseling program. The counseling center needs to be large enough to adequately house personnel, resources, and equipment. The center should also be accessible to all students including those with handicaps. The minimum requirements for a counseling center are:
1. A well organized and displayed collection of counseling resources, materials, and equipment.
2. Private workspace, properly equipped, soundproofed, and appropriately located.
3. Adequate space for individual, small, and large group use.
4. Adequate and secure storage space.

Counseling Resources

Counseling program resources should be available for each of the four program components: counseling curriculum, individual planning, responsive services, and system support. Assessing resources requires a systematic and thorough review of the current counseling program. The following resources are essential to the implementation of a counseling program.

Equipment/Materials - Inventory school equipment and materials that may be used in the counseling program. Staff members should indicate any new equipment and materials that may be needed to add to the school district's new annual budget.

Library/Media Resources - Work with librarians to establish career, vocational, and guidance centers within the state and local libraries.

Staff Expertise - Identify the special skills of staff members that may be helpful in carrying out counseling program activities.

Counseling Resources - Identify state and local resources that can be used in carrying out the counseling program, such as mental health agencies, community service clubs, ethnic societies, local businesses, job services, chambers of commerce, labor unions, and others.

Staffing Patterns

An organizational chart of district counseling personnel identifies and shows the relationships among:

1. School counselors (full-time and part-time).
2. Clerical staff.
3. Administrative personnel.
4. Paraprofessional aids supervised by certified counselors.
5. Other support personnel.

School counselors shall have State Licensure.

Employ school counselors at both elementary and secondary schools at appropriate student-counselor ratios.
It is the position of the American School Counselors Association (ASCA) that the counselor/student ratio be determined by considering the major factor of student growth and development. It is recommended that school districts implement the goals and objectives of a comprehensive and developmental guidance program for students of all levels - kindergarten through twelfth grade. While published reports, such as High School by Ernest Boyer, recommend an ideal counselor/student ratio of 1 to 100, ASCA is aware that each school district is unique; what may be an ideal caseload in one school district may be untenable in others. ASCA maintains that implementation of a comprehensive guidance and counseling program meeting the developmental needs of students may be the primary determinant with the ratio being 1 to 300 or less.

COMPONENTS—OVERVIEW

Four program components exist in relation to three broad categories of student goals upon which the program is based:

I. Personal/Social Development  II. Career/Vocational Development  III. Educational Development

The program components provide a structure for the program and identify specific functions which should be provided under each category:

COMPONENT I: PSYCHOLOGICAL EDUCATION

This component serves as the core of a comprehensive developmental program. Based on the student goals, specific competencies (objectives) are identified for each grade level and guidance lessons are conducted in the classroom or small groups with all students. Parent education and staff development programs are designed and delivered based on topics designed to help parents and staff aid children in achieving student goals.

COMPONENT II: RESPONSIVE SERVICES

This component exists in order to provide specific help to students who are having difficulty mastering developmental tasks. Examples of counselor functions in this component would include individual or small group counseling, implementation of a crisis intervention plan, or referral to outside agencies such as mental health, juvenile probation, testing services, treatment programs, etc.

COMPONENT III: EDUCATIONAL PLANNING/ASSESSMENT

The purpose of this component is to identify functions which enable the student to plan his/her educational and career development opportunities. Scheduling, testing, financial aid, orientation, academic advising and postsecondary planning are functions which fall under this category.
COMPONENT IV: PROGRAM MANAGEMENT

Program management is an important component in relation to the successful implementation of the other components. Under program management are included such functions as developing and maintaining good public relations programs, working with an advisory committee to help keep the program relevant, program management, articulation and evaluation, staff development relative to the purposes of the guidance program, and program coordination.

Relative to each of the activities identified in the components, the counselor may function in the following roles:

COUNSELOR: One to one or small group or classroom interactions with students; may be preventative or remedial in nature in order to help students achieve their goals or overcome barriers in pursuing goals.

CONSULTANT: Works with staff, parents, administration or agencies relative to helping students achieve goals.

COORDINATOR: Works with agencies, staff, parents and the community to coordinate the overall activities identified in the components relative to student goals.

The focus of this program, while primarily developmental and preventative, also responds at the secondary (early intervention) and tertiary (remedial) levels. In addition, while the counselor is the "conductor" of the program, many of the functions identified in the components will be conducted by other school personnel.
Classroom Guidance

Classroom guidance is designed for all students. The purpose is to teach social, emotional, and behavioral concepts that students can use to help them deal successfully with normal, developmental issues such as developing a realistic self-concept, getting along with others, learning to make decisions, or setting goals. In addition, the concepts become "tools" that they can use when they encounter problems that are more serious in nature. Thus while the primary emphasis in classroom guidance is preventative, application of the learnings to more serious problems is also an outcome.

Classroom guidance consists of a series of lessons designed to teach the following concepts:

Self Acceptance: assessing individual strengths/weaknesses; developing awareness of self.

Emotional Maturity: learning a feeling vocabulary; learning positive ways to express feelings; learning where feelings come from; understanding how feelings can change and how they vary in intensity; learning the connection between feelings and behavior.

Interpersonal Relationships: learning positive interpersonal relationship skills; learning positive ways to communicate with others; learning conflict resolution skills.

Decision Making Skills: learning to generate and assess alternatives; learning to consider multiple factors in making a decision; learning to assess the impact of decisions, long and short term.

Behavior: distinguishing between appropriate and inappropriate behavior; learning how to control behavior; learning positive coping behaviors; learning the connection between feelings and behavior.

Personal Safety: learning about healthy/unhealthy touch; learning about strangers; learning about sexuality; learning how to ask for help and where to get it.

These general concepts should be presented through a sequential curriculum which is designed to address different aspects of these concepts at each grade level. Lessons should be developmentally sequenced so that the concepts build on each other. Each lesson would contain a specific objective, a short stimulus activity designed to involve students in the concepts presented, and follow-up questions which allow students to share what they have learned and to apply the concepts personally.

It is recommended that classroom guidance lessons be conducted weekly for elementary and intermediate students, a 30 minute time block is adequate. For secondary students, a 45 minute period is recommended. While the guidance counselor may be involved in doing some of the classroom work, it is preferable that teachers be trained so that they can conduct these lessons. The counselor serves as a coordinator and works with faculty in developing materials or selecting a commercial package which meets the objectives of the district.

Small Developmental Groups

Developmental groups achieve essentially the same purpose as classroom guidance in that the emphasis is on prevention: exposing students to emotional education concepts which they can apply to normal developmental problems. The advantage of the small group approach is that concepts can be personalized more effectively and students can be more involved in the discussion.

Generally these groups are organized around topics such as: interpersonal relationships, self-acceptance, feelings, behavior management, coping skills, etc. A structured lesson such as that used in classroom guidance is usually presented, but more emphasis on discussing and personalizing the concepts occurs.

These groups are normally led by the counselor or perhaps co-facilitated with a teacher who has had training in group process/dynamics. Group sessions may range from 30-50 minutes. Students may volunteer for these groups or the counselor may routinely involve students from a given class in a series of small group sessions. The number of students per group ranges from 6-10, and groups usually last 6-8 weeks.

Career Guidance

The purpose of career guidance is to help students assess what their career aspirations are and to learn skills which will enable them to function effectively in the workplace.

Many of the concepts presented in classroom guidance are important components for a career guidance program: self awareness, interpersonal relationship skills, decision making skills, and understanding feelings and behavior. In addition, students need to be exposed to the following: knowledge about careers, requirements, rewards/benefits; assessing individual strengths and matching them with job requirements; learning about leisure time/interests; goal setting; lifestyle options, and clarifying interests and attitudes towards work.
A career guidance program should be comprehensive, with specific concepts that all students are exposed to. In addition to the social/emotional/behavioral concepts included in classroom guidance lessons, additional focus through classrooms or small groups must include exposure to the previously mentioned concepts. In addition, career fairs which expose students to a multitude of career options can be coordinated and teachers can integrate career guidance concepts into their curriculum by discussing career options in specific subject matter areas.

Parent Education

Because children and adolescents are part of a family system, many of the problems they manifest often need to be dealt within conjunction with the family. Furthermore, counselors can promote the prevention concept by teaching parents skills such as communication, behavior management, and characteristics of developmental stages. Counselors may work with parents on an individual basis, with the child and other members of the family, or in educative or support groups.

If working individually, the parent is usually consulted with by phone or in person relative to a concern which is initiated by the school or by the parent. For example, a parent may call the counselor and express concern that her/his child isn’t able to get to sleep at night and has nightmares. The counselor might suggest some things that the parent could try at home and might also see the child individually to discuss the issue. Frequent contact with the parent, and their participation in applying interventions, facilitates the problem solving process.

In other cases, communication problems exist, and the counselor can facilitate interaction between parents and child to clear up misconceptions and misunderstandings.

Parent groups should also be conducted on a regular basis for the purpose of helping parents develop parenting skills. These groups could be conducted in several ways: (a) an on-going group consisting of 6-10 weekly sessions; (b) periodic topical meetings; (c) support groups.

On-going groups would consist of a group of ten to fifteen parents who would meet for purposes of support and to receive information about discipline, communication, developmental stages of children, etc. Parents could volunteer or be asked to join the group. Counselors can develop their own materials or use existing packaged programs. Groups of this nature generally meet needs of all parents who want more information on how to improve parenting skills. The focus is on prevention.

Topical meetings might be held monthly or less frequently, and would be open groups, available to all parents who are interested in a particular topic. Parents could be surveyed as to what programs might be relevant. Suggestions include helping children develop positive attitudes and responsible behavior, helping children handle stress, living (happily) with teens, etc. These meetings can be conducted by the counselor or the counselor can coordinate a series of outside speakers to address the group.

Support groups are designed for parents who have a common concern such as: learning disabled children, gifted children, children whose parents are divorced or separated, etc. Parents for these groups may volunteer or be invited to join. There may be less structure than in the on-going groups with the preventative focus, and the primary purpose is to allow parents with similar concerns the opportunity to share feelings and learn ways to help themselves and their children with these issues.

Staff Inservice

Because counselors are not the "counseling program," it is important to work with staff in developing their skills in working with children. By doing this, more people are available to listen to children and to be sensitive to specific ways to respond to behavior and feelings.

Counselors could meet monthly with staff (instructional and non-instructional) to share information about such things as: positive discipline techniques; ways to facilitate self-concept development throughout the school environment; effective communication strategies; conflict management techniques; helping children become better decision makers; stages of grief/loss; etc. The purpose of these sessions is to promote positive interaction with students. Topics should parallel guidance objectives.

Sessions of this nature can be informal discussions or there can be a more specific presentation. By working together in this manner, there is more involvement by everyone in the counseling process.

II. RESPONSIVE SERVICES

Crisis Counseling

Crisis counseling is defined here as counseling students in situations that require immediate attention and/or interventions. Some examples that would fit this classification are: threats of suicide; child abuse; a tragic event; severe emotional outbursts; a severe family upheaval; or the death of a student, faculty member, or loved one.

Counselors need to possess skills that allow them to assist students in processing these crises both on an immediate and long term basis. They may function as a one to-one counselor or as a small support group facilitator. Consultation skills and knowledge of appropriate referral sources is important in these circumstances.

School Crisis Intervention Plan

Certain tragic events may create a need for the school staff to have a building-wide plan for addressing the crisis. A serious car accident, the death of a student(s) or faculty member, or a community disaster may create a very serious situation that is best dealt with by having a predetermined set of procedures to follow. Teams made up of school personnel and outside resource persons need to be trained in advance so that students and staff needs can be met in this very traumatic situation.

Problem Centered Individual Counseling

The purpose of ongoing personal growth and problem centered counseling in the school is to help students focus on acceptance of self, decision making, effective communication and the development of problem solving skills.

The counselor provides an accepting, non-judgmental atmosphere in which the students may discuss concerns and issues as they arise in his or her life.

Examples of concerns that students may present to the counselor deal with: peers, academics, substance abuse, family relationships, behavior problems, interpersonal relationships, self concept, and career goals and options.

Through ongoing counseling, the student will develop the confidence in self as well as strategies to be used in meeting similar issues in the future.

Referral

Purpose: A counselor will refer to community agencies and other resource services when the typical parent consultation, classroom, individual and small group interventions prove ineffective or it is apparent that more extended and in depth services are needed.

When this course of action is being considered, the counselor will make available to the student's family information and possible alternatives for support groups, family therapy, as well as other appropriate services available in the community or area.

Staff/Parent Consultation

The purpose of staff/parent consultation is to allow the school and family to share and discuss information to enhance and plan the developmental progress of the student. This service may be initiated by the parent, counselor, or a staff member.
The counselor functions as a coordinator of the staff/parent consultation. Consultation may be in a formal or an informal setting. Informal, non-scheduled dialogue may occur between staff, counselor or parents by phone or at opportune times during the day. Formal consultations are scheduled and may include support staff, parents and administrators. A written plan of action addressing the student's needs and rationale for positive change will be formulated. A time line will likely be put into place to monitor student progress involving staff, parents and counselor.

Problem Centered Small Group Counseling

The purpose of problem centered or specific issue small group counseling is to meet the immediate needs of students and give them support regarding this concern. Groups may be made up of students with similar problems affecting their lives. The size of these groups may vary, but should be kept small (5-10) to aid in communication among members. Duration of meetings will also vary, but would be based on actual resolution of the concerns involved.

Below are student problems that may require immediate attention and support through small group counseling.

1. Divorce
2. Peer interaction problems
3. Lack of social skills
4. Death and dying or loss situations
5. Conflict resolution among students
6. New student orientation
7. Family conflicts
8. Student/parent conflicts
9. Student/teacher conflicts
10. Student behavior problems
11. Other personal problems

Participants in these groups may all share the same problem in which case the members may openly discuss issues and concerns relative to this particular topic. The counselor may choose to use more specifically structured activities to facilitate discussion and resolution of these same issues. If curriculum materials are used, they are selected with the needs of these particular students in mind.

Groups may also be organized for students who do not share a specific topical concern. In these groups, which are more open ended, students assist each other deal with problems which have arisen during the week. Some structured activities may be introduced as appropriate to the concerns being discussed.
III. EDUCATIONAL PLANNING/ASSESSMENT

Testing Assessment and Interpretation

The purpose of assessment relates to the reality that teachers, counselors, and administrators need several types of information about students. They may need to know about student cognitive and scholastic abilities, their interests, their achievement, and their concerns. In a school context, there are usually many different goals and purposes for a testing program; information is needed for many reasons, and many different people are involved in the process. Here are some of the possible goals of a school testing program:

1. Identify the readiness of kindergarten and first grade students.
2. Determine whether students have mastered the basic and essential skills required by the school system.
3. Placement of individuals in educational programs.
4. Identify students with special needs.
5. Evaluate the curriculum and specific programs of study.
6. Help individuals make educational and vocational decisions.
7. Assess the cognitive skills and scholastic aptitude of individual students.
8. Measure achievement in specific courses and subject areas.

Interpretation of Test Results

It is obvious that if a school district formally tests students in areas such as cognitive ability, achievement, interests, aptitudes, personality types, etc., that they have a responsibility to interpret the scores to students and parents. Close attention to the age and maturity of the students must be given in deciding how and to whom the results will be interpreted. Proper interpretation requires recognition of the fact that while many tests do provide accurate estimates, they do not measure with the same precision that a ruler or yardstick does.

Intelligent interpretation requires knowledge of the test in question and how it can best be interpreted to students and/or parents. Even if various facets of the testing program were explained initially, the examiner should review for students and/or parents, using nontechnical language, the purposes of testing. Actual test results might be visually presented through graphs to help the students/parents understand. Reports need to be comprehensible as well as informational. In reporting specific types of scores, the examiner should be sure that all understand the types of scores being discussed. They should be told the limitations of the tests and some basic bias that might operate in the situation.

While counselors may have some limited course work in assessment, they basically have no more expertise than classroom teachers in this area. Norm referenced achievement tests and performance or criterion based tests, as well as learning style assessment, are perhaps best interpreted by classroom teachers. Counselors would likely be involved in the reporting and interpretation of scores related to interest, career decision making, and post high school educational placement are perhaps best handled by people with special training.

Financial Aid

The purpose of the counselor’s involvement in this process is to Orient and acquaint parents and students with the financial aid process. This is accomplished through individual and group counseling as well as more general presentations.

The counselor also assists students with how to carry out a search for grants, scholarships, and other financial aid opportunities. Students need to be informed of criteria used in the selection of the recipients for scholarships and grants.

- grade point average
- rank in class
- test scores
- citizenship
- activities

Throughout this process the counselor serves as a resource person for students and parents. The responsibility for filing forms, meeting deadlines, seeking references, etc., lies with the individual student.

Postsecondary Plans—Placement

Purpose: Counselors have a major role in helping students make decisions regarding placement educational level, into special programs, and into postsecondary education or employment. Follow up studies may be conducted to help determine overall student satisfaction with the total educational program.

Examples of Activities Related to Postsecondary Placement:

- Orientation of all students to the next level.
- Assisting students with selection of elective courses appropriate for the student’s interests, achievement, and aspirations.
- Providing information and assistance to those filling out applications for admission, jobs or financial aid.
- Conducting exit interviews and follow-up studies.
- Filling out yearly placement information gathered by the Department of Education.
- Coordination of placement interviews with postsecondary school representatives, employees, Job Service of Iowa, and military personnel.
- Coordinating and writing recommendations for students as they apply for higher level education, scholarships, or employment.
Advisor-Advisee Program

The purpose of the advisor-advisee component of the guidance program may vary from one school district to another. It has outstanding potential for delivering affective education experiences for middle and secondary school students. It may also be the best concept for carrying out an academic advising program for these same students.

The delivery of affective education activities for all students can be greatly enhanced with a much broader base of involved faculty through a well planned and coordinated advisor-advisee program. The counselor(s)' coordination of a planning team of teachers and administrators can deliver an articulated and sequential developmental program that addresses the personal, social, life planning, and educational needs of students.

An academic or educational advising program that draws upon the expertise of the teaching faculty, administrators, and counselors can be exceedingly successful in providing a more effective and efficient system for reporting academic achievement, helping students and parents make appropriate decisions regarding the selection of courses and registration. This type of program necessitates strong coordination from the counselor(s) and administration with adequate inservice for teacher/advisors in order that they may carry out objective and effective advising in the areas of course selection, test and academic achievement interpretation, schedule changes, and in-school placement.

The short and long term benefits of this program are that secondary counselors will have a significantly greater amount of opportunity to carry out the well defined roles identified in the state mandated K-12 comprehensive, sequential developmental guidance program that is an integral part of the total educational process. An advisor-advisee program addresses directly the concept that guidance is a cooperative effort, a team approach that emphasizes that the counselor alone is not the guidance and counseling program of the school.

Scheduling - Course Planning

Purpose: Counselors often play a major role in scheduling and course or program planning for secondary students because they have access to information regarding the world of work and postsecondary education requirements.

Counselors may coordinate or facilitate some of the following example activities in conjunction with faculty and administration:

- Advisor-Advisee Program
- Registration booklet - course guide
- Homeroom or class informational meetings along with parent meetings regarding:
graduation requirements
occupational and career trends postsecondary entrance requirements

- 8th grade - create a four year plan
- System for follow up with students
- Schedule changes

The desired outcome of these efforts is that students and parents will be able to make appropriate educational choices to facilitate and student's personal and career plans.

Orientation

The purpose of orientation is to familiarize parents and students with: facilities, procedures, services, curriculum credit requirements, policies, extracurricular activities and special programs. An orientation program will ease the transition from home to school, from elementary school to middle/junior high school, from middle/junior high school to high school, and new/transfer students to their new setting.

Some of the orientation activities will include:

Kindergarten/Elementary
In school orientation for parents and students to: meet teacher(s), counselor(s), and principal(s); tour building; readiness testing; receive information on needed materials and transpiration; and discuss parent concerns.

Middle/Junior High School
In school student/parent orientation to: tour facilities; review curriculum and schedules; meet counselor, principal, and teachers; review handbooks; fee schedule; review extracurricular policies; review materials needed for transition; group-building activities; and discuss parent concerns.

High School
In school orientation for: curriculum and course content presentations; extracurricular considerations; review handbooks; review graduation requirements, four-year schedule considerations; parent night/day, tour of facilities; fee schedule.

New Students/Transfer Student
Individual orientation for parent and student to: meet counselor, teachers, principal; tour facilities; review special policies; check health records; personal interview counselor/principal; provide student handbook; course offerings handbook; school map, assign peer host; and introduce to other students.
IV. Program Management

Public Relations

Public Relations is an important element of the program management component. The purpose of a public relations program is to communicate to various publics the role of the counselor and the importance of a guidance program.

Specific public relations activities include such things as:

- brochures describing the guidance program
- slide/tape presentations to parents, community groups
- letters to parents, welcoming new students and describing counseling services
- counselors' column in the local or school newspaper
- radio spots on topics related to guidance (helping kids with homework, child stress, parent/child communication, etc.)
- record keeping/reporting to administration and school board annually (number of students seen, types of problems, kinds of services provided, etc.)
- speaker (on topics related to children's emotional health) to community groups
- calendar of schedule for teachers, administration

Advisory Committee

The purpose of an advisory committee is to assist the counselor(s) in the development and delivery of an effective, comprehensive guidance program. Membership may consist of teachers, board members, students, administration, parents and community members (10-15 persons). The advisory board meets monthly or periodically throughout the year to provide input or react to:

- program goals and objectives
- public relations activities
- program assessment
- expanding program focus
- dealing with special issues
- crisis intervention plans
- selection of materials
- program promotion/infusion

Program Articulation/Management

It is critical that a guidance program is sequential, with objectives developed K-12 to ensure comprehensive social/emotional/academic/career development. In order to achieve this, the counselor(s) in the district must meet regularly to share aspects of their program and coordinate activities so that a sequential program is maintained.

Program objectives and activities should be in writing, with packets or units of materials identified for classroom guidance, small groups, staff/parent inservice testing and test interpretation program, financial aid and orientation programs, etc.

The guidance program must not be a "fly by the seat of your pants" program which exists in the mind of the counselor(s). To assure accountability, materials must be developed and systematically maintained.

Yearly evaluation of the counselor (using an instrument specific to counseling) is important, along with program evaluation. In addition, counselors should use evaluation instruments in small groups—classroom sessions for feedback on how students respond to services.

Careful recordkeeping and systematic reporting of number of students seen, types of services provided and requested, results of services, number of parent and teacher contacts, etc., shows evidence of a well-managed program.

Time Management

An effective guidance program is not a scattered offering of services, but rather, is a well managed array of specific activities designed to address program goals and objectives. The counselor should have at least a loosely organized daily schedule with some planned activities to assure accountability.

Depending on the grade level and type of services offered a calendar such as the following is a representation of effective time management:

Staff Development

A significant aspect of program management is counselor development. It is imperative that the counseling staff participate on a regular basis in inservice and professional growth opportunities which enhance skills and expertise. Keeping current through participation in professional counseling associations and reading the latest literature is part of this staff development effort.
DEVELOPMENTAL STUDENT COMPETENCIES

A major goal of the comprehensive school guidance program is to facilitate the attainment of selected student competencies which are grouped under the categories of personal social development; career development; and educational development. Ten major topics are presented, with competencies developed for primary, intermediate, junior high, and high school levels.

The guidance advisory council or committee along with the school counselor(s), after considering information from needs assessment efforts, may select appropriate competencies from the following list of example competency statements.

Suggested Local District Process

1 School district steering committee is established.

2 Steering committee learns about counseling model and implementation process.

3 Steering committee returns to local district and established school/community advisory committee.

4 Committee begins local planning effort by assessing current counseling program and available school/community resources.

5 Committee examines current program to determine "fit" between it and levels of resource organization and management.

6 Committee determines necessary new or reallocated resources needed for implementation.

7 Committee establishes timeline for transition from current status to comprehensive developmental counseling program.

8 Implementation plan is taken to school board for approval.

9 Committee remains intact as a resource coordination and program evaluation group.
PROGRAM EVALUATION

A. Advantages and Benefits of Evaluation

1. Understanding the nature of a program and making meaningful interpretation of the services to society.
2. Providing opportunities for valid judgement for improvements.
3. Being able to identify students with unmet needs.
4. Selecting activities and methods on basis of demonstrated success.
5. Increasing counselor growth.
6. Being able to devise shortcuts for routine operations.
7. Increasing individual competence through self-evaluation.
8. Receiving feedback on the effectiveness of work.
9. Having data to aid in improving program by increasing staffing.
10. Providing services within the educational system which meets needs of the individuals in the system.
11. Helps interpret the guidance program for parents, community, board members, etc.

B. Program Evaluation Includes:

1. Total program.
2. The counselor.
3. Classroom guidance.
4. Special workshops or programs.
5. Small groups.
6. Overall guidance activities.

EVALUATION OF THE COUNSELING PROGRAM

Procedure: Counselors should have major responsibility for designing, developing, and ultimately evaluating the counseling program, but administrators, students, and to some extent, teachers and parents also play an important role in the process.

1. Examine the overall philosophy and goals of the school, and formulate some broad goals for the counseling program.

2. Make an assessment of over-all needs:
   - study preset guidance services
   - talk to students
   - study existing records and information
   - needs assessment surveys for students and possibly teachers and parents

3. Write student competencies that are realistic and to some extent, measurable.

4. Plan and develop activities to carry out desired outcomes.

5. Develop and select evaluation procedures and methods.

ASSESSING STUDENT NEEDS

Definition of Needs

Need is defined as the discrepancy between a current status and a desired status. Need is not necessarily an indication of an ill to be remedied, but rather a direction in which an individual wishes to move. Everyone has needs which change as they progress through the various stages of human development. During the school years, needs are focused on the development of an adequate self-concept, the development of appropriate interpersonal relationships, the development of functional life skills, and preparation for further education and entering the world of work.

If a school is to function effectively and if the staff is to have an impact on the lives of students, energies and efforts must be directed toward the needs of students. To determine these specific needs and the degree to which students feel these needs, the administration of a needs assessment survey is very helpful.

Considerations in Assessing Student Needs

1. Why conduct a needs assessment survey?
   a. To help in setting priorities, planning and implementation of the guidance program.
   b. For accountability in determining what counselors should do and how it should be done.
   c. To assist in the evaluation of the present effectiveness of the guidance program.
   d. To plan for the following year regarding program components, materials needed, changes needed, etc.
   e. To justify potential expansion of the program, or adding staff, especially in light of the declining enrollment and shortage of money by school districts.
   f. For articulation of the counselor's role to students, parents, administration, school board and community.

2. What questions can be answered by a needs assessment survey?
   a. What are students' needs?
   b. To what degree are these needs being met?
   c. What are the most important priorities of the guidance department?
   d. How can the program be changed or modified to meet the students' needs?
e. What are teacher, administrator, or parent perceptions of the guidance developmental needs of students and the program offered to students.

The following are examples of needs assessment instruments for various grade levels. One instrument is included for seeking teacher and administrator perceptions of student needs. These instruments are only intended to be examples and the use of a local district advisory committee would be encouraged to examine them and adapt them to meet local goals and needs.

The first instrument is entitled WHAT DO YOU THINK? It was developed primarily for use with primary grade level students. It is probably best to read the items to very young students.

The second instrument entitled CONCERNS I HAVE was developed for use with students in the intermediate grades (perhaps 4-6).

The third instrument entitled STUDENT CONCERNS QUESTIONNAIRE was developed for use with students in grades 6-9, but could be used with senior high students also.

The fourth instrument entitled ACT STUDENT NEEDS ASSESSMENT SURVEY was developed for use with students in grades 9-12. A new revision of this assessment will be available in late Fall 1992. More information on how to order and score this ACT published instrument may be received by contacting:

ACT
P. O. Box 168
Iowa City, IA  52243

The fifth instrument entitled TEACHER-ADMINISTRATOR-COUNSELOR SURVEY was developed for use with teachers, administrators and counselors of middle school students. It may also be used with high school staff. A variation could be developed for staff of primary and intermediate students. A similar instrument might also be used to assess parent perceptions of youth at each level of education.

TEACHER-ADMINISTRATOR-COUNSELOR SURVEY

Developmental Needs of Youth
(From School Guidance Perspective)

Listed below are some generally accepted developmental needs of middle school youth. As you examine the list of needs, consider our responsibility as educators to guide and assist our students, then rate each statement/need in the following manner. In the matrix on the left side, indicate the level of need you believe your students have by ranking each listed need in one of the 3 categories: highest 1/3, middle 1/3, lowest 1/3. Try to place approximately one-third of your marks in each of the three categories.

On the right side of the form, indicate how well you believe your school is meeting each of these student needs. (How well are we as teachers, administrators, and counselors assisting students through our teaching, individual contacts, counseling/advising, and support group meetings, each of the identified needs.)

SAMPLE INFORMATION: A LETTER ABOUT GROUPS

Dear Parent:

Your daughter/son has chosen to participate in a discussion group and in activities that will be dealing with awareness of chemical dependency. This program was developed to assist boys and girls in understanding of substance abuse and its impact on families. They will be learning coping skills for dealing with stressful situations in their lives, and to increase their self-confidence and to enhance their self-esteem.

The information that your child shares in group will be kept confidential. I tell the children that it is not OK to share at home what others have shared in group, but it is OK for them to share about themselves if they so choose.

Subjects covered are feelings, assertiveness, communication, defenses, chemical dependency, decision making, families, uniqueness. We will meet for approximately 8 weeks.

If you have any questions or concerns, please call me at school at ——.

Sincerely,
SMALL GROUP SIGN UPS

____ F. DO NOT CHOOSE TO BE IN A GROUP

____ G. (ADD YOUR OWN IDEAS OF GROUPS THAT WOULD BE HELPFUL FOR YOU.)
WHAT CAN YOU, THE PARENT, DO NOW?

1. Call your school and talk with the counselor.
   Elementary counselors are trained to help children and families. They welcome communications between home and school.

2. Ask why your child is being seen.
   Students are referred to the counselor for a variety of reasons. Some of these include lack of self-confidence, difficulty getting along with peers, perfectionistic tendencies, high stress-worry level, inappropriate behaviors, changes within the family (moving, new sibling, new job, unemployment, separation, divorce, death).

3. Ask how your child was brought to the attention of the guidance counselor.
   Most often teachers, teacher's aides, and parents refer the students to the counselor. Sometimes students make the request themselves. Communication between the person who referred the student, the counselor, and the parents is encouraged.

4. Find out what type of program your child will be participating in.
   Elementary school counselors facilitate a variety of programs. Some students are seen individually, and others are seen in small groups with other children. Sometimes students are seen for only a short period of time, and other students see the counselor over a longer period. You will be contacted by your child’s teacher or counselor if your child will be seeing the counselor regularly on an individual basis. Due to all the demands placed upon school counselors, it would be impossible for them to contact the parents of all the children they work with.

5. School counselors are not psychiatrists, psychologists, social workers, or family therapists.
   Elementary school counselors typically focus on developmental issues that many children experience. However, at times particular students have needs that require more time and skills than what school counselors are able to accommodate or deal effectively with alone. In these situations the school counselor can act as a facilitator and work with you to connect with other qualified professionals.

A PERSONAL MESSAGE FROM YOUR ELEMENTARY SCHOOL COUNSELOR:

September Greetings! I am looking forward to the many opportunities my work provides me to get involved with our preschool through eighth grade students!

I strongly believe in the developmental and preventative approach I use in my work with children. My primary goal is to empower the students by providing them with information and teaching them skills that will help them be happy, healthy, and productive members of our community.

Meeting the social/emotional needs of children is a task the school, the home, the church, etc. cannot effectively deal with alone. I have a strong commitment to a team approach. Let's work together and surround our children with a network of support and teach them ways to tap into the resources this network offers them!

If you have any questions, comments, and/or want to know more about my role as your elementary school counselor, please contact me. I look forward to working with you and your children this year!
