Steps in the development of a major in International Studies at the State University of New York at Oneonta is described. Designed jointly by the Foreign Language Department and the Business Department, the program includes the following components: an overseas segment, advanced foreign language requirement, and course requirements for economics and international relations, including diplomatic history and foreign policy. The program's emphasis on verbal skills blends well with the expectation that all students spend time in an overseas study program or an internship in a business either in a foreign setting or heavily involved in international business. Emphasis in this paper is on how a shrinking Foreign Language Department with limited resources worked with a growing Business Department to design and implement a new interdisciplinary program of study. Twenty pages of appended materials include departmental memos, lists of courses, and course requirements. (LB)
INTERNATIONAL BUSINESS AND FOREIGN LANGUAGE STUDY:
A MODEL FOR COOPERATION
Alfred M. Lubell and SUNY-Oneonta

The purpose of this paper is to document and describe a process of deliberation, debate, study, analysis and ultimate cooperation that led, over a four-semester period, to the development of a promising major in International Studies which encompasses a serious overseas component, an advanced foreign language requirement and in order of emphasis, significant focus on economics, international relations including diplomatic history and foreign policy, and world social and cultural forces at the State University of New York at Oneonta.

The State University of New York, College at Oneonta, is an institution of somewhat under 6,000 students. Basically an undergraduate, four-year college, it has several active Master degree level graduate programs. As in many such multipurpose units of a state university, the Business department at SUNY-Oneonta grew during the 1970's and 1980's into a major force on the campus, offering a wide variety of specialties, including a minor, but not a major, in International Business.

The Foreign Language department at Oneonta was contracting during the same period, as were many foreign language departments throughout the country. Having learned of the success of other institutions in revitalizing their foreign language departments while attending the Annual Conference on Languages and Communication for World Business and the Professions in 1989, the chair of Oneonta's Foreign Language Department discussed his findings with the chair of the Business Department. Together they set out to build a healthy program which would serve the needs of both departments, the college, and its students. This paper is a record of how this idea was turned into a reality. To get two chairs, with a long record of cooperation, to agree on an idea and a course of action is one thing; to convince other colleagues, other departments, appropriate committees, the College Senate, the college administration, and then the Central Offices of the entire State University, and after that, the New York State Department of Education, of the worth of the endeavor is another matter. The seeking and procurement of this concurrence is the story we want to share with you, as well as to detail how a contracted Foreign Language Department with sharply limited means prepared itself for the program that developed from these deliberations.

After the initial discussion between the chairs of the Foreign Language Department and Business Department a memorandum was sent to the relevant academic dean. It concerned the interest of the Department of Economics and Business (Business Department) in proposing a minor in International Business and the possibility of developing an Interdisciplinary Major in International Studies. For reference, the April 25, 1985 memorandum is included here in the accompanying attachments. Proper names have been replaced with appropriate descriptors.
Note: The major in International Business was subsequently approved by the Department of Economics and Business, the College Curriculum Committee, the College Senate, authorized by the College President and became a curricular offering as of March 10, 1986. In the process, the proposal underwent several revisions. For reference the curriculum sheet describing the International Business minor as currently offered is also included here in the accompanying attachments.

The initial memorandum to the dean was successful in initiating discussion on the topic of an International Studies major with the college president's Executive Committee (vice presidents and academic deans). The preliminary result was authorization of the dean to appoint members to an International Business committee to pursue the concept of an international business major. The college president and the executive committee were interested in redirecting the originally proposed concept, and in the possibility of instead developing an international business major. The committee was charged with looking into the feasibility of offering both an international business major and an international studies major and if either proved promising to develop a particular curriculum proposal. The dean consulted with the chair of the Business Department in establishing criteria for participation on the committee and with respect to selecting the particular membership. The Business Department chair was appointed Chairman of the International Business Committee and the Chair of the Foreign Language Department was appointed to serve on the committee. The other members chosen listed by the position they held in the college and why they were chosen follows.

The director of the college's overseas study programs was included for his knowledge and experience in the general area.

A business faculty member whose principal instructional responsibilities involved teaching such courses as International Business and International Marketing, and who herself had been involved in applied international business research was included to directly avail the commodity with her expertise.

A second business faculty member with extensive international business experience was later invited to participate during committee meetings.

A faculty member of the Political Science Department who taught courses focusing on Latin America and whose research interests dealt with foreign political systems was included.

The director of the college's Career Center was included to help steer thinking toward careers, employment opportunities, and graduate study compatible with an undergraduate International Business and International Studies major.

A faculty member of the Geography Department whose own particular specialization was Asian cultural geography was included for his knowledge and perspective of world cultures.

Early in the committee's deliberations it was decided not to focus on an International Business major. A more general international education program was considered more appropriate.
for Oneonta State in that it might generate more career potential for a broader group of students. It was also the feeling of the committee that a more general program was more supportable given the available resources, and that such a program might well be relatively more attractive to students and potential employers alike. As the year progressed the committee members began to refer to themselves as the International Affairs committee, and they proceeded to plan and draft a proposal for an International Affairs major. By Spring 1986 the committee had proposed a preliminary draft of the major. With minor editorial changes in the Fall of 1986 a final draft was approved by the committee on October 28, 1986. For reference the final draft (dated October 29, 1986) is included here in the accompanying attachments.

Throughout the committee's deliberations the college administration was continuously kept informed of the progress being made. This was done through direct conversation and via memorandum. These communications always stressed the extent of college-wide participation in the development of the program and the college-wide involvement and cooperation that would later take place in offering the curriculum. Credit was generously given to administrators, deans, vice presidents, and the college president for their involvement and support. This tended to result in many constituencies regarding the proposal as theirs.
It helped to provide the proposal with broad based support throughout the college among faculty and administrators.

In the Spring 1987 semester the proposed International Affairs major was presented to the College Curriculum Committee.
After some deliberation it was returned to the International Affairs committee for modification along lines suggested during the discussion of the proposal by the Curriculum Committee. Still another draft of the proposal was prepared by the committee for recommendation by the college Curriculum Committee. The major changes made were the title of the major from International Affairs to International Studies, editorial changes to more clearly define the foreign language and other requirements, providing a greater choice with respect to particular courses that could be used to fulfill some requirements, while strengthening the economics component by requiring more specific and a greater number of required courses, and an elimination of the two-track option. This revised proposal was subsequently approved by the college Curriculum Committee on October 5, 1987, with the proviso to include a statement concerning how the major would be administered. The proposal was then sent to and considered by the College Senate on October 26, 1987. With a minor amendment to add two courses to the elective category, the major was approved. It was also agreed that a "chain of command" sentence would be added to the statement concerning administration.

An action to approve a curriculum proposal by the College Senate is actually one to recommend approval by the college president. Such approval takes form in the submission of a Letter of Intent to the Central Administration of the State University of New York, the Associate Vice Chancellor for Academic Programs in SUNY Central located at SUNY Plaza, Albany,
New York. Before this was done the then President of Oneonta State retired and the Vice President for Academic Affairs and Dean of the College became Acting President as well. There was a search for a new president. When he came on board there was a search for a new academic vice president and the old academic vice president retired. The proposed International Studies major was almost lost in the shuffle. Finally, in November 1989, two years after the proposal was passed in the College Senate, a letter of intent originally drafted by the previous acting president was edited with the assistance of the chair of the Business Department and the Assistant Vice President for Academic Affairs and Advisement, and in January 1990 it was sent by the college president to the Provost of the State University of New York at SUNY Central for approval, and to the Region II SUNY College Presidents for their information and comment. For reference the version that passed the College Senate and was submitted to SUNY Central along with the Letter of Intent is included here in the accompanying materials.

The State University of New York with 64 separate campuses is divided up into regions for certain administrative and planning purposes. There are four such regions. Region II comprises the colleges in central New York from the Pennsylvania to the Canadian border: The College of Agriculture and Life Sciences at Cornell University, SUNY-Binghamton, Broome County Community College, Cayuga County Community College, the College of Environmental Science and Forestry Syracuse University, the College of Human Ecology Cornell University, the College of Veterinary Medicine, Cornell University, SUNY-Cortland, the College of Technology at Delhi, Herkimer County Community College, Jefferson Community College, Mohawk Valley Community College, the College of Agriculture and Technology at Morrisville, SUNY-Oneonta, Onondaga Community College, SUNY-Oswego, the School of Industrial and Labor Relations Cornell University, the Health Science Center Syracuse University, Tompkins-Cortland Community College, the College of Technology at Utica/Rome).

One of the functions of the Region groupings is to provide comment on member colleges' proposed curriculum changes. The relevant planning purpose is to foster cooperation and interaction to husband resources within a Region while strengthening curricular offerings.

Letters in response were subsequently received from two presidents of other colleges in Region II, Mohawk Valley CC and SUNY-Cortland. Both were favorable and encouraging. On December 7, 1990, SUNY-Oneonta received a letter from the SUNY Vice Provost for Academic Programs and Research informing the president that the program in International Studies had been favorably reviewed by the Academic Program Review committee. We could now proceed with the development of a program proposal for submission to the State Education Department of New York (SED). Currently the Chair of the Business Department and the Assistant Vice President for Academic Affairs and Advisement are proceeding to draft this proposal. It will have to address a series of mostly procedural questions raised by the Academic Review Committee.

The "Revised Guidelines for Submission of Academic Program Proposals" must be followed in preparing the proposal submitted to SED. The "Guidelines" are a multi-page set of directions that assure all relevant questions are asked and answered. Hopefully this next stage of the process will be completed during the Spring 1991 semester and the proposal will be submitted to SED before June 1991. Once at SED, outside consultants will have to be contracted to review and comment on the program. These comments usually require some subsequent accommodation by the campus making the proposal. Once this is accomplished and if SED makes a favorable recommendation to the Board of Regents of the State of New York, and when the Board of Regents and the Governor approve the proposal, Oneonta State can begin to offer the major in International Studies. My optimistic target date for this is September 1992. If all goes well from here on it will have taken seven to eight years, start to finish, to have the major finally approved.

The final section of our presentation will deal with the foreign language support needed for this program. The specific foreign language requirement for the program is the satisfactory completion of an oral proficiency examination. The level achieved on the proficiency examination should be equal to a level 2 on the Foreign Service Examination. This examination may be taken in any language offered at SUNY Oneonta at that level.

This last point raises an important question: How can a modestly sized or even small college offer some of the languages that would be appropriate for such a program such as Japanese, Chinese, Korean, Arabic, and quite a few others? Indeed, in some colleges even relatively more commonly taught important business languages such as Russian and German may not be offered. What to do?

At Oneonta this problem has been resolved by the development of an active self-instructional language program. SUNY-Oneonta is a member of the National Association of Self-Instruction Language Programs (NASILP) and uses its methods and guidelines—very successfully—to offer any language for which we have a native speaker available, appropriate tapes and materials, and the services of an off-campus professional who will work with our program coordinator as a consultant and evaluator for a given language. In the two years it took to get our International Studies program planned, processed and to its current state of partial approval, SUNY-Oneonta has offered Chinese, Japanese, Korean, Arabic, Hindi, Russian, Italian, Swahili, Norwegian, Greek, Portuguese, and several other languages in the NASILP mode. Now we are ready to embark on the program as soon as it is finally approved. We know that we can. With relative ease and certainty we can offer most of the languages that our students will want or need.

While not able to replace high quality regular foreign language classes taught by able and experienced professionals, the NASILP approach offers, nevertheless, an opportunity for institutions which cannot afford regular foreign language classes in any but the most popular foreign languages, to offer a form of instruction in a large variety of languages that is not only inexpensive but particularly suited and effective for international business or international studies programs.

The most striking feature about the NASILP approach is that the students practice and concentrate on speaking the language beginning with the first lessons. After being oriented to the requirements of the method, the learner works with tapes, videos, and a native speaking tutor. He is checked periodically by a coordinator, in most cases an experienced foreign language instructor. The learner is expected to work intensively with his tapes and, of course, his books prior to each practice session with his tutor, usually a foreign student, selected and trained by the coordinator. Normally there are two or three of these practice drill sessions per week. The learner keeps his book closed and the tutor drills him on the material he has learned. The tutor and learner speak only the target language during the drill sessions. Questions are kept short and permitted only before and after the drills. Eventually the student is examined by a professional after having worked through the agreed upon amount of material.

The results of this approach are impressive. Students who study a language in the NASILP mode generally develop verbal skills beyond what usually results from a more conventional course and approach to foreign language learning for the same period of time.

This accent on verbal skills prepares students well for the kind of program which has evolved at SUNY-Oneonta. It costs much less per semester hour than does regular instruction, making it particularly attractive in these times of dire fiscal shortfalls. Since the NASILP courses are only offered in languages for which there are no regular classes available, they normally present no threat to the existence of conventional foreign language courses. Indeed, they offer an extension, a richness to the over-all variety of languages that most institutions can present to their students.

The emphasis on verbal skills in the SUNY-Oneonta International Studies program blends well with and is further enhanced by its expectation that all students in the program spend time in an overseas study program or an internship in a business either in a foreign setting or heavily involved in international business. The State University of New York has a longstanding, active commitment to overseas study which is reflected in its approximately 120 overseas study programs, a number of which are well suited to support and enrich programs in international business and/or international studies.

RE: The Possibility of Developing a Proposal for an Interdisciplinary Major in International Studies

The Department of Economics and Business is contemplating proposing a Minor in International Business. A copy of this proposal is attached for your information. A recent contact from another department chairman has led me to believe that there may be interest in developing an International Studies Major. I would envision such a program as an interdepartmental/interdisciplinary offering primarily of social science departments with a strong language requirement and including a semester abroad as part of the program.

Would you like to pursue this concept? For your information and convenience I have attached a list of currently offered courses with an apparent international orientation.

Encl.
This minor is open only to Business Economics or Economics majors. It consists of a core of required courses related to a specialized area of business. Consult with Business-Economics faculty members for additional information and suggested sequences. Students planning to complete requirements for this minor should declare their intentions at an early point to facilitate advisement. Forms for this purpose are available at the Business-Economics Department office, Administration 226 (431-3458).

Course Requirements:

- Econ. 211 Intermediate Microeconomic Theory 3 s.h.
- Econ. 212 Intermediate Macroeconomic Theory 3 s.h.
- Bus. 361 Marketing Management 3 s.h.
- Econ. 281 Economic Development 3 s.h.

DATE: October 29, 1986

RE: Report

The original membership as appointed by you on January 14, 1986 was Allen Caswell, Carolyn Ingalls, Alfred Lubell, Peter Macris, Carl Meacham, Steve Parry, and Bill Woolever. During the year James Michael shared a place on the committee with Carolyn Ingalls and eventually replaced her.

Early on in their deliberation the committee decided that rather than focus on an International Business Major, a more general international educational program was more appropriate for Oneonta in that it might generate more career potential for a broader group of students, be more supportable given available resources, and might well be relatively more attractive to students and potential employers alike. We began to refer to ourselves as the International Affairs Committee and proceeded to plan and draft a proposal for an International Affairs Major.

At the meeting of the International Affairs Committee on October 28, 1986, 11:00-11:50 a.m. in Administration 244, the final draft of our Proposed International Affairs Major was approved. Only the most minor editorial changes were made on the draft prepared last Spring 1986. Allen Caswell, Alfred Lubell, Peter Macris, James Michael, and Steve Perry attended. Carl Meacham and Bill Woolever were absent. They had previously received copies of the draft proposal and were informed of the meeting via memo and a follow-up telephone call. Given their previous support for and their participation in preparing the draft proposal it is believed that they concur with the recommendation of all the other committee members, i.e. to forward you the attached Proposed International Affairs Major.

MISSION STATEMENT FOR INTERNATIONAL AFFAIRS PROGRAM

The basic aim of SUCO's International Affairs program is to develop students who can immediately operate in and make a positive impact on the various organizations operating in the international sphere. A truly multidisciplinary program that draws upon the fields of Anthropology, Business, Geography, History, Foreign Language, Literature, Philosophy, Political Science, Black-Hispanic Studies, and International Studies, the program is structured to give the student both a broad-based background and functional and/or regional specialization in international politics, history, economics, and social/cultural forces. Depending on the student's career interest, he/she can choose to specialize in one of two functional areas - Diplomacy or International Business. Or the student can pursue detailed multidisciplinary studies in a specific region of the world - Africa, Asia, Europe, Latin America, or Middle East. The foreign language and internship requirements complete the development of a broadly trained student who can provide expertise to a federal, state, or local government agency, a nonprofit group, an import/export firm, a multinational corporation, or an international bank.
TITLE: Major in International Affairs

RESTRICTIONS: Offered only as a dual major

FOREIGN STUDY/INTERNSHIP REQUIREMENT: Satisfied in one of two ways -

(1) study overseas for one full semester or summer (minimum 6 s.h.)

OR

(2) Internship in the United States or overseas with an organization active in some aspect of international affairs for one full semester or minimum 12 week summer program. (minimum 6 s.h.)

OR

(3) Equivalent combination of Study and Internship as items 1 and 2.

FOREIGN LANGUAGE REQUIREMENT: A three (3) semester hour course in Conversational (language), (language) Grammar, (language) Composition, (language) Business, or the equivalent. The prerequisite for these courses would be four years of the language in high school, four semesters of the language in college, or a combination of high school and college language training equating to four semesters of college, each year of high school equating with a semester of college. The prerequisite may also be met by passage of an equivalency exam.

COURSE REQUIREMENTS: Course distribution for the program is broken down as follows:

Dear Joe Burke:

Enclosed is a Letter of Intent to develop a major program in International Studies. In an attempt to diversify our major offerings and, using an interdisciplinary approach toward that end, this program draws from several disciplines, all presently offered on this campus. Since all of the courses needed to accommodate the major are now available through other departmental offerings, there will be no additional cost to the state.

It is our firm belief that a college like State University College, Oneonta, with its diversity of liberal arts offerings, should use our strong social science resources to develop a major in this area.

Sincerely,

President

LETTER OF INTENT FOR INTERNATIONAL STUDIES

The State University College at Oneonta proposes a major program in International Studies. This is a multidisciplinary program which can be taken only as a second major in conjunction with an approved disciplinary major. The major is based on the belief that a solid foundation in liberal studies at the undergraduate level is the most appropriate background for students with academic and/or professional interests in international fields of study or eventual employment. The major is designed to permit students, with proper advisement, to tailor the program to their individual interests while assuring an essential balance between the subfields involved.

Because this major must be taken in conjunction with a traditional major, it will not replace any other program. It may increase student interest in some social sciences and in the study of foreign languages. It is based on existing courses and no new courses will be created. The proposed major draws on the fields of anthropology, Black-Hispanic studies, business, economics, fine arts, foreign language, geography, history, literature, philosophy, political science, and international studies. Students must choose three courses from the following four areas: 1. International relations, 2. Diplomatic history and foreign policy, 3. World economics, and 4. World social and cultural forces. The program will be offered for the B.A. degree. We plan to initiate it in September 1990.

As far as we can determine, there are no programs within our region similar to the one being proposed here.

Students must complete either an internship or a study abroad program. Since the college already has a large internship program and students have choices of several overseas programs operated by the college or other SUNY institutions, no special arrangement will be required.

Students who take this major will probably have an interest in careers such as the diplomatic service and international business, although some students may be interested only in increasing their knowledge of other parts of the world. We expect that they will come from the same areas as most of our students: Metropolitan New York, the Capital District, and the eastern Southern Tier.

The proposed program would certainly broaden the students' knowledge of the rest of the world at a time when there are major criticisms of the lack of such knowledge among college students. It will help to prepare students to work for government or business agencies in foreign countries. There is increasing interest in international business in the Oneonta area with the location of a Japanese clothing plant in the area. The program also is a logical outgrowth of SUNY's goals to expand its international dimension.

We do believe that there will be a large demand for the program. Some students in the business program have expressed a desire for this option.
Estimated headcount for the first five years:

We expect that this program will have no impact on total campus enrollment or its distribution among major areas of study.

There will be no capital costs associated with this program. Operating costs will be negligible and will be covered from the S and E budgets of existing departments. Some part-time secretarial service may be needed by the third year. If this cannot be handled by a work-study student, some temporary service funds may be needed to hire a part-time secretary for the academic year. Total cost would not exceed $5000 and would probably be closer to $3000 for the first year or two. We hope that there will be some increases in temporary service funding in future years. If not, the costs would be covered from reallocation from existing temporary service funds.
MISSION STATEMENT FOR THE PROPOSED INTERNATIONAL STUDIES MAJOR

The basic aim of the proposed International Studies major is to provide a broad internationally oriented liberal arts background to students already majoring in a traditional academic discipline. The major is based on the belief that a solid foundation in liberal studies is the most appropriate "training" at the undergraduate level for students with academic and/or professional interests in international fields of study or eventual employment. The major is designed to permit students, with proper advisement, to tailor the program to their individual interests while assuring an essential balance between the different subfields involved. The proposed multidisciplinary major draws on the fields of anthropology, Black-Hispanic studies, business, economics, fine arts, foreign languages, geography, history, literature, philosophy, political science, and international studies. The program requires students to apportion their studies between the following four areas: (1) International Relations, (2) Diplomatic History/Foreign Policy, (3) World Economics, and (4) World Social/Cultural Forces. The program also requires that students gain some practical experience and exposure through study abroad and/or an internship. Students completing the major will be better prepared for graduate studies in an international field and/or eventual employment in international career positions in government, business, or other nongovernmental institutions.

Administration

The proposed International Studies major would be administered by a five person committee, one each from Economics and Business, Foreign Language, Geography, History, and Political Science.

Advisement will be by a member of the committee in cooperation with the student's advisor in his primary major.
REQUIREMENTS FOR MAJOR IN INTERNATIONAL STUDIES

TITLE: Major in International Studies

RESTRICTIONS: Offered only as a dual major

FOREIGN STUDY/INTERNSHIP REQUIREMENT: Satisfied in one of three ways -

1) Study overseas for one full semester or summer. (Minimum 6 s.h.)

OR

2) Internship in the United States or overseas with substantial responsibilities dealing with international affairs in an organization active in some aspect of international affairs for one full semester or minimum 12 week summer program. (Minimum 6 s.h.)

OR

3) Equivalent combination of Study and Internship as items 1 and 2.

FOREIGN LANGUAGE REQUIREMENT: Demonstrated proficiency in a language other than English via a competency based standard national examination, such as the United States State Department Examination where a grade of 2- would be required (which roughly equates with one to two years of college level language).

COURSE REQUIREMENTS: Course distribution for the program is broken down as follows:

International Relations - 3 s.h.
Diplomatic History/Foreign Policy - 6 s.h.
World Economics - 12 s.h.
World Social/Cultural Forces - 6 s.h.
Electives - 6 s.h.

33 s.h.*

*Foreign Study or Internship. The actual number of s.h. could exceed 33 s.h. by 6 s.h. if a student chose doing an internship instead of foreign study. Appropriate courses studied abroad can be used to meet the 33 s.h. requirement.

OVERLAP WITH PRIMARY MAJOR

A maximum of 12 s.h. overlap is allowed with the primary major taken in conjunction with the International Affairs Major.
