This unit was designed by a certified Media and Social Studies teacher to help middle school students in Prince George's County, Maryland, plan a trip to East Africa and specifically to Kenya and Tanzania. Each school has a 90 percent African American student population in grades seven and eight, and both are magnet schools. The teacher has had a longstanding interest in bringing Africa into the social studies curriculum. By using geography, economics, and language skills, students educate themselves and experience social studies in a fresh manner. The paper provides guidelines for middle school teachers in methods of social studies application and gives specific information on planning and implementing the African trip. Specific information concerns activities, goals and objectives, a general overview, procedures, support resources, a model for student activity, Swahili vocabulary terms, and a list of African wildlife. Abstract

This curriculum unit is designed for two middle schools in Prince George's County, Maryland. Each middle school has a 90%+ African-American student population in grades seven and eight. Both are magnet schools, one a humanities magnet, the other a science magnet.

The author is the Media Generalist at both schools and certified in both Media and Social Studies, and has been recognized for her contributions for African studies through publication and awards. She has held an interest in Africa for over a decade and continues to offer ideas for bringing Africa into the classroom through the social studies curriculum.

In this unit, students will plan a trip to Kenya and Tanzania. Questions to answer throughout the planning are drawn from: map study, language development, population diversity, environmental focusing, and cultural identification.

Area of Social Studies Curriculum:
Multicultural Infusion: Refinement of social studies curriculum to include geographical cultural groups, application of economic concepts, instructional strategies which accommodate the various learning styles inherent in the class, and higher level thinking skills.

The student will utilize techniques to investigate cultural heritage.
Grade Level:
Middle School

Activity:
Student planning of a trip to Kenya and Tanzania, using geography, economic, and language skills to educate themselves and to experience social studies in a fresh, vivid manner.

Goals and Objectives:
To learn what is required when one plans travel to another part of the world can be used to create awareness through middle school instruction;

To address a middle school class concerned with social studies;

To recognize that social studies can be applied to real-life experiences.

General Overview:
An increased effort by middle school instructors to include students in social studies application, should include reading and composition, in that, when students are actively engaged in planning -- developing their own research -- their interest in the social sciences broadens. Students must search for information and develop answers to questions posed by the teacher. The teacher will direct an integrated experience in composition and research, as well as, summarization of material and concepts to be learned.
The teacher will point out that planning a trip is part of the social sciences, that it includes economics and cultural geography, and that it is a record of personal growth through knowledge of other peoples and places.

After completing the research, the students will organize their findings in the form of a travel guide, using critical and creative thinking skills. The teacher will present the final draft for discussion, demonstrating acceptance of cooperative interpretation.

Procedures:
1. Teacher focuses student attention through presentation of the statistics of tourist travel to East Africa, and discusses why so many tourist want to travel there. (Contact Kenya and Tanzania embassies in Washington, DC. Request tourist statistics, as well as, visa/passport, currency, health, and other travel/visitor requirements.)
2. Teacher will list objectives for students to copy, i.e., I will plan a trip to the countries of Kenya and Tanzania; I will prepare a map of Kenya and of Tanzania; I will identify and learn words needed for travel in East Africa; I will identify cultural similarities and differences among Kenyans, Tanzanians, and U.S. Americans; etc..
3. Teacher will read stories about safari in East Africa. (Contact the Librarian for a bibliography.)
4. Teacher requests student questions in order to know that students are ready for independent and cooperative practice.
5. Students will be grouped according to interest, i.e., Group 1 = map making, Group 2 = travel agency research, Group 3 = Embassy and State Department correspondence, Group 4 = culture and language studies.

6. Assessment is arrived through collection/review of group planning and research; review of completed travel guide, edited by teacher for rewrites and then distribution to class.

Support Resource:
Dr. Kofi Glover, University of South Florida, African Studies, SOC 107, Tampa, FL 33620, 813-974-2427, has planned several trips to East Africa.

When a man goes on his road he goes with a friend, for he who walks alone has no good fortune.

As man goes through life soon he is pierced by the thorn of misfortune.

Or the sand-mote enters his eye and he needs a friend to remove it.

Even so do I advise you, the rich man and the poor man join hand across the shroud.

Better a loin-cloth without disgrace than a fine-flowered shawl of shame.
