Extensive evidence indicates that the Native family and society are "at risk," having been undermined by the existing non-Native child welfare, education, and justice systems. This paper examines issues in juvenile justice, child welfare, and family services with regard to control by Canada Native communities of their own social services. The document includes: (1) selected Ontario statistics on Native children in care, Natives in the criminal justice system, and costs to the provincial government; (2) jurisdictional disputes related to the delivery of social services on reservations; (3) strategies to expand Indian control of social services; (4) the effects of the Canadian Young Offenders Act and the Children's Services Act of Ontario on aboriginal peoples; (5) difficulties in the implementation of the (U.S.) Indian Child Welfare Act; (6) issues in foster care and adoption of Native children; and (7) community programs and initiatives addressing parenting skills education, prevention of child abuse and neglect, use of Native family courtworkers, substance abuse prevention, counseling and homemakers' services, and youth activities. Appendices provide related legal documents and information about the project. A bibliography contains approximately 100 entries, including research papers, legislation, program reports, statistical reports, and journal articles. (SV)

HIGHLIGHTS AND SUMMARY
OF
JUSTICE RELATED CHILDREN AND FAMILY SERVICES
FOR NATIVE PEOPLE IN ONTARIO

Extensive evidence indicates that the Native family structure and society is "at risk" having been undermined by the existing Non-Native child welfare, education and justice systems. Disproportionate numbers of our children are in care, or victims of parental, community and governmental neglect and abuse.

The issue of Native child welfare, and particularly the development of prevention programs and substitute care in Ontario, has been a low or non-existent priority for most native organizations in Ontario until very recently. Administrative, jurisdictional, legislative, political and financial roadblocks have stood in the way of progressive changes. As a result most of the work in child and family welfare areas is in the developmental stages. Although, where there has been native managed or delivered services, significant strides have been made.

The implementation of new programs and projects such as:
- [Step 1 of The Trivartite Social Services Working Group; ERA II of The Urban Task Force; Ontario Native Substance Abuse Program; Family Courtwork Program; and the reorganization of the Ontario Native Council on Justice itself makes it timely for the Native People of Ontario to carefully consider where we should be going in this critical area. A critical examination of our own personal and organizational experience plus models from other areas such as] the Spallumcheen Band, Indian Child Welfare Act should provide us with the background for dealing with the many questions that must be resolved.

In addition, the development and implementation of Ontario Corporate Policy regarding Aboriginal People: Constitution, the Young Offenders Act, and the Omnibus Bill regarding Children's Services, may provide the opportunity for the beginning of a process that will benefit our children, families and Nations for years to come. On the other hand, without an environment of trust and co-operation we may be sentencing our future generations to continual neglect and abuse.
FOREWORD

It is timely that the Ontario Native Council on Justice examines its role in the critical area of justice-related children and family services. At the 1975 Edmonton Federal/Provincial Conference, which acted as the catalyst for the establishment of the Council, there was a large number of recommendations, some of which were directed specifically to the young native offender. Most of the Recommendations, though, could have equal application within the juvenile justice field.

The Ontario proposals to the Edmonton Conference stated:

In exercising its' flexibility in procedure, the court must always keep in mind the good of the community as well as the upholding of the law. In matters of juvenile cases, the removal of a young person from the community when he returns, and the taking of children from their parents should be done by the court only with the greatest reluctance and as often as possible only where there are other members of the community that the parents are willing to allow to look after the children. The removal of children from the community is the first step toward the destruction of that community.

The 1975 Conference Recommendations Made by the Minister

- A.5 Guidelines for Action states: "In policy planning and programme development, emphasis should be placed on prevention, diversion from the Criminal Justice System to community resources, the search for further alternatives to imprisonment and the protection of young people." The Progress on Government Action Taken Since 1975 Edmonton Conference Paper, prepared by ONCJ in 1979, stated, concerning this child-related issue:

The Juvenile system seems to deal with problems in a reactive rather than preventative way. Greater importance must be given to prevention and diversion programs. Policies and definitions are important, but a real commitment to these issues must be supported by adequate funds which will enable the successful implementation of such programs. Lack of action in this area is perhaps indicative of the low priority it is given in the criminal justice system.

Since 1978, the Ministry of Community and Social Services has reduced the number of secure treatment centres for juveniles. In theory and in practice, the Ministry is limiting the number of juveniles who will be exposed to the negative effects of training school. In spite of this major initiative, much more work needs to be done, particularly in the area of alternatives to training schools and community support services.

Given the terms of reference of the Council in part is "to help identify problems and to propose solutions" in the development of justice-related issues it is clearly within the mandate of the Council to take responsibility in this area.

It is hoped that this paper will help to spark thoughtful discussion and a reassessment of our children and our future.
A SUMMARY OF QUESTIONS RAISED IN DISCUSSION PAPER

Jurisdiction

1. Is the future of our children and families a priority for our political leadership and decision makers?
2. If we can't protect and nurture our own children and families, how are we ever truly going to take responsibility for our future?
3. Ontario is developing a Corporate Policy Statement regarding Aboriginal People in anticipation of the Constitution's patriation. Can we respond? Should we?

Legislation - Young Offenders Act

1. Should the Ontario Native Council on Justice, another Ontario organization or other mechanism make a presentation to the Cabinet Standing Committee or Solicitor General regarding Implementation strategies for Young Offenders Act?
2. Should the Council or another group in Ontario carefully examine the Ontario government's pre-implementation and implementation strategies for Young Offenders Act?
3. Is there an opportunity within Ontario's Implementation plan to sensitize judges, crown attorneys and the juvenile justice system worker to the special needs of Native children and families?

Legislation - Omnibus Bill for Children's Services

1. Examples of Questions that COMSOC is asking for the Laidlaw Seminar:

   (A) Should the responsibility for the delivery of child welfare services be transferred to Native organizations?
(B) Should child welfare agencies with Native children on their caseloads be required to have Native representation on their boards of directors?

(C) Before apprehending a Native child on or off a reserve, should the agency be required to contact the chief and discuss the alternatives to apprehension?

(D) What guidelines should be in legislation to improve the court's decision-making at the dispositional stage of child protection proceedings? E.g., should there be a preference for placing Native children with Native families?

(E) Should the judicial function be transferred to Native courts? If so, under what circumstances? Should the consent of the Native family be required?

(F) Should the same standard for child protection intervention apply to both non-Native and Native families?

(G) Should the agency be required to give notice of child protection proceedings to the chief and council? Should the band have a right to intervene in any child protection proceeding involving band children?

(H) Should a Native lay panel system be established to assist the court?

2. Is COMSOC asking the appropriate people the questions?

3. Are these the appropriate questions at this time?

4. What additional questions should be asked?

5. What additional research and consultation is required to anticipate the impact of these decisions on our communities?

6. The Social Services Tripartite Program for on-reserve Indians describes a process that will enable Indian impact in the legislative process during the latter steps. Are the three parties (DIA, COMSOC and Indian organizations) prepared to go the whole six steps?

7. Is a one or two-week seminar consultation with Native experts appropriate and/or sufficient when you consider that decisions may be made that will affect our children's lives for generations to come?

8. Are the few thousands of dollars to be spent on this seminar process adequate when you consider that the present costs to the governments of Canada and Ontario on aboriginal child welfare alone are over 11 million dollars a year?

9. Is there a better process?

10. Are our communities at a point whereby they can provide the input necessary to answer such questions?

11. In spite of the Minister's assurances, it seems that the Province of Ontario is not interested or serious about consulting the Native people of Ontario in the child welfare legislation areas. What planning by Native groups must be carried out to ensure full and informed participation in the Omnibus legislation?

12. What resources - financial, informational and human - must be provided to ensure proper consultation?

13. Whose responsibility is it to provide these resources?

Indian Child Welfare Act

1. Is separate legislation similar to the American Indian Child Welfare Act necessary in order to protect our children or will existing services and proposed legislation provide the same protection?
2. What new institutions will have to be developed?

Adoption and Substitute Care

1. How can the Native organizations of Ontario work with ONWA in the critical area of adoption and substitute care?

2. Should there be, as Justice Thomas Berger recommended in the 1976 British Columbia Royal Commission into Family and Children Law:

(A) Increased involvement of Indian people at every level in the delivery of social services, including representation on child welfare review boards, community Resource Boards, and planning committees for the placement of Indian children.

(B) Support for Indian autonomy in the implementation and provision of preventive social programs in Indian communities.

(C) Recruitment and development of Indian foster and adoptive homes, as well as receiving and group homes on reserves staffed by Indian people.

(D) Hiring of more Indian consultants and line staff by social service and child welfare agencies.

(E) Increased training opportunities for Indian people in the field of social work, and recognition of the importance of "Indian expertise" in lieu of academic education.

(F) Orientation to Indian culture for non-Indian social workers who work with Indian people.

(G) Subsidized adoption as required for Indian parents wishing to adopt Indian children, and recognition of Indian custom adoptions as legal adoptions.

(H) Orientation to Indian culture for non-Indian adopting parents, and the signing of an agreement confirming their willingness to familiarize the child with his Indian heritage.

(I) Support for a network of legal services by Native people for Native people.

3. What can be done for those Native children who have already been adopted by non-Native families? Many of them are status Indians but may be unaware of this fact.

4. How can Ontario play a role in resolving the problem of the International movement of Native children for adoptive purposes?

Delivery System

1. The Tripartite Social Services Task Group have a plan for eventual Indian control of social services. Should there be a similar plan for off-reserve Native people? If so, what organization would initiate it?

2. Would it be best to deal with the issues of representation on local CAS boards through, for example, the Children's Omnibus Consultation process or let local Native organizations and bands deal with the issues as the need arises?

3. Is there some means whereby co-ordination of children-related services at the community level can be achieved?

Parenting Skills and Developmental Programs

1. How can Native parenting skills programs be made available in Ontario? Who should be doing it?

2. How can we make available more Native child welfare developmental programs in Ontario? Who should be taking the initiative?

Family Courtworkers Program

1. How can we ensure the Native Family and Courtwork Program provides the best possible services to our children and families now and on a long term basis?

2. Does the Council have a role to play in the Family and Children Courtwork Program?

3. Is the OFIFC the best structure to house the Program?
4. If OFIC is not the most appropriate structure, what structure is?

Alcohol and Substance Abuse

1. Should the Council through its member organizations be working more closely with the Alcohol and Substance Abuse Program of Ontario?

2. If so what kind of input should the Council provide?

Suggested Future Research Topics

Are the following proposed topics and questions sufficient to meet our long-term planning needs? Are there additional research areas that should be covered?

1. Paralegal Native Investigators - especially trained for child and family welfare issues.

2. Lay panels to advise judges.

3. Policy and guidelines re: family clinics. There will be more emphasis put on the predisposition assessment of juveniles. What criteria and standards will they use in making their assessments? Will they be culturally sensitive?

4. Tribal Court Systems.

5. The use of culturally appropriate treatment therapies for the Native problem child.

6. Statistics!

7. Matrimonial, Custody and Property Dispute on Indian lands.

8. The Child Welfare System and Native People - Canadian Council on Social Development - A two-year study with the following objectives:

   (A) To identify and describe the weaknesses in existing federal and provincial legislation, policies or programs which result in the provision of child welfare services to Native families which are inadequate or inappropriate.

(3) To detail some of the policy and program options which are being advocated by Native organizations in different parts of the country.

(C) To facilitate a resolution of the problems by providing information, advice and assistance to representatives of Native organizations, child welfare officials and provincial policy-makers who are attempting to develop feasible alternatives.

It is being prepared by Patrick Johnston.

Concluding Questions

1. Is there a need for an overarching organization to begin filling the gaps in the field of child welfare and justice? If not, who's going to do it?

2. Do the Native organizations and Native people of Ontario have the time, energy, finances and more importantly the commitment to build a new organization?
INTRODUCTION

It would appear that a profile of the typical native youth offender would include: a community of origin which is economically impoverished, an unstable family background, a high degree of contact with social service agencies (particularly white foster homes), limited knowledge and participation in Indian affairs, a low degree of Indian culture and a great sense of alienation from the mainstream society.

Dr. Don McCaskill
Patterns of Native Criminality
1974

He found that the large majority of wards interviewed had a long history of family instability with over 50 per cent not living with their families at the time of their committal to training school. Fifty-eight per cent stated their parents were not living together with half feeling that at least one of their parents had a drinking problem. Over 50 per cent had lived in foster homes before coming to training school. It is clear that there is a direct relationship between delinquent behaviour and the destruction of the natural family.

According to Hepworth's Canada's Social Orphans, there are approximately 300,000 status Indians and 750,000 non-status Indians and Metis in Canada—a little over three per cent of the total population. Of these, over 40 per cent (i.e. 420,000) are children under 15 years of age. In 1976/77 the number of Native children in the care of the provinces as a proportion of all children in care ranged from 39 per cent in British Columbia to 40 per cent in Alberta, 50 per cent in Saskatchewan, 60 per cent in Manitoba and nine per cent in Ontario. (However, almost 19 per cent of children in the care of Northern Ontario agencies were Native children.) Overall, more than four per cent of status Indian children and over 3.5 per cent of all Native children are in the care of the child welfare services, both provincial and federal, while the figure for all Canadian children is only 1.3 per cent.

The problem cannot be looked at in isolation . . . that the issues of education, housing, health, migration, economic development and alcoholism cannot be excluded from any discussion of the problems of the young Native offender and destruction of the natural family. It is not the purpose of this discussion paper to present a lengthy description or exploration of Native conditions today and yesterday, but it would be useful to examine some of the circumstances around the destruction of the Native family.

It has only been recently that there have been homeless children: it can be said that this has been a direct result of the Christianization of the Indian people. When Indian People have been forced to acculturate, to have to go away to school, when missionaries imposed the Christian religion upon them, then it was that Indian communities began to fragment. As a result, Indian families which had been close and intact began to fall apart and relationships were not as close as before.

The same has happened to people moving into urban areas. Indian people have in effect become homeless in the cities, and in many cases family life has been devastated. This has caused the instances of homeless children.

Professor Douglas Sanders
1974 Report for the Law Reform Commission of Canada

The systematic destruction of the Native family through the residential school system separated parents from children, broke down the extended family and created a generation of people who never had the opportunity to learn parenting skills.
Where once a healthy child-centred society thrived and developed skills, the lack of parenting skills and family support has left its scars on Indian people and the ensuing generations. The unavailability of appropriate social services, both on and off reserve (i.e. personal and family counselling, alcohol and drug abuse programs, etc.) has created a situation in which Native family life has been allowed to deteriorate to the point where apprehension of the children for their own protection seems to be the only solution, or delinquent behaviour becomes the healthy response to an unhealthy set of circumstances.
I SELECTED POPULATION CHARACTERISTICS - STATISTICAL

(A) General Population

Native population is approximately 162,000 or two per cent of the total population of Ontario.

Secretary of State estimates

Forty percent or approximately 64,800 are children under the age of 15 years.

Canadian Council on Children and Youth, Ottawa, 1978

The population by 1985 for ages under 15 years if present birth rate continues is expected to increase by approximately 36 per cent.

JAINS-Labour Market Problems of Native people in Ontario
McMaster University, 1977

(B) Regional Differences

In Northwestern Ontario, the population increase is primarily due to the higher birth rate among Native people. If present trends continue, the Native population will constitute up to 25 per cent of the Northern Region. In Kenora district, Native people are expected to comprise one-half (50 per cent) or more of the population by the year 2000.

(C) Social Assistance

In excess of 70 per cent of the total Indian population on-reserve receives social assistance.

In 1977 there were 1,169 Indian children in care in Ontario. Indian children in care constituted some 10% of the total number or ten times the national average. Nineteen per cent in Northern Ontario.

Prior Experience with the Criminal Justice System

Altogether 84% (433) of the inmates reported that they had received convictions prior to the present experience. The average age at first conviction was 16.5 years. In fact 37% (158) of the recidivists were first convicted as a juvenile. The reported dispositions of these first convictions were as follows:

- 41 suspended sentence
- 32 fine
- 121 adult probation
- 33 juvenile probation
- 160 adult incarceration
- 61 training school
Given that so many had early experience with the courts, it is not surprising that a large number of jail inmates have an extensive history of difficulties with the law. What is surprising is that 80% of the inmates admitted that alcohol contributed to their first difficulty with the law.

Clearly the current experience is a continuation of a previously established pattern. A pattern which for many was set at a very early age.

Total Estimated Costs for Native people in Ontario 1977-78*

$11,306,140

* It is reasonable to assume that at least an equal number of off-reserve aboriginal people would require services. A conservative estimate of costs related to Child Welfare Services, Day Care, etc. including off-reserve, Metis and Non-Status people 1977 - 78 as defined under G.W.A. would double the costs.
II JURISDICTION

Sub-Section 24 of Section 91 of the BNA Act reserves to Parliament the exclusive right to legislate for Indians. Section 92 of the BNA Act reserves to provincial legislatures the exclusive right to legislate on matters including what today are considered welfare matters, including child welfare. In keeping with this broad constitutional obligation, the policy of the Department of Indian Affairs has been to secure agreements with the provinces and territories to deliver child care services to Indian people. The extent of the Federal government responsibilities and in particular the level of financial responsibility for the care of Indian children has been the subject of debate and contention between the two levels of government for many years.

Prior to the end of World War II Hawthorn reports that neither the provincial Government nor private child welfare services operated to any extent on reserves. As is the case in so many other areas, reluctance on the part of provincial authorities to get involved in child welfare services to status Indians is based on financial considerations.

The 1967 Hawthorn Report, A survey of the Contemporary Indians of Canada said:

A number of provincial officials reported a pervasive fear of their political supervisors that the assumption of responsibilities was replete with such uncertain financial consequences that they would move toward agreement only with extreme caution and care.

This pervasive fear still permeates much of the present negotiations around children's services today.
In his study of the Canadian child welfare services for the Canadian Council on Social Development, Philip Hepworth outlines some of the problems resulting from gaps in jurisdiction.

Jurisdictional disputes still mean that some status Indian children do not receive the protection of the child welfare services except in life or death situations. DIAND social workers can remove children from their own homes only with the permission of their parent, whereas it is the provincial social workers who have the authority through child welfare legislation to take a child into care when protection is needed.

Theoretically, there need be no problem about apprehending status Indian children if DIAND would automatically pay for the full cost of the services. However, DIAND claims that it is responsible only for status Indian children on the reserve or off the reserve for a given purpose or limited period of time. Thus, paradoxically, some status Indian children do not receive child welfare services, or receive them only in extremis, whereas native children as a whole are over-represented in the children in care population.

The arrangements between the federal and provincial governments ... bespeak tremendous arbitrariness and variability. Whether services are delivered or not depends on the local availability of resources and the personal judgement of local personnel.

Many of the same problems facing on-reserve Indian children apply to the delivery of service to off-reserve Non-Status and Metis families and children. Although there is not the same jurisdictional question, the politics of poverty, local circumstances, local policies, and the judgement and skill of the front-line worker determine the quality and level of service provided to Non-Status, Metis, and off-reserve Indian people.

As Hepworth says,
It can fairly be argued that the same holds true for the provision of child welfare services to all children; however the social and economic circumstances of most native children appear to leave them vulnerable to more arbitrariness or inconsistency in child welfare practices than is true for other children.

With the possible inclusion of "the aboriginal and treaty rights of the aboriginal peoples of Canada (Indian, Metis and Inuit) recognized and affirmed", the jurisdictional issues may become even more clouded. In anticipation of the patriation of the Constitution, the Province of Ontario is embarking on the development of corporate policy statement as it relates to aboriginal people. Issues to be included are Social Services, Education, Resource Development, Local Government, etc. and the financial and legal implications to the province. (The patriation process is seen by some within the Provincial Government as a further opportunity to erode the powers of aboriginal people, particularly band councils.) Although this is an internal process, there is a recognition that consultation will have to take place with aboriginal people at some point in time. Completion is expected sometime within the next year before going to cabinet.

Recently, Indian Bands across the country have begun to articulate in social service terms their aspirations of self-government (jurisdiction), self-sufficiency, social responsibility and self-determination consistent with those ideas. The following examples may be cited:

(A) In Ontario, the Tripartite Task Group on Social Services states community services should be community based, Indian determined, Indian specific and band controlled. A six step plan was developed that would, over a period of time address social service needs within the framework of Indian family, community life, and political aspirations. Step 1 has been accepted unofficially in principle by the Provincial/Federal governments. Ontario receives 95% payback from the Federal Government.

Step 1: Indian Control of Indian Social Services (Tripartite)

Objective: To reinterpret the existing agreement and the provincial policy framework.

Strategy:

1. Expand the role of the band welfare administrators to include social services planning for their bands;
2. Create a tri-level, tripartite (Ministry of Community and Social Services/Department of Indian and Northern Affairs/Associations) social services planning structure to coordinate ram planning and linking to other human services programs (health/education/employment etc.);
3. Provide staff training and technical assistance to band staff and band councils in social planning and social program planning;
4. Fund Association Social Service Units to provide resources to (2) and (3) above;
5. Involve bands in the definition of field staff roles in Ministry of Community and Social Services' units and Children's Aid Societies serving Indian communities;
6. Institute a policy (MCSS) of substitute care placement that directs Indian clients to care in homes of a similar community and tribal background;
7. Employ Indian languages in service delivery;
8. Provide training in Indian language, history and culture for non-Indian staff serving Indian clients;
9. Encourage bands to create prevention programs that will strengthen family and community ties;
10. Consult bands on standards for care for Indian clients;
11. Develop Indian foster homes with band councils;
12. Increase funding for group homes and day care in Indian communities.
While accepting Step 1, with the rationalization of more effective service, there has not been acceptance of the concept of Indian control. This is perhaps due to (1) the Ontario Government's stated policy of Multi-culturalism -- everyone should be treated the same with no ethnic groups receiving special consideration, and (2) the jurisdictional implications -- recognition of Indian control would mean a perceived "giving up of power and ultimately control of resources and decision-making", and (3) financial considerations.

(B) On April 22, 1980, the Spallumcheen Indian Band of British Columbia passed a By-Law within the terms of the Indian Act R.S.P. 149 Section 81 which placed the "exclusive jurisdiction over any child custody proceeding involving an Indian child notwithstanding the residence of the child", and the Provincial Court transference of proceeding to the jurisdiction of the Indian Band where the proceeding involves the placement of an Indian child or the termination of parental rights to an Indian child. At this time it is too early to determine what effect such a by-law will have on the area of Indian provincial and federal jurisdiction. (See Appendix "A")

(C) The Report of the Ontario Working Group on Residential Services for Native People, submitted to Community and Social Services in 1981. The major recommendations for a centralized approach to native residential services was refused outright in favour of shifting the responsibility to the municipality level. The service would be subject to current legislation, municipality co-operation and financial availability. In spite of the extensive consultation and development process, there was not the outcome consistent with the goals of providing appropriate services (Native specific), increased involvement in planning and adequate financing.

(D) The Native Canadian Centre of Toronto's "Family Needs Survey 1979" and their recent experience with Child Welfare authorities in the City of Toronto has taken the Native community to a new level of commitment and awareness.

Robert S. Holota, the Counselling Unit Director of the Centre, said in a recent report: "If Indian people are to survive we must seek control of our children through the advocacy of maintaining the Indian child in the Indian community, but we must be prepared to back up our talk in court with resources to help families stay together."

QUESTIONS

1. Is the future of our children and families a priority for our political leadership and decision-makers? In the western provinces some of the native organizations have used the issue as a vehicle to further their political aspirations of self-determination.

2. If we can't protect and nurture our own children and families, how are we ever truly going to take responsibility for our future?

3. Ontario is developing a Corporate Policy Statement regarding Aboriginal People in anticipation of the Constitution's patriation - can we respond? Should we?
III LEGISLATION

In the Provincial and Federal Legislatures there are a number of significant changes being proposed and implemented that will have a major impact on the native child and family in the future. They will include the Federal Government's Young Offenders Act and the Province of Ontario's Omnibus Legislation for Children's Services. The introduction of this legislation may provide the Native people the opportunity to: (1) act as a catalyst for organizations and development of Native responses to complex issues such as child welfare and justice; (2) provide meaningful impact into (a) Legislative Developments, and (b) Implementation strategies; and (3) institutionalize program mechanisms that would better meet the needs of the Native people of Ontario.

(A) The Young Offenders Act

The Young Offenders Act (C-61) will replace the outmoded Juvenile Delinquents Act in an effort to reflect present practices and attitudes about young people. The new Act blends three principles: that young people should be held more responsible for their behaviour but not wholly accountable, that society has a right to protection and that young people have the same rights to due process of law and fair and equal treatment as adults.

Parental responsibility is explicitly recognized in the legislation. Parents will be encouraged and, if necessary, required to take an active part in any proceedings pertaining to their children.
The Act covers only those young people charged with specific offences against the Criminal Code and other Federal statutes, not offences against provincial statutes and municipal by-laws. It also states that a child below the age of 12 will no longer be considered accountable under Canadian law. Although the maximum age of criminal responsibility is set at 18, the provinces will be allowed the flexibility to select an alternate maximum. In Ontario this is expected to remain at 16.

The new legislation would formally recognize and sanction the practice of screening and diversion by providing an expanded range of sentencing alternatives together with the increased use of assessments and predisposition reports.

Unlike the Juvenile Delinquents Act, the new law would provide for both the specific right to counsel and for instruction of rights at all stages in the legal proceedings.

A wide range of sentencing dispositions are geared to meet the needs of juveniles and to take into consideration the rights of the victims of crime. The dispositions are:

- absolute discharge
- fine to a maximum of $1,000
- a restitution or compensation order for actual loss or damage to property, loss of income or special damages arising from personal injury,
- order for compensation in kind or by way of personal service,
- community service order,
- probation to a maximum of two years,
- committal to intermittent or continuous custody (not to exceed two years),
- provision for ancillary conditions (e.g. order of forfeiture of illegally possessed goods, prohibition of firearms).

In contrast to the Juvenile Delinquents Act which allows open-ended dispositions, the new Act specifies that sentences must be for a definite length of time not exceeding two years.

A provision has been included in the Act to ensure that each disposition is monitored continuously. A custody sentence will be reviewed at least once per year by the youth court or a provincial review board while non-custody dispositions are to be reassessed by the youth court.

Under the new Act, the records of a young offender will be destroyed and he or she given a "fresh start" once a sentence is completed and no further offences are committed for a qualifying period.

This uninterrupted crime-free period will be two years for those who receive summary convictions and five years for the indictable offences.

The Young Offenders Act is federal legislation presently in its second reading in Ottawa. During the second reading the Act goes to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs where submissions from the public may be heard. The deadline for submissions was August 19, 1981, although there may be a possibility of the committee accepting a brief at this late date. Mr. William Corbett (613) 995-5389 is the Clerk of the Standing Committee.
(If enough presence is brought to bear, the federal government could include special legislative considerations for aboriginal people. This process would require intensive lobbying of committee members.)

The implementation of the Young Offenders Act is the jurisdiction of the Provincial Government with the intergovernmental negotiations in process for a number of years.

The existing Implementation Plan is to have a Federal Training and Orientation Unit which would be available to the province. (Judge Coward, originally from Manitoba and Alberta, has been appointed to head the implementation.) To date there has not been any significant Native input at this level regarding the implementation strategy. This may be a productive place to intervene.

Mr. Doug McConney of the Children's Policy Unit, Community and Social Services, is responsible for the co-ordination and provincial planning around the Young Offenders Act pre-implementation. The Province is working on the assumption that the Act will be made law sometime in the Spring of 1983. Through his office a consultation paper is being developed that would outline suggestions and procedures for implementing the bill throughout the province. This paper should be available shortly for distribution. It is hoped that the public consultation and final response would be ready for the Spring of 1982, leaving approximately one year for training, preparation of material and orientation of personnel and appropriate agencies.

To date there has not been any special consideration given to aboriginal people in terms of the suggested provincial response to the Young Offenders Act or its pre-implementation stage. Mr. McConney requested the Native organizations' help in identifying appropriate agencies and organizations that copies of the consultation paper could be sent to.

Depending upon the availability of community resources, the Act would allow for positive developments in the area of:

1. Predisposition assessments - required if a judge is considering custody proceedings or movement to an adult court, otherwise it is at the discretion of the judge. This could be most aptly provided for with the aid of a Native Family Court Worker or a Native Probation and After-Care Officer; and

2. Dispositions - the flexibility allowed for in the legislation around the area of diversion options, community service orders, restitution and compensation, would require community youth services to be available; and

3. Advocacy - the Review of the Ontario Native Courtwork Program 1980 prepared for the Ontario Native Council on Justice and the Ontario Federation of Indian Friendship Centres, stated, "Under this new legislation it is our belief that courtworkers will be called upon to play a significant role in ensuring that Native young persons and their parents are adequately informed of their rights and freedoms under the Act and that they have real access to the best available legal representation and youth services."

In most Native communities these resources are not available. There have been a number of pilot projects implemented for adult offenders i.e. N'Amerind Community Service Orders and Diversion activities through Remote Northwest Programs. If our children are to have such alternatives to detention available, this program area will have to be expanded considerably.

QUESTIONS

1. Should the Ontario Native Council on Justice, another Ontario organization or mechanism make a presentation to the Cabinet Standing Committee or Solicitor General regarding implementation strategies for young offenders.

2. Should the Council or another group in Ontario carefully examine the Ontario government’s pre-implementation and implementation strategies for Young Offenders Act.

3. Is there an opportunity within Ontario’s implementation plan to sensitize judges, crown attorneys and juvenile justice system worker to the special needs of Native children and families.

(B) The Omnibus Bill (Children’s Services Act of Ontario)

In mid 1977, Children’s Services Division of Community and Social Services was given responsibility for all Children’s Services in the province. This development has required a considerable degree of policy and program consolidation and, in some cases, legislative reform as was the case in 1978 Amendments to the Child Welfare Act.

In keeping with this general thrust, the province is preparing a major piece of legislation which would consolidate provincial child legislation under one Act. Existing legislation that would be affected include:
The Charitable Institutions Act
The Child Welfare Act, 1978, as amended
Child Welfare Amendment Act, 1979
The Child Welfare Municipal Payments Continuance Act, 1976
The Children's Boarding Homes Act, 1978
The Children's Institutions Act, 1978
The Children's Mental Health Services Act, 1978
The Children's Probation Act, 1978
The Children's Residential Services Act, 1978
The Day Nurseries Act, 1978
The Developmental Services Act, 1974
The Homes for Retarded Persons Act
The Provincial Courts Act (part)
The Training Schools Act
The Unified Family Court Act (part)

The general format of the Provincial Consultation paper would include:

1. Preamble - A description of the Ministry's principles for Service Delivery, for example:

(a) For most individuals in our society, and certainly for children, the family is the elementary social group. Services to children, therefore, ought to assist rather than compete with the family. It would follow, therefore, that preventive services and other means of maintaining family integrity must have enhanced priority.

(b) Each child and each family is unique with unique needs which change from time to time. A primary factor determining the response to these must be the needs themselves and not the structures and requirements of agencies and institutions established to provide service.

(c) All persons ought to have equal access to service in spite of regional or other differences. This implies the existence or development (or at least availability) in all areas of an adequate spectrum of service from prevention to highly specialized residential care.

(d) Help is most effective when it is seen as a response to the person or family's own perception of its requirements. Service, therefore, ought to be provided in a fashion which acknowledges the necessity for the consumer to be involved in the process, adequately informed and protected against imposition of unwanted help with appropriate safeguards.

(e) All attempts to intervene in the life of a child or family must be based on the utilization of means which recognize cultural uniqueness and also minimize external perceptions of differentness because of the need for care or assistance. This means that variance across ethnic, subcultural, regional and age differences where unfathomable in terms of unique requirements.

5. Rights of Children in Care
6. Adoption and Foster Guardianship
7. Young Offenders
8. Records and Confidentiality

The provincial government is working toward legislation that can be applied to native and non-native people alike, while being aware of the jurisdictional sensitivities around status Indian people. Dick Barnhorst, Children's Policy Development, (965-6237) is the major writer for COMSOC. Professor Brad Morse, of the Faculty of Law of the University of Ottawa has produced a paper that makes specific recommendations in the area of Native Children's Services. This paper is an internal document and the only formal major research effort to date that attempts to come to grips with Native people's concerns within the context of the Omnibus legislation.

COMSOC is prepared to enter into a process with the Native people of Ontario to obtain input. They have publicly stated at the Ontario Native Women's Conference Annual Meeting 1981 that they welcomed the development of a steering committee that would provide input into the legislative consolidation process on behalf of status and urban Native people.

COMSOC has also obtained financing from the Laidlaw Foundation for a Seminar with Native experts in the social welfare field. It is their hope that through the workshop COMSOC will be able to receive specific direction on some of the major issues facing Native people today.

QUESTIONS

1. Examples of questions COMSOC is asking for the Laidlaw Seminar:

   (A) Should the responsibility for the delivery of child welfare services be transferred to Native organizations?

   (B) Should child welfare agencies with Native children on their caseloads be required to have Native representation on their boards of directors?

   (C) Before apprehending a Native child on or off a reserve, should the agency be required to contact the chief and discuss the alternatives to apprehension?

   (D) What guidelines should be in legislation to improve the court's decision-making at the dispositional stage of child protection proceedings? e.g. should there be a preference for placing Native children with Native families?

(F) Should the judicial function be transferred to Native courts? If so, under what circumstances? Should the consent of the Native family be required?

(F) Should the same standard for child protection intervention apply to both non-Native and Native families?

(G) Should the agency be required to give notice of child protection proceedings to the chief and council? Should the band have a right to intervene in any child protection proceeding involving band children?

(H) Should a Native lay panel system be established to assist the court?

2. Is COMSOC asking the appropriate people the questions?

3. Are these the appropriate questions at this time?

4. What additional questions should be asked?

5. What additional research and consultation is required to anticipate the impact of these decisions on our communities?

6. The Social Services Tripartite Program for on-reserve Indians describes a process that will enable Indian impact in the legislative process during the latter steps. Are the three parties (DIA, COMSOC and Indian organizations) prepared to go the whole six steps?

7. Is a one or two-week seminar consultation with Native experts appropriate and/or sufficient when you consider that decisions may be made that will affect our children's lives for generations to come?

8. Are the few thousands of dollars to be spent on this seminar process adequate when you consider that the present costs to the governments of Canada and Ontario on aboriginal child welfare alone are over 11 million dollars a year?

9. Is there a better process?

10. Are our communities at a point whereby they can provide the input necessary to answer such questions?
In spite of the Minister's assurances, it seems that the Province of Ontario is not interested or serious about consulting the Native people of Ontario in the child welfare legislation areas. What planning by Native groups must be carried out to ensure full and informed participation in the Omnibus legislation?

What resources - financial, informational and human - must be provided to ensure proper consultation?

Whose responsibility is it to provide these resources?

(C) Indian Child Welfare Act - Publication 95-608

Legislation

There was frequent mention of the American Indian Child Welfare Act during the consultation. The following is a history and explanation of the Act, with some of the major problems to date around its implementation.

Indian families and children, like all American families, deserve to be protected and supported by government rather than ignored or destroyed. The rights of Indian families to raise their children as they wish have not always been respected by government. Today, up to 25 percent of all Indian children are raised in foster homes or adoptive institutions. Some of these placements are unwarranted, and many could be prevented if proper social services as well as sufficient education, economic and housing resources were available to Indians.

Indian Family Defence Publication
December 1978

The above statement is a reply made by President-Elect Carter when asked whether his administration would recommend legislation and adopt administrative reform to protect and strengthen American Indian family life.

On April 8-9, 1974, Senator James Abourezk chaired the Indian-Child-Welfare-Oversight Hearings held by the Senate Subcommittee on Indian Affairs. During these hearings, there was an enormous response from Native peoples across the United States.
States supporting a change in services and protection of rights of the Native American child and his family.

On August 27, 1976, Senator Abourezk introduced the Indian Child Welfare Act of 1976. The Act was intended to:

1) eliminate Indian parent-child separation,
2) end discrimination that prevents Indian families from qualifying as foster or adoptive families, and
3) provide Indian communities with comprehensive child welfare and family-service programs.

Prior to the introduction of this Act, there were various groups in some areas throughout the country who were trying to deal, in their communities, with many of the issues which were being addressed in the 1974 hearings. One such group was the Native American Child Protection Council which was established in 1972 as a non-profit organization whose purpose was to respond to the needs of many Indian families, particularly relating to Indian children. It was run on a volunteer basis with no grants. The organization was concerned with the practices and policies of various social services agencies as they affect the lives of the Native American community, i.e.:

placement of Indian children in non-Indian foster and adoption homes with little regard or respect for the Indian child's racial and cultural heritage. Much of the Council's work was in the area of placement of Indian children in Indian homes, also recruitment of these homes. There were many groups who, through various methods, and, in most cases as volunteers, did the same type of work as the Native American Child Protection Council back in the early 70's. The introduction of the Indian Child Welfare Act, 1978, has recognized what these people have been saying for years regarding the Indian child's need for cultural identification, values and environment!

When the Indian Child Welfare Act was passed in November 1978, many Native people of the United States felt that this was a big step forward with regard to Native children's rights being protected. They felt their major victories within the Act were as follows:

(a) Tribes could take steps to intervene in Indian child cases dealing with: i) foster care placements, ii) termination of parental rights, iii) preadoptive placements, and iv) adoptive placement hearings.

(b) Any foster care or preadoptive placement preference shall be given to:
- members of the child's extended family
- other members of the Indian child's tribe
- other Indian families
- licensed Indian foster homes
- institutions approved either by the child's tribe or operated by an Indian organization

(c) Placement preferences of the Indian child or parent shall be considered. Standards applied in meeting the preference requirements shall be the prevailing social and cultural standards of the Indian community.

At a recent conference on Indian Health and Human Services,
Mr. Browning Pipestem, a Native attorney from Norman, Oklahoma, shared with the participants some of his views regarding the Indian Child Welfare Act. He felt that, in many cases, Indian people were misinterpreting the Indian Child Welfare Act and reading more into what was its actual intent and purpose, thus blowing the whole document out of proportion. He tried to make the participants aware that the Act was directed to the state court and agencies. The Act bears little relationship to the tribal system, nor does it create a standard for Indian courts. He stressed the importance of the tribal courts developing their own codes and system in dealing with Indian Child Welfare Act cases.

Basically what the Act does do is this: it appoints the Indian tribe to monitor the state court and agencies' performance regarding the use of the Indian Child Welfare Act. This, he felt, was the most important aspect of the Act, and he stressed the importance of the tribe's setting up a monitoring system which would be able to deal with cases pertaining to the tribe.

Because the Act is very new, problem areas are just beginning to surface. One such area is that of child custody. Sometimes one parent takes a case to the tribal court, and the other parent deals with the state court. This can produce different rulings and bring about a state court versus tribal court decision.

2. Tribal Court System and Support Services (resource person: Theodore Holappa, Tribal Judge, Keweenaw Bay Tribal Center, Michigan

Keweenaw Bay Tribal Court was established in 1972, and presently consists of one chief judge and one associate judge. Funds are provided by the Bureau of Indian Affairs to operate the court and assist in ongoing training of tribal judges.

Tribal Court has the final say in the administration of the Indian Child Welfare Act. It must finalize and create some type of response to the case presently before it.

The Tribal Court requires quite a strong support system, both internally and with external agencies.

The Child Welfare Committee is one such group which has been developed by the Tribal Council to assist the Tribal Court. Members of this committee are appointed by the Council from members of the community, and are responsible for all matters dealing with the Indian Child Welfare Act.

The Committee has decided it will intervene in every Indian child welfare case, but may not necessarily ask for the transfer of every case. Once the Committee intervenes, they can then request that the Court obtain files regarding the specific case. The Committee studies the case and makes a decision regarding the transfer of the case from state to tribal court. The Tribal Court holds transfer hearings on whether to accept or reject cases brought before them. If the Tribal Court accepts a case, a petition for transfer is required. The Tribal Court deals with a number of agencies regarding Indian child welfare cases, i.e.: Michigan Child Welfare Agency, Child Protection Workers. The Child Welfare Committee assists in the development of the case with agency workers. Once the case is ready, the Tribal Court begins to hear evidence and comes to some decision.

The Michigan Child Welfare agency reports to both the Child Welfare Committee and the Judge of the Tribal Court when reviewing cases, etc.

The Keweenaw Band is in the process of building a Tribal Foster Group Home for the care and treatment of Indian children.

The secretary is also authorized to make grants to Indian organizations to establish and operate off-reservation Indian child and family service programs.

Many types of these programs are just beginning to develop. The types of services offered vary in order to meet the needs of their areas. However, all programs seen address the following areas of importance:

(a) Insure that the provisions of the Indian Child Welfare Act are adhered to in the judicial systems.

(b) Decrease the number of Indian children being taken out of the family unit.

(c) Increase the number of Indian foster care homes.

(d) Operate and maintain facilities and services for counselling and treatment of Indian families and Indian foster and adoptive children.
Areas of concern in these types of programs are to be recognized by family services, courts, social services, and foster care agencies, who try to work together on cases dealing with Indian children. The training of the community regarding the rights and needs of Indian children will make the community fully aware of how the Act works.

For many years, Indian people have worked very hard for the realization of an Act of this kind, but unfortunately have failed to follow through in the area of building up resources such as Indian and foster adoptive parents. If the Indian foster adoptive placements are unavailable, the child will have to go into a non-Native environment, and it would be the responsibility of the worker to ensure that Native resources are utilized to benefit the child and his cultural differences.

Native child welfare programs are finding that adolescents are placement problems among both Native and non-Native homes. Tribes cannot or will not find the monies which are needed to run and staff programs needed to carry out full services which can respond properly to the child's needs. Shortage of qualified, trained Native staff is also a problem.

Indian tribes are going to be faced with serious questions about what kinds of services they have available.

The Indian Child Welfare Act/1978 is definitely a good piece of legislation if the Indian people are ready to take responsibility. This would require the Indian people to monitor very closely every phase of the Act, working very closely with outside agencies, and, most important, being able to build up the family and community structure and services to ensure the best possible care for their children.

QUESTIONS

1. Is separate legislation similar to the American Indian Child Welfare Act necessary in order to protect our children or will existing services and proposed legislation provide the same protection?

2. What new institutions will have to be developed?
ISSUE DEVELOPMENT AND CONCERNS

During the preparation of this discussion paper, a number of individuals both Native and non-Native were interviewed who are actively involved in shaping the future of our children in Ontario. (See Appendix E.) It was not a scientifically representative sample, as was the case in the Social Services Review or the Urban Task Force Study, but rather a cross-section of people who could provide a perspective based on experience. For the sharing of their time, thoughts and feelings, we are extremely grateful.

The following are some of the issues which surfaced during the interviewing process:

(A) Adoption and Substitute Care:

At the recent Ontario Native Women's Association annual meeting, three resolutions were passed dealing with native child welfare and adoption policies.

They read as follows:

Resolution #13

Be it resolved that the ONWA Board of Directors make recommendations to the C.A.S. to evaluate the adoption policies as they presently exist with a view to changing any part of the C.A.S. policies that adversely affect Native people from becoming potential adoptive parents.

Resolution #6

Be it resolved that ONWA work to establish a communication system between the Social Services Review Planning Group and the Task Force on Native People in the Urban Setting working group in order to ensure that the Native Child Welfare Program includes a steering committee comprised of Native people and especially ONWA Board members.
Resolution #10

Be it resolved that ONWA participate fully and strongly in all consultation regarding any changes in the adoption procedures affecting Native children and how they are to be placed in adoptive or foster homes.

Annual Meeting
Ontario Native Women's Association
July 1981

These resolutions are a landmark in that for the first time one of the major Native organizations in Ontario has stepped forward to address children's welfare issues as a priority.

Many changes must occur, both within the delivery systems and within our own communities and families for there to be a change for the better.

As of June 30, 1980, there were 1152 Native children in care in the Province of Ontario. (From the Children's Aid Society's Monthly Statement Report, Form V.) Many of our parents often feel inadequate, confused, ill-prepared and powerless in the face of the authority of Children's Aid Society's workers and the Family Court System.

Positive approaches to this problem have been tried in other parts of the country.

1. The "Duncan Project" in British Columbia hired two women from the Cowichan Band to conduct an information exchange on adoption and fostering for the Band. Though Duncan was reported at that time to have the worst housing problem of any reserve in the country, these women succeeded in finding adoptive parents for seven children and foster families for three more. Their home studies reflected Indian standards of adequate parenting, rather than material and economic concerns. An outgrowth of the project was increased Band responsibility for child welfare through the establishment of a receiving home and a hostel for families on the reserve, as well as the hiring of the two part-time social workers exclusively for the Cowichan Band.

2. From October 1975 to June 1976, the Voice of Alberta Native Women's Society, with assistance from Alberta Social Services, employed 22 Native women to promote foster cases and recruit foster homes among Native families throughout that province. Each of the women worked in her home community, determining the number of children living with their relatives who were entitled to receive foster care subsidies, explaining the foster care program to Native families in their own language, and acting as liaison between interested families and the social worker until the families felt comfortable with the worker. In addition, the women identified community programs that would help prevent family breakdown – babysitting, homemakers, recreation, health care, alcohol abuse, personal and family counselling. The project identified 257 Native families willing to provide foster care. Of these, 103 were approved by the Department of Social Services, and 79 were to be given consideration at a later date. Annie Cotton, the foster care worker for the Lethbridge area, describes some of the reasons for the success of the project:

The native families were very much in favour of the program. They thank me for taking the time to see them, that I got them involved. Everywhere I go, people stop me to know more about my duties. Who would be qualified to be foster parents? Some want to be of service, to take in foster children, because they understand about the problems. Sometimes I end up counselling couples who I happen to come by and are in the midst of disagreements. Door to door is very much appreciated as people don't have transportation. It does make me feel good, and themselves, that there is someone who cares to listen and talk.

Snowsill - Our Children. Our Future (Research Report)

The success of these two projects indicates that there are Native families able and willing to provide foster care for Native children, provided that their involvement is encouraged by Native workers in the community who speak their language and can provide the necessary support. They are considered to be model projects for the recruitment of Native homes by both the provincial social service agencies that supported them.

On May 5, 1980, Steven Unger, Executive Director, Association on American Indian Affairs, Inc. (432 Park Avenue South, New York, NY 10016) made the following summarized statement to the Commission on Immigration and Refugee Policy:

The AAIA urges the Select Commission on Immigration and Refugee Policy to investigate whether large numbers of Canadian Indian children are being brought into the United States illegally for placement in adoption and foster care.

Extensive evidence indicates that large numbers of Canadian Indian children have been brought into the United States for adoption. This has been a grave concern of Indian people on both sides of the border for a number of years. Testimony by Indian people has indicated that existing non-Indian child welfare systems in both countries have seriously undermined the Indian family structure.

In enacting the Indian Child Welfare Act in 1978, Congress legislated a long-overdue reform of Indian child-placement practices in the United States. The Act will halt the unwarranted removal of American Indian children from their families. It would be tragic, however, if the reforms adopted here, by limiting the number of Indian children available for adoption, unintentionally exacerbate pressure to transport Canadian Indian children into the United States for adoption.

The recommendations of the Association ask the Commission to examine the scope of the problem, and to seek legislation to provide the same safeguards for Canadian Indian parents and children as are accorded American parents in the United States.

QUESTIONS

1. How can the Native organizations of Ontario work with ONWA in the critical area of adoption and substitute care?

2. Should there be, as Justice Thomas Berger recommended in the 1975 British Columbia Royal Commission into Family and Child Law:
(a) Increased involvement of Indian people at every level in the delivery of social services, including representation on child welfare review boards, community resource boards, and planning committees for the placement of Indian children.

(b) Support for Indian autonomy in the implementation and provision of preventive social programs in the Indian communities.

(c) Recruitment and development of Indian foster and adoptive homes, as well as receiving and group homes on reserves staffed by Indian people.

(d) Hiring of more Indian consultants and line staff by social service and child welfare agencies.

(e) Increased training opportunities for Indian people in the field of social work, and recognition of the importance of "Indian expertise" in lieu of academic education.

(f) Orientation to Indian culture for non-Indian social workers who work with Indian people.

(g) Subsidized adoption as required for Indian parents wishing to adopt Indian children, and recognition of Indian custom adoptions as legal adoptions.

(h) Orientation to Indian culture for non-Indian adopting parents, and the signing of an agreement confirming their willingness to familiarize the child with his Indian heritage.

(i) Support for a network of legal services by Native people for Native people.

3. What can be done for those Native children who have already been adopted by non-Native families? Many of them are status Indians but may be unaware of this fact.

4. How can Ontario play a role in the resolution of the problem of the international movement of Native children for adoptive purposes?

(B) Delivery Systems

At this time, the number of Native people working for Children's Aid Societies across the province is unavailable, although it is quite apparent that some jurisdictions have made efforts to hire Native staff, and the number is increasing.
With regard to representation on the Boards of Directors for Children's Aid Societies, the situation ranges from the Six Nation Children's Aid Society, where Indian people have been delivering services through their own society for many years, to no Native representation, despite the significant Native case-load. In Northwestern Ontario, Grand Council Treaty #3 and its bands have had to apply considerable pressure to obtain more than token representation on a Children's Aid Society Board of Directors in their region.

During the interviews, it was pointed out that there was a definite need for greater co-operation and co-ordination of services at the community level. In many areas the trust level among the different agencies and workers is very low, which works against the healthy development of child, family and community. In some cases, there is a fear among front-line workers that the sharing of information with particular agencies or individuals will hurt the child or family in possible future legal proceedings around their case. In addition, Native organizations and staff are frequently perceived as having no status by Social Service agencies. This attitude of superiority limits co-operation.

QUESTIONS

1. The Tripartite Social Services Task Group has a plan for eventual Indian control of social services. Should there be a similar plan for off-reserve Native people? If so, what organization would initiate it?

2. Would it be best to deal with the issues of representation on local C.A.S. boards through, for example, the Children's Services Omnibus Consultation process, or let local Native organizations and bands deal with the issues
Inmate Survey - ONCJ 1981: 80 per cent of inmates said “alcohol contributed to first problem with the law.”

QUESTIONS

1. Should the Council, through its member organizations, be working more closely with the Alcohol and Substance Abuse Program of Ontario?

2. If so, what kind of input should the Council provide?

Counselling and Homemakers' Services

A number of people mentioned the need for juvenile counselling and family counselling (crisis and social). In Moose Factory, for example, there is a Native Adolescence Counsellor (Mental Health Worker) through Queen's University. She accepts referrals from C.A.S., the school and the psychiatric clinic. Much of the preventive work is around cultural events. Shawl-making for discipline-problem girls. Informal once-a-week discussion groups. Drum group, feasts, youth-elder gatherings, concerts. They require a male counsellor. The boys have a difficult time relating to a young woman counsellor.

Homemakers have been identified as being required where there are families that need:

1. help in terms of housekeeping and child-care, otherwise losing the children for neglect, or

2. in aiding a mother to readjust to the return of children from care. This would also require financing to recruit and train the homemakers.
QUESTIONS

1. How can we ensure the Native Family and Courtwork Program provides the best possible service to our children and families now and on a long-term basis?

2. Does the Council have a role to play in the Family and Children Courtwork Program?

3. Is the OFIPC the best structure to house the Program?

4. If OFIPC is not the most appropriate structure, what structure is?

(E) Ontario Native Substance Abuse Program

This program is presently in the process of negotiating funds, restructuring and developing its long-term goals. The community-based programs have alternative programs for youth and adults. Depending on the priorities of the communities and the staffing available, some youth prevention work has been initiated. In many communities, it is the only form of youth services available. In many of our communities, the pattern of substance abuse is emerging among children at increasingly younger ages:

- Youth with "nothing to do" (neglected)
- Gas, glue, alcohol, etc.
- Stealing
- Violent Behaviour
- Vandalism
- Trouble with the law

The relationship between substance abuse, alcohol abuse and the Native offender is well documented, i.e.: worked out jointly by the local C.A.S. and Band Councils. Walpole Island and Osnaburgh have recently submitted proposals under the same program. Such developmental programs seem to provide the opportunity for the communities to start seriously to come to grips with their own problems in their own way.

QUESTIONS

1. How can Native parenting skills programs be made available in Ontario? Who should be doing it?

2. How can we make available more Native child welfare developmental programs in Ontario? Who should be taking the initiative?

(D) Family Courtworkers Program

The Ontario Federation of Indian Friendship Centers has taken the initiative by proposing a pilot project to include five family courtworkers to be housed out of selected friendship centers and funded by the Province of Ontario. Clearly, the need has been demonstrated in the Review of the Ontario Native Courtworker Program and many other recent studies. This is a new program and potentially can have a great impact on how our children and families, both on reserves and off, are treated by the court system. The general feeling was that this program should be directed more to child welfare rather than justice areas as such. This suggestion is based upon perceived need. An overriding concern was that it be done right or not at all. This concern held true for all programs related to children.
as the need arises?

3. Is there some means whereby co-ordination of children-related services at the community level can be achieved?

(C) Parenting Skills and Developmental Programs

In a number of places across the country, a number of programs have been started to intervene at the parent level in order to attempt to break the patterns of child neglect and the disruption of the natural family by the judicial and welfare system.

There is an interest within the Community Resource Center in Thunder Bay, directed by Mrs. Edith MacLeod, to get a pilot project going related to developing parenting and coping skills for Native women in Northern Ontario. The Native Counselling Services of Alberta has a program entitled Family Life Improvement Program (FLIP) which focuses on helping mothers deal more effectively with their children. Through the program, they hope to reduce parental abuse and neglect and to support the parent during the process of reuniting with a child who has been removed from the family.

Through the COMSOC's On-Reserve Child Welfare Program, funded 95% by the Department of Indian Affairs through the Social Services agreement, a number of community-based, culturally appropriate services are being implemented throughout reserves across Ontario. The Rainy River pilot program evaluation showed "a reduction in non-Native off-reserve care and an increase in on-reserve care particularly in the placement of foster children." The programs are

This was frequently described as a need.

Justice-Related Education in the Schools - i.e.: Rights

Police Behaviour

Police behaviour was in many cases in the North described as brutal, or there was use of excessive force. There was concern about the children losing respect for the law when they see their parents hurt by the police. One person felt that there should be an inquiry into police brutality in the North. It affects not only Native people but non-Native people also.

Youth Development

A number of communities have strong Native youth clubs, as in North Bay and Thunder Bay. Youth Resource Committees have also been developed. Leadership, responsibility, inter-personal and social skills are some of the benefits to participants.

The Li'l Beavers' program, this past year, has been decentralized to Community and Social Services District Offices, with each center responsible for negotiating their own contract. The program is in the process of expansion with five new clubs to open in 1982, and a potential for more in 1983. This may mean some reserves will be developing these unique cultural, educational, recreational, and preventive programs in the next few years.

insensitive to the realities of Indian life. There is an assumption that because a parent drinks a lot that they are incapable as parents. Most frequently, there is no advocate for the Native person or interpreter of Native life that can help the judge or agency make an appropriate response.

(Suggest Future Research Topics)

Are the following proposed topics and questions sufficient to meet our long-term needs? Are there additional research areas that should be covered?

1. Paralegal Native Investigators—especially trained for child and family welfare issues.
2. Lay panels to advise judges.
3. Policy and guidelines re: family clinics. There will be more emphasis put on the predisposition assessment of juveniles. What criteria and standards will they use in making their assessments? Will they be culturally sensitive?
4. Tribal Court Systems.
5. The use of culturally appropriate treatment therapies for the Native problem child.
6. Statistics!
7. Matrimonial, Custody and Property Dispute on Indian lands.
8. The Child Welfare System and Native People—Canadian Council on Social Development—a two-year study with the following objectives:
a) To identify and describe the weaknesses in existing federal and provincial legislation, policies or programs which result in the provision of child welfare services to Native families which are inadequate or inappropriate.

b) To detail some of the policy and program options which are being advocated by Native organizations in different parts of the country.

c) To facilitate a resolution of the problems by providing information, advice and assistance to representatives of Native organizations, child welfare officials and provincial policy-makers who are attempting to develop feasible alternatives.

It is being prepared by Patrick Johnston.

CONCLUDING QUESTIONS

1. Is there a need for an overarching organization to begin filling the gaps in the field of child welfare and justice? If not, who is going to do it? (See Appendix "C" - "Alberta Model")

2. Do the Native organizations and Native people of Ontario have the time, energy, finances, and, more important, the commitment to build a new organization?

V IMMEDIATE ALTERNATIVES FOR COUNCIL

1. The Council could set up a Working Committee to examine discussion paper in more depth and report back to Council at next meeting.

2. The Council, in conjunction with ONWA, could organize the response of Native organizations to the proposed Omnibus Bill. This process may include conference and steering committee mechanism.

3. The Council could set some priorities now and through a

APPENDIX "E"

INDIAN CHILD WELFARE ACT OF 1978

For Legislative History of Act, see p. 3530

An Act to establish standards for the placement of Indian children in foster or adoptive homes, to prevent the breakup of Indian families, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "Indian Child Welfare Act of 1978".

Sec. 2. Recognizing the special relationship between the United States and the Indian tribes and their members and the Federal responsibility to Indian people, the Congress finds—

(1) that clause 3, section 8, article I of the United States Constitution provides that "The Congress shall have Power * * * To regulate Commerce * * * with Indian tribes" and, through this and other constitutional authority, Congress has plenary power over Indian affairs;

(2) that Congress, through statutes, treaties, and the general course of dealing with Indian tribes, has assumed the responsibility for the protection and preservation of Indian tribes and their resources;

(3) that there is no resource that is more vital to the continued existence and integrity of Indian tribes than their children and that the United States has a direct interest, as trustee, in protecting Indian children who are members of or are eligible for membership in an Indian tribe;

(4) that an alarmingly high percentage of Indian families are broken up by the removal, often unwarranted, of their children from them by nontribal public and private agencies and that an alarmingly high percentage of such children are placed in non-Indian foster and adoptive homes and institutions; and

(5) that the States, exercising their recognized jurisdiction over Indian child custody proceedings through administrative and judicial bodies, have often failed to recognize the essential tribal relations of Indian people and the cultural and social standards prevailing in Indian communities and families.

Sec. 3. The Congress hereby declares that it is the policy of this Nation to protect the best interests of Indian children and to promote the stability and security of Indian tribes and families by the establishment of minimum Federal standards for the removal of Indian children from their families and the placement of such children in foster or adoptive homes which will reflect the unique values of Indian culture, and by providing for assistance to Indian tribes in the operation of child and family service programs.

Sec. 4. For the purposes of this Act, except as may be specifically provided otherwise, the term—

(1) "child custody proceeding" shall mean and include—

(i) "foster care placement" which shall mean any action removing an Indian child from its parent or Indian custodian for temporary placement in a foster home or institution or the home of a guardian or conservator where the parent or Indian custodian cannot have the child returned upon demand, but where parental rights have not been terminated;
(ii) "termination of parental rights" which shall mean any action resulting in the termination of the parent-child relationship;

(iii) "preadoptive placement" which shall mean the temporary placement of an Indian child in a foster home or institution after the termination of parental rights, but prior to or in lieu of adoptive placement; and

(iv) "adoptive placement" which shall mean the permanent placement of an Indian child for adoption, including any action resulting in a final decree of adoption.

Such term or terms shall not include a placement based upon an act which, if committed by an adult, would be deemed a crime or upon an award, in a divorce proceeding, of custody to one of the parents.

(2) "extended family member" shall be as defined by the law or custom of the Indian child's tribe or, in the absence of such law or custom, shall be a person who has reached the age of eighteen and who is the Indian child's grandparent, aunt or uncle, brother or sister, brother-in-law or sister-in-law, niece or nephew, first or second cousin, or stepparent;

(3) "Indian" means any person who is a member of an Indian tribe, or who is an Alaska Native and a member of a Regional Corporation as defined in section 7 of the Alaska Native Claims Settlement Act (85 Stat. 688, 689);

(4) "Indian child" means any unmarried person who is under age eighteen and is either (a) a member of an Indian tribe or (b) is eligible for membership in an Indian tribe and is the biological child of a member of an Indian tribe;

(5) "Indian child's tribe" means (a) the Indian tribe in which an Indian child is a member or eligible for membership or (b) in the case of an Indian child who is a member of or eligible for membership in more than one tribe, the Indian tribe with which the Indian child has the more significant contacts;

(6) "Indian custodian" means any Indian person who has legal custody of an Indian child under tribal law or custom or under State law or to whom temporary physical care, custody, and control has been transferred by the parent of such child;

(7) "Indian organization" means any group, association, partnership, corporation, or other legal entity owned or controlled by Indians, or a majority of whose members are Indians;

(8) "Indian tribe" means any Indian tribe, band, nation, or other organized group or community of Indians recognized as eligible for the services provided to Indians by the Secretary because of their status as Indians, including any Alaska Native village as defined in section 3(c) of the Alaska Native Claims Settlement Act (85 Stat. 688, 689), as amended;

(9) "parent" means any biological parent or parents of an Indian child or any Indian person who has lawfully adopted an Indian child, including adoptions under tribal law or custom. It does not include the unwed father where paternity has not been acknowledged or established;

(10) "reservation" means Indian country as defined in section 1151 of title 18, United States Code and any lands, not covered under such section, title to which is either held by the United States in trust for the benefit of any Indian tribe or individual or held by any Indian tribe or individual subject to a restriction by the United States against alienation;
"Secretary" means the Secretary of the Interior; and "tribal court" means a court with jurisdiction over child custody proceedings and which is either a Court of Indian Offenses, a court established and operated under the code or custom of an Indian tribe, or any other administrative body of a tribe which is vested with authority over child custody proceedings.

TITLE I—CHILD CUSTODY PROCEEDINGS

Sec. 101. (a) An Indian tribe shall have jurisdiction exclusive as to any State over any child custody proceeding involving an Indian child who resides or is domiciled within the reservation of such tribe, except where such jurisdiction is otherwise vested in the State by existing Federal law. Where an Indian child is a ward of a tribal court, the Indian tribe shall retain exclusive jurisdiction, notwithstanding the residence or domicile of the child.

(b) In any State court proceeding for the foster care placement of, or termination of parental rights to, an Indian child not domiciled or residing within the reservation of the Indian child's tribe, the court, in the absence of good cause to the contrary, shall transfer such proceeding to the jurisdiction of the tribe, absent objection by either parent, upon the petition of either parent or the Indian custodian of the Indian child's tribe: Provided, That such transfer shall be subject to declination by the tribal court of such tribe.

(c) In any State court proceeding for the foster care placement of, or termination of parental rights to, an Indian child, the Indian custodian of the child and the Indian child's tribe shall have a right to intervene at any point in the proceeding.

(d) The United States, every State, every territory or possession of the United States, and every Indian tribe shall give full faith and credit to the public acts, records, and judicial proceedings of any Indian tribe applicable to Indian child custody proceedings to the same extent that such entities give full faith and credit to the public acts, records, and judicial proceedings of any other entity.

Sec. 102. (a) In any involuntary proceeding in a State court, where the court knows or has reason to know that an Indian child is involved, the party seeking the foster care placement of, or termination of parental rights to, an Indian child shall notify the parent or Indian custodian and the Indian child's tribe, by registered mail with return receipt requested, of the pending proceedings and of their right of intervention. If the identity or location of the parent or Indian custodian and the tribe cannot be determined, such notice shall be given to the Secretary in like manner, who shall have fifteen days after receipt to provide the requisite notice to the parent or Indian custodian and the tribe. No foster care placement or termination of parental rights proceeding shall be held until at least ten days after receipt of notice by the parent or Indian custodian and the tribe or the Secretary: Provided, That the parent or Indian custodian or the tribe shall, upon request, be granted up to twenty additional days to prepare for such proceeding.

(b) In any case in which the court determines indigency, the parent or Indian custodian shall have the right to court-appointed counsel in any removal, placement, or termination proceeding. The court may, in its discretion, appoint counsel for the child upon a finding that such appointment is in the best interest of the child. Where State law makes no provision for appointment of counsel in such proceedings, the court...
iliailieromptly notify the Secretary upon appointment of counsel, and the Secretary, upon certification of the presiding judge, shall pay reasonable fees and expenses out of funds which may be appropriated pursuant to the Act of November 2, 1921 (42 Stat. 208; 25 U.S.C. 13).

(c) Each party to a foster care placement or termination of parental rights proceeding under State law involving an Indian child shall have the right to examine all reports or other documents filed with the court upon which any decision with respect to such action may be based.

(d) Any party seeking to effect a foster care placement of, or termination of parental rights to, an Indian child under State law shall satisfy the court that active efforts have been made to provide remedial services and rehabilitative programs designed to prevent the breakup of the Indian family and that these efforts have proved unsuccessful.

(e) No foster care placement may be ordered in such proceeding in the absence of a determination, supported by clear and convincing evidence, including testimony of qualified expert witnesses, that the continued custody of the child by the parent or Indian custodian is likely to result in serious emotional or physical damage to the child.

(f) No termination of parental rights may be ordered in such proceeding in the absence of a determination, supported by evidence beyond a reasonable doubt, including testimony of qualified expert witnesses, that the continued custody of the child by the parent or Indian custodian is likely to result in serious emotional or physical damage to the child.

Parental rights, voluntary termination.
25 USC 1913.

Parental rights, voluntary termination.
25 USC 1914.

Sect. 103. (a) Where any parent or Indian custodian voluntarily consents to a foster care placement or to termination of parental rights, such consent shall not be valid unless executed in writing and recorded before a judge of a court of competent jurisdiction and accompanied by the presiding judge's certificate that the terms and consequences of the consent were fully explained in detail and were fully understood by the parent or Indian custodian. The court shall also certify that either the parent or Indian custodian fully understood the explanation in English or that it was interpreted into a language that the parent or Indian custodian understood. Any consent given prior to, or within ten days after, birth of the Indian child shall not be valid.

(b) Any parent or Indian custodian may withdraw consent to a foster care placement under State law at any time and, upon such withdrawal, the child shall be returned to the parent or Indian custodian.

(c) In any voluntary proceeding for termination of parental rights to, or adoptive placement of, an Indian child, the consent of the parent may be withdrawn for any reason at any time prior to the entry of a final decree of termination or adoption, as the case may be, and the child shall be returned to the parent.

(d) After the entry of a final decree of adoption of an Indian child in any State court, the parent may withdraw consent thereto upon the grounds that consent was obtained through fraud or duress and may petition the court to vacate such decree. Upon a finding that such consent was obtained through fraud or duress, the court shall vacate such decree and return the child to the parent. No adoption which has been effective for at least two years may be invalidated under the provisions of this subsection unless otherwise permitted under State law.

Parental rights, voluntary termination.
25 USC 1914.

Sect. 104. Any Indian child who is the subject of any action for foster care placement or termination of parental rights under State law, any parent or Indian custodian from whose custody such child was removed, and the Indian child's tribe may petition any court of com-patent jurisdiction to invalidate such action upon a showing that such action violated any provision of sections 101, 102, and 103 of this Act.

Sec. 105. (a) In any adoptive placement of an Indian child under State law, a preference shall be given, in the absence of good cause to the contrary, to a placement with (1) a member of the child’s extended family; (2) other members of the Indian child’s tribe; or (3) other Indian families.

(b) Any child accepted for foster care or preadoptive placement shall be placed in the least restrictive setting which most approximates a family and in which his special needs, if any, may be met. The child shall also be placed within reasonable proximity to his or her home, taking into account any special needs of the child. In any foster care or preadoptive placement, a preference shall be given, in the absence of good cause to the contrary, to a placement with—

(i) a member of the Indian child’s extended family;
(ii) a foster home licensed, approved, or specified by the Indian child’s tribe;
(iii) an Indian foster home licensed or approved by an authorized non-Indian licensing authority; or
(iv) an institution for children approved by an Indian tribe or operated by an Indian organization which has a program suitable to meet the Indian child’s needs.

(c) In the case of a placement under subsection (a) or (b) of this section, if the Indian child’s tribe shall establish a different order of preference by resolution, the agency or court effecting the placement shall follow such order so long as the placement is the least restrictive setting appropriate to the particular needs of the child, as provided in subsection (b) of this section. Where appropriate, the preference of the Indian child or parent shall be considered: Provided, That where a consenting parent evidences a desire for anonymity, the court or agency shall give weight to such desire in applying the preferences.

(d) The standards to be applied in meeting the preference requirements of this section shall be the prevailing social and cultural standards of the Indian community in which the parent or extended family resides or with which the parent or extended family members maintain social and cultural ties.

(a) A record of each such placement, under State law, of an Indian child shall be maintained by the State in which the placement was made, evidencing the efforts to comply with the order of preference specified in this section. Such record shall be made available at any time upon the request of the Secretary or the Indian child’s tribe.

Sec. 106. (a) Notwithstanding State law to the contrary, when a final decree of adoption of an Indian child has been vacated or set aside or the adoptive parents voluntarily consent to the termination of their parental rights to the child, a biological parent or prior Indian custodian may petition for return of custody and the court shall grant such petition unless there is a showing, in a proceeding subject to the provisions of section 102 of this Act, that such return of custody is not in the best interests of the child.

(b) Whenever an Indian child is removed from a foster care home or institution for the purpose of further foster care, preadoptive, or adoptive placement, such placement shall be in accordance with the provisions of this Act, except in the case where an Indian child is being returned to the parent or Indian custodian from whose custody the child was originally removed.

Sec. 107. Upon application by an Indian individual who has reached the age of eighteen and who was the subject of an adoptive placement, the court which entered the final decree shall inform such individual of the tribal affiliation. If any, of the individual's biological parents and provide such other information as may be necessary to protect any rights flowing from the individual's tribal relationship.

Sect. 108. (a) Any Indian tribe which became subject to State jurisdiction pursuant to the provisions of the Act of August 15, 1933 (67 Stat. 588), as amended by title IV of the Act of April 11, 1968 (82 Stat. 73, 78), or pursuant to any other Federal law, may reassert jurisdiction over child custody proceedings. Before any Indian tribe may reassert jurisdiction over Indian child custody proceedings, such tribe shall present to the Secretary for approval a petition to reassert such jurisdiction which includes a suitable plan to exercise such jurisdiction.

(b) (1) In considering the petition and feasibility of the plan of a tribe under subsection (a), the Secretary may consider, among other things:

(i) whether or not the tribe maintains a membership roll or alternative provision for clearly identifying the persons who will be affected by the reassertion of jurisdiction by the tribe;

(ii) the size of the reservation or former reservation area which will be affected by retrocession and reassertion of jurisdiction by the tribe;

(iii) the population base of the tribe, or distribution of the population in homogeneous communities or geographic areas; and

(iv) the feasibility of the plan in cases of multitribal occupation of a single reservation or geographic area.

(2) In those cases where the Secretary determines that the jurisdictional provisions of section 101(a) of this Act are not feasible, he is authorized to accept partial retrocession which will enable tribes to exercise referral jurisdiction as provided in section 101(b) of this Act or, where appropriate, will allow them to exercise exclusive jurisdiction provided in section 101(a) over limited community or geographic areas without regard for the reservation status of the area affected.

(c) If the Secretary approves any petition under subsection (a), the Secretary shall publish notice of such approval in the Federal Register and shall notify the affected State or States of such approval. The Indian tribe concerned shall reassert jurisdiction sixty days after publication in the Federal Register of notice of approval. If the Secretary disapproves any petition under subsection (a), the Secretary shall provide such technical assistance as may be necessary to enable the tribe to correct any deficiency which the Secretary identified as a cause for disapproval.

(d) Assumption of jurisdiction under this section shall not affect any action or proceeding over which a court has already assumed jurisdiction, except as may be provided pursuant to any agreement under section 109 of this Act.

Sect. 109. (a) States and Indian tribes are authorized to enter into agreements with each other respecting care and custody of Indian children and jurisdiction over child custody proceedings, including agreements which may provide for orderly transfer of jurisdiction on a case-by-case basis and agreements which provide for concurrent jurisdiction between States and Indian tribes.

(b) Such agreements may be revoked by either party upon one hundred and eighty days' written notice to the other party. Such revocation shall not affect any action or proceeding over which a court has already assumed jurisdiction, unless the agreement provides otherwise.

Sec. 110. Where any petitioner in an Indian child custody proceeding before a State court has improperly removed the child from custody of the parent or Indian custodian or has improperly retained custody after a visit or other temporary relinquishment of custody, the court shall decline jurisdiction over such petition and shall forthwith return the child to his parent or Indian custodian unless returning the child to his parent or custodian would subject the child to a substantial and immediate danger or threat of such danger.

Sec. 111. In any case where State or Federal law applicable to a child custody proceeding under State or Federal law provides a higher standard of protection to the rights of the parent or Indian custodian of an Indian child than the rights provided under this title, the State or Federal court shall apply the State or Federal standard.

Sec. 112. Nothing in this title shall be construed to prevent the emergency removal of an Indian child who is a resident of or is domiciled on a reservation, but temporarily located off the reservation, from his parent or Indian custodian or the emergency placement of such child in a foster home or institution, under applicable State law, in order to prevent imminent physical damage or harm to the child. The State authority, official, or agency involved shall insure that the emergency removal or placement terminates immediately when such removal or placement is no longer necessary to prevent imminent physical damage or harm to the child and shall expeditiously initiate a child custody proceeding subject to the provisions of this title, transfer the child to the jurisdiction of the appropriate Indian tribe, or restore the child to the parent or Indian custodian, as may be appropriate.

Sec. 113. None of the provisions of this title, except sections 101(a), 108, and 109, shall affect a proceeding under State law for foster care placement, termination of parental rights, preadoptive placement, or adoptive placement which was initiated or completed prior to one hundred and eighty days after the enactment of this Act, but shall apply to any subsequent proceeding in the same matter or subsequent proceedings affecting the custody or placement of the same child.

TITLE II—INDIAN CHILD AND FAMILY PROGRAMS

Sec. 201. (a) The Secretary is authorized to make grants to Indian tribes and organizations in the establishment and operation of Indian child and family service programs on or near reservations and in the preparation and implementation of child welfare codes. The objective of every Indian child and family service program shall be to prevent the breakup of Indian families and, in particular, to insure that the permanent removal of an Indian child from the custody of his parent or Indian custodian shall be a last resort. Such child and family service programs may include, but are not limited to—

1. a system for licensing or otherwise regulating Indian foster and adoptive homes;
2. the operation and maintenance of facilities for the counseling and treatment of Indian families and for the temporary custody of Indian children;
(3) family assistance, including homemaker and home counselors, day care, afterschool care, and employment, recreational activities, and respite care;
(4) home improvement programs;
(5) the employment of professional and other trained personnel to assist the tribal court in the disposition of domestic relations and child welfare matters;
(6) education and training of Indians, including tribal court judges and staff, in skills relating to child and family assistance and service programs;
(7) a subsidy program under which Indian adoptive children may be provided support comparable to that for which they would be eligible as foster children, taking into account the appropriate State standards of support for maintenance and medical needs; and
(8) guidance, legal representation, and advice to Indian families involved in tribal, State, or Federal child custody proceedings.

(b) Funds appropriated for use by the Secretary in accordance with this section may be utilized as non-Federal matching share in connection with funds provided under titles IV-B and XX of the Social Security Act or under any other Federal financial assistance programs which contribute to the purpose for which such funds are authorized to be appropriated for use under this Act. The provision or possibility of assistance under this Act shall not be a basis for the denial or reduction of any assistance otherwise authorized under titles IV-B and XX of the Social Security Act or any other federally assisted program. For purposes of qualifying for assistance under a federally assisted program, licensing or approval of foster or adoptive homes or institutions by an Indian tribe shall be deemed equivalent to licensing or approval by a State.

Sec. 202. The Secretary is also authorized to make grants to Indian organizations to establish and operate off-reservation Indian child and family service programs which may include, but are not limited to—
(1) a system for regulating, maintaining, and supporting Indian foster and adoptive homes; including a subsidy program under which Indian adoptive children may be provided support comparable to that for which they would be eligible as Indian foster children, taking into account the appropriate State standards of support for maintenance and medical needs;
(2) the operation and maintenance of facilities and services for counseling and treatment of Indian families and Indian foster and adoptive children;
(3) family assistance, including homemaker and home counselors, day care, afterschool care, and employment, recreational activities, and respite care; and
(4) guidance, legal representation, and advice to Indian families involved in child custody proceedings.

Sec. 203. (a) In the establishment, operation, and funding of Indian child and family service programs, both on and off reservation, the Secretary may enter into agreements with the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare, and the latter Secretary is hereby authorized for such purposes to use funds appropriated for similar programs of the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare: Provided, That authority to make payments pursuant to such agreements shall be effective only to the extent and in such amounts as may be provided in advance by appropriation Acts.
(b) Funds for the purposes of this Act may be appropriated pursuant to the provisions of the Act of November 2, 1921 (42 Stat. 208), 25 USC 13, as amended.

Sec. 204. For the purposes of sections 203 and 203 of this title, the term "Indian" shall include persons defined in section 4(c) of the Indian Health Care Improvement Act of 1976 (90 Stat. 1400, 1401).

TITLE III—RECORDKEEPING, INFORMATION AVAILABILITY, AND TIMETABLES

Sec. 301. (a) Any State court entering a final decree or order in any Indian child adoptive placement after the date of enactment of this Act shall provide the Secretary with a copy of such decree or order together with such other information as may be necessary to show—

1. the name and tribal affiliation of the child;
2. the names and addresses of the biological parents;
3. the names and addresses of the adoptive parents; and
4. the identity of any agency having files or information relating to such adoptive placement.

Where the court records contain an affidavit of the biological parent or parents that their identity remain confidential, the court shall include such affidavit with the other information. The Secretary shall insure that the confidentiality of such information is maintained and such information shall not be subject to the Freedom of Information Act (5 U.S.C. 552), as amended.

(b) Upon the request of the adopted Indian child over the age of eighteen, the adoptive or foster parents of an Indian child, or an Indian tribe, the Secretary shall disclose such information as may be necessary for the enrollment of an Indian child in the tribe in which the child may be eligible for enrollment or for determining any rights or benefits associated with that membership. Where the documents relating to such child contain an affidavit from the biological parent or parents requesting anonymity, the Secretary shall certify to the Indian child's tribe, where the information warrants, that the child's parentage and other circumstances of birth entitle the child to enrollment under the criteria established by such tribe.

Sec. 302. Within one hundred and eighty days after the enactment of this Act, the Secretary shall promulgate such rules and regulations as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this Act.
TITLE IV—MISCELLANEOUS

Sec. 401. (a) It is the sense of Congress that the absence of locally convenient day schools may contribute to the breakup of Indian families.

(b) The Secretary is authorized and directed to prepare, in consultation with appropriate agencies in the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare, a report on the feasibility of providing Indian children with schools located near their homes, and to submit such report to the Select Committee on Indian Affairs of the United States Senate and the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs of the United States House of Representatives within two years from the date of this Act. In developing this report the Secretary shall give particular consideration to the provision of educational facilities for children in the elementary grades.

Sec. 402. Within sixty days after enactment of this Act, the Secretary shall send to the Governor, chief justice of the highest court of appeal, and the attorney general of each State a copy of this Act, together with committee reports and an explanation of the provisions of this Act.

Sec. 403. If any provision of this Act or the applicability thereof is held invalid, the remaining provisions of this Act shall not be affected thereby.

WHAT IS NATIVE COUNSELLING SERVICES OF ALBERTA?

Native Counselling Services of Alberta is an organization consisting mainly of people of Native ancestry. The primary function of N.C.S.A. is to assist Native people in conflict with the law prior to, during and following their appearance in court.

Native Counselling Services of Alberta is registered under the Societies Act of Alberta. It is non-political, non-sectarian, and it is not directly affiliated with other political and non-political Native organizations. N.C.S.A., however, supports and encourages the development of other Native organizations. N.C.S.A. is a non-profit organization.

THERE IS NO CHARGE FOR SERVICES.

HOW IS N.C.S.A. GOVERNED?

Unlike other Native organizations, N.C.S.A. does not have elected board members. The N.C.S.A. board is selected from the general Native public throughout the province upon the recommendations of the Indian and Metis Associations of Alberta.

The seven member board consists of a President, Vice-President, Secretary-Treasurer and four other members. The board is comprised of Status and Non-Status Indian and Metis people. There is no set term of office for the N.C.S.A. board, although the executive is elected for a one year term.

The main responsibility of the N.C.S.A. Board is to set operation procedures, policies and guidelines for the Society, such as terms and conditions of employment. It evaluates the effectiveness of existing programs, sanctions new programs and ensures N.C.S.A. is administered in an effective and efficient manner.

WHERE IS N.C.S.A. LOCATED?

The head office of Native Counselling Services of Alberta is in Edmonton, Alberta at 9912 - 106 Street. Courtworkers are located throughout the province on or near Indian Reserves, Metis colonies, and in areas where there is a large Native population. Branch offices are located in Brockel, Calgary, Fort Macleod, Fort McMurray, Gleichen, Grand Centre, Grande Prairie, High Level, High Prairie, Hinton, Hobbema, Laro Biche, Lethbridge, Morley, Peace River, Rocky Mountain House, Slave Lake, St. Paul, Standoff, Taber, Valleyview, Wabasca and Whitecourt. Courtworkers from each of these offices also attend court in all of the smaller surrounding communities that have a significant Native population.

WHO MAY SEEK ASSISTANCE FROM N.C.S.A.?

N.C.S.A. is organized primarily to assist Native people (Treaty, Non-Treaty, and Metis) who may be having legal or personal difficulties. However, N.C.S.A. also offers services to anyone else in need who may seek assistance and advice from N.C.S.A.

WHEN SHOULD A PERSON SEEK ASSISTANCE FROM N.C.S.A.?

The best time for a person to seek assistance from N.C.S.A. is immediately after they have been arrested or summoned to appear in court; or if they feel they have a question about their legal rights or if they want to lay charges or start legal proceedings against an individual or company.

WHAT SERVICES DOES N.C.S.A. OFFER?

At the present time, N.C.S.A. operates 13 different programs, providing a wide variety of services, including:

Criminal Courtworkers:
I presented on the Blood Indian Reserve Services. N.C.S.A. assumed responsibility for the problem of Native people. As a result, the organisation, N.C.S.A., made provision for certain staff members to familiarize themselves with the problems of Native people. In this way, N.C.S.A. hopes to contribute to the achievement of the various goals of the Justice System and the needs and concerns of the Native people.

HELEN FINE OPTIONS PROGRAM:

The program in Glenechan is in operation under the supervision of Native Counselling Services of Alberta and the A.A.D.A. Council. It is composed of four lectures and covers a variety of topics, including the effects of alcoholism, drug abuse, and family problems. The program provides an alternative to imprisonment and the cost of the administration of Justice.

SUICIDE PREVENTION PROGRAM:

The Suicide Prevention Program was initiated in February, 1973, to support the growing concern over the incidence of suicide among Native people. The program is made by the RCMP and covers a variety of topics, including family problems, drug abuse, and alcoholism. It is task-centered and supportive of the needs of the Native people. Native people throughout Alberta recognized and accepted the idea of a prevention program. The Edmonton Courtworker's program was initiated in 1961. It has expanded to include a variety of offshoots, such as the Diversion Project and the Homemaker Program. The program provides an alternative to imprisonment and the cost of the administration of Justice.

HOW ARE STAFF MEMBERS CHOSEN FOR N.C.S.A.?

Staff members are chosen on the basis of personal stability, knowledge of English and Native dialect, and willingness to co-operate with others involved in the Justice System. Most Courtworkers live in the same community they work in. While Native Counselling Services of Alberta has the final responsibility for selecting its staff, close attention is paid to the recommendations of Band Councils, Metis local and other Native organizations. Most positions are advertised in the Native and non-Native media as they become vacant or new positions are created.

SUMMARY:

The strength of Native Counselling Services of Alberta lies in its relationship with the Native communities and the agencies of the Justice System. The structure of the Board and the hiring policies for field staff ensures co-operation with the system, yet independence from other Native organizations and Government agencies. The key concept guiding H.C.S.A. is its relationship with the

The Family Courtworkers supervise Native juveniles on probation. The work with Native families to prevent the apprehension of children and assist in reunifying Native families. The Family Courtworkers provide personal counselling, and facilitate better communication between Native people and their Social Workers. They also provide follow-ups for foster care placement and assist in juvenile programs in detention centres.

The presentations deal with The Family Courtworkers and Native alcoholism. In addition, the program will produce shows designed to sensitize the Justice system to the concerns of Native people and the problems faced by Natives in conflict with the law. These productions are available to the general public from the local Courtworkers.

FORESTRY CAMPS:
N.C.S.A. currently operates 2 Forestry Camps — one in the Beaver Lake area and one in the Nojack area.

The Beaver Lake Camp, a minimum security camp near Lac La Biche, is designed to hold a maximum of 20 Inmates from Fort Saskatchewan Correctional Institution. Most Inmates have less than three months left on their sentences. The objective of the program is to provide men of primarily Native origin an opportunity to work and leisure program not readily available in conventional provincial institutions.

This is a joint venture of N.C.S.A. and the Solicitor General, which began September, 1978. It is staffed by Native Camp Officers, not correctional officers. Working on a monthly incentive pay ($5.00 per day), the Inmates will be involved in forestry work and community projects. The aim of the project is to prevent recidivism by involving the Inmates in the community and using its resources, by providing counselling from N.C.S.A. and other social agencies, by teaching life and work skills and by aiding the Inmate to find new meaningful employment.

The Nojack camp, which began operation in November, 1978, is set up on the same model as the Beaver Lake camp with hourly wages paid to the residents and they can remain employed by the business after serving their sentence.

THE HIGH LEVEL DIVERSION PROJECT:
The High Level Diversion project was begun as a pilot project in 1977 and is now in full operation. Working on a basis of discussion between the victim, the offender, and the community, this program is designed to offer an alternative to the existing positions such as arrest and sentencing, at both the pre-charge and post-charge stages for selected charges. Its objective is to involve the community in the diversion process.

The project serves both Natives and non-Natives.

THE FAMILY LIFE IMPROVEMENT PROGRAM (F.L.I.P.):
"FLIP" began operation in 1979 as a program designed to provide assistance to people experiencing difficulties in their family situations. Clients are given information on a variety of topics aimed at assisting them to find solutions to family problems, for example: child development, self-awareness, welfare, sexual relationships, discipline and exploration. This program is available to clients in various social service agencies, and with recreational activities to develop awareness of constructive leisure time use, and to practice one-to-one interaction.

OTHER N.C.S.A. PROGRAMS:
N.C.S.A. also sponsors a number of secondary programs in special areas which are carried out by Courtworkers as an extension of their normal duties. These include:

1. THE STANDOFF IMPAIRED DRIVING PROGRAM:
The Impaired Driving Program is a course for people who have an accident while under the influence of alcohol.

2. THE FAMILY COURTWORKERS:
This program is designed to provide assistance to people experiencing difficulties in their family situations. Clients are given information on a variety of topics aimed at assisting them to find solutions to family problems, for example: child development, self-awareness, welfare, sexual relationships, discipline and exploration. This program is available to clients in various social service agencies, and with recreational activities to develop awareness of constructive leisure time use, and to practice one-to-one interaction.

WORKSHOP WRAP-UP (SEPTEMBER 1981)

JUSTICE-RELATED CHILDREN AND FAMILY SERVICES
FOR NATIVE PEOPLE IN ONTARIO

In response to the questions:

(I) Is there a role for Council in this field?

(II) Name 2 (two) priorities or alternatives 'be specific) that the council should pursue - explain why and develop alternative.

(III) What area should the council not be involved in?

the following group responses were developed:

(I) All three workshop groups agreed that council should be involved in Justice-Related Children and Family Services.

(II) General Priorities (Not necessarily in order of importance):

(A) Data Base

All three groups saw this as a necessary step, i.e.:

- "Co-ordinate and compile information available."

- "given organizations do not have available human resources, ONCJ could package available information and make widely available at community level (cataloguing existing data, analyzing relevancy and application)."

(B) Cultural Sensitization

- "Sensitization of any points of contact the native child has with the system i.e. government-sponsored agencies, Children's Aid Societies, Assessment Centre, Probation and Aftercare."
- "Does ONCJ presently have capability to be involved in this area?"
- "Education of non-native foster parents and social service personnel."
- "More native awareness programs and education for judges, foster parents, and social workers."

(C) Legislative Change
- "Omnibus Legislation - Do we want separate legislation or can concerns be integrated into legislation? Work with OFIFC and ONWA - research function?"
- "define responsibilities of each: level, i.e. what is responsibility of organization and communities and ONCJ vis-a-vis children services?"
- "Should be significant Native input into Omnibus - exploration by organizations and communities of how and what to input."
- "Clarification of Omnibus legislation timetable."
- "requires immediate action"
- "ONCJ role in initiating legislation change?"
- "Role of political organizations?"
- "Involvement of Native Lawyers Association - Legislation Child Welfare Act."
- "Adoption and Substitute care."
- "Maybe we could or should leave Omnibus to OFIFC and ONWA and not compete?"
(D) Programmes

- "Life Skills and Parenting - incorporating cultural and spiritual development."
- "Prevention programmes"
  - "Set up juvenile court committee to make recommendations to the court."
  - "Development of Family Courtwork programs."
  - "Short term - more involvement at reserve level in present programmes i.e. C.A.S."

(III) "Council should not get bogged down on constitutional question, jurisdictional question, and areas where programs available i.e. alcohol and drug abuse."
