ABSTRACT
Focusing on the philosophical and religious literature of India, this updated annotated bibliography discusses 33 books published between 1961 and 1993. Books annotated in the bibliography discuss: the foundations of Indian culture, the rhetorical tradition, Indian literary traditions, the historical-cultural context, toward a rhetorical-cultural synthesis, and intercultural and international communication. The annotated bibliography also presents brief biographical sketches and lists of works by Aurobindo, the Dalai Lama, Mohandas Gandhi, C. Jinarajadasa, J. Krishnamurti, Rabindranath Tagore, Ramakrishna, and Vivekananda.

For decades the philosophical and religious literature of India has earned the thoughtful respect of distinguished Western scholars. "There is no more absorbing story," Mircea Eliade said, "than that of the discovery and interpretation of India by Western consciousness." Max Muller, a prominent Indologist, explained: "If I were asked under what sky the human mind...has most deeply pondered over the greatest problems of life, and has found solutions of some of them which will deserve the attention even of those who have studied Plato and Kant - I should point to India." Arnold Toynbe predicted that in the hegemony of the twenty-first century, perhaps "India the conquered will conquer its conquerors."

Foundations of Indian Culture

The Indian classic, the Mahabharata, is considered as "the great national epic of India." Within this book is a section called The Bhagavad-Gita. Unlike the Upanisads, the Gita is not regarded as revealed scripture but as a distinctive literature reflecting a tradition and doctrines contained in the Upanisads. The Gita dramatizes religious conviction that behind the phenomenal universe is a changeless, permanent Reality which is the Self within humans.

The Vedas constitute not a single book but a library of literature transmitted initially through an oral tradition. While these writings contain references to several seers, these authors reportedly perceived these mantras that had existed from time immemorial through immediate, intuitive awareness. These writings indicate that a higher knowledge that reveals the unknown to humanity is neither objective information nor subjective experience, but instead a "being" and "becoming."

The Upanisads constitute a later contribution to Vedic literature, written when innovative seers challenged prevailing religious practices. By questioning the authority of traditional Vedic literature, these writers initiated an intellectual and spiritual revolt.

The Rhetorical Tradition

Indian Literary Traditions

Primary Sources

A classic Indian epic, the Mahabharata describes a feud wraging between to branches of a single ruling Indian family that culminates in a cataclysmic battle and profound spiritual insight revealed by Krishna.

A timeless tale, this story, like the magnificent Mahabharata, provides the framework of Hindu religious, cultural, and social life. The classic Ramayana describes courtly intrigues, fierce battles, and bold sacrifice.

Secondary Sources

This sweeping cultural survey covers the early Aryans, the early bards, the going and coming of the deities, Brahmaism, Buddhism, the epics, the dramas, and the fusion point of older and newer cultures.

The Historical-Cultural Context

A comprehensive historical survey describing South Asian culture, this excellent reference contains thirty-five informative chapters written by thirty scholars from an international perspective.

An outstanding scholar's experience and perspective are focused in a single important book that presents an informed synthesis describing the historical and philosophical beginnings of Hinduism.

A sympathetic and intelligent introduction of Indian culture written with commendable clarity and hearty good sense, this highly regarded introduction describes the early Indian attitude toward life, India's passionate delight in the senses, and her gentle tolerance and warm humanity.

Eck, Diana L. Encountering God: A Spiritual Journey from Bozeman to Banaras.
Harvard professor Eck's personal reflections and thoughtful explanations indicate how her faith developed through her serious encounters and sincere engagement with the world's great religions.

Written by seven outstanding scholars who embrace these expressions of the world's religions, the book provides a substantive survey covering Hinduism, Buddhism, Confucianism, Taoism, Judaism, Christianity, and Islam.

This comprehensive, lucid, erudite history surveys the history, culture, and people of India in an excellent book that embodies superb scholarship, stimulates the creative imagination, provides enjoyable reading, and contributes enormously toward an informed understanding of India.
Philosophical Perspectives

Happold’s cross-cultural study indicates that “mysticism is a manifestation of something which is at the root of all religion and all the higher religions.” However Happold contends that a person cannot “assert that all mystics ‘see’ the same thing, that they have an identical experience” although “it is difficult to escape the conclusion that all have glimpsed in varying degrees and in varying forms the same Reality and found the same Truth.”

The author states that the book “attempts to penetrate the nature of that strange spiritual phenomenon we call mysticism by comparing the two principal types of Eastern and Western mystical experience.”

Recognizing that the world’s religions reflect a variety of attitudes toward mysticism, Parrinder distinguishes between monistic mysticism (reaching self-identity or union with the All) and theistic mysticism (seeking communion but not identity with God). The book represents an attempt “to introduce the great religions in their mystical expressions.” The author concludes that “mysticism may be called natural, since it appears to be common to mankind, to be part of human nature.”

In a rare academic analysis about medieval Indian literature, a scholar describes the lives, activities, and works of the great poet-saints of Maharashtra, including Jnaneswar, Namadev, Tukaram, Eknath, and Ramdas.

His specialized treatment describes the mysticism presented in the Upanishads, upon which the entire superstructure of Indian spiritual thought and Vedanta are established. Besides providing a perennial source of philosophical wisdom, the Upanishads are a fountainhead of mysticism.

In this cross-cultural comparison, Spencer studies primitive, Hindu, Buddhist, Taoist, Confucian, Greek, Hellenistic, Hebrew, Jewish, Christian, and Islamic mysticism. Spencer concludes that mystics of all religion claim that “divine or ultimate Reality is essentially transcendent of the world of space and time” and that “this affirmation of the divine transcendence is commonly accompanied by an equal stress on divine indwelling.”

Stace’s anthology contains literature selected from Hindu, Buddhist, Taoist, Roman, Christian, Islamic, and Jewish mystics. Carefully distinguishing between experiences that provide philosophical knowledge and experiences that constitute nonsensory nonintellectual consciousness, Stace describes mystical experience as “the apprehension of an ultimate nonsensuous unity in all things, a oneness or a One to which neither the senses nor the reason can penetrate.” Stace contends that mystical experience is not a religious phenomenon and that the theoretical connection between mysticism and religion is subsequent and adventitious.
Toward Rhetorical-Cultural Synthesis

In these 1980 Gifford lectures, a prominent historian of philosophy examines Eastern and Western thought-systems and demonstrates that not exclusively in the West and in Christendom have thinkers developed theories about one ultimate reality.

In this comparative study examining mysticism within world religion, Huxley concluded that four fundamental convictions comprise a common core: that the phenomenal world and individualized consciousness manifest from a Divine Ground; that humans can know the Divine Ground immediately through intuition; that an individual possesses an ego and an eternal Self identical with the Divine Ground; and that the meaning and purpose of human existence becomes actualized when humans discern the Self with the Divine Ground through immediate intuitive experience.

A brilliant statesman-philosopher from India constructs a bridge between Eastern religion and Western thought by analyzing Hinduism, describing the philosophy and religion of ancient Greece and Palestine, comparing and contrasting Indian philosophy and Western religious beliefs, and studying the growing dialogue within world religion. "For the first time in the history of mankind," Radhakrishnan remarks, "the consciousness of the unity of the world has dawned on us." He maintains that "in the mystic traditions of the different religions we have a remarkable unity of spirit" and describes how these mystics "transcend the tyranny of names and the rivalry of words as well as the conflict of races and the strife of nations."

Scharfstein illustrates how non-Westerners have participated in the constructive intellectuality, adventurous reasoning, and logical analysis that constitutes philosophy. This anthology indicates the relation of the different philosophies to respective religions, scriptures, and modes of philosophical argument.

The distinguished Indian poet-artist and winner of the Nobel Prize for Literature presents himself "neither a scholar nor a philosopher" and states that "my religion is a poet's religion, and neither that of an orthodox man of piety nor that of a theologian." Based upon Tagore's 1930 Hibbert Lectures at Manchester College, Oxford, the book presents the belief that "through the process of yoga man can transcend the utmost bounds of his humanity and find himself in a pure state of consciousness of his undivided unity with Parabrahman."

Based in part upon lectures presented at Columbia University in 1942, this book presents Zimmer's analysis of the historic meeting of East and West; his description of Indian concepts about time, success, pleasure, and duty; and his informative introductions of Jainism, Brahmanism, Buddhism, and Tantra.
Intercultural and International Communication

Among the informative studies is one by Pritchard, who traces the processes of religious transformation in the United States between 1820 and 1860, observing the infusion of new religious expressions; she predicts that "a new established religion, with expanded religious alternatives that conform to the social structures, will develop in America."

The Bishop James W. Bashford Professor of Oriental Studies at the University of Southern California describes the influence exerted by Hinduism, Taoism, Buddhism, and Theosophy upon religion in the United States during the nineteenth and twentieth centuries.

Jones, a chairperson who assisted in organizing the World's Parliament of Religions held in Chicago in 1893, described the historic proceedings. This compilation contains one hundred sixty-seven extracts from one hundred fifteen different speakers who participated in this epoch-making event.

Needleman's fascinating introduction indicates why the modern infusion of Eastern spirituality might compel Western religion to undertake the most critical self-examination since the Scientific Revolution. Among the "new religion" surveyed by Needleman are Zen Buddhism, Meher Baba, Subud, yoga, Krishnamurti, Transcendental Meditation, Sufism, Tibetan Buddhism, Vedanta, and Humanistic Mysticism.

Ellwood emphasizes that analyzing these movements requires approaching them as symbol-systems.

In 1969 Roszak observed a strain of Eastern religion emerging within the colorful counterculture that some critics described as a barbaric invasion of alarming appearances. Roszak recognized how some flower children stressed the non-intellective components within the human personality that "take fire from visionary splendor and the experience of human communion." This perceptive author pondered how emerging Eastern spirituality challenged a scientific world-view, the supremacy of cerebral cognition, and technology.

These varied papers survey the historical study of marginal American religious movements, a paradigmatic approach for analyzing these groups, a cross-cultural perspective on the religious uses of altered states of consciousness, and an interpretation of the concern of contemporary youth with the mystical.
Selected Speakers

Aurobindo

Born in Calcutta on August 15, 1872, Aurobindo became a poet, philosopher, and Indian nationalist. He studied at Cambridge, held administrative and professional positions in Baroda and Calcutta, and exerted effective literary activities to free India. After a two-year imprisonment, he secured sanctuary at Pondicherry, where he developed his religious philosophy and established an international cultural center for spiritual development.

His Holiness, the Dalai Lama

Lhamo Thondup, a name meaning “wish-fulfilling goddess,” was born on July 6, 1935, and subsequently named Jamphel Lobsang Yeshe Tenzin Gyatso. Some regard him as a living Buddha who is the earthly manifestation of Avalokiteshvara, Bodhisattva of Compassion; others consider him as a god-king. He describes himself as a human being and a Tibetan who chooses to be a Buddhist monk. Discovered at the age of two by a search party from the holy city of Lhasa, he was taken to central Tibet where he was enthroned two years later. Following the Chinese invasion in 1950, he sought sanctuary in India.

Mohandas Karamchand Gandhi

Internationally respected as among the greatest political personalities of the twentieth century and revered as “the father of modern India,” Gandhi was a British-trained lawyer who pitted the most populous country in the world against the Empire in a struggle for independence. As a practical philosopher who developed and applied the principle of non-violent civil disobedience, he influenced countless individuals seeking social justice.
C. Jinarajadasa

A well-known Theosophist, C.W. Leadbeater, reported meeting thirteen-year-old Jinarajadasa in 1888 at a Buddhist Boys' School in Colombo, and that the youth accompanied Leadbeater to England two years later. Seeking higher education, he studied in the University Correspondence College, at St. John's College of Cambridge, and in the University of Pavia in Milan. In 1904 he became National Lecturer for the Theosophical Society in the United States; and he was appointed Vice President of the Theosophical Society in 1921. Jinarajadasa visited the United States and Australia often between 1922 and 1928, and in 1928 he lectured in Central and South America and the Antilles.

J. Krishnamurti

Born May 22, 1895, the lad was discovered in 1909 by Annie Besant and described as an incarnation of Maitreya, the messianic Buddha. He founded the World Order of the Star, predicated upon the conviction that he was Buddha reincarnated. Following a tour through the United States and England with Mrs. Besant, Krishnamurti repudiated this claim and dissolved the association. In 1969 he settled in Ojai, California, where he directed the Krishnamurti Foundation and gained world-wide recognition as an international religious teacher. Alan Watts called Krishnamurti "a spiritual window cleaner who takes our picture of the sun off the glass so that we can see the real thing."

Born May 7, 1861 in Calcutta, Tagore was raised in an intellectually and spiritually refined environment. He won the Nobel Prize for Literature in 1913 and was awarded a knighthood in 1915; however he surrendered the knighthood in 1919, protesting the Amritsar Massacre, during which British soldiers fired upon Indians who were contesting the government's emergency powers. He conducted lecture tours through Europe, the Americas, China, Japan, Malaya, and Indonesia. In 1901 Tagore established a school at Santiniketan near Bolpur, where he labored to blend the finest Eastern and Western traditions; and there he founded the Visva-Bharati University in 1921. His compositions secure his enduring reputation as a brilliant man-of-letters

Ramakrishna and Vivekananda

Ramakrishna (1836-1886) taught that every soul is potentially divine and that inner divinity might be cultivated through worship, contemplation, unselfish labor, and philosophical reflection. As a disciple of Ramakrishna, Vivekananda (1863-1902) visited Chicago and presented an epoch-marking speech during the World Parliament of Religions in 1893. During a three-year visit in America and Europe, Vivekananda inaugurated the Vedanta movement that nurtures a cultural synthesis of Eastern and Western philosophy.
