In two-way bilingual education programs (TBPs), students learn together through two languages in programs that aim to develop dual language proficiency along with academic achievement. In Christian and Mahrer (1992, 1993), profiles were completed for TBPs in operation during the 1991-1992 and 1992-1993 academic years. This supplement, an annual update, covers the 1993-1994 school year. The three volumes together provide information on programs in 176 schools in 17 states. Tabled data show that New York and California have the highest numbers of schools involved in two-way bilingual education. Nationwide, most schools with TBPs are providing instruction in Spanish and English at the elementary school level. The programs/schools that provided information on their implementation of TBPs are profiled. They are presented alphabetically in sections by states and within states are grouped by city and school district. Data provided in these profiles include the ethnic/racial breakdown of the school, the criteria for selecting and accepting students, recruitment procedures, grade level(s) of the program, grade level increases planned, program size, funding sources, and program materials available to others. Preface

This volume is the second annual supplement to the 1991-1992 publication on Two-Way Bilingual Programs in the United States. The programs profiled in this supplement include new two-way programs and others that provided information since the earlier volumes appeared.

The information on two-way bilingual programs presented in this series is being gathered as part of a study on "Two-Way Bilingual Education: Students Learning through Two Languages" for the National Center for Research on Cultural Diversity and Second Language Learning. This Center is funded by the Office of Educational Research and Improvement of the U.S. Department of Education to conduct research on the education of language minority students in the United States. It is operated by the University of California, Santa Cruz, through the University of California's statewide Linguistic Minority Research Institute, in collaboration with a number of other institutions nationwide, including the Center for Applied Linguistics.

This study could not exist without the cooperation of the schools and school districts reported on here. In particular, we are grateful to the representatives of programs who provided us with large amounts of information and responded to our questions and requests when we called for clarification or to check on the accuracy of our presentation. We called on individuals who had far too much to do already to give their time and energy to this effort, and we appreciate their response. We hope that they will find the results useful.

Introduction

In a growing number of schools in the United States, educators and communities are turning to two-way bilingual education as an effective approach to educating language minority and majority students. In these programs, students learn together through two languages in programs that aim to develop dual language proficiency along with academic achievement. Ideally, half the students in a class share a particular non-English language background (most often Spanish) and they have the opportunity to develop their native language, learn English and progress academically. Their English-background classmates learn a second language along with academic content.

In Christian and Mahrer (1992, 1993), profiles were compiled for two-way bilingual programs in operation during the 1991-1992 and 1992-1993 academic years. This supplement, an annual update, covers the 1993-1994 school year, providing profiles of additional programs, both new and ongoing. The three volumes together provide information on programs in 176 schools in 17 states. This list is still not exhaustive, since it reflects only those programs that became known to us and that chose to contribute information. We will, however, continue to document programs in future annual updates.

For a more detailed discussion of the approach, including rationale and criteria for success, see Christian and Mahrer (1992).

Program Implementation Characteristics

Table 1 presents a summary of the programs profiled in the 1993-1994 supplement by state, district and school. Table 2 breaks these programs down by grade level, and Table 3 lists their languages of instruction. These tables parallel similar information provided in previous volumes.
Summary figures for the three volumes (1991-1992, 1992-1993, and 1993-1994) are shown in Tables 4 through 6. In prior years, some programs were included that were in the planning (pre-implementation) stage. After implementation, the programs were again profiled, in the next update. These schools thus appear in two volumes, but they are counted only once in the summary figures. As a result, the total number of schools (176) reported in these tables is lower than the sum of the schools listed in the three volumes. This total is used in all three summary tables. Likewise, school districts that appear in more than one volume are only counted once in the summary figures.

These figures show that New York and California continue to have the highest numbers of schools involved in two-way bilingual education. Nationwide, most schools with two-way bilingual programs are providing instruction in Spanish and English at the elementary school level. Variability in the implementation of two-way programs remains extensive, as can be seen in the profiles in both volumes. This variability is discussed further in Christian and Mahrer (1992).

Overview of the Directory

Following these introductory comments, the directory supplement begins with a complete listing of schools included in the program profiles, grouped by school district, city, and state. This listing gives a quick overview of the programs included in this supplement, with grade levels served and target language used in each. The full profiles of programs/schools which provided information on their implementation of two-way bilingual education follow this list. They are presented alphabetically in sections by state, and within states, the profiles are grouped by city and school district. Each profile is formatted the same, for ease of comparison by category across entries. Categories were omitted in cases where no program information was available at this time. Following the profiles is an index, giving page number references for the schools and school districts included in the directory.

Finally, a list of abbreviations used is provided. In order to condense the presentation of information in the profiles, certain frequently occurring terms were abbreviated. In addition, many programs reported information using locally recognized abbreviations. These abbreviations are explained in the last section.

COMMUNITY SUPPORT AND VIEWPOINT

Parent involvement:
- Parent advisory board
- Parent liaison
- Parent classes on various topics including parenting and Spanish and English language lessons

Community responses to the program:
- Extremely positive

School Board’s view of the program:
- Very supportive

Advice to start-up programs:
- Have instructional aides in place before beginning of the year
- Consider limiting times when parents can visit classrooms in order to limit disruptions to teaching

Most important feature of the program:
- Emphasis on bilingualism and multiculturalism with a focus on the home-school connection
- Commitment of the parents is a vital key to the success of the program
- The fact that this program is a model program for the Anchorage community is very important; the model may later be replicated for a different language

- The central administration and the board members are supportive, but are also interested in the degree of success of the program

Advice to start-up programs:
- Contact a successful two-way program to obtain salient information, especially concerning how to plan all aspects of the program before beginning it
- Recruit teachers who are certified in bilingual education, are native speakers of Spanish and proficient speakers of English, and believe in the two-way philosophy
- Have sufficient pre-service and in-service training for two-way program teachers
- Promote community support

Most important feature of the program:
- Additive bilingualism—giving each child, whether dominant in English or Spanish, the opportunity to learn a second language and maintain it
