This directory provides a representative sampling of programs that offer training in prejudice reduction, conflict resolution, and violence prevention to young people in their schools and communities and to the people who work with them. Project profiles include the following information categories: (1) the organization's name, address, telephone, and fax numbers; (2) the program contact person; (3) services offered; (4) specific issues covered; (5) populations that are direct recipients of the program's services; and (6) available program resources. For each project that produces materials, the ones warranting particular attention are highlighted. The directory also includes a multimedia resource list. (GLR)

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

The authors are grateful for the knowledge and resources so generously shared by the staff members of all the projects cited in this directory.

Many people whom we contacted not only provided information about their own activities for the directory, but also took the time to help us better understand the complexities of prejudice and the efforts to help young people, their teachers, and caregivers to overcome it, and to direct us to additional people, projects, and resources. These advisors deserve special thanks: Kelly Brilliant (Education Development Center), Debi Duke (National Coalition of Education Activists), Judith Filner (National Institute for Dispute Resolution), Al Ferreira (Project 10 East), Beth Jacklin (Education Development Center), Mary McClintock (National Association for Mediation in Education), Karen McLaughlin (Education Development Center), Rachel Polliner (Boston Area Educators for Social Responsibility), Ellen Raider (International Center for Cooperation and Conflict Resolution), Jody Miller Shearer (Mennonite Central Committee), and Jim Tobin (Resolving Conflict Creatively Program, New York City).

We also thank the following people, whose projects are not included in the directory: David Brubaker (National Conference on Peacemaking and Conflict Resolution, Casa Grande, AZ), Richard Cohen (School Mediation Associates, Belmont, MA), Tony Jackson (Carnegie Corporation), Prudence Kesner (Community Mediation Centers, Washington, DC), Janet Rifton (Multicultural Conflict Resolution Team, University of Massachusetts at Amherst), and Leah Wing (Multicultural Conflict Resolution Team, University of Massachusetts at Amherst).

Finally, while we acknowledge the contributions of all those who contributed to this directory, we take full responsibility for any errors contained in it.

A NOTE TO READERS

The ERIC Clearinghouse on Urban Education plans to update this directory as new information becomes known. Therefore, we would like information about additional projects that meet the criteria for inclusion in the directory, as described in the Introduction, so their profiles may be added to subsequent editions. We would also appreciate hearing from projects included in this edition of the directory when their address or telephone number changes, and when they significantly change or cease their operations.
A DIRECTORY OF ANTI-BIAS EDUCATION
RESOURCES AND SERVICES

INTRODUCTION

The movement to reduce bias, resolve conflicts equitably, and prevent violence among young people began several decades ago, but it has accelerated in the last few years in response to an increase in youth violence. Large numbers of educators, as well as community and religious leaders, are now acting on the belief that children must be taught how to manage anger constructively and overcome their prejudices just as intensively as they are taught "reading, writing, and 'rithmetic." Indeed, conflict resolution curricula are becoming known as the fourth "R," for "resolution," and estimates of the number of programs operating for youth around the country now exceed 1,000.

This directory provides a representative sampling of programs that offer training in prejudice reduction, conflict resolution, and violence prevention to young people in their schools and communities, and to the people who work with them. It also includes a multimedia resource list.

THE MAKING OF THIS DIRECTORY

When we at the ERIC Clearinghouse on Urban Education first decided to survey the extent of the youth anti-bias movement, we assumed that a comprehensive directory of organizations, programs, and individual trainers providing anti-bias services must already exist. We even thought that there might be an umbrella association regularly updating the directory. At the least, we expected to be directed to someone who maintains such a list. Instead, we were told that no compilation had been attempted recently, because everyone in the field was too busy doing training and preparing materials to take the time necessary to survey their colleagues about what they were doing. Clearinghouse staff was also told that there was a great need for such a directory, and we were asked to compile one ourselves.
Limited Clearinghouse resources, however, prohibited preparation of a comprehensive list of programs, since new ones seem to be implemented almost daily. We decided, though, that it would be possible to develop a directory useful enough to serve as the beginning of a database that could be updated regularly—by the Clearinghouse, or, perhaps, by one of the organizations cited.

Clearinghouse staff began gathering data six months ago. Phone calls to people and organizations engaged in anti-bias and youth violence reduction activities elicited additional names, who provided more sources, and so on. Ultimately, we developed a good-sized list of projects and resource materials reflecting the full range of services and materials currently available. Next, a Clearinghouse staff member interviewed representatives of each organization, and requested a literature package from them. Finally, using all this material, we prepared the directory that appears on the following pages.

It should be noted that while some omissions are unintentional—regrettably due to pressure to complete the directory—others are deliberate. We decided to omit projects designed to serve only a limited population, such as a single school or small school district, and unable to offer services to additional populations; those so site-specific that they do not permit easy replication in other situations; and independent consultants who operate for-profit businesses. A few projects that had been recommended to us either proved unreachable or failed to respond to numerous requests for information; reluctantly, we deleted these from the final list. We have also omitted most programs that serve preschoolers and college students, including only a few—among the largest—as indications of the kinds of resources available for these students. Finally, we have profiled only those projects of organizations with multiple missions that are specifically committed to prejudice reduction, conflict resolution, and violence prevention.
THE PHILOSOPHY AND APPROACH OF THE PROJECTS

Governing Principles

A project's commitment to increasing harmony among diverse groups may be based on secular morality, philosophic principles, religious teachings, or the practical belief that people in a multicultural society simply must learn to get along with each other.

The way that projects address prejudice reduction also varies widely. Some take a very practical approach: their goal is simply to change behavior; that is, to help people resist acting on their prejudices or responding to anger and conflict with violence. Others have a more far-reaching goal: they seek to change prejudicial beliefs and attitudes, based on the philosophy that behavioral changes will result automatically from a new belief system. Still other projects are informed by the principle that the structure of institutions governing our lives must be changed in order for prejudice to be eliminated completely.

Some projects deal with bias generically, without addressing the unique reasons why a specific minority group experiences prejudice and discrimination; they believe that prejudice, discrimination, and hate crimes result from a person's need for a target for their anger and frustration, and that the choice of victims is almost arbitrary. Other projects are quite direct in discussing the characteristics of a certain group in order to dispel prejudicial myths about it, and a few focus primarily on reducing prejudice against a specific group, while also paying some attention to bias generically. Conversely, a project may specifically address bias against certain groups, but omit reference to bias against others, usually on moral or religious grounds. A few projects even promote the view that only widespread political change to increase racial, gender, and economic equality will truly eliminate bias and discrimination.
Training Emphasis

The projects use a variety of training techniques, including traditional teacher/student learning activities, interactive learning, role play and improvisation, and multimedia resources, with most integrating several techniques into their program. How they use the various techniques differs depending on their approach to prejudice reduction and conflict resolution training.

Some projects address bias issues first, believing that a reduction in conflict and violence will result naturally from an increase in tolerance. Others focus their training on mediation techniques, citing bigotry as just one cause of conflict among many, on the assumption that prejudice will be reduced in the same manner as other differences are settled.

Some also deal specifically with management of emotions, especially anger, taking the position that learning to channel negative emotions into positive actions will automatically reduce conflict and violence. Others take a purely behaviorist approach, believing that changes in behavior will lead to better emotional control.

Service Recipients

Another manifestation of a project's philosophy is its choice of population to train. Projects can work solely with young people; can provide training to school personnel and religious and community leaders, who in turn train students (known as "training trainers"); or can provide multi-level training within an institution or a community.

The projects that work directly with young people, offering no training to school personnel, community group leaders, or caregivers, take the position that youth can change their beliefs and behavior even in the face of oppositional conduct and negative influences in their environment. A related approach is training educators to help students overcome prejudices and develop nonviolent conflict resolution skills, without first ascertaining the educators' own attitudes.

More comprehensive projects provide anti-bias training to school personnel and caregivers (instead of, or in addition to, students) so that they become positive role models for students as well as good trainers. These project operate on the assumption that it is unrealistic to expect youth to become more tolerant than their elders. The most comprehensive projects work initially—or exclusively—with schools and school systems, helping them resolve their organizational conflicts, in the belief that it is impossible for school personnel to provide training without first having learned how to deal with their own problems effectively and nonviolently.

A GUIDE TO THE PROJECT PROFILES

Each project profiled has a unique program that defines its services, its method and place of service delivery, and its fee schedule. In many cases, however, projects have indicated that, despite their preferences, they will be flexible to meet their clients' needs. For example, some projects that operate locally will travel outside their area if reimbursed for expenses. Also, organizations that usually offer a package of services will occasionally agree to provide only a portion of that package, pro-rated. Some programs provide a printed price list for services and materials; others use a sliding scale based on the specific services to be provided and the financial resources of their client to determine their fees. Consequently, we have not specified the terms under which the projects provide services. The information categories included in each profile are these:

Organization Name, Address, Telephone and Fax Numbers

The name of the organization's anti-bias project is provided if the organization operates additional projects. If an organization operates more than one anti-bias project, each is profiled separately. The address listed is the one that disseminates information on the anti-bias project, whether it is the organization's headquarters or a regional office. If information is available from two sources, both are listed.

Contact Person

This is the individual who can discuss the project's services and available resources with potential clients. If appropriate, several names are listed.

Services Offered

These constitute the components of a project that address anti-bias and violence prevention issues. In general, less specificity (i.e., "training" instead of "training for trainers," or "workshops" instead of "two-day workshops") indicates more flexibility in the provision of services, either in terms of populations served or the nature of the services.

Issues Covered

These are tolerance, anti-bias, anti-discrimination, conflict resolution, and violence prevention topics specifically identified in the project's training and materials, listed loosely in descending order of importance as indicated by the project materials. While literature from the projects often uses different terms to convey the same concept, we have, where possible, used uniform language to allow for easier comparison among the projects.

Populations Served

The populations listed in this category are the direct recipients of a project's services. That is, they comprise the group trained by the trainer or targeted as the audience for the project's materials. Thus, students who will indirectly benefit from their teacher's training are not listed. Similarly, students are not listed if a project's instructional materials consist solely of a teachers' guide.
Resources

The quantity and quality of resources vary considerably among programs, as do the comprehensiveness and attractiveness of their resource lists. Some programs offer materials only as a component of their training package. For others, printed and audiovisual materials are the cornerstone of their work—teaching or training only complements the materials—and it is possible to derive considerable benefit from studying them independently.

An abundance of professionally-produced materials does not necessarily indicate the superiority of one project over another that uses different training techniques and has little to sell or give away. Nevertheless, as a guide, we note whether a catalogue is available, indicating either the existence of relatively sophisticated materials, or a project’s emphasis on printed or audiovisual aids; or whether only a list of materials is available, indicating more simply prepared resources.

In addition, for each project that produces materials, we highlight one or two items warranting particular attention. Please note, however, that we are not recommending certain materials over others, or endorsing specific projects.

RESOURCE LISTS

A GUIDE TO THE LINKS

The materials and resource sources included on the lists below provide a representative sample of the youth anti-bias, conflict resolution, and violence prevention resources available, although the lists are by no means comprehensive since new materials are being produced every day. Many of the materials themselves contain bibliographies that cite additional useful resources. The items included here were chosen because they were identified by leaders in the anti-bias movement; appeared frequently on other resource lists; or, in the case of some of the older materials, have withstood the test of time by remaining in wide circulation. A resource's appearance on these lists does not imply the endorsement of the Clearinghouse, however.

Resources cited within the project profiles are not included below. Also omitted are research papers, program descriptions, other materials not available from their sources, and journal articles. Many such documents can be located by searching the ERIC databases, and we urge you to do so.

The resource materials are grouped in the following categories:

ERIC Clearinghouse Publications

Most of the 16 clearinghouses in the national Education Resources Information Center have produced materials on youth prejudice reduction, conflict resolution, and violence prevention. They are included here. To facilitate acquisition of these materials, the addresses of the clearinghouses are appended to the list, but they can also be acquired from the ERIC database by using their ERIC Document Reproduction Service Numbers.

Books

This list contains individual titles produced by organizations or commercial publishers that do not specialize in anti-bias materials.

Curricula

This list is comprised of publicly available printed curriculum materials. Please use ERIC to locate unpublished curricula.

Journals

Two types of journals are represented on this list: those wholly dedicated to the issues of increasing respect for diversity; and those that frequently publish articles on prejudice reduction, conflict resolution, and violence prevention.

Audiovisual Materials

These materials include stand-alone audio- and videotapes, computer programs, and multimedia curricula.

Distributors of Books, Curricula, and Audiovisual Materials

This list includes nonprofit or commercial sources that offer a significant number of relevant materials, and that will send a catalogue upon request. Individual titles from these sources are not included on the other resource lists in this directory.
