Atlantic Baptist College (New Brunswick, Canada) developed an evaluation instrument for administrators designed to assess their evaluation work. An ad hoc Staff Evaluation Committee, composed of one senior administrator and individuals (elected by their peers) from across all four institutional departments was responsible for development and adoption of the administrator evaluation instrument. This committee reviewed higher education literature on the subject, solicited evaluation documents from other liberal arts universities, and from these developed a draft instrument which they forwarded to an Administrative Committee for response. Their responses led to revisions for a second draft which was later approved by the Administrative Committee and the Board of Governors. The instrument is attached along with additional information on performance levels. (JB)

ABSTRACT

This document addresses the process used to develop an evaluation instrument for administrators at Atlantic Baptist College. The resultant instrument is included in its entirety for use by other educators. Finally, the research community is challenged to question present evaluation practices in a more systematic way.
INTRODUCTION

Educators know that public demand for accountability in education in recent years has resulted in the increased systematization of evaluation. Though we hear considerably about the various modes of faculty evaluation, and how administrators can enhance teaching performance by using such techniques as the teaching portfolio, peer review, and clinical supervision, we seldom hear about modes of evaluation for educational administrators. In an age characterized by appeals for accountability, one would infer that concern with administrative evaluation would reign paramount.

As long ago as 1915, Arnold discussed means for increasing school efficiency, including ways to rate principals' performance. Since then, formal evaluation of public school principals has been commonplace (Ginsberg, 1989). Despite the development of modes of evaluation, and despite the fact that principals are key players in education, it is curious that little research has examined principal evaluation in any detail (Duke and Stiggins, 1985; Ginsberg, 1988). Scriven (1967) contends that a pervasive fear exists among human beings of being evaluated. This could be a factor impacting the lack of serious research in the area of principal evaluation.

Ginsberg (1989) notes that "no matter what the reason for the lack of scholarly attention to principal evaluation, there does not seem to be any great impetus to fill the deficiencies which exist in the literature." Just as there are multiple reasons for evaluating principals, there are multiple reasons for evaluating administrators in higher educational institutions. Despite this confirmed need, the higher education literature is sorely inadequate in the domain of higher education administration evaluation. Essentially, it can be debated that the lack of existing systems and research in the area of administrator evaluation is obstructing any enduring improvement in the personal, professional, and institutional development of administrators, particularly among marginal performers.

The greater scrutiny that higher education administrators are facing today will continue the push to evaluate their performance. Given the apparent shortage of knowledge about higher education administrator evaluation, the problem emerges of how the field should unfold.

First, research on the different evaluation systems or programs should be conducted. Studies in this area should help to determine what evaluation schemes will be suitable for different settings. Unfortunately, much of the current literature that does exist is fundamentally descriptive in nature. The time has come to forecast the functions and outcomes that an evaluation program should serve.

Second, dependent measures to analyze the impact of an administrator evaluation program are needed. This will be a difficult feat, but some measure of quality needs to be devised in order to evaluate the evaluations. There are other areas to be explored as the field evolves; however, probably none is more critical than the development of credible evaluation systems.
At Atlantic Baptist College - a small, private, Christian liberal arts university which grants baccalaureate degrees - a decision was recently made to develop an evaluation program for supervisors and administrators which encouraged personal, professional and institutional growth and development. The purposes of this document are to briefly discuss the process used to develop the resultant evaluation instrument; to provide the instrument in its entirety for use by other educators; to incite the research community to question present evaluation practises in a more systematic way.

Process

An ad hoc Staff Evaluation Committee was established and charged with several responsibilities, including the development, or adoption of, an administrator evaluation instrument. One senior administrator, and individuals from across all four institutional departments, were elected by their peers to serve on the Committee. The Committee met to fulfill its charge over a seven month period, meeting weekly for two or more hours.

It was agreed upon at the outset that an evaluation method specific to the supervisors and senior administrators at the college was needed to properly gauge the performance of these individuals in their complex and diverse tasks. It was also acknowledged that there would be deficiencies in the evaluation instrument and that a new system mandated a carefully thought-out program that would not result in problems for those responsible for the evaluation. Lastly, an assumption was held that the field of higher education administrator evaluation was in need of systematic examination by educational researchers much more capable than ourselves.

An exhaustive review of the higher education literature, which involved an analysis of approximately fifty sources, revealed that little systematic research has ever been conducted on evaluation of higher education administrators. Typically, there was ample information in the general field of personnel evaluation, but it was agreed that although administrator evaluation shares many characteristics with personnel evaluation, these generic evaluation practices may well impede the growth and development of a sub-field of evaluation specific to educational administrators.

The second procedure used as a foundation for developing an administrator evaluation instrument involved a solicitation of evaluation documents from several liberal arts universities. Naturally, only institutions with analogous missions were contacted. No fewer than five institutions submitted their evaluation systems, in part, or in full. The officials forwarding the information typically gave permission to use information from their documents as judged appropriate by the Committee. The documents were reviewed by the Committee and a rough draft of an instrument for administrator evaluation at Atlantic Baptist College was developed. Most of Trinity Western University's evaluation system was adopted with some alterations.

The first draft of the document was forwarded to the Administrative Committee for input, minor revisions were suggested, and draft two was generated. Soon thereafter, the document was approved by the Administrative Committee and the Board of Governors. The instrument is presently being used successfully at the college - The expression, successfully, is referred to exclusively in the subjective sense. As time passes, additional improvements will be made in the instrument and the appropriate research will be conducted in an attempt to enhance administrator growth across all developmental domains.

Administrative Staff Evaluation: Policy and Procedure

Policy

Each administrator will receive an annual evaluation of his/her performance. Evaluations will be conducted in the winter semester prior to submission of the budget to the Board of Governors in the spring. The evaluation will be a joint effort between the staff member and his/her immediate supervisor. The primary goals of performance evaluation at Atlantic Baptist College are: personal development, institutional development and salary determination.

Procedure

Atlantic Baptist College’s Administration is providing these instructions to assist both parties in the completion of the performance evaluation.

1. All evaluations are to be conducted in a participative atmosphere. The supervisor will sit down with the person being evaluated and cover these basic points as soon as the evaluation materials are received:
   a. Go over the materials that both of you have received, ensuring that the person being evaluated understands that they are to rate themselves on the various traits (using the attached performance level definition sheets), plan their goals and give some thought to their comments.
   b. Set a time that is mutually convenient and will provide 1-2 hours of uninterrupted time.
   c. All ratings, goals and comments should be entered in pencil and converted to pen on one copy during the interview. This will be the final good copy placed in the employee’s file.

2. Both parties should collect as much information as possible to allow sound participative decisions to be made on the various ratings, achievement of previous goals and new goals for the next year or review period. Both the supervisor and the employee may have kept information about the previous year’s performance. The supervisor should also obtain input from peers and/or from other departments that the person has contact with in the performance of the position responsibilities.

3. The meeting will be a participative process of sharing/communication on the various ratings, arriving at a mutually agreed upon rating for past performance based upon facts, the supervisor’s input from others and sharing of future goals. The supervisor’s copy would normally be used as the one on which final ratings etc. are entered.

4. Once the ratings and goals have been agreed upon, the employee should be given an opportunity to review the information and to finalize his/her comments. The next day the supervisor and employee should complete the comments and the overall rating for the evaluation, each keeping a photocopy and placing the original in the individual’s file.

5. Should there be any reason that this process is not completed within two weeks, the supervisor should advise the employee of the new expected date. In no case should the completion be longer than one month from issue date.

6. All evaluations for administrative staff serving at Atlantic Baptist College will be issued and completed prior to submission of the budget to the Board of Governors in the spring so that accurate salary projections can be made.

7. Evaluators will abide by the "Guidelines For Effective Performance Evaluation Interviews." (see next page)
GUIDELINES FOR EFFECTIVE PERFORMANCE EVALUATION INTERVIEWS

1. Emphasize positive aspects of employee performance.
2. Tell each employee that the evaluation session is to improve performance, not to discipline.
3. Conduct the performance review session in private with minimal interruptions.
4. Review performance formally at least annually and more frequently for new employees or those who are performing poorly.
5. Make criticisms specific, not general and vague.
6. Focus criticisms on performance, not on personality characteristics.
7. Stay calm and do not argue with the person being evaluated.
8. Identify specific actions the employee can take to improve performance.
9. Emphasize the evaluator's willingness to assist the employee's efforts to improve performance.
10. End the evaluating sessions by stressing the positive aspects of the employee's performance.

ADDITIONAL INFORMATION DEFINING PERFORMANCE LEVELS
for Administrators/Supervisors

PERFORMANCE LEVEL - OUTSTANDING (Rating Code 5)

This level is used for trait ratings and overall performance for those whose performance is consistently excellent and far exceeds the College’s expectations of what is required in the trait or position.

EXAMPLES

1. An Administrator/Supervisor who displays exceptionally high quality/quantity performance, consistently contributes beyond his/her share; requires little or no supervision; continuously innovating/improving; highly skilled in selecting, motivating and developing staff members; unlikely that this level of performance can be exceeded in the trait or position.

2. An Administrator/Supervisor who has complete knowledge of the trait or position gained through extensive experience.

3. An Administrator/Supervisor who shows great understanding of far more than their position.

4. An Administrator/Supervisor who uses their vast knowledge of the trait or position and the College to achieve optimum results, both in quality and quantity.

PERFORMANCE LEVEL - COMMENDABLE (Rating Code 4)

This level is used for trait ratings and overall performance for those whose performance is consistently better than expected and usually at a very high level. Unusual proficiency and adaptability is shown in most situations.

EXAMPLES

1. An Administrator/Supervisor who consistently accomplishes more than expected or is normally required in the trait or position. One who has a superior grasp of their own and associated positions; is skilled in selecting, motivating and developing staff members and regularly strives for improvements in areas of responsibility. Also can assume extra projects without affecting normal work responsibility.
2. An Administrator/Supervisor who makes sound decisions, generally handles unusual problems/situations well; produces better than targeted results and who requires little or no supervision or follow up in the trait or position.

3. An Administrator/Supervisor who takes initiative, plans ahead and is "pro-active" in the performance of the trait or position responsibilities.

4. An Administrator/Supervisor who has a broad management view of the trait or position and works toward achieving results for the College/department - not just their area of responsibility.

PERFORMANCE LEVEL - STANDARD (Rating Code 3)

This level is used for traits and overall performance for those whose performance is fully satisfactory in all respects and meets the standards expected.

EXAMPLES

1. An Administrator/Supervisor whose work is completely acceptable; competent performance of all position responsibilities; quality/quantity standards consistently met with few mistakes and does not repeat them in the trait or position.

2. An Administrator/Supervisor who sets priorities properly, is well organized and requires only normal supervision and follow up in the trait or position.

3. An Administrator/Supervisor who completes their projects and assignments in the trait or position almost always on schedule.

4. An Administrator/Supervisor who displays complete knowledge of the trait, position and related activities.

PERFORMANCE LEVEL - DEVELOPMENTAL (Rating Code 2)

This level is used for traits and overall performance for those whose performance is reasonably acceptable in some areas but not in all. This may be a person new to the position or one who is experiencing performance difficulties. There is room for improvement in the trait or overall performance in order to meet the normal standard for the position.
EXAMPLES

1. An Administrator/Supervisor who needs considerable follow-up to see that trait or position responsibilities are done.

2. An Administrator/Supervisor who has the ability, is not using it and is experiencing performance difficulties in the trait or position.

3. An Administrator/Supervisor who has not been in the position long enough to know how to satisfactorily perform the trait or cope with the job situation.

PERFORMANCE LEVEL - IMPROVEMENT REQUIRED (Rating Code 1)

This level is used for traits and overall performance for those whose performance is clearly below the standard expected. Specifically identified improvement is required within 90 days.

EXAMPLES

1. An Administrator/Supervisor who does not display the drive or know-how to do the trait or position.

2. An Administrator/Supervisor who may be creating a morale problem within the College or department.

3. An Administrator/Supervisor who does not grasp the trait, position or situation and who cannot get things accomplished.

4. An Administrator/Supervisor who makes frequent mistakes, requires constant follow up and displays poor judgement in the trait or position.

Program based on Trinity Western University’s model, 1993.
