This participant's workbook is one component of an instructional package designed to aid in developing a model employability assessment and planning program for use in rehabilitation and education of persons with disabilities. "An Employability Development Model," outlines the career development and employability development process, major vocational task demands, and major factors influencing completion of vocational task demands. "Designing & Developing an Employability Assessment & Planning Program" offers a blueprint to develop the major components of the program, which include vocational choice, job acquisition, and job retention. Subsequent units focus in more detail on specific vocational choice, job acquisition, and job retention assessment and planning strategies. "Strategies for Empowering and Involving Consumers in the Assessment and Planning Process" offers worksheets for examining two strategies: Occupational Choice Strategy (a small group approach) and Know Thyself (a one-to-one approach).

INTRODUCTION
Importance of Employability Assessment and Planning in Rehabilitation and Education

Employability/Career Assessment is an important process to the rehabilitation of persons with disabilities. Therefore, we welcome you to an exciting activity. Your mission is to design a model employability assessment and planning program. You will be able to draw upon your own experience and the experience of others as you develop a comprehensive model that you may use to either build a program from scratch or, by using bits and pieces, to upgrade an existing program. Good luck.
