An integrated curriculum allows children's learning in all traditional subject areas to occur primarily through projects that the teachers plan and that reflect children's interests. This paper presents a curriculum web on Chinese festivals, specifically, the Chinese New Year, for kindergarten and first grade levels. The paper first presents a teacher brainstorm of a curriculum web on celebrating Chinese festivals, and then presents the thematic web for the subtopic Chinese New Year, which includes the origin of the festival, things people do, special activities, foods people eat, clothing, greetings, and the animal of the year from the Chinese zodiac. Next, the paper lists the curriculum subject areas and learning activities for the New Year subtopic: reading-listening-speaking; writing; math; science; art; social studies; music; and movement. Key events for the unit are then listed, including book making, field trips, dragon making, dragon parade, display center, and party. A student evaluation checklist for each of the subject areas is included. Two appendices contain a story map and a description of the origins of the Chinese New Year and its customs. (HTH)
An Integrated Curriculum for Kindergarten/First Grade Children Utilizing Project Approach

Purpose of the study

The curriculum is integrated so that children's learning in all traditional subject areas occurs primarily through projects that teacher plan and that reflect children's interests. Teachers guide children's involvement in projects and enrich the learning experience by engaging them in conversation, investigation, and also challenging their thinking.

APPENDIX B
The Origin of Chinese New Year

1. Introduction

The origin of Chinese New Year came from an ancient Chinese legend. It was told that during the ancient time, monsters (which we called "Nien") were likely to come out to attack and hurt people on a certain night, people were so afraid that they might be killed, they feared that they might not see each other again; therefore, the whole family would have the final big dinner together the night before the monsters attacked. Knowing that the monsters were afraid of blood and, for that matter, redness, people pasted red paper all around the front and the back door. When the night came, they closed and locked the door and went to bed early, frightened. When they woke up the next morning, they were happy to know that they were still alive. They congratulated everyone they saw.

2. Today's Chinese New Year (usually in February)

Today, there are many customs during Chinese Lunar New Year--one of the most important festivals in Chinese society. On the New Year's Eve, the whole family will get together to have a big dinner. Usually they sit in a circle around a table, which symbolizes a perfect get together. There are some special foods that seem to have special meanings according to their similar sounds, for examples, "chicken" means to start a family; "sweet cakes" mean to make progress; "fish "means to have money and food all the year round. Some people put one coin in the dumplings. The person eats the dumpling with the coin in it will be the most lucky person in the next year. After the dinner, the children will receive lucky money from the parents. On the day of Lunar New Year, everybody gets up early and dresses up. People believe that they will get the best they want in the coming year if they get up early that day. People say congratulations to one another. Candies and a varieties of snacks are served in each family.
3. Conclusions

Chinese New Year is really an interesting and meaningful festival. It reminds Chinese people to appreciate family reunions, the harvest of the seasons, and a new perspective for the coming year.
