ABSTRACT

This booklet consists of 220 questions about Native North Americans and Metis people that can be used as learning activities for elementary and secondary school students. Suggestions for using the questions include playing games in pairs or teams, locating resources to find answers to questions, playing trivia games and board games, and using questions as a starting point for further research on famous Native people. Questions relate to Native North Americans who have made contributions to Native culture, education, art, sports, history, and politics. Questions cover such individuals as Hiawatha, Chief Crazy Horse, Chief Sitting Bull, Olympian William "Billy" Mills, singer Buffy Sainte-Marie, artist Norval Morriseau, Indian activist Dennis Banks, photographer Murray McKenzie, and symphony conductor John Kim Bell. Separate answer sheets are included. (LP)

INTRODUCTION

This booklet is a collection of questions about Native and Metis people.

You may want to use the game in different ways.

1. You can informally play the game in pairs or teams. The answers are in the back of the booklet.
 - a) In pairs or small groups you each get a set number of questions. You then have to go find the answers in books or by interviewing other people. Whoever finds the answers in the shortest time, wins.
 - b) You can match a reader and a non-reader. The reader has to read the questions aloud to the non-reader. The non-reader has to think up places (other than the back of the book) that the reader could find the answer. They both get credit when the correct answer is found.
2. You can cut up sections of questions and put them on "trivia" cards. Answers could be taped on the back of each card.
3. You can devise board games using the information in the trivia game.
4. You can expand your knowledge by doing further research on famous native people.

We hope you have fun with this game. Mary Candline had fun thinking up all the questions!
