A guide to the vast array of available resources for law-related education (LRE), this annotated bibliography is intended to assist any one concerned with the civic education of youth, especially teachers and other members of the K-12 educational community. It offers information about the law, innovative teaching methods, and guides to national LRE programs. Part 1 presents an annotated bibliography of 43 LRE teaching materials, resource guides, and research documents in Resources in Education. Part 2 provides an annotated bibliography of 50 journal articles in Current Index to Journals in Education. Part 3 has two ERIC digests on LRE. The first is "Mediation in the Schools" by David Keller Trevaskis. The second digest is Robert S. Leming's "Teaching about Landmark Dissents in United States Supreme Court Cases." Part 4 contains the American Bar Association's "Essentials of Law-Related Education: A Guide for Practitioners and Policymakers." Also included are appendices that provide contact information for a network of LRE programs being conducted at both national and state levels and instruction on submitting LRE documents to the ERIC system. Introduction

Law-related education (LRE) is the organized learning experience that provides students and educators with opportunities to develop the knowledge, understanding, skills, attitudes, and appreciations necessary to respond effectively to the law and legal issues in our complex and changing society. Education for citizenship in our constitutional democracy is the overriding goal of LRE in elementary and secondary schools. LRE encourages students to deal with controversial issues that stimulate discussion, exploration, and reflection. This kind of focus emphasizes critical thinking and active participation by students. Knowledge and skills are enhanced by the widespread use in LRE programs of resource persons from the community.

To promote the widest possible dissemination of LRE materials, the American Bar Association National Law-Related Education Resource Center (ABA/NLRC) serves as the Adjunct ERIC Clearinghouse for Law-Related Education, in partnership with the ERIC Clearinghouse for Social Studies/Social Science Education (ERIC/ChESS) at the Social Studies Development Center of Indiana University. ERIC/ChESS is one of sixteen ERIC clearingshones sponsored by the U.S. Department of Education.

As a guide to the vast array of LRE resources available to teachers, the American Bar Association and ERIC/ChESS present this select bibliography of recent ERIC documents and journal articles on LRE. Through its annual efforts to publicize the valuable teaching materials on LRE, ABA and ERIC/ChESS endeavor to improve the quality of teaching in this vital area of civic education. This annotated bibliography offers teachers essential knowledge of the law, innovative teaching methods, and guides to national LRE programs. Reflecting a growing and important component of the K-12 curriculum, these materials on LRE should hold great interest for the educational community and anyone concerned with the civic education of American youth.

The American Bar Association's Public Education Division created the NLRC in 1991 to collect and disseminate information on LRE programs and resources, substantive legal topics, funding sources, and teacher and resource leader training opportunities. Today, the NLRC serves the K-12 community, college and university students, as well as the general public. NLRC produces newsletters, technical assistance papers, anthologies, bibliographies, and books on LRE resources, such as 319 Current Videos and Software for K-12 Law-Related Education.

ERIC is a federally funded, national information system designed to provide ready access to education literature. At the heart of ERIC is the largest education database in the world—containing more than 850,000 records about journal articles, research reports, curriculum and teaching guides, conference papers, and books. Each year approximately 30,000 new records are added. The ERIC database is available in many formats at hundreds of locations. A network of subject-oriented clearinghouses provides toll-free reference and referral services, and free or low-cost publications on important education topics. Twenty-five years ago, ERIC became the first commercial online database. In 1986, the ERIC database was made available for searching on CD-ROM.

Now ERIC is pioneering efforts to make education information accessible through electronic networks. Currently ERIC is available to thousands of teachers, administrators, parents, students, and policymakers through the Internet, CompuServe, America Online, America Tomorrow, and GTE Educational Network Services.

AskERIC is a human-mediated, question answering service for teachers, library media specialists, administrators, and others involved in education. A project of the ERIC Clearinghouse on Information and Technology at Syracuse University, AskERIC uses the vast resources of the ERIC system and the Internet to answer questions by electronic mail. Questioners receive an electronic mail response at no cost within 48 hours. Typical responses include citations from ERIC database searches, full text ERIC Digests, and Internet resources, such as list-servers and addresses for gopher sites. Address questions to: askeric@ericir.syr.edu.

The AskERIC Virtual Library offers an abundance of electronic resources through Gopher and World Wide Web (WWW). The resources include lesson plans, ERIC searches, ERIC Digests, AskERIC Info Guides, and lessons and materials from NASA, CNN, and the Discovery/Learning Chapter. If you have Gopher or FTP, connect to: ericir.syr.edu. If you have Mosaic, Lynx, or another WWW client, open the URL and connect to: http://eryx.syr.edu. You also may Telnet to: ericir.syr.edu and type "gopher:" at the "login:" prompt. If you need help, e-mail: askeric@ericir.syr.edu or call 800/464-9107.

Included in this collection are selected abstracts of LRE documents and annotations of LRE journal articles, among more than 150 collected between January 1, 1994, and September 30, 1994. The LRE materials included in this collection range from expositions on Supreme Court decisions to interviews with sports heroes on the prevention of juvenile crime. Because a hallmark of many LRE programs is a "non-traditional" approach to learning, the lesson plans included among the documents encourage students to deal with controversial issues that stimulate discussion, exploration, and reflection. Part I presents an annotated bibliography of LRE teaching materials, resource guides, and research documents. Part II provides an annotated bibliography of journal articles. The ERIC Digests, presented in Part III, include MEDIATION IN THE SCHOOLS by David Keller Treskis and TEACHING ABOUT LAND-MARK DISSENTS IN UNITED STATES SUPREME COURT CASES by Robert S. Leming. Part IV includes Essentials of Law-Related Education: A Guide for Practitioners and Policy-makers published by American Bar Association. Appendices feature a directory that provides contact information for a network of LRE programs being conducted at national and state levels, and instructions on how to submit LRE documents to the ERIC system.

ANOTATED BIBLIOGRAPHY ON LAW-RELATED EDUCATION

Resources in Education (RIE), of the U.S. Department of Education, is the facet of the ERIC database that publicizes documents in education, including lesson plans, curriculum guides, and research papers. Each entry provides the author, title, publisher, and sponsoring organization. A list of key words fosters easy reference and computer searches. The annotation offers a brief summary of the thesis, purpose, and contents of the document. Figure 1 in Appendix 3 is a guide to reading an ERIC document resume.

Educators may access the full text of many of the LRE documents referenced in this bibliography through microfiche collections available at major libraries or they may order paper copies through the ERIC Document Reproduction Service (EDRS). Serving a diverse group of customers with a wide range of requirements, EDRS fills requests ranging from one document to the entire ERIC collection for international, national, and local governments; university, state, and municipal libraries; foreign universities and libraries; education professionals, students and parents; and community groups, corporations, and professional associations.

This document consists of a 6-week curriculum unit designed to allow secondary students to actively explore issues associated with freedom of belief and expression. Throughout the curriculum students systematically examine the ways in which the legal and constitutional framework of our society directly embodies the norms of freedom of speech and minority rights. Students analyze the legal protections that have been afforded unpopular groups at the national level and parallel principles at the international level. Case studies, role playing, simulations, and mock interviews are used throughout the curriculum to examine the historical, psychological, and sociological dimensions of tolerance and intolerance. Information from psychological studies helps students understand why some individuals are particularly intolerant of beliefs that differ from their own. Descriptions of the Holocaust, the Cultural Revolution, and the internment of Japanese Americans during World War II direct students' attention toward the short- and long-term consequences of intolerance for the victim, the perpetrator, and society. The curriculum includes eight lessons and their corresponding handouts. Each lesson is divided into eight parts: (1) objectives, (2) estimated time, (3) materials and equipment needed, (4) vocabulary, (5) optional films and videos, (6) set induction, (7) learning sequence, and (8) closure. The lessons cover victims of intolerance, the origins of intolerance, basic human rights, censorship, political tolerance and U.S. courts, international rights and responsibilities, beliefs and believers, and developing a class declaration of rights and responsibilities. This curriculum unit for high school government or civics classes was developed as a requirement of a Fulbright-Hays Fellowship seminar in Indonesia. It deals with aspects of political control that the government exercises over citizen rights. The unit compares the situation in the United States, where the Bill of Rights guarantees the freedom of speech and expression, with that in Indonesia. Indonesia is considered a developing nation that is making steady economic progress, but its political structure does not allow for much freedom of expression in the public domain. Government, especially the head of government, the president, exercises an important role over the social, economic, and political life of the Indonesian people. This question is asked in the unit: if the political and legal structure of a country does contain some mechanism like the First Amendment that is designed to protect the rights of the individual vis a vis the government, how pervasively can that government permeate the social and economic life of its citizens? The unit is very skill oriented, using the cooperative learning approach as much as possible.

Learning objectives include: (1) analyze the First Amendment of the Bill of Rights; (2) analyze political cartoons; (3) analyze editorials; (4) analyze news articles; (5) hypothesize about social, political, and economic conditions in Indonesia; and (6) compare and contrast the different societies, the United States and the Republic of Indonesia. Procedures for using the unit are suggested. Handouts include U.S. political cartoons, an interview with an Indonesian newspaper editor, newspaper and magazine articles, and questions for students. This paper focuses on the problem of sexual harassment in the workplace. The legal definition of sexual harassment as drawn up by the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission is: "unwelcome sexual advances, requests for sexual favors, and other verbal or physical conduct of a sexual nature that are explicitly or implicitly a term or condition of an individual's employment or are the basis for employment decisions." The document traces the history of sexual harassment as an issue in the courts. In 1986, the Supreme Court found that sexual harassment creates a hostile work environment and so is a violation of Title VII of the Civil Rights Act. By 1991, the Court had established that the question of harassment must be viewed from the perspective of a reasonable "woman" rather than a reasonable "person"; since men, who are rarely victims of sexual assault, may lack the ability to perceive the underlying threats that a woman may perceive. A "box" showing how women respond to harassment in which behaviors are listed under "internal" and "external" focus is included. A graph illustrates the steps involved in filing a discrimination charge with the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission (EEOC). The overwhelming majority of victims of sexual harassment are unwilling to file claims because they fear that this will simply lead to more trouble. Victims sometimes accept sexual harassment as part of the cost of doing business. Fear of not being believed, an unwillingness to open up one's personal life to public scrutiny, and possible harm to one's career all figure in the decision not to pursue action against a harasser. Ways in which women can eliminate sexual harassment are suggested; they include working for effective legal remedies, increasing communication in the workplace, and educating the employer about the real cost of sexual harassment in the workplace. This publication is part of the Sports and the Law program sponsored by the Constitutional Rights Foundation. The program draws on young people's natural interest in sports to stimulate their involvement in education, and provides teacher training, lesson plans, a textbook and accompanying videotape, an annual conference, and classroom visits by sports and legal professionals. This issue contains four articles examining problems that athletes and others involved in sports are having following the laws and rules governing sports. The first article, "A Dangerous Game," discusses the positive and negative aspects of sports. The article suggests that it is difficult to identify at what point sports norms like "a quest for excellence" and "go for it" stop encouraging individual achievement and self esteem, and begin motivating athletes to act selfishly and take whatever measures are necessary to excel, regardless of the costs. The second article is an interview with Los Angeles Kings hockey player Marty McSorley. In the interview, teamwork, sportsmanship, and the spirit of competition are discussed. The third section is a collection of five photographs taken at the 1993 Sports and the Law Conference. The fourth article, "Coach's Column" (Andy Schwich), discusses Arthur Ashe and his contributions to sports oriented civic participation, the basis of sports and the law. Ashe represented equal opportunity for participation and fair competition, following the rules of the game, and dignity. He exemplified what the positive aspects of sports in life should be. The issue also contains questions for discussion and announcements of a series of lesson plans and an essay contest devoted to sports and the law. (DK)

This bulletin discusses some non-traditional teaching vehicles such as plays, computers, and "learning by doing" projects, used to heighten student interest in law-related education (LRE) by offering students unique experiences in a variety of settings. Four plays that have been developed or sponsored by local bar associations include: (1) "Vote is a Four Letter Word," a one woman show tracing the origins of the voting right from America's first legislative assembly in 1619 to the ratification of the 26th Amendment that reduced the voting age to 18 in 1971; (2) "The Kingdom v. Jack Spriggins," based on the "Jack and the Beanstalk" fairy tale in which students make up the jury at Jack's trial for murder, kidnapping, and theft; (3) "Rumpelstiltskin v. the Queen," based on the Rumpelstiltskin fairy tale; and (4) "The Trial of William Penn," set in England in the last 17th century, and based on the trial of William Penn and William Mead. A law-related education program, also described, includes skits, three videotapes, and a program that explores the U.S. election system and gives students an opportunity to see how the electoral process works. Hands-on projects that are discussed include "Project Inside Out, a theater project that allows adolescents to experience what it feels like to be in jail; a constitutional writing camp in which students pretend to be colonists in a space colony; and Project PATCH ideas such as a student bill of rights and an international law project. Computer uses in education are discussed. (DK)
This publication is intended for K-12 educators who are new to law-related education (LRE) or for lawyers who plan to make a presentation about the law to an elementary or secondary level class. Each of the 9 lessons engage students in active learning, inspires high levels of interest, and can be completed in one class session (about 45 minutes). Topics for the lessons include: dispute resolution, teaching about contracts, interpreting law, why we have rules, small claims court, search and seizure, and balancing power and liberty. Each lesson indicates grade level and explains activities in detail. Also included are guidelines for preparing the lessons and holding the students' interest.
Law Day is an annual event through which schools and communities commemorate the U.S. legal system. The observance provides an opportunity for schools and bar associations to educate youngsters about the role of law and lawyers in a democratic society. Such events can help generate interest for ongoing law-related education (LRE) programs in the schools, while fostering working relationships between schools, lawyers, judges, police, and other community resources. Such a program should begin with meetings among the participating parties, who should work together to develop lessons. Activities should offer students opportunities to interact with each other and with the resource people. Teachers should meet with the lawyers ahead of time to clarify teaching techniques and how the lesson fits into the curriculum. With advance planning, Law Day can evolve into law weeks, with many participants in the legal system taking part. A successful LRE program requires the support of school administrators and the local bar. Media coverage can also contribute to community support. A sample memo to principals and a school participation request form are included. (SG1)

Noting that much is known about teaching and learning personal and social responsibility, but little is incorporated into the K-12 curriculum, this book is intended for parents and educators as a guide to helping children develop personal and social responsibility, especially as it relates to behavior in school. Part 1 of the book consists of five chapters: (1) “Making Responsibility Education a Priority at Home and School”; (2) “Teaching Responsibility”; (3) “Exploring the Meaning of Personal and Social Responsibility”; (4) “Setting Goals for Learning To Be Responsible”; and (5) “Parents and Schools: Co-Partners in Teaching Responsibility.” Part 2 consists of one chapter that provides examples of model practices in teaching personal and social responsibility, while the single chapter that makes up Part 3 describes 16 exemplary programs, resources, and references for parents, schools, and the community. Six appendices contain a sample teaching unit from the Character Education Institute, a sample responsibility lesson from the Home School Institute, a description of a responsible student from a high school department, a letter from a teacher to parents on course responsibility, a sample parent-student handbook, and a list of responsibility-oriented elementary school behavioral expectations. Promoting change in civic education means rethinking what are the important aspects to teach about the Constitution, law, and democracy to equip students to be effective and affective citizens. The scope of instruction needs to broaden to include specific comparisons between the U.S. federal system of law and constitutionalism with counterparts in other nations. The comparative approach offers three functions: (1) creates an awareness of alternatives; (2) allows students to test the relative impact of various social, economic, demographic, political, or intellectual factors on the form of different nation's civic cultures; and (3) permits students to identify common patterns of action and behavior. A discussion of various constitutions and laws provides examples to learn about the advantages and limitations of the U.S. Constitution, law, and policy. The examples show the unique aspects of the U.S. Constitution and law, gives meaning to concepts of globalization, internationalization, and multiculturalism, and provides opportunities to appreciate others. Two proposals promote a modest and a radical view on instruction: (1) the modest proposal combines the multicultural emphasis to a broadened vision of cross-cultural and international studies of law and law-related subjects; and (2) the radical proposal adopts a strongly thematic and value-based approach that would look less at understanding the system and more on appreciating the values embodied in that system. Intended to help students learn that citizenship involves more than freedom and liberties, this book encourages students to participate in their schools and communities, to study the long tradition of citizen action in the United States, and to practice citizenship skills. Section 1 provides seven profiles of students who have worked to make positive change. Section 2 offers a history of five citizen movements: (1) civil rights; (2) labor; (3) women's rights; (4) consumer; and (5) environmental. These citizen movements show students how people have created change over the course of U.S. history. Section 3 presents 12 techniques for participation that citizens throughout U.S. history have used and continue to use to affect change. Section 4 describes 10 projects that students can undertake within the school or in the community to practice problem solving. In addition, 75 student activity ideas provide options for students to decide issues in their schools and communities they want to resolve. An extensive resource section lists citizens groups, publications, teaching materials, and videos. (CK)

This digest discusses issues related to teaching about the Fourth Amendment of the United States Constitution. It begins by explaining the implications and significance of the case in constitutional history. The first section provides an overview of the historical development of the Fourth Amendment, including the interpretation of the law. The second section explores the meaning of "unreasonable" in the Fourth Amendment. The discussion explains that it was in two cases, Weeks v. United States, decided in 1914, and Mapp v. Ohio, 1961, that the Court argued that evidence gathered in an illegal manner, without probable cause or without a search warrant, should be excluded from court proceedings. Various methods are suggested for teaching the Fourth Amendment. The paper lists the following steps for teaching the case study method: (1) review the facts in the case; (2) determine the main constitutional issue in the case; (3) examine alternative arguments on each side of the issue in the case; (4) consider the decision (both the majority opinion and any dissenting opinions), and the legal reasoning in the case; and (5) assess the implications and significance of the case in constitutional history. (DK)
This resource guide has been designed to assist teachers and students in the study of key U.S. Supreme Court cases. Each of the 93 cases listed includes a presentation of the facts, issue, and decision of the Court. Twenty-five commonly used textbooks were analyzed to determine the extent to which they cited the Supreme Court cases. No text cited all of the cases, and some of the cases were not cited at all. References varied from simple references to more complete discussions; the textbooks discussed few cases in full. To assist teachers, the first section of this guide is a table that indicates which cases are cited in which textbooks. Cases are grouped by topic, e.g., Constitution: Civil Rights/Discrimination, Freedom of Expression, etc.

The second section contains a bibliography of coded textbooks. The third section provides a brief synopsis of the cases. Because of the topical arrangement, teachers or students can review preceding or following cases to consider changes in precedents and gain a quick reference for further legal research. The fourth section includes strategies and activities highlighting the case study method. Appendices include a table of cases, a copy of the complete U.S. Constitution, and a glossary of terms. (SG)
To meet the needs of students who are Asian and Hispanic refugees, as well as the needs of a democratic society, teachers must be able to teach effectively an understanding and appreciation of the U.S. legal and judicial system while acknowledging, responding to, and integrating the cultural backgrounds and experiences of a diverse student population. This program is the result of a statewide program to develop, test, and train teachers in an innovative approach to law-related education that integrates the teaching of law and culture. The program focused on materials, strategies, teacher training, and community partnerships for teaching law-related education through an exploration of law and culture in the United States and three societies strongly represented in Colorado's population: Mexico, Japan, and Southeast Asia (Hmong). An outline is included to be used as a structural framework to guide the analysis of legal systems. Areas for consideration include the concept, purpose, and source of law in the culture, the judicial structure, the role of the cultural economic philosophy with regard to the formal legal system, and specific applications of the law. Lessons include objectives, handouts to be used, activities, and teacher background information. Units concentrate on history, geography, and map skills, cultural differences, and customs, and how ethnic customs should be viewed and treated in court when they conflict with federal or state laws. Units on Mexico cover the legal and political history of that country. Immigration is examined from Mexican and U.S. views. (DK)

This document is the 1992 guide for student participants in the Close Up program in North Dakota. The program is described as a citizenship learning adventure in which students are provided with opportunities to meet the state’s leaders. In this program issues are covered from different sides, seminars provide detailed information, and meetings and discussion groups permit students to share ideas and gain new perspectives. In the program students learn about the political process by focusing on the executive branch of the state government. They get the chance to apply skills such as decision making, debating, and public speaking. This document is divided into five sections. The first is an introduction that includes a profile of the national Close Up program, descriptions of learning activities such as a trip to the nation’s capital, and a citizen bee. The overview and goals of the North Dakota program, a map of the ground floor of the state capital, a directory of executive agency offices, and a program evaluation are included. The second section is the student guide. It includes information on planning for the state Close Up experience, student participant guidelines, how to prepare questions, and suggestions for corresponding with government officials. The third section describes the executive branch of the state government in detail. Thirteen specific positions and the office holder at the time are described. Section four describes boards and commissions. Section five consists of miscellaneous information about special interest groups, media issues, election of candidates, and open records and meetings. This publication is intended for teachers bringing a class to visit the National Archives in Washington, DC, for a workshop on primary documents. The National Archives serves as the repository for all federal records of enduring value. Primary sources are vital teaching tools because they actively engage the student’s imagination so that he or she may visualize past events and make sense of their reality and meaning. This publication concerns a workshop on the U.S. Constitution. In addition to historical information on the U.S. Constitution, background on two documents involved in the workshop—George Washington’s copy of the first draft of the Constitution and the 19th Amendment—is included. This publication is intended for teachers bringing a class to visit the National Archives in Washington, DC, for a workshop on primary documents. The National Archives serves as the repository for all federal records of enduring value. Primary sources are vital teaching tools because they actively engage the student's imagination so that he or she may visualize past events and make sense of their reality and meaning. This publication concerns the Bill of Rights to the U.S. Constitution. Historical information on the Bill of Rights as well as on the internment of Japanese Americans during World War II is included. A photograph of the Bill of Rights and a photograph of persons of Japanese ancestry arriving at an internment center during World War II are included, as are two student exercises. (DB)

Primary sources are vital teaching tools because they actively engage the student's imagination so that he or she may visualize past events and make sense of their reality and meaning. This publication concerns a workshop on the Declaration of Independence. In addition to the historical information on the Declaration, background on two documents involved in the workshop—the painting, "The Presentation of the Declaration," by Barry Faulkner, and the Dunlap Broadside (the first printed copy of the Declaration of Independence)—is included. Photographs of these two documents as well as two exercises for students also are provided. (DB)
This program guide provides the information a study circle will need to discuss the death penalty. It offers a balanced, non-partisan presentation of a spectrum of views. The four positions and the supporting material are designed for use in a single-session program of approximately 2 hours. The four positions are as follows: (1) the death penalty should be abolished because it is cruel and unusual; (2) the death penalty should be abolished because it is unjustly applied; (3) the death penalty should be retained because justice requires it; and (4) the death penalty should be retained and made easier to implement because it serves a useful purpose. Participant materials include a framework for discussion, the legal background, summary of the four positions, an examination of the positions with underlying principles and assumptions (rejoiners are in italics), and background reading. The materials provided for the leader’s use include suggestions for leading this discussion, suggested discussion questions, and general suggestions for leading a study circle. Other contents include suggestions for participants and a follow-up form. (YLB)
LEGAL ADMINISTRATIVE SYSTEMS, CURRICULUM GUIDE.

This curriculum guide provides materials for teachers to use in developing a course in legal administrative systems. Following an introductory section that lists the common essential elements of the course, the guide contains six sections that cover the following course topics: (1) introduction to legal administrative systems; (2) word processing; (3) effective communication; (4) information management and control; (5) operating office equipment; and (6) closure of legal administrative systems. Each section contains a competency matrix for domains and basic skills and one or more units each containing a lesson plan, a content outline, and teaching suggestions. Four appendices contain the following: names and addresses for 48 publishers, 129 computer software vendors, 5 microcomputer directories, 14 electronic information services, 90 magazines, periodicals, newsletters, and journals; 5 services and reports, and 24 professional organizations; a course competency checklist; a suggested equipment list; and suggestions for modifying the course for students with special needs. IMPROVING LEGAL LITERACY FOR SECONDARY LEVEL STUDENTS WITH DISABILITIES THROUGH TEACHER TRAINING USING THE AMERICANS WITH DISABILITIES ACT.

This practicum was designed to develop a national teacher training model giving special education professionals at eight sites the background, understanding, materials, and support necessary to teach secondary students with disabilities about their rights, responsibilities, and opportunities under the Americans with Disabilities Act (ADA). Teachers participated in two national training conferences, taught an ADA curriculum specifically written for students with disabilities, and developed future classroom plans. Implementation of the practicum involved conducting the training, writing an implementation guide for the training model, writing the ADA curriculum, conducting site visits, developing the ADA Clearinghouse and Teacher Resource Center, compiling an ADA resource packet, and assisting teachers with overall guidance. Analysis of program evaluation data revealed that teachers increased their ADA knowledge as a result of the training model. A comparison of students' pretest and posttest scores showed increased knowledge about the law and the ADA after students (n=53) participated in the law-related instructional program. An appendix contains a 90-page training model implementation guide, with information and resource documents on planning training, training components, teacher training, student instruction, and program evaluation. The implementation guide provides a conference checklist, student questionnaire, teacher questionnaire, student portfolio criteria, and many other resource materials. (Contains 34 references.) (JDD)

This issue of a newsletter from the American Bar Association emphasizes teaching about crime and punishment. The first article offers an overview of the diversity and common assumptions that underpin the teaching of criminology. Student interest in crime and criminology creates an opportunity for instructors interested in challenging students' reproduction of commonplace but mistaken notions about the role of law in society. By using historical sources and case studies of legal invention, the instructor can make immediately problematic the legal status of an action as criminal. By placing the study of law within a comparative historical context, the instructor can focus on the creation of crime to analyze social structure and power in particular communities and states. Editor's notes include administrative news and a discussion on using active learning strategies in the classroom. This coordinates with the last article which offers a critique and alternative approach to moot court exercises. The second article provides an historical view of punishment practices and social control. The argument is made that jails and prisons are being used more than ever, but control without confinement has been growing faster. The modernization of social control is marked by four changes: (1) subject of punishment shifted from the body to the soul, (2) regulation of punishment shifted from the community to the society, (3) target of punishment shifted from groups to individual, and (4) objective of punishment shifted from exile to normalization. The third article discusses why and how to incorporate feminist perspectives into the teaching of criminology.

This issue of "Focus on Law Studies" contains a special emphasis on teaching about law and the family, in the form of the following three articles: "Teaching Family Law: Growing Pains and All" (Susan Frelich Appleton); "The Family Goes to Court: Including Law in a Sociological Perspective on the Family" (Mary Ann Lamanna); and Michael Grossberg's "Bringing the Legal History of the Family into the Classroom." There is an introduction to the topic and a 35-item combined bibliography of teaching family law. (SG)
This issue of “Focus on Law Studies” contains a special emphasis on teaching about law and literature, in the form of the following six articles: “Law and Literature: New Combinations in Teaching” (John Paul Ryan); “Teaching Law and American Literature” (Janet Eldred); “Teaching Law with Sacco, Vanzetti, and the Rosenbergs” (Susan N. Herman); Ann M. Algeo’s “Teaching True Crime Literature”; “The Value of Fiction in the Classroom” (Nola Allen); and “Telling Stories in School: Law and Literature as an Approach to the Business Law Curriculum” (Bruce L. Rockwood). Some articles include references. (SG)

This student newsletter issue speaks to the subject of baseball. The first article, on who rules baseball, discusses the problems that the developing sport had with gambling, the struggle between the owners and gangsters for control of the game. The article describes the scandal involving the Chicago White Sox in the 1919 World Series and the resulting creation of the position of baseball commissioner who would act as judge and governor of the sport. It explains that the struggle between a powerful commissioner, the influence of gambling, and owners who have invested heavily in the game has continued for 70 years. A similar scandal with baseball player and manager Pete Rose went to a court of appeals that supported the baseball commissioner’s power to discipline a player. Questions for discussion are included. A second article describes the Sports and the Law Junior High Jam held in Los Angeles in August 1992. This was the first time that the event had been held. It brought together 150 boys and girls from inner city schools and community centers in Los Angeles. The tournament combined academics, community service, and basketball. All three areas were counted in picking the most well rounded teams of student athletes. The newsletter includes a puzzle using sports questions drawn from baseball and the articles included in this issue. Other articles discuss differences in baseball between the United States and Japan, and high school athletic programs. (DK)
This document is a teacher's guide to a series of mass transit advertisement posters illustrating Bill of Rights topics. The five posters in the series are discussed in five separate sections. Each section is divided into three units, each consisting of a learning activity, one for the secondary level, one for the middle school level, and one designed for the elementary level. The sections are: (1) freedom of religion, (2) freedom of speech, (3) the right to assemble, (4) the right to counsel, and (5) equal protection. The teaching strategies and classroom activities contained in the document build upon the themes illustrated by the posters. The sections include student handouts, lesson objectives, procedures, lists of books and reference materials, and questions. The activities for the elementary level include a lesson researching and discussing holidays from many cultures, a play about Martin Luther King Jr.'s "I Have a Dream" speech, a talk show about women in the women's suffrage movement, study of a famous case on the right to counsel, and a sampling of children's literature combined with journal writing. The middle school activities include class discussions, study of cases, an attorney visit to the classroom, and a group chart activity. At the secondary level, activities include study of cases, speech writing, research and discussion, and a study of local and state laws. (DK)
The Special Committee on Youth Education for Citizenship has released a report titled "Progress." This report is available from the National Law-Related Education Resource Center.

The report was sponsored by the American Medical Association and focuses on law-related education for citizenship. It contains sections on alcohol education, community surveys, and law-related education. The report is intended for educators and practitioners and includes case studies and examples of successful programs.

The report identifies key topics such as alcohol education, community surveys, and law-related education. It provides valuable insights into the implementation of law-related education programs and their impact on youth. The report is a comprehensive resource for educators interested in promoting law-related education and preparing citizens to be active participants in their communities.
This document is a collection of articles growing out of a conference on technology and law-related education. The papers are intended to give a broad overview of some of the technologies that allow access to more law-related education information, to illustrate the potential of multimedia presentations, and to examine new tools available to teachers and students that enhance both the understanding and communication of law-related concepts. This document contains 15 articles dealing with law-related education and technology, as well as a program of the conference agenda. The articles include: "Distance Education: Using Technology to Make All America a School" (Pamela Pease); "Implications of Emerging Technologies for LRE on Students with Disabilities" (Wanda Routier); "An LRE Resource Directory" (Julia Ann Gold); "Tapping into Law-Related Information" (Julia Hardin); "Meet ERIC: Grandaddy of Education Databases" (Jane Henson); "NICEL-N: Now Available on CompuServe" (Wanda Routier); "Welcome to WESTLAW" (Beth Wilson); "Energizing Social Studies through the Use of Technology" (Dick Rattan; Linda Speeles); "Interactive Law-Related Education: Making Students Part of the Action" (Don King); "Using Interactive Television to Bring LRE to Rural Schools" (Jan Harper); "Celebrating Law Day Via Satellite" (Marjorie Menzil); "Getting the Goods: High-Tech on a Low-Budget" (Harry Garvin); "Cable in the Classroom" (Ellen Simms; Dennis Uso); "Using Technology in a Big Way at a Small School" (Don Surgeon); and "Shining Worlds, Renaissance Exploration, and Stained-Glass Windows" (Bertram Cotton). This document lists the law-related education activities conducted by state courts. The listings are arranged by state. Entries list the name of the court, a list of activities provided, descriptions of unusual programs, guidelines for programs that some of the courts have developed, and the name, title, or committee, address, and phone number of a contact person for each state. Entries range from those where the court conducts no law-related education activities, but works closely with state centers for law and civic education, to elaborate programs. The entry for Alaska describes a program through the youth court in which juveniles accused of misdemeanors and felonies involving property, assault, and firearms charges, appear in a court where the roles of attorneys, bailiffs, clerks, and judges are filled by youth. Students in grades 7 through 12 can take an 8 to 10 week comprehensive law course. After passing a bar exam, they are sworn in as attorneys. Adult attorneys review students' research, and pass a bar exam, and attend court. Hearings are held in court. Sentences include community service, essays, attendance at adult arraignments, restitution and fines, and classes in shoplifting or substance abuse education. More typical activities listed include Law Day, visits to classrooms by judges, oral arguments held at schools, bicentennial celebrations, student visits to court, teacher education, mock trials, and curriculum development. This document is a compendium of teacher education strategies intended to strengthen law-related education efforts by providing ideas, activities, and experiences drawn from the perspectives of veteran teacher educators. The book grew out of a conference on advanced law-related education leadership exploring what is known about preparing precollegiate teachers for the 1990's and beyond. This comprehensive volume includes diverse inservice teacher education programs, ranging from creative strategies for workshops of short duration to summer institutes of several weeks. Preservice models for infusing law-related education into college and university teacher preparation courses are highlighted. In addition to presentations of exemplary preservice and inservice teacher education programs, an important element of the conference was reflective discussions among teacher education faculty, school district staff development specialists, and law-related education program directors. The volume is divided into two parts. The first includes six articles on preservice models. Articles in this section discuss training future teachers in U.S. government and politics, integrating law-related education into social studies using language arts methods, and a model for using law-related education as a vehicle for teaching secondary social studies method courses. The second section on inservice models discusses statewide law-related education certification, national teacher training workshops, graduate level programs, summer institutes for teachers, and community/school partnerships such as a mentor program in Ohio, and the national MENTOR program for law firm/high school partnerships. This document is a teachers' guide to accompany the book "Equal Justice Under Law: The Supreme Court in American Life." Because the book contains a tremendous amount of detail, the guide does not attempt to explicate everything in the text. Instead the guide attempts to provide more detail on one or more of the issues covered in different sections or topics in the book. Included are summaries of key cases, background on the controversies of a particular period, and suggestions as to how other materials in the sections might be taught. The guide is not designed to provide definitive answers to the issues raised by the Supreme Court's history, but to suggest the rich array of cases and controversies dealt with by the Court throughout its history. The guide includes a bibliography, glossary, chapter on case study methods, and a discussion of moot courts. The material in this document has been arranged into topics, organized to follow the sequence of the text. Several topics depart from the basic chronological scheme to explicate subjects such as the idea of constitutionalism, the structure of the judicial system, and milestones in Supreme Court history. Each topic offers one or more methods of instruction designed to encourage informed discourse and active student participation. Each topic contains a lesson highlight section that features a subject and strategy that can be taught separately if necessary. For nonchronological courses the guide suggests highlights in subject matter, issues, and concepts including power, property, liberty, equality, and justice. (DK)
This document from the Virginia Department of Education reports on a project to enable public schools to meet requirements of two laws. The first law required public schools to emphasize instruction on the documents of Virginia and United States history and government. The second requested that all public schools be urged to display copies of the Bill of Rights of the Constitution of the United States in commemoration of the bicentennial anniversary of its ratification. The Board of Education was directed to ensure that students be thoroughly knowledgeable about the significance of documents of history. With an emphasis on instructing students on the inherent rights included in these documents: the most significant of The Federalist Papers: the historical, political and cultural shaping of such documents, and their application to daily living. Virginia Standards of Learning objectives for social studies provide a focus on instruction of historical documents at grades five, seven, and eleven. This report discusses two documents developed to further assist school divisions in implementing these objectives. The first, “Documents and Symbols of Democracy” is an instructional book for Virginia students on the Virginia Declaration of Rights, the Virginia Statute of Religious Freedom, the Declaration of American Independence, the Constitutions of the United States and Virginia, and national and state symbols. The second publication was written to assist teachers as they prepared instructional and assessment activities to help students understand the documents of Virginia and U.S. history. Appendices which comprise about three quarters of the document include: (1) a copy of Senate Joint Resolution No. 187; (2) a copy of House Joint Resolution 288; (3) a copy of Superintendent’s Memorandum No. 168; (4) “Documents and Symbols of Democracy” because of length not physically included; (5) “Lessons on Documents and Symbols of Democracy” because of length not physically included; and (6) a 23-item ERIC bibliography on the use of historic documents in classroom instruction. This bulletin explores the effectiveness of law-related education (LRE) programs by surveying the relevant research. The document begins with the article “Research and Law Related Education: Perceptions, Perspectives, and Possibilities” (David T. Naylor). The article identifies five categories of questions important to LRE research: (1) What is the nature and status of LRE? (2) What impact does LRE have on the lives of students? (3) What is needed to teach LRE effectively? (4) How should teachers be prepared to teach LRE? and (5) What is required to get and keep LRE in school programs? Five functions of research are identified: (1) to provide scientific underpinnings to the ideas and practices regarded as common sense; (2) to uncover new perspectives and provide fresh ideas; (3) to uncover ways of proceeding requiring different beliefs or complex actions; (4) to produce findings that simplify practice; and (5) to yield ideas and findings that are counter-intuitive. Ten references are included. The remainder of the bulletin consists of summary reports of seven research studies in progress: (1) “Exploring the Dimensions of Political Tolerance among Adolescents”; (2) “Current Status of LRE in Elementary Classrooms”; (3) “Teachers’ Conceptions of Justice as Implemented in Social Studies Curriculum”; (4) “Judicious Discipline: Teachers and Students Practicing the Language of Citizenship”; (5) “Impact of Mediation Experience on Mediators”; (6) “Cognitive Development in Young Children: Issues of Literacy Expression and Law”; and (7) “An Analysis of Initial Law-Related Education: Case Studies of Elementary School Teacher-Pupil Interactions Related to the Concepts of Law and Order.” Eight research proposals are summarized. Contains 26 references (10K).

Current Index to Journals in Education (CIJE)
ANNOTATED BIBLIOGRAPHY
ON LAW-RELATED EDUCATION

The Current Index to Journals in Education (CIJE) is the facet of the ERIC database that reports on periodical literature published in approximately 830 major educational and education-related journals. Each entry provides the author, title, and journal in which the article is published, as well as the volume, year, and pages. A list of key words fosters easy reference and computer searches. The annotation offers a brief summary of the thesis, purpose, and contents of the article.

Copies of journal articles can be found in library periodical collections, through Interlibrary Loan, or from article reprint services. The reprint services include the University Microfilms International (UMI) and the Institute for Scientific Information (ISI). To obtain journals that do not permit reprints and are not available from your library, write directly to the publisher. Addresses of publishers are listed in the front of each issue of Current Index to Journals in Education, a monthly index publication available in many library reference departments. Figure 2 in Appendix 3 is a guide to reading ERIC journal article resumes.

Arguments that law-related education should prepare students to be able to debate global environmental issues. Discusses overpopulation, water quality, and species extinction. Concludes that law-related education's critical contribution may be to prepare citizens to balance competing interests and make decisions that promote the common good. (CFR)

An ERIC Digest is a two-page synthesis or overview of important literature on a topic of interest to social studies educators. There are more than 1,000 Digests on a variety of topics in the ERIC database, and collectively the ERIC Clearinghouses produce more than 100 new titles each year. The ERIC Clearinghouse for Social Studies/Social Science Education (ERIC/ChESS) annually produces eight-ten Digests.

Two of the Digests produced by ERIC/ChESS in 1994-1995 treat topics in law-related education: (1) MEDIATION IN THE SCHOOLS by David Keller Trevaskis and (2) TEACHING ABOUT LANDMARK DISSENTS IN UNITED STATES SUPREME COURT CASES by Robert S. Leming. These two Digests, reprinted here were produced jointly by ERIC/ChESS and the American Bar Association.

You can search and locate the complete texts of ERIC Digests on the CD-ROM versions of the ERIC database (available at hundreds of university and larger public libraries) and on the Internet. You can also contact the ERIC Clearinghouse that covers your topic and ask for its latest Digest list.

More than 50 ERIC Digests, published since 1990, on various topics in social studies are available from ERIC/ChESS. Direct your inquiries about titles and procedures for ordering these Digests to ERIC/ChESS, 2805 E. Tenth Street, Bloomington, IN 47408-2698 or call 800/266-3815.
How Should Schools Address the Problem of Violence? Conflict is a normal, natural part of everyday life. The word conflict has its roots in the Latin word confictus, meaning “striking together.” Despite the violent overtones of its Latin translation, conflict and violence are not synonymous. However, unresolved and lingering conflict frequently leads to violence, interfering with productivity and the quality of life in schools and the community. Extensive data illustrate that instances of violence, including bias-related violence and disciplinary problems in schools around the country, are severely interfering with the learning environment of students. Almost 300,000 high school students are attacked physically each month and one in five students in grades 9 through 12 carries a weapon to school (Meek 1992, 48).

The rising incidence of violence in the schools has led numerous school districts to implement a wide range of costly safety measures from purchasing metal detectors to hiring full-time police officers. Although such measures may limit violent acts in the schools, they do not attack the causes of violence and often serve only to move the violence elsewhere in the community. There is a growing, common-sense consensus that the best way to handle violence in the schools and prevent its spread throughout the community is to defuse disputes before they turn violent.

Schools have attempted to manage interpersonal conflicts among students, teachers, and administrators by various models of discipline, such as referrals to the principal’s office, detention, suspension, and expulsion. Yet, it does not appear that these methods teach the students the problem solving and conflict resolution skills they need for life to resolve conflict in a productive, non-violent way. Dissatisfaction with traditional processes established to settle disputes has led educators and others to try new ways of conflict resolution such as mediation.

The rush toward conflict resolution in the schools is mirrored in society at large by a move away from the traditional litigation model of problem solving in the courts. Alternative Dispute Resolution (ADR) efforts, including court-based mediation programs, are expanding throughout the justice system. Mediation as an alternative means of dispute resolution has been used in various forms since the 1960s. It received national attention in 1984 when the National Association for Mediation in Education (NAME) was formed. NAME brought together educators and mediators working in neighborhood justice centers to consider how best to teach about mediation and conflict resolution. (For more information contact NAME, 205 Hampshire House, P.O. Box 33635, University of Massachusetts, Amherst, MA 01003-3635; (413) 545-2462.) The mediation effort in schools was also spurred by the development of local programs that have grown to national stature, such as the Community Board Program in San Francisco and the New Mexico Center for Dispute Resolution based in Albuquerque.

How is Mediation Being Used in the Schools? Peer mediation programs, where students are trained generally to resolve disputes involving other students, have been shown to be an effective means of resolving disputes in school settings. Success rates of 58% to 93% have been achieved at various sites where success was measured by whether an agreement was reached and maintained at the time of a follow-up evaluation (Lam 1988; Johnson, Johnson, and Dudley 1992). There is anecdotal evidence that students transfer the mediation techniques learned in school to settings beyond the classroom. Students have reported using their mediation skills to resolve disputes at home with their siblings and in their community with peers (Johnson, Johnson, and Dudley 1992, 97).

Both mediators and disputants benefit from the mediation training and conflict resolution process. Students who are taught the skills of mediating disputes learn political skills which can be used beyond the classroom. Student mediators learn to listen effectively, summarize accurately, and think critically. Further, they develop skills on how to solve problems, to lead, to write, and to foster meaningful discussion among disputants. Since mediation seeks to solve a dispute and prevent its recurrence, student mediators learn to plan for the future. They learn about responsibilities as well as rights, about consequences as well as choices.

Disputants involved in mediation also learn many of these same lessons. More importantly, maybe for the first time in their lives, they learn non-violent ways that they can choose to resolve their conflicts. They learn that they can succeed at resolving conflicts peacefully, that they can resolve problems without resorting to violence. They also develop a capacity to empathize with others.

This creates a “chicken and the egg” element to bringing mediation programs into schools. Do you begin by teaching everyone the skills of conflict resolution, or do you begin by training a small group of peer mediators? Either approach may be used at the start of a program, but there is a need to eventually teach everyone in the school community the skills involved in mediating disputes, so that the broader goals are achieved. Success of peer mediation should be studied in terms of broader issues of changing ways of thinking about and responding to conflict as well as specific improvements in school discipline and student behavior.

At the elementary school level, mediators generally work in teams on the playground, in the lunchroom, or in the classroom. Intervention is often immediate, with the mediators coming up to the disputants and asking if they would like to try to settle their problems. If they agree, the mediators and disputants move to a clear area and begin the mediation process. If the disputants refuse to participate, the mediators move on. Their job is to help parties resolve their disputes, not to police the area.

At the secondary level, peer mediators often have cases referred to them for mediation. These mediations take place in more formal settings, such as an empty office or classroom set aside for the mediation program.

Checklist for Mediation. Trained mediators follow a simple procedure, such as the model outlined below from the American Bar Association (Wolowiec 1984, 16):

Part I. Introduction
1. Have participants introduce themselves.
2. Explain the mediator’s role.
3. Explain the ground rules. An example of a good ground rule is: Respect each other.
4. Explain steps of mediation.
5. Ask for any questions before you begin.

Part II. Telling the Story
1. Both parties tell their side of the story to the mediator.
2. Summarize both parties’ side of the story.
3. Make sure you understand the conflict.
4. Make sure the parties understand the conflict.

Part III. Identifying Facts and Feelings
1. Parties tell their side of the story to each other.
2. Bring out facts and feelings of what the parties say.
3. Have parties change roles.
4. Summarize the facts and feelings of both sides.

Part IV. Generating Options
1. Ask both parties how they can solve the problem.
2. Write down all solutions.
3. Check off only the solution(s) that both parties can agree to.

Part V. Agreement
1. Use only the solutions that both parties agree to.
2. Write the contract up in parties’ own words.
3. Everybody signs it.

Part VI. Follow-Up
1. Explain how follow-up works.
2. Remember to thank the people for being there and for letting the mediation service help them.

Teaching about Landmark Dissents in United States Supreme Court Cases
by Robert S. Leming

Since the Marshall Court in the early nineteenth century, the U.S. Supreme Court has issued a single opinion indicating its decision in a case. The Court disposes of each case it reviews by majority rule (typically either affirming or reversing) and provides a rationale for its decision. The disposition and rationale are both critical elements of the Court's decision. In providing reasons for its decision, the Court may offer constitutional interpretations which have a significant impact on American law and society. Moreover, what often makes Court cases compelling as human drama is that they typically involve real people engaged in disputes which have been brought to the justice system for resolution. This is the "disposition" of a case.

In cases where some justices do not agree completely with the Court's decision, they may write or join concurring and dissenting opinions. In "concurring" opinions, justices agree with the majority regarding the outcome of the case, but disagree, in some way, with the reasons that support the outcome. In "dissenting" opinions, justices disagree with the outcome of the case and present rationales for their views. Justices offer reasons for their decisions based upon their understanding of law, history, and policy.

Unlike the Court's majority opinions, dissents have no legal force. Typically, they simply provide justices disagreeing with the majority an opportunity to express their dissatisfaction with the outcome and explain their disagreement. Nevertheless, dissenting opinions can have a greater impact. For instance, they might encourage federal legislation to reverse or limit the Court's decision. Moreover, dissenting justices may hope to influence, ultimately, the Court itself in future decisions. While the Court typically follows its own precedents in deciding cases (under the established judicial principle of stare decisis or "let the decision stand" in Latin), it has, on occasion, overturned or significantly modified its own earlier decisions. In exceptional cases, dissents have attained landmark status in American legal history in that they influenced subsequent reversals by the Court or otherwise have come to articulate revised opinions of the Court on significant matters of constitutional interpretation and public policy.

Infusion of Landmark Dissents into the Curriculum. Landmark dissents, those which influenced subsequent Court decisions, should be included prominently in United States history and government courses. Notable examples are the dissenting opinions in Plessy v. Ferguson (1896), Olmstead v. United States (1928), Minersville School District v. Gobitis (1940), and Betts v. Brady (1942).

One of the most influential dissents was crafted by Justice John Marshall Harlan in the 1896 case of Plessy v. Ferguson. Homer Plessy, acting on the behalf of a Louisiana Citizen's Committee, bought a first-class ticket on a Louisiana train. Plessy, who had one great-grand parent of African descent, boarded the train and sat in a railroad car reserved for whites only, ignoring the coach marked "colored only." After refusing to change seats, Plessy was arrested for violating the Separate Car Law requiring separate railroad seating for blacks and whites.

The central issue in this case involves the question of whether or not the state law requiring separate railroad accommodations violated the 13th Amendment's outlawing of slavery or the 14th Amendment's guarantee of equal protection of the laws for all citizens. The Supreme Court ruled against Plessy, holding that the "equal protection of the laws" clause of the 14th Amendment allowed "separate but equal" facilities for blacks. The Court also ruled that the Separate Car Law did not violate the 13th Amendment's ban on slavery.

The lone dissent in Plessy was written by Justice John Marshall Harlan who wrote, "But in view of the Constitution, in the eye of the law, there is in this country no superior class of citizens. There is no caste here. Our Constitution is color-blind, and neither knows nor tolerates classes among citizens. In respect of civil rights, all citizens are equal before the law." Justice Harlan, who had been a slave owner from Kentucky, warned future generations against the evils of giving a legal sanction to class distinctions.

In 1954 the Court, in line with Justice Harlan's dissent, finally ended over 50 years of "separate but equal" legislation with the Brown v. Board of Education ruling which struck down laws that enforced racial segregation in public schools.

In the 1928 U.S. Supreme Court case of Olmstead v. United States, decided by a 5-4 vote, Justice Louis Brandeis's dissenting opinion argued for a constitutional right to privacy and warned future generations about the advancement of technology and its possible intrusion into constitutionally protected areas. In 1924, Mr. Ralph Olmstead stood accused of violating the Volstead Act which outlawed the transportation or sale of alcoholic beverages anywhere in the United States. The evidence against Olmstead was gathered through the use of electronic wire-tapping of Olmstead's office and home. Olmstead claimed his Fourth and Fifth Amendment rights had been violated. Olmstead believed the search of his house and office was illegal and that his conversations should not be used to self-incriminate him in court.

Robert S. Leming is the Director of the Indiana Program for Law-Related Education at the Social Studies Development Center of Indiana University.
seize physical evidence. Rather, the police overheard telephone conversations over "...wires reaching into the whole world from the defendant's house or office."

Justice Louis Brandeis, one of four justices dissenting in this case wrote, "The progress of science in furnishing the Government with means of espionage is not likely to stop with wire-tapping. Ways may some day be developed by which the Government, without removing papers from secret drawers, can reproduce them in court, and by which it will be enabled to expose to a jury the most intimate occurrences of the home." Justice Brandeis further argued that the "right to be let alone" was the most important right available to mankind.

Forty years later the U.S. Supreme Court embraced Brandeis's opinion in the 1967 Katz v. United States case which overturned the Olmstead decision. The Katz decision (7-1) concluded that wiretaps and other types of electronic surveillance were unconstitutional because they violate an individual's right to be protected against unreasonable searches and seizures.

In 1940, the Court decided the case of Minersville School District v. Gobitis, which upheld a flag salute requirement for students attending a public school. Two students, Lillian and William Gobitis, were members of the Jehovah's Witnesses faith, which believed that saluting the flag was a crime against God. They were expelled from school for not saluting the American flag. The Court, in its 8-1 decision, argued that religious freedoms must yield to state authority as long as the state was not directly restricting or promoting religion. Justice Harlan Fiske Stone dissented, arguing that religious freedom was outside the jurisdiction of the government. Three years later, in a 6-3 decision, the Court reversed itself in West Virginia State Board of Education v. Barnette. The decision was reversed, in part, because Justice Stone had become the Chief Justice and two new members had joined the Court.

In 1942, Justice Hugo Black dissented in the Betts v. Brady case, decided 6-3, by arguing that defendants in state courts should have the same right to counsel that defendants do in federal courts. Justice Black's dissent relied on his own opinion in an earlier case, Johnson v. Zerbst (1938), when he wrote, "The Sixth Amendment stands as a constant admonition that if the constitutional safeguards it provides are lost, justice will not 'still be done.' It embodies a realistic recognition of the obvious truth that the average defendant does not have the professional legal skill to protect himself when brought before a tribunal with power to take his life or liberty." The Court, however, rejected Black's argument, refusing to extend the right of counsel to defendants in noncapital felony cases at the state level.

Justice Black's opinion became the majority view in 1963 when the Court overturned Betts in Gideon v. Wainwright in a 9-0 decision. In Gideon the Court ruled that the Sixth Amendment, as applied to the states by the Fourteenth Amendment, required that indigent defendants charged with serious offenses in state criminal trials must be represented by counsel.

Instructional Strategies for Teaching Dissents. A moot court simulation is a very exciting method that involves students in a role play of the United States Supreme Court. Students are exposed to the opinions developed by the Supreme Court Justices and are given the opportunity to develop their own arguments and express them in written and oral forms. A moot court simulation for historical connections to be made between cases and effect on the American judicial system and American society.

Another effective instructional strategy is the case study method, in which students are encouraged to carry out the following steps: review the background information and the facts; determine the main issue(s); examine different arguments on the issue; consider the decision (with majority and minority opinions) and legal reasoning; and assess the implications and historical significance of the case.

ESSENTIALS OF LAW-RELATED EDUCATION: A GUIDE FOR PRACTITIONERS AND POLICY MAKERS
Essentials of Law-Related Education
Introduction

Each year, the American Bar Association Special Committee on Youth Education for Citizenship sponsors the National Law-Related-Education Leadership Seminar. This seminar brings together over 200 members of the law-related-education (LRE) community to share exemplary LRE programs and curricula, explore new directions in content and delivery, gain insights and affirmation through networking, and address issues of broad scope and significance in education.

At our 1992 seminar, held in Indianapolis, Indiana, Fran Haley (former executive director of the National Council for the Social Studies) cautioned and challenged LRE leaders not to be passive bystanders as the national standards were formulated in a range of subject areas central to LRE. During the seminar’s deliberations, some of our colleagues voiced concern about the implications of the “standards movement” for elementary and secondary school instruction. Others expressed the need for a clear articulation of LRE’s goals, content, and effectiveness. A strong consensus arose from those present that, if LRE was to remain in the school curriculum, law-related educators had to become actively engaged in the deliberations of this revolutionizing “movement” taking place in education.

Hence, the Special Committee undertook to coordinate the National LRE Essentials Initiative, with the purpose of setting forth a statement of what is “essential” to LRE as our field envisions it, and seeks to maintain it, as an integral part of elementary and secondary education in the twenty-first century. The resulting document draws upon the wisdom and experience of law-related educators over many years and reflects the input of LRE leaders from throughout the nation.
Presented in this booklet, the IRE Essentials concentrates on four areas—concepts and subject matter; attitudes, beliefs and values; skills; and instructional practices and contexts which together provide optimal opportunities for students to learn about their roles and responsibilities as citizens. Throughout the development of the IRE Essentials, we focused on the potential benefits and outcomes of this effort:

▲ Helping the IRE field establish priorities and prepare effectively to address the needs of elementary and secondary students in the twenty-first century

▲ Insuring that curricular elements essential to IRE are among national, state, and local educational priorities, including national standards for civics and government, history and social studies; national assessments; and other student performance indicators

▲ Providing national advocacy for IRE by mobilizing and directing the field’s active participation in the national education standards movement

As with any project of this type, it was necessary to call on a select group of colleagues to advise and guide the effort to completion. The IRE Essentials was “twice blessed.” First, we benefited from the vision and support of members of the Special Committee and its Advisory Commission, under the leadership of Margaret Bush Wilson, Chair, 1993-94. Their decision to devote resources and staff to this effort was crucial to its success. Second, we benefited from the expertise and commitment of our colleagues on the Teacher Education Board, chaired by Dr. David Naylor, University of Cincinnati, who worked with staff to craft the process, clarify the focus, and maintain the integrity of the initiative throughout its development.

When we embarked upon this effort in 1992, I asked Howard Kaplan on our staff to accept the responsibility of coordinating it. Through its completion he has worked tirelessly to consolidate and organize, into an end-product that is both clear and useful to its audience, the wealth of information obtained in the range of consensus-building activities that were conducted over a three-year period.

The IRE Essentials reflects the input, commitment, and expertise of the diverse constituents of our field. Did we reach consensus on all elements? No! What we achieved through this process, in my opinion, is a more satisfactory and comprehensive answer to the often-asked question: What is law-related education?

As always, I extend my sincere appreciation for the efforts and support of all my IRE colleagues in creating this defining statement of our work.

Statement of Law-Related Education Essentials

What is essential to LRE?

LRE has been defined as "education to equip nonlawyers with knowledge and skills pertaining to the law, the legal process, and the legal system, and the fundamental principles and values on which these are based" (Law-Related Education Act of 1978). LRE is typically understood to foster the knowledge, skills, and values that students need to function effectively in our pluralistic, democratic society based on the rule of law. Law-related educators strive to develop the active citizens our society requires: those who can understand, live in, and contribute positively to the civic communities which they belong.

Law saturates our lives irrespective of age or setting. Consequently, LRE focuses on real issues that affect real people in real situations. Through LRE, educators seek to elucidate essential concepts—including law, power, justice, liberty, and equality—fundamental to our constitutional democracy and to the structure and functioning of other societies. LRE enables educators to teach how the law and legal issues are essential to the functioning of politics, culture, and society. In so doing, it explores how the law affects students and how they, in turn, can affect the law. LRE strives to illuminate the substantive and procedural values underlying our legal system, fostering the formation of beliefs and attitudes that support such values.

LRE provides students with active learning experiences that permit them to explore their rights and responsibilities under the law, confront and resolve disputes, and discuss and analyze public issues. By so doing, LRE fosters the development of lifelong skills all citizens need, including the ability to think critically; gather, interpret, and act appropriately on information; and participate effectively in our law-based society.

While the essential LRE elements enumerated in this publication—subject matter, instructional practices and contexts; skills; and attitudes, beliefs, and values—can and have been distinguished for analytical purposes, they are inextricably interconnected in the practice of LRE. For instance, through LRE, educators help students value fairness and might challenge students' understanding of the concept by asking them whether fairness requires a community to offer everyone a quality education. In pondering whether liberty should include a right to education, students in LRE might be asked to consider whether property rights include a right to buy a better education. If so, students might be asked to consider, does that freedom undermine equality as a social ideal? In experiencing and considering these issues through the active learning strategies characteristic to LRE, students should learn how to formulate informed opinions, decide how to act, and develop a variety of other critical skills. Moreover, as a result of LRE, instructional processes, educators foster the attitudes, beliefs, and values essential to LRE.
What subject matter is essential?

Concepts central to LRE include law, justice, power, equality, property, and liberty. Through LRE, teachers can teach what abstract concepts such as "liberty" actually mean through examination of specific contexts and practices. For example, they can help students understand "liberty" by giving them opportunities to learn about liberties guaranteed under the U.S. Constitution. With that knowledge, students can become aware that such liberties can still be the source for continuing controversies in contemporary society, such as when individual liberties conflict with majority values or public policy priorities. A further example is provided by the concept of property, an examination of which cuts across many topics, from consumerism to the environment. For instance, in teaching about the property rights protected by the Constitution, educators might ask students whether and how such rights have or might collide with the ideals of liberty, justice, or equality.

The relationship between citizen and society is essential to LRE, which should illustrate significant connections between students and larger communities, such as town, nation, and world. Some law-related educators might focus primarily on law that affects the daily lives of all people, including criminal and civil law. Others might concentrate on fundamental legal concepts and principles, including their origins, evolution, and contemporary influence and impact. Still others might stress the application of LRE principles and skills in specific real-world situations, both personal and civic.

LRE instruction should recognize that government use of power and authority can bring both order and the risk of abuse. Law-related educators might help students understand that the Constitution limits governmental power by separating, and sharing, it. Educators might also ask students to ponder the relationship between power and law, considering such topics as civil disobedience, conscientious objection, capital punishment, and victimless crimes.

LRE emphasizes the role of due process of law as essential to justice in our system of governance. Teachers might focus on justice through civil, criminal, and juvenile law, or through such topics as mercy killing or cruel and unusual punishment. In dealing with equality, teachers might have students study issues of racial or gender discrimination, voting rights, or affirmative action. In so doing, students will be able to reflect on the difference between equal opportunity as a constitutional ideal and as a day-to-day reality.

In teaching how ideals valued in the abstract often come into conflict in specific practices and applications, LRE should impel students to grapple with fundamental conflicts or tensions such as those between liberty and equality, unity and diversity, power and justice, freedom and order, and rights and responsibilities. For instance, law-related educators might explain that the contemporary controversy over "hate speech" can be seen as a conflict between the ideals of liberty and equality or, alternatively, of unity and diversity.

How and where should LRE be taught?

Law-related educators should require students to participate actively in their own learning. For instance, by using role play in the classroom, teachers can encourage students to voice diverse opinions about legal issues. By having students compare and contrast several court decisions on one issue, teachers can encourage students to address judicial decisions in historical context, assess the role of precedent, and comprehend the nature of historical and social change. In helping students stage mock trials, teachers can enable students to experience the judicial process.

The classroom that best fosters LRE is student focused. The ideal LRE classroom acts as a forum where students can freely discuss conflicting ideas. In drawing such ideas from a cross-section of subjects, teachers give students a taste of the complexity of legal issues. LRE classrooms should have diverse, high-quality resources that provide students with the information they need while conveying the fact that different people can legitimately and reasonably have different opinions and perspectives on issues. Enlisting LRE professionals—lawyers, law-enforcement professionals, judges, scholars, for example—from the community as human resources for in-class and out-of-class instruction is an essential means by which LRE meets students' needs in these respects.

LRE teaching strategies necessarily include inquiring into, and deliberately considering, controversial issues. The teaching strategies used in LRE should enable students to identify fundamental values in conflict and emphasize the higher-level thinking skills required for students to grapple successfully with such issues.

LRE does not need to be restricted to one class, course, or subject area. The constellation of values, knowledge, and skills that comprise LRE can be woven throughout the school curriculum beginning in the primary grades. Effective LRE programs should consist of carefully planned, integrated, sequenced, and cumulative instructional experiences. For instance, beginning with the early grades, LRE might emphasize fundamental concepts and values such as justice, liberty, and equality. In later grades, such concepts and values can be addressed through examination of more complex issues and dimensions of our shared constitutional ideals, and their national and global implications.

While LRE is especially well suited to the curricular goals of the social studies, it doesn't need to be limited to that area. LRE can be taught in some fashion in all academic subjects. It infuses every subject of the school curriculum, just as law infuses every aspect of our everyday lives. For example, when students read To Kill a Mockingbird in language arts, it is both natural and appropriate for them to explore why the law may fail to provide justice to someone accused of a crime. When students use computer software in a mathematics classroom, copyright considerations inevitably arise and merit exploration. And when students in science classrooms consider aspects of our physical environment, the role of law in protecting it will emerge logically.
Schools are the ideal place for young people to learn about the law. Yet LRE should not be a matter for schools alone. Every part of the community can promote and reinforce LRE lessons. Families, for example, can provide a basic orientation toward authority, justice, and responsibility. The media, especially television, can be another excellent LRE vehicle. The media are well equipped to focus citizen attention on important law-related issues and to provide important information about them. Teachers who capitalize on these opportunities can do much to have their students engage in thoughtful discussions about law and citizenship.

What skills should LRE foster?

Law-related educators should help students develop the skills needed to acquire information about the rule of law in constitutional democracies and other societies and how it is connected to their lives; how they can communicate their ideas, beliefs, and opinions about the law and legal issues; and how they can actively and constructively participate in group or broader civic affairs. Thinking skills developed in LRE include analyzing and interpreting judicial opinions and other legal documents; developing a capacity for understanding when and how laws apply to specific fact situations; critically assessing laws and legal issues; and developing a capacity for understanding and evaluating controversies and conflicts arising from legal issues. LRE also develops students’ communications and social participation skills, including persuading others regarding beliefs and actions related to the law; participating collectively in making rules and setting goals; building consensus through deliberation, negotiation, compromise, and conflict resolution; and working cooperatively to make decisions and take actions concerning hypothetical or actual legal and law-related social issues.

Law-related educators should help students acquire such skills through guided discussions on interesting, relevant topics. For instance, kindergartners might ponder authority by discussing people who have authority over them and situations where people, such as classroom bullies, exert power but do not have authority. Fifth-graders might discuss what punishments are most effective and just in situations where people such as classroom bullies, exert power but do not have authority. High-school students might develop their own rules to resolve classroom conflicts or draw up policies to alleviate schoolwide problems.

What attitudes, beliefs, and values should LRE foster?

LRE does more than provide students with information about the law and legal issues while developing essential skills. It also cultivates certain attitudes, beliefs, and values in students as both essential preconditions for, and outcomes of, students’ understanding in LRE. These essential attitudes, beliefs, and values include a commitment to constitutional democracy; dedication to the ideal of justice in society; informed, active, and responsible participation in civic life; respect for the fundamental dignity and rights of humans; and appreciation for legitimately resolving societal conflicts and differences. LRE helps students understand both how law reflects and shapes collective values, beliefs, and dispositions and, in turn, how collective values, beliefs, and dispositions reflect and shape law. In doing so, LRE also helps students understand how law can and has promoted social cohesion and effected social change.
Subject Matter

Law

- How the role of law is fundamental in democratic and other societies
- How laws are made, enforced, and interpreted
- How various legal systems and cultures are similar and different
- How law and legal institutions have developed historically
- What the structure and function are of adversarial and other legal systems
- What the types of law are, including constitutional, criminal, civil, administrative, and international law
- How law relates to key concepts and values, including power, justice, liberty, and equality, under both actual and possible social conditions

Power

- How power is structured and how it functions in societies
- How governments are established (purpose, authority, and limits)
- How U.S. and other constitutional systems legitimate power in societies
- What the similarities and differences are among different types of governance (historical, contemporary, and ideal)

What key concepts and attributes are of U.S. constitutionalism

- Rule of law ("government of laws, not men")
- Popular sovereignty
- Federalism (system of shared powers)
- Separation of powers
- Balance of majority rule and minority rights
- Social contract and reciprocity of rights and responsibilities
- Limited government
- Consent of the governed
- Democracy and republicanism
- Enumerated rights (Bill of Rights)
- Property rights
- Representative institutions and electoral democracy
- Capacity for and specific practices of constitutional amendment and change to reflect changing social conditions, values, and public policy priorities

How laws establish sanctions and provide punishments for crimes and other transgressions

What the relationship of Native American societies is to the U.S. political system (history, sovereignty, treaties, contemporary conditions, and practices)
Ideals and practices of justice in different societies

Role of courts and other institutions/professionals of the justice system in American government and society

Role of adversarial system and other mechanisms for resolving disputes and conflicts in society

The way specific practices, decisions, and events have and have not fulfilled our ideals of justice

The way achieving justice has been a motivating ideal for individuals and groups in American and other societies (historical and contemporary)

Definition of certain attributes and values of the U.S. justice system

- common-law tradition
- rule of law
- judicial review
- stare decisis (rule of precedent)
- peer jury system
- distinction between civil and criminal law
- due process of law
- privilege against self-incrimination
- presumption of innocence (criminal cases)
- prohibition against cruel and unusual punishment
- constitutional limitations on search and seizure

Concept of human rights including individual, political, social, and economic rights

- Principle of "ordered liberty"
- Fundamental constitutional rights
  - freedom of speech
  - freedom of the press
  - religious freedom
  - right to assemble peaceably
  - right to petition government
  - right to privacy

Civil rights
- The way preserving liberty has been a motivating ideal for individuals and groups in American and other societies (historical and contemporary)

Equality
- How and why different human societies have variously aspired to ideals, and instituted practices of social equality or inequality (hierarchy)
- How law promotes, limits, and defines equality as a social ideal and condition in American and other societies

Liberty
- How equal protection of the laws is established under the U.S. constitutional system (Fourteenth Amendment) and how this right has or has not been guaranteed throughout American history
- How the franchise (voting rights) has been extended to different social groups in American and other societies
- How public policies have been employed to promote or inhibit inclusiveness in American and other societies (including affirmative action)
- How social equality has been a motivating ideal for individuals and groups in American and other societies (historical and contemporary)

Essential Documents
- U.S. Constitution and Bill of Rights
- U.S. Declaration of Independence
- Federalist Papers
- Landmark U.S. Supreme Court Cases

Attitudes
Contexts and Practices of Instruction

Conditions Necessary for Effective LRE Instruction

- Access to, and use of, community resource leaders
- Access to, and use of, exemplary instructional materials
- Student-centered classroom
- School/classroom climate conducive to learning
- Teachers and other school staff trained to deal effectively with controversial issues and conflict
- Problem-oriented approach to instruction
- Support of school administrators and community
- Provision of opportunities for students to practice ideals to be learned
- Provision of learning opportunities beyond the classroom
- Parental involvement in school
- Developmentally appropriate instruction

Instructional Strategies

- Instruct interactively
- Use cooperative learning strategies, simulations, and role plays (including mock trials; moot courts; model legislatures; preparation of classroom constitutions, rules, and laws)
- Use group work activities, including group research projects
- Incorporate community-based learning into instruction (including service learning, lobbying, mentoring)
- Use experiential learning strategies
- Individualize instruction
- Develop curriculum
- Balanced
- Relevant
- Deliberate in consideration of controversial issues
- Designed to examine public policy issues and help students make informed decisions about possible outcomes and weigh the consequences of these outcomes

Use demonstrations and lectures, as appropriate, to instruct students about the law and legal issues

Assessment

- Emphasizes "authentic" assessment (integrates assessment with the total instructional process)
- Assesses students' values, interests, experiences, and knowledge prior to, and after, instruction (pre- and post-assessment)
- Incorporates peer assessment and students' self-assessment
- Bases assessment on performance and outcomes
- Provides opportunities to apply what has been learned

Skills

Research

- Knowing how to acquire information related to the law and legal issues (e.g., court decisions, legislation, and constitutions) in libraries and other repositories
- Conducting personal interviews or engaging in field research about legal issues
- Organizing information

Thinking

- Analyzing and interpreting judicial opinions and other legal documents or issues
- Developing capacity for understanding when and how laws apply to specific fact situations

Concepts

Attitudes

Values
Summarizing and synthesizing law-related information

Critically assessing laws and legal issues

Developing capacity for understanding and evaluating controversies and conflicts arising from legal issues

Making informed decisions and judgments about situations involving the law and legal issues

Communications and Social Participation

Articulating and expressing ideas, beliefs, and opinions regarding legal issues

Developing capacity for communicating and interacting with those from diverse backgrounds and circumstances

Persuading others regarding beliefs and actions related to the law

Participating collectively in making rules and setting goals

Building consensus through deliberation, negotiation, compromise, and conflict resolution

Working cooperatively with others to make decisions and take actions concerning hypothetical or actual legal and law-related social issues

Attitudes, Beliefs, and Values

Substantive

Cultivating a commitment to constitutional democracy

Furthering dedication to the ideal of justice in society

Valuing informed, active, and responsible participation in civic life

Fostering respect for fundamental human rights and dignity

Appreciating the value of legitimately resolving conflicts and differences in society

Procedural

Understanding how law promotes social cohesion and effects social change (including practice of civil disobedience)

Understanding how law reflects and shapes collective values, beliefs, and dispositions

Understanding how collective values, beliefs, and dispositions reflect and shape law

Understanding how attitudes, values, and beliefs essential to LRE are fostered through teaching of fundamental subject matter employing critical instructional practices

Other Resources

Anderson, Charlotte C. "Promoting Responsible Citizenship Through Elementary Law-Related Education." Social Education (May 1980): 382-97. This article concentrates on two critical features of elementary LRE programs: (1) the learning outcomes sought by such programs and (2) the learning environment that facilitates such outcomes.

Anderson, Charlotte C., and Mabel C. McKinney-Browning. "What Principals Should Know About Law-Related Education." Principal (January 1982): 42-46. This article provides school administrators with information on how to develop a program in their schools, what costs are involved, and where they can get help or advice on getting started.

Anderson, Charlotte C., and David T. Naylor, eds. Law-Related Education and the Preservice Teacher. Chicago: American Bar Association, 1991. This collection of fifteen papers provides the theoretical underpinnings, knowledge base, and curriculum components of LRE, with an emphasis on issues relating to preservice preparation for teaching about LRE.

Freund, Paul A. "Law in the Schools: Goals and Methods." Social Education (May 1973): 361-430. Freund asserts that learning moral reasoning by continual practice in reaching decisions and having to justify them is a primary goal of LRE and that the teaching methods used for LRE should involve participatory, interactive learning, with activities such as simulation and role play.

Freund, Paul A. "Law in the Schools." The author suggests that LRE should teach students not only what the content of law is, but also how to reason dialectically, cope with uncertainty, appreciate the ethical dimensions of problems, and weigh the consequences of diverse actions.

Levine, Felice J., and June Louin Tapp. "The Dialectic of Legal Socialization in Community and School." The authors propose that legal education become part of a broad societal commitment to socialize and resocialize individuals to become more interactive, self-reliant participants in multiple systems of law.

Tapp, June Louin, and Lawrence Kohlberg. "Developing Senses of Law and Legal Justice." This chapter introduces a theory of legal development derived from cognitive developmental theory.
McKinney-Browning, Mabel C. The International Journal of Social Education (Autumn 1987). This issue is devoted entirely to LRE. McKinney-Browning's "Law-Related Education: Programs, Process and Promise," introduces LRE and places the succeeding articles within the context of the field. The other articles explore the processes or strategies that have guided LRE over the years within and outside the school community.

A More Perfect Union. Chicago: American Bar Association, 1991. A twenty-three-minute videotape that introduces LRE to educators, legal professionals, and members of the community interested in learning more about civic education. This tape and accompanying twelve-page presenter's guide show how schools across the country are using a variety of approaches to teach concepts of law and citizenship. VHS.

Pereira, Carolyn. "LRE in Elementary and Secondary Schools." ERIC Digest. ERIC Order Number: EDO-S088-6. Bloomington, Ind.: Clearinghouse for Social Studies/Social Science Education, June 1988. This article addresses (1) the meaning of LRE, (2) reasons for including LRE in the curriculum, (3) ways to include LRE in the curriculum, and (4) characteristics of effective LRE programs in elementary and secondary schools. Also included is a short resource list of additional background readings.

Recommendations from the Leon Jaworski Symposium. Chicago: American Bar Association, 1992. This document, developed from the 1991 ABA/YEEC-sponsored symposium at the Smithsonian Institution, includes thirty-eight recommendations to guide schools' efforts to educate elementary and secondary students about the Constitution and Bill of Rights in the twenty-first century.

CALL FOR LRE DOCUMENTS

Kinds of Documents to Send to the Adjunct ERIC Clearinghouse for LRE

The Adjunct ERIC Clearinghouse for LRE would like to receive new documents dealing with law-related education. We are especially interested in documents that are not usually available through other information sources. Types of materials we are looking for include teaching guides, conference papers and speeches, state-of-the-art studies, project descriptions, bibliographies, and instructional materials.

ERIC Document Selection Criteria

Your document will be evaluated by the staff of both the NLRC and the Adjunct ERIC Clearinghouse for LRE on the basis of such criteria as:

Quality—This is the single most important selection criteria. A document is reviewed based on its own merit and its relation to existing materials in the ERIC collection. A document should meet at least one of the following criteria:

1. It should be relevant, answering current problems, needs, and interests of users.
2. It should contribute to new knowledge.
3. It should be creative or innovative.
4. It should be timely and reflective of current educational trends.

Reproducibility—Papers should be clearly typed originals or clean, sharp photocopies. Good contrast between dark ink and colored paper is important. Colored inks, dark-colored paper, and very small type cause problems in reproduction.

Reproduction Release Form—The author must sign a special form for each document granting the ERIC system permission to reproduce it. Complete a form for each document you are submitting and return to us with three copies of the document you wish to submit for possible inclusion in the ERIC database (see copy of this form on the following pages. You may photocopy this form as many times as you need).

Advantages of Having Documents in ERIC

There are numerous advantages of having your document in ERIC.

Announcement—Documents accepted by ERIC are announced to the approximately 5,000 organizations that receive RIE.

Publicity—If you wish to sell your document, you can have its availability (together with an address and price information) announced to users of RIE, thus publicizing the document. After you have sold your copies, the document is still available through EDRS, the ERIC Document Reproduction Service, if permission to reproduce has been granted to ERIC.

Dissemination—Documents accepted by ERIC are on microfiche and distributed to the more than 900 subscribers to the ERIC microfiche collection.

Retrievability—The bibliographic descriptions developed by ERIC can be retrieved by the thousands of subscribers to both online and CD-ROM computer search services.

Always in Print—The presence of a master microfiche at EDRS, from which copies can be made on an on-demand basis, means that ERIC documents are constantly available. You can always refer people requesting the document to ERIC.

Where to Submit Your Document

Send 3 copies of your document, plus a signed reproduction release form to:

III. DOCUMENT AVAILABILITY INFORMATION (FROM NON-ERIC SOURCE):

If permission to reproduce is not granted to ERIC, or, if you wish ERIC to cite the availability of this document from another source, please provide the following information regarding the availability of the document. (ERIC will not announce a document unless it is publicly available, and a dependable source can be specified. Contributors should also be aware that ERIC selection criteria are significantly more stringent for documents which cannot be made available through EDRS).
