
A guide to the vast array of ERIC available resources for law-related education (LRE), this annotated bibliography is intended to assist anyone concerned with the civic education of U.S. youth, especially teachers and other members of the K-12 educational community. It offers information about the law, innovative teaching methods, and guides to national LRE programs. Part 1 presents an annotated bibliography of 102 LRE teaching materials, resource guides, and research documents in Resources in Education. Part 2 provides an annotated bibliography of 39 journal articles in Current Index to Journals in Education. Part 3 has two ERIC Digests on LRE. The first is "Linking Law-Related Education to Reducing Violence By and Against Youth" by Carolyn Pereira. The second Digest is "Essentials of Law-Related Education," adapted by Robert S. Leming. Also included are 4 appendices that provide contact information for a network of LRE programs being conducted at both national and state levels, tips for searching the ERIC database for LRE materials, sample ERIC document and journal article resumes and instructions for submitting LRE documents to the ERIC system. Introduction

Law-related education (LRE) is the organized learning experience that provides teachers and students with opportunities to develop an understanding of the values and principles upon which the legal system in our constitutional democracy is based. Citizenship education is the overriding goal of LRE in elementary and secondary schools. LRE encourages students to be engaged citizens and to reflect upon the manner in which law affects them and how they can affect law and society. LRE, therefore, is the practical application of law to daily living, conflict resolution, and community problem-solving rather than specialized legal education. LRE demands that students grapple with controversial issues that can affect their own lives. It stimulates critical thinking and active participation by students. The widespread use of resource persons from the community in LRE programs enhances students' knowledge and skills, while emphasizing their membership in the larger community beyond the school.

To promote the widest possible dissemination of LRE materials, the American Bar Association's National Law-Related Education Resource Center (ABA/NLRC) serves as the Adjunct ERIC Clearinghouse for Law-Related Education, in partnership with the ERIC Clearinghouse for Social Studies/Social Science Education (ERIC/ChESS) at the Social Studies Development Center of Indiana University. ERIC/ChESS is one of sixteen ERIC clearinghouses sponsored by the U.S. Department of Education.

As a guide to the vast array of LRE resources available to teachers, the American Bar Association and ERIC/ChESS present this annotated bibliography of ERIC documents and journal articles. Through its annual efforts to publicize the valuable teaching materials on LRE, the American Bar Association's NLRC endeavors to improve the quality of teaching in this vital area of civic education. This bibliography offers teachers essential knowledge of the law, innovative teaching methods, and guides to national LRE programs. Reflecting a growing and important component of the K-12 curriculum, these materials on LRE should hold great interest for the educational community and anyone concerned with the civic education of American youth.

The American Bar Association's Public Education Division created the NLRC in 1991 to collect and disseminate information on LRE programs and resources, substantive legal topics, funding sources, and teacher and resource leader training opportunities. Today, the NLRC serves the K-12 community, college and university students, as well as the general public. NLRC produces newsletters, technical assistance papers, anthologies, bibliographies, and books on LRE resources, such as Current Videos and Software for K-12 Law-Related Education.

ERIC is a federally funded, national information system available to thousands of teachers, administrators, parents, students, and policymakers through the Internet, CompuServe, America Online, America Tomorrow, and GTE Educational Network Services.

AskERIC is a human-mediated, question answering service for teachers, library media specialists, administrators, and others involved in education. A project of the ERIC Clearinghouse on Information and Technology at Syracuse University, AskERIC uses the vast resources of the ERIC system and the Internet to answer questions by electronic mail. Questioners receive an electronic mail response at no cost within 48 hours. Typical responses include citations from ERIC database searches, full text ERIC Digests, and Internet resources such as listservs and addresses for Gopher sites. Address questions to: askeric@ericir.syr.edu.

The AskERIC Virtual Library offers an abundance of educational resources through World Wide Web (WWW) and Gopher. The resources include lesson plans, ERIC searches, ERIC Digests, AskERIC Info Guides, and lessons and materials from NASA, CNN, and the Discovery/Learning Channel. If you have Netscape or another WWW browser, open the URL and connect to: http://ericir.syr.edu. If you have Gopher or FTP, connect to: ericir.syr.edu. You also may Telnet to: ericir.syr.edu and type "gopher: at the "login:" prompt. If you need help, e-mail: askeric@ericir.syr.edu or call 800/464-9107.

Included in this collection are abstracts of LRE documents and annotations of LRE journal articles collected between October 1, 1994 and September 30, 1995. They are organized alphabetically by author. The LRE materials in this publication range from lesson plans on the Code of Hammurabi in 18th century B.C. Babylonia to using the O. J. Simpson trial as a teaching tool. Part I contains abstracts of LRE teaching materials, resource guides, and research documents. Part II provides an annotated bibliography of journal articles. The ERIC Digests, presented in Part III, include LINKING LAW-RELATED EDUCATION TO REDUCING VIOLENCE BY AND AGAINST YOUTH by Carolyn Pereira and the American Bar Association's ESSENTIALS OF LAW-RELATED EDUCATION, adapted by Robert S. Leming. Appendices feature a directory that provides contact information for a network of LRE programs being conducted at national and state levels, instructions on how to submit LRE documents to the ERIC system, and additional information about the ERIC system and how to use its myriad features.

ANNOTATED BIBLIOGRAPHY
ON LAW-RELATED EDUCATION

Resources in Education (RIE) of the U.S. Department of Education is the facet of the ERIC database that publicizes documents in education, including lesson plans, curriculum guides, and research papers. Each entry provides the author, title, publisher, and sponsoring organization. A list of key words fosters easy reference and computer searches. The annotation offers a brief summary of the thesis, purpose, and contents of the document. Figure 1 in Appendix 3 is a guide to reading an ERIC document resume.

Educators may access the full text of many of the LRE documents referenced in this bibliography through microfiche collections available at major libraries or they may order paper copies through the ERIC Document Reproduction Service (EDRS). Serving a diverse group of customers with a wide range of requirements, EDRS fills requests ranging from one document to the entire ERIC collection for international, national, and local governments; university, state, and municipal libraries; foreign universities and libraries; education professionals, students and parents; and community groups, corporations, and professional associations.

Document abstracts in Part I were put into the ERIC database between October 1, 1994 and September 30, 1995.
This conflict mediation program resolves disputes non-violently using teams of two student mediators and a set of formal procedures. These methods improve communication, define issues, and develop alternative paths to resolution. The goals of the program are the prevention of violence, the improvement of human relations, and the building of more peaceful, cooperative communities. The selection of student mediators consists of applications and interviews with a criteria to insure a balance across grades and school demographics. The process for training the student mediators begins with an initial orientation followed by 12 hours of specific training focusing on getting disputants to talk peacefully. The student mediators master and use a six step conflict resolution process: (1) initiation; (2) telling tales; (3) identifying the problem; (4) imagining alternative solutions; (5) narrowing the possible solutions list; and (6) reaching a settlement. The program consists of weekly meetings and a time period for assigned cases 4 days a week. Four issues concerning student mediation arose from the program. Teacher and administrator testimony supports the positive impact of the program upon student mediators and the school community. (CK)

In order to champion law-related education, this volume argues that administrators of law-related education (LRE) programs should make public relations an integral part of program planning. An introductory section defines public relations and offers basic advice for developing goals and strategies. The guide advises program directors to train their staff for public relations and to involve their advisory board, affiliated organizations, and a public relations firm that does pro bono work. A section on the media explains how to develop a media contact list including contact persons, deadlines, and policies for editorial comments. It is important to establish good working relationships with reporters and not to favor one newspaper, radio station, or television station over another. The guide outlines steps that may make LRE newsworthy such as holding competitions, giving awards, and relating events to controversial issues. To foster media coverage, the document presents model news releases and explanations of why certain releases are more effective than others. The guide closes with advice for maintaining a photograph album of all LRE events that can provide materials for newspapers and in-house publications. (JD)
This booklet introduces ideas and materials for Law Day activities. Celebrated on May 1, Law Day is an annual opportunity to expand awareness of U.S. laws and the justice system and their valuable impact on our lives. The primary purpose of Law Day is to provide the opportunity for the public to reflect on U.S. legal heritage, the role of law in society, and the rights guaranteed under the Constitution. The booklet outlines programs for Law Day including a film festival, community forums, conversations on pluralism and identity, school-based competitions, on-air talk shows, and comparative law forums. Suggestions for planning a Law Day program include establishing a planning committee, recruiting speakers, conducting publicity, site selection, and budgeting. A planning timeline outlines the months during which organizational activities should take place, beginning with forming a committee in September through the events in May and presentations of awards the following August. The booklet catalogues materials that planners may order for Law Day such as stickers, mugs, pencils, letterhead, books, and videos. (JD)
This study attempts to examine and explain the citizenship choices made by the governments of Estonia and Lithuania. The report examines the factors driving the inclusiveness of the policies. The project attempts to discover those factors that lead the government of a newly independent state to develop a more inclusive or more exclusive citizenship policy. Factors that likely affect the development of citizenship policies include: (1) an ethnically defined nation or political-territorially defined nation; (2) whether or not the newly independent state is seen as a nation-state or as a multi-national state; (3) a perceived threat to survival of the nation; (4) strength of minority groups in size, concentration, and economic power; and (5) powerful neighbors interested in inclusive policies due to a large ethnic minority in their own country or human rights organizations monitoring citizenship policies. These factors and questions, although applied to Lithuania and Estonia, also address the civic issues of democracy. Extensive notes accompany the text. Contains approximately 100 references. (EH)

This training manual complements the textbook "Violence in the Schools: Developing Prevention Plans." The curriculum introduces students to the democratic process by involving them in the development of a prevention plan for treating the problem of violence in their school. The manual guides trainers in designing and implementing teacher training programs to assist teachers as they initiate this interactive program in civic education. After explaining how to arrange a training session, the guide suggests two possible schedules for training sessions, depending on whether 3 hours or only 75 minutes are available. As a means of introducing teachers to the program, the manual provides a sample lesson plan on the causes of violence in schools. The appendix includes an evaluation form for the training session, a planning checklist, a form for recording training sessions, and a participant sign-in sheet. (JD)
This collection of research findings by several organizations quantifies public ignorance of the U.S. Constitution and the success of the "We the People...The Citizen and the Constitution Program" in addressing the problem. Surveys by the American Bar Association, the Hearst Corporation, the National Assessment of Education Progress, the People for the American Way, the University of California at Los Angeles Higher Education Research Institute, and the United States Census Bureau indicate a poor public understanding of the principles of democracy and an apathetic attitude toward political participation. Intended to address this challenge for civic education, the "We the People...Program," designed by the Center for Civic Education, involves students in a rigorous study of the Constitution and the Bill of Rights and provides for participation in congressional district, state, and national hearings. One research study has found that students involved in the program display more political tolerance and feel more politically effective than most adults and most other students. A second study concludes that high school students who have participated in the program demonstrate more knowledge of the history and principles of the Bill of Rights than students enrolled in high school civics and government classes using traditional textbooks. Reinforcing these research findings, the Educational Testing Service has characterized the "We the People...program as a "great instructional success." (JD)
This collection of 17 lessons developed by teachers is intended to assist in teaching civic education to gifted and talented students. Gifted and talented students find the study of the United States Constitution, case law, and the legislative process fascinating. Divided into two sections, one for elementary and middle school and the other for middle and high school, the lessons cover the origins and evolution of the system of government, how and why the legal system operates as it does, and the roles of politicians, lawyers, judges, and citizens in ensuring effective and responsible government. Julie Tunnell, an elementary teacher from Dublin, Ohio, presents a lesson plan based on a search warrant simulation. Students are introduced to the Fourth Amendment, review several hypothetical searches, ask questions of a visiting police officer, engage in a simulation about a stolen calculator, and prepare a search warrant. Vicki L. Chase, a high school teacher from Idaho Falls, Idaho, developed a lesson plan about the 1964 Civil Rights Act. The lesson introduces students to the impact of discrimination prior to the Act, investigates instances of unconstitutional discrimination, and explores how U.S. life has changed since the 1964 Civil Rights Act. The lesson plans in the collection include student handouts, bibliographies, and clearly specified procedures. (JD)
This comprehensive textbook on criminal justice is intended to serve as the foundation for a high school course on law-related education or as a supplement for civics, government or contemporary-issues courses. Designed to foster critical thinking and analytical skills, the book provides students with an understanding of the criminal justice system, its laws, and procedures. It examines the controversial issues of victims' rights, the insanity defense, the exclusionary rule, police-community relations, mandatory sentencing, the death penalty, youth gangs, the causes of crime, and the effect of race on the criminal justice system. Through case studies, simulations, peer-teaching, decision-making and field activities, students clarify public policy issues, identify values and propose and evaluate solutions. In addition to classroom teaching strategies, "Criminal Justice in America" provides suggestions for field trips to courts and police facilities and for the use of resource persons. Covering all dimensions of crime from street crimes to white collar crime, the textbook challenges students for their reactions to real cases of fraud, violence, and rape. In the appendices, the textbook offers excerpts of the Constitution and a table of Supreme Court cases critical to the evolution of U.S. criminal law. Contains a glossary and references for each chapter. (JD)
This document consists of a study unit and an accompanying teacher's guide prepared to assist teachers and community groups in discussing some of the legal and constitutional issues raised by the verdict in the Rodney King beating case. The study unit's first section, "Trial and Verdict," examines such issues as the public perceptions of the state criminal trial, the prosecution's burden of proof, the use of reasonable force, and the verdict in the case. Section 2, "Aftermath," explores aspects of the incident including the second, federal trial of the defendants, the concept of double jeopardy, and the role of plea bargaining. Student activities underscore many of the principles and ideas that the King beating and trials raise. Activities include questions for discussion, role playing scenarios, and policy analyses. The document concludes with a bibliography of sources, including government records, newspapers, periodicals, media resources, curriculum resources, and other items relevant to the Rodney King incident and the issues that it raises.

In the teacher's guide the major instructional techniques utilized in the materials included: (1) reading and directed discussion, (2) video presentation and directed discussion, (3) interactive activities, (4) policy questions, and (5) taking action. The guide contains different options for the instructor, a guide for identifying and preparing resource volunteers, and a list of sources. (DK)
With the increasing concern over alcohol and other drug use among young people, adults must educate themselves about legal issues. This booklet is a resource for parents and educators to help them learn tobacco, alcohol, and other drug laws in California. The material is organized by type of drug with the legal codes as they apply to that drug appearing below. The drugs covered include tobacco, alcohol, marijuana, peyote, inhalants (such as nitrous oxide), anabolic steroids, and narcotics and dangerous drugs. The legal codes address issues of sale and purchase, possession, false identification, liability, driving, provision, and minors. Also covered are laws on drug paraphernalia, parental responsibilities, school expulsion, confidentiality, counseling, medical care, presence where drugs are being used, disorderly conduct, and possession of drugs without a prescription. A glossary defines some technical terms. Knowledge of the serious consequences of drug use will enable adults to communicate these consequences to their children and students. (RJM)

This unit focuses on the school integration case of Brown v. Board of Education of Topeka (Kansas), and its immediate aftermath. The Supreme Court's 1954 decision was a catalyst for civil rights activism along a broad front over the ensuing decades. The decision and its implementation have stood as a model for similar social and political action among white middle class women, Latinos, and Native Americans. The unit presents the desegregation case as a dramatic moment in history from which to explore the deeper meanings of a selected landmark event and its wider context in the historical narrative. By studying a crucial turning point in history, the student becomes aware that choices had to be made by real human beings, that those decisions were the result of specific factors, and that they set in motion a series of historical consequences. The unit contains teacher background materials and lesson plans with student resources. The teacher background section provides an overview of the entire unit and historical information and context necessary to link the Brown case to the larger historical narrative of school desegregation, racial relationships, and civil rights. The unit consists of two lessons: (1) the case of Linda Brown; and (2) the Brown case and its impact on the civil rights movement. Primary and secondary documents for lesson 1 include the case facts for Brown v. Board, Chief Justice Earl Warren's delivery of the opinion of the Court, the reaction of the North Carolina legislature to the U.S. Supreme Court ruling, and 2 private letters. The second lesson discusses the Brown case as a challenge to feminism. (DK)

This teacher’s guide presents effective strategies to implement the “Foundations of Democracy” textbook, which introduces four concepts basic to the United States Constitution: authority, privacy, responsibility, and justice. The guide explains that the success of citizenship education programs depends on extensive interaction among students, realistic content that includes balanced treatment of issues, use of community resource persons, and the support of principals and other school administrators. The guide identifies effective questioning strategies, techniques for small group learning, and interactive teaching methods. To promote student interaction, teachers are instructed to stimulate legislative hearings, moot courts, mediation sessions and town meetings. Because of the interactive and conceptual nature of the curriculum, the volume suggests performance-based assessments, in which students demonstrate their knowledge and skills by addressing complex questions within a meaningful context for which there is usually not just one correct answer. For each chapter, the guide provides suggestions for introducing the topic and for supplemental classroom activities. (JD)

Prepared by the District of Columbia Street Law Project for its 23rd annual city-wide mock trial competition, this instructional handout provides the material for a mock civil trial over an accidental shooting. Thirteen-year-old T. J. Walker, Scott Walker’s son from a previous marriage, visited the home of 5-year-old Jesse Walker with a pistol owned by Carl Newhouse, the man living with T.J.’s mother, Tanya Brewster. During a scuffle over the pistol between Jesse and T.J., the gun fired, severely injuring Jesse. For the cost of Jesse’s medical expenses, Jesse’s father, Scott Walker, brings suit against Tanya Brewster, charging her with negligent storage of a firearm and negligent supervision of a minor child. The handout clarifies the laws and explains the legal precedents. As evidence, the handout provides the medical bill for Jesse’s injury; the official transcript of the emergency call; the Department of Public Safety’s instructions for the safe storage of handguns; and witness statements from Scott Walker, T.J. Walker, medical professor Dr. Sandy Turner, Tanya Brewster, Carl Newhouse, and Terry Botner, a juvenile diversion counselor. Through participation in mock trials and analysis of the activity, students gain an insider’s perspective on courtroom procedure and a basic understanding of the legal mechanism through which society resolves its disputes. Mock trials develop critical analysis, questioning and listening skills, and skills in preparing and organizing materials. (JD)
Prepared by the District of Columbia Street Law Project for its 22nd annual city-wide mock trial competition, this instructional handout provides the material for a mock civil trial in which Sandra Williams sues Gregg Mason for negligent transmission of the Human Immuno-Deficient Virus (HIV). On the night of May 15, 1990, Sandra and Gregg engaged in unprotected sexual intercourse. Earlier that day, Gregg had taken an HIV blood test that was later to reveal that he was HIV-positive. After Gregg informed Sandra of the results, she was herself tested and diagnosed as HIV-positive. Sandra claims that Gregg negligently transmitted the disease and sues him for medical costs, loss wages, and emotional suffering. The handout clarifies the laws and explains the legal precedents. As evidence, the handout provides a summary of estimated medical costs for individuals infected with HIV, the questionnaire Gregg completed in the health clinic on May 15; and witness statements from Sandra, Sandra’s college roommate, her personal physician, Gregg, the bartender from the bar where Sandra and Gregg met, and an Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome (AIDS) specialist. Through participation in mock trials and analysis of the activity, students gain an insider’s perspective on courtroom procedure and a basic understanding of the legal mechanism through which society resolves its disputes. Mock trials develop critical analysis, questioning and listening skills, and skills in preparing and organizing materials. (JD)

Prepared by the District of Columbia Street Law Project for its 20th annual city-wide mock trial competition, this instructional handout provides the material for a mock civil trial over educational malpractice. Chris Moss, a senior at Metro City Senior High School, has been enrolled in Metro City’s schools since entering kindergarten and has progressed from grade to grade at least minimally passing all classes. Because of extremely weak basic skills in reading, writing and arithmetic, Chris has faced difficulties in finding and holding jobs. Chris charges the school district with educational malpractice for failing to provide him with basic skills. The school district claims that it has met its duty to provide educational opportunities for students. The handout clarifies the laws and explains the legal precedents. As evidence, the handout provides job applications and skill evaluation forms filed by Chris; records of his grades; and witness statements from Chris, an educational specialist, an office manager of a firm that fired Chris, the district superintendent, a teacher, and a student from Metro City Senior High School. Through participation in mock trials and analysis of the activity, students gain an inside's perspective on courtroom procedure and a basic understanding of the legal mechanism through which society resolves its disputes. Mock trials develop critical analysis, questioning and listening skills, and skills in preparing and organizing materials. (JD)

Prepared by the District of Columbia Street Law Project for its 19th annual city-wide mock trial competition, this instructional handout provides the material for a mock civil trial over the establishment of a home for people with Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome (AIDS) in a residential district. The will of John King established that upon his death his house be used as a group home for persons with AIDS and that a trust fund be created for the administration of the house. Vickie G. Knight, the trustee, lives in the home with five individuals infected with AIDS. Local neighbors formed a coalition, “Neighbors Against AIDS Homes (NAAH),” to oppose the location of “Our House” in their neighborhood, arguing that zoning regulations exclude health care facilities and community-based residential facilities. The defendants claim that they are in compliance with the single-family residence requirement. The handout clarifies the laws and explains the legal precedents. As evidence, the handout provides an architect’s sketch of the house; the chart of activity at “Our House”; and witness statements from a representative of NAAH, a medical expert for NAAH, a former cleaner at “Our House,” Vickie Knight, a medical expert for “Our House,” and a resident of “Our House.” Through participation in mock trials and analysis of the activity, students gain an insider’s perspective on courtroom procedure and a basic understanding of the legal mechanism through which society resolves its disputes. Mock trials develop critical analysis, questioning and listening skills, and skills in preparing and organizing materials. (JD)
Prepared by the District of Columbia Street Law Project for its 18th annual city-wide mock trial competition, this instructional handout provides the material for a mock sexual harassment trial. Elyse Roberts, an assistant district attorney with the Office for the District Attorney of the District of Columbia, claims that Kevin Murphy, with whom she shared an office, frequently made obnoxious comments to her, some with sexual overtones, and that her supervisor ignored her complaints and demoted her for the poor work performance that resulted from the harassment. The District of Columbia defends on the grounds that no sexual harassment took place, that Roberts was overly sensitive to innocent comments and joking, and that her transfer was due to her performance as a lawyer. The handout clarifies the laws and explains the legal precedents. As evidence, the handout provides Roberts' attendance record; her evaluation ratings; and witness statements from Roberts, a detective who witnessed Murphy's behavior; a psychologist specializing in sexual harassment; Murphy, the supervisor; and the personnel director. Through participation in mock trials and analysis of the activity, students gain an insider's perspective on courtroom procedure and a basic understanding of the legal mechanism through which society resolves its disputes. Mock trials develop critical analysis, questioning and listening skills, and skills in preparing and organizing materials. (JD)
Prepared by the District of Columbia Street Law Project for its 16th annual city-wide mock trial competition, this instructional handout provides the material for a mock civil trial in which Dana Barr, a former corrections officer, brings suit against the Lorton Medium Security Facility for firing him on the basis of his status as Human Immuno-Deficiency Virus (HIV) positive. The District of Columbia Department of Corrections contends that the inmates' fear of contracting Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome (AIDS) made it impossible for him to carry out his duties as a prison guard. Barr claims that he was fired because of a personal conflict with a supervisor and that the prison could have made reasonable accommodation to allow him to continue at his position. The handout clarifies the laws and explains the legal precedents. As evidence, the handout provides a statistical report from the National Centers for Disease Control; an AIDS fact sheet; other documents on the AIDS virus; and witness statements from the plaintiff, Barr's former supervisor, the director of the AIDS Education Project, the administrator who fired Barr, the head of the inmate council, and a corrections management consultant. Through participation in mock trials and analysis of the activity, students gain an insider's perspective on courtroom procedure and a basic understanding of the legal mechanism through which society resolves its disputes. Mock trials develop critical analysis, questioning and listening skills, and skills in preparing and organizing materials. (JD)

Prepared by the District of Columbia Street Law Project for its 14th annual city-wide mock trial competition, this instructional handout provides the material for a civil case over discrimination in housing. After the death of her husband, Cindi Kaufman, along with her infant son, moved in with her mother, Gale Kaufman, who owned a condominium at a complex regulated by the Rolling Hills Homeowners Association. Because of its "adults only" policy, the Association instructed Gale Kaufman to either remedy the situation or move out. Gale Kaufman claims that the rule is arbitrary discrimination. The handout clarifies the laws and explains the legal precedents. As evidence, the handout provides charts of Rolling Hills operating expenses; a crime report for the complex; and witness statements from Gale Kaufman, Cindi Kaufman, an expert on the housing market, residents at Rolling Hills, and a real estate agent. Through participation in mock trials and analysis of the activity, students gain an insider's perspective on courtroom procedure and a basic understanding of the legal mechanism through which society resolves its disputes. Prepared by the District of Columbia Street Law Project for its 13th annual city-wide mock trial competition, this instructional handout provides the material for a divorce case. Willa Ray sues Harold Ray for divorce and asks the court for a lump sum of $12,500 and a monthly alimony of $300. During their marriage, Harold earned a law degree while Willa worked and contributed a larger share to their common expenses. The handout clarifies the laws and explains the legal precedents. As evidence, the handout provides the projected salaries and expenses of Willa and Harold as well as witness statements from Willa, Harry, two of their acquaintances, and employment consultants. Prepared by the District of Columbia Street Law Project for its annual city-wide mock trial competition, this instructional handout provides material for a civil case over an automobile accident. After drinking heavily at a party hosted by Sandy Hearst, Dana Ivy ran a stop sign and struck the car of Terry Vickers, causing him to sustain a broken leg; bruised ribs; and lacerations to the upper torso, neck, and face. Through an out-of-court settlement, Ivy agreed to pay more than half of her medical bills. For the remainder of the medical bills, for suffering, and for loss of potential earnings, Vickers is suing Hearst, whom she charges with negligence for serving alcoholic beverages. The handout clarifies the law and explains the legal precedents. As evidence, the handout provides the police report; Ivy’s refusal to submit to a chemical test for alcohol; a table describing the effects of alcohol upon driving ability; and witness statements from the friend who accompanied Ivy to the party, the police officer at the scene, Hearst, Ivy, and another participant at the party. Through participation in mock trials and analysis of the activity, students gain an insider’s perspective on courtroom procedure and a basic understanding of the legal mechanism through which society resolves its disputes. Prepared by the District of Columbia Street Law Project for its ninth annual city-wide mock trial competition, this instructional handout provides the material for a civil trial over housing discrimination. The plaintiffs are an unmarried couple with a disabled child whose application to live at Waterfront Gardens, a property owned by Potomac Properties, has been denied because their individual salaries are below $350 a week. Because Potomac Properties has a policy of evaluating the salaries of unmarried couples separately and of married couples jointly, Banks and Smallwood claim discrimination and are suing. Potomac Properties claims that the rejection was made on the basis of income requirements and bad character references. The handout clarifies the laws and explains the legal precedents. As evidence, the handout provides an advertisement for Waterfront Gardens; the defendants' applications; and testimony from Banks, Smallwood, a law student who posed as an applicant at Waterfront Gardens, the resident manager, the president of Potomac Properties, and a landlord who had given Banks a bad referral. Through participation in mock trials and analysis of the activity, students gain an insider's perspective on courtroom procedure and a basic understanding of the legal mechanism through which society resolves its disputes. This book of essays connects controversies over rights and liberties today to their historical antecedents while explaining how social, political, and cultural changes have influenced understandings of specific provisions of the Bill of Rights. Written for teachers using a collaborative effort, each essay is accompanied by bibliographic information about readily accessible scholarship and a descriptive summary of leading court cases relevant to the subject. Topics covered include religion, speech, press, right to bear arms, due process, property rights, privacy rights, women and the Bill of Rights and the Constitution. The appendix includes the Constitution, a glossary, and a list of relevant court cases. (RJC)
This book contains nine lessons focusing on legal issues raised by the illegal use and abuse of alcohol and other drugs and efforts by the criminal justice system to curb that use and abuse. The lessons are interactive and sequential, although individual lessons can stand alone. The lessons are designed to be presented to middle and high school students by educators, law students, and attorneys. Individual supplements are available for many states that detail relevant state law for use with the lessons. The supplements focus on legal information on driving while intoxicated laws, drug offenses, sentencing, and drug and alcohol statutes written specifically to combat the use of alcohol and drugs by juveniles in that state. (RJC)
This document reports the results of a survey of 1,284 K-12 teachers who were asked what kinds of support they needed for teaching law related and citizenship education. The survey results illustrate that the need to devise a clear definition of law related education has never been more critical. Other needs identified by the teachers included specialized training and better access to materials and resources. The needs, and some suggested strategies to help meet these needs, are summarized in this report. Law related and citizenship education varies widely from school to school, district to district, and state to state. Some programs are just starting up. Others that have been operating for years recently have been scaled back. Despite the various degrees of institutionalization, the impact of this type of education on students is remarkably consistent and positive: students became more interested in their studies, cared more about important legal and ethical issues, and learned to think for themselves. This document includes 6 sections and a summary. The sections include: (1) methodology; (2) summary of survey responses; (3) basis for determining impact on students; (4) basis for administrative support; (5) needs; and (6) implications for institutionalization. Five appendices contain: (1) survey form for teachers; (2) summary of responses to national teachers' survey; (3) survey form for administrators; (4) summary of administrators' responses; and (5) state contact list.
LESS HEAT, MORE LIGHT: RESOLVING OUR DIFFERENCES IN THE COMMUNITY. HANDBOOK ON RELIGION IN THE PUBLIC SCHOOLS.
Indianapolis, IN: Indiana Civil Liberties Union, Inc., 1994, 35p.

Available From: Indiana Civil Liberties Union, E. Washington Street, Indianapolis, IN 46202 ($5.95, including postage and handling; 10 or more $3.95 each).

This handbook assists teachers, administrators, and other members of the educational community in avoiding inappropriate religious activities in the public schools as well as unnecessary interference with legitimate private religious expression by clarifying existing law. Participants in the Task Force on Religion and the Constitution represented a number of different religions and perspectives on the First Amendment's Establishment Clause, which prohibits government endorsement of religion, and the Free Exercise Clause, which requires government to make reasonable accommodation for individual religious expression. The handbook explains the basic principles of the First Amendment and clarifies their relevance to the issues of school prayer, religion in the curriculum, equal access to school facilities, holiday celebrations, the distribution of materials to students by outside organizations, and the religious freedom of teachers. For each issue, the handbook provides a list of questions and answers related to concrete situations such as whether a kindergarten student may show a videotape of herself singing a religious song during show-and-tell. The appendix presents a bibliography on religious freedom, a list of organizations concerned with religious freedoms in the schools, the membership list of the Task Force on Religion and the Constitution, and the National Council for the Social Studies Position Statement "Study about Religions in the Social Studies Curriculum."
This instructor’s guide assists secondary social studies educators in making effective use of the five-part video series, “That Delicate Balance II: Our Bill of Rights.” In the tradition of “The Constitution: That Delicate Balance,” the series introduces students to the Bill of Rights and the controversies that have arisen over these rights. Led by moderators using the Socratic method of inquiry, the series features panels of experts engaged in lively debate about the constitutional, ethical, and social issues arising from a number of hypothetical scenarios. The programs enrich secondary civics, government, and history courses that examine the Constitution, Bill of Rights, civil liberties, or contemporary issues. The instructor’s guide opens with a summary of the topics of the five units in the series. The unit topics are Roe v. Wade; the First Amendment and hate speech; a rape trial; equality and the individual; and criminal justice, from murder to execution. A section on each unit provides teachers with an overview of the issue presented, background materials that teachers may copy and distribute to their class, and discussion questions based on these materials that students can debate prior to viewing the video. Each section likewise presents discussion questions for the class to debate following the video as well as suggestions for further research, reports, and essays. At the back of the guide, teachers are provided with a convenient list of teaching resources related to the Bill of Rights. (JD) Intended to accompany the film “Mister Chief Justice,” this study guide introduces the life of John Marshall and early U.S. history through a fictional account of a dinner party at the home of the chief justice in March, 1801. The guide presents the historical characters who attended the dinner, including John Marshall, Mary Willis Marshall, Eliza Ambler Carrington, Edward Carrington, Robin Spurlock, George Hay, Daniel Trigg, and Aaron Burr, as well as the historical events that preceded the dinner, the Whiskey Rebellion and the XYZ Affair. This guide provides primary documents and discussion questions related to the themes discussed at the dinner party, which covered the national identity, popular participation in government, and the costs of public service. The documents consist of the correspondence of John Marshall to other political leaders. A list of 18 selected works offers suggestions for other primary documents on the life of John Marshall and the politics of his day. (JD)

This document is a collection of 16 lessons designed for use in United States history and American government courses at the high school level. The lessons are divided into four distinct categories: (1) religion and the Establishment Clause; (2) freedom of expression; (3) due process and other rights of the accused; and (4) equal protection of the laws. Individually each lesson is based upon an actual cases decided by the United States Supreme Court. The lessons are intended to introduce students to basic constitutional principles, especially the need to protect individual liberties in an ordered society. Reenactments of key Supreme Court cases are an effective way to introduce students to constitutional issues. The lessons in this manual are based intentionally on controversies that originated in U.S. classrooms or the juvenile court system. Students tend to have a natural curiosity about cases that focus on young people confronting issues that might be similar to the ones they are currently facing, or interacting in a school environment that is analogous to their own. The use of authentic cases also can help to illustrate that it is possible for ordinary citizens, including students, to initiate actions that ultimately reach the Supreme Court where important precedents that affect millions of people are established. This manual includes suggested teaching approaches, two bibliographies, and a listing of national law-related education resource centers and state coordinators for law-related education. Appendices include the U.S. Constitution, three ERIC digests, and information on the American Bar Association's law-related education resource center. (DK)

Document Type: REPORTS - EVALUATIVE (142)
Geographic Source: U.S.; Virginia
Descriptors: Citizenship-Education; Higher-Education; Social-Studies; *Educational-Research; *Law-Related-Education; *Qualitative-Research; *Statistical-Analysis

The article argues that the law-related educational (LRE) community should understand education research methods better to demonstrate to policy makers and funding sources the value of LRE and to evaluate alternative educational strategies. To facilitate the reading and conducting of research, the article explains for LRE practitioners research procedures and the format in which research results are presented. The scientific method is described as a process of forming a hypothesis and systematically and objectively testing the hypothesis through observation and experimentation. The article explains the differences between quantitative and qualitative research, experimental and non-experimental research, basic and applied research, and the problems of subject selection, sampling, reliability, and validity. Contains seven references. (JD)
This curriculum guide is designed to assist teachers at all levels in their efforts to infuse law-related education (LRE) into their regular course of instruction. The curriculum goals are (1) to promote good citizenship through an understanding of and active participation in a democratic society; (2) to foster respect, understanding, and appreciation of diversity; (3) to develop, improve and integrate thinking and interpersonal skills; and (4) to increase knowledge of and insights into the personal relevance of law and the Constitution. The first part of the guide provides a framework for organizing and selecting LRE activities based on concepts of power, justice, liberty, and equality. The guide presents teaching strategies appropriate to LRE including case studies, mock trials, resource persons, role playing, simulations, and various games. Lesson plans are divided into levels—lower and upper elementary, middle, and high school—and provide concepts, rationale, objectives, materials, procedures, and assessment. Many of the lesson plans include handouts for student activities and some include primary documents such as the Constitution of Virginia. The appendix includes a copy of the United States Constitution. (JD)
This textbook on the separation of church and state continues the "Exploring the Constitution Series," which introduces important areas of constitutional law. Intended to serve either as a reference work, a supplement to a standard textbook, or as the textbook for a course, this volume covers the constitutional issues of prayer in public schools, government support for private religious schools, the use of religious symbols by government, the right of school children to refuse to recite the Pledge of Allegiance, the rights of conscientious objectors, and the appeal to religion as an excuse for breaking the law. The introduction elucidates the historical background for the separation of church and state with a discussion of John Locke, Baron de Montesquieu, and colonial America. Each substantial chapter on a constitutional issue explains the setting of the debate, provides opinions and dissents from several Supreme Court cases, and offers discussion questions. The book closes with a glossary of legal terms, suggestions for further readings, and two appendices containing the United States Constitution and the Bill of Rights. (JD)

This book explains the development and current workings of the American and Maryland judiciaries. An interview with the Honorable Arthur M. Monty Anhalt of the Circuit Court of Prince George's County, a long-time advocate of law education, presents a realistic view of the principles by which jurists operate in their daily effort to impart justice. Abraham A. Dash provides an essay on the Maryland judiciary that describes the common law tradition, the pre-revolutionary courts of Maryland, the judicial consequences of the revolution, the development of Maryland's present judicial structure, and the Maryland courts today. A section on teaching methods elaborates the case-study, adversarial, and mock-trial approaches to teaching legal concepts, including rationale and procedures. Seven lesson plans introduce the structure of the Maryland court system, the physical setting of the courtroom, trial participants, procedure, jury selection, a court house field trip, and a debriefing for the visit. The lesson plans provide handouts and quizzes. The Constitution of Maryland and the U.S. Constitution are included in the appendices. (JD)
From the perspective of constitutional law, this volume reconciles the conflicting claims of educational reformers who demand a curriculum for national unity and those who call for multiculturalism. The first part of the book describes the educators' opposing views about core curriculum and the century-long history of the debate. The second part of the book rephrases the debate into constitutional terms and concludes that a core social studies curriculum that stresses freedom of religion, freedom of speech, and equality would satisfy the demands for both unity and diversity. Beginning with the insight that schools should teach conflict as well as consensus, the book outlines the features of the U.S. curriculum for constitutional literacy. Social studies and law-related studies should not be taught as static and harmonious knowledge but rather as a chaotic set of conflicts that continue to shape the present world. The book concludes with extensive notes and an index of key terms. (JD)

Designed to help students learn about courts and trials in an interesting and enjoyable way, this document provides teachers with the necessary instructions and materials on how to conduct mock trials. By using the program, students become familiar with the role of a trial court in resolving disputes. They also are introduced to court procedure and decorum, and develop an appreciation for the importance of the various people in the courtroom. Involvement in a mock trial allows students to practice communication and critical thinking skills as they prepare and present their case. In addition to teacher instructions, the manual includes student handouts for five mini-mock trials. The handouts consist of a juror biography, jury observation sheet and checklist, case facts, prosecution and defense witness statements, and jury instructions. (DK)

This resource guide describes one state’s statutes and cases so as to profile those rights, responsibilities, and protections for young people which are different from those applicable to adults. The purpose of this guidebook is to give legislators an overview of all laws affecting young people in order to have a reference aid on current state policies toward youth. The guidebook should prove useful for evaluating any proposals for changing these policies. Since this is primarily a state guide, federal statutes and cases are included in only a few areas where they dictate state policy or where state policy has been closely linked with federal law. The guidebook is divided into two parts: Part 1, “The Laws,” consists of substantive laws organized by subject categories, including economic protection, family relations, health and social services, and unlawful acts against youths. Part 2, “The Courts,” explains the courts and procedures that deal with youths in both civil and criminal adult court, and in juvenile court. A glossary of terms is provided at the beginning of the guidebook. (RJM)
This book explores the issues of democratic education and student responsibilities in the schools. There are three compelling reasons to engage students to have a direct experience of democracy as an integral part of their schooling: (1) students are most likely to understand and value democracy and develop political skills required for effective democratic citizenship if they have the first-hand experience of participating in democratic self-governance; (2) democratic education is a powerful stimulus for full human development, including cognitive, ego, social, political, and moral development; and (3) democratic school governance offers the most practical, effective means of improving the school's moral culture, the operative moral norms that shape the behavior of the school's members. An index, and author biographies conclude the volume. Contains an extensive bibliography. (EH)

This catalog was developed to provide useful information about the many "Teaching Law to the Public" law school-based projects operating around the country in 1993-94. Aimed at law school project staff members, it is a handy reference to other law school programs. The catalog also is intended as a guide for everybody involved in law-related education, especially those who are interested in initiating these types of projects at other law schools. The volume contains a description of each project listed in alphabetical order by law school. Each description includes the names of contact people, a description of the project's activities, materials, populations served, and funding sources. The catalog opens with a description of the National Institute for Citizen Education in the Law, which engages in course development, teacher training, and technical assistance for law schools, school systems, departments of corrections, juvenile justice agencies, bar associations, legal service organizations, community groups, and local governments. The description lists the Institute's publications, videos, and law school program materials. The catalog identifies 37 law schools that have initiated programs in law-related education. (JD)

Noting that law-related education (LRE) instills in its practitioners a strong desire to share its message with the world, this technical bulletin outlines the international activities of several LRE organizations. The Center for Civic Education hosts international visiting scholars, sponsors an annual conference that alternates between sites in Germany and the United States, and provides technical support to countries such as Nicaragua and Poland. The Chicago-based, women-managed, nonprofit organization Heartland International has promoted civic education programs in Ethiopia, Namibia, Uganda, and Tanzania. The American Federation of Teachers International Affairs Department created the Education for Democracy Clearinghouse in 1993 to collect and disseminate information about civic education programs worldwide. The Mershon Center at The Ohio State University has been involved in the Education for Democratic Citizenship in Poland Project since 1991 and has been invited to develop programs in Lithuania, Bulgaria, Albania, and Russia. The National Institute for Citizen Education in the Law (NICEL) has been involved in projects on four continents, Asia, Europe, Africa, and South America. For the future, NICEL proposes the Citizens Education Democracy Corps, comprised of recent alumni from U.S. graduate schools in the fields of law, education, and the humanities. A list of contact persons for each agency is provided. (JD)

One of eight papers from Project Seed, this paper discusses an 8-week program on conflict resolution used among fourth-through sixth-graders at one school. The program described could easily be implemented in other schools. Through the program, students are trained in a step-by-step mediation process: those students who become Classroom Mediators demonstrate their skill by role-playing a real life situation that needs conflict resolution. It is noted that Classroom Mediators then work in pairs to help mediate situations in both the playground and the classroom. The paper describes the student participants in the program and lists seven basic program goals: (1) to resolve peer disputes that interfere with the education process; (2) to build a stronger sense of cooperation in the classroom; (3) to improve the school environment by decreasing tension and violence; (4) to increase student participation and leadership skills; (5) to develop practical life skills; (6) to improve student-student and student-teacher relationships; and (7) to build self-esteem. Anticipated outcomes of the program are discussed. Procedures and instructions for the program are provided in 10 steps: the duration of the program is described; materials and facilities needed are given; and a bibliography of seven relevant publications is included. The program cost is estimated to be approximately $200-$300 for materials in the first year. (NB)
This bulletin describes the success of a partnership between the National Training and Dissemination Program (NTDP) and the Metropolitan Nashville Public Schools (Tennessee). Beginning in October, 1992, the NTDP provided Nashville with technical, staff, and financial assistance as well as law-related education (LRE) resources. Nashville schools cooperated in developing a pilot program for one of the district's 11 kindergarten through grade 12 clusters. The five-step strategy that the NTDP followed in implementing the program, a strategy that begins with needs assessment, is outlined. After formulating a mission statement and goals intended to fulfill the needs of the school district, the development team designed curriculum guidelines. To promote faculty training, a key to the project's success, the district encouraged teachers to schedule LRE staff development sessions to fulfill their annual staff development requirement. The training sessions involved teachers, administrators, parents, and community leaders. In the belief that community involvement is an essential element of LRE, the development team initiated several outreach efforts. Attorneys were encouraged to visit their assigned schools and meet students informally. The article concludes with suggestions for interested readers to develop their own LRE program. (JD)
This report evaluates the Bill of Rights in a Multicultural Society Project. The project was developed by the Social Studies Unit of the Board of Education's Division of Instruction and Professional Development of the city of New York. The purpose of the project, which consisted of a week long summer institute in August 1991 at Brooklyn Law School, and two follow up workshops held at the end of the following fall and spring semesters, was to increase the participants' (secondary-level teachers and administrators) knowledge of the Bill of Rights, and to develop and disseminate an innovative Bill of Rights curriculum. The 27 participants in the summer institute were taught about the theory and history of the Bill of Rights by historians and legal scholars. They used this knowledge to develop a Bill of Rights curriculum to be used in their individual classrooms. Up to 84 percent of the participants rated the summer institute areas as either very good or excellent, and none of the respondents rated any of the institute areas as poor. No data from the first follow up workshop was collected, but the second follow up workshop received an overwhelmingly positive rating with five of the six aspects being rated "excellent" by 55 percent or more of the participants. The report concludes that the objectives of increasing participants knowledge of the Bill of Rights, the development of a Bill of Rights curriculum, and the dissemination of a curriculum were all achieved. Recommendations include adding a bilingual component, and providing incentives to increase attendance. (DK)
Arguing that there is no better opportunity to teach about the law than when a sensational trial overwhelms the media, this booklet outlines the legal issues involved in the O. J. Simpson trial and presents teaching methods for introducing these issues to students. In a discussion of the trial phase, the booklet explains the concepts of reasonable doubt, preponderance of evidence, elements of murder, special circumstances as well as the categories of direct and circumstantial evidence. Sections on the sentencing and appeals phases of the trial describe the significance of aggravating and mitigating factors and the grounds and procedures for appeal. A question and answer column elucidates the most frequently asked legal questions regarding the trial such as Simpson’s plea, the evidence, the relevance of DNA tests, the likelihood of Simpson testifying, and the significance of pretrial publicity. The teaching methods outlined in the booklet call for students to complete and discuss a worksheet on the facts of the trial and to play the role of judge in evaluating the evidence. The booklet also provides the results of a poll of 311 attorneys taken in September, 1994 on the Simpson trial. A copy of the questionnaire is included for distribution to students. A glossary explains the legal terms used throughout the booklet.

Compiled from teachers' responses during the 1992-93 school year, this guide presents suggestions and comments for educators involved in the Law-Related Education Program for Students with Disabilities, a program funded by the U.S. Department of Education. The teachers whose comments are featured in this guide represent high schools, middle schools, and juvenile detention centers from across the United States. They offer advice on teaching rights to students with learning, mental, emotional, behavioral, hearing, or vision disabilities. The teachers explain the training they underwent, the obstacles faced, including disciplinary problems, and the projects they pursued with students, such as field trips to courts and the creation of law-related education hypercard stacks. In one segment, Mary Jane Breen and Flemming Godiksen, teachers at Bucks County Technical School, Bucks County, Pennsylvania, illustrate how they tailored the program to their students' interests by teaching about the Americans with Disabilities Act. This unit is one of a series that represents specific moments in history from which students focus on the meanings of landmark events. This unit focuses on the black experience in the critical years after Reconstruction. Using the landmark decision in Plessy v. Ferguson in 1896, the unit opens with an examination of conditions in black America during the post-Reconstruction years. Political opportunities or lack thereof, economic and class status, as well as social interaction will be illustrated through documentary material. In the Plessy case, the U.S. Supreme Court interpreted the Fourteenth Amendment guarantees of due process and equal protection to mean that “separate but equal” facilities could be provided on the basis of race. By examining the Supreme Court’s reasoning within the historical context of the period, the student will be able to evaluate the successes and the failures of Reconstruction. By examining the Court’s decision itself, students can investigate the nature of judicial review through an example of constitutional interpretation that stands in sharp contrast to the judicial activist character of the Warren Court’s decision in Brown v. Board of Education nearly 60 years later. This unit challenges students to see the relationship between law and society and how prejudice works. The unit objectives are: students will evaluate the conditions of blacks in the north and south between 1875 and 1900 using documentary and statistical evidence; the successes and failures of Reconstruction for freedmen will be analyzed; students will identify Plessy v. Ferguson as an organized resistance by black leaders to segregation laws; and the Supreme Court’s reasoning in this decision will be analyzed and the concept of judicial review and its importance in American Constitutional government will be identified and discussed. Contains three references. (DK)
Conflict resolution skills can be taught just as any other basic skill is taught, and this is the message of this curriculum and guide. Peace education is a life-affirming celebration of life and a holistic approach to human interaction. Conflict is a natural part of life, and children can be taught the skills to deal constructively with conflict. Each teacher page contains teacher remarks, the materials needed for the lesson, suggestions for discussions and how to introduce the student work pages, and ways to identify the focus of each lesson. Lessons use brainstorming, role-playing, problem solving, “I-Care” listening and language techniques, body movement, and visualization. The Peace Table is suggested as a place for students to talk out conflict, and mediation is presented as an approach to conflict resolution. Appendix B contains a communication game. Appendix C is an annotated bibliography of 52 items. (SLD)
This newsletter issue brings to students' attention some of the topics they could explore in working toward an award that the Arab World and Islamic Resources and School Services (AWAIR) organization presented to students participating in History Day 1991. The special category of the awards is Arab or Islamic history. The topics presented were not intended to be exhaustive of the possibilities, but to suggest areas for further student investigation. Topics discussed include the ancient middle eastern origins of law codes; rights under the Islamic law, the Shari'ah; Arab Americans involved in rights issues; the rights of Palestinians; and international law and the Persian Gulf War. Lists of sources are included for most topics. The section on the ancient origins of law codes discusses the early codes of the Sumerians and Babylonians, including the code of Hammurabi. The section on the Shari'ah lists the 12 departments into which this body of law is divided: (1) rituals and liturgy; (2) personal status; (3) contracts; (4) torts; (5) criminal law; (6) constitutional law; (7) taxation and public finance; (8) administrative law; (9) land law; (10) law of trade and commerce; (11) international law; and (12) ethics and personal conduct. The article explains that the Shari'ah is derived from the Quran, the sunnah or practices of the prophet Mohammad, consensus of opinion, and reasoning by analogy. In the section on Arab Americans, Ralph Nader, the consumer advocate, and attorneys Russell Mokhiber and George Shibley are profiled. (DK)
This paper depicts the origins, operation, and success of the Community Mediation Service established at the University of Hawaii, Manoa in 1979. During the 1970s, a national impetus for change arose out of stresses in the justice system including clogged courts, expensive and lengthy litigation, distrust of lawyers, and dissatisfaction of both winners and losers with outcomes. Proponents of community justice in Hawaii studied the three models of alternative dispute resolution: (1) the agency model that operates as part of a government agency; (2) the community model that operates independently of government at the grass-roots level, and (3) the agency-affiliated model that operates outside of a government agency but with government cooperation. After holding community meetings, conferences with experts, undergraduate classroom simulations, and graduate seminars, faculty and students at the University of Hawaii created a fourth model, the university-based community justice center. University faculty and students underwent training in mediation and volunteered their time to administer the program and to serve as mediators. While keeping costs low, the program achieved very high success rates in resolving disputes and satisfying participants. Students and researchers constructively combined theory in practice and gained valuable experience in politics and personal relations. (JD)

This law-related education teaching resource calls attention to civil rights in the school. Julius Menacker gives an overview of major national school legislation and the federal courts’ roles in the constitutional areas of equal protection, freedom of expression, and due process. Aggie Alvez offers new perspectives on the constitutional, economic, social and political implications of dress codes using several instructional formats including a mock school board hearing. A lesson plan designed by Stephen A. Rose provides tools to help students formulate and apply reasoned views of the Establishment Clause and its Supreme Court applications. Ralph D. Mawksley looks at important legal principles and precedents that have framed sexual harassment law and outlines a school harassment policy that will give students insights into preventive law. A lesson plan follows that presents sexual harassment laws and procedures to follow when harassment occurs, as well as tools to help students deal with this perplexing problem. Other articles explore the fairness of testing practices and the restrictive regulations intended to curb school violence. (JD)

This document consists of the first 16 volumes (47 issues) of a serial devoted to law-related education (LRE) that offers background information on a wide range of legal issues as well as teaching strategies for LRE. Issues of the magazine focus on the law as it affects schools and young people, with articles on school discipline, juvenile justice, the legal rights of students, youth at risk, and drugs in the schools. Many themes in constitutional law with special emphasis on the First and Fourth Amendments, the Civil Rights Amendments, the separation of powers, the constitutional framework for declaring war, and the Rehnquist Court are featured. Some issues take a global perspective with articles on law in world cultures and international law. Special areas of the law including intellectual property, family law, privacy rights, and corrections are outlined in other issues. The material covers themes as they relate to the law such as sports, religion, discrimination, justice, ethics, and democracy. Each issue proposes teaching methods that involve class discussions, collaborative learning, mock trials, map exercises, and resource people. Many of the lesson plans include student handouts such as background sheets, cartoons, puzzles, and worksheets. (JD)
This article describes the law-related education (LRE) programs instituted by the United States Department of Justice Office of Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention (OJJDP). By linking legal and constitutional matters to everyday life, the programs aim to bring alive for elementary through high school students legal statutes that often strike youth as arbitrary and prohibitive. Together with the American Bar Association, the Center for Civic Education, the Constitutional Rights Foundation, the National Institute for Citizen Education, and the Phi Alpha Delta Public Service Center, the OJJDP provides training, curriculum, teaching materials, and local contacts to help schools develop LRE programs. The distinguishing characteristics of LRE are creativity and adaptability. This is illustrated by describing the diversity of programs in place across the United States. The approaches to teaching LRE include mock trials, case studies, and visits by experts in the law. The curriculum of the programs cover constitutional, civil, and criminal law. For teachers and administrators interested in pursuing LRE, the article provides a guide to the organizations willing to provide them with assistance. (JD)

This textbook for high school students on law in Utah supplements "Street Law: A Course in Practical Law," a program in law-related education in use across the United States. The introduction explains the meaning of law, how laws are made in Utah, and the functions of the state court system. Following chapters elucidate the branches of law, including criminal, juvenile, consumer, family, and housing law. The book also covers torts, rights, and responsibilities. Each chapter focuses on the special features of Utah law, the legal process, and the state agencies that create and enforce the law. In the section on criminal law, the descriptions of crimes provide specific definitions, aggravating circumstances, and punishments. The chapter that covers housing law presents samples of real estate contracts that illustrate the technicalities of the law. At the end of the book is a glossary of the legal terms used in the text. THE EVOLUTION OF THE BILL OF RIGHTS. A UNIT OF STUDY FOR GRADES 8-12.

Sponsoring Agency: National Endowment for the Humanities (NEH), Washington, DC.

This unit is one of a series that presents specific moments in history from which students focus on the meanings of landmark events. By studying a crucial turning-point in history, students become aware that choices had to be made by real human beings that those decisions were the result of specific factors, and that they set in motion a series of historical consequences. By analyzing primary sources, students will learn how to analyze evidence, establish a valid interpretation, and construct a coherent narrative in which all the relevant factors play a part.

This unit contains teacher background materials and lesson plans with student resources. It is applicable in U.S. History or American Government classes where students study political ideologies during the Revolutionary and early Federal periods. The unit presents five lessons on the Bill of Rights: (1) the Virginia and Pennsylvania Declarations of Rights; (2) the debate at the Constitutional Convention; (3) simulated ratification debate; (4) the House debate; and (5) culminating activity—cases involving the application of principles included in the Bill of Rights. The unit also includes an extension lesson that may be used to further explore the development of state declarations of rights. Objectives of the unit include: (1) understanding the evolution of the Bill of Rights; (2) clarifying ideological differences over the inclusion of a Bill of Rights in the federal Constitution; and (3) appraising the impact of a Bill of Rights on the development of American democracy. This unit is one of a series that represents specific moments in history from which students focus on the meanings of landmark events. By studying a crucial turning point in history, students become aware that choices had to be made by real human beings, that those decisions were the result of specific factors, and that they set in motion a series of historical consequences. The purpose of this unit is to study the origin, significance, and administration of law within the Babylonian Empire. The social, economic, moral, and political complexity of the state in the 18th century B.C. required a written code as a norm by which justice could be obtained. The Code of Hammurabi, a compilation of customs, earlier codes, and court decisions, provided for social order. It was based on the ancient concept that law was both human and divine and given to the ruler by the gods so that he could govern his people ethically. The documents selected for this unit aim toward five objectives: (1) to identify the need for a written code of law; (2) to identify the various people involved in and the steps taken in the process of law; (3) to recognize that laws are enacted to protect the citizens; (4) to understand that law codes vary in degree of strictness; and (5) to appreciate the necessity of government to provide justice and order in a civilized society. The unit contains teacher background materials, student resources, and three lesson plans. Contains 10 references. (Author/DK)
This collection of four short articles describes initiatives of the American Bar Association that bring the skills of mediation to the classroom. Suzanne Miller discusses a program that trains students to become mediators equipped to resolve disputes in their school peacefully. The program turns problem students into positive role models, teaches problem-solving and decision-making, and promotes leadership abilities. After a discussion of the history of conflict resolution in the United States, Miller describes the factors that have contributed to the success of a training program at Gifford Elementary School in Racine, Wisconsin. Reporting on the success of pilot programs in Cleveland, Ohio, Elisabeth T. Dreyfuss explains the costs and procedures for introducing the mediation process in schools and the benefits it contributes, particularly the reduction in disruptive behavior and the improvement in the learning environment. In an article on peer mediation in Rich Township High Schools, Cook County, Illinois, Anthony Moriarty and Shirley P. McDonald argue that mediation programs provide an ideal opportunity for students to participate democratically in solving disciplinary problems. Melinda Smith assesses efforts to introduce mediation into juvenile justice settings, with special attention to the New Mexico Center for Dispute Resolution, and concludes that these initiatives hold great promise for improving juvenile justice in the United States. (JD)
This collection of four short articles presents teaching strategies to enrich the social studies curriculum and promote students' sense of citizenship. Diana Hess outlines how cooperative learning stimulates the skills necessary for effective participation in a democratic society. By taking an active role in their own education and respecting the contributions of others, students begin to learn how to work together for the common good. The second article, by Charlotte Anderson, reflects on the need to rethink the context of citizenship in the global context. Anderson shows how, through global education, students learn that institutions such as the law can be used to help people cope with the immense social and environmental problems of the current age. Ronald Banaszak explains how studying the decision-making processes in economics can help students understand the analytical thinking required of responsible citizens. In the concluding article, David Naylor discusses the importance of teaching students about the heritage of liberty, equality, and justice and how these values are protected by the rule of law. Naylor suggests ways to convince students that history and the law are not abstract concepts, but how "real people face real situations." The articles illustrate how each of these areas of the social studies curriculum - global education, economics, and history - are intertwined with legal issues.
This document is intended to give students an overview of laws in Wyoming. Subjects covered include civil and criminal law; courts in Wyoming; juvenile law; juvenile court procedure; rights of children; family law; employment law; automobile-related law; laws affecting the schools; and citizenship rights and responsibilities. The laws and courts of Indian tribes within the state of Wyoming also are represented. A glossary of legal terms concludes the document. (RJC)

Current Index to Journals in Education (CIJE)

ANNOTATED BIBLIOGRAPHY ON LAW-RELATED EDUCATION

The Current Index to Journals in Education (CIJE) is the facet of the ERIC database that reports on periodical literature published in approximately 830 major educational and education-related journals. Each entry provides the author, title, and journal in which the article is published, as well as the volume, year, and pages. A list of key words fosters easy reference and computer searches. The annotation offers a brief summary of the thesis, purpose, and contents of the article.

Copies of journal articles can be found in library periodical collections, through Interlibrary Loan, or from article reprint services. The reprint services include the University Microfilms International (UMI) and the Institute for Scientific Information (ISI). To obtain journals that do not permit reprints and are not available from your library, write directly to the publisher. Addresses of publishers are listed in the front of each issue of Current Index to Journals in Education, a monthly index publication available in many library reference departments. Figure 2 in Appendix 3 is a guide to reading ERIC journal article resumes.

1995 ERIC/ChESS DIGESTS ON LAW-RELATED EDUCATION

An ERIC Digest is a two-page synthesis or overview of important literature on a topic of interest to social studies educators. There are more than 1,000 Digests on a variety of topics in the ERIC database, and collectively the ERIC Clearinghouses produce more than 100 new titles each year. The ERIC Clearinghouse for Social Studies/Social Science Education (ERIC/ChESS) annually produces 8-10 Digests.

Two of the Digests produced by ERIC/ChESS in 1995 treat topics in Law-Related Education: (1) LINKING LAW-RELATED EDUCATION TO REDUCING VIOLENCE BY AND AGAINST YOUTH by Carolyn Pereira; and (2) ESSENTIALS OF LAW-RELATED EDUCATION adapted by Robert S. Leming. These two Digests, reprinted in PART III of this volume, were produced jointly by ERIC/ChESS and the American Bar Association.

You can search and locate the complete texts of ERIC Digests on the CD-ROM versions of the ERIC database (available at hundreds of university and larger public libraries) and on the Internet. You can also contact the ERIC Clearinghouse that covers your topic and ask for its latest Digest list.

More than 50 ERIC Digests, published since 1990, on various topics in social studies are available from ERIC/ChESS. Direct your inquiries about titles and procedures for ordering these Digests to ERIC/ChESS, 2805 E. Tenth Street, Bloomington, IN 47408-2698 or call 800/266-3815.
Linking Law-Related Education To Reducing Violence By and Against Youth
by Carolyn Pereira

The American Psychological Association (1993, 1) defines violence as "immediate or chronic situations that result in injury to the psychological, social, or physical well being of individuals or groups." Violence by and against youth has increased over the last two decades cutting across racial and socio-economic lines. Assaults are on the increase. Verbal abuse is more widespread. A lack of civility in relationships at school is a common complaint of educators across the country. Reports of violence fill the media daily. Most violence has traditionally occurred between people who know each other. Acts of random violence, however, appear to be on the increase. Motivating factors range from arguments that get out of hand to gang-related incidents. In a recent survey conducted by the National School Boards Association, school superintendents from urban, suburban, and rural districts ranked family problem solving and violence in the media as the most significant factors associated with an increase in violence (Elliott 1994).

What Personal Qualities Are Associated with Reduction of Violence? Children are less likely to become violent if they develop particular skills, attitudes, and patterns of behavior.

- Problem-solving and reasoning skills: Children who think that there are only two ways to solve problems—fight or give-up—are more likely to become either perpetrators or victims of violence. Children’s ability to reason well can give them a wider variety of options than just fighting or running. Children who are more proficient at generating and evaluating options in academic and social settings are less likely to choose violent ways of solving conflicts.

- Social capacities: These skills, attitudes, and dispositions include development of empathy, effective communication, humor, and attachment to positive, non-violent individuals or groups. Understanding another person’s point of view and having concern for other persons can help children generate a wider variety of options—some of which may be mutually acceptable. Students must be able both to listen with understanding and to be understood. The ability to laugh and create moments where others, too, feel more light-hearted can often become one of the most successful options to reducing violent responses. Humor can also enable someone not to immediately take things too personally. The ability to be a friend and have friends can create a stronger desire to find non-violent ways of solving conflicts.

- A productive sense of purpose, independence, and power: Children who are more likely to turn to violence have no hope in the future. Conversely, children who believe they can control their lives and want to direct their lives in positive and productive ways are more likely to seek non-violent means to resolve conflict.

What Can Teachers and Parents Do To Foster Non-Violent Conflict Resolution? Teachers and parents can act positively to reduce violent behavior among children.

- Expect children to achieve high standards: If teachers, family, and others expect children to do their best both academically and socially, children, more often than not, rise to the challenge. If key people in the child’s environment give clear and consistent signals that violence is not the norm, children will be more likely to develop non-violent patterns of behavior.

- Provide meaningful opportunities for participation: In order to develop the skills and predispositions for resolving conflict peacefully, children need to be given opportunities to practice these techniques. Opportunities need to be based on experiences which relate to their own lives and are viewed as important, not just busy work.

- Recognize positive accomplishments: Children need to know when they are on the “right” track. Feedback is important. Recognition, however, needs to fit the accomplishment. Too much or too little praise, or rewards which have little connection to the task, can be distracting.

- Provide positive role models for children: All children need at least one adult whom they recognize as caring about them. Knowing that respected adults support non-violence, and value being a member of groups that solve problems non-violently, further encourage children to seek non-violent solutions in conflict situations.

How Can LRE Address the Problems of Violence By and Against Youth? Law-related education (LRE) is designed to help young people develop into knowledgeable, skilled, and caring citizens. Young people with these qualities, who are given productive, responsible roles, are less likely to be involved in undesirable behavior, including violence. The outcome of a model LRE program is a class of students ready to assume their roles as constructive participants in our pluralistic democracy, not just problem-free young people. Law-related education can create a learning environment to nurture the skills, attitudes, and patterns of responsible behavior associated with the reduction of violence.

Law-related education helps children develop problem-solving and reasoning skills through challenging content and the methods used to study that content. The curriculum...
provides rich opportunities for students to develop these skills by analyzing Supreme Court cases, playing roles of police officers on the job, and participating in mock trials, mediations, and legislative hearings. The complex questions generated in each of these contexts encourage a variety of answers, which involve careful examination and projection of possible consequences of the decisions.

Social skills developed through interactions with outside resource persons, as well as with other students through cooperative learning activities, can create positive attachments to prosocial individuals and groups.

LRE helps children develop a productive sense of purpose, independence, and power through participatory teaching strategies that demonstrate how people can and should make a difference in improving the system of justice. Studying key Supreme Court cases, such as Gideon v. Wainwright and Brown v. Board of Education, provides students with concrete examples of how people can work within the legal system to improve it.

Law-related education involves high expectations for all students, not just the academically gifted, and requires the use of complex skills. For example, successfully negotiating a dispute requires a high level of interpersonal and reasoning skills. In addition, LRE conveys a message that this country is based on the rule of law, which provides a variety of ways to resolve conflict without violence.

LRE provides opportunities for meaningful participation. Questions of public policy, such as "Should curfews be imposed on young people in order to curb crime?", offer opportunities for students to research, discuss, and act on important issues that affect them directly.

Recognition of positive accomplishments is part of law-related education. Further, LRE involves supportive adults or outside resource persons, such as caring police officers, judges, and attorneys, who are involved in the daily administration of justice. They are available to talk with young people, to acknowledge concerns young people have about the imperfections of the legal system, and to demonstrate how to work constructively within the system.

Careful research needs to be done on the relationship between LRE and violence prevention. However, the many links that LRE has to youth development and the risk factors related to violence provide optimism about LRE's potential as a part of a systematic, collaborative, and comprehensive violence reduction and youth development program.

ESSENTIALS OF LAW-RELATED EDUCATION

Essentials of Law-Related Education: A Guide for Practitioners and Policymakers is a statement of the goals and content of law-related education (LRE). Developed by the American Bar Association's Special Committee on Youth Education for Citizenship in 1995, Essentials of Law-Related Education concentrates on four areas: (1) subject matter and concepts; (2) instructional strategies and contexts; (3) skills; and (4) attitudes, beliefs, and values. Together, they provide K-12 students with active learning experiences that enhance their ability to explore rights and responsibilities under the law, confront and resolve disputes, and discuss and analyze public issues. This digest summarizes the original Essentials document.

LRE has been defined as "education to equip nonlawyers with knowledge and skills pertaining to the law, the legal process, and the legal system, and the fundamental principles and values on which these are based" (Law-Related Education Act of 1978). LRE is typically understood to foster the knowledge, skills, and values that students need to function effectively in our pluralistic, democratic society based on the rule of law. Law-related educators strive to develop the active citizens our society requires: those who can understand, live in, and contribute positively to the civic communities to which they belong.

Law saturates our lives irrespective of age or setting. Consequently, LRE focuses on real issues that affect real people in real situations. Through LRE, educators seek to elucidate essential concepts—including law, power, justice, liberty, and equality—fundamental to our constitutional democracy and to the structure and functioning of other societies. LRE enables educators to teach how the law and legal issues are essential to the functioning of politics, culture, and society. In so doing, it explores how the law affects students and how they, in turn, can affect the law. LRE strives to illuminate the substantive and procedural values underlying our legal system, fostering the formation of beliefs and attitudes that support such values.

What Subject Matter Is Essential? Concepts central to LRE include law, justice, power, equality, property, and liberty. Through LRE, teachers can teach what abstract concepts such as "liberty" actually mean through examination of specific contexts and practices. For example, they can help students understand "liberty" by giving them opportunities to learn about liberties guaranteed under the U.S. Constitution. With that knowledge, students can become aware that such liberties can still be the source for continuing controversies in contemporary society, such as when individual liberties conflict with majority values or public policy priorities.

The relationship between citizen and society is essential to LRE, which should illustrate significant connections between students and larger communities, such as town, nation, and world. Some law-related educators might focus primarily on law that affect the daily lives of all people, including criminal and civil law. Others might concentrate on fundamental legal concepts and principles, including their origins, evolution, and contemporary influence and impact. Still others might stress the application of LRE principles and skills in specific real-world situations, both personal and civic. LRE instruction should recognize that government use of power and authority can bring both order and the risk of abuse. Law-related educators might help students understand that the Constitution limits governmental power by separating, and sharing it. Educators might also ask students to ponder the relationship between power and law, considering such topics as civil disobedience, conscientious objection, capital punishment, and victimless crimes.

LRE emphasizes the role of due process of law as essential to justice in our system of governance. Teachers might focus on justice through civil, criminal, and juvenile law, or through such topics as mercy killing or cruel and unusual punishment. In dealing with equality, teachers might have students study issues of racial or gender discrimination, voting rights, or affirmative action. In so doing, students will be able to reflect on the difference between equal opportunity as a constitutional ideal and as a day-to-day reality.

How and Where Should LRE be Taught? Law-related educators should require students to participate actively in their own learning. For instance, by using role play in the classroom, teachers can encourage students to voice diverse opinions about legal issues. By having students compare and contrast several court decisions on one issue, teachers can encourage students to address judicial decisions in historical context, assess the role of precedent, and comprehend the nature of historical and social change. In helping students stage mock trials, teachers can enable students to experience the judicial process.

The classroom that best fosters LRE is student focused. The ideal LRE classroom acts as a forum where students can freely discuss conflicting ideas. In drawing such ideas from a cross-section of subjects, teachers give students a taste of the complexity of legal issues. LRE classrooms should have diverse, high-quality resources that provide students with the information they need while conveying the fact that different people can legitimately and reasonably have different opinions and perspectives on issues. Er" or LRE professionals (lawyers, law-enforcement profess . . , judges, scholars, for example) from the community as hu. resources for in-class and out-of-class instruction is an essential means by which LRE meets students' needs in these respects.

LRE does not need to be restricted to one class, course, or subject area. The constellation of values, knowledge, and skills that comprise LRE can be woven throughout the school curriculum beginning in the primary grades. Effective LRE programs should consist of carefully planned, integrated, sequenced, and cumulative instructional experiences. For issuance, beginning with the early grades, LRE might emphasize fundamental concepts and values such as justice, liberty, and equality. In later grades, such concepts and values can be addressed through examination of more complex issues and dimensions of our shared constitutional ideals, and their national and global implications.

What Skills Should LRE Foster? Law-related educators should help students develop the skills needed to acquire information about the role of law in constitutional democracies and other societies and how it is connected to their lives; how they can communicate their ideas, beliefs, and opinions about the law and legal issues; and how they can actively and constructively participate in group or broader civic affairs.
Thinking skills developed in LRE include analyzing and interpreting judicial opinions and other legal documents; developing a capacity for understanding when and how laws apply to specific fact situations; critically assessing laws and legal issues; and developing a capacity for understanding and evaluating controversies and conflicts arising from legal issues.
LRE also develops students' communication and social participation skills, including persuading others regarding beliefs and actions related to the law; participating collectively in making rules and setting goals; building consensus through deliberation, negotiation, compromise, and conflict resolution; and working cooperatively to make decisions and take actions concerning hypothetical or actual legal and law-related social issues.

What Attitudes, Beliefs, and Values Should LRE Foster?
LRE does more than provide students with information about the law and legal issues while developing essential skills. It also cultivates certain attitudes, beliefs, and values in students as both essential preconditions for, and outcomes of, students' understanding in LRE. These essential attitudes, beliefs, and values include a commitment to constitutional democracy;
dedication to the ideal of justice in society; informed, active, and responsible participation in civic life; respect for the fundamental dignity and rights of humans; and appreciation for legitimately resolving societal conflicts and differences. LRE helps students understand both how law reflects and shapes collective values, beliefs, and dispositions and, in turn, how collective values, beliefs, and dispositions reflect and shape law. In so doing, LRE also helps students understand how law can and has promoted social cohesion and effected social change.

CALL FOR LRE DOCUMENTS

Kinds of Documents to Send to the Adjunct ERIC Clearinghouse for LRE

The Adjunct ERIC Clearinghouse for LRE would like to receive new documents dealing with law-related education. We are especially interested in documents that are not usually available through other information sources. Types of materials we are looking for include teaching guides, conference papers and speeches, state-of-the-art studies, project descriptions, bibliographies, and instructional materials.

ERIC Document Selection Criteria

Your document will be evaluated by the staff of both the NLRC and the Adjunct ERIC Clearinghouse for LRE on the basis of such criteria as:

Quality—This is the single most important selection criteria. A document is reviewed based on its own merit and its relation to existing materials in the ERIC collection. A document should meet at least one of the following criteria:

1. It should be relevant, answering current problems, needs, and interests of users.
2. It should contribute to new knowledge.
3. It should be creative or innovative.
4. It should be timely and reflective of current educational trends.

Reproducibility—Papers should be clearly typed originals or clean, sharp photocopies. Good contrast between dark ink and colored paper is important. Colored inks, dark-colored paper, and very small type cause problems in reproduction.

Reproduction Release Form—The author must sign a special form for each document granting the ERIC system permission to reproduce it. Complete a form for each document you are submitting and return to us with two copies of the document you wish to submit for possible inclusion in the ERIC database (call 800/266-3815 to request a Reproduction Release Form).

Advantages of Having Documents in ERIC

There are numerous advantages of having your document in ERIC.

Announcement—Documents accepted by ERIC are announced to the approximately 5,000 organizations that receive RIE.

Publicity—If you wish to sell your document, you can have its availability (together with an address and price information) announced to users of RIE, thus publicizing the document. After you have sold your copies, the document is still available through EDRS, the ERIC Document Reproduction Service, if permission to reproduce has been granted to ERIC.

Dissemination—Documents accepted by ERIC are on microfiche and distributed to the more than 900 subscribers to the ERIC microfiche collection.

Retrievability—The bibliographic descriptions developed by ERIC can be retrieved by the thousands of subscribers to both online and CD-ROM computer search services.

Always in Print—The presence of a master microfiche at EDRS, from which copies can be made on an on-demand basis, means that ERIC documents are constantly available. You can always refer people requesting the document to ERIC.

Basic Tips for Searching the Database

Wherever you choose to run a computer search of the ERIC database, the result of the search will be an annotated bibliography of journal (EJ) and document (ED) literature on your topic. There are a few important tips to keep in mind to ensure that your search meets your needs.

Find the Best Way to Access the ERIC Database

You can now use ERIC from your personal computer, at university libraries, at many public and professional libraries, and through contacting the ERIC Clearinghouses. Before you decide where to search ERIC, ask these questions:

1. How much will it cost?
   You may have free or inexpensive access to ERIC. If not, you may have to pay for connect time on some computer systems or order a search through a search service.

2. How much of the ERIC database is available?
   Some services provide access to the entire ERIC database, which goes back to 1966; others may allow you to search only the last 5 or 10 years of ERIC. If this is important to you, find out how much of ERIC is available before choosing a search system.

3. How long will it take?
   Turnaround time can vary from a few minutes, if you have direct access to ERIC on a personal computer, to several days or longer if you have to order a search that someone else will run for you.

4. How much flexibility does the search system offer?
   Many different software systems are used to search ERIC. Some menu-driven search systems make it easy for a first-time user, but may limit opportunities to make changes to the search question. If you try searching ERIC and feel you cannot locate exactly what you are looking for, ask your librarian for help or call an ERIC Clearinghouse.

Use the Thesaurus of ERIC Descriptors

Every one of the more than 850,000 articles and documents in the ERIC database has been given subject indexing terms called descriptors. Before you run an ERIC search, it is important to take a few minutes to find the ERIC descriptors that best capture your topic.

For example, articles and documents about the development of children's social skills would be indexed under the descriptor interpersonal competence. The ERIC descriptor for children at risk is at risk persons. When you search for information about high school students, you can use the descriptor high school students but would miss a lot of material if you did not also use the descriptor secondary education.

Locations that offer ERIC searches should have reference copies of the Thesaurus of ERIC Descriptors, and some search systems allow access to the Thesaurus while running your search.

If you cannot locate a copy of the Thesaurus of ERIC Descriptors, call the Adjunct ERIC Clearinghouse for Law-Related Education (800/266-3815) and ask for help with the search strategy.
Know Your ANDs and ORs

Although the software used to search ERIC will depend on which system is used, all searching is based on Boolean logic; the computer creates sets of information based on the way you tell it to combine subject terms.

For example, to find lesson plans on law-related education for high school students, you could use the Thesaurus to find these subject descriptors: secondary education, law-related education, and instructional materials.

If you want to find records that are indexed under all of these concepts, you would use the AND command to tell the computer to find the intersection of these three subjects.

If more information on this topic is needed, use the Thesaurus to locate additional relevant descriptors and add them to your concept sets by using the OR operator. When the OR command is used, documents and articles indexed with either descriptor are searched and combined in a set.
Plan Your Search Strategy

To plan your ERIC search, follow these steps:
1. write the topic in your own words;
2. divide the search into major concepts; and
3. use the Thesaurus of ERIC Descriptors to locate the subject descriptors for each concept of the topic.

Here's an example of how a search topic/question can be turned into an ERIC search strategy:

<thead>
<tr>
<th>CONCEPT 1</th>
<th>AND</th>
<th>CONCEPT 2</th>
<th>AND</th>
<th>CONCEPT 3</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>secondary education</td>
<td></td>
<td>law-related education</td>
<td></td>
<td>instructional materials</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>high school students</td>
<td>OR</td>
<td>citizenship education</td>
<td></td>
<td>teaching methods</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

(e.g., document types, educational level/age group, publication dates, etc.)
Additional Search Tips

To locate journal articles or other publications on a particular education topic, searching by descriptors (subject terms) is usually the best approach. There are other ways to search ERIC, for example, by title, author, specific journals, and even target audience (i.e., whether the publication was intended for teachers, students, parents, etc.).

If you cannot locate instructions for searching ERIC by title, target audience, or the approaches listed below, ask a librarian for help or call an ERIC Clearinghouse. (Note that the details of how you search ERIC will vary depending on the software system, so whenever possible it is best to get instructions from someone who knows the system you are using.)

Here are some other ways to search ERIC:

Identifiers

Identifiers are searchable key words not found in the Thesaurus of ERIC Descriptors. They are often proper names or concepts not yet represented by approved descriptors. Identifiers are used to index geographic locations, personal names, test or program names, specific legislation, and so forth. Examples include: Curry Test of Critical Thinking, Gallaudet College DC, Japan United States Textbook Study Project, and Piaget (Jean).

Publication Types (also called Document Types)

In addition to being indexed according to descriptors and identifiers, ERIC documents are categorized by their form of publication. You may want to specify document types in your search strategy to locate a particular kind of document types in your search strategy to locate a particular kind of document, such as: teaching guides, research/technical reports, tests/evaluation instruments, and books.

A complete list of ERIC publication/document types appears in the Thesaurus of ERIC Descriptors.

Year of Publication

A search can be limited by the publication dates of documents and articles. For example, you may know before running your search that you only want materials from the last 5 or 10 years. The year of publication can be included as a limiting factor in your original search strategy, or it can be used to modify a search if you find more abstracts than you need.

Free-Text Searching

Free-text searching enables you to search for unique words and phrases found in titles or abstracts. This approach is useful if you do not know the best descriptor to use, or know that there is no indexing term for a concept. For example, you could search the phrase "Head Start" to locate information on that topic. (The results of this search would show you that "Project Head Start" is searchable as an identifier.)

Where Can You Use ERIC?

Personal Computers
Commercial Services

If you have a personal computer with a modem, you can use it to access ERIC information. Commercial networks such as America Online, CompuServe, and GTE Educational Network Services all feature "AskERIC" information on current topics in education. Many of these services offer all or part of the ERIC database, which can be searched using key words, titles, authors, or other approaches.

A personal computer and modem can also be used to search ERIC and many other databases for a fee by signing up with commercial online database vendors such as Bibliographic Retrieval Services (BRS) or DIALOG Information Services.

The Internet

Internet* users can reach an AskERIC service that offers fast, individualized responses to education questions and a free electronic education library. For example, the American Bar Association provides public access to the ERIC database through its Division for Public Education's World Wide Web homepage (http://www.abanet.org/publiced/home.html).

You can also use the Internet to connect to sites that offer free public access to the ERIC database. For the latest information on Internet access to ERIC, contact the ERIC Clearinghouse on Information & Technology (phone: 800/464-9107 or e-mail: askeric@ericir.syr.edu) or ACCESS ERIC (phone: 800/LET-ERIC or e-mail: acceric@inet.ed.gov).

*The Internet is a worldwide cooperative computer network made up of many smaller networks that are interconnected. You may have access to the Internet through a computerized university or statewide teacher network, community network, or your membership with a commercial service.

Libraries and Information Centers

ERIC is available at most university libraries, many public libraries, and other professional libraries and education resource centers—more than 1,000 of which are designated as ERIC information service providers. At these locations you can search the ERIC database yourself, or have a librarian search for you. Most of these locations also have a substantial ERIC microfiche collection and microfiche readers/printers for making copies of ERIC documents.

ERIC Clearinghouses

All of the ERIC Clearinghouses have toll-free numbers and information specialists to help you. Even if you have access to ERIC on your personal computer or at a convenient library, you may want to contact the clearinghouse that covers your education topic. Clearinghouses offer free and inexpensive publications and tips on how to search the ERIC database, and can often refer you to other sources of information.
Where to Locate the ERIC Documents and Journal Articles

The ERIC database has bibliographic information and abstracts on two types of materials: ERIC documents (with ED numbers) and journal articles (with EI numbers).

With the expansion of computer access to information, there has been increasing interest in full-text electronic access to ERIC documents and articles, which would allow you to print or download the complete text of the ones you want. The ERIC system is exploring ways to make more of the database available in full text and has made the popular ERIC Digests available through the ERIC Digests Online File. You can get complete copies of ERIC Digests from many electronic sources, including most CD-ROM versions of ERIC, the online vendors, and several Internet hosts.

Until electronic full text becomes available for other ERIC database references, here's how you get copies:

ERIC Documents

Most publications with ED numbers can be found at any library that has the ERIC microfiche collection.* At these locations you can read the publications and make copies for a nominal per-page charge on a microfiche reader/printer. To locate the microfiche collection nearest you, call ACCESS ERIC at 1-800-LET-ERIC.

You can also purchase microfiche or paper copies of most ERIC documents from the ERIC Document Reproduction Service (EDRS), which accepts orders by toll-free phone call, fax, mail, or online (through DIALOG, Ovid Technologies, and OCLC). For more information to order documents, contact:

To obtain journals that do not permit reprints and are not available from your library, write directly to the publisher. Addresses of publishers are listed in the front of each issue of Current Index to Journals in Education (CIJE). ERIC’s printed index of journal citations, which is available in many libraries.

*Approximately 5 percent of the documents abstracted in ERIC are not available in the microfiche collection. For those publications, the bibliographic citation will include information on where to get a copy.
