The care and education of children is a primary task of all societies, and the role of parents, families, and communities is essential in this process. This directory describes the major activities of 360 non-governmental and governmental organizations, based in 30 countries in Asia and the Pacific region (Australia; Bangladesh; Bhutan; Cambodia; China; Fiji; Guam; Hong Kong; India; Indonesia; Iran; Israel; Japan; Kazakhstan; Korea; Malaysia; Maldives; Nepal; New Zealand; Pacific Islands; Pakistan; Papua New Guinea; Philippines; Singapore; Solomon Islands; Sri Lanka; Thailand; Turkey; Vanuatu; Vietnam; and Western Samoa), involved in early childhood care and education. Pertinent data on these organizations' family, young child, and community programs and their information activities are included. The directory is intended for professionals working with and for children, to facilitate communication and information-sharing to improve the situation of children. Directory information was compiled through a questionnaire sent to 800 Asian-Pacific organizations. A sample questionnaire is included with the directory to encourage users to update the information provided. Two articles offer an overview of the situation of children and their family environment in Asia and the Pacific, and an analysis of the information collected in the directory. Statistical tables then present an overview of basic social and economic statistics by country, directly concerning the 0-5 year age group. Profiles are arranged alphabetically by country and official organization name, and include the following: (1) identification and contact information; (2) aims, type, and countries in which the organization is active; (3) cooperation/partnership activities; (4) major activities in the young child, family, and community programs; and (5) services and information activities offered. Lists of potential funding sources of early childhood activities and information sources on early childhood issues are included. Five indices facilitate information retrieval. Included in the annexes are the main provisions of the U.N. Convention on the Rights of the Child. A form for evaluating the directory is included. (KDFB)

Foreword

As today’s children are the citizens of tomorrow’s world, their survival, protection and development is the prerequisite for the future of humanity. Empowerment of the younger generation with knowledge and resources to meet their basic human needs and to grow to their full potential should be a primary goal of national development. As their individual development and social contribution will shape the future of the world, investment in children’s health, nutrition and education is the foundation for national development. (Plan of Action of the 1990 World Summit for Children)

All nations are responsible for their children, and for the welfare of those who contribute, directly or indirectly, to the child’s development and environment. The care and education of children is a primary task of all societies, and the role of parents, families and communities is essential in this process. Early childhood programmes actively seek out and build on existing inherent strengths in families and communities, as well as responding to their diverse needs.

A young child’s development does not occur in isolation. It is strongly affected by its family and community, which continue to influence the child’s later learning achievement in terms of enrolment, progress and performance in school. The care and education (including health, nutrition, attention and stimulation) a young child receives from birth depends very much upon the parents, family and community. This depends not only on availability and on the abilities of parents and caregivers, but also on access to services that can help the child and support parents in their role and function of parenting.

Many governments have started to raise their targets substantially for early childhood. Children’s needs do not have to be met exclusively by formal government funded programmes. Many countries with limited national resources have been successful in forming alliances among Ministries of Education, Health and Social Welfare or with local government, NGOs, private enterprises and local communities, in order to set up successful, low-cost early childhood programmes.

As illustrated in this publication, early childhood programmes are provided in a variety of institutions and organizational settings, such as preschools, kindergartens, nurseries, day care centres, or play groups. These programmes are organized by various Ministries and agencies concerned with the education, development, care and welfare of young children, by non-governmental institutions (such as NGOs, religious groups, women’s associations or universities), as well as by parent and community groups. These various organizations direct their early childhood interventions towards all aspects of the child’s environment - parents, families, communities, as well as professionals, paraprofessionals and decision-makers who intervene in the child's life.

We trust that the information made available in the present Directory will facilitate contacts among institutions and individuals working in the field of early childhood and convince them of the convergence of their interests and the need for concerted efforts to ensure a fair start for children.

UNESCO Activities in Early Childhood

Principle for action

Learning begins at birth. (Article 5 - 1990 Jointien World Declaration on Education for All)

Early Childhood Care and Education is an integral part of basic education and represents the first and essential step in achieving the goals of Education-for-All. Recent world conferences testify to a growing appreciation of the crucial importance of the child's earliest years, and of the need to support families and communities in their role as the child's most influential educator. The learning capacity and value orientations of children are largely determined by the time the child reaches the age of formal schooling. For this reason, any sustained effort in Education for All must set targets and programmes for early childhood and attempt to raise the life-skills level of families.

Improving children's health and nutrition is necessary, but increasingly, in a situation where fourteen out of fifteen of the world's children survive until the age of one governments and civil society are turning their attention to the psycho-social and cognitive development of children. Well conceived quality early childhood programmes help meet the diverse needs of young children during the crucial early years of life, enhance their readiness for schooling, have a positive and permanent influence on later schooling achievement. In addition, countries that succeed in mobilizing local government, municipalities, communities and voluntary organizations in the care and education of young children have been able to decentralise and innovate in their educational systems and, at the same time, make an important contribution toward population information and family education.

Goals and objectives

Within this context, UNESCO intervenes at various levels:

- at the interagency level, by participating in United Nations or other international initiatives in favour of children and families;
- at the intergovernmental level, by encouraging governments to integrate early childhood and family education programmes in their long-term social and economic planning;
- through technical assistance in the design, development and implementation of integrated early childhood programmes; as well as contributing to the improvement of the child development skills of parents and caregivers by encouraging child care information and education services. and community-based family support programmes;
- by acting as a networking centre and clearing-house on information about early childhood care and education systems, organizations, policies, programmes and activities.

UNESCO's Young Child and the Family Environment Project

Established by the UNESCO General Conference in November 1989, the Young Child and the Family Environment (YCF) Project co-ordinates research, activities and initiatives undertaken by UNESCO in early childhood care and education, parent and family education, and in favour of the UN Convention on the Rights of the Child. The Project seeks to:

- improve access to early childhood care and education by making such programmes more widely available and accessible, and improving school-readiness;
- support family education and policy formulation by encouraging the participation and promoting the role of families and communities in basic education programmes;
- improve the content of early childhood programmes, in particular their design and quality.
- redirect and strengthen early childhood training programmes;
- strengthen the information base on early childhood by improving the availability and quality of information, research and data on young children and their families;
- promote legislation on behalf of children and families, in particular the Convention on the Rights of the Child, through awareness raising and advocacy;
- collaborate in artistic, intellectual and cultural events promoting reflection on childhood and family issues.
Early Childhood Interventions

With the help of its specialized services, its roster of consultants, its partnership with sister agencies of the United Nations - in particular UNICEF and WHO - and the co-operation of major institutes and NGOs, UNESCO provides various services to its Member States. UN Agencies, foundations, organizations and individuals working in favour of children and families. Some of its activities include:

- supporting early childhood development/family education programmes in the Middle East, the Pacific, Latin America and South East Asia;
- publishing information and research results on early childhood topics, such as:
  - Enhancing the Skills of Early Childhood Trainers, a training pack for the training of trainers produced with the Bernard van Leer Foundation
  - Toward a Fair Start for Children: Programming for Early Childhood Care and Development in the Developing World by Dr Robert Myers, already published in Arabic, Chinese, English, French, Hindi, Indoneian, Russian, Portuguese, Spanish and Thai.
- creating graduate-level diplomas in early childhood in selected universities in Brazil, with the Centre International dc l'Enfance;
- sponsoring sub-regional training workshops for administrators in policy and organization of informal early childhood development systems in the Pacific, Africa and the Middle East;
- strengthening or establishing regional Early Childhood Co-operating Centres in Europe and Francophone Africa;
- undertaking a national inventory of early childhood resources in Burkina Faso to reinforce national capacity and potential in the care and education of young children.

Family Education and Early Childhood Development

Systemic early child development programmes are an excellent investment for States, in that they raise significantly the health and educational levels of young children and allow women to enter the labour market. Children, however, always need the security and orientation which the home provides, nor should it be forgotten that societies are founded on the quality of the homes and families of which they are composed. Family education

- provides parents with the necessary knowledge and skills to raise their children successfully;
- builds up self-reliance, networking and social consciousness among parents.

Member States have much to gain from promoting family education. In situations where it is impossible to set up early childhood, centre-based programmes funded by the State, excellent child care and education can be provided through educating parents and supporting their initiatives at community level. UNESCO recommends State support for family education not only as a fruitful investment in children but also as a means of raising the educational level of a country as a whole. In a context dominated by rapid social change and by the expansion of scientific and technological knowledge, parent education is a first step toward supporting community development and education. In the past three years, the Organization has supported over twenty different projects in Member States worldwide focusing on the development and education of families and young children.

Children's Rights Initiatives

The Articles of the Convention which present a particular challenge to UNESCO are those relating to education (Articles 27, 28 and 29) and culture (Articles 12, 13, 14, 17, 28, 29, 30 and 31) UNESCO promotes the Convention on the Rights of the Child by:

- acting as a focal point for enquiries concerning the Convention, sending out literature and attempting to attend the more important meetings on the Convention convened by the United Nations and NGOs;
- providing assistance to the UN Committee on the Rights of the Child in monitoring the Convention, in particular as it relates to education and culture;
- helping to translate the Convention into national languages.
• contracting original materials on the Convention, especially publications and booklets prepared for or by young children.

• assisting governments and non-governmental organizations in publishing children's versions of the Convention and guidebooks for teachers:

• co-sponsoring meetings on the Rights of the Child with the International Institute for Human Rights Studies (Trieste), the UN Centre for Human Rights (Geneva), the Arab Institute of Human Rights.

• co-operating with UNICEF on matters pertaining to the Convention, within the framework of early childhood education:

Early Childhood Information/Documentation Activities

To create opportunities for institutions and individuals to learn about each other's needs and actions, enhance information exchange on early childhood, and build up active relationships to benefit young children and their families. UNESCO:

• collects, compiles and disseminates basic information on early childhood care and education systems, organizations and curricula.

• maintains a data bank of early childhood care and education information.

• produces practical directories, publications, briefs and reports on early childhood care and education systems, organizations, curricula or policies.

• provides input into, and support for, selected professional journals and reviews, such as the Interagency Consultative Group on Early Childhood Care and Development's Coordinator's Notebook.

The YCF Databases

The YCFE International Database - In an effort to foster and facilitate inter-institutional collaboration, the Young Child and the Family Environment (YCFE) International Database was set up in 1990. The Database contains information on some 1500 organizations in 146 countries of the world, involved in early childhood care, development and education, and focuses on activities aimed at the Young Child, the Family and the Community. The organization profiles are both general (as to the institution's name, address, contact person, number of staff) and specific (regarding the major foci of activities, types of activities, including grant-making and information activities, and regions of activity, as well as funding sources, partnership links and target groups).

The ECCE Database - The Early Childhood Care and Education (ECCE) Database was set up in 1993. The Database contains information on early childhood care and education policies, legislation, partners and major activities in 116 countries, along with pertinent data on publications and databases concerned with early childhood issues. Each country profile contains information on the national policy on early childhood, the coverage and supervision of programmes, major actors and partners, issues and problems encountered, successful initiatives, staff training and qualifications, as well as on parent/community involvement in activities and media/information actions in favour of young children.

The YCF Directories

Information from the YCFE International Database was used to publish the International Directory on the Young Child and the Family Environment (1991) and the Directory of Early Childhood Care and Education Organizations in Sub-Saharan Africa (1992). Information from the ECCE Database is being used to prepare a World Sourcebook on Early Childhood Care and Education. The current Directory on Asia and the Pacific is a continuation of the series of Regional Directories started with the volume focusing on Sub-Saharan Africa.

The Directory of Early Childhood Care and Education Organizations in Asia and the Pacific

The Directory of Early Childhood Care and Education Organizations in Asia and the Pacific describes the major activities of 360 non-governmental and governmental organizations, based in 30 countries in Asia-Pacific and involved in early childhood care and education, along with pertinent data on their Young Child, Family, and Community programmes and their information activities. This publication aims to be an important information source for professionals working with and for children, and to encourage and facilitate communication and information sharing between institutions and individuals active in improving the situation of children. It seeks to give a just insight into the national, regional and international contributions to early childhood activities in Asia and the Pacific.

Methodology
The information presented in the Directory was compiled through a questionnaire survey sent to 800 organizations in Asia and the Pacific. The information contained in the profiles was provided by the organizations themselves. All responsibility for this information thus remains with the organizations responding to the survey. The objective of this publication has been to make available, rather than evaluate, the data thus provided. This survey, which covered a period of approximately six months, was complemented by information from other relevant sources.

Update
Although the data contained in this Directory has been repeatedly checked, errors and omissions may still exist. All modifications and additions should be entered on the questionnaire included in the volume and returned to the address provided. This sample questionnaire is included to encourage users to complement and update the information provided, and to offer those organizations which are not included the chance to be considered for future editions. An evaluation form is also included to help improve future editions of the Directory. Users are invited to complete this form and return it to the address provided.

Sections of the Directory

Articles
Two articles offer an overview of the situation of children in Asia and the Pacific and of their family environment in general, and provide an analysis of the information collected in the Directory.

Statistical Tables
Before presenting the different organizations in each country, statistical tables give an overview of the basic social and economic statistics available by country, which directly concern the 0-5 age group and their families.

Profiles
The profiles are arranged alphabetically by country and by the official name of the organization. A reference code assigned to each profile is listed above the official name. This code is used in the indexes to refer to the organization, rather than the page number on which the profile is found.

Each profile contains five types of information about the organization: a) identification and contact fields; b) the aims, type and countries of actions of the organization; c) information concerning the co-operation/partnership activities of the organization; d) the major activities within the Young Child, Family, and Community programmes of each organization; e) the services and information activities offered by each organization.

Identification fields
Practical information on each organization is provided, including the official name and translation: acronym when it exists; address: telephone, telex, cable, telefax and E-mail numbers: and contact name.

General information fields
The major aims of the organization are listed, along with the type of actions it undertakes and the countries in which it is active. The foundation date, the number of staff of the organization and its budget are also provided.
Co-operation/partnership fields
Information is provided on the organization's links with other institutions and different communities, as well as on the extent of its membership, and its affiliation to networks.

Major action fields
Under the headings Young Child Programmes, Family Programmes and Community Programmes, the activities of the organization are listed according to the main foci of its programmes. The target populations for these programmes are also indicated.

Services & information activities fields
When applicable, details of the services, publications and materials the organization provides are listed, as well as details on its information activities.

Information Lists/Bibliographies
The following information lists and bibliographies are included at the end of this publication to help users gain knowledge of potential funders of early childhood activities and of other information sources on early childhood issues:
- UNESCO National Commissions in Asia and the Pacific
- United Nations Information Centres in Asia and the Pacific
- Organizations/agencies involved in social and economic development in Asia-Pacific
- Selected publications on early childhood care and education

Indexes
The following indexes are included at the end of this publication to facilitate information retrieval:
- an Acronym Index
- a Type of Actions Index
- a Focus of Programmes Index
- an Index of Services Provided
- a Geographical Coverage Index

For example, organizations working on child-to-child projects are identified by profile code in the Type of Actions Index under the heading Child-to-Child. Users can then refer back to the profiles to locate the organizations corresponding to these codes. In addition, an alphabetical listing of the official names of the organizations included in the Directory is provided, as well as a similar listing arranged by country in which the organization is located.

Acknowledgements
We would like to thank all the organizations which answered the questionnaire for their cooperation in providing the information for this publication, and for putting us in contact with other organizations involved in early childhood care and education activities. Furthermore, we acknowledge with many thanks the assistance of UNESCO's Principle Regional Office for Asia and the Pacific (PROAP) and its Asian Centre of Educational Innovation for Development (ACEID) in dispatching the questionnaires, as well as the cooperation and encouragement of UNESCO National Commissions and UN agencies field offices in Asia and the Pacific.

Early Childhood Care and Education in Asia and the Pacific: Survey Findings

The responsibility of caring for and assisting children, their families and communities in Asia and the Pacific is shared by a variety of non-governmental and governmental organizations. Each of these organizations plays an important role in using the available resources to meet the health, welfare and educational needs of children and their families.

This regional survey of organizations involved in early childhood care and education in Asia and the Pacific elicited responses from 360 organizations in 30 countries. Their answers to the Questionnaire (a copy of which is included with the Directory) provide examples of many of the issues raised in the article, Early Childhood in Asia and the Pacific: Challenges and Opportunities, and offer an insight into their goals and actions. These organizations recognize that their actions need to involve not only children but also parents, families and communities in order to create an appropriate environment for the healthy development of children.

The survey highlights their activities in the following three programme areas: the Young Child, the Family and the Community. While some of the organizations focus on only one of these areas, most undertake activities in all three. Experience has shown that activities which attend to needs in the three areas, obtain more holistic and long-lasting results. Each of the organizations included in this Directory has its own approach to meeting the needs of the child, its family and community in Asia and the Pacific. Their combined efforts work to improve the well-being of the child within its family and community. Whatever their approach, the organizations recognize that provision of basic services (such as health care, clean water supplies, nutrition, education, and welfare services) is essential to ensure a fair start for children. This summary of responses highlights issues that are of major concern to individuals and organizations working in this field in Asia and the Pacific by demonstrating the ‘who, for whom, what, how and with whom’ of their actions.

The organizations

Of the 360 organizations in the Directory, 43% are non-governmental, non-profit organizations, 30% are research institutes, training organizations, schools and universities. The remaining 27% includes Ministries and governmental agencies, hospitals/medical centers, foundations, community groups and religious organizations. The findings illustrate the wide variety of organizations that are responsible for current actions in the field of early childhood. These actions are carried out by some 253,420 staff members of whom 44% are non-salaried.

The beneficiaries

The responses also help to understand for whom the activities are undertaken. There seems to be an equal interest in activities focusing on the three main programme areas: the Young Child, the Family and the Community.

Those organizations which work with young children work more with children aged four to six than with two to three year olds or infants. There is a tendency to focus more on children in rural settings (36%) than on children in urban settings (32%). Slightly more attention is given to girls (40%) than to boys (37%). Over two fifth of the organizations which assist children target their activities towards families and parents.

Looking at the responses of organizations working on family programmes, families in rural areas (37%) receive more attention than families in urban areas (30%). 39% of the organizations focus their family-oriented activities on women, while only 24% target men. Furthermore, over a third of the organizations target their actions on the community, while a quarter provide assistance to working parents and para-professionals.
Looking at community programmes, 39% of the organizations work with rural communities and 30% with urban communities. Thus in all three programme areas, the rural setting is more favoured than the urban setting by a small, but consistent percentage. Children and parents receive equal attention, while over a third work with families, communities and community leaders.

The type of activities

Responses provided information on the type of activities the organizations undertaken for their Young Child, Family and Community programmes. Activities were divided into eight main categories: Research, Training, Policy, Programmes/Projects, Services, Publications/Materials, Networking and Grant-making.

Each of these main categories was chosen by over half of the organizations, except for grant-making which is only undertaken by 20% of the organizations. Programmes/Projects was selected by 90% of the respondents, Training by 89%, Networking by 82%, and Research by 80%. It is interesting to note that slightly more organizations work in the area of Policy (73%) than in Publications/Materials or Services (both 51%).

Within these main categories, the following activities were cited the most often: programme/project implementation (86%), training of parents (69%), policy advocacy (58%), meetings/workshops (55%), basic research (50%), publications/materials preparation (45%) and provision of services (41%).

The focus of actions

Respondents provided information on the focus of their actions within their Young Child, Family and Community programmes. Actions in favour of the child were divided into four main areas: child health and development, child care and education, child at risk, and child advocacy. Activities relating to the family were divided into four main areas: family health and welfare, family education and awareness, family at risk, and family advocacy. Actions concerned with the community were divided into four main areas: community welfare and involvement, community development and awareness, community livelihood, and community advocacy.

Each of these main areas was chosen by over two fifth of the organizations. Child Health and Development was selected by 91% of the respondents, Family Education and Awareness by 82%, and Community Welfare and Involvement by 71%. It is interesting to note that more organizations work to promote child health and development (91%) or community welfare and involvement (71%), than child care and education (82%) or community development and awareness (65%), while the opposite is apparent for the family. Actions for family education and awareness (82%) are higher than those for family health and welfare (79%). In addition, the organizations also assist children (64%) and families (54%) at risk, and undertake advocacy for the community (45%), and for children and families (40%).

Young Child Programmes

Those organizations working in the Child Health and Development sector seem to give slightly more attention to health and nutrition activities as to child development activities. However, immunization (60%) and nutrition/feeding programmes (52%) are the two activities chosen the most often. The wide range of actions demonstrates the many and varied needs of children in the region. Of the two activities chosen the least often, oral rehydration was nevertheless attended to by 20% of the organizations, while 16% were concerned with AIDS.

In the Child Care and Education sector, there are again a wide range of activities, each attended to by between a fifth and over half of the organizations. Preschool education, that is educating and caring for children above the age of 3, is covered by 64% of the organizations, while infant care falls in the realm of activities of 23%. More organizations provide home-based programmes (46%) or non-formal centre-based programmes (43%) than formal childcare centres (23%). Over a fifth of the organizations focus on institutionalized children (20%), special education (19%) or disabled children (18%). A small number are concerned with child adoption (15%), while only 6% provide foster care. In this sector, the division between care and education is a fine one, depending on the age of the children and the attitudes that caregivers, educators and parents have about the role of education in the development of the child between 0 and 6.

Between a tenth and a third of the organizations work in the Child at Risk sector. This sector can be divided into three categories: activities for children with developmental/health difficulties, those for children abused by others, activities for children in difficult situations. Children with learning and behavioral difficulties (both 23%) fall in the first category, child abuse/neglect (23%) and child labour (14%) in the second, and care for children with special needs (26%), street children (13%), orphans (9%), and children with AIDS (8%) in the third. A quarter of the organizations work with children with developmental difficulties. Child pornography and prostitution, the two categories chosen the least, are nevertheless attended to by 5% of the organizations.

The final sector of activities specifically dealing with children, Child Advocacy, was attended to by between 15% and 30% of the organizations. One third works to promote children’s rights, while 27% work in their own countries to promote child protection practices, and 21% to advocate the UN Convention on the Rights of the Child.

Family Programmes

Actions of the organizations working in the Family Health and Welfare sector include both health and welfare components. Of primary importance is the welfare of the mother and infant (63%), while the well-being of the whole family through primary health care is attended to by 34%. Family planning assistance, family guidance and family services are provided by over 20% of the organizations, while family support groups, health centres and AIDS/transmitable diseases are attended to by over 16%.

When working in the Family Education and Awareness sector, two thirds of the organizations provide education for parents/caregivers, while half work in the fields of parent/child interaction and child-rearing. Health and nutrition education receive equal attention. Most of the organizations focus more on parent/caregiver education (61%) than on the father’s role (19%) or on parent-to-be education (16%). Finally, it is clear from the responses that these organizations see their role more in providing education related to the child than in providing general education, such as literacy courses (27%).

In the Family at Risk sector, poverty is the concern of the most organizations (38%), followed by single-parent families (30%) and the unemployed (24%). Minorities and parents with disabilities are assisted by 16% of the organizations.

The responses concerned with the Family Advocacy sector indicate that the organizations’ first priority are health (25%) and family (24%) protection issues, followed by human rights (21%) concerns.

Community Programmes

In the Community Welfare and Involvement sector, social services (46%) and health services (36%) were chosen most often. Home visits, voluntary services, social welfare and youth programmes were undertaken by over a quarter of the organizations. Community-based preschool/care (29%) and formal preschool care (24%) are provided by more organizations than parent-based preschool care (14%) or workplace child care (13%).

In general, in the Community Development and Awareness sector, responses indicate that more focus is placed on social welfare and social mobilization than on physical and resource improvements for the community as a whole: sociocultural (44%), socioeconomic (39%) environments and awareness raising (36%) versus community health (31%), skills training (29%), and water and environmental sanitation (25%).
Between a fifth and a third of the organizations work in the Community Livelihood sector. Women’s programmes (30%), leadership training and income-generation activities (each 26%) were chosen most often. Rural development, human resource development and environmental protection are undertaken by a quarter of the organizations.

The responses related to the Community Advocacy sector indicate that the organizations’ first concern are the rights (30%) and protection (29%) of children. Approximately a quarter of the organizations promote general health policy (25%) and human rights (21%), whereas population policy (16%) and family legislation (12%) are less often targeted.

Services, funding & information sources

The Questionnaire also solicited information on services provided by the organizations, their funding sources, budgets and information sources. These responses provide a clearer picture of the organizations working with children, families and communities.

The services provided the most often range from documentation/information activities (87%) and advisory/support services (66%) to radio/television programmes (17%) and legal services (7%). The range of services provided reflects the variety of clients who depend on such activities, from individuals working with young children, to NGOs, governments, research institutes and other welfare organizations. Among the documentation/information activities most often provided are training/workshops (91%), conferences/seminars (87%), awareness raising/advocacy (86%), information/inquiry services (71%) and publications services (69%).

Only 241 organizations responded to the question on funding sources. Such sources range from national governments (57%), foreign aid programmes, private donations and fundraising (each 35%) to foundations (20%) and intergovernmental agencies (12%). Membership fees (25%) and funds received from NGOs (24%) are also significant sources, while industry and financial institutions (each 5%) are limited sources of funding. Responses thus indicate that the need for funding requires resourcefulness in accessing a variety of funding sources.

As only 257 organizations responded to the question on the organization’s budget, it is not possible to indicate exactly how much is available for early childhood care and education activities and related services in Asia and the Pacific. The total sum of annual budgets indicated is US$ 432,707,340. While the actual figure for each organization varies greatly, the approximate average figure of US$ 1,683,690 per organization represents a considerable amount, when comparing it with the per capita GNP of most countries in Asia-Pacific.

Over two third of the organizations obtain information for their work from governmental agencies, international and national/local NGOs and schools/universities. UN agencies provide information to 55% of the organizations, while training organizations and community groups are information sources for nearly half of the organizations. Between 22% and 43% of the organizations seek more specialized information from a range of other organizations, such as research institutes, women’s groups, hospitals, youth groups and foundations.

Obstacles and objectives

The actions and programmes of the various organizations in the field of early childhood have helped them identify common problems and objectives in performing their activities. To explore these difficulties and goals, three analysis questions were included in the survey soliciting information about major obstacles encountered in the course of activities, major elements of good early childhood programmes and major successful actors in the field. Of the organizations responding to the survey, 55% answered these questions.

The first question asked the respondents to list the five major obstacles encountered in implementing early childhood activities. Lack of funds (64%) was the most pressing problem, followed by bureaucracy (46%), lack of staff (45%), attitudes of leaders (37%), and cultural and social differences (33%). Three other obstacles were also cited: lack of technical support (32%), target group’s reluctance to accept innovation (27%) and differences of opinion about early childhood care and education (25%).

The second question solicited information on the five essential elements that make up successful early childhood programmes. Encouraging parent and community involvement in the planning, management and evaluation of programmes (64%) was the most important element, followed by taking a multifaceted view of child development (55%), allowing children to learn to be creative, cooperate, solve problems, share, socialize, play and grow (48%), looking toward approaches and models that are financially feasible and cost effective (43%) and respecting and adjusting to different environments (41%). Between 32% and 40% of the respondents also felt that the following three elements are essential: allowing parents to learn more about the needs of young children, acting as a catalyst and coordinator for family and community programmes, and trying to reach the largest possible number of children and families in difficult conditions.

The partners

When undertaking their activities, many organizations recognize the benefits of working with partners to reach the goals identified. Governmental agencies are the partners of the largest number of organizations (44%), followed closely by national/local NGOs (39%). Schools/universities, community groups, training organizations, women’s groups and international NGOs are called upon by a third of the organizations, while cooperatives and trade unions are the partners of under 8%. A range of other organizations (such as UN agencies, research institutes, hospitals/medical centers, professional associations, parents’ groups and foundations) were also identified as partners by between 17% and 24% of the organizations.

The final analysis question in the survey turned the focus to organizations’ opinions regarding the most successful actors/partners undertaking early childhood actions in Asia and the Pacific. Asked to select the five most successful partners, respondents chose national/local NGOs (64%), community groups (47%), governmental agencies (41%), women’s groups (36%) and schools/universities (29%). Other actors chosen were training organizations and international NGOs (27%), parents’ groups (25%) and UN agencies (21%). The actors cited least often were trade unions, research institutes and youth groups (each under 8%).

Complementary approaches

The results of this survey illustrate the complementary nature of the approaches and actions of organizations in the field of early childhood care, development and education. The activities of the organizations included in this Directory clearly emphasize the interdependence between actions aimed at children, those focusing on the family and those concerned with the community. These actions take into account the physical, intellectual, sociocultural and economic aspects of the environment the child lives in: thus involving aspects that not only concern the child itself, but also his immediate family and his community.

From this survey, it is apparent that topics which have captured the attention of organizations working in Asia and the Pacific in the last decades, such as immunization, feeding programmes, mother and infant welfare or preschool education, are still of great importance. In addition, this survey also shows that such organizations have been able to respond rapidly to emerging critical issues, such as AIDS, street children, children’s rights and child protection.

It is only by comparing these results with those of future studies that it will be possible to better understand the vital role, contributions and achievements of these varied organizations in actions in favour of the young child, the family and the community.
Asia and the Pacific

Asia-Pacific is a region of great heterogeneity and cultural diversity, including countries at different stages of political and economic development. The region contains most of the world’s poorest and some of its more affluent countries. Gross national product per capita (1992 US dollars) ranges from $170 in Nepal to $28,190 in Japan. The Asia-Pacific region covers about 30% of the total area of the world and includes the world’s two most populous countries: China and India. The overwhelming features of its population are its total size and density. In mid-1994, there were an estimated 3.42 billion people living in the region, or 61% of the world’s total population, representing over two thirds of the population of developing countries. This diversity is also reflected in the great differences in access to basic services (food, health, education, welfare) and in the levels of socio-economic development from country to country, and from region to region within the same country.

Asia-Pacific’s annual population increase makes it one of the most critical areas of the world, not only demographically, but also economically, socially and politically. According to 1992 UN projections, Asia-Pacific’s population in the year 2000 will almost be exactly equal to that of the world in 1970. Demographically, the region is characterized by high rates of population growth, despite high death rates. High fertility and rapidly declining mortality have resulted in a changing age composition for most of the countries in the region. In mid-1994, children under 15 constituted 33% of the population, and of these approximately 34% were children under 5. Economically, there are serious problems of unemployment and underemployment, leading to low productivity and low levels of average income per capita. Socially, there are serious problems of malnutrition, illiteracy, sub-standard housing, inadequate medical care and poverty. (Williams. 1994)

In most countries of the region, more than 70% of the population lives in rural areas. In Japan, New Zealand and Australia, however, the situation is the reverse, the degree of urbanization in Australia (85%) being one of the highest in the world. Urbanization throughout the region is proceeding at a faster rate than the growth of employment and basic services and is straining the available economic and social facilities and infrastructures. This results in the growth of spontaneous slums and shanty towns in the large urban areas of many countries in the region.

Despite these various socio-economic problems, education, care and other services for young children have improved over the past decades. In a number of countries, successful results have been achieved, in particular in the area of health and nutrition. Many Asian and Pacific countries have taken initiatives to improve the lives of young children and their families. A majority of countries have started adopting and implementing policies favourable to child care, education and development, in part as a response to the 1990 World Summit for Children. Nearly all countries in Asia and the Pacific have ratified the Convention on the Rights of the Child.

Children in Asia and the Pacific

Such a big number of children will become a valuable asset if they are of good quality. On the other hand they will become a heavy burden, even a barrier to development if they are of low quality. (IPPA. 1987)

Health & nutrition

A majority of children in Asia-Pacific are likely victims of diarrhoea, pneumonia, nutritional deficiencies, perinatal diseases, tetanus and other common infections. Illiteracy, poor sanitation and housing conditions, inadequate safe water supplies and health care infrastructures strongly influence the likelihood of proper child health conditions.
Efforts in favour of child immunization and oral rehydration have been made through nationwide programmes. Programmes have had success in raising public awareness of the importance of good sanitation and health practices. However, infant mortality rates are still high in many countries and a large number of children at risk have not yet been reached. Furthermore, the spread of AIDS further strains the delicate health situation in many countries of the region.

Adequate nutrition is a major need of children. In Asia-Pacific, malnutrition is still a widespread problem, particularly in rural areas. Most of the world’s malnourished children (80%) live in Asia. (Adamson, 1994) Parents, health workers and communities must receive basic nutrition information and be trained to monitor children’s growth. Also needed is the promotion of improved health for pregnant women, and the encouragement of breast-feeding and appropriate weaning habits. The more affluent countries of the region have not been spared nutritional imbalances either. There is a rise in obesity among children, often due to unhealthy or imbalanced eating habits.

Two other widespread nutritional problems - vitamin A and iodine deficiencies - also require attention in the region. The following factors also contribute to the low nutritional situation prevailing in a majority of countries in the region: poverty and underdevelopment, inadequate agricultural production and distribution, poor education, maternal malnutrition, recurrent childhood diseases, droughts and floods, civil unrest and conflicts. To improve this situation, many countries have implemented national programmes and information campaigns that focus on nutrition and health education, and on proper feeding practices.

Early childhood education

In general, over the last decades early childhood care and education has received increased attention in Asia and the Pacific, and is expanding to include rural and home-based programmes for the majority of young children whose parents cannot afford private formal preschool. In the 1980s, enrolment in formal preschool education in Asia and the Pacific grew by approximately 55% to reach almost 47 million children. However, that number represents only a small percentage of the total number of potential preschoolers. Very few countries in the region have been able to provide access to preschool education for more than 40% of young children. (UNESCOa. 1993)

Many issues remain to be resolved. Despite successes recorded in increased literacy and numeracy, some countries continue to lag far behind; the gender discrepancy continues to be a major embarrassment, and the problem of functional illiteracy has for too long been glossed over. (ESCAP, 1993)

One explanation is that early childhood care and education has low priority in most countries, and often lacks clear-cut objectives and policies. The provision of early childhood care and education varies considerably among countries, and within countries. Socially disadvantaged groups have traditionally been excluded from the mainstream of education and development: these include ethnic minorities, people in urban slums, people in remote areas and low occupational groups. Lack of resources and funds, inadequately trained personnel, and limited government budgets have, among other factors, further restricted the availability, access and quality of early childhood services.

In well-to-do families in urban areas, small children are mostly sent to rather expensive kindergartens or playgroups. While at home they are given relatively good food. Indeed, for most middle income families in urban areas, sending children to pre-elementary schools or kindergartens has become an habit. The case is different in rural areas and in urban slums where people live in poverty. In these surroundings, even the adults are not educated themselves. Here they do not have the awareness yet to send children to school. People are too busy earning their daily bread. And although everywhere parents are the same, and they love their children dearly, for them children are also an additional labour force, who help them earn their living. (IPPA, 1987)
Access to early childhood care and education institutions thus varies greatly from one area to another, depending on location, socio-economic level and gender. In most countries existing programmes are less accessible to rural and disadvantaged children, who represent a large majority of the preschool age population. Furthermore, in a number of countries, non-formal programmes, such as those geared towards children who are in home- and family-based care, are not considered on an equal footing with formal institutionalized preschool programmes. There is a need for integration of early childhood care and education with health and nutrition programmes (particularly in rural areas), enhancement of complementarity between formal and non-formal early childhood programmes, development of national curriculums, local production of learning materials, and finally the creation and strengthening of early childhood staff and caregiver training programmes.

Changing social and family environments

In the last decades, social and economic changes have affected societies in Asia and the Pacific. These changes include a decrease in family size, replacement of the extended family system by the nuclear one, increasing participation in the labour market by mothers, and a rising rate of divorce (particularly in the more advanced countries of the region). Furthermore, the number of single-parent families is increasing (in particular in the more affluent countries) and thousands of single parents bring up their children by themselves. Most of these single-parent households are headed by women. Single-parent families carry a heavy burden, since they must combine childrearing with economic activities, often without adequate support systems. The constraints of single-parenthood have adverse effects on the development of young children in numerous ways, such as frequent ill health, lack of early stimulation, lack of basic learning and social skills. Though the changes are more obviously noticed in urban settings, rural areas have not been spared.

One of the key problems is the breakdown of the traditional extended family. The extended family system of the Asia and Pacific region had always acted as a cushion against some of the negative aspects of modernization. The extended family which has traditionally provided economic and social security to its members is slowly being replaced by independent households. This implies that over the coming decades, there would be an increase in the obligations of countries in this region to help families to fulfill their traditional functions. (UNESCOb, 1993)

Social changes have been rapid, and have increased demand for housing, basic services and infrastructures. This added pressure is hard to bear in many countries of the region. Thus the difficult conditions faced by children and their families are on the increase. Rapid economic transition and high rural-urban migration have increased the loosening of family ties. As a result, children suffer from the social disintegration of the family, family instability (separation, divorce, or unwanted pregnancies), and adverse parental behavior (such as alcoholism). In such conditions, the caring environment in which children live quickly disappears.

[Children] are sometimes forced to leave home because of family conflicts, alcoholism, abuse or poverty. Some are not wanted by their families, and some have no families at all. Increasing numbers of homeless and outcast children are coming to live on the streets. They can be seen gathered around city parks, bus stations, marketplaces, and near bridges where they have to fight for survival. They are at high risk for drug addiction, and being victims of sexual abuse and violence. Begging and petty theft keep them just barely fed, and in constant trouble with the police. (Redd Barna-Thailand, 1989)

Child abuse, neglect and exploitation

A combination of factors - economic, social, cultural, attitudinal - thus push children to fend for themselves, often taking them into situations of exploitation. Children become vulnerable victims in different circumstances, in particular in major urban areas. Wherever they live, problems within or among the family environment often either precede or become the causes for child abuse, neglect or exploitation.
Socio-cultural factors, such as beliefs and superstitions, can also predispose, precipitate or be perpetuating factors in contributing to child abuse, e.g. a child born under a certain astrological star may result in a negative or positive attitude towards the newborn child. A strong cultural preference for sons rather than daughters means higher risk of abuse for girls. (RTRC, 1991)

The number of children forced to survive on their own has greatly increased during the last decades. In most cities in Asia and the Pacific, more and more children live in the streets, work under difficult conditions. These children struggle for their own and/or their families' survival by taking up whatever odd jobs are available, but they also face violence and abuse.

In many cities, their presence is ubiquitous and growing. These are the visible child workers - the shoe-shiners, barrow-pushers, car attendants, and vendors of everything from trinkets to chewing-gum, straw hats to plastic bags, drugs to sexual intimacy. Many other working children are much less visible, confined to factories, mines and plantations, back-room bars and kitchen quarters. (Black, 1993)

Despite protective laws, many children still work in unsatisfactory conditions, often starting as young as four years old. ILO estimates suggest that there are at least 50 million working children under 15 in Asia. Accurate statistics on working children are difficult to obtain as working children are rarely taken into account in official statistics as they are often illegally employed. Apart from suffering from physical and psychological trauma, these children rarely have a chance to go to school, acquire the skills needed to improve their lives, and achieve proper development and growth.

Furthermore, sexual exploitation of children has become a feature of life in several countries of the region. The fear of AIDS coupled with growing tourism have contributed to child prostitution, whose victims are often as young as five years old. Despite the lack of adequately documented statistics on the number of children involved in prostitution, recent estimates suggest at least 1 million children involved in eight Asian countries alone. (Adamson & CHILD Asia, 1994).

AIDS

AIDS is now becoming a major threat to children's lives in many Asian and Pacific countries. It is spreading in the region more rapidly than anywhere else in the world. Of the newly AIDS-infected adults, almost a quarter live in Asia and the Pacific, representing at least one million adults - the vast majority in South and South-East Asia. (ITeM, 1992). The result is devastating for children, as AIDS progresses rapidly among children. The situation in some Asian countries is giving cause for concern. It is estimated that Thailand's under-five mortality rate will rise by 10% before the year 2000 as a result of the spread of AIDS. (Grant, 1995)

In view of the strain put on basic services by AIDS, a number of governmental health services, family planning associations, intergovernmental agencies and NGOs have taken steps to design and execute effective integrated programmes to disseminate AIDS prevention information, education and counselling to the public. Equally important, family planning associations and other NGOs cooperate more and more with national governments and assume leading roles within national AIDS programmes.

Armed conflicts and unrest

War, political and ethnic unrest has plagued various regions of Asia for many years, forcing thousands of people to flee their homes in search of safety and peace in other areas or countries. In 1993, Asia-Pacific was home to over 9 million refugees and displaced persons, representing a quarter of the world total, according to UNHCR estimates. Of these, more than half were children. Even in countries not officially at war, guerilla warfare and the violent response from security forces leave many young children orphaned, wounded and killed.
Children remain orphaned or separated from the family they 'lost' while fleing war: children whose limbs have been shattered remain disabled; children who are homeless remain in refugee camps or on the streets; children who have been infected with HIV/AIDS through rape or bloodied weapons remain infected; deep psychological scars from torture and terror remain long after the soldiers put down their arms. Life for children is never the same again - their schools, hospitals, families, livelihood and crops and livestock have been destroyed. (Benjamin, 1994)

Even when conflicts have ended, their legacy remains in many areas in the form of unexploded anti-personnel mines. These kill and disable thousands of children every year and leave countless numbers to struggle with poverty and starvation, as the fields that could have provided food and jobs are rendered useless by the mines. Afghanistan retains the world highest number, with some 10 million uncleared mines, which have caused over 500,000 victims, many of them young children. Cambodia has the highest number of amputees in the world (1 for 230 people) due to the approximately 7 millions mines still scattered in the countryside. (Adamson, 1994) International agencies and NGOs are advocating and increasing pressure on governments and warring factions to ban the use of anti-personnel mines and to ensure the protection of children in conflict situations.

Governmental & non-governmental involvement

Changes in living conditions, social relationships and family structures have led to changes in access, availability and provision of services and care for young children. Although child welfare has been a traditional concern, in many countries resources and attention have been diverted to more pressing needs or new governmental priorities. These changes have forced voluntary agencies, NGOs, local communities and governmental bodies to work together and better target actions for young children.

Under the limitations of a constrained budget and severe demands for mainstream services, the government has recognized the need to be most efficient in its targeting of services, and to guide and support NGO and private initiatives in this area. (PROAP, 1993)

At national level, significant progress has been made in recognizing the place of NGOs and community organizations in national development, and the role they can play in the implementation of national social and economic development plans in various areas including early childhood care and education. Many governments have also realized the importance of placing early childhood on the national agenda, and have consequently adopted policies and measures to help improve services for young children and provide better awareness of children's issues among the general public.

The well-being of young children is the focus of a great number of NGOs and community associations throughout Asia and the Pacific. These organizations work both at local and national levels in all areas of importance to young children and their families, such as health, education, welfare, the law, water and environmental sanitation. They are increasingly being encouraged by governments to help implement the extensive social development programmes outlined in national social and economic development plans.

Education, at all levels, is not the responsibility of the State alone. The family, the civil society at large, the media, all must contribute to provide the necessary services and materials, as well as a propitious climate. (UNESCO, 1993)

Following the adoption of goals for the year 2000 at the World Summit for Children, governments in Asia and the Pacific have prepared National Programmes of Action to meet these goals. These Programmes of Action reflect provisions in the Convention on the Rights of the Child and include goals such as 90% immunization coverage against the most common childhood diseases, halving child malnutrition, providing safe water and family planning services to all communities, and ensuring that all children have access to basic education.
In the area of early childhood care and education, this has meant increasing awareness and recognition of early childhood programmes as an integral part of national development plans, enhancing the availability of early childhood services, in particular in rural areas, and ensuring adequate training of early childhood staff and caregivers. However, political commitment to early childhood care and education needs to be renewed and efforts made to translate policies and legislative texts into concrete actions in favour of young children and families.

Many early childhood care and education programmes provide a focus for community involvement and development through various activities including such centre-based programmes, as nurseries, preschools and child care centres, as well as educational activities in larger programmes, such as supplementary feeding, health and nutrition education, parent education, community livelihood and awareness programmes.

[Early childhood programmes] are not limited to mere delivery of services but emphasize initiation of a process aimed at bringing social change in the life of the community by promoting awareness, changes, attitudes, beliefs and practices. (Myers, 1992)

The involvement and partnership of parents and communities has enhanced the initiation and sustainability of early childhood care and education programmes and services. It has also ensured that the need for child care is met with local means and that services are within the reach of young children. However, demand for early childhood programmes still outweighs the actual numbers of trained and qualified staff and of available initiatives.

To enhance their effectiveness at local, national and even sometimes regional levels, NGOs have been collaborating more and more on activities related to early childhood and children’s rights. Collaboration initiatives include sharing knowledge and resources, co-financing of activities, and coordinating efforts to meet common goals and objectives. Networks and coalitions have been established to favour co-operation and partnership endeavours, in order to meet the multiple needs of children and their families, and to ensure the integration of services.

Early Childhood Care and Education in Asia and the Pacific: what future?

These achievements and continuing challenges have not been generated in a vacuum. They form an intrinsic aspect of the overall economic and social scenario of the Asian and Pacific region. They are both the product of past economic and social trends as well as contributing elements to the region’s further development. (ESCAP, 1993)

Early childhood activities and programmes are rapidly increasing in number throughout the region. However, to a large extent, their potential remains unfulfilled, due to funding limitations, institutional weaknesses, lack of coordination and limited contacts with others, and insufficient material and human resources (trained personnel, equipment and supplies). Despite the fact that demand for such programmes still exceeds supply, countries in the region have managed to improve the situation of children in Asia-Pacific by increasing access and provision of basic services (immunization, hygiene and sanitation, schooling).

There are thus many challenges to face. These require both an enhanced political will to tackle the problems of young children and their families, and the shared awareness and notion by all -governments, NGOs, communities, families and parents - that children should be considered as special citizens for whom care, priority and a favourable and healthy environment are to be created by the State and the entire people that they may develop fully: physically, intellectually and morally. (CHILD Asia, 1994)

The further expansion, availability and quality of early childhood care and education will be determined by the extent to which planners and practitioners place early childhood on national and regional agendas, opportunities for mobilizing partnerships and building alliances among families, communities, national organizations, policymakers and leaders can be maximized, relevant and cost-effective early childhood programmes can be developed to meet the needs (health, nutrition, education, welfare, legal protection) of young children.

Regional co-operation can bring more benefits than we can ever imagine. The dimension of [Asia-Pacific's] cultural diversity is almost endless. This varied and diverse cultural, political and economic background could be an asset and a source of strength for the region. We should be able to tap this diversity in order to enrich our common experience and to facilitate more regional co-operation. (UNESCOb, 1993)

The active and growing community of governmental and non-governmental actors and partners in early childhood care and education, the increase of advocacy and awareness for societies to put children first, the fast growing number of programmes and services for young children and families, in particular those in difficult circumstances, all illustrate the conscious efforts being made in Asia and the Pacific to benefit children. They challenge the creativity and imagination of planners, practitioners, local communities, families and parents to continue their efforts to reach the greatest number of children possible.

UNESCO National Commissions in Asia and the Pacific

UNESCO National Commissions fulfil several roles. They serve as advisory organs for their respective countries, assisting in preparations for and participation in UNESCO meetings and conferences, in the elaboration of government positions concerning UNESCO programmes and in the evaluation of such programmes, and in national projects contributing to the implementation of UNESCO programmes.

The Commissions are organs of liaison with other governmental authorities, universities and research institutions, NGOs, national professional associations, trade unions, women and youth organizations and individual experts. They serve as executive bodies participating in UNESCO country projects and in national programmes, activities and studies.

The Commissions are also information organs. In this role they may issue regular bulletins and other publications, translate UNESCO publications into local languages, organize seminars, meetings, exhibitions and other events, co-operate with the press, radio and television in their respective countries, and use various other means to inform the general and specialized public of UNESCO’s aims and activities, and of related national activities.

Hanoi, Vietnam
United Nations Information Centres in Asia and the Pacific

The UN Department of Public Information regularly provides all its Information Centres with press releases and news-oriented information kits, periodicals and books published by the Department and some of the specialized Agencies. These include Development Forum, the UN Chronicle and the Yearbook of the United Nations. Statistical publications are available at the Centres for reference only. Some of the Centres also produce their own newspapers.

All Information Centres are official depository libraries of the UN and receive major official UN documents, including summary and verbatim record of all UN meetings, special reports and studies prepared by substantive departments of the UN Secretariat. They also stock United Nations posters, wallsheets, and photographs. From time to time, Centres can provide speakers on UN activities for special NGO programmes.

ANNEXES
The Convention on the Rights of the Child

The Convention on the Rights of the Child was adopted by the United Nations on November 20th, 1989, and entered into force on September 2nd, 1990, after being ratified by 20 States. As of July 12th, 1995, 176 countries had either signed the Convention or become States Parties to it by ratification or accession. When ratified by a State, the Convention becomes binding law in it.

The Convention seeks to balance the rights of the child with the rights and duties of parents or others who have responsibilities for child survival, development, and protection, and gives the child the right to participate in decisions affecting both the present and the future. The fifty-four articles of the Convention describe the individual rights of any person under 18 to develop his or her full potential, free from hunger and want, neglect, exploitation, or other abuses.

The inherent strength of the new Convention lies in its flexibility, its capacity to accommodate the many different approaches of nations in pursuit of a common goal. It has not evaded the sensitive issues, but has found means to adjust to the different cultural, religious and other values which address universal child needs in their own ways.

Main provisions of the Convention

Preamble
The preamble reaffirms the fact that children because of their vulnerability, need special care and protection, and places special emphasis on the primary caring and protective responsibility of the family. It also reaffirms the need for legal and other protection of the child before and after birth, the importance of respect for the cultural values of the child's community, and the vital role of international co-operation in securing children's rights.

Definition of a child (article 1)
A child is recognized as a person under 18, unless national laws recognize the age of majority earlier.

Non-discrimination (article 2)
All rights apply to all children without exception. It is the State's obligation to protect children from any form of discrimination and to take positive action to promote their rights.

Best interests of the child (article 3)
All actions concerning the child shall take full account of his or her best interests. The State shall provide the child with adequate care when parents, or others charged with that responsibility, fail to do so.

Implementation of rights (article 4)
The State must do all it can to implement the rights contained in the Convention.

Parental guidance and the child's evolving capacities (article 5)
The State must respect the rights and responsibilities of parents and the extended family to provide guidance for the child which is appropriate to her or his evolving capacities.

Survival and development (article 6)
Every child has the inherent right to life, and the State has an obligation to ensure the child's survival and development.
Name and nationality (article 7)
The child has the right to a name at birth. The child has also the right to acquire a nationality and, as far as possible, to know his or her parents and be cared for by them.

Preservation of identity (article 8)
The State has an obligation to protect, and if necessary re-establish, basic aspects of the child's identity (including name, nationality and family ties).

Separation from parents (article 9)
The child has a right to live with his or her parents unless this is deemed incompatible with the child's best interests. The child also has the right to maintain contacts with both parents if separated from one or both.

Family reunification (article 10)
Children and their parents have the right to leave any country and to enter their own for purposes of reunion or the maintenance of the child-parent relationship.

Illicit transfer and non-return (article 11)
The State has an obligation to prevent and remedy the kidnapping or retention of children abroad by a parent or third party.

The child's opinion (article 12)
The child has the right to express his or her opinion freely and to have that opinion taken into account in any matter or procedure affecting the child.

Freedom of expression (article 13)
The child has the right to express his or her views, obtain information, make ideas or information known, regardless of frontiers.

Freedom of thought, conscience and religion (article 14)
The State shall respect the child's right to freedom of thought, conscience and religion, subject to appropriate parental guidance.

Freedom of association (article 15)
Children have a right to meet with others, and to join or form associations.

Protection of privacy (article 16)
Children have the right to protection from interference with their privacy, family, home and correspondence, and from libel or slander.

Access to appropriate information (article 17)
The State shall ensure that information and materials from a diversity of sources is accessible to children, and it shall encourage the mass media to disseminate information which is of social and cultural benefit to the child, and take steps to protect him or her from harmful materials.

Parental responsibilities (article 18)
Parents have the joint primary responsibility for raising the child, and the State shall support them in this. The State shall provide appropriate assistance to parents in child-raising.

Protection from abuse and neglect (article 19)
The State shall protect the child from all forms of maltreatment by parents or others responsible for the care of the child and establish appropriate social programmes for the prevention of abuse and the treatment of victims.
Protection of a child without family (article 20)
The State is obliged to provide special protection for a child deprived of a family environment and to ensure that appropriate alternative family care or institutional placement is available in such cases. Efforts to meet this obligation shall pay due regard to the child's cultural background.

Adoption (article 21)
In countries where adoption is recognized and/or allowed, it shall only be carried out in the best interests of the child, and then only with the authorization of competent authorities, and with safeguards for the child.

Refugee children (article 22)
Special protection shall be granted to a refugee child or to a child seeking refugee status. It is the State's obligation to co-operate with competent organizations which provide such protection and assistance.

Disabled children (article 23)
A disabled child has the right to special care, education and training to help him or her enjoy a full and decent life in dignity and achieve the greatest degree of self-reliance and social integration possible.

Health and health services (article 24)
The child has a right to the highest standard of health and medical care attainable. States shall place special emphasis on the provision of primary and preventive health care, public health education and the reduction of infant mortality. They shall encourage international co-operation in this regard and strive to see that no child is deprived of access to effective health services.

Periodic review of placement (article 25)
A child placed by the State for reasons of care, protection or treatment is entitled to have that placement evaluated regularly.

Social security (article 26)
The child has the right to benefit from social security including social insurance.

Standard of living (article 27)
Every child has the right to a standard of living adequate for his or her physical, mental, spiritual, moral and social development. Parents have the primary responsibility to ensure that this responsibility can be fulfilled, and is. State responsibility can include material assistance to parents and their children.

Education (article 28)
The child has a right to education, and the State's duty is to ensure that primary education is free and compulsory, to encourage different forms of secondary education accessible to every child and to make higher education available to all on the basis of capacity. School discipline shall be consistent with the child's rights and dignity. The State shall engage in international co-operation to implement this right.

Aims of education (article 29)
Education shall aim at developing the child's personality, talents and mental and physical abilities to the fullest extent. Education shall prepare the child for an active adult life in a free society and foster respect for the child's parents, his or her own cultural identity, language and values, and for the cultural background and values of others.
Children of minorities or indigenous populations (article 30)
Children of minority communities and indigenous populations have the right to enjoy their own culture and to practise their own religion and language.

Leisure, recreation and cultural activities (article 31)
The child has the right to leisure, play and participation in cultural and artistic activities.

Child labour (article 32)
The child has the right to be protected from work that threatens his or her health, education or development. The State shall set minimum ages for employment and regulate working conditions.

Drug abuse (article 33)
Children have the right to protection from the use of narcotic and psychotropic drugs, and from being involved in their production or distribution.

Sexual exploitation (article 34)
The State shall protect children from sexual exploitation and abuse, including prostitution and involvement in pornography.

Sale, trafficking and abduction (article 35)
It is the State's obligation to make every effort to prevent the sale, trafficking and abduction of children.

Other forms of exploitation (article 36)
The child has the right to protection from all forms of exploitation prejudicial to any aspects of the child's welfare not covered in articles 32, 33, 34 and 35.

Torture and deprivation of liberty (article 37)
No child shall be subjected to torture, cruel treatment or punishment, unlawful arrest or deprivation of liberty. Both capital punishment and life imprisonment without the possibility of release are prohibited for offences committed by persons below 18 years. A child who is detained shall have legal and other assistance as well as contact with his or her family.

Armed conflicts (article 38)
State Parties shall take all feasible measures to ensure that children under 15 play no direct part in hostilities. No child below 15 shall be recruited into the armed forces. States shall also ensure the protection and care of children affected by armed conflict as described in relevant international law.

Rehabilitative care (article 39)
The State has an obligation to ensure that child victims of armed conflicts, torture, neglect, maltreatment or exploitation receive appropriate treatment for their recovery and social reintegration.

Administration of juvenile justice (article 40)
A child in conflict with the law has the right to treatment which promotes the child's sense of dignity and worth, takes the child's age into account and aims at his or her reintegration into society. The child is entitled to basic guarantees as well as legal or other assistance for his or her defence.

Respect for higher standards (article 41)
Wherever standards set in applicable national and international law relevant to the rights of the child are higher than those in the Convention, the higher standards shall always apply.
Implementation and entry into force (articles 42 to 54)
The provisions of these articles notably foresee:
- the State's obligation to make the rights contained in the Convention widely known to both adults and children.
- the setting up of a Committee on the Rights of the Child composed of ten experts, which will consider reports that State Parties to the Convention are to submit two years after ratification and every five years thereafter.
- States Parties are to make their reports widely available to the general public.
- The Committee may propose that special studies be undertaken on specific issues relating to the rights of the child, and may make its evaluations known to each State Party concerned as well as to the UN General Assembly.
- To foster the effective implementation of the Convention and to encourage international cooperation, the specialized agencies of the United Nations will be able to attend the meetings of the Committee. Together with any other body recognized as "competent", including NGOs in consultative status with UN agencies, they can submit pertinent information to the Committee and be asked to advise on the optimal implementation of the Convention.
Statistical tables: explanatory note

The data in these tables gives an overview of the basic social and economic statistics available by country, which directly concern the 0-5 age group and their families.

The Young Child

The status of young children is reported in terms of the under-five mortality rate and the percentage who are malnourished. Under-five mortality not only indicates the probability of a child surviving to the age of five, but also more generally reflects the risk of survivors falling ill. The percentage of malnourished children reflects the level of malnutrition, which both slows physical growth and retards the psycho-social development of the child. It also reflects the health and nutritional situations of all members of the population.

Children under 5: Total number of children, both boys and girls, who have not reached their fifth birthday. (Source: UNICEF)

Under-5 mortality rate: Number of deaths of children under five years of age per 1000 live births. (Source: UNICEF)

Malnourished children under 5: Percentage of children, under the age of five, below minus two standard deviations from median weight for age of the reference population. (Source: UNDP / World Bank)

The Family

The family's impact on a young child is illustrated in terms of total fertility, and male and female literacy rates. High fertility generally reflects closely spaced births, which in the context of low income, leads to the exhaustion of mothers and the division of their limited time and resources among many children. Female literacy has a major bearing not only on psychosocial development, but also on the provision of appropriate health and nutrition support to the young child. The educational level of mothers has been linked significantly with falling fertility rates, decreasing infant and maternal mortality, enhanced levels of infant and child development, and improved social outcomes for children. Obviously, the impact of the family on the child is not in any way confined to these variables.

Literacy rate: Percentage of the male and female population aged 15 and over who can read and write. (Source: UNESCO)

Total fertility rate: Number of children who would be born per woman, if she were to live to the end of her child-bearing years, conforming to the existing fertility pattern of the country. (Source: UNICEF)
The Community

Access to health care services and safe water, and Gross National Product (GNP) generally indicate the community support available. Health services provide direct support for the young child, such as vaccinations and medicine, as well as support and advice for the family. Safe, clean water supplies for drinking, cooking and bathing help prevent the spread of diseases. GNP is a broad measure of the economic situation of a country and reflects the likely existence of community infrastructures including schools and roads, and its capacity to finance early childhood programmes.

GNP per capita US$ 1992: The gross national product estimated at current market prices in US dollars. (Source: World Bank)

Access to health care services: Percentage of the population that can reach appropriate local health care within one hour's walk or travel. (Source: UNICEF)

Access to safe water: Percentage of the population with reasonable access to safe water supply. (Source: UNICEF)

Pre-Primary Education

The 1990 Jomtien World Conference on Education for All strongly advocated that all countries set targets for the 1990s in terms of the learning achievements of children. Measures of enrolment in pre-primary education are used as interim indicators of learning achievement and preparedness for primary schooling. Pre-primary education programmes are intended to introduce young children to a school-like environment. They are concerned with the social, mental and physical development of young children, and often include activities designed to prepare children for the learning of reading, writing and mathematics. Research has shown that children who have experienced pre-primary programmes are more likely than other children to remain in primary school and achieve good results.

Age-group enrolled: Population age-group that according to the national regulations can be enrolled in pre-primary education. (Source: UNESCO)

Pre-primary gross enrolment ratio: Total enrolment in pre-primary education, regardless of age, expressed as a percentage of the population age-group corresponding to the national regulations for this level. (Source: UNESCO)

Convention on the Rights of the Child

The ratification of the Convention on the Rights of the Child provides an indication of the efforts undertaken by countries to implement the Convention and to provide better services and environments for children. Once ratified, the articles of the Convention become of a binding nature and governments have to submit within two years a report on the measures taken to implement the Convention. The ratification offers a legal instrument and means to individuals, journalists and NGOs to remind decision makers of the commitments they made.

The Directory of Early Childhood Care and Education Organizations in Asia and the Pacific describes 360 non-governmental and governmental organizations based in 30 countries in Asia-Pacific, involved in early childhood care and education. It contains both analytical and descriptive sections. Articles give an overview of the situation of children and their families in Asia and the Pacific and offer an insight into early childhood care and education efforts and strategies in the region. The organization profiles describe the major activities within the Young Child, Family and Community programmes of the organizations. Pertinent data on agencies and organizations involved in Asia and the Pacific and on various information sources on childhood issues is also provided. Finally, indexes are included to facilitate information retrieval.

The Directory aims to encourage and facilitate communication and information sharing between institutions and individuals active in improving the situation of children worldwide. Through its publication, UNESCO offers a creative solution to the problem of information exchange on childhood issues, and gives a just insight into the national, regional and international contributions to early childhood activities in Asia and the Pacific.
