This report describes the development and implementation of an integrated team approach for interviewing candidates for employment with a residential program that serves children (ages 10-18) with emotional disturbances and behavior disorders. The integrated interview approach was accomplished by: (1) training the supervisors to increase their knowledge, understanding, and competence in planning the interview and evaluating the interview results; (2) providing the residents an opportunity to participate in identifying characteristics and qualities necessary for a child care worker in a residential treatment center for children and adolescents; (3) developing and implementing an applicant interview rating form to identify the 13 most important characteristics and qualities of a child care worker based on job functions and duties; and (4) eliminating the current two-part interview process and replacing it with a comprehensive, integrated, and structured one-part interview. Strategies are presented for organizing, structuring, and evaluating the interview process. Appendices include a supervisors' training guide, a description of the procedure for conducting an integrated team interview, sample survey and evaluation forms, an applicant interview rating form for a residential child care worker, a checklist for conducting effective interviews, and interview questions. Abstract

The development and implementation of an integrated team approach for interviewing candidates to work in a residential treatment center. Weiler, Mary Josephine., 1996: Practicum Report, Nova Southeastern University, Master's Program for Child Care, Youth Care and Family Support. Descriptors: Team Interview/Hiring Practices/Evaluation Instruments/Selection Procedures/Interview Questions/Interdisciplinary Approach/Teamwork.

The problem identified was that the practicum program lacked a comprehensive, structured, integrated interview process which adhered to the basic interdisciplinary team approach, included the residents living in the center in the interview process, and utilized an objective quantitative rating system for measuring the results of the interview. The strategy began with the implementation of a training program to increase the supervisors knowledge and understanding of the interview process, and the development of a method which integrates the suggestions and ideas of the residents living in the center into an applicant interview rating form.

Following the implementation, evaluations were conducted with the supervisor's, the interview team, and the residents which indicated an increase in the quality and successful outcome of the interview process.

The appendices include the Supervisors Training Guide, Procedure for Conducting an Integrated Team Interview, Sample Survey and Evaluation Forms, Applicant Interview Rating Form for a Residential Child Care Worker, Checklist for Conducting Effective Interviews, and Interview Questions.

CHAPTER I: INTRODUCTION AND BACKGROUND

The Setting in Which the Problem Occurs

The agency is located in the Midwest region and has strived to meet the needs of children and families for over 75 years.

During much of the agency's existence, the practicum program provided services to unwed mothers from across the entire state. As the need for maternity homes dwindled and the needs of young women changed, so did the services offered by the practicum program. In 1981, the practicum program began offering residential child care services to female adolescents. In 1988, the program became a co-ed facility and in 1991 was licensed as a residential treatment center for emotionally disturbed and behaviorally disordered children and adolescents. The practicum program houses administrative and program services, academic, arts/crafts, food service and dining areas, and dormitory living quarters. In addition, the program has a basketball, volleyball and picnic area in a spacious yard which surrounds the facility.

Program Description

As a long-term residential treatment center, the practicum program specializes in treating children and adolescent boys and girls between the ages of ten and eighteen who are out of control in their environment, many of whom have not responded to outpatient counseling or in-patient psychiatric or substance abuse treatment programs. The youngsters accepted in the program are admitted under DSM-IV classifications with varying diagnoses of developmental, mood, depressive, anxiety, personality, adjustment and substance induced disorders. Although these youngsters have long-standing and severe emotional problems and behavior disorders, they are of normal intelligence, that is, they do not suffer from developmental disabilities such as mental retardation. The length of stay in our program varies from six to eighteen months depending on the treatment plan goals. Residents and day treatment students are assessed in the first five working days of admission and then a minimum of once a month throughout the course of their treatment. Legal custodians, parents, and residents/students are encouraged to participate in the treatment planning and are given a treatment summary of monthly goals and recommendations.

Treatment plans are individualized, diagnostically directed and goal oriented. Goals are determined with the resident/day treatment student and family prior to the treatment team meeting. The treatment program provides weekly individual, group, and family therapy, including specialized groups for such issues as sexual abuse and anger management. The practicum program also offers a full nutrition, recreation, and creative arts program. Thus, most youth in our program receive up to five therapeutic interventions per week, in addition to the daily living residential processing meetings. The program contracts with local public schools for specialized educational services. A fully accredited self-contained classroom offers individualized educational services. The program provides 24-hour psychiatric/nursing services. Serious needs are handled via contracts with local hospitals. Youngsters who need psychotropic medication are seen monthly by the psychiatrist. Initial nursing assessments and physical exams are performed at a contracted clinic.

The practicum program is governed by a twenty-one member board of trustees, people from all parts of the state. In 1993, the practicum program became accredited by the Council on Accreditation, the largest most comprehensive independent accreditor of mental health and social service agencies in the United States and Canada. Of the nearly 78,000 human service agencies in the United States only 600 have successfully sought accreditation through the Council's rigorous review process. The Accreditation criteria focused on case coordination, community participation, treatment services, ethical and professional conduct, financial accountability, nondiscrimination, planning and evaluation, and quality assurance.

Treatment Philosophy

The practicum program specializes in highly organized and planned therapeutic interventions which treat some of the most serious mental, emotional, and behavioral disorders. The program's treatment services are not merely an alternative to family placement or simply a means of providing a singular form of therapy or rehabilitation, but rather a treatment of choice when a disturbed young person is in need of care in a total therapeutic environment. A 24-hour therapeutically planned group living and learning environment is provided where individualized psychotherapeutic approaches are planned, proposed, and carried out by an interdisciplinary team of mental health professionals. Our residential treatment center utilizes the concept of milieu therapy in which the many hours spent in daily living can be used for therapeutic benefit. Therapy takes place in real life situations: eating, getting up, going to bed, playing, working and other phases of daily life. In our residential center the milieu is carefully organized to meet each child's needs for relearning, while simultaneously providing individual, group, and family therapy that is well coordinated and integrated with the daily living program. It is the philosophy of the program that an atmosphere which nurtures and promotes responsibility for self, others, and the environment will be most conducive in forming an emotionally and physically healthy adult. Our philosophy, mission, and treatment focus on rebuilding healthy relationships and teaching productive life skills to youth and their families. We believe that relationships are the foundation of any therapeutic change. Our philosophy defines our child centered values, advocates for families as partners in treatment, and focuses on the positive influence of the therapeutic environment. The practicum program is committed to a philosophy of helping children with severe emotional disturbances and behavioral disorders to achieve their highest potential. The program stresses the importance of treating the developmental, emotional, medical, educational and social well-being of children and adolescents. At the core of this philosophy is an interdisciplinary approach employing professionals who provide assessment, treatment and instruction within the context of a comprehensive educational, residential and clinical program. The attention of the entire treatment team is directed toward the development of an individualized treatment plan, and the establishment, promotion, and maintenance of positive behaviors. The practicum program is committed to excellence in its provision of therapeutic care and treatment for children and adolescents. Its mission is to provide clinically rich, appropriate residential treatment services to children in response to their diverse psychological, developmental, physical, socio-cultural, and educational needs. Behavioral treatment strategies focus on teaching children and adolescents alternate ways of satisfying needs that are currently being met by inappropriate or dangerous behaviors. The goal of our residential treatment program is to create a "therapeutic milieu," an environment in which our residents learn to trust, experience success, and develop new skills.

Program Personnel

The practicum program recruits, selects, and retains highly competent individuals qualified to administer and deliver its program of services. The type and number of employees required to accomplish our objectives are determined through a two-part group interview process. A comprehensive progressive training program is initiated and completed within the first six months of employment.

The practicum program has a written job description for each position that defines qualifications and responsibilities. These are reviewed on an annual basis to ensure that duties are clearly outlined and that qualifications are related to job requirements. Personnel policies which specify employee expectations are contained in a handbook which covers personnel practices, working conditions, employer-sponsored benefits and staff development opportunities. A written equal opportunity policy guides recruitment and employment practices, as well as enables the program to comply with applicable laws and regulations governing fair employment standards. The practicum program personnel are qualified by skill, training and experience, and meet applicable state licensing or certification requirements. Upon joining the program, the staff complete a progressive training module and are oriented to the policies and procedures of the program. Performance standards are reviewed in conjunction with annual individual performance appraisals.

The Student's Role in the Setting

As the administrative director of the practicum program, this student is responsible for building maintenance, fiscal planning, and insuring adequate funding and salaries for staff. The practicum student is also responsible for maintaining safety provisions, identifying long-term needs, and responsible for implementing policies determined by the Board of Trustees. Additional duties include directing and monitoring the clinical, residential, nutrition/food service, medical, and education departments of the practicum program. As administrative director the student makes final decisions on hiring, orientation, training, and termination of personnel. The practicum student also monitors the practicum program to maintain compliance with all state licensing and national accrediting standards (i.e. Council on Accreditation of Services for Families and Children, Inc.) and initiates and revises as necessary the procedure and policy manuals.

The scope of the practicum student's responsibilities allowed the student to exercise considerable control and influence over the development and implementation of this practicum project. As a member of the agency for twelve years and administrative director of the practicum program for six years, this practicum student has been involved in the development and implementation of a day treatment program for children age 10 - 18 and an on-site family therapy program. This practicum student has written and implemented a residential treatment handbook for the parent and child, a family program manual, and developed a progressive training and orientation program for new employees. Several procedures and programs developed by this practicum student have been accepted and utilized in other programs of the agency. The practicum program has consistently demonstrated leadership in the development of new and innovative programs and services to children and families. Therefore, this practicum student has the authority, skills and the experience to develop and implement any strategies needed to complete the practicum project.
CHAPTER II: THE PROBLEM

Problem Statement

Insuring the well being and safety of children in residential treatment centers is a primary administrative concern. As the degree of disturbance in children and adolescents continues to escalate, the need for developing a comprehensive and integrated hiring process becomes more critical. Even within residential treatment programs that have carefully designed policies regarding equal employment opportunity and affirmative action plans the hiring process can be costly and time consuming. Certain qualities are essential in the candidates hired to provide therapeutic care to the children. Personnel problems can originate from faulty hiring practices. If we do not ask the correct interview questions or evaluate the applicant's answers in light of a philosophical position we truly believe in and apply in everyday treatment, then sometime down the road (and it may be a number of years) we will pay the price of having hired the wrong person. Sometimes this mistake can prove disastrous to the agency and more importantly may not be in the best interest of the child. Agencies can perpetuate problems by not doing an adequate job of screening candidates and/or by not providing sufficient supervision for caregivers (Krueger, 1986, p.10).

The administrator of this practicum program is responsible for assuring equal employment opportunity in all aspects and conditions of employment. It is standard practice that an attempt is made to interview uniformly by asking questions that are related to the job functions and asking each applicant the same questions. Qualified applicants are interviewed by a two or three person team led by a supervisor who has prepared questions which are related to the job description. The interview team members usually represent one or two areas of the practicum program. The finalists are chosen to return to visit with other staff members after which a selection is made.

The practicum program does not have an integrated approach for interviewing candidates that provides training on the legal standards of interviewing, that includes the ideas and suggestions of the residents living in the center, and that utilizes an objective quantitative rating system of measuring the results. The purpose of this practicum is to develop, implement, and evaluate an integrated team approach for interviewing candidates. In addition, the practicum proposal will present strategies for organizing, structuring and evaluating the interview process.
Documentation of the Problem

Research indicates that the interview process has had low reliability and low predictive validity. Low reliability means that different interviewers do not agree in their assessments of the same applicant. Low predictive validity means that there is only a weak statistical relationship between an interviewer's assessment of an applicant's potential to succeed in a job and that applicant's actual performance after being hired. In short, the interview fails to predict future job performance (Goodale, 1992, p. 25).

With careful preparation and job related information the interview process can be enhanced and more effective. The practicum proposal addressed specifically the lack of an integrated team approach which adhered to the basic philosophical approach and included a more objective quantitative system to measure the results of the interview process. The long term success of an agency will be determined by the skills, knowledge, and abilities of the people they hire.

The practicum problem described in the previous section has many factors that have influenced or contributed to the lack of an integrated team approach in the development and evaluation of the interview process. There were four supervisors in the practicum program each representing a specific area: residential, nutritional, clinical and administrative. The supervisors were responsible for organizing and structuring the format of the interview process. Each supervisor brought a different style and approach to the interview process. Interviews were conducted with the four supervisors in the practicum program to determine, based on their experiences, whether they were experiencing difficulties with the interview process, what they saw as contributing to the problem, and what solutions they recommended, given their knowledge of the program. In addition, the practicum student developed and distributed a questionnaire which examined the effectiveness of the current interview process. The questionnaire is included as Appendix A. The individuals responding to the questionnaire represented a broad cross-section of the program. Among those responding were the residential supervisors and staff, residential therapist, program director, registered nurse, licensed dietician, licensed addiction counselor, and the clinical psychologist. All of the professionals agreed that an integrated approach was vital to the success of the interview selection process. Several individuals stated that the current interview process lacked a structured format for interviewing the candidates, did not allow enough time to prepare for the interview, and those who had participated in the interview process found the second interview degrading and meaningless.

There was a significant agreement in the responses to the question: "What do you consider to be some of the greatest weaknesses of the current interview process?" The factors cited by a majority of the respondents included lack of a structured interview format, lack of clearly stated questions consistent with the philosophy and job functions, and poor representation of the various departments in the program. One individual stated that the screening and decision making process "was unclear, and requires clear, direct and respectful feedback in a timely fashion." Generally, the individuals felt is was difficult to choose a candidate when they did not have all of the background information before the interview, and they felt that some members of the interview team did not take the interview process seriously.

There was agreement in the responses to the question why the present interview process is a poor indicator of the best candidate for the job. Problems identified were: the length of time it takes to hire, supervisors conduct the interview process differently, and a lack of an evaluation form and relevant interview questions to determine the best candidate for the job. Most of the supervisors agreed that the second part of the interview process was unorganized, and the input from those involved in the second interview had no significant bearing on the final decision. In response to the question regarding the role that children could play in the interview process, one individual felt that most of the children are too busy with their own problems and should not be included in the process. One individual suggested that the children could provide questions or suggestions on how to improve the interview process.

Another contributing factor to the problem involved the supervisors' view of their role in the interview process. They identified a need for an integrated, concise, interview format to improve the selection process, creative and innovative interview questions that are job related and consistent with the basic philosophy of the program, and an objective evaluation process to determine if the applicant can and will perform the job successfully.

The information gathered from the supervisors and staff proved very helpful in understanding the problem within the practicum program. This information was used in the development of an integrated interview format consistent with the philosophy of the program, and incorporated a standardized evaluation format in determining the final selection.

Analysis of the problem

In analyzing the problem from a management perspective, there were a number of factors which could be identified as contributing to a lack of an integrated standardized team process which included an objective system to measure the results that were consistent with the interdisciplinary approach of the program. Based on the interviews it appeared that there was a need for a quantitative rating system for screening and interviewing applicants, a need for an integrated team to conduct the initial interview, and the need for the development of interview questions that consider personal characteristics, work experience, and philosophy of the applicant. Contributing to the problem was the supervisors' lack of training and understanding of the key concepts of effective interviews: preparing for an interview, opening and exchanging relevant information, closing and documenting the interview, and selecting the best candidate for the job.

Based on a review of the literature the following observations can be made. As employers share power with employees through participative management and self-managed work teams, many employees now take part in decisions previously reserved for managers and supervisors. The growing emphasis on teamwork was especially evident in selection interviewing as team members interview job applicants and make hiring recommendations. This integrated team concept was often viewed with suspicion because employees have serious doubts about the practicality of the model. Likert (1967) proposed that organizations aspire toward becoming System IV organizations. Under these conditions, leadership is based on confidence and trust, subordinates feel free to confront upwards, active involvement is supported, decision making and goal setting are widely done throughout the organization. The integration team approach provides a place to examine honestly the effects of our individual and collective decision and actions. Quick (1972) described participatory management as the ability to trust employees and regard them as willing to work towards the achievement of the organizational goals. Argyris (1973) stated that participation based on the three values of generating accurate information, free and informed choice, and internal commitment required skills most people did not have, regardless of the political and social structural arrangement in which they lived. He further stated that changes were not effective until the people developed ownership of them and that, given the present culture, ownership of the new organizational morality required behavioral changes which would take a long time. Collaborative learning (Spear, 1993) takes place when there is a shared design about what to explore. Experimentation with a willingness to reflect collectively can lead to new shared insights, and therefore enhance future design. Peck (1987) defined community as integrative. It includes people of different sexes, ages, religions, cultures, viewpoints, lifestyles, and stages of development by integrating them into a whole that is greater than the sum of its parts. The advantages of a team approach to interviewing are numerous. Applicants recognize that they are being treated openly, honestly, and respectfully. This environment makes a strong statement about the values and beliefs of management and the manner in which the program treats its employees.

Prospective staff have a crucial role to play if they can enter into self-esteem enhancing relationships with children. Whittaker (1983) described the social support approach as a context for interpreting behavior so that individuals stabilized their self-esteem while promoting self-esteem of others. He stated that "it arises from a fundamental respect for human competence. It capitalizes upon human concern for fellow humans. It resonates with a positive view of human nature. It emphasizes the virtues of cooperation, interdependence, and responsibility. It presupposes an active, moral human community. It feels good spiritually, and calls for the best in us" (p. 407). Research shows that a healthy residential culture respects and values all of its members. Caregivers are human and their jobs are extremely demanding. Agencies can perpetuate problems by not doing an adequate job of screening candidates and/or by not providing sufficient supervision for caregivers (Krueger, 1986). The ability of the smallest, intellectually limited child to have his off-the-wall comment heard respectfully in a group is an important indicator of cultural health. Bettleheim (1974) stated that while the patients did not make the final decision, they did influence the decision-making process; and this affected the way they felt about themselves, and about living in the institution. He further stated that success depended not on unique charisma, but on dedicated adherence to focusing on the children's inherent positive qualities and their necessary contribution to the group living process. (p. 175-176). There is a need to free ourselves of the fact that adults alone can create a better world, and embrace the honesty, directness, and spontaneity children can bring to the task.
As for the interview process itself, recent research shows encouraging results from the "situational interview," asking applicants what they would do in hypothetical situations, choosing scenarios that are related to the job functions. Education and job experience are not necessarily indicative of future performance (Gates, 1992). At the present time there is a lack of a comprehensive interview format. Therefore, the intent of the practicum proposal was to develop and implement strategies which specifically would address the lack of a team approach which adhered to the basic interdisciplinary philosophy, would establish an objective quantitative system to measure the results, and would integrate the ideas and suggestions of the children in the center into the interview process. The previous two sections focused on documenting the existence of the problem within the agency, and on the relevant research material related to the various aspects of the problem. The next chapter focuses on the goals and objectives that need to be accomplished in order to strengthen the program's interview process and increase the overall effectiveness of the evaluation process.
CHAPTER III: GOALS AND OBJECTIVES

The following goals and objectives were developed as a result of an examination of the literature regarding the significance of an integrated team approach to interviewing. This interview method was consistent with the interdisciplinary approach. This format screened and evaluated ways of measuring the results of the interview process: Two goals and four objectives addressed specific areas that led to improvements in the interviewing process.

Goal 1: The development of an integrated team procedure that increased the supervisors' knowledge, understanding and competence in the interview process.

Objective 1: On completion of training, 100% of the supervisors will be able to screen applicants, provide information consistent with the program philosophy and job function, distinguish and identify personal biases, and plan and organize lawful and relevant questions.

This will be measured by the supervisor's pre- and post-test (Appendix B). At least an 80% success rate is anticipated. This will be monitored and measured by the procedures in the Supervisors Training Guide (see Appendix C) which includes: Planning for an Interview, a Checklist for Conducting Effective Interviews, Common Errors in Interviewing, Supervisor's Training Evaluation Form, and Interview Questions (see Appendix D).

Objective 2: To ensure the effectiveness of the interview process by developing and using an Applicant Interview Rating Form (see Appendix E) to measure the interview team's objective reporting techniques based on questions related specifically to the functions and duties of the job. During the ten week implementation period, an Applicant Rating Form will be developed and utilized for evaluation purposes. Based on the results of the Interview Team Evaluation Form (see Appendix F) it is anticipated that 75% of the interview team would increase their ability to rate applicants based on questions and categories specifically related to the job function.

The problem identified in Chapter II discussed the supervisors' lack of training and understanding of the key concepts of effective interviews. This goal is specifically designed to develop an integrated team procedure to increase the supervisor's knowledge, understanding and competence in the interview process. The first objective was to provide training for the screening of applicants consistent with the job function and philosophy. The training included: planning for an interview, understanding the EEO-AAP federal guidelines, and monitoring personal biases. The supervisors fulfilled ninety-three (93) percent of the requirements for conducting an effective interview with a 100% increase in their knowledge and understanding of the interview process. The second objective was to improve the effectiveness of the interview process. The Applicant Interview Rating Form (see Appendix E) was developed to increase the objective reporting techniques of the interview team by measuring the quantitative data collected from the rating form. The interview team members agreed that the strengths and weaknesses of the applicants were assessed fairly and Goal 2: To develop a method which integrates the suggestions and ideas of the children living in the center into the interview process within the ten week implementation period.

Objective 1: Two residents will be designated to participate in the interview process. The Residential Child Care Coordinator, a Child Care Worker, and the practicum student will meet with the residents to conduct small group discussions regarding their role in the interview process.

Objective 2: Upon completion of the group discussions, 100% of the resident representatives will assist in the development and implementation of a resident survey form and relevant interview questions that helped identify the characteristics and qualities that they feel are the most important to possess when working with children in residential treatment. During the ten week period at least 75% of the residents will have participated in completing the survey. This objective will be monitored by the Resident Group Discussion Outline and the Resident Survey Form (see Appendix G).

The second goal was to develop a method which integrated the suggestions and ideas of the children living in the center into the interview process. The first objective involves selecting two residents living in the center to assist in administering and summarizing a resident survey form with the assistance of the Residential Child Care Coordinator, a Child Care Worker, and the practicum student. This was monitored by the Resident Group Discussion Form (see Appendix G). The second objective was developed to involve at least 75% of the residents in completing a survey which would identify the characteristics and qualities that they feel are the most important to possess when working with children in residential treatment, and write two questions that they would like to ask a potential applicant. During the ten week period 67% of the residents participated in completing the survey. This objective was monitored by the Resident Survey Form (see Appendix G) and Interview Questions (see Appendix D).
CHAPTER IV: SOLUTION STRATEGY

Existing Programs, Models, and Approaches

Based on a review of the literature on an integrated team approach to interviewing which adheres to the basic philosophy and utilizes an objective rating system to measure the results of the interview process, a number of programs, models, and approaches were identified. Fahlberg (1990) writes: "Ideally, the entire organization should view itself as a team working towards common objectives and goals. The goal was that each team be characterized by mutual respect, good internal communication, and a clear understanding of its part in achieving the overall goals of the organization and putting the philosophy into practice" (p. 82). These approaches were based on a team approach that enhanced trusting relationships, and an atmosphere of receptivity to creativity and new ideas. Fahlberg (1990) also suggested that when hiring staff for residential treatment the following qualities and attributes must be considered: (1) the applicant needs to feel comfortable with the basic philosophical approach and function as a member of a team, (2) the applicant needs to be a loving and emotionally nurturing person who is able to respond to crisis, (3) the applicant needs to respect the authority of the organization and accept constructive criticism, (4) and the applicant must possess good basic intelligence. It is interesting to note that Fahlberg (1990) recommended that a new child care worker be introduced into the program slowly and carefully, thus providing some measure of protection for both the staff and the residents. The emphasis was on new employee orientation and allowing time for the residents to develop trust with the new staff member.

Training is one approach which can be used in teaching interview skills. Structured rules and well established interview guidelines assist supervisors by providing them with practical information about planning and evaluating an interview, by teaching them the communication skills and techniques needed for an effective interview, and familiarizing them with the federal laws prohibiting discrimination. Martone (1990) developed a child care worker interview protocol to address the challenge of how to write interview questions that will indicate whether or not an applicant meets the requirement established for the position. This training module includes a section that describes the qualities and characteristics that are essential for potential candidates working with children. These characteristics include integrity, initiative, critical thinking, locus of control, attitude and emotional stability, team player, and motivation. It is stressed in the training that the program's mission should be the underlying framework from which the questions and hiring decisions are made. Based on an evaluation of this model, Martone (1990) stated that thorough screening and interviewing is an important part of minimizing risk to children. Many techniques or tools can be considered for possible use in the selection process. Ross & Hoeltke (1985) discussed in their article the development of an interview instrument which they claim is an effective tool in predicting the success of a child care work, which in turn can reduce turnover and institutional child abuse.

In addition to the more specific training programs which include teaching guidelines for the interview process, a training program for family based services which adheres to transparent interviewing can be cited.
Graber & Nice (1994) suggested using an interview process which set people at ease and allows everyone to ask informative questions. Copies of the interview questions were sent to the applicant prior to the interview so they could decide how much time to spend on each question. There is a time limit set for the interview, and feedback was encouraged during and after the interview (p. 31). It is important to note that Graber &
Nice (1994) considered it an advantage for all concerned when the applicant was treated with respect in an atmosphere of good will and openness. This method sent a strong message about the values and beliefs of the program and the manner in which the organization treated its employees. Graber & Nice concluded that this process can help applicants to improve future performance in interviews and rethink their interests and skills.

Personality testing is one tool that some use to probe interests and preferences. The best personality tests don't produce answers; they produce a profile of leading indicators about someone. Gates (1992) stated that the big focus in the 80's was that interviews weren't reliable because they didn't predict future performance. As a result, psychological tests became the choice of human resource managers (p. 72). She further indicated that studies now reveal how easily the "ideal" answers to some questions can be faked. Recently the Myers-Briggs test, perhaps the best known, was considered the most susceptible to these charges. Research shows encouraging results from the hypothetical situations technique which presents a scenario or illustration that asks the applicant to explain how or what they would do in a particular situation. A study conducted in 1984 by the University of Washington and the Battelle Human Affairs Research Center in Seattle revealed that education and job experience were not necessarily indicative of future performance. A situational interview may be more useful and valid than descriptions of past achievements.

As illustrated in the above research, an integrated team approach to hiring was examined, in both treatment and family based settings. Developments also have occurred in the educational setting. A four-step hiring process incorporating child care workers in an educational setting was described by Denholm (1988) utilizing an integrated team approach. The four-step process included: reviewing, advertising, short-listing, interviewing. In addition, questions were developed and asked within the areas of role definition, functions, theory, past work and educational experience. It was a process that placed special emphasis on a clearly designed team approach to interviewing. Denholm (1988) further stated that: "In order to conduct a standardized interview, each committee member asks the same questions, each time utilizing identical criteria and the same rating system. In this way, fairness and due process are enforced" (p.19).

A specific interview approach which includes the children in the process is not well documented in the literature. However, Bendtro, Brokenleg & Van Bockern (1990) described the reclaiming environment as one that creates change and meets the needs of both the young person and society. They described the features of a powerful reclaiming environment for children as one that allows children to (1) experience a sense of belonging, (2) meet one's needs for mastery, (3) involve youth in determining their own future (4) expect youth to be caregivers not just receivers of care (p.2). Redl & Wineman (1952) maintained that in "children who hate" there are many missing links in their lives. Some of these missing links are experiencing the feeling of being loved and accepted, opportunities for trusting peer and adult relationships, and an environment that establishes a culture where you are liked, respected, and have a sense of belonging. They further suggested that it is the total design of the treatment home environment and its impact on the people who handle the children whose behavior the environment modifies that constitutes therapeutic change. Part of that total treatment design allows children to be involved in the development of the living and learning experience of the treatment center, thus eliminating the "interview by appointment" pattern.

It was interesting to note that comments made by the practicum program staff were similar to the findings in the literature. In responding to the questionnaire, professionals identified a need for an organized and integrated interview process, improved time management procedures and a way to incorporate self-evaluation questions into the interview process. In addition, they identified a lack of understanding and consistency between the supervisors who are responsible for organizing and facilitating the interview process, and the lack of involvement of the children in the center. After examining these various programs, models, and approaches, I have developed a solution strategy that will address these issues.

Proposed Solution Strategy

It was evident that a number of options could be considered when choosing a strategy to address the lack of an integrated team approach for interviewing candidates which includes the children in the interview process, adheres to the basic philosophical approach, and utilizes a more objective rating system to measure the results. It was noted in the previous section that teamwork, honesty, and adhering to the basic treatment philosophy should be utilized in the hiring process (Fahlberg, 1990). Training programs that focus on interview protocol, guidelines, and descriptions of the qualities and characteristics essential in potential employees were also identified (Martone, 1990). In addition, within the last five years, innovative and creative interview techniques have been developed that take a fully integrated approach which include the applicants' follow-up discussion of the interview process (Graber & Nice, 1994).

By its very nature, residential treatment suggests a total, therapeutically planned group living and learning situation. The distinct individualized psychotherapeutic approaches are planned, proposed and carried out by an integrated interdisciplinary treatment team of professionals. This integrated approach is the heart of residential treatment, therefore, any strategy chosen for the practicum project must fit within this philosophy.

Based on the results of the staff questionnaire (see Appendix A) and the literature review, the current two-part interview format was eliminated during the ten-week implementation period and replaced with a single interview format. Each supervisor was responsible for organizing and facilitating the interview process. The integrated interview team consisted of: the supervisor of the vacant position, and one representative from the residential, medical, and counseling departments of the practicum program. This allowed for equal representation and enhanced the team process. A Staff Training Program (see Appendix B) was developed and implemented for the supervisors and the residents in the center assisted in the development of a Resident Survey Form (see Appendix G) that assisted in identifying the characteristics and qualities essential in the hiring of individuals to work with children in residential treatment. The residents also assisted in the development of Interview Questions (see Appendix D) that were incorporated into the interview process.

Some of the strategies (personality testing, transparent interviewing) were beyond the scope of the program, skills and abilities of the practicum student. The end of the fiscal year for the practicum program was June 30, 1996, therefore funding was limited for purchasing supplies as well as covering travel expenses and consultation services. The strategy was implemented within the ten week implementation period with the intent to recruit, interview, and a residential child care worker using an integrated, comprehensive one-part interview format using a applicant interview rating form which incorporated the results of the resident's survey.

Rationale: Based on the data from the professionals and the literature, it would seem that the development of a comprehensive, structured, integrated interview process is critical in determining the most qualified applicant. In addition, the interview questions should not only reflect a range of thinking skills pre-planned to provide a balance between knowledge, comprehension, and experience (Baron & Sternberg, 1987; Denholm, 1988), but also take into account the qualities and characteristics necessary to provide therapeutic care consistent with the treatment philosophy (Fahlberg, 1990).

There were a number of advantages to the above strategy. The training sessions with the supervisors allowed an opportunity to emphasize the importance of an integrated team approach to interviewing which incorporates evaluation and adheres to the program philosophy. The team approach encouraged trust and support, as well as allowed the supervisors an opportunity to see that the problems they face are not unique. The strategy offered the residents an opportunity to participate in the development of the interview process. The strategy, therefore, met the goals and objectives for the practicum project, as identified in Chapter Three. Based on the results of the practicum project, the final evaluation and recommendations were to be made regarding the format of the interview process for the practicum program. In appendix H there is a detailed ten-week implementation plan identifying the step by step implementation of the solution strategy. The next chapter will discuss the actual implementation of the project, and begin to discuss the implication, results and recommendations of this project.
CHAPTER V: STRATEGY EMPLOYED-ACTION TAKEN AND RESULTS

Actual Implementation

The previous chapter described the solution strategy as documented in the ten-week implementation plan in appendix H. During the first week of the implementation plan the goals, objectives, and expectations of the practicum project were introduced to the four (4) program supervisors and a meeting was held with the Human Resource Coordinator to review the training outline and expectations. All of the consent forms (see Appendix I) were sent to the children's legal custodian and parents. The Residential Child Care Worker job opening was advertised with Job Service and the local newspaper. During the second week a training session was held in order to increase the supervisors knowledge and understanding of the interview process. The Supervisor's Pre-and Post-Test (see Appendix B), Supervisor's Training Guide forms (see Appendix C) were reviewed and completed. In addition, the Guidelines and Interview Questions (see Appendix D), Applicant Interview Rating Form (see Appendix E), Resident Group Discussion and Survey Form (see Appendix G), and the Interview Team Evaluation Forms were reviewed.

During the third week a meeting was held with two resident representatives and the residential child care coordinator to review their role in the interview process. A time was set for the residents to complete the Residents Survey Form (see Appendix G).

During the fourth week the interview team was selected and a training session was held to review the Procedure for Hiring a Residential Child Care Worker (see Appendix C), Interview Questions (see Appendix D), Applicant Interview Rating Form (see Appendix E), Residents Survey (see Appendix G) and evaluation forms. The interview team consisted of the residential child care coordinator, the licensed registered dietician, the administrative specialist, and the medical coordinator.

The interviews were conducted during the fifth and sixth week of the implementation plan. There were three candidates interviewed for the residential child care worker position. When the adjusted rating scores of the candidates were tabulated a final decision was made based on the highest score of the three candidates. An interview was conducted during the last few weeks to the members of the interview team (see Appendix F), and the newly hired residential child care worker (see Appendix J).
Result Analysis

The first goal was to develop an integrated team procedure to increase the supervisor's knowledge and understanding of the interview process. The first objective was to provide a comprehensive training program for the supervisors. There was one hundred (100) percent participation with post-test results indicating nearly (100) percent increase in their knowledge and understanding of the interview process.

The results of the training are indicated in Table 1.

The second objective of goal one was to review the Applicant Interview Rating Form (see Appendix E) to ensure the effectiveness of the interview process by developing a rating system that measured the supervisor's objective reporting techniques based on questions related specifically to the functions and duties of the job. The members of the interview team were given copies of the rating form and utilized it during the interview process. Using a four point (4.0) system, the applicant interview rating form was evaluated by the interview team members. They indicated the following: clear, concise instructions and ratings - 3.40, pertinent job function categories - 3.80, and relevant interview questions - 3.60. Three out of the four interviewers indicated that the structure of the interview rating form allowed them to concentrate on each category which helped them to evaluate the applicants' responses objectively. The final adjusted scores for the three applicants' were: Applicant One - 76.75, Applicant Two - 76.25, and Applicant Three - 68.25. Although there was only .50 difference between applicant one and two the interview team members agreed that the strengths and weaknesses of the applicants were assessed fairly and were objective despite slightly different standards of scoring and varying perspectives in evaluating the responses. Overall, they were impressed with what they considered the validity of the scores.

The second goal was to develop a method that integrates the suggestions and ideas of the residents living in the center into the interview process. The first objective involved two residents living in the center, and the Residential Child Care Coordinator, and the practicum student. The Residential Child Care Worker was not able to participate due to a previously scheduled vacation. Two small group discussions were conducted using the Resident Group Discussion Outline (see Appendix G) which explained the goals and objectives of the project. A thorough review of the Resident Survey Form (see Appendix G) was conducted. Upon completion of the group discussion one of the two resident representatives assisted in developing the resident survey form and selecting the two questions that were included in the applicant interview rating form (one of the representatives was put on high risk status so he could not continue to participate in the process).

During the ten week implementation period (see Appendix H) sixty-seven (67%) of the residents living in the center participated in filling out the survey. Initially, fourteen (14) out of eighteen (18) residents were scheduled to participate in the survey. On the day of the survey, two (2) male residents decided that they did not want to fill out the survey. Therefore, the goal of seventy-five (75) percent participation was not met.

The purpose of the survey was to establish what the residents believe to be the most important characteristics and qualities a child care worker must possess in order to work successfully with children in a residential treatment setting. The results of the resident survey are described in Table 2.

Overall, the goals of the project were successfully addressed and met based on the results of the pre- and post-test results, the evaluations and data collected from the applicant interview rating form, the residents survey form, and finally the evaluations from the interview team members. An unanticipated outcome came when the newly hired residential child care worker submitted a written response to the interview process. He stated that, "The questions were not only helpful in identifying what skills the job at Luther Hall required, but they also helped me to identify as to whether I possessed those skills. I also found the interviewers to be very friendly and relaxed, which in turn helped me."

This practicum addressed many different areas of the interview process. It began with specific training for the supervisors, and provided the opportunity for the residents to participate in the development of an applicant interview rating form which identified the most important qualities and characteristics needed in a child care worker. The interview questions were organized and developed according to a specific category on the applicant interview rating form to meet the standards of the EEO/AAP guidelines and provide fair and consistent ratings. Replacing the two-part interview with a comprehensive one-part interview was well received. The final meeting with the interview team members occurred during the tenth week of the implementation plan (see Appendix H). Their feedback and recommendations are discussed in the next chapter.
CHAPTER VI: CONCLUSION

Implications and Recommendations

The purpose of the practicum project was to improve the interview process by developing and implementing an integrated approach for interviewing candidates to work in a residential treatment center. The integrated approach was accomplished by (1) training the supervisors to increase their knowledge, understanding and competence in planning, preparing, and evaluating the interview results, (2) providing the residents living in the center an opportunity to participate in identifying the characteristics and qualities they feel are necessary in order for a child care worker to work with children and adolescents in a residential treatment center, (3) developing and implementing an applicant interview rating form that identified thirteen (13) categories which describe the most important characteristics and qualities of a child care worker based on the job functions and duties, and (4) eliminate the current two-part interview process and replace it with a comprehensive, integrated and structured one-part interview. The practicum project contained two goals and four objectives.

The first goal was to develop an integrated team procedure to increase the supervisor's knowledge, understanding and competence in the interview process. The first objective was to provide training for the screening of applicants consistent with the job function and philosophy. The training included: planning for an interview, understanding the EEO-AAP federal guidelines, and monitoring personal biases. Based on the results of the checklist (see Appendix C) the supervisors fulfilled ninety-three (93) percent of the requirements for conducting an effective interview. The first objective was achieved. The supervisors gained a better understanding of the important aspects of the interview process.

The second objective was to improve the effectiveness of the interview process. The Applicant Interview Rating Form (see Appendix E) was intended to increase the objective reporting techniques of the interview team by measuring the quantitative data collected from the rating form. This objective was achieved. The rating form indicated that the interview team members tended to be more critical in their evaluation of the applicant's responses to the categories with the greater assigned weight. Those with the assigned weight of 3 averaged 2.82 points, those categories with the assigned weight of 2 averaged 3.00 points while the assigned weight of 1 averaged 3.20; all were on a four point (4.0) scale.
It is interesting to note that the average score increased at the rate of .20 per weight which indicates that there was an orderly, well-proportioned progression of the varying weights. The interview team gave the applicant interview rating form very high marks in their evaluation.

The second goal was to develop a method which integrated the suggestions and ideas of the children living in the center into the interview process. It was this component of the practicum project that received the most attention and positive feedback. The members of the interview team and all three of the applicants who were interviewed stated that the information from the Residents Survey Form (see Appendix G) was invaluable. An unexpected outcome was the similarities in the scoring of the categories in the applicant interview rating form for the newly hired residential child care worker when compared to the characteristics and qualities the residents felt were important. The residents ranked sense of mission, helper, relationships, and trust as the most important characteristics while the new residential child care worker ranked highest in philosophical stance and mission, teamwork, interpersonal skills, and therapeutic skills. In substance these characteristics match.

Staff development begins with the recruiting process. It is important to gain critical information about candidates before they are hired. Training supervisors to plan and conduct job interviews effectively is vital to the safety of the children in the center. Communicating the program's values and commitment to quality care and continued assessment of the attitude, competence, and behavior of the staff play an essential role in assuring quality services. The outcome of this practicum may benefit others in the field who wish to improve the interview process in their agencies. The practicum also emphasized the importance of resident involvement in the development of the applicant interview rating form and the interview questions. Krueger (1990) stated that, "caring relationships - relationships that include empathy, trust, security, compassion, and sympathy - are the foundation on which treatment is built."

Bronfenbrenner (1981) has acknowledged that every child needs at least one special adult who is fervently involved in his or her life, for only then can the child develop to full potential. Keith-Lucas (1981) challenges those who would reduce love to social reinforcement, to be employed as another tool for manipulating behavior. He sees love, acceptance, and understanding as prerequisites to behavior, not its reward: "One doesn't have to behave in order to be loved, but be loved in order to behave."
It is interesting to note that the top ten characteristics and qualities that the children felt were the most important to possess in order to work with children in a residential treatment center were:

1. Sense of Mission
   Wants to help kids
2. Helper
   Enjoys seeing others succeed
3. Relationships
   Builds trust and cares
4. Confidence
   Is someone you can trust
5. Empathy
   Is a good listener
6. Objectivity
   Sees both sides of a problem
7. Personality
   Is outgoing, fun
8. Integrity
   Will respect confidentiality
9. Dependable
   Loyal, always willing to help
10. Interpersonal Skills
    Gets along with kids and adults

The challenge for the practicum program will be to examine how the one-part interview process and the applicant interview rating form can be implemented for all of the job positions in the program. The format and the rating form were specifically designed for the hiring of a residential child care worker and there are twelve other positions in the practicum program. The supervisors and the interview team members would like to continue this interview format when hiring residential child care workers. They identified several strengths and weaknesses of the applicant rating form and offered excellent suggestions for improvement of the interview.
process (see Appendix F).

Two methods of disseminating this practicum and its results are planned. First, I plan to summarize this report into a form suitable for presentation to the President of Lutheran Social Services of North Dakota. Second, I plan to share this information through leadership council and executive team meetings. This project has reaffirmed my belief in the value of an integrated team approach for evaluating and determining the best candidates to work in residential treatment, and stressed the importance and significance of the opinions, thoughts, and ideas of the children living in the center.

Guidelines for Interviewing
Interview Questions
GUIDELINES FOR INTERVIEWING

Keep the following rules in mind when presenting the interview questions that are intended to indicate whether or not an applicant meets the requirements for the position.

1. The underlying framework from which you draw your questions and hiring decisions is the LSS/Luther Hall Mission Statement. How does this person reflect our beliefs, values and our mission?

2. An applicant's past will offer you indicators upon which you can draw reliable assumptions. Past work behavior is usually the best indicator of future work behavior. The three sources of information available are: the application, the interview process, and the references from past employers/personal.

The following interview questions have been developed to correspond to each of the thirteen (13) categories in the Applicant Interview Rating Form. The questions are specific and relevant to the category. For example:

Category: Degree, Training and Experience
Questions: Describe for me your duties in your current job?
What were your three most important responsibilities in your previous job?

It is important that the interview team members each take a category and ask the selected questions in that category. All team members will rate each category immediately after the questions have been asked. This will provide a more consistent, objective response to the category and the questions. The team members will rotate the thirteen (13) categories and questions. The two questions chosen by the Resident Representatives from the Residents Survey Form are on page ten (10).

Please note: The interview team does not need to ask all of the questions listed in each category. The team will need to meet and choose the questions they feel are important and relevant.

Hypothetical Situations:
Three part question:
Part A
It’s your first day at work and you have 4 residents in your care. It is almost dinner time and you are asked by your supervisor to make sure the dinner table gets set. It is Donny turn to set the table today and he is busy playing a video game. You ask him twice if he could please set the table; each time he ignores you. In addition, as you speak, Donny raises the volume on the video game. What do you say and do?
Part B
The child Donny becomes angry and explosive lashing out verbally regardless of the interventions suggested by the applicant. Donny pushes you out of the way and storms to his room. He slams the door shut and shortly after you hear loud banging against the walls. Again, what do you say and do?
Part C
Let’s go back to the point where Donny pushes you and instead of storming to his room he goes to an Exit door. Donny then tells you he is tired of this place and that he is leaving. He then proceeds to walk out. You have three kids in your care, a child that just left the building and the dinner table needs to be set. What do you do?
Hypothetical Situations:

Today you and a co-worker are working with a group of 6 or 7 kids doing arts and crafts. About 10 minutes into the activity your co-worker goes into the staff office to use the phone. Shortly after Billy begins to be silly it escalates to provoking, and finally he gets up and starts hitting kids in the back of the head. What do you do and say?

Note: What you are looking for is their ability to control a group when alone and ability to confront a co-worker if feeling overwhelmed.

It's about 10:30 p.m. on Friday evening. You were assigned as primary to three boys. You get a knock on the door and it is Adam's mom saying she is here to pick up her son. She tells you that she has a full weekend planned so she needs to have Adam come with her. What you find strange is that you read in the visitation schedule that Adam is scheduled to be picked up on Saturday at 2:00 p.m., the next day. To add to this situation she is accompanied by a man you have never seen before who is acting very strange. The more you look at him the more you are certain that he is under the influence of something. How would you handle this situation? What do you say, and why?

Today you and a team member are walking a group of 6-7 kids from point A to point B. You are at the end of the line and your team member (co-worker) is at the head of the line as is Billy. Billy once again starts being silly escalating to a verbal altercation with peers. Throughout this situation your team member has been trying to redirect and calm Billy but he is not responding. As a matter of fact, Billy escalates to the point where he is extremely rude with your team member. You notice your team member becoming angry and at one point walks up and grabs Billy by the arm yanking him out of line. He then tells Billy "Listen, damn it, if you don't shut up and quit it you're going to regret it." You have the other boys looking on, what do you say, do, and why? What do you do with the information?
Hypothetical Situations:

You are working on the second floor during bedtime. You are at one end of the hall (girls/boys) wing and your co-worker is at the other. You then have Billy call you into his room and he tells you that he was sick today. You know this is true because he was not in school. You make some small talk and he asks you to tuck him into bed. You do so, then leave the room. Then you are called into the office by the supervisor the next morning. Your supervisor states that he spoke with Billy and that Billy is alleging that you went into his room and touched him in areas that he did not want to be touched. How do you respond to these allegations?

Dependability:

Where do you see yourself in 5 years? How does working here help?

If your past employers and co-workers were asked to characterize you, what would they say? What would they say about your attendance? Punctuality?

What have you done to become more effective in your position? How long will it take you to make a contribution? Why should I hire you? How long would you stay with the agency? How would working evenings affect you?

Please rate this category on your applicant interview rating form now!

Questions from the Resident's Survey:
1. Do you agree or disagree with this statement and why.
   "Don't treat an individual issue as a group issue."

2. In your opinion, what is the most important thing to do when listening to a child?

Results of the Interview Team Evaluation of the Interview Process

Strengths

- Able to concentrate on listening to the applicant
- Ease of answering each category
- Results are more objective despite slightly different standards of scoring and/or varying perspectives in evaluating the responses
- Better eye contact
- Better able to listen to the applicant
- More time with the applicant gives more information to evaluate easier
- Really able to listen to the applicant which put them at ease and encouraged them
- Grouping of the questions to cover a specific area was excellent. Knowing what to look for under each category was very helpful

Weaknesses

- Interpersonal skills category should be separated
- The working of a few questions was awkward
- Does not account for good or poor interviewers. Personality is not weighed.
- Some questions were redundant
- Dead time while scoring
- The length helps get to know the applicant
- Separate the interpersonal: staff to staff and staff to resident
Strengths

Even and accurate scoring process even with the different view points of the interview team

Weaknesses

Interview is long
Some of the questions were repetitious

All of the applicants were very impressed that we consulted with the residents and had two questions from them. They thought it was an excellent idea! This process also takes into affect the human nature of people. The people on interview teams have a tendency to judge to quickly and with the length of this interview system, the team is able to see the applicant clearer without preconceived ideas or first impressions making the final decision. Even though we saw the applicants differently the rating system worked out beautifully. Almost like a miracle!

Suggestions for improvement:

Separate interpersonal skills into two categories one for the staff interactions and one for interactions with youth

Have interviewers be prepared to ask questions while the scoring is being done

Ask three or more questions in each category. Make sure the questions are not repetitive.

Spend more time in the first interview with the supervisor and have the supervisor explain his/her position thoroughly and get some ice water for the applicant.

Put the tour at the beginning of the interview - applicant will learn more and be more at ease by meeting some of the other staff. Develop a separate checklist for the interview with the supervisor that describe the job functions and duties.

The title of my project is the Development, Implementation, and Evaluation of an Integrated Team Approach of Interviewing Applicants to Work in a Residential Treatment Center. As part of this project I would like to conduct a survey of the children at Luther Hall to find out what qualities, characteristics, and personalities they feel are important in the people that are hired to work in residential treatment.
