This report describes the programs of 440 organizations that constitute the "First Honor Roll Class" by virtue of having initiated innovative and effective programs and policies to improve the lives of working women. The models described in the report represent a cross-section of the Honor Roll. These programs and initiatives are divided into four categories: improving pay and provide health and pension benefits; promoting a family-friendly workplace; valuing women by preventing discrimination and providing training and career advancement; and having multiple goals. Following an introduction and description of the Honor Roll program, the report is divided into three sections that address the three main areas of concern that the models address. The section on pay and benefits reports that women believed pay and benefits should result in economic security and that improving pay scales and health insurance were two of their top priorities for workplace change. The section on balancing work and family reports that women felt finding affordable child care remained a problem and that paid sick leave, vacation time, and family leave were insufficient to meet family needs. The section on respect and opportunity on the job reports women said they experienced discrimination and wanted more on-the-job training and a greater change for career advancement. Appendix I presents more models in each category. Appendix II lists all members of the "First Honor Roll Class" and Partners for Change. Address, contact name/number, organization type, and program name are provided. (YLB)

THE WORKING WOMEN COUNT HONOR ROLL REPORT
A Selection of Programs and Policies That Make Work Better

1996
The Women’s Bureau joins with working women and employers across the country in the release of the Working Women Count Honor Roll Report. This report is the culmination of the Women’s Bureau’s effort to be responsive to working women’s needs as reflected in the unprecedented Working Women Count! Survey. Nearly a quarter of a million women told us that they demanded improvement in three specific areas: pay and benefits, family-friendly workplaces, and respect and opportunity on the job.

The Working Women Count Honor Roll Report is our first installment in this effort to respond to what women want and need on the job. This report should be used as a tool by both women and employers to make work better for women and their families. Our findings show that we have made important strides in addressing women’s deepest fears that without economic security, family-friendly workplaces, and career advances, they will not be able to support and care for their families.

The Honor Roll Report highlights what partnership is all about. As you will see, the “First Honor Roll Class” consists of more than 440 of 1,300 large and small businesses, state and local governments, nonprofits and unions nationwide who have responded in cooperative, concrete, and innovative ways to achieve substantial change in the lives of over 2 million women. That is a lot to be proud of!

Working women are not the only ones who have benefitted. Employers have also told us what works. Improved employee morale, increased productivity, and heightened creativity are just a few of the benefits they have reaped — for the bottom line — as they step into the workplace of the future.

At the same time, there is significant room for improvement. Women identified better pay scales as their single most important issue. And while this “First Class” includes several innovative private sector initiatives to address this issue, it still represents the smallest category of the Honor Roll programs.

Our findings validate what we are experiencing as a nation. In the area of family-friendly policies, our analysis demonstrates that enabling workers to meet their family obligations is a key source of the nation’s competitive advantage — our national economic strength depends on our national family strength. Family-friendly policies can be a catalyst to the economic success of an enterprise.

Congratulations to those who participated in this initiative. I challenge each of you to continue to build high performance workplaces that fully and fairly value women as equal partners. To potential partners, I challenge you to join us in this effort. There is no excuse for inaction.

With the publication of a partial selection of employer models from the Working Women Count! Honor Roll, the Women’s Bureau highlights the final phase of the unprecedented “Working Women Count!” initiative. From start to finish, this project would not have been possible without the thousands of people who helped make it a success.

We must begin by thanking the Secretary of Labor, Robert B. Reich — without his support and leadership it could not have happened. Also a big thanks to the more than sixteen hundred partners representing business, labor, publications, on-line services, media, Federal and State agencies, women’s, and other grassroots organizations that agreed to distribute and collect our Working Women Count! questionnaire. We also owe the success of this endeavor to the one quarter of a million women who responded to the questionnaire, telling us firsthand what it’s like to be a working woman, and what changes would make it easier to balance work and family.

Special thanks to over thirteen hundred Honor Roll Partners and Partners for Change, who, through their policies and programs, have made positive changes in the lives of over 2 million working women and their families, demonstrating that Partnership initiatives and executive commitment works for working women and men.

We are indebted to the author, Roberta M. Spalter-Roth, Ph.D. — whose talents and expertise helped us compile an overview of the hundreds of Honor Roll applications we have received to date, and the graphic arts contractor for their professionalism in the composition, design, and layout of this publication on a very tight deadline. Additionally, we would like to thank American Home Products, Service Employees International Union, and the Corradi Family for their photographic submissions.

Thanks to Lionel White and his staff — Jim Blackmon, Angelique Larsen, and Carrie Cyphert — who oversaw the design and graphics process, and Clarence Lindsay and the staff in the Division of Printing Management for their assistance in jumping hurdles to get this publication printed.

Last, but certainly not least, for the hard work, commitment to the task, and dedication to the issues this report represents, we thank the staff in the Women’s Bureau national and regional offices. Without the drive and determination of these “behind the scenes” women and men, we could not have accomplished such an incredible task. And while this report recognizes 440 models of innovative policies and programs, the staff at the Women’s Bureau continues to receive, process, and add to our database, hundreds more models from Honor Roll applicants from around the country. The summaries of the programs highlighted in this report were taken directly from the information submitted by the Honor Roll applicant organizations. Although we have taken great steps to ensure the accuracy of information, we regret that we may have inadvertently misstated a program or policy.

Thanks to everyone whose cooperative spirit and support made the Working Women Count! Honor Roll Report possible!

The Department of Labor Women's Bureau is the only federal agency with a mandate to represent the needs of wage earning women in the public policy process. When it was created by Congress in 1920, there were only 8.25 million working women for the Bureau to represent — less than 20 percent of our nation's workforce. Today, over 60 million women work for pay — almost 50 percent of our Nation's workforce.

The explosion in the numbers of working women is one of the defining trends of the 20th century. The patterns of women's work lives more closely resemble those of men's: the gap between men and women's rates of labor force participation has declined; women are less likely to drop out of the labor force for significant periods of their lives, and more and more women are responsible, alone or with a spouse, for the economic security of their families.

Since 1993 women have made real gains. The wage gap has continued to decrease, the glass ceiling has begun to crack, and the Family and Medical Leave Act — the first bill signed by President Clinton — for the first time, has allowed workers to take time off to care for a seriously ill family member without putting their jobs in jeopardy. This Act has had a real impact on women's lives and helped men as well: more than 12 million American workers have taken advantage of FMLA, so far.

This Administration has also taken the innovative step of reaching out to the experts — working women — to ask them how they felt about their jobs. In 1994, the Department of Labor's Women's Bureau worked with sixteen hundred partners across the country to disseminate the Working Women Count! Survey. In this survey, more than one-quarter of a million women told the Women's Bureau what they liked and didn't like about their jobs and workplaces and what needed to change. Through the popular Working Women Count! Survey, the great majority said they either "liked" or "loved" their jobs. They felt pride in being breadwinners for their families and in being a significant part of the workforce. But they also shared three main areas of concern:

♀ PAY AND BENEFITS
Women told us pay and benefits should result in economic security, and that improving pay scales and health insurance were two of their top priorities for workplace change.

♀ BALANCING WORK AND FAMILY
Women felt that, while workplace structure and culture should support women's family responsibilities, finding affordable child care remained a problem, and paid sick leave, vacation time, and family leave were insufficient to meet family needs.
RESPECT AND OPPORTUNITY ON THE JOB

Women of all races said they experienced discrimination and wanted more on-the-job training and a greater chance for career advancement. They expressed frustration with the visible and invisible signs of inequality and were looking for a real commitment to changes that benefit working women and their families.

And, they told the Women's Bureau that multi-issue solutions were required because women's lives are not divided into segments.³

A Call For Action!

The Administration listened — and called for action. After reviewing the results of the questionnaire, visiting workplaces, and meeting with working women across the country, the Women's Bureau took concrete steps to address working women's needs. The Bureau developed the Working Women Count Honor Roll! — a program challenging businesses, nonprofits, unions, and state and local governments to initiate new programs or policies that make real, positive workplace change in the areas women said they needed it most.

The Women's Bureau realized that in order to make positive changes in the workplace that accomplish the goals of increased pay and benefits, family friendly workplaces, and equal opportunity — changes that fully and fairly value women — there must be cooperative effort among workers, employers, businesses, labor unions, non-profits, and the government. Positive changes required the imaginations and the will of many individuals and organizations.

That is what the Working Women Count! Honor Roll is about. Its purpose is to encourage employers, organizations, and individuals to implement, institutionalize and disseminate new policies and programs in the areas working women care about the most. The response has been overwhelming.

What We Learned — Partnerships Work!

What the Women's Bureau has learned from the Honor Roll process is that change is happening and that more change can happen regardless of the size or the type of organization. Change can bubble up from workers themselves or come from the commitment of top executives. Businesses and non-profits, public and private organizations, labor unions and management, companies large and small, have taken concrete actions to address the workplace concerns of women (and men and families) — and many of their efforts are working. We learned that no organization is too small to provide family friendly benefits, no organization is too large to provide respect. We learned that more effort needs to be made to encourage organizations to increase women's pay. And we learned that there are many ways to meet working women's needs and demands. There are no excuses for inaction.

The Women's Bureau also learned that we made a difference by instituting the Honor Roll process. Working with our partners, we mobilized a cross-country effort, an out-pouring of energy, a profusion of programs and policies all directed at improving women's work lives. We made a difference by:

♀ Promoting cooperative relationships among businesses, labor unions, non-profits, local, state, and the federal government to encourage programs and policies that address women's deepest fears and strongest demands.

♀ Signing up more than 1,300 organizations, public and private, large and small, that pledged to institute changes affecting more than two million workers. More than half of these pledges had instituted programs and policies by the following year.

♀ Analyzing and reporting these programs and policies, seeing how they worked and welcoming more than 440 applicants onto the "First Honor Roll Class."

♀ Spreading the word about the many ways to bring about change so that others can replicate Honor Roll models and can be inspired to develop new paradigms for change.

♀ Demonstrating that positive change can bubble up and spread out when facts are known and alternative solutions are shared. Involvement in the development of strategies that work for working women is good for the bottom line and good for the workers. No one should work in the dark! Everyone should know what works!
From Beijing to the Workplace!

The first step of the Honor Roll process was to encourage business, labor, non-profit, and governmental organizations to voluntarily pledge to initiate or enhance programs or policies that make positive, concrete change in the lives of women and their families.

In August 1995, at the Fourth World Conference on Women in Beijing, Ambassador Madeleine Albright announced our nation's commitment to collecting 1,000 pledges affecting 1 million workers within the next year. By Spring of 1996, the Women's Bureau had far surpassed our goal. Over 1,300 pledges had been received ranging from pay increases to on-site health clinics, from flexible work schedules to child care on snow days, and from scholarships to business school to on-the-job training programs.

After the Women's Bureau received each organization's pledge, we sent them an Honor Roll Application Form to fill out and return as soon as the new or enhanced program or policy was underway. The Application Form requested information about the business or organization as well as the goal of the change — to improve pay and benefits, build a family friendly workplace, value women's work through job training and career advancement, or address multiple goals. In addition, applicants were to describe the program's target population and estimate the number of individuals to be affected by the program or policy. Finally, they were asked to describe the program and to give examples of the difference it made in the lives of working women and their families. As of this writing, almost half of the pledges have begun to implement their proposed program or policy.

"The First Honor Roll Class"

Once the applications were received, the Women's Bureau began its review based on the following criteria:

♀ Whether the program/policy was a new or enhanced effort to improve women's work lives and began after April 1, 1994;

♀ Whether it fit one of the three categories that women identified as crucial for progress; and

♀ Whether it achieves substantial change for a significant number of working women and their families.
As a result of conversations among the national and regional Women's Bureau offices and the applicants, more than 440 applications have been approved as of the date of this publication, with many others in the pipeline. This report analyzes these approved applications that now constitute the "First Honor Roll Class." The solutions provided by this first Honor Roll class can be used as a tool to improve the lives of working women and men and their families across the country.

The achievements of this "First Class" reflect the many approaches used to create these solutions. Some came from the bottom up, others from the top down. Strategies include: forming employer consortiums, collective bargaining, government initiatives, anti-discrimination campaigns, allocating funds, surveying workers, giving awards, bringing together planning teams, bringing suits, designing programs, and running public education campaigns. Some of the solutions represent changes in workplace structure, others represent changes in workplace culture. They show a range of ways to accomplish the same goals.
KNOWING WHAT WORKS!

This report will highlight the “First Class” of Honor Roll organizations and the innovative and effective programs and policies they have initiated. The Women’s Bureau wants to share their successes with working women, employers and others nationwide; encourage replication of programs that work; and foster new initiatives to ensure that women gain the pay and benefits they need, achieve the work/family balance they lack, and secure the respect and opportunity for advancement they deserve.

What kinds of programs are represented in the “First Honor Roll Class?” Figure 1 shows that initiatives prioritizing family-friendly workplaces were the most prominent (41 percent of all Honor Roll Programs). However, programs that address the multiplicity of working women’s needs were a close second — about 35 percent are labeled as “multiple” programs. Most often, these multiple programs include efforts to develop a more family-friendly workplace and efforts to foster women’s advancement by providing career counseling and training. Honor Roll programs addressing American working women’s desire to be valued include such programs as preventing discrimination and providing training and advancement. These programs were 17 percent of the total while only 7 percent increased women’s pay and benefits, despite the high priority of this issue among working women.

Greater emphasis on the need to devote more effort to increase women's pay and benefits, and career opportunities is required. These findings suggest that recognition of the importance of family-friendly workplaces has taken root and is spreading.

Of the organizations that made the first Honor Roll class, 46 percent are located in the West, 30 percent in the Northeast, 10 percent in the Midwest, and the remaining eight percent are found in the South. As Figure 2 shows, in the regions with the most programs (the West and Northeast) family-friendly workplace policies are most prevalent, representing 44 percent and 52 percent of all programs. In the Midwest and the South, multiple programs are the most frequent.

Different types of organizations tend to favor different types of programs. More than half of the Honor Roll programs instituted by business (representing 44 percent of the total programs) are in the category of balancing work and family (see Figure 3). Non-profits, which are responsible for 30 percent of all Honor Roll initiatives, are almost equally likely to develop family-friendly policies, to value women and to meet the multiplicity of their needs. Almost half of state and local government initiatives fall into the family-friendly category, in contrast to labor unions, which are most likely to negotiate for and implement multiple initiatives. Within these broad categories, the diversity of specific programs and initiatives is inspiring.

Women’s concerns are grounded in the facts of their daily lives. When aggregated, these facts present a picture of increased opportunities for some women but substantial barriers for others. Despite significant gains, many working women are just barely holding on. In each of the sections below the report will review the barriers that working women have overcome and those that they still face. What works! Successful models of programs and policies designed to address these barriers are presented next.

Honor Roll Format

The models described here represent a cross section of the Honor Roll. They were chosen to reflect new efforts to bring about substantial improvement in women’s work lives in each of the three categories that women identified as crucial to their progress. They were chosen to reflect the contrasting solutions to overcome the barriers faced by working women. Along with reflecting the multiplicity of solutions, the examples also reflect the diversity by geographic locations, organization type and by organizational size.

These programs and initiatives are divided into four categories: those that improve pay and provide health and pension benefits; those that promote a family-friendly workplace; those that value women by preventing discrimination, providing training and career advancement; and those that have multiple goals, usually combining strategies to create a more family-friendly workplace and to provide women with additional training and career advancement. These examples address working women’s deepest fears — that they will fall off the tightrope without a safety net to catch them. And they represent responses to women’s strongest demands: demands for fair pay, better benefits, and equal opportunity.

More models are presented in Appendix I. All members of the “First Honor Roll Class” are listed and briefly described in the second appendix. Readers should feel free to get in touch with them directly to find out how ideas can be put into practice.
Although it has been 30 years since the passage of the Equal Pay Act, many respondents told the Women’s Bureau that pay scales are still unequal. Across income and occupational categories, improving pay scales is a high priority for working women. Many studies show that occupational segregation is still the rule of the workplace with many women crowded into low-paying traditionally female jobs. In too many cases, hiring, wage setting, and benefit policies are still based on a male breadwinner model. This model needs to change especially for the 25 percent of low-wage women workers who are the sole support of their families.

Pay

While women largely avoided wage stagnation in the 1980s due to increases in work experience and have continued to experience hourly earnings increases during the last three years, almost eight in 10 still earned less than $25,000 in 1994. The 1995 median annual earnings for women employed full-time were $22,623 for white women, $19,910 for black women, and $17,569 for Latinos. About 45 percent of women earn too little to support a family of three at the poverty threshold (plus expenses for child care).

One explanation for women’s low wages is their employment in “women’s” occupations. Although the percentage of women employed in traditionally-male professions is increasing, those in traditionally male non-professional occupations such as electricians, telephone installers, truck drivers, and automobile mechanics remain miniscule. And about 45 percent are still employed in undervalued “women’s” jobs such as sales clerks, cashiers, aids, child care workers, home health care workers, cooks, and office cleaners.

Another explanation for women’s low earnings is that many of the women’s occupations are structured as temporary and part-time jobs. Currently, women account for more than two-thirds of part-time workers and one half of temporary workers. While some may appreciate the flexibility of these schedules, they do not appreciate the low compensation they provide. Of all women paid hourly wages in 1995, those working part-time earned a median $6.01 hourly, compared with $8.16 for full-time workers. This may be why the share of women working as involuntary part-timers has increased, along with the share holding down more than one job to survive economically. Women now comprise almost half (46 percent) of moonlighters. These facts explain why increasing pay scales are a major concern for working women.
Pay: What Works!

A number of different approaches to improving pay and addressing wage inequity have been pursued in the last three years; an example is the expansion of the Earned Income Tax Credit that has provided tax relief to 15 million lower income working families. In September 1996, the Women's Bureau launched the Fair Pay Clearinghouse to provide easily accessible information to working women, employers, and organizations interested in fair pay.

The broadest and most critical step taken to date is the increase of pay to minimum wage workers, three-fifths of whom are women. It is estimated that 5.8 million women will benefit from this raise, about three million of whom are over age 25.10

Along with the federal government and labor unions, some private employers, non-profits, and state and local governments have also been working to increase pay scales. Included on the Honor Roll are efforts to:

♀ Provide wage additional compensation to those that learn new jobs;
♀ Improve pay scales through improving client services;
♀ Encourage the development of special incentive funds;
♀ Leverage monies from federal matching funds; and
♀ Revalue women's work through gender and race-neutral evaluation efforts.

A snap shot of these efforts are offered below and more can be found in Appendix I and II.

Increasing Pay Honor Roll

Women Start with the Base Wage

A.T. Cross Company

A special pay program was initiated in 1994 to provide wage increases to employees for learning new jobs. Through 1995, over $76,000 was added to the female associates' base wages as a result of this program. In addition, the company launched several programs in the areas balancing work and family including a dependent care referral service, flexible work schedules, and an enhanced training and development program to help women upgrade their educations. A.T. Cross Company is a Rhode Island business with an 85% female work force.
More Jobs and Better Pay — Nursing Home Workers

District 1199/SEIU

In November 1994, the 3,000-member District 1199 of the Health Care and Social Service Union began the “Dignity, Rights and Respect Campaign” on behalf of nursing home workers. As part of this campaign, the Huntington, West Virginia union local initiated the campaign with a widespread education effort, recommendations for improving nursing home standards by increasing the minimum ratio of nurse aides per patient load and shift, and the goal of developing a special incentive fund to encourage investment in the nursing home workforce. The fund would reimburse wage increases of more than five percent. By utilizing matching federal funds, it would allow approximately 512 new jobs to be added to the State economy.

Better Pay Prevents High Turnover Rates

Nassau County, Long Island, New York

In recognition of the difficulty of attracting and retaining experienced workers and the dramatic increase in the need for child care slots, Nassau County allocated $3.24 million for salary enhancement. This money went to the staff of 55 not-for-profit day care centers that had contracts with the County’s Department of Social Services. Full-time group head teachers received an additional $6,500 and full-time aides/assistants received an additional $3,500 as a result of this initiative. Part-time child care workers’ salaries were enhanced on a pro-rated basis. More than 700 child care workers were affected.

Mary Corradi, a single mother of three young children, has been able to leave her toddler in all day child care and her seven and nine year olds at after school care at a center where the staff remained constant because of the salary enhancement.
Revaluing Women's Work Honor Roll

Women's Work — Reclassifying Old Job Titles

American Association for Medical Transcription (AAMT)

AAMT found that support staff were paid less than their value, so they reclassified positions, provided these new positions with appropriate titles, and raised their pay as part of a Salary Administration Program started in 1995. Along with the raises, additional programs were developed to aid working women. AAMT extended the amount of sick leave time that can be pooled for use in catastrophic circumstances, began in-house training sessions, and have approved external educational opportunities for employees to enhance their professional development and job performance. These projects have made a difference in 18 employees' lives so far and will be extended to cover all employees. AAMT is a membership organization, with a small staff and 8,500 members located in Modesto, CA.

The YWCA of Greater Atlanta

The Greater Atlanta “Y” established a Job Classification Task Force in the Spring of 1995. The “Y” wanted to retain its employees and attract new employees with a competitive pay and benefits package. The Task Force was charged with a four-step process to analyze, evaluate, price, and design changes in the current job and pay structure. Having completed the first step with the staff, the Task Force is now in Step 2: writing new job descriptions for all positions using a new format entitled “Results-Oriented Job Descriptions.” The entire task will be completed in about one and a half years, and it is expected to impact all 170 employees who will know they are valued and be compensated fairly for the work they perform.

Benefits

Currently, more than 14 million women — nearly seven million of whom are employed — have no health insurance. Only six percent of temporary and part-time workers have health insurance coverage through their employers.\(^{11}\) While pension coverage for women has grown, 24 million working women — nearly two out of three — do not have pension plans. Among women who are fortunate enough to get pensions, the average amount is only half of what men are getting.\(^{12}\)

In the past, many women relied on their husband’s jobs for health insurance and retirement security. But as marital patterns continue to change and as men are less likely to have health benefits that cover their spouses and children, many women and children fall through the cracks.
Benefits: What Works!

In August 1996 President Clinton signed the Kennedy-Kassenbaum bill which guarantees the right of workers to carry their health insurance with them to new jobs and not be penalized for pre-existing conditions. Pension protection and portability has also been improved. Some employers have acted voluntarily to increase the quality and availability of health care benefits, including making benefits available to part-time workers, to insure workers peace of mind. Some methods used to expand and improve health care and pension receipt include:

♀ On-site medical clinics;
♀ Finding and funding the most advantageous policies for employees;

Health Benefits Honor Roll

Paid Leave to Attend Children's Activities

Pioneer Marketing

In January 1996, this five-person firm with a woman president initiated its “Improved Health Insurance Benefits” package, which pays 80% of health insurance and covers shots, x-rays, lab tests, and an annual allotment for maintenance physicals and exams for employees and their families. In addition, Pioneer Marketing offers paid leave for employees to attend children's functions and appointments and allows employees to bring their children to the office when child care is temporarily unavailable.

According to the President of Pioneer Marketing, “We shopped around for a particularly advantageous insurance package to enable our employees to care for the medical needs of their families, because, let's face it, women are the ones to stay home most often when a family member or a child is ill. Women...tend to become more stressed, tired, have less time to attend to their own health needs, and are often last in line for routine medical attention. The medical coverage we have allows them to monitor their health and that of their families without becoming overly burdened financially. Better health maintenance equals healthier employees — mentally, emotionally, and physically.”
Medical Clinic Made Available to All Employees

Quad/Graphics, Inc.

As part of its commitment to improve the pay and benefits of its workforce, Quad/Graphics, Inc. opened a no-cost medical clinic for its 8,500 employees and their families in May 1996. The company also initiated the Work & Wheels Program, through which all new employees are eligible for a $600 interest-free loan toward the purchase/lease of a car to get to work. As of July 1996, 645 employees utilized this program.

Not for Profit Extends Health Coverage to Part-time Workforce

Security Service Federal Credit Union

On January 1, 1996, this San Antonio, TX non-profit began offering medical, dental, and vision coverage to all part-time employees. Extension of coverage has impacted more than 260 workers to date. Coverage of part-timers is virtually paid for by employer contribution and the option for family coverage is available at the same rates as for full-time employees. In addition, the Credit Union developed a Computer Based Training to allow all new employees the flexibility to train at their own pace and at convenient hours. The Credit Union's 750 person workforce is 82% female and 57% minority.
Pension Rights Honor Roll

Educating Women to Protect their Rights

The Pension Rights Counseling Advocacy Program (PRCAP)

Since October 1995, PRCAP has run a special educational project to assist women, particularly those nearing retirement or who have retired and been denied benefits or payments. PRCAP provides these consumers with basic information on pensions; helps them identify problems; assists them in locating plan administrators and getting additional information; and refers them, when necessary, to an attorney on their pension attorney referral list, or to a government regulator to take necessary action. Here is one example of how PRCAP helps women:

After intervention and an appeal on her behalf, a 65 year-old Latina woman who had unknowingly opted for the wrong pension plan — an annuity instead of a lump sum — was granted her appeal to receive her pension in a lump sum — of about $125,000. PRCAP's attorney was able to reconstruct the events leading to the client's signing the wrong part of the pension disbursement form.
Balancing Work and Family

Working women, regardless of race, ethnic group membership, job status, and family income level told the Women's Bureau that they feel tired, unsupported, and unacknowledged in the daily challenge of being both wage earner and family caretaker. These results are echoed by a recent Family and Work Institute Study finding that more than one-third do not perceive their workplaces as supportive of their joint responsibilities. According to the National Study of the Changing Workforce, 51 percent of all mothers want additional job responsibilities; but they also need more reliable day care, more paid leave, and more control over their work-time.

Among the exemplary initiatives to support working women in meeting their family responsibility are those that:

♀ Provide on-site or near-site child care, paid leave, elder and dependent care, and reduced hours or flex-time. On- or near-site child care can be found at construction sites, on evenings and weekends, in downtown areas, on suburban campuses, and in city parks.

♀ Paid leave is being bargained for and provided to cover paternity and maternity leave to bond with newborn or newly adopted infants, to care for sick family members, and to deal with legal activities surrounding domestic violence.

♀ Referral services are the most prevalent type of program to meet employees' needs for elder and dependent care; but other models include subsidized emergency care, summer camps, after-school care, and government initiatives to increase the supply of care.

♀ Another strategy is the provision of flex-time or reduced hours without causing employees to lose pay and/or benefits.

Child Care

For many women and families, child care is unaffordable and unreliable. Research based on the National Child Care Survey finds that the high cost of quality child care limits women's labor force participation, their ability to participate in education and training programs, and increases the likelihood of employment turnover.

More than half (56 percent) of working women with children under age five responding to the Working Women Count Survey shared serious concerns about their problems finding quality child care. According to a 1993 Families and Work Institute Study, 26 percent of employed parents with children under age 13 had experienced a breakdown in their usual child care arrangements in the preceding three months.
Although the majority of parents claim to be satisfied with their child care, more than one-quarter said they would prefer some other type or combination of types of care. This rate did not vary by income level — all working parents were equally dissatisfied. But low-income parents, who bear a heavier financial burden for child care and are more likely to rely on intermittent care by other family members or neighbors, most wanted to change to center-based care. Two-thirds of families with annual incomes under $25,000 preferred center-based care which they thought was safer than leaving children with friends and relatives.

Other challenges remain. For example, a skilled and stable workforce of child care workers is necessary to provide affordable quality child care. The average wage for child care workers is between $6.00 and $7.00 per hour and the turnover rate is 38 to 40 percent annually according to the latest Bureau of Labor Statistics’ Cost and Quality study.

Child Care: What Works!

As you will see by viewing the Honor Roll cases outlined below, employers and unions, and local governments have also been working in a variety of ways to address parent-child care dilemmas. These include:

- Developing on-site or near-site child care;
- Providing land for child care centers;
- Establishing a fund for child care expenses; and
- Training for child care workers.

Child Care Honor Roll

Partnerships

“We believe that supporting the diverse dependent care needs of our employees is critical to our success as it enables our companies to attract and retain a productive, competitive, committed and motivated workforce,” said the chief executives of the ABC.

American Business Collaboration For Quality Dependent Care (ABC)

ABC is a coalition of 21 major corporations that, in October 1995, launched a $100 million initiative to develop and strengthen child care, school-age care, and elder care projects in communities across the country where their employees live and work. The 21 lead or “Champion” companies of ABC expect to fund more than 1,000 projects over six years, including national research and developmental pilot programs. The funds will provide a broad array of services ranging from training for day care providers and science/technology camps for school-age children to a money management program for senior citizens. ABC is based in Boston,
Massachusetts. The Champion companies are: Aetna, Allstate, American Express, Amoco, AT&T, Bank of America, Citibank, Chevron, Deloitte & Touche, Eastman Kodak, Exxon, GE Capital Services, Hewlett-Packard, IBM, Johnson and Johnson, Mobil, NYNEX, Price Waterhouse, Texaco, Texas Instruments and Xerox.

Comprehensive On-Site Child Care and After School Program

American Home Products Corporation

American Home Products has created a comprehensive, on-site child care center and provides tuition assistance for employees with family incomes under $70,000. The center, which opened in August 1995, was built in conjunction with Resources for Child Care Management (RCCM), a nationally known child care management and consulting firm. It has a capacity for 130 children. American Home Products, headquartered in Madison, New Jersey, is a worldwide producer of pharmaceutical and health care products company with 33,941 domestic employees, including 16,613 women.

Fall is Back! Infants enjoy a stroll in the fall weather in their buggy at The Child Development Center at Giralda Farms which opened on August 18, 1995. American Home Products Corporation developed this Center for employees' children ages 6 weeks to 6 years. The Center includes a full-day accredited kindergarten, back-up care for children up to 12 years-old, and get well care, and is located at the company's headquarters in Madison, New Jersey. The Center is managed by Resources for Child Care Management (RCCM).
Citizens Come to the Rescue and Offer Affordable Child Care

City & County of Honolulu

The Honolulu electorate supported a charter amendment authorizing the City Council to approve requests for the use of city park property for free, affordable, or not-for-profit child day care programs. As a result, three day care centers have opened and are serving 160 children. The goal is to establish eight affordable day care centers in communities where the need is the greatest, and to reserve eighty percent of the slots for disadvantaged children.

Child Care Benefits for City Workers

City of Seattle

The City of Seattle, Washington added a Pediatric Home Care (PHC) benefit in November 1995 for its 10,000 employees and their families. The benefit enhances existing sick child care program called Tender Loving Care (TLC). PHC sends a Certified Nursing Assistant to the employee’s home to care for sick children so the parent can report to work. The City pays for this child care. The service is available on a 24 hour a day, seven day per week basis. Further, PHC will care for newborn children and always has a Registered Nurse available by telephone should consultation be needed. In the first few months since implementation, nearly twenty families have used PHC. The City in turn has benefited through reduced use of sick leave and better attendance by parents with young children. In addition, the City revamped their Employee Assistance Program to have a stronger family emphasis. In the first quarter of 1996, the EAP program sponsored 356 face-to-face counseling visits and reached hundreds more through its well seminars. The program provides a strong support system for working women.

Partnership Works — Dependent Care For Over 7,000 Workers!

Hotel Employees and Restaurant Employees Union (HERE) Local 2

HERE Local 2, which represents room cleaners, cooks, bartenders, waiters, bell people, food service workers, and some front desk clerks in unionized San Francisco hotels, negotiated a child and elder care fund with the San Francisco Hotels Multi Employer Group in August 1994. The hotels contribute $.05 for every hour worked for eligible members. A labor management committee surveyed members and put together a benefits package to meet the needs of employees who work shifts, including evenings and weekends, when child care and elder care services are not readily available.
State Partners with Non-Profit to Offer Child Care

Maine Department of Transportation (MDOT)

MDOT established affordable, flexible-hours child care to workers at three major bridge and by-pass construction sites in 1994 and 1995. Parents using the Portland Bridge Kids Projects, operated under contract with the Greater Portland YMCA, pay a minimum of $50 per week or 15% of their gross wages up to the full cost of the child care. The "Y" offers early morning care, evening care, and even overnight care — whatever hours the construction project is running — for children from 18 months to 12 years. MDOT hired an on-site consultant to disseminate information, act as a liaison between the employees and child care providers, and urge contractors to incorporate the idea of child care into their recruitment efforts.

Paid Leave

Along with the need for safe and affordable child care, working women of all ages, income-levels, races and ethnicities expressed a need for more leave in order to care for newborns, critically ill children, spouses, elderly parents, and themselves. There is a general feeling that critical benefits such as paid sick leave and vacations are deteriorating.
Prior to the signing of the Family and Medical Leave Act (FMLA) into law, workers, especially women workers, bore enormous costs in terms of lost earnings as a result of childbirth, illness of family members, their own illness, and dependent care. For example, a study done prior to the passage of FMLA found that new mothers who returned to work experienced approximately $12.9 billion in additional earnings losses compared to those working mothers who had family leave.19

Paid Leave: What Works!

The Family Medical Leave Act was the first act President Clinton signed into law in 1993. This new law enabled workers in firms with over 50 employees to take up to 12 weeks of unpaid leave to care for a family member without fear of losing their jobs. Recently, the bipartisan Commission on Leave found that 12 million working Americans have taken advantage of the Family and Medical Leave Act, and nine out of 10 employers say it hasn’t adversely affected their bottom line. In fact, some businesses told the Commission on Leave that the new law has actually helped them reduce employee turnover, enhance productivity, and improve the morale of their workforce.

Along with the good news, the Commission found that significant numbers of workers surveyed could not afford to take leave. Among employees who needed but did not take leave, fully 64% could not afford the accompanying cost of wages. Those without paid leave were more likely to need to borrow money or to go on public assistance.20

In addition to providing unpaid leave, concerned employers, both public and private, have been addressing the need for paid leave for family concerns. Labor unions are starting to bargain for paid benefits including those that cover:

♀ Birth and adoption;
♀ The illness of a spouse, child or parent;
♀ Participation in a child’s school events or volunteering in the public schools; and
♀ Time off to protect against domestic violence.
Paid Leave Honor Roll

Paternity, Adoption, and Primary Caregiver Leaves Are Extended

The Immunex Corporation

In December 1995, Immunex began offering its employees one week of paid paternity leave, six weeks of paid adoption leave to the primary caregiver, and one week of paid adoption leave to the non-primary caregiver. The company also established four nursing rooms for new mothers, with one at each site. Immunex provides employee assistance programs (EAP), offers free elder care referral (for employees and their household members), and allows for spousal equivalency in all benefit plans and programs for same and opposite sex domestic partners. Immunex is a biopharmaceutical firm with 750 employees (53% of whom are women) located in Seattle, Washington.

Partnership Works — 21,000 Employees Get Paid Leave

The Commonwealth of Massachusetts

The Commonwealth, in cooperation with SEIU and AFSCME (the two unions who represent many Commonwealth employees), signed a policy offering its 21,000 state employees 10 days paid adoption leave, 10 days paid domestic violence leave, and the use of up to 10 days paid leave for the care of a sick spouse, child, parent or relative living in the immediate household. The benefit for victims of domestic violence is particularly innovative. Workers are allowed to take time off to attend to the necessary legal and/or other activities to protect themselves.

Tuition Reimbursement and Adoption Assistance Offered

Ceridian Corporation’s Computing Devices International

Part-time employees at Ceridian became eligible for funeral leave, short-term disability, adoption assistance and tuition reimbursement on January 1, 1996. Some of these benefits are pro-rated; some are equal to full-time benefits. All domestic full-time employees (8,252) and part-time employees (875) were targeted. A total of 9,127 employees were impacted.

"Studies show that employees who are happy and in control of their lives perform better. Part-time work is good for employees with critical skills who may otherwise leave the workforce," says Kris Marko, a software engineer.
Kathy Fahnhorst of Ceridian Work/Life Services agrees. “In our efforts to evolve into a workforce that truly values each employee’s contribution, these changes are essential. To recruit, retain and maximize the potential of our people, we need to eliminate barriers to alternative work arrangements.”

Other Family-Friendly Policies: What Works!

In addition, many programs and policies that provide flex-time, referral services, back-up care for children and elders are also heavily featured on the Honor Roll. Flex-time and referral services are the most frequent of the family-friendly programs found on the Honor Roll.

Partnership Works — From Elder Care to Summer Camp

The United Auto Workers-General Motors (UAW-GM) Center for Human Resources

In October 1995, the UAW-GM Center established Elder Care Resource and Referral six month pilot projects in Flint, Michigan; Parma, Ohio; Fort Worth, Texas; Baltimore, Maryland and Janesville, Wisconsin. The 20,000 GM workers who are represented by UAW at these five locations have access to the services, which continued after the Pilot Projects ended in March 1996. UAW-GM also opened a Child Development Center Summer Camp Program in June of 1994 for the school-age children of the approximately 40,000 UAW-represented GM workers at the 14 plant facilities in the Flint, Michigan area. More than 400 children attended the camp in 1994 and 1995.

Family Hours Schedule Without Loss of Benefits

The City of Coral Springs

The City of Coral Springs in Florida started a “Family Hours Program” in September 1995, that potentially could benefit its 606 full time employees. The program allows full-time workers to reduce their work hours to 30 and still retain their benefits. Their salary, annual leave, and sick leave is based on number of hours worked. Employees retain all health benefits at a modest increase in their contribution, and life insurance is the same as for full-time employees. So far, five women are using the Family Hours program, four of whom have babies under one year of age.
RESPECT AND OPPORTUNITY ON THE JOB

For years qualified women were shut out of employment, education and training opportunities, and career ladders solely because of their gender, race, marital status or age. This caste-like exclusion of women is no longer the case. Many women are making strides in the workplace. The percentage of women in professional and managerial positions has continued to grow as women gain more education and work experience and with the enforcement of anti-discrimination laws. Yet respondents to the Working Women Count! Survey told the Women’s Bureau that the pace of change has not been fast enough, that they continue to suffer from discrimination, lack of on-the-job training opportunities, and little career advancement.

Advancement and Training Opportunities

By 1995, almost three in every 10 women (29 percent) were managers and professionals — now the second largest job category for women. Women accounted for nearly half (43 percent) of executives, administrators and managers, and more than half (52 percent) of all professional specialties. Between the years of 1974 and 1994, women’s presence among lawyers increased from 7 percent to 25 percent; among physicians, from 10 percent to 22 percent; and among engineers, from 1 percent to 8 percent.21

Women are not only making inroads in business, non-profits, labor unions, and government agencies, but they are starting their own businesses. Since 1987, the number of women-owned businesses has increased by 43 percent, with one out of three businesses now owned by a woman.

Still the need for more progress is apparent. Few women are represented in top level management positions. In 1992, only two percent of white women (and too few women of color to reliably measure) had earnings in the top decile of all managers in contrast to 16 percent of white men (and 10 percent of men of color).22 A whopping 97 percent of the senior managers of Fortune 1000 Industrial and Fortune 500 Companies are white males.23 A survey by Catalyst of more than 1,000 women at the Vice President level or above in Fortune 1000 companies suggests that women lack significant general management or line experience, women are not in the pipeline long enough, and that male stereotyping and exclusions from internal networks keep women from advancing.24

In addition, corporate downsizing has resulted in the loss of supervisory and low-level management positions, that were formerly routes for women and minority men into higher-level management.25 For the great majority of women, the glass ceiling is much lower: it feels more like a brick wall.
Finally, despite progress in overcoming barriers, sex discrimination continues to exclude many women and minorities from meaningful opportunities, reduce their economic security, and crowd them into a relatively small range of jobs. Paired-testing studies conducted by the Fair Employment Council of Greater Washington show that black women with identical work experiences, demeanor, and interviewing skills are less likely than white women to receive job offers when they apply for jobs.26

During the past five years, surveys have shown that at least one in five working women reported sexual harassment at some time in their lives. This form of discriminatory behavior is designed to exclude women from non-traditional occupations or advancement opportunities.27

Advancement and Training: What Works!

In 1995, the Federal Glass Ceiling Commission made a whole series of recommendations for breaking the Glass Ceiling including outreach, mentoring and training.

State and local governments, non-profits and businesses, featured on the Honor Roll, are offering training programs and educational incentives — as well as mentoring and advancement opportunities — to improve skills and reduce turnover among their employees. In addition, non-profit community groups are adding to the human capital of their target populations by offering training programs to women in non-traditional, blue collar occupations. These efforts include:

♀ Computer technology classes for girls;
♀ Networks to decrease isolation at male-dominated workplaces;
♀ Developing new positions;
♀ Changing corporate culture; and
♀ Increasing the number and size of women owned businesses.

Advancement and Training Honor Roll

A Strategic Plan to Achieve Gender Equity

The University of Michigan (UM)

UM in Ann Arbor has launched a strategic plan to achieve gender equity. The University has enhanced its benefits package; initiated new efforts to combat sexual harassment and violence against women; begun offering flexible scheduling options; improved advancement opportunities for women employees; and established scholarships for child care. Offered for the first time in October 1994 was life insurance for an employee’s spouse, same sex domestic partner and children; a vision plan for families; a long-term care plan with an option to insure in-laws; and enhanced dental coverage. In 1995, two staff members were hired to receive formal complaints of and lead educational seminars about sexual harassment. In 1995, two units in the Business School started a successful one-year pilot program of flexible schedule. It resulted in increased morale, improved customer service, increased productivity and less overtime. UM launched the “10 New Lines” program whereby extra money is provided to departments to recruit outstanding women. In the fall of 1994, UM launched a three-year project to focus on issues of concern to women of color in university settings. The University of Michigan has 36,687 students (17,085 of whom are women), 3,923 faculty and 19,076 staff. It is the largest employer in Washtenaw County.

Women in the Trades

Boston Women’s Fund

The Boston Women’s Fund has initiated a variety of projects to increase the participation of women of color in the trades, enhance trades women’s leadership skills and break down barriers including sexual harassment, racism and non-compliance with hiring standards. The Boston Trades Women’s Network provides a series of workshops to teach trades women organizing and leadership skills and decrease their isolation at the worksite and in their unions. This program, started in December 1994, has benefitted almost 30 women in blue collar trades so far. The Kuumba Girls Technological Initiative was launched in June 1995 to help pre-adolescent African-American girls master computer technology, develop reading and writing skills and provide information about career choices. The program runs in the summer months and accommodates 10 girls. The Boston Women’s Fund is a non-profit organization with 7,000 members.
Networks are Created

The St. Paul Companies

In April 1994, a women's network was established at The St. Paul Companies to bring company groups together to discuss corporate and women's issues. The network's objectives are to influence corporate culture as it affects women, address career development issues, and increase visibility of women's concerns. The network has created numerous venues for women employees to share information and discuss common concerns including speakers' forums and an electronic mail bulletin board. The St. Paul Companies, a group of insurance companies located in St. Paul, Minnesota, employ 12,000 workers of whom about 70% are women.

An evaluation of this program documented the following positive outcomes: better service to customers, increased staff flexibility, improved communication and cooperation, lower staff turnover and increased productivity.

200 Companies Unite to Promote Women-Owned Businesses

The Dallas Women's Covenant

The Dallas Women's Covenant is an economic development compact signed by more than 200 Dallas-area companies in May 1994, to increase hiring and promotion of women and to increase the number of women-owned business. As a result of this initiative, the Women's Board Placement Program has set up a database of resumes from women interested on serving on corporate or business boards of directors. The North Texas Women's Business Council has developed a procurement certification agency specifically for women which, in less than a year of operation, has certified more than 150 women. The North Texas Women's Business Development Center has brought together several Dallas women's business groups to successfully apply for an SBA demonstration project grant.

Partnerships Work: Career Ladders for Women

Communications Workers of America (CWA) and NYNEX

Through a collective bargaining agreement, CWA and NYNEX have begun offering women workers at this "Baby Bell," serving New York and New England, the chance to move into better paying craft jobs. The union/business partnership used two strategies to open up some of the top craft jobs to women. First, they created a new title called Telecommunications Technical Associate, under which promotion is based on seniority, not previous work experience. Second, they revised the Upgrade and Transfer Plan. Nearly 20,000 woman craft workers have been affected by this change. Approximately 200 women to date have been able to advance.
American Federation of State, County, and Municipal Employees (AFSCME) Council 93 and Middlesex Community College

In December 1995, AFSCME Council 93 and Middlesex Community College initiated the "Educational Training Partnership Program" to enhance the work lives of union members through workshops at all 29 state and community colleges. Union members, most of whom are women, participate during work hours in workshops on the history of labor, issues in the workplace, health and safety, and personal/professional development.

Overcoming Sexual Discrimination/Sexual Harassment

To overcome discrimination, the Women’s Bureau has always informed working women of their rights under the law as consistent with Supreme Court rulings. Through its “Don’t Work in the Dark!” education campaign, the Women’s Bureau also provides information and referrals on the legal protection against pregnancy discrimination and sexual harassment.

Some employers and organizations have been addressing this issue through zero tolerance guidelines, education programs and training. The Honor Roll programs below showcase efforts on the part of non-profit legal services and Commissions on the Status of Women to take action against discrimination through the courts and through public education.

Education Program for Women’s Rights Offered

Legal Assistance Foundation

In September 1995, the Women’s Law Project of the Legal Assistance Foundation initiated a project to educate women whose primary language is Spanish (including immigrant and refugee women) about their legal rights at work and help them develop strategies when negotiating with employers. The Project is also available to provide free legal advice and, where appropriate, free representation. The focus is on discrimination in hiring and employment, sexual harassment, pregnancy discrimination, unemployment insurance, minimum wage, and overtime pay. Approximately 50 women have received individual legal assistance and 200 have been reached through educational seminars. The Legal Assistance Foundation, located in Chicago, Illinois, has approximately 100 members.
Training Addresses Gender Differences

Brookhaven National Laboratory

The Brookhaven National Laboratory began the first of a two-part training program to address gender and cultural differences in the workplace in March 1996. By mid-April, 240 of the 3,200 Upton, New York workers had received training on sexual harassment awareness. Eventually all employees will receive the training. This program is particularly significant to BNL's workforce because there are three male employees for every one female.
CONCLUSION

The Working Women’s Count! Honor Roll was launched just one year ago to address the concerns of working women across the country for better pay and benefits, a family-friendly workplace, and equal opportunity. One short year later, we are paying tribute to the “First Honor Roll Class,” and over 2 million working women who have benefitted from these programs. To become part of this Honor Roll, employees and employers overcame challenges and made commitments to improving the lives of working women and their families. Included in this class are programs submitted by businesses and non-profits, labor union locals and management, and networks of executives and tradeswomen.

The Honor Roll program has also demonstrated that much is to be learned from these initiatives to improve pay scales, increase pay equity, provide health care and pension benefits, prevent discrimination, and encourage training and career advancement.

Although not enough Honor Roll programs address women’s concerns for improved pay and benefits, programs and policies that help workers balance family and work responsibilities have taken root and are spreading across all types of organizations and all sections of the country.

No company is too small to provide benefits and no company is too large to create networks. Coalitions and cooperative efforts work. Firms with five workers can provide health benefits, labor and management can join to provide day care, offer training, and create career advancement ladders. All companies can treat workers as investments; all companies can treat workers with dignity.

There are multiple ways to address fears of falling off the tightrope without a safety net. There should be no excuses for not implementing at least one program or policy. The diversity of the models should be inspiration for creating new paradigms for change.

Initiatives between government, the private sector, and labor unions can leverage dollars to create new and better jobs, improve standards for workers, clients, and consumers. These joint initiatives can provide new services that meet women’s needs.
This report has highlighted only the first group of programs that make work better for both women and their families. Additional programs will be added to the Honor Roll in the near future. The most important lesson of this effort is that the commitment of the Honor Roll initiative and its impact requires the active participation of working women, and their employers, unions, and community organizations, to continue to voice the problems they face, and to share solutions to overcoming these problems. Your efforts to make the workplace better for all workers will not go unnoticed.

15. Galinsky, Bond, and Friedman.

APPENDIX I:
Additional Models

The models described here represent a cross section of the “First Honor Roll Class.” They were chosen to reflect new efforts to bring about substantial improvement in women’s work lives in each of the three categories that women identified as crucial to their progress.
Improving Pay Honor Roll

Ad Hoc Group for Child Care Salaries

In April 1996, the Ad Hoc Group for Child Care Salaries — a Kansas City, Missouri-based non-profit organization — established the goal of raising $100,000.00 by January 1997, for the salary increase of its child care workers. By raising salaries, the Ad Hoc Group hopes to reduce teacher turnover rates and increase training and child program quality. They hope also to improve the ability of the staff to work effectively with families. Staff training requirements and application procedures have been formulated in cooperation with two participating organizations, the Berkeley Child & Family Development Center and the Mid-America Council.

Totem Association of Educational Support

Totem Association of Educational Support, a labor union in Anchorage, Alaska with a membership of 870 support personnel, negotiated a new contract with the Anchorage School District in August 1995. The contract calls for increases in pay and bonuses, which may be applied as a credit toward health benefit plan. It also requires that all employees with five or more years in their present job classification be eligible to apply for their Mastery of Classification Certificate (MOCC), which would provide a salary increase of ten percent. The union’s membership is more than 90 percent women. Most are teachers’ assistants, secretaries, bilingual tutors, and clerks.

Revaluing Women’s Work Honor Roll

Rockland County, New York

To increase the salary of undervalued women workers, Rockland County has pledged to undertake a pay equity/job evaluation study. Key aspects of the study have been accomplished, including development of a gender bias-free questionnaire; a pilot study that included face-to-face job audits; and the distribution of the questionnaire to all employees. The county is in the process of using the final results of the study to develop and implement a new job evaluation system, which will establish compensation levels for all county employees in a fair and consistent manner. The factor system will provide the basis for men and women to be compensated by the same standards. This should result in improved pay scales for many of the women in the county’s workforce.
The Providence Plantations Department of Administration (DOA)

The Providence Plantations Department of Administration launched a series of initiatives to improve the pay, benefits, and working conditions of about 1,000 employees. DOA's efforts to promote pay equity were among the most significant. In 1994, the Rhode Island General Assembly established a legislative pay equity commission to assess the wage gap in the RISG (Rhode Island State Government), the municipalities and the private sector. The DOA has two representatives on this commission. Through a FY 1996 budget appropriation, which resulted from the work of the legislative study commission on pay equity, the DOA was able to contract with a consultant to update its pay classification system. It is hoped that this modernization of the classification system will ensure fairness and equity in pay.

Health Benefits Honor Roll

The Massachusetts Association of HMOs

The Massachusetts Association of HMOs, a small non-profit organization, began providing dental insurance for its employees and their families in January 1995. The association, located in Boston, has a plan that allows employees to choose either individual or family coverage. For an individual plan, the employee pays 25 percent of the premium; for a family plan, the employee pays 50 percent of the cost difference between the individual plan and the family plan. This new benefit creates a positive change for the five female and seven male workers by providing increased economic security for them and their families. Altogether, the plan covers approximately eighteen people.

State of Arkansas

The State of Arkansas, under direction of the State Personnel Administrator in Little Rock, initiated a project in March 1996 to increase the health insurance benefit for 24,000 State employees. To support the employee insurance plan, the State increased its matching level from $222 to $251 per month for each employee. The State also implemented other policies and benefits including: job sharing; time off to attend school functions; and inclusion of a child care benefits under a cafeteria plan, whereby employees may defer money tax-free for day care.
Pension Rights Honor Roll

Walker Richer & Quinn, Inc. (WRQ)

During 1995 and 1996, WRQ implemented a new 401K retirement plan, which provides a 100% match of employee contributions up to 6% of gross pay, plus an additional 3% of gross pay depending upon the profitability at the end of the year. WRQ, which currently covers 100% of medical and dental premiums for employees and their dependents or domestic partners (medical only), also added Group Health Cooperative as an additional medical care provider.
On- or Near-Site Child Care Honor Roll

Resort Condominiums International, Inc. (RCI)

RCI, a business with 1,400 employees in Indianapolis, Indiana, opened the RCI-Child Care Center to further serve the children and families of RCI employees. The center serves 176 children, ages six weeks to six years. Because RCI contributed the land for the center and financed its construction, Children Today can afford to offer RCI employees corporate rates of 25–40% below market rates. In addition, RCI will subsidize the center’s fees for RCI children by $25/week for full-time enrollments or $5/day for part-time enrollments. The maximum fee with subsidy will be $80/week for full-time infant care. A comparable child care center in close proximity to RCI currently charges $153/week for infant care.

Downtown Child Development Center

The Downtown Child Development Center provides near-site child care services for children of employees in Downtown Bakersfield, CA. The center, operated by the Kern County Superintendent of Schools, offers full day child care for six week old infants through five year old children. It operates from 7:30 a.m. to 6:00 p.m. Monday through Friday. The center is also open on weekends and evenings for special events downtown. Five employers are part of the consortium that funds the center. Each employer purchases slots for their employees at $1,000 per year, per slot. This gives the employee a significant discount on child care fees and offers first choice for center openings. Many employees use their lunch hour to visit their children at the center which is conveniently located just blocks from the offices of the participating companies. The center currently serves 78 children.

Allied Signal

Allied Signal opened its first on-site child development center at its New Jersey facility. The center is subsidized by the company on a sliding fee scale to make it available to all levels of the 1,174 male and 590 female employees at this site. The center accommodates 90 children with both full-time and back-up/emergency care slots, and, so far, 123 Allied Signal families have used the center. Since the opening, the company reports an increase in productivity and employee morale. Allied Signal is a Fortune 100 advanced technology and manufacturing company operating 400 facilities in 40 countries worldwide with 77,500 employees. It primarily serves the automotive, aerospace, and engineered materials markets.
Hospital and Health Care Employees Union

The Hospital and Health Care Employees Union of Rochester, New York has a membership that is 80% female. As a result of a Spring 1994 survey to assess the child care needs of members, the union is providing more evening and weekend child care to allow greater participation of women in union activities. The availability of the child care frees union women to become knowledgeable on a wide range of issues and allows them to take on leadership roles.

Paid Leave Honor Roll

Communities in Schools — San Antonio, Inc.

Since April 1994, the San Antonio, Texas, Communities in Schools After School Program has provided services to children and their families in 12 elementary schools and nine additional sites. Free activities provided include homework assistance, Boy and Girl Scout Troops; remediation on computers; board games; outdoor sporting activities such as baseball, dodge ball and jump rope; and arts and crafts. Occasional field trips to museums, libraries, and cultural events are incorporated to provide diversity for the community served. Specialists are brought in to talk with families who have experienced violence, and mentors are recruited from the community to supplement adult supervision. Parenting programs and career enrichment are also offered. The purpose of these programs is to enrich the lives of students whose parents work or do not have the resources to supplement extracurricular activities.

Life Partners Group

The Life Partners Group of Englewood, Colorado, is one of 11 South Metro Denver area firms that belong to the South Employers Dependent Care Association (SEDCA). A major benefit provided by SEDCA is in-home sick and emergency care. Providers will come to an employee’s home to care for children when they are sick or their normal care falls through. The program is highly subsidized by LPG and other SEDCA member companies. A sliding fee scale is charged for services used. If an employee earns less than $25,000, the employee pays $1.50 per hour for the service; those with salaries between $25,000-40,000 pay $2.50 per hour; and those with salaries above $40,000 pay $5.00 per hour. Fifty employees have enrolled in the SEDCA dependent care program since it began March 1, 1996.

The Consortium, which includes Massachusetts General Life, Philadelphia Life, Lamar Life, and Wasbash Life, has found that the SEDCA program is an excellent recruiting tool.
University of Arizona

In August 1994, the University Office of Child Care Initiatives was established to provide a coordinated approach to this issue for University faculty, staff and students. The office is staffed by a full-time coordinator and half-time administrative secretary. In January 1996, the university started the Employee Child Care Voucher Program with $50,000 (local funds). Employees receive their reimbursements through payroll, ensuring that each payment is made in a timely and cost-effective manner, and that both the University and employees are kept up-to-date regarding potential tax liability. Priorities for vouchers go to full-time employees earning less than $25,000. Additional benefits are available to eligible employees such as child care referrals and a sick child program. Participants in these programs have the following characteristics: 70% report family incomes of less than $26,000; 85% are classified employees; 15% are faculty or academic professionals; 82% are female employees; 30% are single heads of households; and 27% have more than one child in care.

Employment Law Center

The Employment Law Center, a project of the Legal Aid Society of San Francisco, represents low-income disadvantaged people in employment cases. Part of their activities includes a workers' rights clinic. In September 1995, the Center launched the Work and Family Leave Project, designed to communicate Federal and State family and medical leave guarantees to women in low-wage occupations and to assist low-income workers in obtaining family and medical leave. There are three components of the Project: community outreach including training workers' advocates on leave laws; a 1–800 Information Line; and enforcement actions. The Employment Law Center continues to bring administrative and legal actions against employers who violate federal and state family and medical leave guarantees. The Center also has assisted employees with administrative complaints and negotiations with their employers.

Colorado AFL-CIO

The Colorado AFL-CIO implemented a “Bring Your Baby to Work” program in July 1995. The new policy allows parents to bring their newborns to work with them for the first six months. After the six month period ends, reassessment may be made on a case-by-case basis. This policy will allow mothers to return to work sooner and save them a lot of money on child care costs. One mother gave birth in April and immediately brought her child to work with her when the policy was implemented. A second mother followed in late summer 1995. Of the 22 employees in the Denver office, 19 are women.
Reduced Hours/Flex-Time Honor Roll

KPMG Peat Marwick LLP
This professional services firm with 17,760 partners and employees, launched a Flexible Work Program in May, 1994. All KPMG people were given the opportunity to apply for flextime, flexiplace and/or a flexible work schedule. Job sharing was also made available as a local office initiative. In addition, the firm launched a Child Care Discount program starting October 1994 whereby KPMG contracted with three large multi-state child care providers to offer 10% tuition discount to families.

An employee survey conducted in 1996 revealed that the flexible program participation rate was about 7% and, of those, 69% said they were able to maintain their family/work life balance.

Art Anderson Associates
Art Anderson Associates is a small, family-owned, private, architectural, facilities, and marine engineering services firm with headquarters in Bremerton, Washington. The current workforce is comprised of 63 employees, 38% of whom are women. In 1995, the firm implemented flexible work-leave policies, which allow leave to be accumulated indefinitely to provide for extended paid leave periods. Also approved was additional unpaid leave whenever possible to accommodate longer leaves, such as unplanned emergencies and extended vacations. Many of the company’s employees work “non-standard” workdays or work weeks, tailored to their personal schedules, including part-time schedules, four-day weeks, and flexible work times. When one senior professional had a child, a new “work-at-home” program was implemented. This arrangement has been working successfully and has benefitted both the employees and the company.

At Art Anderson Associates, we practice family-friendly policies and programs because we believe it's the right thing to do. We see a tangible benefit as well, however. Because we seek to continue to thrive in an increasingly competitive marketplace, we must recruit and retain talented people. The quality of our staff and our low employee turnover speak to the value and benefit of our family-friendly programs.
City of Kansas City, Kansas

In July 1996, the City of Kansas City negotiated and began implementing flexible leave policies for its employees. The proposal is an alternative to the traditional five-day work week. Workforce demographics indicate the growing number of single parents and women entering the workforce. The City of Kansas City, Kansas' flexible plans will allow employees the opportunity to adjust their arrival and departure times within specific ranges. As a result, employees should be able to balance work and family responsibilities better.

Hewlett-Packard

Hewlett-Packard (HP), a Palo Alto, California-based computer technology company with 61,000 domestic employees, combined individual benefits programs into the Work/Life Program in December 1995. Major features of the Work/Life Program are: adoption assistance, cash profit sharing, employee assistance program, dependent care resource and referral, flexible work hours, funeral leave paid time, health benefits programs, job share/job split, and telecommuting. This project makes a direct difference in the lives of 28,000 HP working women.
Training, Skills, & Leadership Development

San Francisco Commission on the Status of Women
The San Francisco Commission on the Status of Women was formed to explore the issues affecting women in the city and county of San Francisco, California. The Commission formed a Task Force to design a plan for improving the sexual harassment policies for the City and County of San Francisco, based on a study completed in August 1994. Twenty members, selected from the private sector and City and County employees, were appointed to the Sexual Harassment Task Force in May 1995. The Commission on the Status of Women agreed to staff and chair the Task Force which was divided into three working subcommittees focused on procedures, guidelines, and training. The Procedures Committee recommended specific changes to the internal complaint process. The Guidelines Committee devised one standardized, citywide sexual harassment policy and drafted a set of frequently asked questions and answers to provide direction to all City and County of San Francisco employees. This committee also drafted suggested revisions in the performance evaluation form for supervisors which will assist with sexual harassment prevention. The Training Committee developed a training model and planned the organization and coordination of sexual harassment training for all City and County personnel.

Rutgers University
In an effort to increase the participation of women employees in craft jobs throughout the University, Rutgers — a major public research university serving three cities in New Jersey — initiated a new recruitment program. This program will enlist women who have successfully completed the University's craft trainee program to help recruit employees working in unskilled jobs to enroll in the craft training. The craft training will enable the women to qualify for nontraditional, higher paying skilled crafts positions. In addition, the University implemented a new program to prevent sexual harassment. The new program encourages students, faculty, and staff to report harassment informally and explore resolution. It has produced a revised policy that is clear, concise, and understandable; created a revised set of procedures for implementing the policy; and will ensure that all faculty, staff, students, and those who do business with the University are educated about the new policy and procedures. The program has also broadened its scope to include all types of illegal harassment (on the basis of race, religion, color, national origin, ancestry, age, sex, sexual orientation, disability, marital, and veteran's status.) This allows focus on the coercive and unwanted aspect of harassment, rather than on the sexual content of sexual harassment.

Women's Housing Coalition (WHC)

WHC, located in Albuquerque, New Mexico was created in April 1996 to help women achieve economic security through better paying jobs and affordable housing. The Women's Housing Coalition provides a free Basic Property Maintenance Training Class, which teaches low-income women the fundamentals of carpentry, wiring and plumbing. The purpose of this course is to teach women to maintain their own properties as well as to give them the opportunity to enter traditionally male-held fields and earn better pay. Last year's class had a high drop-out rate due to the obstacles faced by enrollees. These included homelessness, child care and transportation needs, even a lack of appropriate clothing and footwear. WHC has provided more assistance to overcome these obstacles and expects all of the women who started class in April 1996 to graduate. Three program alumni began the class while living in a domestic violence shelter (one of them with her 9 children.) All three have since found housing for their families. Throughout the training classes, the women have supported and encouraged one another, and the team building has become a source of pride and education for them. WHC also has a program that offers below market-rate, transitional housing to single women with children who are working, attending school, getting vocational training or volunteering to achieve job skills. This program has grown from 5 to 69 units and has given many women the opportunity to gain job training with the security that their housing is affordable.

The Turning Point

Starting in the fall of 1994, the Turning Point — part of the Ogden-Weber Applied Technology Center and the Gender Equity Training Center at Weber State University (both located in Ogden, UT) have teamed up to sponsor an Apprenticeship Fair encouraging women of all ages to enter high paying apprenticeships. The Fair's goal is to encourage women to enter apprenticeships that range in salary levels from $7.50–$20.00 per hour. Fliers and newspaper ads are targeted to high school students (both male and female), single parents, and displaced homemakers. The State Apprenticeship Director, local employers, and currently enrolled apprenticeship students talk to participants about accessing apprenticeships and the apprenticeship experience. As a direct result of the 1995 fair, the number of women enrolled in the apprenticeship programs more than doubled. Plans are underway to enlarge the Fair to attract additional participants, more employers and more students.
Olympic College

Since September 1995, the Women’s Programs of Olympic College, located in Bremerton, WA, have worked cooperatively with the Bremerton Fire Department and the Olympic College Physical Education Department. The purpose of this collaboration is to develop physical fitness training classes as part of a degree curriculum for women who are specifically interested in qualifying for non-traditional occupations. Thirty of the women served by this project are single heads of household and many are current or former welfare recipients. As of June 1996, nine women will be inducted into the two year Firefighter program with an adjunct physical strength component. The program plans to serve many more women because the Bremerton Fire and Police Department have been required to hire more qualified women and minorities. This project has also helped women accumulate credits to qualify as Emergency Medical Technicians.

Western States Operating Engineers

Western States Operating Engineers, located in Spokane, Washington, is a state licensed non-profit that provides trades training through an apprenticeship program. In May 1994, they began an apprenticeship training program specifically designed for women wishing to enter the trades. The women are recruited from two local training sources as well as the Dislocated Worker Program. Working closely with the International Union of Operating Engineers Local 370, the eight week program trains women for positions as heavy equipment operators, mechanics, and technical engineers. Once the women are placed with employers, there is a 2,000 hour follow-up to ensure they are successful on the job. Most of the women entering the program have had low-paying, no-benefits work experience, so this program dramatically increased their pay and benefits. The program has trained 20 to 25 women since its inception. Women account for 22% of all trainees.

YMCA Women’s Opportunity Center

In December 1995, the YMCA Women’s Opportunity Center in Mt. Laurel, New York adopted several strategies to value women’s work through job training and career advancement. First, they introduced a non-traditional training program for “Women in Construction” trades. Training is available for underemployed and unemployed women seeking a career transition. So far, 20 people have taken advantage of the training. In June of 1995 and 1996, the YMCA sponsored “Partners in Change” Awards via Women’s Work!, the National Network for Women’s Employment. These awards recognize employers who have hired displaced homemakers, generating media attention and encouraging other employers to do the same. Finally, from March 1995 to June 1996, the YMCA held seminars on salary negotiations that taught women the skills they need to achieve better pay and benefits.
Urban League African-American Leadership

In September 1995, the Urban League of Southwestern Connecticut, a non-profit organization with more than 5,000 members, launched the African-American Leadership Development Program. Twenty-five men and women with leadership qualities were recruited and placed in community centers where they initiated projects and assumed leadership roles. In a collaborative effort, participants carried out their respective projects addressing a variety of community needs. All the participants are reported to have been effective team leaders and have enhanced their leadership skills.

Highlander Research and Education Center

This large non-profit, located in New Market, Tennessee, began its seven month Southern Appalachian Leadership Training (SALT) program for emerging community leaders. This series of residential workshops is designed to build self-esteem, strengthen skills, broaden an understanding of the underlying causes of social and economic problems, and provide a support base for program participants. The multi-cultural participants are predominately low-income working women from Tennessee, West Virginia, Alabama, South Carolina, Georgia, Virginia, North Carolina, and Kentucky. Fellowships were provided to 10 women participants which included travel reimbursement, food and lodging during workshops, on-site quality child care, and a small monthly stipend. Once the program is over, participants become part of the Highlander’s network of community organizers. A second cycle of SALT was started in May 1996, and each cycle will impact 20-25 participants. Highlander was established in 1932 to promote the development efforts of grass roots community groups.

Advancement and Training Honor Roll

Metro-North

Metro-North, a commuter railroad serving New York and Connecticut, began two programs to recruit and retain women employees. The railroad employs about 5,600 workers, only 11% of whom are women. A college prep program was begun in February of 1995. This program helps to prepare women for engineering degrees which can lead to non-traditional employment and higher salaries. The "Reduced Hours Program" was implemented to permit employees to meet dependent care responsibilities by working a reduced work week for up to one year with benefits and job protection. This program provides necessary job stability for new mothers.

Tulsa City/County Health Department

Tulsa City County Health Department, located in Oklahoma, adopted a career ladder program in 1995 to be funded in Fiscal Year 1996/1977. A career ladder is an arrangement of various jobs from bottom-rung entry level jobs to top rung jobs that are the highest paid and have the most responsibility. When employees at one rung meet performance, skill, experience and qualifications, they are considered for the next rung. Through this program, most employees will be able to “go somewhere” on the job. When performance, skill, experience and qualifications are satisfied, the employee is considered for promotion to the next level. In addition, the Leave Share program, which began in January 1996, allows employees to donate sick and annual leave to a fellow employee who has exhausted annual and sick leave. In April 1996, Diversity Training began. Employees are trained to conduct workshops. All aspects of diversity are addressed: race, religion, national origin, sex, and age. The Department feels that all employees will benefit from these programs. The Department employs 210 workers, 70% of whom are women.

Lockheed Martin Tactical Aircraft Systems

Lockheed Martin Tactical Aircraft Systems began a project in February 1995, to increase diversity in upper management through the Executive/Management Development through Growth Enhancement (EDGE) program. The program focuses on two areas of development: exposure/visibility, which provides recognition and credit, and training, which builds skills. EDGE is intended to increase management diversity, the number of mentoring relationships, the implementation of individual development plans, and the visibility of women executives. Women comprise 20% of the overall company workforce but 65% of the first EDGE class. Lockheed is a business with 11,500 employees, located in Fort Worth, Texas.

YWCA, Boise, Idaho

Since May of 1994, the YWCA of Boise, Idaho has allocated funds for its staff of 28 women to take at least two job trainings per year. Training may be pertinent to their current position to prepare them for career advancement. In addition, since June 1994, staff has been allowed to use sick leave and/or vacation time for ill immediate family. The YWCA also allows salaried staff (management/administration) to make up time missed if they prefer. Hourly wage staff may use compensation time for such emergencies. In addition, staff may take paid time off for the death and funeral of immediate family members as needed.

Eastern Idaho Technical College

In November 1995, the Center for New Directions located at Eastern Idaho Technical College initiated the Work Based Learning Mentoring Program. The program is designed to provide counseling for women, primarily displaced homemakers, participating in training for non-traditional careers. This year, the program involved approximately 10 students and business professionals in mentoring relationships. Prior women students, currently in non-traditional jobs are interested in becoming mentors to current women students. The Center will measure the effect of the mentoring program on the job search of graduating students.
Coalition of Labor Union Women
The Puget Sound Chapter of the Coalition of Labor Union Women of Seattle, Washington organized a network for trades women in the Pacific Northwest. The Network advocates fair hiring, contract compliance, and equal opportunity for all women and minorities in the trades in the Pacific Northwest. The Network has regularly scheduled meetings and seminars on establishing a city-run database of trades women, city affirmative action policies, construction contracts and compliance, and the establishment of an electronic bulletin board with job openings, apprenticeship opportunities and projects. In May 1996, the Network was a participating sponsor of the 1996 Women in Trades Fair as well as the 1996 Pacific Coast Trades Women Summit. Membership in the Network has expanded to 110, 80% of whom are women, with members from as far away as Alaska.

The Alaska Trades Women Network
The Alaska Apprenticeship Information Center in Anchorage formed the Alaska Trades Women Network in January 1996. Its purpose is to bring together women presently working in or entering apprenticeship training programs with members of the building and construction industry in Alaska. The first organizational meeting was held in January 1996. The network is open to women who work in union and non-union construction jobs statewide. The International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers Local 1547 donated space for monthly meetings and seed money to the network. A yearly dues amount of $20.00 has been established to help cover miscellaneous expenses. Day care is available at monthly meetings. Alaska Trades Women Network members volunteer their time to attend career fairs in Anchorage and Palmer, Alaska in order to talk face-to-face with prospective new trades women.

The Professional Development Network
The Professional Development Network, located in Ft. Worth, Texas, is a non-profit organization made up of a coalition of 35 community agencies. For the past year, the coalition worked on strategies to increase the retention rate among child care providers. Through the Child Care Training (CCT) Project Camp Fire, approximately 5,000 providers in an 18-county area have received high quality child care training. Qualified child care providers are able to pursue Child Development degrees or the Child Development Associate Credential with college scholarships offered by CCT. Approximately 350 providers have received college training in Child Development and CDA since November 1994. This college education translates into better care for children.

Wilmington, Delaware Maintenance Facility, Amtrak
The women employees of the Wilmington Maintenance facility began organizing women’s issues networking lunches in November 1995.
The facility, which has 800 employees, has only 65 women. These lunches were organized to bring women together so that they did not feel isolated. As a result of the networking lunches, women employees have opportunities to learn about a variety of other topics related to women, meet role models, hear speakers, showcase their own accomplishments, and network.

Women’s Network, The United Food & Commercial Workers Union (UFCW) Local 789

The purpose of the Women’s Network, a committee of Local 789, is to motivate and educate UFCW women to increase their participation in union activities and programs, and to develop programs that address the common problems and concerns of union women. The Network also encourages the hiring and promotion of qualified women to leadership and policy making positions at all levels within the labor movement. According to Network members, increasing women’s participation in the local union results in enhanced union strength at the bargaining table, better pay and benefits, and new organizing campaigns. This year, the Network developed a workshop on “Keeping Yourself Physically Safe,” a campaign for a non-violent workshop, and has supported a neighborhood shelter. The local is in St. Paul, Minnesota and has 7,500 members.

Partnerships Honor Roll

Chase Manhattan Bank, NA

Chase Manhattan Bank, which is headquartered in New York, New York, and employs more than 25,000 workers worldwide, has launched several initiatives to build a more family-friendly workplace and community and to develop employee skills. Family-friendly initiatives include a pilot work-at-home program through the company’s credit card group, an expanded back-up child care center at corporate headquarters with a parents’ resource library, and an extension of free on-site child care services for new parents for eight weeks beyond the 20 free days previously allotted. New parents can also participate in a parent support network and a parent education program. Altogether at least 11,000 employees, of whom 7,000 are women, were impacted by these services in 1995. Chase Manhattan also offers a telephone elder care resource, referral and counseling service and matches employee contributions to hundreds of volunteer organizations, particularly those identified as addressing the needs of working mothers and their children. In 1994, Chase Manhattan instituted leadership training programs and a Performance Management Policy through which thousands of women employees have developed their skills. In addition, the bank paid tuition fees in advance for some 2,000 employees taking college level courses.
American Association of Retired Persons (AARP)

In December 1994, AARP, a 33 million member association that advocates on behalf of retired people, began implementation of an employee Work/Life Program. Designed by an internal task force in response to an employee opinion survey, the program includes a toll-free resource and referral number (provided by Work/Family Directions in Boston), which AARP staff used more than 800 times in 1995, with 64% of the calls for child care resource and referral or educational materials. AARP also began contracting for discounts on goods and services such as summer camp, dependent care products, day care and emergency (in-home) care/services, and established a program for workplace visits by employees’ children. To promote workplace flexibility, AARP has begun offering a compressed work week (4 day and 9 hours per day) now used by 15% of the 1,100 headquarters staff; encouraging telecommuting, work-at-home, part-time and job-sharing options; allowing non-exempt employees to adjust work schedules; and urging managers to grant discretionary leave to exempt staff. AARP has conducted more than 60 sessions across the country to orient staff to this new workplace flexibility program. AARP has 1,800 employees.

Teubner & Associates

Employees at Teubner & Associates, a 57 person software development company in Stillwater, Oklahoma, can take paid dependent care leave to be home with sick children when necessary, as well as paid leave to attend funerals and parent/teacher conferences or perform community volunteer work with managerial approval. Employees have flex-time options and are permitted to bring their children to work and keep them at their work station — on occasion and for short times — if necessary due to lack of child care. All employees are offered training to enhance their skills and education within their field. The company sponsors employees to attend Leadership Stillwater which is designed to ensure future civic leadership by developing the skills of emerging and potential leaders from all sectors of the community. One third of company employees are women.

Chinese Community Center

The Chinese Community Center in Houston, Texas began a 403(b) plan for all employees in January of 1995, and offered a workshop led by a financial planner on the necessity of planning for retirement. Fifty-eight of the 59 participants were women. The Center opened an after-school tutorial program for children of immigrants in September 1995 which provides individual counseling and cultural awareness training as well as parenting classes for parents of the children. Forty to 50 children benefit from this project per month. Finally, the Center began a literary training and job training program for Asian immigrants in February 1996 to prepare them for clerical and entry level positions. One-hundred participants will be trained per year.
Homeworkers Union, SEIU Local 616
In November 1994, the Service Employees International Union Local 616, a labor union in Alameda County, California representing home care workers, began to set up two neighborhood-based Workers Centers with the Labor Project for Working Families (a non-profit organization). The Centers help provide job referrals, training, and support services for approximately 4,000 Alameda County home care workers employed through a government funded program called In Home Support Services (IHSS). These IHSS home care workers make $4.25 an hour and receive no benefits. Support services have included: locating a substitute when sickness or family emergencies takes a home care worker away from her job, setting up a child care exchange and providing assistance with transportation. Workers in West Oakland have set up a worker run "job co-op" to find jobs and training for home care workers. The East Oakland Center is focusing on raising the minimum wage. Approximately 700 home care workers have benefitted so far.

Saint Joseph Health Center
In April 1996, Saint Joseph Health Center, a Kansas City, Missouri-based non-profit organization with particular emphasis on serving the poor, began offering its child development staff family-friendly services including: an on-site child care center (operating 18 hours a day, 7 days a week with capacity for 200 children); an adult day care center; the Bearly Sick program (day care for sick children); telecommuting opportunities to work at home; flex-scheduling; tuition reimbursement; student grants and loans for family members; emergency loans and grants; personal leave time in addition to FMLA; career counseling; a clerical support group; health insurance benefits for part-time employees; flexible benefits; an Employee Assistance Program; an on-site cleaners, bank and pharmacy; and food to go from the cafeteria. Saint Joseph Health Center employs 1,400 people, 85% of whom are women.

Raytheon Company and Raytheon Electronics
Between April 1994 and June 1996, Raytheon Company and Raytheon Electronics, headquartered in Bedford, Massachusetts, began offering employees health coverage for immunizations for children, annual pap smears, baseline mammograms, and health risk assessments. The company initiated 24 hours of paid time off for those with "personal and compelling purposes" and established an Employee Assistance Program providing 8 free counseling sessions and/or referral services to employees. In addition, Raytheon established Diversity Councils to help promote the value of workforce diversity and provided mentors to interest female students in area schools, colleges and universities in math and science. In 1996, Raytheon became a founding/charter member of the "Academy of Women," which provides mentors for women at risk. Raytheon has 60,000 employees company-wide, approximately 10,500 of whom are located in Bedford, Massachusetts.
Mirage Resorts, Inc.

Mirage Resorts, Inc., a 16,500 person hotel and casino conglomerate located in Las Vegas, Nevada, has initiated a number of day care and educational programs for employees and their families. The company has negotiated with 48 licensed day care centers to offer day care discounts on a sliding scale — ranging from free enrollment to 20% off weekly tuition; has made day care/child care tips sheets available; and has sponsored educational seminars on day care/child care topics. Mirage has also implemented a targeted communications plan to enroll more women employees in the company’s in-house GED program (29 percent of Mirage’s female employees have less than a high school diploma), and subsidizes up to 50 percent of the cost of core college courses for all employees. In 1996, 4,677 employees were impacted by the child care discount and educational assistance programs. Thirty-one of the 48 1995 GED graduates (65%) were women.
