HOMESCHOOLING RESOURCES: A PATHFINDER

Homeschooling is the formal instruction of children in the home instead of the school. This pathfinder guides readers to useful sources of information about homeschooling, and is intended for any public library setting. The resources have been evaluated and chosen to answer basic questions and to serve as entry points into the greater body of literature on the topic. The pathfinder is organized so that readers may progress from general information sources to those that will answer more detailed questions. Those already somewhat familiar with the homeschooling literature may wish to bypass the first few sections.

Overview of Alternative Education
This guide outlines the different types of alternative schooling systems commonly used in the United States, providing short summary descriptions of each, and a directory of programs and organizations throughout the United States.

Personal Accounts and Narratives
Why homeschool? What's it like? What do kids think about their experience?:

Directories and Handbooks
"How-to" manuals and comprehensive information sources on a variety of topics:

Legal Issues and Curricula Guides

Books other than the ones included in this pathfinder can be located by consulting your library's computerized catalog. A librarian is available to assist you.

Magazine Articles

Articles can be found by searching Periodical Indexes, using keywords such as: "homeschooling", "home schooling", "home education", or "home-based education".

Available in computerized format at some public libraries, ERIC is the largest computerized resource for locating scholarly articles in field of education.
Note: an ERIC search does not retrieve full articles, but rather "citations" that direct you to the magazine in which the specific article is published. Consult your library's catalog to determine whether or not a specific magazine is in the library.

InfoTrac - available at most public libraries
Contains more "general interest" articles, some of which can be read on the computer. Others may be citations that will lead you to the actual magazine.

Internet Resources

Educational resources may be found by searching the World Wide Web. Below are several addresses to prominent homeschooling web pages. Access these sites by typing the URL (address) into a computer linked to the Web. A librarian can provide assistance if needed.

A comprehensive list of electronic and non-electronic resources, including newsgroups, listservs, books, vendors of homeschooling supplies, and links to other homeschooling websites.

Alliance for Parental Involvement in Education: http://www.croton.com/allpie
A shorter, but complementary list of links to other websites on Alternative Ed.

Organizations

The directories and "how to" books listed above contain more comprehensive lists of homeschooling associations. The following are commonly cited national organizations, but many local groups also provide information and support.
