This document consists of the two issues of this newsletter published during 1994. Issues contain articles and employment notices of interest to Montessori teachers and school administrators. Feature articles include: (1) "Meaningful In-Service Comes from Within Our Own School" (Anne Blickenstaff and Nancy Hildick), which discusses one school's inservice teacher programs in Spanish and botany; (2) "Starting at Age Three: A Full-Day Program for Three- to Six-Year-Old Children" (Rita Zener), which discusses the development of preschool children; and (3) "Grammar, Invention, and Writing Starters: Some Principles of Extension" (David Kahn), which describes creative writing activities for elementary school students. The major portion of the publications consists of employment notices for Montessori teachers and administrators throughout the United States and other nations, as well as notices advertising schools for sale and positions wanted. Meaningful In-Service Comes from Within Our Own School
by Anne Blickenstaff and Nancy Hillick

Our twenty-five-year-old school is comprised of eight primary classes guided by twelve Montessorians and support staff. Each year we plan three "in-service days" as professional growth opportunities. Until recently, these days were spent in traditional ways: attending a local or regional workshop, bringing Montessori speakers to the school, visiting other adobe schools, or just working in our classrooms. These situations provided growth opportunities for teachers, but too often they did not require active participation by staff or were dominated by administrative planning. We needed a change and a new approach, one that would encourage and acknowledge ourselves.

Three years ago, we began to focus on strengthening the bonds of our school community. As we began to work toward our goal, we reflected and re-evaluated our in-service time and made changes that would focus on the talents and strengths of individual staff members. The classroom experience of our guides spanned from two years to eighteen years. There was an untapped and rich resource for us to share!

Spanish Language

We began our new in-service time with the subject of Spanish language. Our selection was made because we are located on the West Coast of the United States, where students often meet Spanish-speaking people or dine on Mexican foods. Our internal resources were three Spanish-speaking teachers on staff. Each of these guides has a different background to contribute: One is a native-born Costa Rican, one has traveled in Spanish-speaking countries and is a student of the Spanish language, and one developed her skills through high school and college training. Together we planned an agenda to cover these areas:

- vocabulary
- children's literature
- customs and culture
- songs and dances
- a Mexican luncheon

The presenting teachers were asked to develop notes for vocabulary, words and music for songs, a bibliography, and short write-ups on customs and culture. The administration and office staff coordinated and supported the effort by developing a Spanish notebook for each teacher and planning the luncheon at a local restaurant.

On in-service day, we began with the presenters talking about the use of Spanish in their classes. As we moved through the morning, we listened to spoken language, practiced vocabulary, sang Spanish songs, and asked many, many questions. Participants could refer to their Spanish notebooks for reference and make additional notes. At our break time, we were treated to a display of children's books, artifacts, and classroom language materials the presenters had arranged. We ended this day by enjoying our Mexican lunch together.

After our beginning Spanish in-service, a Spanish dictionary was added to each classroom. Our support staff made Spanish-language labels that corresponded to the vocabulary being used in each class. We purchased UNICEF Mexican dolls and miniature doll families (dollhouse size) that became a part of the Spanish language study in the classrooms.

As the year progressed we used our additional in-service time to continue to learn more vocabulary, listen to our experienced teachers, practice songs and dances, and learn more about culture and customs. Additional notebook handouts were given at each meeting as teachers developed their ongoing reference books.

The evidence of Spanish language interest and practice throughout the school brought many positive results into our classrooms and has given our teachers an avenue for learning and sharing together.

Botany

Last year we chose botany as the subject of our in-service work together. Our selection was made because we had the opportunity to learn... from a “nature specialist” who had joined our staff for the year. Four staff members planned our fall in-service to cover these topics:

- presentation of winter gardening in planter boxes, bird feeders and food, natural habitats, Earth appreciation, relationships with nature
- a “walkabout” to identify plants and trees on our school property
- presentation of the Botany Cabinet and its extensions
- nature and planting songs
- plants from the classrooms
- children’s and adult books

All teachers were asked to participate by bringing a classroom plant, identified by botanical and/or common name and leaf shape. Teachers also brought books about nature and botany for a community display.

Our administrative and office staff developed botany folders for each participant’s information and study. The folders contained an agenda and extensive handouts:

- a list of indoor and outdoor plants of interest
- cultivation guide and monthly planting guide
- guides to bulbs and their planting
- conservation planting in the Northwest
- City of Portland—“Metropolitan Greenspaces”
- butterfly gardens
- planting from kitchen scraps
- lists of books for young gardeners
- bird feeding basics
- creating bird habitats
- The Audubon Warbler newsletter
- U.S. Dept. of Agriculture: Invite Birds to Your Home

- shapes of leaves and their margins
- definitions of leaves and the parts
- song sheets with words and music
- a map of our school grounds, detailing all plants, trees, and shrubs by name

The excitement of our staff was evident before and after this workshop. Flower and vegetable gardening in small spaces has become popular at school. We have joined together to develop a school-community pumpkin and sunflower patch, and this year we harvested pumpkins for each class at Halloween. Miniature scarecrows are seen in some gardens. Several classes have developed or expanded outside environments with more purpose and energy.

We have found that we have active gardeners among staff and parents, many of whom have devoted time to help enhance our environments. Some little brick patios and trellises have been built. The benefit of this in-service time together has brought beauty and enjoyment to children, parents, and staff at West Hills Montessori School.

We still attend workshops, but on a more selective basis, often sending only a few teachers who report back to the staff. When we invite guest Montessorians, we focus on our specific agenda, rather than adjusting to their specialties. We are doing more classroom observations within our school. As our contact and communication has increased, we have come to admire and appreciate what we can offer to each other. Throughout the school, people are open and receptive to sharing ideas and problem solving. We have made a positive step to refresh and enjoy our work together.

Anne Blickenstaff (AMI 1983) and Nancy Hildick (AMI 1980) are co-administrators of West Hills Montessori School in Portland, Oregon. In addition to administering the school, Anne is also a practicing teacher and Nancy is treasurer of NAMTA.

Starting at Age Three:
A Full-Day Program for Three- to Six-Year-Old Children

by Rita Zener

Rita Zener gave this presentation at the NAMTA public school conference entitled Keeping the Vision in Kansas City, Missouri, November 13, 1993.

At age three, a third embryonic period begins. The first was prenatal, for the formation of the body; the second was birth to age three, for the formation of the mind; and the third is from three to six years old. It is the period of the social embryo. The inner directive, the inherent potentiality to germinate human social behavior, begins to function in a new way. Now that many separate abilities have been formed, nature dictates that they become integrated in character development and in social behavior.

The environment plays a complementary role in shaping those inner directives so that children learn to be like the people of their culture. People in the environment must nurture children’s development. Children cannot develop themselves in a vacuum.

The environment children need to have prepared for them at home, at school, and in child care programs is a warm, secure place, a place where they are free to choose which developmental activity they will next pursue. Let's emphasize the safety factor. Children must feel safe from harm—both physical harm and psychological harm. The constructive spirit to guide development—Montessorians call it the will—is a fragile energy in very young children. It flies at the slightest hint of violence. The best of all worlds is a nurturing family plus three years, from age three to age six, in a Children's House.

In the years three to six, the absorbent mind will lead the child back over the same mental ground that it covered in the first period of development: language acquisition, movement, sensory perception, and order. It's a crucial period, for this time the sensitive periods will finish their work and hand over their acquisition to the children's conscious perception of themselves.

Burton White and others say that there are no big developmental changes during the years three to six. Montessori also talks about these years as a time for crystallizing the earlier gains. What was known unconsciously begins to become conscious for the child. That is, children begin to know what they know. In the repetition of the developmental cycle, there is the possibility to correct deviations in development from the earlier period. If deviations are not cured in these early years, they increase in number and in strength.

I'd like to pause here to point out a commonly held misconception. Most adults believe that children three to six should already know how to behave socially. I hear phrases like these: "You know better than that," "Find something to do," "Be good now," or "She just wants attention." Those phrases imply to me that some adult expectation is there. It doesn't sound like an appropriate expectation for a person who is still in the embryonic stage socially.

Expectations set up a fertile field for disappointment. When we are disappointed in a child, she feels it. I would suggest an alternative view of the three- to six-year-old. The absorbent mind takes in everything. It's like a camera. Carrying out the analogy, the camera owner sends the film to be developed. Children in these years show inconsistencies with what they know, inconsistencies that could come from the times that the film is just out somewhere being developed! Notice, too, that an embryo doesn't look much like a baby. So think about it. Three-to-six-year-olds are social embryos. That makes a six-year-old a social "newborn." If we look at them this way, we don't expect too much too soon.

Montessori is very clear about what behaviors are the true behaviors of human beings. There are four characteristics of normalized human behavior:

- love of work
- concentration on an activity
- self-discipline to carry through an activity
- sociality in the most profound sense of being a productive member of one's group.

Three-year-olds are especially obvious in all four characteristics. Love of work is characterized by a serenity and joy in what they are doing. At an early point in the year, six, eight, or ten weeks into the fall school experience for them, the majority of them are showing little signs of big accomplishments in learning to do uniquely human work.

Last week I was observing a three-year-old girl, Lisa. Lisa spread out a folding cloth on the table. She took the lower left corner very carefully in a pincher grip. She took the lower right corner a little less carefully between several fingers. She lifted the left corner up and placed it exactly over the top left corner of the cloth. Her whole body stretched in the chair as she reached up to the top of the cloth. The other hand lifted the right side, but there was no particular focus to that movement. Lisa released the top left corner and a shiver of delight went through her body. She turned her attention to the right side of the cloth and laid it just as carefully at the upper right corner. Then she looked at a little puck er that was left in the middle. She smoothed it out and sat back in her chair.

It was a little sign of a big accomplishment. She was finding a profound pleasure in her work. According to Montessori, this is high-level existence for human beings. By observing children's spontaneous moments of human behavior, we learn which are the typical normal behaviors for human beings. Lisa showed the other three characteristics as well:

- Her concentration was intense.
- Her self-discipline became apparent as she continued through the stack of cloths to fold.
- Her work held social implications.

Lisa didn't fold the cloth according to the lines drawn on them to make a variety of folds, but no one interrupted her to tell her so. Everyone there knew that Lisa was doing the greatest thing of all for society. Hers was a truly social act of creating another human being who would have a uniquely human nature. The adults and children there were allowing her to complete her work cycle with no interruptions. The teacher and I took time to admire her spirit from afar, and the whole room took on an extra glow for us.

When Lisa completed the folding, she wasn't finished with the work cycle. She stood up, used both hands to push her chair up under the table, picked up the tray full of cloths, and made her way across the room. She walked around a rug and got to the shelf. As she turned around after putting the tray on the shelf, a smile was on her face, and she went to talk to her friend, Jasmine. It was another type of social interaction as she moved into the last phase of the work cycle, which is that of returning to a state of repose with feelings of satisfaction.

It was a typical and complete normalizing event. All four characteristics of human behavior were present. As time goes on, more skills, more abilities, and more ways of being social will open up for Lisa. But the basic ingredients sought for by the inner directives of the child stay the same.

In the District of Columbia Public Schools, we are very lucky to be among many early childhood programs which are all-day programs. Until three years ago, our small Montessori program was not. It followed the model many of you are familiar with. Thirty children, ages three to six, attended all morning, and only the five- and six-year-olds stayed for the afternoon. It was a good program in many ways, but the needs of the children were not being served sufficiently. We moved toward an all-day program for all children. The day is now from 8:45 a.m. to 3:15 p.m. with some children coming at 7:00 a.m. and staying until 6:00 p.m. in extended care. I have programs in six buildings this year. We have grown to sixteen primary classes.

We went gradually into the change to give children and teachers a chance to change their concepts about working together in a harmonious way all day. Naturally there were changes in the results. Principals have commented to me that the presence of the little ones is changing the climate of the school to being more gentle. The changes I will share with you are in the class size, the work periods, lunch, and the question of sleep.

The classes now average twenty-three children who stay through the regular school day. The minimum group size is twenty, and the maximum is twenty-five.

The work is more integrated. There is more practical life because more children are there for more hours. We are trying to use practical life in the same context as the early Montessori schools. We want the children to learn life-long habits of cleanliness and order. We still have individual exercises, individually presented and individually coached, through the three years. However, we are trying to put them in a group context of living out each day.

For example, we encourage children first to clean and beautify the place where they are going to work that morning. Greetings are made to one another among activities like dusting and waxing a table, arranging flowers, watering plants, and feeding the animals. By the time all the children have arrived, many children have completed two easy exercises of practical life and turn spontaneously to other work.

With all the children there all day, there is much more cultural work for the three- and four-year-olds. Their enthusiasm in turn stimulates the older children to move on. Long afternoon group lessons are replaced with more age-appropriate short lessons and hands-on materials. Everyone hears the vocabulary for everything in a natural way, and all see the advanced work being done. There are more conversations with cultural content and more language work across all three ages. Teachers say that children who have been kept home during the afternoons are far behind the others.

Lunch with the whole group is much slower, and we try to keep it more relaxed and slow-paced. The needs of the smaller ones for getting ready, carrying trays, etc., make everybody slow down. The older ones help themselves and help the younger ones too. There is a family feeling of everyone belonging. Weak and strong are both valued and respected.

Dr. Montessori wanted each child to take responsibility for getting the sleep that he or she needs. We do not force the children to sleep just as we do not force other matters. Each group has worked out a cooperative way for the dedicated nappers to get to sleep. Those who don’t sleep are up and work around the sleepers.

In closing, let’s emphasize the importance of the third year in Montessori for the two- to six-year-olds. The social embryo is almost mature. The older children are the models and masters of the group. The younger ones admire them. The younger ones’ needs stimulate compassion, tolerance, and sympathy in the older ones. There is daily opportunity to practice social behavior. Intellectual gains are often impressive as well. Budding musicians are there. The artist with a hand that obeys, an eye that sees, and a heart that feels is being born. Intuition plays a big part in beginning reading and math. Children are still looking for various cues to get the meaning of symbols. Intuition, which is being formed in these years, is an excellent tool for collecting the hunches and making decisions.

A new aspect of humanity is born at age six, and the typical human behaviors of love of work, concentration, self-discipline, and true sociability are formed.

Grammar, Invention, and Writing Starters: Some Principles of Extension
by David Kahn

Writing is the synthesis of all experience in the classroom. Once children learn to write, their need for expression allows for the integration of knowledge. The power of the fact inspires writing. The power of writing integrates facts. Writing and learning form an inseparable partnership.

Writing invention which comes from the child’s spontaneous activity is much more important than the invention which is stimulated by the teacher. The writing “starters” proposed in this article are geared for independent writers and readers whenever they emerge in the Children’s House and Elementary. Creative writing starters provide for the teacher ideas which can be woven into the choice and independent learning structure of the Montessori environment. In contrast, commercial writing starters, which usually have little to do with the child’s classroom experience, often intrude on the classroom with cutey fantasy scenarios. The Montessori teacher can integrate writing and learning only when the starters are derived directly from the key Montessori materials and experiences.

Creative Writing Extensions: Grammar

After the exercises in the functions of the parts of speech, grammar is reinforced often through the use of the card materials and grammar boxes and commands. Sometimes, however, little is done to integrate composition and the use of grammar. When children write with grammar made conscious, they are developing a synthesis of the grammar function through writing.

In the extensions below, level one focuses on simple functions of the parts of speech while level two distinguishes the different kinds of one part of speech. Starters can be treated as informal ideas suggested by the directress or as printed cards from which the student chooses.

Nouns and Adjectives: Level One

1. Using the alphabet, make up names of imaginary animals. Using only nouns and adjectives, describe where the animal lives and what it eats. Draw a picture for each animal. All nouns must begin with the same letter as the animal’s name. Do at least five animals.
   - A is for Alpok.
   - Lives in attics.
   - Eats armchairs, army ants, Aunt Alice, aprons, etc.

2. Suppose you were one of the first humans. Make up a new set of nouns naming everything in the universe.
   - blackboard = gigopip
   - chalk = al

3. Write a riddle poem (ten-word poem) using only adjectives and nouns.
   - red
   - hot
   - dogs
   - winter
   - day
   - ketchup
   - mustard
   - good
   - finished
   - more

4. Take the logical concordance game and combine nouns and adjectives so that they are funny. Symbolize the noun and adjective.
   - exploded flower
   - withered cane
   - curved candle
   - hot desk

5. Think of as many adjectives as you can for each body part. Think of not only the usual adjectives but of adjectives which compare the body part (noun) to other more descriptive objects. They can be funny.
   - Face
     - pancake
     - potato
     - curved
     - nose
     - flat
     - turned-up
     - corkscrew
     - banana
6. Take a nursery rhyme and change all the nouns to different or made-up nouns. Take a second nursery rhyme and change all the adjectives. Keep the rhyme even without reason.
   The bloomer in the bell
   The bloomer in the bell
   High ho the bello
   The bloomer in the bell

7. Write a poem in free verse with a new color for every line. Underline all the adjectives.

8. Use sound noises to make adjectives. Compose a story using sound adjectives:
   the gr gr gr tiger
   the choo choo choo train

9. Invent a compliment using only adjectives and starting with “You . . .”
   You sarcastic, perspicacious, steadfast, doted-on, sweet-smelling . . .

Adjectives: Level Two

1. Take any poem and circle the adjectives which the poet has selected. Are the adjectives mostly descriptive, quantitative, possessive, or demonstrative?

2. Make a list of your own very special belongings using a possessive adjective to indicate ownership. Underline the possessive adjective.
   my Barbie doll
   my electric train
   Make a list of another family member’s belongings using the possessive adjective once again.
   her doll house
   her necklace

3. Make three columns on your paper with headings reading first person, second person, and third person. Classify the possessive adjectives by writing them under the appropriate heading.

4. Write a decapentum using descriptive adjectives and nouns only peaceful good short bacon
   eggs hot breakfast hungry gone
   full

5. Write a short verse to the tune of “The Twelve Days of Christmas” using quantitative adjectives with the following suggested phrasing. Underline the quantitative adjectives as you compose your song.
   On the first day of school my teacher gave to me a buzzing bumble bee. On the second day of school my teacher gave to me two pencil holders and a buzzing bumble bee.

6. Compose a nonsense animal story using descriptive adjectives beginning with the same letter as the name of the animal being described. Underline the descriptive adjectives.
   The zippy zebra went to visit the buzzy bunny.

Verbs: Level One

1. Make up animal sounds to go with animal names:
   Tiger: gr gr gr
   Kitty: aa o o o o o
   Dog: yap yap yap yap

2. Using a dictionary of synonyms, make an association poem of verbs trying to create a mood of action. You can repeat verbs.
   Poke prod push shove throw poke
   heave HEAVE HEAVE

3. Write a series of sounds furniture makes. Place symbols over nouns and verbs.
   A rocking chair squeaks.
   A wicker rocker creaks.
   A crib cracks.
   A clock knocks
   A vase bru-c-a-cras.

4. Write a story about a world where people can only talk in traffic signs using verbs.
   One day Timmy told his mom, “Stop.” His mom was upset and replied, “Heard right of way.” However, Timmy still said, “Stop.” Make a separate list of verb signs.

5. Write a poem describing table manners using a verb and a direct object that both begin with the same letter.
   Don’t skip the slaw
   Don’t chomp the celery
   Don’t swill the sauce.

6. Think of verbs which the time of day suggests. Start with morning and write about a typical day.
   get up
eat breakfast ride to school
take off boots start work

Once children learn to write, their need for expression allows for the integration of knowledge.
. . . Grammar, Invention, and Writing Starters

7. Take a part of the body and think of verbs that go with it.
   hand swipes
   nose runs
8. Think of very dramatic pairs of nouns and verbs that start with the same letter.
   staples sing
   lemon love
   snakes slither
9. Make movable cards researching instruments and their sounds. Use symbols for nouns and verbs. (This could be done with a recording of instruments of the orchestra.)
   The trumpet says tata tata
   The flute says p-hi-pet
   The drum says ra-pa-pom
10. Think of verbs which create a strong image with a noun in comparison.
   Dance like the wind.
   Scream like a siren.
   Eat like a garbage truck.

Adverbs: Level One

1. Write a list of "commands of manner" that you would give to your children when you are a parent. Try to use a verb and adverb that begin with the same letter.
   Dress daintily.
   Walk swiftly.
   Talk tastefully.
2. Ask at least five questions of somebody wiser who can only answer in adverbs. Place symbols for the verbs and adverbs.
   "Where should I put my lunch?"
   "Slowly, slowly, happily, and greedily."
   "What can I do on my shoes?"
   "Cathily, precisely, completely."

Adverbs: Level Two

1. Using classroom actions, write sentences using adverbs of manner and place. Underline the adverbs.
   Meg writes cursive happily.
2. Using verbs which describe functions of the body (breathe, eat, sleep, etc.), compose sentences using adverbs of manner. Underline the adverbs.
   Breathe softly or else you will be heard.
3. Make up sentences about the weather using adverbs of time. Underline the adverbs.
   Snow is raining.
   It snowed yesterday.
4. Write a decapoeam using only verbs and adverbs.

5. Take a map of the United States and describe a trip using adverbs of place. Underline the adverbs.
   We went there to Tampa, Florida by car.
   Then we flew back to Chicago.
6. Use adverbs of manner to describe the actions of your friends. Underline the adverbs.
   Susan humbly eats her brown bag lunch.

Pronouns: Level Two

1. Make three columns on your paper and write the headings: first person, second person, and third person. Arrange personal pronouns listed on control chart in their appropriate columns.
2. Make up sentences using each of the interrogative pronouns. Underline the interrogative pronouns.
3. You are a detective. Using the interrogative pronouns, write an imaginary interview with a suspicious character. Underline the interrogative:
   Who are you? Where were you when Mrs. J. was eating dinner on April 22, 1994, at 7:00 pm?

Prepositions: Level Two

1. You have a universal travel machine that can take you wherever you want to go: through the air, underground, under water, into icebergs. Describe your trip using as many prepositions of relation as you can.
   Underline the prepositions.
   First, the universal travel machine took me in a volcano. I was kept in perfect comfort. Then we traveled around Mars, past Jupiter, close Saturn, and close Pluto.

Writing Extensions for History and Science

Older children (around five, six, and seven) have very fluid and active imaginations which allow them to explore through time and space in

continued

history and science. With the mind’s eye they can assume the perspective of almost any object, animal, or plant, using the “magic if.”

What if the sun refused to shine, what if there was no water, what if you were a trilobite, what if there were no Montessori schools? Each of the “magic if” options provides a jumping off point into the unlimited possibilities of subject matter.

“A day in the life” is another starter approach. How would it be if you assumed the form of a mammal? What would your day be like? Again, the writing stimulus directly appeals to the imagination, while giving the child a choice as to what particular imaginative voyage she wishes to take. The child can invent her own starter by simply assuming the point of view of the science or history facts she is studying.

Point of View Starters
1. I Was There with the Big Bang
2. If I Were a Protozoa . . . (any rock, animal, or plant)
3. A Day in the Life of Homo Habits
4. Discovering Fire for the First Time
5. A Day in the Life of a Walking Fish Moving from Sea to Land
6. Making a Cosmic Calendar
7. A Creation Poem
8. What Happened to Dinosaurs? (based on prevailing theories)
9. Inventing a Weapon
10. A Day in the Life of Australopithecus
11. Set Free by Words (human discovery of words)
12. Fantastic Voyage (microscopic voyage into the human body)
13. Early Human Meets the Ice Age
14. Naming the Things in the Universe (the first names)
15. Journey to the Center of the Earth (who and what will you take?)
16. Farmer Meets Hunter

Jigsaw Starters and Needs of Humans

Using the Needs of Humans exercises, one can put together a collective point of view of any country or any history by simply giving each child in a group one command to study and research. The culminating timeline or cultural fair (a booth with handmade art and exhibits designed by the children along with their written work) means that the jigsaw puzzle is completed by the collaborative work of the children.

Jigsaw Starters on the Northmen
1. Transportation
   Give different kinds of transportation on both land and water. Draw or trace one representative vehicle for land and one for water.
2. Housing
   What were the houses like? (Floor plan, number of rooms, building material, builders, etc.)
3. Clothing
   Draw and describe the kinds of clothing worn by the Northmen. What were the chief sources of material? What were the differences between men’s and women’s dress? How did the rich and powerful Northmen dress as compared with the common Northmen?
4. Defense
   What were the different means of defense for land and water? Who had the power of the arms? How did the arms affect dress? Draw pictures or trace and label parts of weapons.
5. Communication
   How did the Northmen communicate? What tools did they use for communication?
6. Religion
   Research the religion of the Northmen and list important ideas and beliefs. List their gods.
7. Nourishment
   How did the Northmen obtain and prepare their food? Describe their kitchens and the utensils they used for eating and cooking. What kinds of food did they eat? What kinds of food did the rich and powerful Northmen eat as compared with the foods eaten by the common Northmen?
Grammar, Invention, and Writing Starters

8. Art

How were art and music used in the daily lives of the Northmen? Who were the great artists and musicians of their time? What kind of music did they create? What kinds of instruments did they play? What kinds of tools did their artists use?

Point of view starters can be mixed with the needs of humans to create an interesting set of new ideas.

1. Describe the needs of humans for the future. Provide drawings of some inventions to help meet these needs (food, transportation, housing, clothing, and defense).

2. What if there were
   - no food?
   - no transportation?
   - no defense?
   - no housing?
   Create a scenario as if such a scarcity could occur overnight.

3. You are flying over an aborigine tribe in Australia, and you make a crash landing. How do you perceive this culture relative to your need for housing, defense, food, clothing, etc.?

4. You elect to live on a distant island. You will be responsible for maintaining your own needs. Explain what you do and in what sequence.

5. You choose to live on a different planet. How would you meet your needs en route? How would you resolve your needs on a new planet?

Writing Stories

There is a sensitive period for story-writing around five and six. When given the key elements of plot, children can write very uplifting and exciting fictions. Here is how one might create a sensitivity to plot elements—an idea borrowed from Aurend Heins, a children’s playwright:

In the rhyme “Little Miss Muffet,” who is the main character, Miss Muffet or the Spider? (through a show of hands, children might indicate a split on the matter.) Well, the answer is both.

Let’s act out a play where the spider is the main character. The spider is a mother spider with three babies. The mother wishes to take Miss Muffet’s food away for her babies. The babies are very hungry. (The children act out the spider’s repeated attempt to steal the food, and Miss Muffet finally gives the food away, misrepresenting to her mother that she really ate her curds and whey.)

Now let’s act out Miss Muffet as the main character. Here, Miss Muffet is sitting on her tuffet and a spider comes alongside her. She tries to eat her food, but the spider’s presence proves to be too much.

At the end of each enactment, the directress might ask the following questions:

   - Who is the main character?
   - What does he or she want?
   - What happens that prevents the main character from getting what he or she wants?
   - How is the ending satisfying?

The above four questions are generative questions for any story. If children have a sense of the main character and of the emerging plot which is heightened by what the character needs to overcome in order to get something, then they might be able to create stories which can also be interpreted through creative dramatics or a playlet. Again the point of view of the main character challenges the imagination, and the child usually can invent something entirely individual and original.

Conclusion

These are few ideas for “starters.” Remember that the successful starter emerges from the spontaneous mind of the child spurred by indirect suggestions which are preconceived as shown above. The more the child participates in inventing his own starter idea, the more the writing becomes the child’s work and not an assignment from the adult.
