This document consists of a compilation of the 14 issues of "The Esalen Catalog" published during the 5-year period 1993-1997. An earlier compilation (ED 347 118 in the ERIC database) covering the 30-year period 1962-1992, describes the geographic location, history, and purpose of the Esalen Institute. Esalen provides a forum in which the various exponents of the human potential movement can present ideas in weekend- and week-long seminars and workshops. "The Esalen Catalog" provides a full description of these offerings, including brief biographies of the teachers and leaders of the sessions and, occasionally, essays on Esalen and on issues in the field. Because Esalen has been in continuous operation since the beginning of the human potential movement, its catalog may be regarded as an historical record of the movement's major schools of thought and major "gurus". Examples of some of the many topics represented in the catalog during this period are (alphabetically): Acupressure, Biodrama, Biofeedback, Breema Bodywork, Buddhism, Chakra Integration, Conscious/Lucid Dreaming, Cortical Reeducation, Craniosacral Massage, Drumming, Dzogchen, Enneagrams, Feldenkrais Method, Gestalt Practice, Hatha Yoga, Herbology, Holoenergetics, Holotropic Breathwork, Hypnosis, Integrative Body Practice, Ishta Yoga, Kundalini Yoga, Life Energy Process, Lomi Bodywork, Massage, Meditation, Mysticism, Psychodrama, Qigong, Raku, Reflexology, Rubenfeld Synergy Method, Sensory Awareness, Shamanism, Somatics, SomatoEmotional Release, Sufism, Tai Chi, Tantric Yoga, Tao Mentoring, Therapeutic Touch, Vipassana Meditation, Vision Painting, Yoga, Zen, and Zero Balancing. I. Introduction

The Esalen Catalog lists the seminars, workshops, and other sessions that are held at the Esalen Institute, Big Sur, California. It is arranged in the form of a catalog from which prospective participants can select (from the current catalog) the group most appropriate for their needs. Each session usually has a paragraph description, written by the group leader, that describes its content and aims. At the back of the catalog, biographic information about each group leader is provided, further helping to define session content and approach.

Early catalogs were brief, but later catalogs have included a wide variety of articles on major figures and schools of thought. Given the rich content of the catalogs (course descriptions, group leader vitae, and substantive articles) and given Esalen’s on-going central position in the “Human Potential Movement,” it is not hard to see that The Esalen Catalog is, in effect, a kind of moving edge history of the major human potential concerns during the last thirty-five years. It was, of course, never designed to perform such a function, but via the “incremental” approach and the passage of time, it now amounts to an unexpected treasure trove of historical source material.

This compilation of fourteen (14) catalogs covers the five-year period 1993-1997. An earlier compilation (ED 347 118 in the ERIC database) covered the entire 30-year period from Esalen’s beginnings in 1962 through 1992, and included 102 total issues. It was done as a Friends of Esalen project to help celebrate Esalen’s thirtieth anniversary in 1992. Because no one had thought to collect The Esalen Catalog in the beginning, the first comprehensive compilation took two years to accomplish and involved rummaging in many basements and attics. Rather than wait so long again and perhaps face similar problems, it was decided to aim for supplemental compilations every five to ten years. This is the first such supplemental compilation. It adds 14 catalogs to the previous 102 for a grand total of 116 catalogs through 1997 (covering classes up to February 1998).

Acknowledgments

The fourteen (14) issues of The Esalen Catalog included here were assembled and to the U.S. Department of Education’s Educational Resources Information Center (ERIC) through the efforts of Peter Friedberg, current co-editor of the Catalog, (along with Margaret Livingston).

The Introduction, Collation Report, ERIC cataloging/indexing/abstracting, and preparation for filming were done by Ted Brandhorst, of the ERIC Processing and Reference Facility (who performed the same functions for the 1962-1992 compilation).

The Esalen Institute is located on a scenic portion of the California Coast, about 40 miles south of the Monterey Peninsula. The location contains natural cliffside hot springs from which mineral water flows into the sea. The springs were used in early times by the now extinct Esselen Indian tribe (from which Esalen derives its name) and this usage has continued to this day. Esalen Institute was founded in the early 1960's by Michael Murphy (whose family owns the land on which it stands) and Richard Price. Its purpose from the beginning has been to provide a forum, far from the distractions of urban life (e.g. no radio, television, newspapers, etc.), where the various exponents of the human potential movement could present their ideas in weekend-long and week-long seminars and workshops. Esalen espouses no particular ideology of its own, but rather provides an ecletic forum for all schools of thought that identify with the phrase "Human Potential." In its own words, Esalen is a "center for experimental education," designed "to explore work in the humanities and sciences that promotes human values and potentials. Its activities consist of public seminars, residential work-study programs, invitational conferences, research, and semi-autonomous projects." Early major figures at Esalen were the psychologist Abraham Maslow and the Gestalt therapist Fritz Perls, but many other famous individuals have taught there. "The Esalen Catalog" describes the workshops and other kinds of sessions in which Esalen attendees may participate. It has been issued since 1962. Because Esalen has been the bellwether and longest running organization of its type, "The Esalen Catalog" in its entirety may be regarded as a running historical record covering 30 years of the major concerns and directions of the human potential movement. This document consists of a compilation of all extant editions (some 102 issues) of "The Esalen Catalog", 1962-1992. Examples of some of the specialties cited in this catalog provide a brief indication of Esalen's typical offerings: Acupressure/Acupuncture, Aikido, Alexander Technique, Arica, Biofeedback, Bodywork, Channeling, Cortical Reeducation, Encounter, Est, Feldenkrais, Gestalt Therapy, Holistic Health, Humanistic Psychology, Hypnotism, Integrative Body Psychotherapy, Leonard Energy Training, Life Energy Process, Lomi School of Bodywork, Massage, Meditation, Movement Therapy, Polarity, Psychodrama, Psychosynthesis, Radix, Reichian Bodywork, Ridhwan, Rolfing, Rubenfeld Synergy Method, Sensory Awareness, Tai Chi, T-Groups, Vipassana Meditation, Yoga, Zen Buddhism, and Zero Balancing. We are the mirror as well as the face in it.
We are tasting the taste this minute of eternity.
We are pain and what cures pain.
We are the sweet cold water, and the jar that pours.

—Rumi
In this catalog we remember and celebrate Janet Lederman, who left a permanent legacy in the Esalen community. For 19 years, from 1973 until 1992, she developed Esalen's Gazebo School for pre-school children, and for several decades she influenced teachers in many parts of the world. In recent years, the Gazebo School has attracted educators from across the United States and abroad. Many of us feel her presence still, and no one who worked with her will ever forget her.

—Michael Murphy
"A small child who is able to attend to what she/he is doing with awareness will be a successful learner. We teach paying attention by paying attention to what the child can do and expanding on that."

"When experience precedes cognitive learning, resourcefulness develops. Gazebo School Park is designed to maximize the full use of the child's growing body and unfolding intelligence."

"A toddler cannot fail, be too slow, too impatient, too sloppy, too active in the Gazebo School Park. Some children learn by exploring everything, some by staying in one area. Some learn by touching all objects, others by building around them familiar items. Some are more interested in pouring water, others in slopping it. And all of these proclivities balance and change in time."

Janet's Philosophy

In their early years, children learn basic concepts through their bodies—up-down, in-out, over-under, hot-cold. An understanding of boundaries, of territory, of struggle, and the mastery of skills such as riding tricycles, watering, planting, and climbing are all important for a young child. Children, like their parents, are busy in the production of their lives. Making mistakes, dealing with frustration, problem-solving, feeling success and moving on, or experiencing failure and moving on are daily experiences. Each child goes to work/play encountering the ups and downs of living and learning about balance.

Early childhood at Gazebo is a place to get dirty, to get clean, to get dirty again. Some skills are explicit, others hidden, awaiting discovery. Imagination is allowed to flourish with passion and humor. Children learn how to have ideas and make dreams come to life. Struggles become challenges. There is support for dreaming and support for doing. We do not hurry the child.

The physical setting of Gazebo School Park is in itself a major teaching tool. Minute by minute the child is obliged to master the environment. Moving through the park she/he must pay attention as the earth changes textures and grades, as flowers and vegetables spring up where once there was open space. Science and math are everywhere, chemistry is in the wet sand box, at the worm farm, in the kitchen. The whole child is always involved in social, academic, and physical skills. Hands on, heads on, feet on, arms, legs, everything on, everything goes—learning through a full-body experience.

The children and staff of Gazebo design and develop Gazebo with their bodies, their minds, their feelings, their spirits, their imagination, and their hearts.
"By maximizing each child’s unique learning style and pace, and using the environment with its demands and differences, the young child cultivates self-confidence, self-esteem, and self-discipline in their most basic forms. When a child has these basics, a natural cooperative spirit develops. Usually that spirit begins to emerge when the child is between four and five years old.”

—Janet Lederman, “To Play's the Thing”

Today a new cycle of life begins. At Janet Lederman’s request, Gazebo School Park continues under the direction of Eduardo Eizner and Ann Seifert. The Gazebo School Park will continue to serve staff children, community children, and the children of guests taking workshops at Esalen. There is also a three-month internship program for those students who wish to have intense exposure to life at the Gazebo School Park and its unique educational resources.

Janet Lederman received her Associates Degree in Fine Arts from Los Angeles City College in 1950. She earned her Bachelors Degree in Education Administration in 1960 from Los Angeles State College.

Janet was a member of the Los Angeles Board of Education from 1956-1967, co-directed the Gestalt Institute of Canada with Dr. F.S. Perls from 1969-1971, and served as vice-president, director, and general manager of Esalen Institute.

Big House Programs
We are now scheduling workshops in our newly renovated Big House. This facility is available to groups of individuals who work together and would like to design their own Esalen program, drawing on our leaders and other resources. Ten bedrooms accommodating up to twenty individuals, ten bathrooms, a kitchen, dining room, and living room make it possible to house group members together, thereby enhancing the retreat environment.

To schedule or discuss possible formats, please contact Pat Le Wine, program coordinator at (408) 667-3038.

Friends of Esalen Quarterly Newsletter
The Friends of Esalen Newsletter is for and about the extended Esalen community. Published quarterly, it covers current events and other items not covered in the Catalog.

Through membership contributions, Friends of Esalen support the scholarship fund, the Friends' network and newsletter, and other Esalen projects. In return, the Friends receive the Esalen Catalog three times a year, the quarterly Friends' Newsletter, and opportunities to appear in the Friends' Network Directory and to attend the annual Friends' Workshop.

Esalen's Friends include people in 22 countries, from Big Sur to Nepal. If you would like to join us, please complete and return the membership form on page 54.

A Special Opportunity for Friends of Esalen
To celebrate the publication of Michael Murphy's book, The Future of the Body, we are offering an opportunity to become a Friend of Esalen for a gift of $100 or more and receive an autographed copy of Michael's book with the inscription of your choice. You will also receive the Friends' Newsletter, Directory, and the opportunity to attend the yearly Friends' Workshop. Please send your check to Friends of Esalen, Esalen Institute, Big Sur, CA 93920.

Invitational Conferences
In its continuing commitment to the fields of education, religion, philosophy, and the physical and behavioral sciences, Esalen regularly sponsors invitational conferences that bring together experts who share their research and points of inquiry. As host, Esalen covers room and board expenses for participants as a way of advancing these particular studies. These are invitational conferences only and are not open to the public. Currently scheduled programs and their conveners are listed here.

April 11-16
Art & Apocalypse
Nine Wise & Liz Thompson
What is the artist's function at this time in history, a time when the human species questions its own survival? What role do artists play in shaping society and unfolding the future?

Because of their interest in art and social change, a group of visual artists, performing artists, filmmakers, writers, producers, politicians, and historian/futurists have been invited to discuss the complex issues facing artists today. In addition to brainstorming about theoretical issues, the group will show each other their work, discuss the creative process, and explore the place artists have in a changing society.

May 2-7
New Directions in Meditation Research V
Cosponsored by Esalen Institute, the Institute of Noetic Sciences & Marius Robinson
The objective of this conference will be to identify critical issues involved both in the study of meditation and its use in clinical or educational contexts. Conference participants will also discuss methodologies for meditation research; explore the interface between meditation traditions and the disciplines of science, psychology, and human development; and explore the potential significance of meditation and meditation research for both the individual and society.

June 13-18
Ecopsychology: Theory & Practice
Theodore Roszak, Mary Gomes & Allan Kanner
This conference will focus on the following assumption: psychology needs ecology; ecology needs psychology. How can the expertise of environmentalists be gracefully synthesized with the sensitivity of therapists?

June 27-July 2
The Esalen Institute Russian-American Exchange Center
The Center will bring together political experts from the United States, Japan, Russia, and other European countries to discuss how the rapidly changing political situation has affected all of us.
Ways of Being at Esalen

There are various ways to experience Esalen, ranging from an overnight visit to a long-term stay as a seminarian. The weekend and five-day workshops described throughout the catalog are the standard route for coming to Esalen and learning the methods of personal growth available here. The Experiencing Esalen workshops, scheduled periodically, offer an introduction to practices such as gestalt, massage, sensory awareness, and meditation. From such a sampling, participants can then choose those approaches they are most attracted to and pursue them in subsequent seminars.

Another way of being at Esalen which allows a much greater involvement with the place and its community at a lower expense is the Work Study Program, described more fully elsewhere in this section and on pages 52-53. For those who wish an extended stay of a month or more, there are frequent long-term programs which involve didactic seminars or professional trainings as well as experiential workshops. Please see Special Programs.

With the completion of the Big House renovation in June, we can now accommodate groups of people in a single facility. The Big House provides meeting rooms, ten bedrooms with twenty beds, a kitchen for meal preparation, and a dining area. We invite people who work together on a regular basis, be they corporate, government, legal, artistic, or familial groups, to design a workshop according to their own needs, using Esalen resources and catalog faculty. Participants also have access to other Esalen amenities, including massage, the hot springs, swimming pool, and bookstore. Reservations for the Big House must be made at least nine months in advance. For more information contact Pat LeWine, (408) 667-3026.

Finally, there are other events that enrich life at Esalen. There are occasional forums in which writers and thinkers, both visiting and resident, share their ideas with the community. On Wednesday nights there may be lectures, films, dance performances, or other forms of entertainment. Body work of various kinds is available by appointment with individual practitioners. And, there is a community event schedule that is offered; please check the bulletin board for details when you arrive.

Ongoing Residence Program

Offered beginning mid-September and ending mid-June, the Ongoing Residential Program is designed for those who would like to have time and space in the Esalen environment for an intensive workshop program over a long term. A minimum stay is 26 days (four "weeks" and three weekends).

Participants may select any of the five-day workshops offered during their stay with weekends free to enjoy room and board. Weekend workshops are available at special prices. Occasionally workshops are canceled, so second choices are advised.

The cost is $3045 per 26-day-period for standard accommodations and $2400 for bunk bed rooms.
Room and Board

Occasionally, when beds aren't needed for seminarians, room and board is available. This gives visitors the opportunity to enjoy the grounds, the baths, and massage without participating in a workshop. Accommodations are standard (2 or 3 per room) or bunk bed (4 or more per room). Not all rooms have private baths. Room and board rates include dinner on the day of arrival and breakfast and lunch on the following day. We require full payment at the time of reservation. This payment is not refundable or transferable.

For a room and board stay between Sunday and Thursday, please call us no sooner than the Thursday before for room availability. For a Friday or Saturday night stay, please call no sooner than the Sunday before. The following rates are per person, per day.

The Gazebo School Park

Early Childhood Program

The Gazebo School Park is a unique educational experience for children 1 to 6 years. It is open year-round and has an average of 15 to 20 children in attendance each day. The Early Childhood Program is available to seminarians who would like childcare at Esalen. Child care is provided during workshop hours only. Daytime activities for the children include gardening, pony rides, learning about animal care, exploring nature, a real boat, the magic castle, and an Indian tepee. Evenings are spent in the Gazebo Farmhouse with a teacher engaged in activities that are age appropriate, such as reading, learning and playing with the computer, baking, arts and crafts, or building-block play.

Reservations should be made a least a month in advance. Call the Gazebo Farmhouse, (408) 667-3026, for more information and reservations.

The Hot Springs at Esalen

We would like those people who are planning their first visit to Esalen to know that swimsuits are optional, and nudity common, in the hot springs, massage area, and swimming pool. We encourage each individual to choose what is most comfortable, either wearing a swimsuit or not, and emphasize that the environment at Esalen is one of personal sanctuary and respect for the human body.

Disabled Access

Esalen now provides a means of transportation to the baths for those with physical limitations which prevent them from walking. A vehicle was purchased, in part, through the generosity of Dr. John W. Harris who believes, as we do, that those among us who are aged, infirm, or handicapped should also be able to enjoy the hot springs.

If you are disabled and would like to plan a visit to Esalen or participate in a workshop, please give the office as much advance notice as possible. While disabled access to some parts of the property is difficult, with enough planning, arrangements can be made for access to most of our facilities.

The Work Study Program

The Work Study Program is an intensive work-oriented program for individuals who want to make a directed, personal commitment to self-exploration and growth and a contribution to the Esalen community. Participants can enroll in the general interest track, which gives an overview of several disciplines, or choose a more specific course of study from the focused track, such as gestalt, meditation, Reichian work, massage.

Information regarding special interest sections may be obtained by writing Bette Dingman, c/o Esalen. For a full description of the Work Study Program, please turn to pages 52-53.

Accreditation

Many formal educational institutions recognize the time spent at Esalen as being worthy of credit in their own curriculum; check with your university or college for further information. We would be glad to supply information to your school regarding any of our programs or series of programs. Please submit a written request to the office supervisor.

Medical Programs

Some programs offered at Esalen qualify for continuing education credit with the California Board of Registered Nursing. For current C.E. listings, see pages 50-51.

Recommended Reading and Mail Order Books

Most books listed as recommended reading for workshops are available through Esalen's bookstore. Other merchandise is also available. For ordering information please call (408) 667-3049.
GUIDE TO WORKSHOPS

This is a guide to the workshops offered in this catalog. Although many of them could be cross-referenced, most are listed only in their main subject area. We recommend that you read the workshop description before deciding to register.

If you have never taken an Esalen workshop, “Experiencing Esalen” is a weekend workshop that offers a sampling of the various kinds of programs offered at Esalen. (See “Integral Practices” section of this directory for dates.) Please call the office if you have any questions concerning a workshop, (408) 667-3005.

Introduction to Gestalt Practice

Gestalt practice is a form — nonanalytic, noncoercive, nonjudgmental — evolving out of the work of Fritz Perls. The work integrates ways of personal clearing and development that are both ancient and modern. To the extent that awareness is made primary relative to action, gestalt practice has a strong relationship to some forms of meditation and visualization. This form is similar to some Reichian work as well, in that emotional and energetic release and rebalancing are allowed and encouraged. The emphasis is intrapersonal rather than interpersonal. It is explicitly understood that participants are not patients but persons actively consenting to work (or play) in direct awareness. The leader functions to reflect, clarify, and respect whatever emerges in the process. The aim is unfoldment, wholeness, and growth, rather than adjustment, cure, or accomplishment. Through group exercises, meditations, and open seat work, this workshop will introduce participants to the gestalt practice approach.

C.E. credit is available for nurses; see pages 50-51.

Music for Everyone: Finding Your Long-Lost Musician

David Darling

David Darling's magical work with late bloomers, non-prodigies, professional musicians, and “burned out” teachers has been hearts to the mystery of sound for the last two decades. “Music for Everyone” is an adventure into music making, rhythmic grooving, song writing, laughing, and listening.

Regardless of prior experience, this workshop will take you to a deeper, more powerful level of music appreciation and involvement. Bring an instrument or play on David's collection of world instruments.

Focusing's applications extend far beyond its use in psychotherapy. It enhances other methods of change or growth and is used in education, business, and work with cancer patients. It offers:

- A way of listening to oneself and others
- A means to personal insights
- A resource for spiritual growth
- A path to healing and reconciliation
- A catalyst for healthier relationships
- A method for reducing stress and preventing burn-out
- A means of getting in touch with one's creativity
- A tool for phenomenological research

This workshop will cover the six steps outlined in Gendlin's Focusing, which participants are encouraged to read before the workshop. Participants will be introduced to a holistic way of paying attention by creating an inner climate of gentleness, friendliness, allowing, receiving, being with, touching, listening, and waiting. This differs from the usual outside climate of forcing, pushing, shoving, and demanding. They will explore how to relate to both positive and negative experiences as they are carried in the body, without the usual response of being overwhelmed by feelings or running away from them. This way of being with oneself allows each experience to unfold in a positive direction and life energy to flow forward in new ways.

You will experience the process through demonstrations, working in partnerships with supervision and feedback. You might want to bring a partner to work with you.

Recommended reading: Gendlin, Focusing (Bantam).

C.E. credit is available for nurses; see pages 50-51.

Fire in the Earth: Poetry, Silence, and the Heart's Desire

David Whyte

This is a workshop for the New Year concerned with remembering half-forgotten and neglected desires that are central to our personal creativity and destiny. Fire has been an abiding image for creativity throughout human history, but the first steps into that flame depend upon our ability to rest in the silence present in our own bodies. These disciplines of silence are a way of understanding desire at a level deeper than we ordinarily experience.

Much of modern life has a way of distancing us from our bodies: seeing the body as a problem to overcome rather than the center of our experience. In hard times we often find it more difficult to remember rest and silence, and it's during these times that we need them the most. At the very start of the new year, this should be a time to remember through poetry, silence, voice work, and movement, the priorities closest to our heart's desire.

Ability or knowledge of poetry welcomed, but not the least bit necessary.

The Tao of Music Improvisation and Movement Meditation

Chungliang Al Huang & David Darling

The leaders will continue their traditional New Year's celebration with music and Tai Ji during the southern migration of gray whales and monarch butterflies. Chungliang Al Huang will lead participants each morning in Tai Ji meditation and Chi Gong breathing exercises in the fresh ocean air while David Darling plays Bach on the cello. Everyone is invited to rediscover the fundamentals of creative expression and the revitalization of body, mind, and spirit through Tai Ji dancing and music.

Recommended listening: Darling, Cycles and Journal October (both, ECM), Minor Blue and Rhythm and Blues Suite (both, Music for People, 203-672-0275).

Recommended reading and viewing: Huang, Embrace Tiger, Return to Mountain and Quantum Soup: Fortune Cookies in Crisis (both, Celestial Arts); Thinking Body, Dancing Mind (Bantam); Living Tao Videos, 217-337-6113. $675

Zen Practice
Kathleen O'Shaughnessy

Zazen is the sitting practice which constitutes the heart of the Buddhist perspective. Through use of this clear, core practice, one can begin to penetrate thought itself to the place beyond thought where all thought begins, or that place which has been called "Large Mind."

The majority of time will be spent refining the practice of Zazen (sitting meditation). Support will be given to the body through the use of traditional yoga posturing, stretches, and contemporary breath work.

Participants are asked to wear loose, layered clothing. $675

Focusing, Dream Work, and the Helping Relationship
Mary McGuire & Roseann Kasayka

Focusing originally came out of research conducted by Eugene Gendlin and his associates at the University of Chicago. They tried to determine what leads to successful outcomes in psychotherapy, and found that success cannot be predicted by either the personality of the client or the orientation of the therapist, but instead is related to the client's awareness of felt experience in the body. They also found that this awareness can be cultivated. The focusing method developed by Gendlin teaches this awareness of felt experience.

This workshop is for psychologists, counselors, social workers, nurses, doctors, and others in the helping professions. Focusing is beneficial to these individuals because it augments their understanding of the client's inner process and aids in their own self-awareness as helper. It allows the practitioner to recognize the vulnerable or painful places in the other where new life wants to emerge, and to facilitate growth in a gentle way that honors the other's experience.

Participants will practice the focusing process called Experiential Listening, a method of listening for the bodily felt sense in what the other is saying and responding from one's own felt sense of the situation. They will also be introduced to Gendlin's integrative approach to dream work. Theories of Freud, Jung, Perls, and others will serve as a source of questions; the answers will come from participants' own dream interpretations and will be explored via this method of awareness of felt experience.

Research has shown focusing to have made a significant difference in the process of therapy clients, the lives of cancer patients, in preventing staff burn-out, and building team spirit among health care professionals. This workshop could be a new beginning. What better way to start the New Year.

You will experience the process through demonstrations, working in partnerships with supervision and feedback. You might want to bring a partner to work with you.

Recommended reading: Gendlin, Focusing (Bantam) and Let Your Body Interpret Your Dreams (Chiron).

Dale Cummings & Karel Samson

Discovering creative solutions in our personal and occupational lives can transform leisure and work and enliven our experience. Webster defines feeling as "the capacity to respond emotionally" and innovation as the "introduction of something new." How these two themes interconnect will be the focus of this workshop.

Participants will use neo-Reichian methods of emotional release, exercises in creativity and innovation, role-playing, and discussion. A period of individual work in a small group setting will provide a safe environment of emotional support. As negative feelings are worked through, active creativity can emerge.

Through its focus on feelings and creativity, this workshop offers encouragement and practical ideas for reinvigorating personal and organizational experiences and for pursuing innovation and new (ad)ventures in daily life. $675

The Physical Basis of Enlightenment: Discussions and Meditation Practice with Richard Baker-roshi

Existence is something you explore and create at the same time. Exploring life with the idea that existence is not a fixed thing is essentially what we are, in our own ways, trying to do. Enlightenment is the goal — fundamental security; overpowering tenderness and gratitude; an actively compassionate, courageous, and life-generating state of mind; luminosity. But we really don't know what it all is.

The teaching of Enlightenment is first to accept life as it is without an observer. What are we going to do? Where do we start? How do we get our history (our personal history) to acknowledge this project? The human body is the best medium through which to realize truth, to realize this precious human existence. $350
Learning the Craft of Dreamwork

Stephen Aizenstat

Dreams can be imagined as looking-glass parables, each a complex story that reflects the personality and soul of the dreamer. This weekend's program will emphasize the healing potential of dreamwork.

New methods of dreamwork which take into account the world unconscious will be described. The world unconscious is seen as a deeper and broader dimension of the psyche and is imagined to contain the subjective inner natures (the subtle body) of all phenomena. It is believed that these inner subjective properties are reflected in the images of dreams and are, at an essential level, interconnected. It is at this level of the psyche that dream images provide access to an interconnected source of healing energy. This view, grounded in modern research and ancient wisdom, has practical implications for the use of dreams in physical and psychological healing.

Participants will be shown how to employ specific methods of dreamwork which honor and actualize the healing potential of the psyche. Common dream themes, nightmares, lucid dreaming, archetypal imagery, and the recurring dream will all be discussed.

Tantra: The Art of Conscious Loving

Charles Muir & Caroline Muir

Few of us have been blessed with healthy childhood conditioning and education regarding the mysteries of sexual love and sexual energy. This can mean that individuals are less aware and conscious about their sexuality than they are in other aspects of their lives. Tantra can transform sex into a loving meditation, putting more consciousness, energy, intimacy, joy, and love into sexual exchanges.

Participants will learn and discuss various ways to increase intimacy and passion in their relationship. Tantric meditation and ways to exchange sexual energy in a safe, non-sexual manner will also be taught in the workshop. These methods can then be practiced in a sexual way in the privacy of your own home. This workshop is open to couples only.

Live music will be provided by Michael Stillwater.

Accepting Life's Transitions: Letting Go—Moving On

Mary Goldenson (Devarani)

The only certainty in life is change, yet we often resist our transitions because of patterns of fear and self-denial. Old beliefs keep us stuck in our resentments, unsuccessfu.
Creating a New Life: Developing Spiritual Strength while Recovering from Addiction

Elizabeth Stratton

The foundation of recovery from any addiction is spiritual strength — the recognition of the healing power of our relationship with God. It gives the recovery process meaning and the individual a will to live.

Creating a new life during recovery is a challenging process. To let go of the past while recovering from it means to see life through new eyes. Beginning each day anew requires dedication, courage, and compassion for the self that is being reborn. It means telling the truth and seeing life and the self through the eyes of compassionate truth.

This workshop provides an opportunity for those individuals who are in the recovery process to develop the healing skills necessary to create a new life. Experiential work will include: establishing and nurturing a relationship with God; self-forgiveness and forgiving others; telling the truth and releasing fear; turning anger into the will to live; healing the physical body from years of abuse; opening the inner energy system through meditation and imagery; developing psychic strength and protection from other people's negativity and addictive behaviors; and experiencing bliss through spiritual substance rather than substance abuse.

Introduction to Craniosacral Work
Hugh Milne

This workshop will introduce the theory and practice of craniosacral work, a subtle, careful, and delicate method for treating illness and for promoting health and healing. The gentlest of approaches, if accurate, can be more powerful than the most invasive.

Craniosacral work can be used to help people with a wide variety of symptoms, from cluster headaches to thoracic outlet syndrome to peripheral ischaemia. While very powerful, this is an inherently safe approach if it is studied from both analytical and intuitive models. To this end, the class will devote an equal portion of time to academic study and to practical, hands-on experience. Emphasis will be on visual and tactile diagnosis. In China, this is called “The Art of Listening.” Practice of the demonstrated methods will be encouraged so that a high standard of individual experience can be gained as the class unfolds. Feedback among participants on personal issues affected by this work will be an important part of the week. This workshop is for health care practitioners who already have a background in body work.

Spiritual Dimensions of Healing
Elizabeth Stratton

The desire to heal and be healed is a deep need within every human being. Seeing someone we love in pain brings out the instinct to touch that person in a compassionate way. Feeling or being ill ourselves can lead us to explore both spiritual and scientific dimensions of healing that we would otherwise not be open to.
Psychic healing, with its focus on the laying on of hands, understanding the meaning of the illness, and seeing into the heart of the person who is ill, brings a spiritual dimension to healing that can be a valuable adjunct to modern medicine and its high technology.

This five-day workshop will provide both theoretical and practical tools to awaken the healer within. Self-healing methods such as opening the energy centers (chakras), communicating with the body, and guided healing imagery will be explored to assist participants in taking charge of their own health. In addition, participants will begin to learn to work with others in a healing capacity through laying on of hands and psychic scanning.

Introduction to Vipassana Meditation
James Baraz

Vipassana (Insight) meditation is the practice described by the Buddha for developing wisdom, compassion, and peace. Vipassana, “to see things clearly,” means being mindful of what is actually happening in the present moment. Using the breath, body sensations, thought, and emotions as objects of attention, we can learn to be fully awake and bring a balanced awareness to all aspects of our lives.

Through vipassana meditation we experience the nature of reality as continual change. When we see that all phenomena are impermanent, we can begin to let go of clinging to the pleasant or avoiding the unpleasant. We are then more capable of meeting each situation with spontaneity, fearlessness, and love. Meditation also teaches us to see in each moment the interconnectedness of all things. Our hearts open to a natural expression of compassion and kindness.

Participants will be introduced to this method of meditation practice and the principles on which it is based. There will be periods of silent sitting and walking meditation, as well as discussion. As we bring attention to all of our activities at Esalen, we will continue to develop mindfulness throughout the weekend. This will provide a foundation for applying vipassana practice to everyday life.

Relationships:
Turning Toward Joy
Mariah Fenton Gladis
Creating stable and fulfilling relationships is a challenge that everyone faces. To be successful, human relating must be understood and accepted as an activity, an ability that requires movement, purpose, emotional capacity, and extensive contact skills. People often believe that good relating evolves naturally, but they discover in the routine of living with families, friends, and lovers that, in truth, they have not been adequately prepared to meet the demands of loving relationships.

This workshop will focus on the nature and basic requirements of healthy relationships. It will offer participants opportunities to assess their abilities and disabilities, to develop awareness, and to practice risking positive action with others. It is for anyone who has "hit the wall" in a relationship or who has experienced being stuck at some seemingly impenetrable contact boundary, and who wants to break through. Particularly helpful for adult children of dysfunctional families, ACAs, and human relations professionals, this experiential and didactic workshop will blend individual and group gestalt work, spiritual healing, body work, and personal metaphor. $350

Life Energy Process
Stephano Sabetti

The Life Energy Process (LEP) is a spiritually-oriented approach to self-development and professional growth based on Eastern and Western energy dynamics. Specially designed subtle and intensive movements (microments) can increase energy flow and lead to the discharge of non-essential processes in your body (e.g., repressed emotions, chemical toxins, etc.). Each of us has an energy frequency that can be felt when attuned through LEP. This unique vibration helps us center and ground ourselves as well as find clearer direction and meaning in daily life. Each participant will have a chance to feel their unique energy process and explore it afterward in process inquiry.

Life Energy Process includes: dance, theater, massage, pool work, and various other forms. The workshop is of particular interest to professionals and laypersons who are excited by the integration of theory, pleasure, and hands-on application of energy concepts. $675

Risking the Spotlight
Paula Shaw

Many of us want to step out and expand our participation in life. We would like to be able to fully express ourselves and communicate more freely, and not shrink from the limelight when we find ourselves in it. Some of us might even want to seek it out. But it feels risky. Participating in a group can feel threatening — we become shy and unable to be who we are. Issues of safety, shame, disapproval, low self-esteem — to mention only a few — arise when we feel “on the spot.” As a result, the freedom and intimacy we may experience on a one-to-one basis eludes us in a larger context, and we end up avoiding the risks of playing a bigger game in life.

This workshop creates a safe environment to risk stepping into the spotlight. Using simple and effective acting techniques including physical and vocal exercises, improv and creative communication games, and individual and group work, we will make our way through fearful inhibitions to joyful and powerful self-expression.

Optional: Bring a memorized performance piece of 1 to 2 minutes: a monologue, speech, poem, song, etc. $675

Creating Exact Moments of Healing
Mariah Fenton Gladis

Adult children of alcoholic, dysfunctional, or abusive families (ACAs) must walk a road of recovery that requires determination, life-long commitment, and the creation of specific moments of healing. This workshop offers participants an opportunity to take a major step toward health, helping them define a plan for necessary moments they must create so they can move forward, transforming their personal history from one of liability to one of strength and wisdom. Focus will be on the promotion of healing in four fundamental relationships:

- With oneself: developing awareness, freedom from addictions, and healing of the body and soul from the residual effects of trauma;
- With others: improving one's capacity for moving out of isolation and into direct, open communication and trust; expanding intimacy skills while securing healthy boundaries;
- In the world: moving away from chaos and deprivation and toward stability and abundance;
- Spiritually: searching for the meaning of one's history and accessing that part of the self that can utilize universal blessings.

This workshop will be experiential and didactic, blending individual and group gestalt work, music, spiritual practices, and body work. A step-by-step recovery process developed by the leader will be incorporated throughout the workshop. The atmosphere will be one of trust and mutual support. This workshop is also appropriate for professionals who work with ACAs. Please bring a mirror and photographs of yourself at all ages.

Vision and Embodiment

Laura DeNuccio (Ma Prita)

This is an educational introduction to vision fitness, integrating inner vision and outer sight. The focus is on discovering 1) how to relax, clear, and reeducate the eye and the self to see; and 2) how one's present reality is distorted or shaped by attitudes, beliefs, and feelings.

Participants will utilize the Bates method of eye relaxation, movement, breath, guided meditation, earth ritual, and the creative use of the Spoken Word. Together they will explore, discover, experience, and expand their vision of possibilities for themselves and the world in which they live. $350

Journey into the Sacred Unknown

Myron McClellan

Surrendering to the Sacred Unknown is the key to living passionately in the body, experiencing deep intimacy in relationships, eliciting the creativity of the whole in groups and teams, and unlocking imagination in work and play. The Unknown is refined awareness, the source of all true transformation. It cannot be accessed through thinking, but can be evoked through ritual process, body movement, and sacred music.

In this workshop, the Unknown dimension of consciousness will be called forth to replace the dominating role the ego plays in personal development and achievement, relationships, and group dynamics. The work will involve identifying subconscious barriers to accessing the Unknown, removing them, and replacing them with ways of opening to the Sacred.

The goal will be to focus on learning to live by inquiry and discovery rather than by plan and agenda; to live by commitment rather than control; to live with joy and ease rather than with suffering.

Participants must be willing to do body movement, though no previous experience is necessary. $350

The Extraordinary Human: Theory and Practice

Michael Murphy & George Leonard

In his new book, The Future of the Body, Michael Murphy raises the possibility that by gathering data from many fields — including medical science, anthropology, sport, the arts, psychical research, and comparative religious studies — we can identify extraordinary versions of most, if not all, our basic attributes. Murphy's research has shown that the most reliable path toward the realization of these extraordinary attributes involves transformative practice. He defines such practice as a coherent set of activities designed to produce positive change in a person or group. For a practice to be integral as well, it must aim to cultivate the physical, vital, cognitive, volitional, affective, and transpersonal dimension of human functioning in an integrated way. Leonard Energy Training (LET) was developed by George Leonard as an integral transformative practice.

Michael Murphy will discuss the twelve aspects of human functioning outlined in The Future of the Body: perception of external events, somatic awareness, communication abilities, vitality, movement abilities, capacities to manipulate the environment directly, feelings of pain and pleasure, cognition, volition, sense of self, love, and bodily structure. George Leonard will lead participants in practical exercises that illustrate the possibility of extraordinary human functioning. There will also be discussion of the applications of integral transformative practice to society at large.

Couples Workshop

Jack Rosenberg & Beverly Kitaen Morse

Most couples are reluctant to seek help in their relationships; instead they wait, hoping that the relationship will improve. If couples approached medical help the same way they approach marriage counseling, many of them would only visit the doctor when they ought to be lining up at the marriage counselor's.

Designed on a preventive model, this workshop will deal with the underlying structures and defenses in relationships before they surface as terminal problems. It will also examine the attitudes and beliefs about sexuality and how to make sex better.

Return to the Light: Winter Teachings

Paul Rebillot & Carol Proudfoot-Edgar

The winter solstice is a time for restful introspection as the earth's outer darkness allows the inner sun of the soul to regenerate and find expression. Traditional cultures of the world over have rested, fasted, and feasted during this time of the year in celebration of the turning point, the cyclic return of the light. This is the time when all creatures prepare for the next cycle of growth.

Despondency, disillusionment, and regrets often weigh on people at this time of year, manifesting as depression or flight into frantic cheerfulness. This workshop offers an opportunity to work through past regrets and unfulfilled ideals, promises, and fairytales of childhood that lie behind them. Movement toward light is movement toward growth and individuation, and as we move through the time of darkness toward spring, it is important to understand the current season of one's life. What has not been completed? What needs healing? What do we need to say goodbye to? What new steps do we need to take as we cross our current thresholds into a new season?

There are many ways to this self-knowledge. Different people have developed different paths, using a variety of metaphors. The principle way we will use in this workshop is the way of the Medicine Wheel, which teaches us to celebrate our cycles and seasons. Through ritual and gestalt open seat, guided fantasy, music, and play, we will seek our own inner solstice, our own turning point on the Medicine Wheel, and there sow the seeds for spring.

Authentic Movement

Tina Stromsted

Our bodies form our closest link to the unconscious, providing avenues for deep and lasting change. Authentic Movement is a meditative form of dance influenced by the depth psychology of C.G. Jung. Through moving and witnessing each other move, participants will explore their own inner dance, finding freedom of expression while healing wounds and uncovering images of the self that may have locked them into painful or dissatisfying ways of living. Body-related issues, unresolved developmental material, preverbal memories, and transpersonal experience may emerge, leading toward integration and wholeness.

Designed for mental health professionals, artists, and those interested in personal growth, this experiential process assists participants in bridging body and psyche through expressive movement. Offering a structure within which natural movement can bloom and be nurtured, it allows individuals to discover ways to engage their creativity and make soulful self-contact.

- A checklist of do's and don'ts which serve to minimize problems with so-called "difficult" people
- A practicum for learning to empower yourself in difficult situations.

Self-Expression through American Sign Language

Lorraine Peters

American Sign Language (ASL) is most often associated with the method of communication for deaf people. Rich with facial expression, pantomime, gestures, and specific signs made with the hands and fingers, it embodies the spirit and cultural uniqueness of the deaf. But ASL can also be a vehicle for the hearing to explore subtle forms of non-verbal communication. It offers them an alternative means of self-expression as they step out from behind the
This workshop invites participants to tune in to their emotions and become aware of the gestures and postures that convey them. While specific ASL signs will be taught, participants will be encouraged to express their individuality by creating new signs of their own. Music, movement, and other experiential activities will be used in an atmosphere of humor and play.

This weekend is for those who want to become more emotionally expressive, for those in theater or dance, or for those who just want to begin learning American Sign Language. Previous sign language skills are not necessary.

Your Deep Mythology: Tap into the Magic

Stanley Krippner & David Feinstein

Each of us operates out of a deeply personal mythology, a guiding theme that animates our lives. This mythology functions largely outside of awareness, yet with uncanny accuracy we choose the characters and create the scenes that correspond to our deepest visions. Some of these visions serve us well, but others inevitably become outdated as we mature as adults. They may have been created in response to the limitations of our parents or other childhood circumstances, and often lead to inner conflict and self-defeating behavior. One of the most powerful steps we can take to enhance our sense of fulfillment and improve our effectiveness in the world is to constructively change this inner mythology, this invisible force that subliminally directs what we think, what we feel, and what we do.

Drawing upon techniques from a spectrum of systems, including Jungian psychology, gestalt practice, ancient spiritual disciplines, and modern clinical practice, you will be led through a powerful and moving sequence of experiences designed to discover the strengths of the mythology you are living, and to transform those aspects that no longer serve you. Discover how to understand your life story as an unfolding mythology, and reach into unconscious realms for visions that nourish and inspire. Participants are invited to bring a journal and record any dreams they recall prior to the workshop. $350

The Power of Voice

Arthur Samuel Joseph

This course introduces a method called Vocal Awareness, which includes vocalizing, sound meditation, movement, song study, and development of the speaking voice as a means for deepening contact with the Self. Participants will work individually and in groups exploring breathing, toning, a cappella and accompanied vocalizing with poetry, sonnets, and songs.

Vocal Awareness is an art form that addresses in precise ways how language affects the brain. It is now well-known in the field of psychoneuroimmunology that endorphins are released by the brain in response to verbal cues and visual imagery. Research also points to a strong correlation between language, breath, and psycho-physical response. Knowing this, developing one’s own language becomes a means for self-integration.

The aim of this workshop is to explore the voice as metaphor, to tap into issues of self-expression and self-esteem, and to have fun while developing vocal abilities. It is valuable for lay people and professionals alike, and is open to beginners through advanced. Tape recorders are required.

A Kind of Presence: The Therapist as a Somewhat Sacred Person

Ron Kurtz & Amina Knowland

What do we expect when we are in despair and yet go to a man? Surely, a presence by means of which we are told that nevertheless there is meaning. —Martin Buber

How is it that we become the kind of presence that we must be to be "healers in general and psychotherapists in particular" (Trungpa)? What are the essential elements of that presence? How are they expressed through the psychotherapist as person? And how does this "personhood" manifest, first as qualities we bring to the relationship, and finally as method and technique?

This workshop will approach these questions using the wisdom of Buddhism and Taoism and the teaching exercises of the Hakomi Method of body-centered psychotherapy. Emphasis will be on discovery, particularly the discovery of how we do what we do by being who we are. Participants will also explore how the images and energies which give life to this way of being are evoked, nourished, and sustained. $675

Howard Schechter & Barbara Lee

"Rekindling the Spirit in Work" is about reconnecting with yourself and the work you do. Through creative exercises and sharing with the group, participants will strive to gain clarity about work goals, the skills required to reach those goals, and the strengths each individual has to accomplish those goals. This process can help integrate who you are with what you do. The emphasis will be on the question, "Who is working?" From an identification with our highest Self, what we do can flow more easily and be a direct expression in the world of who we are inside.

This workshop is for people who are: beginning new careers, in transition, dissatisfied, or simply bored with their work. Participants often come away with a sense of clarity and purpose, and realize that they may not need to make radical shifts in their job or profession. Rather, the subtle inner adjustments of identity, attitude, and perspective create greater job satisfaction and offer direction for taking the next steps in work. C.E. credit is available for nurses; see pages 50-51. $675

Playing the Edge

David Schiffman

In the early stages of growth, success seems to be its own reward. Excitement, energy, and the willingness to face life boldly are often characteristics of those who are involved in new and successful ventures. To keep this spirit alive is not easy. The enormous pressure, the grinding routines and demands of substantial involvement can dispirit even the healthiest people. To listen to one's heart and know what's real requires the courage to pause. In this willingness to stop and listen to the deeper self live the true resources that guide and protect us.
The purpose of this week is to create a mood of sanctuary for people who are in transition and facing major changes in career, relationship, or matters of the spirit; those in need of a break from demanding, stressful responsibilities; individuals interested in breaking new ground in the areas of self-nurturance, intuitive functioning, and problem-solving.

The processes will be gently restorative, illuminating, and enlivening. The group intention will be to create a community based on trust and goodwill with emphasis on individual freedom. Traditional methods of self-inquiry (gestalt practice, bioenergetics, psychosynthesis) will be combined with innovative methods using music, meditation, poetry, and prayer to foster this spirit of living fully and comfortably.

Vision Painting
Helen Malcolm-Neeb
“Vision Painting” is a transformative adventure recreating aspects of your life spiritually, physically, and emotionally. Through meditation and guided visioning you can explore the many layers of who you are that motivate your life. Subconscious symbols and dream images are evoked on the path to the inner self. The painting becomes the process of the hand following the emotions of the heart, creating from your highest potential a personal map of the future as you would like it to be.

This is an opportunity to affirm the spirit within from a place of play, creativity, and strength. Beginners and artists are welcome. Create a vision of your future as you want it to be.

Toward a Common Language: Psychotherapy and 12-Step Recovery
Peter Finkelstein & Peter Ways
Participants in “12-Step” programs are often irritated or bored when faced with conventional psychodynamic discussions of their addictive behavior patterns. Similarly, adherents to more classical psychological approaches are frequently condescending and dismissive when they encounter the AA point of view. Although both groups employ combinations of insight and social support in their work, their differences in basic orientation and experience with treatment often cause defensiveness and frustration. As a consequence, it becomes very difficult for those involved in these two approaches to learn from each other.

This workshop, co-led by a psychodynamic psychiatrist and a recovering physician steeped in “12-Step” work, will attempt to develop a common language and inclusive style for dealing with addictive patterns that gathers strength from each model. The workshop will be useful to counselors and therapists from both sides of this conceptual gap and for all persons wrestling with the similarities and contradictions of “12-Step” and psychotherapeutic approaches.

On Being a Man
David Schiffman
Many men today have sought to honor and embrace the emergence of the feminine principle in their own natures. As a result of this emphasis, the right to celebrate and honor the masculine has become a thorny and difficult dilemma.

A man’s sense of his uniqueness and value is critical. During this week participants will examine those elements in their own natures which comprise the deeper dimensions of manhood and how they might enhance the freedom to be men with simplicity, clarity, tenderness, strength, and dignity. They will explore the following questions:

- What does a man need to know and accept about his own nature to feel himself fully as a man?
- Can men come together to create an atmosphere of trust and goodwill, where the masculine aspects that they have in common can be honored and appreciated in the pleasure of each other's company?
- Are there ways that men can mark and celebrate the cycles that season them, their victories, and defeats? How might they reveal themselves emotionally without unnecessary shame or remorse?
- Can the “wild man” within be befriended and reliability and respectability still survive? Can fierceness and aggression be used constructively in realizing spiritual aspirations, intimate relationships, family and community concerns?

Ritual, Ecstasy, and Women's Spirituality

Margo Adler

This workshop for women explores the ideas, the rituals, and the celebrations that come out of the women's spirituality movement. Margo Adler uses chant, songs, and sacred circles as ways for women to explore the healing power, joy, and ease that comes from doing rituals with women. The basic philosophy that informs this workshop is Neo-Paganism and Goddess spirituality. This perspective is non-hierarchical and starts with the idea that we, ourselves, are sacred and flowing with potential. Ritual is a tool that can end our alienation from nature and from each other. The workshop explores ways of reclaiming the vitality and mystery of ecstatic religions without the dogmatic and patriarchal attitudes that have caused so many women to leave their own religious traditions.

The workshop will combine joyful exuberance (chants, songs, laughter, and drumming) with time for quiet meditation, including a voyage to meet the Goddess within ourselves. This should be two days filled with joy and fun. Please bring drums, rattles, instruments, and one or two personal items that have special significance to place on a community altar as a way of sharing your own stories.

A Course in Miracles

Julian Silverman

"A Course in Miracles" is a curriculum for enjoying life. Its basic premise is that the mind can learn to empower itself by learning how to extend itself: "All confusion comes from not extending life." In this course, ordinary human thinking is regarded as an oppressive force in the mind, one which needs to be neutralized and understood. The method and perspective of the Course are based on the following goals:

- Upgrading our ordinary ways of making sense of things
- Recognizing our life's trials as opportunities to heal ourselves and taking advantage of these opportunities
- Recollecting routinely our essential value and our essential purpose as human beings.

The Unfolding Self

Joyce Lyke & Jessica Britt

We are the night ocean filled with glints of light. We are the space between fish and the moon, while we sit here together. —Rumi

We live in a world of mystery, wonder, and beauty. Unfortunately many of us seldom perceive or participate in this realm of reality. Instead we see and live in a world of conflict, suffering, and uncertainty, often doubtful of life's meaning. Our childhood conditioning creates veils that make it difficult to perceive the truth, which limits our capacity to be present in the unfolding mystery.

This week is for participants who have been working on themselves and who would like further inquiry into the relationship between emotional work and spiritual development. Using Sufi self-remembering exercises, meditation, and individual Reichian and gestalt work, we will inquire into what it means to allow and commit to the unfolding of the self—the unveiling of the mystery.

How to Tell Your Friends From the Apes: A Workshop in Evolutionary Psychology

Robert Anton Wilson

Developed in the 1920s by Dr. Theodore Schroeder, evolutionary psychology was a major influence on Harry Stack Sullivan, interpersonal psychology, Dr. Eric Berne, general semantics, existential therapy, and Dr. Timothy Leary, among others. In this workshop, evolutionary psychology will be updated to include current findings in the Should I Tell The Truth?
Will Schutz
Two of the most popular and powerful films of 1992 — Prince of Tides and JFK — revolve around the consequences of withholding, one personally, the other socially. The human potential movement placed the issue of openness, or truth, center stage.

More practical heads insisted on the legitimacy and desirability of, say, secrecy, prudence, discretion, and compassion for the potential hurt feelings of the recipient of the openness. What is openness, or truth? Is withholding okay, or is it the intellectual’s form of lying? Is openness sometimes an excuse for civilized hostility? Is unawareness (deniability) a legitimate justification for not being open? Is it true that people get in trouble not because they tell the truth — but rather because they do not tell enough truth? We will explore and experiment with the consequences and limits — if any — of living a life of total openness.

Recommended reading: Bok, Lying (Vintage); Schutz, Profound Simplicity (Will Schutz Assoc., Muir Beach, CA) and The Truth Option (Ten Speed Press).

Singing Gestalt:
Solo or Duet
Nancy Kaye Lunney
Singing gestalt is singing about yourself, who you are, what you feel, who you’d like to be. Singing gestalt is about being yourself in front of other people without judging how well you sing. Singing gestalt is not about performance. It is about contacting and feeling and expressing.

Come along or bring someone who is important to you, perhaps a lover, friend, a parent, someone with whom you’d like to communicate in a different way things you’ve expressed before and possibly things you’ve never said. If you wish, bring photographs of significant people in your life, past or present.

If the idea of getting up and singing in front of other people terrifies you more than anything you can think of, this workshop is for you. If you love to sing in front of other people and want to stretch yourself further, this workshop is for you. If you’ve been too shy to try, this is your chance.

Some guided imagery and gestalt may be used. Accompaniment and lots of music are provided. But the workshop is really about you — singing.

The Art of Leadership:

- Discovering and addressing blind spots in self-esteem
- The development of creative strategies for building support systems that facilitate the transformation of visions into realities

- giving and receiving feedback on communication and leadership styles, role-playing, problem-solving exercises for real life work situations, and exercises for learning to use the unconscious to creatively solve problems

C.E. credit is available for nurses; see pages 50-51.

Week of February 21–26
Cross-Cultural Shamanic Practices
Angeles Arrien
Participants of this workshop will be introduced to shamanic tools from diverse cultures in order to access and empower their inner teacher, healer, visionary, and warrior. The universal healing salves of singing, storytelling, dancing, and silence will be engaged to rekindle the spirit and retrieve any soul loss.

Group members will work individually and collectively to honor ancestor spirits by releasing limiting family patterns; enhance personal and professional power by speaking with "spirit tongue" (truth-telling); and experience shamanic practices that reveal internal mythology, help heal wounds, and adjust imbalances.

This week qualifies as a Foundational training for the Four-Fold Way, a cross-cultural shamanic training program by Angeles Arrien.

Mentations and Deviations™:
Thinking with the Whole Body
Michael Kramer, Paule Marx & Christian Internann
True mentations are the conscious physical experience of perceptions which occur naturally in our bodies. Participants in this workshop will learn how to utilize their entire body to formulate a complete thought.

This training is based upon the teachings of Oscar Ichazo, founder of the Arica Institute.

The goal of this workshop will be to sensitize our entire body and to “set” the mentations. For example, our ears give us the mentation of substance or understanding, and with our eyes we perceive the purity of forms; our nose gives us an awareness of the possibilities of any given moment, and with our mouth we perceive our essential needs.

In setting the mentations we use 12 yantras, one for each mentation. Yantras use the principles of color and form and provide a set of symbols that enable our psyche to grasp directly the essential language of the mentations. Yantras are also an integral part of this training, as the mentations have a direct correspondence with the notes of the 12-tone musical scale.

In contrast to the 12 mentations of the body are the 12 deviations of the mind.
They are referred to as "clowns," and are a chorus of misinformation and confusion that arise whenever we attempt to intellectualize the natural flow of perceptions in our bodies. The deviations are determined by the time and place of birth. They act as voices of dissension that impede the clear perception of both our interior and exterior worlds. Participants will learn to recognize and name each deviation's voice, and disarm them all with humor, light-hearted theater, and meditation.

Please note: The date, time, and place of your birth must be received by February 7th. A letter of explanation is available from Esalen. Please call the main office.

Prevent Your Heart Attack

Joe Goldstrich & Norman Kaplan

As an adult, the greatest danger to your health and life is coronary disease — a heart attack often manifested by sudden death. The risks for coronary disease are well-known, and this workshop will help you identify and act directly against whatever risks you feel you have. You will be given a pre-workshop questionnaire about your current health habits and asked to obtain a simple blood test for blood sugar and cholesterol before the workshop.

The leaders will review the scientific evidence about the role of each of the following risks and provide practical, individualized guidance for a long-term program that will reduce those that relate to you: obesity, particularly upper body or abdominal; high blood pressure; high blood LDL-cholesterol, low HDL-cholesterol; cigarette smoking and passive smoke; job-related stress; Type A personality; physical inactivity.

To lower these risks, participants will discuss the following:

- Diet: low saturated fat, limited protein, moderate sodium, increased essential vitamins, minerals, and antioxidants
- Exercise: an individualized program of medium intensity, aerobic exercise
- Smoking cessation: use of nicotine skin patches and gum as part of an effective stop-smoking program
- Stress reduction: massage, meditation, and proper breathing
- Drug therapy as an adjunct to diet to reduce serum cholesterol and cause regression/reversal of coronary heart disease
- Appropriate alcohol intake, use of aspirin and (for women) postmenopausal estrogens, avoidance of other environmental toxins, and incorporation of other heart-helpful practices.

C.E. credit is available for nurses; see pages 50-51. $675

Clinical Program for Professionals: Integrating Gestalt, Self Psychology, and Mind-Body Healing

Ronald Alexander & Bruce Gregory

This five-day training program will combine didactic discussion with experiential exercise, supervision of therapist-client dyads, and clinical demonstrations. A full spectrum of treatment cartography will be used to clarify how gestalt, self psychology, and mind-body healing can be effectively integrated to address early developmental trauma, narcissistic issues of the self, and contact boundary disturbances. Emphasis will be on:

- Improving skills of diagnosis
- Formulation of treatment plans that attend to the transition points of the healing process
- Improving intervention skills as they relate to handling resistance, the nurturing of the real self, and facilitation and activation of unconscious healing processes through the use of mirroring, pacing, and the language of mind-body healing.

Particular attention will be paid to assisting therapists to become more aware and effective in dealing with countertransference and projective identification.

Recommended readings: Masterson, Countertransference and Psychotherapeutic Technique (Bruner Mazel); Erickson & Rossi, Hypnotherapy Casebook; and Polster, Gestalt Therapy Integrated (Bruner Mazel).

C.E. credit is available for nurses; see pages 50-51. $675

Making It Float

Robert Hall

There is no fixing a damaged childhood. The best you can hope for is to make the sucker float. — Conroy

Robert Hall writes: "And so it is. This workshop is about making it float. How to. If you’re willing to spend some time with meditation, gestalt group process, making sounds, and experimenting with moving your body to your own rhythms, if you’re interested in how body awareness, psychotherapy, and meditation work together to loosen your identification with who you think you are, and if you still have your sense of humor, we’ll not only make it float, we’ll take a ride in it." $675

Weekend of February 26–28

A Weekend with Ruth Zaporah and Action Theater

Physical theater improvisation reflects life — in both we walk backwards, knowing where we’ve been, which is not knowing where we’re going. Each step we take is a step into now. As awareness expands, experience becomes more now. The movement, vocal, and language exercises in this training expand awareness. Participants improvise upon an awakened memory and imagination. Integrated thought, emotion, fantasy, and spirit inspire action and speech.

During this weekend, we’ll play in the studio and out on the beach, all the time seriously enjoying ourselves. This workshop accommodates the novice, the explorer, and the practiced. $350

The Passion of the Western Mind: Bringing it All Back Home

Richard Tarnas

In light of the current state of humanity and the world, how should we evaluate the Western intellectual and spiritual tradition? What are we to make of this tremendous historical development that has shaped our world and our psyches with such pervasive force? Has the long Western trajectory served some deeper evolutionary purpose, or rather was it humankind’s supreme evolutionary error, a sustained epistemological mistake? With the emergence of the global ecological crisis, with the deconstruction of patriarchal, Eurocentric, and anthropocentric assumptions and values, with the rise of multiculturalism and feminism and the resurgence of Eastern and indigenous spiritual traditions, where stands the West?

These are critical questions of our time, especially for those of us who stand at the crossroads of all these intellectual and spiritual impulses — postmodern, countercultural, indigenous, archaic, esoteric, Eastern — and yet who are, in the end, sons and daughters of the West. Every generation must discover Fundamental elements of body work, such as breath awareness, grounding movement, quality of touch, and stress reduction, will be introduced. Meditation:

The Living Dance
David Streeter
The experience of insight, tranquility, inner strength, and aliveness can be found within our everyday life through the ancient art of meditation. This workshop will approach traditional meditation practice in an unusual way.
In our retreat atmosphere we will prepare the body-mind for silent listening with fluid movement from the martial arts and yoga. We will incorporate breathing methods (Prana-Yama) and energy work with Zazen (sitting meditation). Other activities will include a group meditation in a nearby contemplative monastery and Zazen at our new meditation center nestled close to a waterfall.
This approach to the subtle practice of meditation through the body can inspire the student to discover his or her rich interior life and that crystal-clear still point described so well in every spiritual tradition.
C.E. credit is available for nurses; see pages 50-51. $350

A Weekend with Seymour Carter
Everyone has unused capacities for further personal development. When these capacities are recognized and given attention, a natural force is released which, like a tide, can carry the individual to a higher level of ability and action. Fritz Perls taught how to recognize the force of avoided issues in dealing with blocked energies. When unfinished issues are confronted and assimilated, it is possible to feel potent and in charge of one's life.
In this workshop, participants will deal with these issues by examining the influence of the inner dialogue on thoughts and the nature of impasse, as well as tendencies within themselves toward psychological completion and well-being. The basis of this work is the gestalt method, supported by studies in various body disciplines, including sensory awareness, bioenergetics, and aikido. Each participant's process of development will be honored, encouraged, and treated as unique. $350

The Path of Transformation in Psychotherapy and Meditation
Daniel Brown
This workshop is designed for psychotherapists, practitioners of meditation, and those interested in the integration of the worlds of psychotherapy and spirituality. The leader will present an integrated model for the path of transformation, for the development of emotional experience, the sense of self and others, and reality sense. This model of normal, pathological, and optimal human development is drawn from the fields of child development, clinical psychology, and the great Eastern traditions of meditation.
This workshop will show how the path of meditation unfolds and will present a vision of optimal human development. It will also help participants learn to assess and treat different types of problems (clinical symptoms and meditation crises) which occur at various points along the overall developmental continuum. The workshop will address how psychotherapy can be used as a way to attain some of the necessary prerequisites for spiritual development and can assist with the problems that occur for the meditation practitioner and meditation teacher. It will also explore how spiritual awareness can inform one's view of psychotherapy. Various experiential exercises and meditation practices will be used along with clinical case material. The workshop will be both experiential and didactic.
Much of the material will be drawn from the leader's experience as a clinician and teacher, and from his eighteen years of practicing meditation, translating meditations texts from Sanskrit and Tibetan sources, and conducting scientific studies on deep meditation states and enlightenment on meditation masters in this country and South Asia.

Reunion

David Schiffman

This is a workshop for seasoned people who are already familiar with and appreciate the basics of self-exploration, inner work, myth, and sacred ritual. Its aim is to create a mood of safety and support for further study. It is a time for individuals to renew this connection to the resources that can guide and protect them. Gathering together in a spirit of trust and goodwill, participants will explore ways to:

- Reconnect with and honor what they feel most deeply
- Express feelings with simplicity, clarity, and integrity
- Celebrate playfulness and spontaneity
- Release disappointments, reversals, and emotional losses
- Mark their hopes and dreams and renew their spirits through myth and ritual
- Deepen their understanding and appreciation of their own rhythm and true nature
- Explore imaginative ways to live freely and fully

In an eclectic framework, the workshop will combine innovative elements of guided meditation, sound work, ritual, dance, and music with traditional psychological practices.

A Workshop for Couples

Daniel Brown & Marushka Glissen

This workshop is for couples who want to improve their communication skills and increase their understanding of each other. Ways for resolving conflict and practical methods for becoming self-assertive and self-transcending in a partnership will be taught. Some of the work will address how the family of origin and past conditioning contribute to the bonding as well as the conflicts. Time will also be spent on learning how to find satisfaction, mutual support, relaxation, solitude, and play in day-to-day living as partners. Helping couples discover the wider purpose of being together through a sharing of values, love, and perhaps a spiritual vision will be emphasized.

When Success is Not Enough

Peller Marion

If I had known what it would be like to have it all, I would have settled for less.

—Lily Tomlin

Since 1950, materialism has sky-rocketed in the United States. Indeed, many of us are wealthy beyond the wildest dreams of our ancestors, and yet we struggle more than ever for self-esteem and meaning in our lives.

When alternative measures of success are not available, the human need to be valued and respected by others is acted out through consumption. Buying things becomes both a means of self-esteem and social acceptance. “The avarice of mankind is unsatiable,” wrote Aristotle, who believed that as soon as one desire was satisfied, another would appear to take its place. If our wants are insatiable, there is simply no such thing as enough.

Peller Marion has designed a weekend that explores the questions: How much is enough? What is an achievement junkie? What is my definition of success at this time in my life? How do I create my own personal philosophy of life? How do I live by my own agenda?

Participants will explore the paradox of success in their own lives. A variety of experiential processes will be drawn from readings and discussion, games, dance, gestalt, imagery, and meditation.

John Heider

This workshop will consist of a synthesis of group process, gestalt, body work, and meditation. The purpose is to develop and educate the human potential, which refers to the ability people have to become more aware or conscious of themselves and the world around them. While the workshop will be mostly experiential, there will be time for questions and answers and for discussion of the work.

Body, Heart and Soul

Paul & Niyaso Carter

This workshop explores the many aspects of sexual life, with the objective of helping to heal old wounds, unlearn restrictive programs, dissolve fears, and becoming free to appreciate your own sensual-avoidant nature. The five days are structured as a series of initiations beginning with conception and going through childhood, puberty, adolescence, into the mature union of sexual energy and open-hearted love. The goal of the workshop will be to help bring back into your life:

- A heightened sense of well-being in your body
- A lighter and more open heart
- The ability to communicate without fear
- Deeper intimacy in your relationships.

When we are free to appreciate our sensual aliveness, when our sexual energy is integrated with the energy of our heart, and when we can let our bodies, hearts, and souls experience their own natural flow, true intimacy can happen in our lives. Touching this space is not only a delight, it can also transform every aspect of our lives.

Most of us don’t remember our dreams. And those of us who do often feel that our dreams are not useful experiences, just meaningless images encouraged by sleep. But dreams can be useful and give us insight. They can be the mirrors that allow us to look in places where we have been afraid to look, show us strengths we didn’t realize we had, and teach us new skills. Dreams can help us recover our true selves.

If you’ve ever wondered about your dreams, recorded your dreams, or forgotten all your dreams except your nightmares, this workshop is for you. Participants will be taught exercises in dream recall, mandala drawing, meditation, dream body awareness, bioenergetics, and gestalt dreamwork.

Rituals of Transformation
Paul Rebillot
People are continually approaching thresholds, transition points from one state to another. To live is to change. Unfortunately we have a tendency to resist change, to cling to the familiar, to remain stuck at the threshold. This resistance eventually causes us much stress and pain.

Rituals can prepare people for change as it happens in the course of their lives and help heal the passages that were not completed in the past. A ritual does not make a change happen; rather, it awakens within the psyche the archetypal pattern of change, it teaches the participant how to change. By acting out the ritual, people learn, not only in their minds but in the feelings of their hearts and the movements of their bodies, the process of transformation.

During this workshop, participants will look at what they want to heal and transform in their lives, what they need to say good-bye to, and what they need in order to cross their present threshold. Small groups will work together to design and enact individual rituals in order to support and help this healing process.

Just as the body can move from one position into another, so can the full being: hearts can move, minds can move. Rituals let the body show the appropriate path and let the full being open all the doors waiting to be open. Joseph Campbell said that when someone discovers his or her authentic path, the way seems blessed with magic. To find this way is the work of “Rituals of Transformation.”

Conceiving, Perceiving, and Doing Biospherics
John Polk Allen
This workshop is an introduction to biospheric thought and will explore the scale, power, complexity, evolution, expansiveness, holarchic organization, and beauty of this class of magnificent beings.

Participants will practice special techniques in the outdoors to create the naturalist’s state of consciousness, but they will be stalking the biosphere’s form and behavior, not that of one of its species. Another session will be on modeling biospheres, conceptually primarily, not mathematically beyond the basic necessities.

Finally, participants will use theater to enact the dramatic future when a number of biospheres will be in action throughout a broad belt of the solar system, and when the genetic wealth of planet earth and its reservoir of evolutionary potential is recognized to be its greatest treasure.

This week will give us an opportunity to do. But getting close to them, allowing ourselves to confront them, is very difficult to do.

This week will give us an opportunity to find the courage to face our demons. Participants will be encouraged to look at the things in their life that are difficult to face and will be given support to help recognize and confront them. This will be done through gestalt practice, dream work, and bioenergetics. Drawing, dance, and meditation will also be used to recover the jewels from the dragon.

Owning the Shadow

Paul Rebillot

We have met the enemy and they is us.

— Pogo, Walt Kelly

One of the most important and frequently avoided parts of our psychological development is the ability to own that part of ourselves we do not like, the part Jung called the "Shadow."

The more we are limited by not owning, not experiencing the negative features of our personality, the more these energies are suppressed and ultimately disappear from consciousness. We are then constantly stalked by those parts of ourselves we refuse to own, and become projectors of our own disowned energy. We create enemies in the hope that blame and anger will destroy them, and in turn destroy that part of ourselves we don't want to know about. As we attempt to destroy others, what is really destroyed is any contact with the truth of our own being.

Participants will work on discovering the internal dynamic that helps create the "other guy," or the "bad guy." What are we really trying to destroy? What are we fighting against? How are we the enemies we create? How can we bring that forceful energy into awareness? The negativity that we project outward can only be understood and changed from within ourselves — from that aspect of consciousness that resists acknowledgment and remains isolated from the rest of our being.

The objective of the workshop is twofold: first, to help participants own the shadow—the negative, dark, violent energies of the self; and second, to learn to deal with those parts of ourselves we have projected this negative

The Joseph Campbell Foundation: A Mythological Toolbox

Coordinated by Robert Walter & Jean Erdman

In Memories, Dreams, Reflections, Carl Jung tells us that he had hardly finished writing Symbols of Transformation when he suddenly realized "what it means to live with a myth, and what it means to live without one." When he asked himself by what myth he was living, he found that he did not know; and so, he wrote, "I took it upon myself to get to know 'my' myth, and I regarded this as the task of tasks." How do you come to know the myth that has shaped your life, the myth that governs it? And how can you nourish, enrich, deepen, or, when necessary, transform that myth? In this workshop some of Joseph Campbell's closest associates will present an array of mythological "tools," various techniques and approaches that you can use to explore and answer such questions as these. Participants will include: dancer and choreographer Jean Erdman (Mrs. Joseph Campbell); Tai Ji dancer, artist-calligrapher, Chungliang Al Huang; Campbell's biographers, Robin Larsen and Stephen Larsen; Mimi Lobell, a scholar of myth and symbol; architecture professor and author, John Lobell; and Campbell's editor and literary executor, playwright/director Robert Walter.

Using slide lectures and a variety of experiential exercises, we will survey Campbell's essential ideas, trace the historical morphology of mythology, examine the heroic "Monomyth," investigate the demise of the goddess, traverse the chakra system, seek to awaken our mythic imaginations, and chart our personal rites of passage. In shared play, we will examine storytelling, movement, journaling; sacred space, metaphor, masks, life maps, totemic animals, mandalas, and other potential mythological tools.

All participants are asked to bring a journal and to read the Foundation's publication Joseph Campbell: The Man and His Ideas, which will be sent to all registered participants prior to the workshop.

Body Work Intensive: Strategies for Healing Post Trauma Stress
Carolyn Bradaddock & Char Pias Brenner
Awareness of the effects of Post Trauma Stress and sexual abuse/assault is growing among massage practitioners, body workers, and other professionals. In the case of sexual abuse/assault, the body was the scene of the crime. For that reason, survivors often utilize massage and other forms of body work as part of their healing process. When a worker places his or her hands on a survivor, memories may begin to flood in, or body sensations can become blocked. The focus of this workshop will be to explore specific strategies for working with Post Trauma Stress, and how it particularly affects sexual abuse/assault survivors. It will be oriented toward massage practitioners, body workers, medical professionals, and anyone interested in learning more about specific body-oriented intervention techniques.

In working with sexual abuse survivors, sensitivity to the many dimensions of communication is critical; communication must be clear, with an awareness of the power and effect of words. Also important are boundary issues, intuitive knowing and seeing, being present, and a special sensitivity to the risks the client feels in being touched. Emphasis will be placed on establishing safety, choice, control, and trust in the practitioner/client relationship. We will also focus on the survivor's breath patterns, responses of dissociation, flashbacks, body sensations, energy blocks, and difficulty accepting the positive. Much of the weekend will be experiential.

There will be time for some individual work and for scheduling massage and other body work.

Note: This workshop is for professionals and others who work with sexual abuse victims/survivors.

Creative Writing Brainstorming
Herbert Gold
Even professional writers can learn to speak from the heart — in fact, anyone can whose feelings are strong, buried, and complex. We will grasp the issues of love and death, communicate with each other, explore the talents even gifted artists don't fully understand. We'll make some jump starts. Bring paper, writing equipment, and a willingness to ride the rhythms of "speed eloquence." $350

Spring Shake-Up
Deborah Anne Medow
Spring is here and now is the time to get up and move and shake off some of that winter sluggishness! Renew the aliveness of your own body, and see how the way you move often reflects how you feel. Become more aware of your old habits and patterns, and give yourself the opportunity to explore and express new possibilities for change.

This weekend will combine sessions which include elements of dance, yoga, massage, aerobic movement, and theater games for shaping up the outside, with quiet, meditative time for turning inside. The purpose of the workshop: tune in to yourself and tune up your Body, Mind, and Spirit! $350

Week of March 28-April 2

Massage Intensive
Deborah Anne Medow & Rita Thangaraj
The basic approach of Esalen massage consists of long, flowing strokes which contribute to deep relaxation and a feeling of wholeness. To achieve these goals participants will be instructed in fundamental methods of Esalen massage which include: quality of touch, breath awareness, stress reduction, and grounding techniques. The concept of working with someone instead of on someone is another essential aspect that will be addressed. In addition to the giving and receiving of touch, a willingness to explore the talents even gifted artists don't fully understand.

This workshop will combine sessions which include elements of dance, yoga, massage, aerobic movement, and theater games for shaping up the outside, with quiet, meditative time for turning inside. The purpose of the workshop: tune in to yourself and tune up your Body, Mind, and Spirit! $350

Sexual Abuse Survivors: Transforming Interventions in Body, Mind, and Spiritual Healing
Carolyn Braddock

Countless numbers of children consider the exploitation of their bodies part of their formative experience. Trusted adults assault, neglect, and sexually abuse them, leaving physical and emotional scars. During sexual abuse/assault, the body is the scene of the crime. Focusing on body, mind, and spiritual intervention, this seminar adds new body-focused dimensions to traditional strategies in dealing with those who have experienced sexual abuse.

Special skills are needed by those who work with these victims/survivors, and the survivors themselves need to develop special skills to overcome the physical and emotional consequences of being abused. Seminar participants will learn a unique form of body-centered intervention. The group will also explore the victim/survivor’s physical and spiritual belief systems. The importance of understanding the various dimensions of a person’s reactions — especially body reactions — to sexual abuse is the key to developing predictive tools and guidance for the intervention process.

Much of the week will be experiential. Participants will be actively involved in intervention demonstrations, discussions of ethical issues, and case presentations from a body-oriented perspective. The focus will be on individual and group process with some time devoted to legal issues. Breath work, sound, movement, gestalt, body work, Tai Ji, role-playing, and creative cognitive work will also be used, creating a balance between work and play.

There will be time for some individual work and for scheduling massage and other body work.

What Is This Thing Called Love?
Myths of Romantic Love
Madeleine Nold

Why are we drawn to stories of love and loss, unrequited love, and blissfully romantic endings? What stories, fairy tales, songs, and mythologies have influenced our expectations? This workshop is about all kinds of love, stressing what does and does not work in love relationships. There will be a lecture with slides that explore myths of romantic love exemplified in Eastern and Western mythology. We will focus on topics that include:

- Our expectations of love
- What draws us to our partners
- How we seek to fill needs left unmet from childhood
- The pitfalls of repeating destructive family patterns of loving
- Healing false expectations

Through gestalt, movement, and other expressive work, participants will draw on their personal lives, experiencing their stories juxtaposed against the panorama of literature and myth. What would it mean to exist as healthy individuals, coming together to share love without the projections of unfulfilled childhood needs? $675

Ceremonies of Spring:
Vision, Rebirth, Time of the Eagle
Carol Proudfoot-Edgar & Bob Edgar

With the return of spring, winter’s sleep is broken and the life germinating in the womb of the earth bursts forth. This is the season of awakening, of birth, resurrection, flowering. Released from winter’s cold, our physical, mental, emotional, and spiritual energies emerge. Spring is sometimes called the “Time of the Eagle,” of seeking and acquiring vision. The Eagle represents the powers of unfettered spirit, of seeing far and wide, and of illumination. Eagle is the creature who, though soaring higher than all others, must return to the Earth for nourishment and thus teaches us about feeding our visions and nourishing our aspirations.

This workshop will focus on the theme of empowerment. The activities and ceremonies will allow us to absorb the power and strength of the natural world into our minds, bodies, hearts, and souls. There will also be drumming, chanting, and shamanic journeying. Participants will create ceremonial objects which can be used after the workshop for assisting in personal transformation. Bring journals, drums, and rattles (if you have them). $675

The Modern Warrior and the Samurai Game
George Leonard
& Annie Seyron Leonard
A man or woman with outward courage dares to die;
A man or woman with inward courage
dares to live. — Lao Tzu

The Modern Warrior is not one who goes to war but rather one who exhibits integrity in every aspect of living, one who seeks to attain control then act with abandon. For the Modern Warrior, life is vivid, immediate, and joyful. He or she lives each day to the full, and is fulfilled in serving others. This workshop is based on the premise that to achieve peace in the world and harmony in daily life, it might well be necessary for men and women to reown the warrior ideal.

Through the centering and movement exercises of LET (Leonard Energy Training) as well as through participation in a Samurai Game, you will be invited to get in touch with your own unacknowledged powers, and thus to discover the hidden warrior within. You will practice alternative ways of dealing with conflict and stress. Guidance will be offered on how to apply the warrior ideal to daily life. This workshop will not be physically strenuous. All that is needed is a generous heart and a willingness to participate.

Medicinal Herbology:
An Esalen Garden Workshop
Jeanine Pollak

This weekend workshop will present in-depth coverage of 40 useful plants growing fresh in the Esalen Garden. How to identify, prepare, and formulate will be covered with respect to the medicinal, nutritional, and cosmetic aspects of the plants. Using the garden as our classroom, we will make fresh infusions, sun teas, limenists, and tinctures. Safe and effective formulas for common colds, flu, sore throats, headaches, and digestive/respiratory systems will also be discussed. Modern scientific research and herbal pharmacology, as well as tradition and folklore, are areas we will draw from as we explore the uses and energetics of each plant. Participants will gain detailed knowledge of many common plants and the safe and effective use of herbs in daily life.

A Message from the Tasaday
John Nance

This is a workshop of self-investigation and revelation using the true story of the Tasaday — the small group of gentle, cave-dwelling, stone-tool-using people in a Philippine mountain rain-forest. Until 1971 the Tasaday thought the tropical forest was the entire world, and their 20-year-long journey from that ancient land of Mindan-ao to the modern city of Manila and home again offers a dynamic and insightful metaphor for our own lives. Their story helps us see what we take for granted — not merely material goods, wheels, electronics, indoor plumbing, and mirrors — but also concepts such as male supremacy and original sin.

The Tasaday also show us the pain and dislocation that comes with rapid growth and change, which includes recent outrages against their authenticity. Claims that they are imposters and their community a hoax provide a powerful example of the blind spots in our lives individually and as a culture. Many have written about the Tasaday — Joseph Campbell, Ashley Montagu, Lewis Mumford — and have found their story a fascinating way in which to better understand what it is to be human.

John Nance has devoted much of the last two decades to documenting the Tasaday's meeting with the modern world. Through writing, movement, and visualization, participants will examine their own journeys by connecting with the Tasaday through film, video, photographs, and stories about the Tasaday and the people's own descriptions of the land beyond the forest — "The place where the eye sees too far"; of the soul as the part of you that sees the dream"; and the coming of outsiders as "lightning that struck without warning."

T'ai Chi Ch'uan:
An East/West Approach
Kenn Chase

This seminar will present a demonstration form of t'ai chi ch'uan, a shortened version derived from the classical Yang style, which contains 54 balanced, fluid, and graceful postures. Also included will be mind/body alignment methods, chi kung Taoist breathing methods, and hours of practice and refinement of the traditional t'ai chi movements. Practiced five to ten minutes daily, this gentle martial art can calm the mind and aid the student in achieving a centered perspective for daily living in a busy world.

A Workshop for Couples:
Independence & Intimacy
Mary Goldenson (Devarani)

Very little in our culture prepares couples for the challenge, "There is room for both of us." Too often the relationship becomes a battleground for unresolved issues, hurts, and beliefs.

In this workshop, couples will have an opportunity to explore and reclaim the unspoken expectations they project onto each other, begin healing past hurts that create distance, and learn new ways of communicating. They will have a supportive environment where they can experience themselves as courageous and able to take risks. Experiential processes will be drawn from gestalt, Reichian work, dance, imagery, and meditation. $675

Socratic Midwifery: Uncovering Beliefs that Block Human Excellence
Pierre Grimes

Pierre Grimes will discuss the Socratic art of philosophical midwifery and show how it addresses a new class of human problems: the pathologos. A pathologos is a false belief about oneself and one's reality, and although its presence is unsuspected, it is unquestioningly accepted as true. It has a pervasive influence on our lives; it keeps us bound by our past and is irreconcilable with the attainment of our highest goals. The pathologos distorts our waking world, but in our dreams it is presented purely, without compromise or distortion. Philosophical midwifery provides a method for discovering the origin, maintenance, and dissolution of the pathologies which functions behind and through our problems, and offers a new way of understanding the function of the mind.

This workshop will offer participants insights into the nature of their own pathologies — both in the waking and dream world — and an understanding of how it is passed on by each generation. It will explore family dynamics and how to cultivate excellence in the family.

Philosophical midwifery is unlike the interpretative systems of psychology. Even though a mode of Socratic dialectic has been adapted by psychologists for clinical practice (called Dialectical Rational Psychotherapy), its more profound use is for those who seek to achieve the most significant goal of human excellence: to know thyself.

Selections from Pierre Grime’s book, Philosophical Midwifery as a Mode of Rational Psychotherapy and Its Validation, will be available to participants, as well as his computer program, To Artemis: The Challenge of Knowing Thyself.

Healthy Eating
Jane Miletich, Grace Stern Swanson & Robert Swanson

One of life’s important decisions is choosing what we put in our bodies. But what is the optimum dietary program? There is special interest research to support almost any position. What we don’t know is monumental, but evidence suggests that holding on to cultural dietary habits and myths may be hazardous to our health.

In this workshop we will practice dietary methods designed to cleanse the system and allow each individual to make clear, responsible choices about what to eat. Our food is harvested from the Esalen farm and other local organic farms, and delivered daily to our specially designed kitchen, where we will practice a somatic approach to health. Join in on the harvesting and get hands-on experience preparing cooked and raw food dishes in a variety of ways. Fasting and various dietary preferences such as macrobiotic, living foods, and Ayurveda will be discussed and explored.

The beauty of the Big House will set the stage for a culinary celebration.

Spiritual Democracy: The Organizing Principles for the Twenty-First Century
Daniel Sheehan & Sara Nelson

This seminar will review the interface between the early evolution of political institutions in Western culture and the rise of the Jewish and Christian ethical movements, the role of “spiritual values” in the rise of the political power of the Catholic church during the Middle Ages in Europe, and the recent evolution of the “Liberation Theology” movement in Latin America.

Participants will address the rise of the post-Vatican II ecumenical and inter-faith “social justice” movement, the institution of “social ministry” departments within the mainstream Christian and Jewish religious denominations, and the potential promise of these movements.

The group will also review the role of “spiritual values” in various social justice movements in the history of the United States from the anti-slavery movement, the labor movement, and the struggle for women’s suffrage. $350

Coming Out and Coming Into Relationships
David Hawkins

Our capacity to enter and sustain intimate relationships depends greatly on the role models and experiences we encountered in our families. For gay men in particular, adult loving relationships are shaped by the ways we "came out" and differentiated from our families, and by the ways we were able to remain involved with family and social values needed for our adult journey. They are also influenced by how successfully we found and joined a supportive community and exchanged inherited values for new values more appropriate to a changing lifestyle.

This workshop is for gay men who want to improve the quality of their relationships by:

- Reconsidering their journey to adult sexuality
- Reevaluating methods for seeking acceptance and avoiding rejection
- Reexamining the cost/benefits of strategies for managing stigma
- Rethinking limits on involvement and commitment.

Painting Experience with Michell Cassou & Stewart Cubley

It is rare for most people to use painting for its qualities of inner adventure and self-discovery, to paint purely for the process of exploration, not for the result.

This workshop provides a setting to explore the self through painting — to discover in form and color a powerful tool for uncovering and dissolving blocks to emotional and spiritual expression. Participants will explore a natural way of painting based directly upon feeling. The work takes place in an authentic studio setting with large white surfaces to confront the creative void, along with a rich spectrum of colors and brushes. The workshop may be of interest to persons involved in a wide variety of disciplines, including art, education, counseling, and meditative practices. No prior experience in painting is necessary. Please bring a smock.

Cortical Reeducation® and The Feldenkrais Method®
Harrie Goslin & Patti Lawrence

The habitual way a person sits, stands, or moves reflects patterns that are “wired in” to the nervous system. This information can be erased or changed. By reeducating...
the brain-muscle connection, restrictions in movement are freed, freeing also the lifetime habits organized around that movement.

This work is a relearning of the ease and fluidity that was taken for granted as a child and lost somewhere along the way. Physical injury, emotional trauma, or ongoing stress all evoke a protective response from the body. These patterns, necessary at the time, remain when no longer needed, outside of awareness, and continue to cause discomfort and unnecessary limitation. Freeing them results in relief of chronic pain or tightness, a more restful sleep, and a higher energy level. By changing muscular holding patterns, the entire protective posture is altered, deeply affecting the body’s habitual defense system. Thus, new movement possibilities mean new self-image possibilities.

Fears and anxieties have corresponding muscular habits. Verbal information, no matter how brilliant, or spiritual practice that fails to extinguish these muscular habits, will fail to totally eliminate the toxic behavior.

This workshop is for those who are physically active and fit and want to increase their skills while learning to reduce risk or injury; for the sedentary or those dealing with the after-effects of injuries; for the athlete, the dancer, and those who “live in their heads”; and for individuals who feel chronically tired and stressed and want to learn how to take better care of their neck, shoulders, and back, to improve their posture and breathing, and to live and move with more flexibility and comfort.

Hypnotic Innovations:
Investigations in Living,
Using Ericksonian Hypnosis
Paul Lounsbury & Nancy Winston

In the moment before a new idea unfolds, our attention becomes so fully focused that time seems to disappear. Perhaps without quite realizing it, we forget where we are and what’s around us. These spontaneous states are the stuff out of which hypnotic experience unfolds and through which unconscious possibilities take form.

In this workshop, participants will investigate the hypnotic approaches developed by Milton Erickson and the systemic principles generated from Gregory Bateson’s research in communication. They will explore how unconscious processes can be mobilized to creatively disrupt limiting life patterns, to organize innovative behaviors outside the range of normal conscious controls, and to more fully optimize their current living and work situations. Structured trance experiments and discussion will support the week’s work.

This workshop may be of special interest to those in the helping professions as well as managers who want to expand their frames of reference and extend their understanding of Ericksonian hypnosis and communication skills. $675

Sensory Awareness
with Charlotte Selver

Some forty years ago Charlotte Selver’s teacher, Elsa Gindler, began exploring the natural potential of the human being. The work that evolved was an approach through a disciplined practice, involving the person as a total organism. Gindler’s innovative methods very often unearthed, liberated, and cultivated abilities and sensitivities which her students had never been conscious of possessing.

To “awaken” means that one’s energies — neuromuscular and perceptive — become altered, leading to greater movability, both psychologically and physically, and to a fuller use of the senses and intuitive powers. In order for this to occur, a deeper peace is needed so that sensations can become clearer, and rigidities, pressures, and preconceptions can gradually dissolve. In becoming “tuned in” by another person, or by a task or given situation, powers arise and come into play which correspond exactly to the demands of the occasion. This calls for permissiveness, subtle reactivity, and openness to the moment.

With the cultivation of these functions, our lives can unfold in a far richer and more responsive way than what we are used to. We can restore the delight of ever-new experiencing which was our birthright in childhood, but lost in the course of our education into adulthood.

Enjoying Poetry

Brother David Steinl-Rast

Nature and people at Esalen help poetry come alive. So many have found this to be true that Brother David is offering a new selection of poems in the same workshop format and setting.

Poems are high-energy food for life’s journey. Some of us thrive on this fare; for them, this weekend will provide the delights of a festive meal. Others have been estranged from poetry ever since high school days; they are likely to discover rooms of their own house they have never entered before.

Why does school spoil for many young people the taste for poetry? Why does Sunday school turn so many away from religion? These two phenomena are closely related. Yet, it is never too late to discover the divine poet child within us, a child more alive than we ever dreamed or imagined. $350

Psychodrama: Exploring the Possible
Maurica Anderson

In an exchange with Freud, J.L. Moreno, the creator of psychodrama, said: “I begin where you leave off. You analyze dreams until they are dead. I give people back their dreams.”

Psychodrama is an active and often humorous process which improves life scenes as a way of identifying and expressing feelings, gaining insight and empathy, improving relationships, and developing creativity and spontaneity. In this workshop participants will have the chance to explore and experience a variety of personal decisions with the option of “choosing not to choose.”

The workshop is experiential; the degree of active involvement will be up to the individual. $350

Andrew Weil

Drugs are powerfully fascinating whether you use them or not. Bring all your questions about drugs to this intensive weekend with Andrew Weil, one of the world’s experts and author of The Natural Mind and How to Know About Drugs.

Participants will come away from this workshop better informed about all aspects of interactions between drugs and the human mind/body, and better able to help friends and family members make informed decisions about drug use. $350

True Stories: Autobiographic Storytelling
Spalding Gray

Everyone has at least one good story in them. The aim of this workshop is to create a safe, supportive space to give birth to that story. Each member of the workshop will be asked to function as storyteller, audience, and critic. When you’re not telling, you’ll be asked to listen and respond.

Participants should bring a tape recorder to record their own work.

This workshop is limited to thirteen people who will be chosen on the basis of personal letters sent to Spalding Gray, c/o Esalen. The letters should explain why you feel it is important for you to take this workshop. Please send no fees until you are notified by mail of your acceptance. All letters should be sent to Spalding Gray, c/o Esalen, Big Sur, CA 93920, and must be received by March 15, 1993. $675

Self-Empowerment and Purification: The Farther Reaches of Gestalt
Julian Silverman

We have graduated from the infants’, ‘I can’t help myself,’ to the adults’, ‘I can’t help myself because…’ But psychology and psychiatry were never meant to be after-the-fact justifications for continuing neurotic behavior, behavior which does not permit the individual to live up to the maximum of his capacities.

—The Gestalt Approach

This gestalt workshop combines experimental and didactic sessions. The focus will be on the “next step” — integrating a cleansing process with a psychology of self-empowerment. The leader will provide an overview of the mind for a psychology of self-empowerment, one grounded in modern science and ancient wisdom. $675

Cliff Dwelling: The Adventure of Spontaneity
Nina Wise

As part of a research experiment, rats were put in a maze with one path leading to a small room with food, another leading to a room charged with an electrical current, and a third path leading to a room with playthings. The rats learned to avoid the electric shock, but the food room and the play room were equally popular. Play, it seems, can be as essential and instinctive to living beings as food and nutrition.

With the advent of technology and specialization, we modernized folk have forgotten how to play together. In tribal societies people sing, make music, drum, dance, and tell stories as part of their daily lives. Play is an integral part of their culture, yet in our’s we let singers sing, dancers dance, actors act, while we simply sit and watch. Maybe we have forgotten how good it feels to participate.

This workshop is about remembering: remembering how to dance, how to sing, how to tell stories about our lives, how to make it up as we go along, how to be together in a way that is lively, spontaneous, and creative. The workshop will include meditation, chanting, relaxation, movement, singing, writing, drawing, and theater games.

We will also do spontaneous performance with and for each other in a safe and supportive environment.

Note: Everyone is afraid of performing, even professionals. Don’t let your fear stop you. It’s fun, challenging, and rewarding. $675

Yoga Works: Tools for Well-Being
Chuck Miller & Mary Ezary

Yoga is an ancient system that uses the body, breath, and mind to energize and transform all aspects of living. It is not only an excellent source of physical exercise, but also a unique and powerful tool for self-realization. The practice of yoga can help release blocks that cause mental and physical pain and prevent us from knowing our divine nature. It is also a great way of dealing with the stress of daily living.

The invigorating and vitalizing effects of yoga become readily apparent as the body opens and stretches. Breath is the link between mind and body, and various breathing methods will be taught to help reduce tension and cleanse the system. The serenity and clarity that is the goal of yoga will be sought through meditation exercises, which can calm and focus the mind. Yoga philosophy and theory will be discussed, as well as nutrition and its role in overall physical health.

All levels are welcome and no prior experience is required, only an adventurous spirit. For further information contact the leaders at (310) 393-5150. $350

Starting to Heal Yourself, with Meir Schneider

Subtle expectations about aging and health have programmed us to believe that our bodies are destined for certain levels of decline; that fatigue will increase as the day progresses; and that health naturally declines with aging. This workshop will encourage a change in those expectations. Participants will imagine a higher level of health and mobilize those resources that promote healing through proper awareness and movement.

Meir Schneider's methods of self-healing will be explored using subtle movement, breathing, relaxation, self-massage, and vision exercises in order for each person to experience both nature and contemplation deeply. Direct experience and contemplative reflection are the key words.

Earth under our feet on gentle hikes, water of the Pacific pounding against the shore, air of Big Sur's refreshing breezes, fire that heats Esalen's hot springs — all the elements of nature combine to touch our bodies and to raise our minds and spirits.

"Nature is never spent: there lives the dearest freshness deep down things," writes the mystic poet Gerard Manley Hopkins. To drink from that freshness, from the fountain of youth, that's what this workshop is all about. $675

- Arthritis, both osteo- and rheumatoid
- Spine problems, including scoliosis, sciatica, and degenerated disks
- Vision problems, from myopia to macula degeneration
- Neuromuscular ailments such as multiple sclerosis, muscular dystrophy, etc.
- High blood pressure, diabetes, and other circulatory diseases
- Digestive disorders such as spastic colon, colitis, krhœne's disease and constipation

The Living Core of Christianity

Brother David Steindl-Rast & Tom Hurley

The treasures of all the world's spiritual traditions are available to us today. Enriched by our encounter with these traditions, we are beginning to understand Christianity in more universal terms. Yet the essence of Christianity is sometimes difficult to discern, considering that the extremes range from fundamentalism and authoritarianism, to picking and choosing whatever suits individual whims.

The dialogue between Brother David and Tom Hurley will draw on the questions and experiences of participants and attempt to reclaim the living core of Christianity. The group will explore the contemplative perspective on key issues in modern life and on such concepts as God, faith, grace, sin, redemption, love, and healing. Can these cornerstones of the Christian tradition still be living realities which guide the unfolding of our lives? Participants will also examine Christianity's relationship to other spiritual traditions and movements in the modern world. This will help elucidate the particular qualities of the Christian tradition and the areas in which it can become more whole — for example, through a new appreciation of the body, nature, and the feminine. The goal of the workshop will be practical: to find those aspects of Christian faith and practice which strengthen the spiritual foundations of our daily lives.

Participants will have the opportunity to practice contemplation and share in celebration and prayer. $675

Intermediate Massage Workshop

Peggy Morrison Horan & Carl Chase

This workshop is designed for those who have had some basic Esalen massage experience and are ready for the next step. We will work on several levels: centering ourselves through meditation and movement, and developing our sensitivity and awareness to better communicate with and support those we work with. We will also work with specific techniques for deep release, paying close attention to correct body use. Our pace will be relaxed, allowing time to enjoy the hot baths and explore the natural beauty of the surroundings.

Visual Thinking with the Polaroid Camera

Cay Lang

This workshop will use the Polaroid camera as a tool for gaining access to your imagination. Polaroid photography requires little knowledge of traditional photographic technique, and, because instant images are produced, encourages an open, playful attitude toward image-making rather than concern for making a perfect print. We will be able to begin working right away with the larger issues — personal values, truth and lies, the emotional power of images, and translating what you feel to what you see.

We will make images and more images. To paraphrase Milorad Pavlić: We will photograph as we eat; using the right eye as a fork, the left as a knife, and tossing the bones over our shoulders as we go. The workshop will help you develop your creative abilities and a journal full of images and ideas to help you in future creative pursuits. Bring a Polaroid camera and 15 to 30 rolls of film, along with a bound journal with white paper, something to write with, and something of your essence to photograph — preferably larger than a cupcake and less valuable than your Dalmation. $675

Recovery for Adult Children and Co-Dependents

Julie Boudien & Richard Balaban

This weeklong journey will be a healing of the "child within" in an atmosphere of safety and respect. Experiencing and integrating the past allows us to live in the present, no longer tyrannized by previous pain and outmoded behaviors. We can be freed to exist more fully in relationship with ourselves and others. Issues specific to both men and women will be explored. Treatment providers and people in all stages of recovery are welcome.

Crazy Wisdom: A Weekend of Philosophy and Laughter

West "Scoop" Nisker, Paul Krassner & Ed Greenberg

Seriousness is the only refuge of the shallow.

—Oscar Wilde

This workshop is an opportunity to have a real good time while exploring your own sense of humor and ability to play. Through the use of improvisational theater games, writing exercises, leader presentations, and group discussion, participants will allow themselves to become clowns, jesters, tricksters, and fools as we examine the lighter side of our life and times. Workshop presentations will include coyote stories, Taoist and Zen humor, the writings of Mark Twain, plus audio and video tape excerpts from great humorists such as Charlie Chaplin, Lenny Bruce, Nichols and May, Robin Williams, and Richard Pryor. Participants will also work in groups to develop a humorous theatrical presentation for our traditional Saturday night gathering.

You don't have to be funny to join this workshop, simply open to the playful possibilities of the moment. At least one belly laugh is guaranteed. $350

Watercolor: A Window into Nature and the Self

Sim Van der Ryn

Watercolor sketching outdoors is a simple, fluid, and fun way to record your reactions and impressions of landscape and nature. It teaches many things about yourself and place without formal training in drawing or painting. The leader's method focuses on letting go of the feeling that you "don't know how to draw" so that you can directly experience changing light, form, and color — the essence of place.

The class is designed for beginners as well as those with watercolor experience. We use a simple field kit so that equipment and technique do not get in the way of your individual possibilities and responses. The rich and varied Esalen landscape offers all kinds of inspiring watercolor possibilities which the leader can help you experience and paint.

$350 (plus $85 materials fee paid directly to the leader. It includes a "field kit" of brushes, pigments, palette, and papers which will last for many painting sessions after the workshop. If you already watercolor, contact the leader at (415) 332-5806 for the recommended supplies.)

Experiencing
Psychic/Intuitive Abilities
Anne & Jim Armstrong
Their experience with thousands of workshop participants over the past 27 years has led Anne and Jim Armstrong to believe that everyone is intuitive — that intuition is part of humankind's standard equipment. The goal of this workshop is to have everyone experience their own innate intuitive ability, using it at will, on demand. This will be accomplished through exercises and meditation, with a minimum of discussion, allowing each individual to recognize his or her own particular style of perception, and to trust the intuitive input they receive. Anne will use her intuitive abilities developed over the past 30 years to guide the participants in arriving at useful, accurate data.

The spiritual and ethical aspects of the intuitive/psychic process will also be addressed, as well as the leaders' belief that intuition development is the gateway to Divine Wisdom and should be the outgrowth of a healthy spiritual practice. They will demystify the intuitive/psychic process and encourage participants to use it in all areas of their lives — personal, professional, and spiritual. Real life situations presented by participants will be selected for psychic-intuitive practice. $350

Time-Shifting: Creating Time for Your Life
Stephan Rechtschaffen
As we constantly strive to be "on time" in our fast-paced, over-scheduled lives, we lose touch with living in the flow of time. We are a society plagued with time-sickness. Caught up in the stress of running to work, home, recreation, or other responsibilities and interests, we don't have time for the important things. Anxious about the future, regretful of the past, we miss the fullness of the moment.

This workshop will help participants understand their own attitudes toward time and how those attitudes affect their life-style, health, and longevity. Methods that move perception away from societal time pressures into the often unexplored territory of freedom-within-time will be introduced, along with meditation, visualization, time-evaluation and planning (not scheduling).

From this vantage point participants can explore how dysrhythmic, hurried schedules affect their relationships, work, and creativity. Use their expanded sense of time to define what they really want in their lives and what their real priorities are; and enjoy the simple power and pleasure of being present in each moment.

Week of May 2–7
Yoga: A Week of Learning and Rejuvenation
Ganga White & Tracey Rich
Presenting East/West teachings in a way that is contemporary, humorous, and applicable to modern living, the leaders will offer a week of physical, mental, and spiritual rejuvenation. Days will begin with instruction in an ancient Hatha yoga movement series that is new to this country and which combines grace and flow with posture, pranayama (breath), and meditation. Participants will be shown a 45-minute balanced, aerobic yoga practice they can continue at home. Afternoons and evenings will be for group discussion and exploration into the teachings and principles of the art of enlightened living.

Topics will include diet and nutrition, how yoga works, aligning and restructuring the body, and awakening subtle energies.

Through Jhana (the yoga of wisdom and perception), participants will begin observing the thought processes and patterns that dictate their lives. They will look at the areas of love, responsibility, relationship, freedom, and death.

Participants at all levels are welcome; no previous experience is necessary. For additional information, contact the leaders at (805) 964-1944. $675

Five-Day Lomi Intensive
Kathryn Lydecker, Johanna Purni & Robert Sanoff
In the formative years of life, human beings learn to embody the beliefs and posture of their individual family system and the culture into which they are born. Many individuals unconsciously continue to shape their lives in reaction to these influences, often at the expense of their own creativity and vitality.

The aim of this workshop will be for participants to observe how they feel, think, and move themselves through life. By attending to bodily-felt experience, moment to moment, and by distinguishing between sensation and thinking, the path to reclaiming one's authentic self opens. Through this process of developing awareness, it is possible to make responsible choices in daily life and to live with integrity and gentleness.

This workshop provides an arena for developing mindful awareness and for unmasking habits that keep us from ourselves and hinder relationships. Lomi work includes meditation, movement, gestalt, aikido, and Reichian work. $675

Spiritual Psychology: An Adventure in Consciousness
Jessica Moore Britt
This workshop is for individuals who find their personal and professional practices reaching into spiritual dimensions and are seeking support and understanding. It will be a time for in-depth personal inquiry into... the relationship between spiritual and psychological work. Our work will be grounded in awareness practices, self-remembering exercises, object relations theory, meditation, and the Diamond Approach of A.H. Almaas. There will be didactic material, and emphasis will be on personal exploration into the mystery of the self guided by a love of truth.

Recommended reading: Poems by Rumi; books by A.H. Almaas, Idries Shah, and Chogyam Trungpa.

Rituals for Healing

Jeanne Achterberg & Frank Lawlis

Rituals give meaning, richness, and structure to life’s passages. They are for communication and celebration, for solemnity and deep inner silence. They are a visible manifestation of common human experience. Most of all, rituals are ceremonies of healing.

During this workshop, participants will explore components of healing ritual and discuss why rituals work. Sounds and symbols of rituals from several cultures will be experienced. The group will create and participate in healing rites which incorporate ancient wisdom with the belief systems from modern medicine, science, and psychology. The focus of the ritual work will be the healing power of the imagination.

This program may be of interest to health professionals and others who are on a healing path — seeking harmony, balance, and wholeness.

The Soul of the World:

A Multi-Media Workshop

Phil Cousineau, David Darling & Eric Lawton

Call the world, if you please, the vale of Soul-Making. —John Keats

Saints, sages, and soul singers down through the ages have told us that a soulful world calls for a cultivation of sacred attention, the opening of the eyes of the heart, a quest for beauty not only in art and philosophy, but in the ordinary things usually ignored in the world. To “make holy the hours” of our lives is more than a plunge into our personal souls, but an encounter with the soul, the essence of virtually everything around us, including our community and the natural world.

This live performance workshop will offer a cross-cultural overview of the soul from Egyptian Gnostics, Australian Aborigines, medieval mystics, to the sweet soul music of Ray Charles and Aretha Franklin, to the groundbreaking archetypal psychology of James Hillman and Thomas Moore. Each session will be highlighted by the telling of tales of the soul by Phil Cousineau, co-writer of the film The Hero’s Journey: The Life and Work of Joseph Campbell; a slide show by award-winning photographer Eric Lawton, using images from over 60 countries from Ireland to India; and the synchronized music of David Darling, master cellist.

Themes for the weekend include: Origin Myths of the Soul, Soul and the Body, Soul in Art and Music, Eros and Psyche, Soul Loss, and The Soul of the World.

Recommended reading: Cousineau & Lawton, The Soul of the World: A Modern Book of Hours; Moore, Care of the Soul; and Hillman, Blue Fire.

Self-Affirmation:

A Workshop for People Who Put Themselves Down

William Pennell Rock

Having a hard time believing in yourself? Are you filled with dissatisfaction, guilt, and discontent? Is it difficult for you to accept compliments or trust other people?

The inability to perceive ourselves and others with confidence and optimism can become an exhausting lifestyle. Persistent negativity is often the projection of a chronic incapacity to affirm ourselves, to accede to the fundamental “yes” of our own life and that of the world around us.

This workshop will create a background of support so that participants can access the awareness through which self-affirmation is possible — that part of each person struggling for acceptance and self-trust. Individuals will use examples from their own lives to trace the false internal patterns and imbalances which have created much of their negativity and guilt. There will be exercises and various meditations to capture that moment of grace through which the negative world we create can be transformed.

Buddhism and Deep Ecology

Christopher Reed

How is it possible to live with an awareness of what is happening in our society and in our world? For many there is deep grief, for all of us a nagging malaise. We are destroying our environment, our own home, and neither denial nor activism can fully address the pain and discontent we feel.

Increasingly we discover that the practice of meditation, as taught by the Buddha, is an invitation to engage with life. It is not a way to cut yourself off. The practice of wholehearted awareness naturally leads to an experience of deep inter-connectedness. As we acknowledge the source of our pain — the illusion of separation from the world — we naturally begin taking full and joyful responsibility in our lives.

This workshop is open to anyone who has an interest in the practice of engaged Buddhism and meditation whether or not they have prior meditation experience. It is open to anyone who has ever questioned how they might respond to the situation of these difficult times while cultivating an authentic spirituality.

We will develop the practice of mindfulness with formal sitting and walking meditation. We will use interactive exercises to enhance our capacity for deep listening, and we will also explore contemplative practices that can be used effectively in daily life situations.

The Practical Art of Creative Risk-Taking
David Schiffman

To make effective, creative choices, you need courage, imagination, and the willingness to know your heart and be true to the dreams that live inside it. Choosing this deeper wisdom can often involve the risk of breaking set — the choice to move against the powerful grain of old fears, habits, and constant pressure of other people's expectations. To foster this spirit means contacting the elemental-instinctual parts of our nature, befriending rather than suppressing or denying the sexuality and power out of which initiative and enthusiasm spring.

During this week we will focus on how to develop a more adventurous, resourceful, and buoyant way of living. In an atmosphere based on warmth and humor, we will explore our capacity for mutual tenderness, respect, and honesty. Traditional psychological practices such as gestalt, bioenergetics, and psychosynthesis will be used for intensive individual work, as well as non-traditional innovative approaches in body work, kinesthetic retraining, music, and guided imagery.

Accessing Creative Process
Dianne Laurence

Spontaneity, imagination, trust, and risk-taking are all essential ingredients in the creative life of the individual. They are not parcellled out at birth in limited supply, but are parts of our natural make-up and can be exercised and strengthened. Many people have strong creative instincts which they either ignore or mistrust, often claiming that they "just aren't that creative." In fact, the real issue is whether or not they are willing to take the risk and engage in a relationship that challenges their creative power.

Through theater games and painting, this workshop offers laypeople and artists alike an opportunity to see where and how they joyfully participate and where and how they resist. It is useful for people who are stuck, who want to find a way of going deeper, or who just want to play in areas they've been curious about.

Spirit in Nature:
A Shamanic Workshop
Jo Imlay & John Broomfield

For most of our ancestors, the world was a unified, spirit-filled cosmos in which humans were bound in kinship with animals, trees, rivers, rocks, and sky. Our contemporary culture is attempting to rekindle the belief that by acknowledging the living consciousness of the earth, we have much to learn from our companions in nature.

This workshop will help participants reconnect with the earth and hear nature's voices once again. To open all the senses, time will be divided between talk and meditative silence, group activities and solo explorations, drumming, and shamanic ritual.

Through discussion and videos, participants will be introduced to the spiritual bond with nature embedded in native cultures: Celtic, Himalayan, Arctic, Native American, Polynesian, Australian. These beautiful traditions teach us that everything given by the earth must be held sacred. Against this background, participants will explore their own spiritual experiences in nature and pool ideas on ways to live more lightly on the earth.

Much of the week will be spent out-of-doors in the quiet beauty of Esalen's gardens, groves, and seashore, practicing how to truly see and hear — learning to walk with reverence and joy among our brother and sister creatures.

Life Tides & Timelines
in a Psychedelic World:
A Weekend with Terence McKenna
Where is life carrying us in the brief interval between the Unknowable and the Un-speakable in which we have awareness? Is there sense to be made of being, or is it all sound and fury signifying nothing?

Come join Terence McKenna and his friends for a think-along journey into what matters most. Questioning everything, believing nothing, awaken to the presence of the cosmic giggle, an A-team gaggle of battle-scarred survivors of the sixties and Post-post-modern new explorers of the psychedelic world will join minds to discuss the real frontiers of sexuality, psilocybin, and surrealism. We will reaffirm that the world is truly weird and bound to become stranger. That is the way we like it. Y'all come.

Natural Genius:
An Authenticity of Being
Elisa Lodge

Unleashing the creative spirit will happen only when we recognize that natural genius lies within everything and everybody.

—Buckminster Fuller

Natural genius is a powerful creative force that arises when a deep sense of self-worth and trust is felt, and reflects a wholehearted acceptance of the many facets of our being. We are all geniuses in wonderful and mysterious ways that lie within us waiting to be discovered.

Rather than being judged, evaluated, or fixed, participants are invited to embody and play with self-defeating personal patterns and beliefs that inhibit creativity and genuine self-expression.

By freeing breath, sound, feelings, energy and movement in an ecstatic expression of aliveness from within, participants can contrast the difference between self-imprisonment and inner freedom, pretense and presence, acting and being. This process is an opportunity to dance our own unique dance and voice the wisdom and aliveness from within, participants can and movement in an ecstatic expression of genuine self-expression. By freeing breath, sound, feelings, energy and movement in an ecstatic expression of genuine self-expression.

Sue McKibbin
Every day in the workplace situations arise that intermingle the competing pressures of individual integrity, organizational interest, and the greater good. The modern workplace has become an ethical minefield — full of demands and questions for which there are few clear, black-and-white answers. Workers are continually expected to act in ways that put some people at a great advantage over others.

Finding one's way through these shades of grey is a formidable personal and professional challenge. This workshop will offer participants the insights and strategies they need to thrive in organizational settings without compromising their principles or sacrificing their careers.

Using guided imagery, group discussion, individual analysis, and teamwork, participants will reaffirm their deepest personal values, identify the ethical dilemmas they face at work, and discover ways to bridge the two. This exploration will help each individual reconnect with their own base of integrity and the power they have to live and act from that place — both on and off the job.

Pilobolus Technique: Choreographic Creation
Jonathan Wolken
Since its first appearance, Pilobolus Dance Theatre has been a pioneer in American contemporary dance, creating its own unique method of choreography. This workshop is based on Pilobolus's evolving understanding of technique as a creative collaborative process. Dance is approached not as an inflexible physical regime, but as an expressive medium for people of all ages, backgrounds, and levels of experience.

Taught by Pilobolus founder Jonathan Wolken, this workshop will focus on the choreographic process that makes movement the powerful means of expression it truly is. The group will investigate the lively mixture between form and flow, abstraction and theatricality, strength, force, and balance that define the realm of dance.

Participants will explore a wide variety of movement through improvisation and will choreograph a number of short dances. It will be an opportunity to indulge in the incredible panorama of human motion.

Extensive dance training is not necessary, although a reasonable degree of fitness is advised. Participants should be willing to be physically energetic and enthusiastic.

Protoanalysis™ and the Enneagon: Transcending the Fixation
Michael Kramer, Paule Marx & Steven Strood
This workshop introduces the Arica theory and method of protoanalysis in which the ego fixation is revealed by muscular tensions of the face. Oscar Ichazo, founder of the Arica Institute and originator of the theory of protoanalysis, will determine each participant's fixation from photographic slides submitted prior to the workshop.

The ego fixation is the area of the psyche in which a person is most sensitive. We defend this over-sensitivity with a cluster of reactions which becomes a fixed pattern in childhood. These nine fixations distort our perception of reality and veil our natural, spontaneous, and essential nature.

Once we discover our fixation and break this habitual identification with one point of view, the eight remaining elemental parts of our psyche become enormously enriched. We begin to recognize the defense mechanisms of our fixation as processes which are comical in their predictability. This work is done with humor so that we recognize the ego fixations as simply characters in our "theater of the subjective." The moment we transcend our ego character we experience a far more lucid state of self-awareness.

Participants will study a number of enneagons that work in harmony with the enneagon of the nine fixations. This workshop includes enneagon theory, meditation, diakath breathing, and movement and theater exercises designed to nourish our essential natures.

Please Note: Four 35mm transparencies of each participant's face must be received by April 12, 1993. A letter of explanation about lighting and photography of the slides is available from Esalen, (408) 667-3000.

Recommended reading: Interviews with Oscar Ichazo and Between Metaphysics and Protoanalysis (both, Arica Institute Press); and Master Level Exercise: Psychocalisthenics (Sequoya Press).

Dreaming: The Magic Mirror that Never Lies
Jeremy Taylor
Participants will share and work with their dreams, drawing upon timeless mythological/archetypal images that shape our contemporary individual and collective lives. Although the focus will be dream interpretation in a collective context, the methods are designed to give participants the ability to engage in their own dream work upon returning home.

Those people who are just beginning to explore the world of their dreams, as well as professionals who work with dreams, are welcome. As Jeremy Taylor comments, "Only the dreamer can say with any certainty what meanings his or her dreams may hold, and dream work is one of the few activities that puts beginners and experts on an equal emotional footing from the outset."

Recommended reading: Taylor, Dream Work (Paulist Press); and Where People Fly and Water Flows Uphill (Warner Books).

The Healing Crisis: Fasting as a Pathway
Michael Barnett, Grace Stern Swanson & Robert Swanson
The leaders write: "Traumatic experiences are not only stored in our psyche, but may also be deposited in each cell, creating a 'cellular memory.' As we release psychic energy that has bound these experiences in our personalities, energy is often released from our tissues. This release of energy is often called disease by the Western medical model. This tissue release can be used to our advantage when viewed as a healing crisis. We have been culturally conditioned to avoid this possibility. The healing crisis is precipitated by the body's homeostatic imprint to achieve a balance of mental and physical health. The goal of the workshop will be to have participants experience healing on a cellular level using diet and fasting as the tool."

The workshop will consist of an opening live food meal, a day-plus of juice fasting, two full days of water fasting, another day-plus of juice fasting, and a final live food meal.

There will be three, two-hour group sessions scheduled each day. Detailed didactic material will be shared to provide cognitive understanding. In the remainder of the group time, an eclectic approach to processing individual healing will be pursued. Because we will not have to break for "official" meals, groups can continue for as long as necessary. In addition, there will be a member of the leadership staff available around-the-clock.

Come with an agenda or allow your agenda to develop.

Char Pias Brenner & Kathleen O'Shaughnessy

This workshop is designed for those individuals who are just beginning to explore the art of touch. The Esalen long-stroke massage will be the basis for all that is taught. Into this will be woven energetic work with visualization, movement meditation, cranial holding, and an introduction to Chinese point work. Discussion of various theoretical approaches to hands-on work will be included.

Big Sur Wilderness Experience

Steven Harper

Located on a narrow stretch of land between the Pacific Ocean and the coastal ridge of the Santa Lucia Mountains, Esalen is the trailhead to one of the world's most spectacular wilderness areas. With this natural reserve as the primary teacher, the group will walk into the Los Padres National Forest. Drawing on various traditions, participants can develop the quality of their awareness and open to the natural world.

Weeklong workshops will venture out on five hikes (4-10 miles in length). Weekend workshops will take two hikes (3-6 miles in length). Using Esalen as a base camp, the group will explore the different trails through the natural beauty of the Big Sur backcountry. Days will begin and end at Esalen with short stretching and sharing sessions. Each day-hike will begin after breakfast and will conclude in time to enjoy the hot springs and dinner each evening at Esalen. Basic outdoor skills such as map reading and minimum impact concepts will be practiced. Participants will be taught enough skills to begin exploring the wilderness on their own after these outings. More information will be sent upon registration.

West African Culture Through Music and Dance

Yao Tamakloe & Sarah Abukutsa

Along with his wife Sarah Abukutsa, from Kenya, and his instructor from Ghana, Nac C.K. The Awakened Mind: Brainwave Training

Anna Wise

Inside each person there lies a wealth of knowledge, capacities, and power rarely transmitted to the conscious mind. Brainwave training combined with meditation and biofeedback monitoring helps develop these deeper resources, allowing access to greater creativity, reduced stress, and a deeper awareness and understanding of your inner self.

By assessing the brainwave patterns of hundreds of people who function unusually well, C. Maxwell Cade of the Institute for Psychobiological Research in London began to see similarities in the patterns of optimal states of mind. Drawing upon Cade's work, Anna Wise has developed a training program to help access these optimum states.

Different methods of meditation, visualization, and psycho-physiological relaxation affect our brainwaves in particular ways, as do specific acts such as tongue, eye, and body positions. In this workshop you will learn techniques for brainwave development and management, and begin to determine which methods of practice are best for your particular brainwave pattern.

You will also address how you can use these optimum states once they are achieved for your own creativity, mental flexibility, self-healing, problem-solving, and spiritual development. The Mind Mirror EEG will be used to demonstrate brainwave patterns, and each participant will be able to use an Electrical Skin Resistance Meter to measure the depth of arousal or relaxation of the nervous system.

Freud, Ben Franklin, and Us: Good Ideas Never Grow Old

Will Schutz

The leader writes: "After living and teaching at Esalen for almost 9 years, I left in 1975 searching for applications. How could I use the amazing things I had experienced at Esalen, combine them with my previous scientific education, and help illuminate the world's problems? I discovered several things: that the great new breakthroughs were in fact very old — or at least had old origins; that the world had not appreciated Freud enough to really use some of his ideas for solving society's problems; and that the principles of the American Revolution were wonderfully consistent with the principles of the human potential movement."

"This weekend we will explore these ideas — from both the young and old perspective. Various exercises will be used to work on experiencing the principles on which many of these ideas have been founded — honesty, openness, and self-determination."

Sports Massage
David Streeter
This workshop will focus on aspects of sports massage that prove useful in other massage modalities. The curriculum includes: anatomy, to understand the rhythmic coordination of muscles working together; cross-fiber or cross-friction massage, simple strokes that promote healthy muscle tissue; and trigger point massage, to locate and relieve sensitive and congested points in muscle bundles and tendons. Trigger point work has proven beneficial in reducing myofascial pain caused by chronic tension.

In these five days, participants will progress through a study of the entire musculo-skeletal system via brief lectures, hands-on practice, and one-to-one instruction. This workshop takes a simplified approach to what is usually a complex subject and gives students a better idea of just what lies beneath their hands, and how to more effectively communicate with the human body. It is open to all levels.

Week of May 23–28

Mid-Life Crisis as Spiritual Emergence
Karen Turner
Participants will view mid-life transition in the framework of spiritual emergence and renewal, a time when the old systems the individual has used as foundations seem stripped away, leaving chaos and challenging long-held beliefs. It is a time of soul-searching; of confronting both inflated and deflated self-concepts; of surrendering to deeper, more expanded states of awareness; of learning to trust inner guidance as absolute authority in one’s life.

This workshop will be a rite of passage for both men and women going through this transition. Together they will have the opportunity to discover each participant’s unique self, and how each is in relationship to self, each other, the world, and spirit. Tools for self-exploration and awareness gathered over 25 years from psychology, mysticism, and shamanism will be presented, with time for discussion and sharing. Each workshop is uniquely designed to meet the needs of those attending.

Opening the Feelings
Dale Cummings
Participants will employ Radix® and neo-Reichian methods of emotional release, the most important of which is the Radix® intensive, a period of individual work within a small group setting which can provide emotional support among participants. Grief, pain, fear, and rage that have been held in since childhood can emerge. As the participant accepts and works through these negative feelings, he or she may discover a new capacity for pleasure, trust, and love. In time, the sexual experience may change as feelings of tenderness and sexual intensity intensify and merge. $675

A Weekend with Devers & Nathaniel Branden
In this experiential workshop, Nathaniel and Devers Branden will guide participants through an exploration of the meaning and dynamics of self-esteem, its role and importance in our life, and the most essential practices on which healthy self-esteem depends. Nathaniel Branden began pioneering this field almost four decades ago, and this workshop will include the most recent cutting-edge work done by the leaders.

The phenomena of subselves or subpersonali- ties will be examined, with particular emphasis on how integrating our various subpersonalities contributes to building high self-esteem. $350

Optimum Health: Theory & Practice
Nick Hall & Jim Loehr
The effects of stress on the body are still largely unknown, but research over the past decade has indicated that it may be linked to various diseases. This workshop will explore the theoretical and practical issues relating to stress and outline a training program for optimum health and stress reduction.

Nick Hall, a pioneer in research exploring the relationship between the brain and the immune system, will review the practical issues concerning stress and psychoneuroimmunology. He has published over 100 articles on psychoneuroimmunology and has been featured on "60 Minutes" for his work using imagery with cancer patients. Participants will explore behavioral-based techniques such as relaxation, guided imagery, conditioning, and nutrition as anti-stress interventions.

Jim Loehr will demonstrate his Toughness Training System which evolved from his work with world-class tennis players, including Gabriela Sabatini and Martina Navratilova. Strategies for toughening physically, mentally, and emotionally will be explored. His method for calculating units of stress, units of recovery, and markers of overtraining will be experienced by each participant. The importance, function, and timing of recovery in terms of sleep, diet, active and passive rest will be reviewed in the context of Life Toughening.

Participants need not be extremely athletic or highly conditioned, only interested in increasing their level of fitness.

Couples Workshop
Jack Rosenberg & Beverly Kitaen Morse

Most couples are reluctant to seek help in their relationships; instead they wait, hoping that the relationship will improve. If couples approached medical help the same way they approach marriage counseling, many of them would only visit the doctor when they ought to be lining up at the mortician’s.

Designed on a preventive model, this workshop will deal with the underlying structures and defenses in relationships before they surface as terminal problems. It will also examine the attitudes and beliefs about sexuality and how to make sex better.

Change & Self-Esteem
Phyllis Shankman

Change is an ever-present aspect of living which must be accepted and used creatively if one is to sustain a healthy, interesting, and exciting life. Many individuals talk about wanting change while actively or passively resisting it. Self-esteem, which includes self-acceptance, self-appreciation, and self-confidence, is the aspect of self that enables one to confront resistance and fear, and increases the willingness to change and take risks.

This workshop includes an in-depth process for finding and allowing self-acceptance and for creatively confronting opportunities for change and growth. Group activities include gestalt process work, discussion, massage, meditation, music, dance, art imagery exercises, and whatever else happens spontaneously.

The Clean Cut: The Art of Bokken
Erik Van Riswold

For the striking sword, there is no mind.

—Anonymous

For the true warrior, the sword is not intended to cut another but rather to cut away one’s own demons: fear, anger, hesitation, doubt. The sword is a powerful tool for bringing together mind, body, and spirit through concentrated practice and clear intention.

Participants will use the Japanese wooden sword or Bokken (Bow-ken). Balancing and centering through movement will be practiced, and we will learn to deliver clean, decisive, and loving strikes. Solo movements as well as partner practice will show how formal technique can lead to increased spontaneity and inspiration.

Through non-competitive and non-combative sword work/play, the participant will experience building, focusing, and extending energy. Sword “play” brings one into the present moment, leading to experiences which are enlivening, empowering, and fun. The sword “serves to sever the edge between before and after.” (Takuan Soho, Zen monk, 17th Century.)

This workshop is designed for people with little or no martial arts experience as well as those who would like to broaden their practice. The workshop will be active but not overly strenuous, with periods of gentle stretching and meditation throughout. Although this is a martial arts weapons class, it is based on the principles of aikido: peace, harmony, and concern for the welfare of others. All practice is done in the spirit of love, cooperation, and enjoyment.

Bokkens will be provided on loan or for sale at $20. $350

Short Stories: A Magical Carpet Ride
Michael Krasny

Short stories are a magical journey into worlds that fill us with wonder and provide insight into our own lives, our own stories. Literary artists often hold the mirror to nature and we, in turn, hold their work up as a mirror to ourselves.

This workshop will blend a high level of energetic intellect with the full range of your personal and emotional responses to selected great short stories. We will study a great range of work and search the texts and subtexts for meaning and wisdom applicable to life and the mysteries of the human heart. Works by such writers as Chekhov, Carver, Munro, Joyce, Baldwin, and D.H. Lawrence will be included.

This experience will encourage you to see the artist’s vision of both world and self, and help you to integrate, absorb, and grow. The short story can offer a magical carpet ride toward personal enlightenment, and this weekend will provide a dynamic, charged, and interactive environment where everyone can take a ride. A national literary scholar and award-winning broadcaster will be at the helm. $350

Mountains and Waves
Susan Harper & Steven Harper

Nature is a primary teacher of movement, creativity, and awareness. Being outdoors in the richness and beauty of the natural world awakens our outer senses. Continuum movement takes us inward, heightening the awareness of our inner senses. These five days will combine both practices, integrating the subtle inner explorations that Continuum movement inspires with the activity of day-hiking in the magnificent Big Sur backcountry.

The day-hikes will introduce participants to basic and increasingly-refined awareness practices to enhance their sensitivity to all that wilderness and being out-of-doors offers. In doing so, not only will there be contact with the natural world, but it will be an opportunity to reawaken those elements of wilderness within.

In the indoor sessions, participants will explore movements which express and embody what they have taken in during their walks, enlivening their ability to feel what they see in nature, as well as their own inner nature. Engaging with this sensual environment, the group will play with movement, breath, sound, dreams, and ritual. This is a time for contact with nature and wilderness, inside and out. Participants need not have previous experience in hiking or dance.

To make effective, creative choices requires courage, imagination, and the willingness to know one's heart and be true to the dreams that live inside it. Choosing this deeper wisdom can often involve the risk of breaking set — the choice to move against the powerful grain of old fears, habits, and the constant pressure of other people's expectations. To foster this spirit means contacting the elemental-instinctual parts of one's nature, befriending rather than suppressing the sexuality and the power out of which initiative and enthusiasm spring.

During this week, we will focus on how to develop those qualities that contribute to a more adventurous, resourceful, and buoyant way of living. In an atmosphere based on warmth and humor, they will explore their capacity for mutual tenderness, respect, and honesty. Traditional psychological practices such as gestalt, bioenergetics, and psychosynthesis will be used for intensive individual work, as well as non-traditional innovative approaches in body work, kinesthetic retraining, music, and guided imagery. $675

Together we will discover how the character fixation is an imitation of soul. We will work with the passions and attachments as obscurations of the soul's awakening.

The wisdom of the Enneagram will be set in the ground of Vedanta and Buddhist cosmology and psychology. We will use group exercises, open seat, trance, truth-telling, role-playing, and movement to unmask the fixation and move towards soul awakening. C.E. credit is available for nurses; see pages 50-51. $1025

Weekend of June 11-13

The Vision and Practice of Human Transformation
George Leonard
It may be argued that, in potentia, every human being is a genius, and that the ultimate creative capacity of the human brain/body is, for all practical purposes, infinite. Each of us is a prodigious learning animal, and our ultimate destiny may well be to evolve capacities that would now be termed extraordinary. Perhaps it is only due to the limitations imposed by faulty notions of childrearing and schooling, along with the failure of national vision and practice, that we rarely develop even a small fraction of our potential.

In this hands-on workshop, human potential pioneer George Leonard, informed by his work with Michael Murphy in the development of Integral Transformative Practice, outlines a new human vision and provides a practical map with which you can begin your journey toward the realization of your inborn genius and creativity. The workshop will involve discussion, demonstration, and the gentle movement and imaging exercises of Leonard Energy Training (LET), a practice inspired by the art of aikido.

Intimate Relationships: Keeping the Spark Alive
Ayala Pines
When two people are in love, it seems like the magical spark between them is going to last forever. Unfortunately, more often than not, with the effects of everyday pressures and stresses, the love is eroded and eventually burns out. Burnout is not caused by individual pathology or inadequacy, or major dramatic events. It is caused by a buildup of petty annoyances, minor dissatisfaction, and a gradual increase in boredom. How can this insidious process of love's erosion be prevented? How can a couple in love keep the romantic spark alive?

Participants will be encouraged to find their own romantic images they shared at the beginning of their relationships. This workshop is recommended especially for couples committed to keeping the spark alive in their relationships and for marriage and family counselors. It may also be helpful for individuals who are trying to figure out what went wrong in a relationship that burned out.

Ishta: The Yoga of Empowerment
Rod Stryker
Every human being is a uniquely gifted individual. Each of us is endowed with physical, intellectual, emotional, energetic, and spiritual capacities that can help us achieve peace and a life of limitless possibilities. Yoga can teach us how to awaken these powers, how to fuel the spark of our own uniqueness, and ultimately reach our fullest potential.

Participants will practice the tools of Ishta Yoga, which combine the Yogas for body, mind, and energy cultivation. To unlock our individual potentials we'll use all of the following: Yogic postures to strengthen and relax the body; breathing, chanting, and meditation to still the mind; and visualization to awaken the psyche's deepest resources. The course will include open discussion and theory to personalize our practices.

All levels welcome. For further information please contact: Yoga Works, 1426 Montana Avenue, Santa Monica, CA 90230; (310) 393-5150. $675

Modalities of Pressure Point Release
Arthur Munyer & Laurie Lioness Partez
This workshop addresses those health care workers, doctors, nurses, chiropractors, and body workers interested in using pressure point systems as a way to release and integrate the body's dynamic energies.

Acupressure, trigger point therapy, polarities, and meridian relationships will be explored and discussed in an experiential setting. Demonstrations will explore these topics individually, and we will work with the overlapping and integrative potential of these potent and effective ways of balancing the body. A fluid body work style will sometimes be used to integrate this work.

Emphasis will be placed on strengthening our own inner balance and health during this time together. The study and practice of good nutrition, meditation, and a composite of Eastern and Western health and longevity practices will be introduced.

Participants are invited to bring both humor and emotion to this workshop.

Life Stories:
Healing the Sorrows
Peter Finkelstein
Painful experience is one of life's givens. However, whether we are discussing the inevitable existential concerns of aloneness, freedom, or death, or the personal tragedies of divorce or untimely loss, it is the manner in which we give form to our painful stories that defines our personal development. The attention we give to the ongoing creation of our own story can help us broaden our sources of satisfaction, concentrate our energies productively, and recognize life's wisdom in its many forms.

Participants will use group exercises and individual work to help them acknowledge and integrate painful life experiences such as divorce and bereavement. Dream interpretation, hypnosis, didactic material, and attention to group process may all be used to deepen the experience. Blocks to the successful completion of healing will be explored.

Weekend of June 18–20

Leadership and Consciousness
Amy & Arnold Mindell
The leaders have written: “Individual and group problems in Moscow, Belfast, Berlin, Capetown, and San Francisco forced us to develop new methods for working with global, unmitigated personal and political abuse. We want to share new ideas on individual and group work related to male and female power, eldership, abuse in a global context, sustainable culture beyond adversarialism. Our hope is to awaken everyone to the signs of self and political abuse, to the unconscious use of dominance, humiliation, and rape.

“We will train in inner work, relationship and large group scenes, and discuss work done with terrorists. This seminar will be useful for those interested in connecting personal psychology and politics, abuse awareness and the environment, inner work and racism.”

Embodiment & Vision
Laura DeNuccio (Ma Prita)
The perception of wholeness is the consciousness of healing. —Ernest Holmes
Laura DeNuccio writes: “This is an invitation to those individuals who are aware of an emerging consciousness that is making itself felt and heard personally and globally, and who are searching to fulfill both higher and deeper callings in their lives.

“Through attunement with the Earth and each other, individuals can deepen their capacity to listen to the innate wisdom and intelligence of their bodies. Learning to listen from within can lead back to the ancient wisdom of the Earth — returning us to our sacredness and wholeness. Participants will use breath, sound, and movement as meditations for enlivening the vitality of cells and tissue, for dissolving energetic blockages, and to quiet, still, and expand the mind. The sound meditations have the potential of moving the individual past the limitations of language, creating openings for new thought and inspiration. The emphasis will be on self-care, renewal, and nourishment.

“The group will explore commitment and what it means to fully embody one’s inner vision. What would you love to see in your life? In your world? What is meaningful and significant to you? What’s truly of value? In your world? What is meaningful and significant to you? What’s truly of value?

Weekend of June 25–27
The Subtle Self
Judy Blackstone
All spiritual traditions refer to an essential dimension of existence, calling it unity consciousness, emptiness, universal consciousness, and many other names. This dimension is not an abstract concept. It is the core of our own true nature and can be experienced by anyone who is willing to approach it with patience and openness. Unity consciousness is experienced as clear, mirror-like space, pervading our body and our environment, transcending the duality of self and object. It is deeper than the physical and energetic levels of our being and beyond our psychological defenses, projections, images, and archetypes. Subtle Self Work is a precise method for attuning to the clear space of unity consciousness.

In this workshop we will explore how to relate to others in this clear space, how to commune with nature, how to experience and live in the inner depths of our body. Participants will use daily sitting meditations and sound meditations to stimulate the subtle channels in the body, subtle movement exercises, and verbal and movement process work to stabilize and expand our sense of unity consciousness. In this essential dimension of ourselves, we can find the source of our love, clarity, vitality, and peace.

A Weekend with David Schiffman
The purpose of this workshop is to create a more positive and open-ended self-concept. Through the use of structured risk-taking situations, gestalt, role-playing, fantasy, and group process methods, participants can accept or transcend the self-imposed boundaries from which they approach the world. Emphasis is on searching out personality strengths, individual capacities, and latent powers as a means of achieving productive functioning.

Burnout: Causes and Cures
Elliot Waker Aronson & Ayala Pines

Through lectures and group discussions, participants will have the opportunity to increase their understanding of those aspects of their own work and life that could cause burnout. In addition, they will be provided with the tools and opportunity to learn how to handle these problems in order to increase the productivity and creativity of their relationships with clients and colleagues.

May 23–June 18
Certification in Clinical Hypnosis
Marc Lehrer, Maggie Phillips, Norman Katz & Adam Burke
This course is a synthesis of Ericksonian and Direct Hypnosis, Neurolinguistics, and Biohypnotic Monitoring. It satisfies the hypnosis course requirements for the MFCC and complies with the California State Requirement for Hypnosis Certification, and is designed to help develop hypnotic skills for counseling, medicine, nursing and other health areas, education, and body work. This program is also an opportunity for personal growth and transformation for anyone interested in hypnotic phenomena and the uses of suggestion in daily life.

Hypnotic suggestion, advanced imagery, and relaxation methods will be explored. There will be daily presentations, numerous practice sessions, video examples of Erickson and other practitioners, and extensive written support materials. A hypnosis library will be available for in-depth learning of advanced topic areas, and there will be an opportunity to explore personal goals with trance and biofeedback equipment.

The scientific basis of hypnosis as well as the ways hypnosis can be applied will be emphasized. Topic areas will include: induction methods, hypnotic testing, symptom and liability removal, individual and family counseling applications, pain control and psychosomatics, non-verbal and pendulum methods, biomedical hypnotic monitoring, metaphor and story-telling methods, hypnosis with children, regression and uncovering, reconceiving and reframing, self-concept enhancement, stress management, fears and phobias, early trauma, hypnotic dream programming, imagery conditioning, NLP methods, enhancing performance in sports, music, and sensation, self-hypnosis methods, teaching self-hypnosis classes, and other topics related to therapy, health, and personal growth. Selected ongoing exercises drawn from aikido, Feldenkrais, movement, massage, and shamanistic traditions will complement the traditional topic areas.

Since each of the leaders will present for a number of days, there will be an opportunity to model different ways of deepening your own hypnotic potential, trance induction, and utilization skills. This month-long experience with various faculty members gives each participant an in-depth opportunity to develop vivid personal imagery, make lasting self-suggestions, and relate more completely with the unconscious mind.

The certification offered through this program is equivalent to a University modified tutorial course. You will complete readings, assignments, and a paper for the hypnosis certificate. Certification is granted based upon the competency demonstrated to the faculty in applying hypnotic techniques with an ethical and professional approach and satisfactory completion of all Great Western University C.E.U. course requirements. The paper and assignments are due no later than four months following the completion of this program at Esalen.

Course fees for the Hypnosis Certificate are $300 (12 C.E.U.s), payable to Great Western University upon beginning the program at Esalen. It is also possible to obtain four transcripted Graduate Psychology courses rather than C.E.U.s (requires additional fees to Great Western University and you must have at least a B.A. degree. Contact Marc Lehrer, Chairman, Dept. of Psychology, Great Western University (415) 397-4929 for further details).
Space is limited so early registration is recommended. Reading lists and information about certificate and graduate credit will be sent upon request or registration.

There are ongoing programs at Esalen and a traveling workshop service in the U.S. and abroad. Instructors teach self-healing, Esalen body work, yoga, breath and body awareness, dance and centering movement, and meditation. Many instructors have experience in gestalt practice and movement continuum.

The Healthspring Library offers books on health and healing, body work, somatic studies, philosophy, yoga, nutrition, and organic gardening which may be borrowed by seminarians for a two-week period while at Esalen. Donations of books or periodicals are greatly appreciated.

The Work Study Program is for those who are interested in an intense and complete involvement with the Esalen environment. It is a work-oriented program, emotionally and physically, and only rarely is it restful. It is not for those who wish to take catalog workshops or for those who are unwilling to be fully engaged in the work-life of the community. Participants will work 32 hours per week in one of Esalen’s departments (kitchen, garden, farm, housekeeping, maintenance, or grounds) and will participate, along with staff and long-term students, in that department’s program. It is necessary for applicants to be able to speak and understand English.

During most evenings and one weekend intensive, work students are together as a group exploring different practices and approaches available at Esalen, with specifically assigned leaders who will be with the group throughout the month coordinating the study schedule and facilitating many of the evening sessions.

The selection of work students is done by Bette Dingman, the Work Study coordinator, in consultation with department supervisors. Since this is a work program, preference is given to applicants who are open and willing to learn about themselves within the work context as well as within the evening and weekend study/process groups. Applicants with particular skills or physically limiting conditions are urged to mention them on the application.

First-month work students, in particular, are assigned to departments largely on the basis of community need. No work students will be assigned to the office or Gazebo School/Park until they have fulfilled a minimum of one month in one of the aforementioned departments.

The study portion of the program is usually divided into two sections each month: each emphasizes one type of growth practice, such as gestalt, meditation, Reichian work, massage or somatics work, and so forth. Participants must be prepared to stay at Esalen for the full duration designated for that particular program, assuming that they meet the standards of the Work Study Program. Two programs are planned for each month. Those scheduled thus far for 1993 include:

Robert Nadeau will emphasize functional centering. Using grounding, energy awareness, aikido, and movement work, the physical, mental, and spiritual aspects of centering will be explored.

This month with David Streeter will give students the opportunity to incorporate the subtle art of contemplation in a community atmosphere. Yoga, massage, and gentle emotional release — along with silent meditation — will be included in the curriculum.

January 10—February 7

Erik Van Ruiswold will lead a mind-body-spirit study devoted to the development of integral transformative practice. Through Leonard Energy Training (LET) and other practices, participants will explore personal development in the twelve aspects of human functioning outlined in Michael Murphy’s The Future of the Body and create their own program for bodily transformation. Michael Murphy and George Leonard will participate during the last week of this month-long program.

Dianne Lawrence and participants will explore their relationship with themselves and others through acting, writing, theater, and painting. The group will create a communal performance to be presented at month’s end.

February 7—March 7

Mary Goldenson’s (Devorani) program of letting go and moving on employs Reichian methods, dance, imagery, gestalt, and meditation.

Maria Lucia Sauer Holloman and Anita Eubank Donovan will present practical methods of using the hands as instruments for physical and spiritual healing. Emphasis will be on developing intentionality and personal clarity as fundamental tools for any healing art.

March 7—April 4

David Schiffman will focus on the theme of transition. It is geared for people who are contemplating changes in career, relationship, geographical location, or spiritual orientation.

Vicki Topp & Friends will lead this program of massage, meditation, and integrative body process.

April 4—May 2

Phyllis Shankman offers a month of in-depth group process/gestalt work using the creative arts, as well as meditation, massage, and movement for self-exploration and healing.

John Soper’s group will focus on ways to improve the quality of life. The work will start with the individual and expand to include the environment.

May 2—30

Karuna Licht will lead a month-long journey using the creative processes of art, ritual, and guided imagery as the language of the heart.

David Streeter & Massage Staff will offer a two-month program in the subtle art of massage. It will emphasize personal growth as a result of full participation in community life and an ongoing well-structured massage program that includes yoga, meditation, anatomy, movement, and more. Previous experience of one month as an Esalen work-scholar is required.

May 30—June 27

Marilyn Harris Kniegel will explore the possibility of relationships without blame, and work on the potentials of truth and freedom. The group will investigate the role of chemistry, choice, and commitment in our encounters with love. Gestalt and psycho-synthesis will also be used.

David Streeter & Massage Staff. See May 2-30.

June 27—July 25

Eduardo Eizner & Guests will concentrate on emotional release work and self-awareness using gestalt, group and individual process, rituals, movement, and body work.

Dean Marson will guide participants on a somatic journey to deepen self-awareness and enhance the ability to connect with others using touch, movement, and mindfulness as the means of exploration.

Esalen Institute is a center to explore work in the humanities and sciences that promotes human values and potentials. Its activities consist of public seminars, residential work-study programs, invitational conferences, research, and semi-autonomous projects.

We exist to sponsor, encourage, synthesize, and attempt evaluation of work in these areas, both inside and outside our own organizational framework. Since we are a center for experimental education, we ask that persons come to our programs out of an educational interest. We ask that no one come whose interest is "cure." We point out here, as we have in workshops and seminars, that some people, particularly those with a history of psychiatric problems, may find some programs difficult, trying, or potentially risky. We recommend that in case of any doubt, a physician or trusted counselor be consulted.

THE ESALEN CATALOG
MAY-OCTOBER 1993
An angel flew through the midnight sky, softly singing.
Moon, stars, clouds in a throng listened to his holy song.

He sang of bliss of innocent spirits sinless in paradise.
He sang of the great God, his praise was unfeigned.

In his arms he bore a young soul, destined for the world of sorrow and tears.
And the sound of his song stayed forever wordless and alive in that young soul.

Long that soul languished in the world filled with a wonderful longing.
The earth's dull songs could not replace the sounds of heaven for it.

—Mikhil Lermontov
1814-1841
Though it only began to flourish in the nineteenth century, Russian philosophy has deep roots going back to the acceptance of Christianity by the Russian people in 988 and the subsequent translation into church Slavonic of the Greek Fathers. Until the seventeenth century, Russian thinking tended to continue the ascetical, theological, and philosophical tradition of Byzantium, but with a Russian emphasis on the world's unity, wholeness, and transfiguration. It was as if a seed were germinating in darkness, for the centuries of Tartar domination and the isolationism of the Moscow state kept Russian thought apart from the onward movement of Western European thinking.

But with Peter the Great (1672-1725), a window was cut into Europe. This opened the way to Voltairean free-thinking, while the striving to find even greater depths in religious life continued. Freemasonry established itself in Russia, inaugurating a spiritual tradition outside the church. Masons sought a deepening of the inner life, together with ideals of moral development and active love of one's neighbor. There followed a period of enthusiasm for German idealism and, with the reaction to this by the Slavophiles Ivan Kireevksy and Alexei Khomyakov, independent philosophical thought in Russia was born. An important and still continuing tradition of creative thinking was initiated, giving rise to a whole galaxy of nineteenth and twentieth-century philosophers, including Pavel Yurkevitch, Nikolai Fedorov, Vladimir Solovyov, Leo Shestov, the Princes S. and E. Trubestskoy, Pavel Florensky, Sergius Bulgakov, Nikolai Berdyaev, Dmitri Merezhkovsky, Vassili Rosanov, Semon Frank, the personalists, the intuitionists, and many others. Beginning in the 1840s, a vital tradition of philosophy entered the world stage, a tradition filled with as-yet unthought possibilities and implications not only for Russia herself but for the new multicultural, global reality humanity as a whole is now entering. Characteristic features of this tradition are: epistemological realism; integral knowledge (knowledge as an organic, all-embracing unity that includes sensorious, intellectual, and mystical intuition); the celebration of integral personality (tsel'naya lichnost), which is at once mystical, rational, and sensorious; and an emphasis upon the resurrection or transformability of the flesh. In a word, Russian philosophers sought a theory of the world as a whole, including its transformation.

Russian philosophy is simultaneously religious and psychological, ontological and cosmological. Filled with remarkable imaginative thinking about our global future, it joins speculative metaphysics, depth psychology, ethics, aesthetics, mysticism, and science with a profound appreciation of the world's movement toward a greater state. It is bol'shaya (big), as philosophy should be. It is broad and individualistic, bearing within it many different perspectives — religious, metaphysical, erotic, social, and apocalyptic. Above all, it is universal. The principle of sobornost, or all-togetherness (human catholicy), is of paramount importance in it. And it is future oriented, expressing a philosophy of history passing into metaphysics, the life-of-the-world to-come in the Kingdom of God.

At present, in both Russia and the West, there is a revival of interest in Russian philosophy, partly in response to the reductionisms implicit in materialism, atheism, analytic philosophy, deconstructionism, and so forth. On May 14, 1988, Pravda announced that it would publish the works of Solovyov, Trubetskoy, Semon Frank, Shestov, Florensny, Lossky, Bulgakov, Berdyaev, Alexsand Bogdanov, Rozanov, and Fedorov.

The Esalen Institute-Lindisfarne Press Library of Russian Philosophy parallels this Russian effort. Since 1980, the Esalen Russian-American Exchange Center has developed innovative approaches to Russian-American cooperation, sponsoring nongovernmental dialog and citizen exchange as a complement to governmental diplomacy. As part of its program, seminars are conducted on economic, political, moral, and religious philosophy. The Exchange Center aims to stimulate philosophic renewal in both the East and West. The Esalen-Lindisfarne Library of Russian Philosophy continues this process, expanding it to a broader American audience. It is our feeling that these Russian thinkers are world thinkers. Publishing them will not only contribute to our understanding of the Russian people, but will also make a lasting contribution to the multicultural philosophical synthesis required by humanity around the globe as we enter the twenty-first century.

Since January, 1980, Esalen's Soviet-American Exchange Program, now called the Russian-American Exchange Center, has conducted several hundred exchanges between Soviet and American individuals and groups. We have introduced new forms of international cooperation and formed many lasting friendships with leading scientists, artists, writers, philosophers, psychologists, economists, religious thinkers, diplomats, journalists, and politicians in the former Soviet Union. Our network of ex-Soviet and American colleagues comprises a unique resource for future East-West relations. This network will enable us now, more than ever before, to support Russian efforts to establish democracy, human rights, and a market economy.

As President Reagan was calling the Soviet Union the "evil empire," the Exchange Center staged its first innovation, the spacebridge. It also:

- Helped to create several US-based organizations such as the Institute for Soviet-American Relations and the Association of Space Explorers, the first joint forum for astronauts and cosmonauts.
- Signed one of the first agreements between a private-sector group and the USSR Ministry of Health in 1985.
• Signed the first agreement between a non-governmental agency and the USSR Union of Writers in 1986.
• Hosted academician Abel Aganbegyan, Rector of the Academy of the National Economy, for his first tour of the United States in his capacity as one of Gorbachev's chief economic advisors.
• Hosted Boris Yeltsin for his first visit to the United States. Esalen arranged visits for Mr. Yeltsin with President Ronald Reagan and many business and government leaders.

The Exchange Center is currently sponsoring the following programs:

- Leadership Project
  This project will focus on emerging leaders in Russia and the United States. In 1994, a conference in Big Sur will join young Russian and American leaders from business, economics, politics, and the media to explore common interests and possibilities for collaboration. In the years ahead, many of the project's participants will promote common U.S. and Russian interests.

- Ethnic Conflict Resolution
  The founding proposition of this project is that traditional political and diplomatic methods of peacemaking often fail in long-standing ethnic conflicts. The project will identify political/psychological preconditions for a non-violent, pluralistic democracy by examining the unhealed wounds and distortions of the polity resulting from Stalinism. It will examine Russian anti-Semitism and ethnic conflict in the United States. In November, 1990, a multiethnic delegation of scholars, officials, and writers from the Soviet Union met with a group of American sovietologists, writers, and specialists in conflict resolution. In March 1992 the Project cosponsored a historic conference on the phenomenon of bolshevism, in conjunction with the new Gorbachev Foundation in Moscow.

- Health Project
  The project has sponsored a number of conferences and other events since 1984, and currently focuses on a partnership with the St. Petersburg-based Institute for Experimental Medicine (where the famous psychologist Pavlov worked) in the field of psychoneuroimmunology (PNI). A global study of the brain-immune connection is essential for confronting such worldwide problems as AIDS, alcohol and drug addiction, cancer, and stress.

- Project on Economic Growth
  This project (PEG) is developing a demonstration project for an improved agricultural and food delivery system. A small group of retired American farmers and agri-business experts is working with several farms and food cooperatives in the Moscow region to establish a vertically integrated network. This micro-economy will have links at all levels from seed planting, harvesting, and processing to delivery, wholesale, and retail sale on the basis of market relations. The American participants are advising the Russians in technical and business aspects of modern agriculture, and are helping to obtain key elements of the system such as seed and equipment.

- Psychology Project
  The project's current undertakings include a study of psychology and perestroika, a Russian-English/English-Russian encyclopedia dictionary of psychological terms, a book based on reviews of various fields in Russian/ex-Soviet psychology, and a psychological magazine published in Russian. The Project also coordinates the Berkeley-Esalen Internship Program, which brings clinical psychologists or other helping professionals from the former Soviet Union for one-year internships with the City of Berkeley's Mental Health Department.

- Writer's Project
  Working in conjunction with the USSR Union of Writers, the Exchange Center has produced a number of joint events, including the Steinbeck Celebration and the first Soviet conference on the life and works of Vladimir Nabokov. In June 1991, the Writers Project organized a conference at Esalen Institute on the theory of culture, using Russian and English works, in conjunction with the Russian-American Institute based at Middlebury College. In November 1992, Esalen and the Russian-American Institute cosponsored a conference on the perspectives Russian and American writers have on each other's culture.

- Sport Project
  Stanford University's Athletic Department and the Exchange Center, in conjunction with Moscow's Institute of Sport and Physical Culture, are developing a Russian-American Coaching Education Institute. This will be an in-depth comparison of coaching instruction in the former Soviet Union and the educational methods of selected American sports organizations. The project is currently planning a symposium, Toward the Further Reaches of Sport Psychology, to be held at Stanford in May, 1993.

The Esalen Institute Russian-American Exchange Center is a non-profit organization working with Russia and other former republics of the USSR. Tax deductible donations can be made to:

Esalen Catalog (1962-1992) available via the Education Resources Information Center (ERIC)
Since 1962 there have been 102 issues of the Esalen Catalog. A Friends of Esalen project, organized by Ted Brandhorst and Deborah Miller, has collected these issues and entered them into the bibliographic database of the U.S. Department of Education's Educational Resources Information Center (ERIC), where it is identified by the Accession Number/Order Number ED 347 118. ERIC records are announced in the monthly abstract journal Resources in Education (RIE) and the entire database can be searched online via DIALOG and BRS, and on CD-ROM via SilverPlatter and DIALOG products.

Anyone interested in the Esalen Catalog as human potential movement historical source material for research purposes can now obtain the complete thirty-year set from ERIC's document delivery arm, the ERIC Document Reproduction Service (EDRS, 7420 Fullerton Road, Suite 110, Springfield, Virginia 22153-2852; 1-800-443-3742).

"Light Body Activation" Workshop September 26-October 1
Although it is not listed in the "Seminars" section of this catalog, the following workshop will be offered Sept. 26-Oct. 1:
Light Body Activation: Evolving Consciousness in the Body Julian Isaacs & Patricia Fields
New forms of spiritual practice are currently emerging to help individuals embody unity consciousness. Participants in this workshop will be introduced to a new practice called "light body activation," in which major energy centers of the body are cleared, balanced, and refined by exposure to the transpersonal domain. Based on a model that integrates an understanding of chakras, subtle energy fields, and kundalini, the practice will be presented through dialogue, meditation, imagery exercises, toning, and other psycho-energetic processes. With activation of the "light body," individuals increasingly seem to experience joy, vitality, and the essential interconnectedness of all life.

WAYS OF BEING AT ESALEN

There are various ways to experience Esalen, ranging from an overnight visit to a long-term stay as a seminarian. The weekend and five-day workshops described throughout the catalog are the standard route for coming to Esalen and learning the methods of personal growth available here. The Experiencing Esalen workshops, scheduled periodically, offer an introduction to practices such as gestalt, massage, sensory awareness, and meditation. From such a sampling, participants can then choose those approaches they are most attracted to and pursue them in subsequent seminars.

Another way of being at Esalen which allows a much greater involvement with the place and its community at a lower expense is the Work Study Program, described more fully elsewhere in this section and on pages 55-56. For those who wish an extended stay of a month or more, there are frequent long-term programs which involve didactic seminars or professional trainings as well as experiential workshops. Please see “Special Programs.”

With the completion of the Big House renovation, we can now accommodate groups of people in a single facility. The Big House provides meeting rooms, ten bedrooms with twenty beds, a kitchen for meal preparation, and a dining area. We invite people who work together on a regular basis, be they corporate, government, legal, artistic, or familial groups, to design a workshop according to their own needs, using Esalen resources and catalog faculty. Participants also have access to other Esalen amenities, including massage, the hot springs, swimming pool, and bookstore. Reservations for the Big House must be made at least nine months in advance. For more information contact Pat LeWine, (408) 667-3038.

Finally, there are other events that enrich life at Esalen. There are occasional forums in which writers and thinkers, both visiting and resident, share their ideas with the community. On Wednesday nights there may be lectures, films, dance performances, or other forms of entertainment. Body work of various kinds is available by appointment with individual practitioners. There is also a community event schedule offered. Please check the bulletin board for details when you arrive.

Not all rooms have private baths. Room and board rates include dinner on the day of arrival and breakfast and lunch on the following day. We require full payment at the time of reservation. This payment is not refundable or transferable.

For a room and board stay between Sunday and Thursday, please call us no sooner than the Thursday before for room availability. For a Friday or Saturday night stay, please call no sooner than the Sunday before. The following rates are per person, per day.*

Weekday (2 or 3 per room):
Standard Accommodations: $105 ($90) $125
Bunk Bed: $80 ($70) $85

* Off-season rates are in effect from October 1 through March 30, holidays excepted.

The Hot Springs at Esalen
We would like those people who are planning their first visit to Esalen to know that swimsuits are optional, and nudity common, in the hot springs, massage area, and swimming pool. We encourage each individual to choose what is most comfortable, either wearing a swimsuit or not, and emphasize that the environment at Esalen is one of personal sanctuary and respect for the human body.

Disabled Access
Esalen now provides a means of transportation to the baths for those with physical limitations which prevent them from walking. A vehicle was purchased, in part, through the generosity of Dr. John W. Harris who believes, as we do, that those among us who are aged, infirm, or handicapped should also be able to enjoy the hot springs.

If you are disabled and would like to plan a visit to Esalen or participate in a workshop, please give the office as much advance notice as possible. While disabled access to some parts of the property is difficult, with enough planning, arrangements can be made for access to most of our facilities.

The Gazebo School Park
Early Childhood Program
The Gazebo School Park is a unique educational experience for children ages one to six years. It is open year-round and has an average of 15 to 20 children in attendance each day.

The Early Childhood Program is available to seminarians who would like child care at Esalen. Child care is provided during work hours only. Daytime activities for the children include gardening, pony rides, learning about animal care, exploring nature, a real boat, the magic castle, and an Indian tepee. Evenings are spent in the Gazebo Farmhouse with a teacher engaged in activities that are age appropriate, such as reading, learning and playing with the computer, baking, arts and crafts, or building-block play.

Reservations should be made at least a month in advance. Call the Gazebo Farmhouse, (408) 667-3026, for more information and reservations. Weekday $105, Weekend $125.

Internship Program: This is a three-month program for those who wish to have intense exposure to life at the Gazebo School Park and its unique educational resources. The Internship Program offers experience with children and the Gazebo’s environment and teaching philosophy. Applicants must have completed at least three work scholar months at Esalen before being considered for this program.

Call the Gazebo Farmhouse, (408) 667-3026, for more information or reservations. First month $400, Second month $350, Third month $300.
This is a guide to the workshops offered in this catalog. Although many of the them could be cross-referenced, most are listed only in their main subject area. We recommend that you read the workshop description before deciding to register. If you have never been to Esalen or taken an Esalen workshop, you might want to consider the “Experiencing Esalen” workshop scheduled throughout the catalog and listed in the Integral Practices section of this directory. Please call the Esalen office if you have questions concerning a workshop: (408) 667-3000 or 667-3005.

Week of May 2–7

Yoga: A Week of Learning and Rejuvenation
Ganga White & Tracey Rich
Presenting East/West teachings in a way that is contemporary, humorous, and applicable to modern living, the leaders will offer a week of physical, mental, and spiritual rejuvenation. Days will begin with instruction in an ancient Hatha yoga movement series that is new to this country and which combines grace and flow with posture, pranayama (breath), and meditation. Participants will be shown a 45-minute balanced, aerobic yoga practice they can continue at home. Afternoons and evenings will be for group discussion and exploration into the teachings and principles of the art of enlightened living.
Topics will include diet and nutrition, how yoga works, aligning and restructuring the body, and awakening subtle energies. Through Jhana (the yoga of wisdom and perception), participants will begin observing the thought processes and patterns that dictate their lives. They will look at the areas of love, responsibility, relationship, freedom, and death.
Participants at all levels are welcome; no previous experience is necessary. For additional information, contact the leaders at (805) 964-1944.

Five-Day Lomi Intensive
Kathryn Lydecker, Johanna Putnoi & Robert Sanoff
In the formative years of life, human beings learn to embody the beliefs and posture of their individual family system and the culture into which they are born. Many individuals unconsciously continue to shape their lives in reaction to these influences, often at the expense of their own creativity and vitality.
The aim of this workshop will be for participants to observe how they feel, think, and move themselves through life. By attending to bodily-felt experience, moment to moment, and by distinguishing between sensation and thinking, the path to reclaiming one’s authentic self opens. Through this process of developing awareness, it is possible to make responsible choices in daily life and to live with integrity and gentleness.
This workshop provides an arena for developing mindful awareness and for unmasking habits that keep us from ourselves and hinder relationships. Lomi work includes meditation, movement, gestalt, aikido, and Reichian work.

Spiritual Psychology: An Adventure in Consciousness
Jessica Moore Britt
This workshop is for individuals who find their personal and professional practices reaching into spiritual dimensions and are
Rituals for Healing
Jeanne Achterberg & Frank Lawlis
Rituals give meaning, richness, and structure to life's passages. They are for communication and celebration, for solemnity and deep inner silence. They are a visible manifestation of common human experience. Most of all, rituals are ceremonies of healing.

During this workshop, participants will explore components of healing ritual and discuss why rituals work. Sounds and symbols of rituals from several cultures will be experienced. The group will create and participate in healing rites which incorporate ancient wisdom with the belief systems from modern medicine, science, and psychology. The focus of the ritual work will be the healing power of the imagination.

This program may be of interest to health professionals and others who are on a healing path — seeking harmony, balance, and wholeness.

C.E. credit is available for nurses; see pages 53-54. $675

Weekend of May 7–9

Accepting Life's Transitions:
Letting Go—Moving On
Mary Goldenson (Devarani)

The only certainty in life is change, yet we often resist our transitions because of patterns of fear and self-denial. Old beliefs keep us stuck in our resentments, unsuccessful marriages, friendships and careers, and can cause illness, sorrow, and the inability to forgive. Transitions are crossroads in our lives that give us the opportunity to take time out and reconnect with our truth. It is never too late to change. Transitions are doors to the renewal of our passions, courage, and commitments.

This workshop will provide you with ways to help complete the past, be open to the present, and create a future. Participants will experience a safe, supportive environment that includes taking risks, intense body work, gestalt imagery, dance, and meditation, in order to support the transitions that keep us committed to the process of discovering ourselves.

The Soul of the World:
A Multi-Media Workshop
Phil Cousineau, David Darling
& Eric Lawton

Call the world, if you please, the vale of Soul-Making.
—John Keats

Saints, sages, and soul singers down through the ages have told us that a soulful world calls for a cultivation of sacred attention, the opening of the eyes of the heart, a quest for beauty not only in art and philosophy, but in the ordinary things usually ignored in the world. To "make holy the hours" of our lives is more than a plunge into our personal souls, but an encounter with the soul, the essence of virtually everything around us, including our community and the natural world.

This live performance workshop will offer a cross-cultural overview of the soul from Egyptian Gnostics, Australian Aborigines, medieval mystics, to the sweet soul music of Ray Charles and Aretha Franklin, to the groundbreaking archetypal psychology of James Hillman and Thomas Moore. Each session will be highlighted by the telling of tales of the soul by Phil Cousineau, co-writer of the film The Hero's Journey: The Life and Work of Joseph Campbell; a slide show by award-winning photographer Eric Lawton, using images from over 60 countries from Ireland to India; and the synchronized music of David Darling, master cellist.

Themes for the weekend include: Origin Myths of the Soul, Soul and the Body, Soul in Art and Music, Eros and Psyche, Soul Loss, and The Soul of the World.

Recommended reading: Cousins & Lawton, The Soul of the World: A Modern Book of Hours; Moore, Care of the Soul; and Hillman, Blue Fire. $350

Buddhism and Deep Ecology
Christopher Reed

How is it possible to live with an awareness of what is happening in our society and in our world? For many there is deep grief, for all of us a nagging malaise. We are destroying our environment, our own home, and neither denial nor activism can fully address the problem. There will be exercises and various meditations to capture that moment of grace through which the negative world we create can be transformed. $350

Self-Affirmation:
A Workshop for People Who Put Themselves Down
William Pennell Rock

Having a hard time believing in yourself? Are you filled with dissatisfaction, guilt, and discontent? Is it difficult for you to accept compliments or trust other people?

The inability to perceive ourselves and others with confidence and optimism can become an exhausting lifestyle. Persistent negativity is often the projection of an chronic incapacity to affirm ourselves, to accede to the fundamental "yes" of our own life and that of the world around us.

This workshop will create a background of support so that participants can access the awareness which self-affirmation is possible — that part of each person struggling for acceptance and self-trust. Individuals will use examples from their own lives to trace the false internal patterns and imbalances which have created much of their negativity and guilt. There will be exercises and various meditations to capture that moment of grace through which the negative world we create can be transformed. $350

S. S. C. credit is available for nurses; see pages 53-54. $675
We will develop the practice of mindfulness with formal sitting and walking meditation. We will use interactive exercises to enhance our capacity for deep listening, and we will also explore contemplative practices that can be used effectively in daily life situations.

Accepting Life's Transitions: Letting Go—Moving On
Mary Goldenson (Devarani)

For workshop description see May 7–9. $350

A Week with Ilse Middendorf

Through a series of uncomplicated experiential movement exercises, participants will use basic sensing and focusing techniques to consciously experience the meaning of their personal breath movement.

Ilse Middendorf writes: “To let the breath come, to let it go, and to wait until it comes back on its own accord means to perceive and experience the unconscious function of the breath within its laws. An immediate, natural movement emerges from it, a connection to the human entireness and the possibility to get to know and experience oneself. Movements emerge from the breath by stretching, work with pressure points, and the creation of vowel space. These movements encompass original rhythmic happenings and creativity. In between the breath that is led by the will and the unconscious breathing function, the Perceptible Breath develops, which allows an integration of body, mind, and spirit by focusing, perceiving, and breathing. It leads us to an enlargement of consciousness and self-experience.”

Participants will work on defective functions and obstructions of the breath and try to reach a new balance between body, mind, and spirit by a growing consciousness of the body. $675

A Week with David Schiffman

To make effective, creative choices, you need courage, imagination, and the willingness to know your heart and be true to the dreams that live inside it. Choosing this deeper wisdom can often involve the risk of breaking set — the choice to move against the powerful grain of old fears, habits, and constant pressure of other people's expectations. To foster this spirit means contacting the elemental-instinctual parts of our natures, befriending rather than suppressing or denying the sexuality and power out of which initiative and enthusiasm spring.

During this week we will focus on how to develop a more adventurous, resourceful, and buoyant way of living. In an atmosphere based on warmth and humor, we will explore our capacity for mutual tenderness, respect, and honesty. Traditional psychological practices such as gestalt, bioenergetics, and psychosynthesis will be used for intensive individual work, as well as non-traditional innovative approaches in body work, kinesthetic retraining, music, and guided imagery. $675

Dianne Lawrence

Spontaneity, imagination, trust, and risk-taking are all essential ingredients in the creative life of the individual. They are not parceled out at birth in limited supply, but are parts of our natural make-up and can be exercised and strengthened. Many people have strong creative instincts which they either ignore or mistrust, often claiming that they "just aren't that creative." In fact, the real issue is whether or not they are willing to take the risk and engage in a relationship that challenges their creative power.

Through theater games and painting, this workshop offers laypeople and artists alike an opportunity to see where and how they joyfully participate and where and how they resist. It is useful for people who are stuck, who want to find a way of going deeper, or who just want to play in areas they've been curious about. $675

Spirit in Nature: A Shamanic Workshop

Jo Imlay & John Broomfield

For most of our ancestors, the world was a unified, spirit-filled cosmos in which humans were bound in kinship with animals, trees, rivers, rocks, and sky. Our contemporary culture is attempting to rekindle the belief that by acknowledging the living consciousness of the earth, we have much to learn from our companions in nature.

This workshop will help participants reconnect with the earth and hear nature's voices once again. To open all the senses, time will be divided between talk and meditative silence, group activities and solo explorations, drumming, and shamanic ritual. $675

Experiencing Esalen

Experiencing Esalen Staff

This workshop is designed for people who have not previously been to Esalen. Emphasis is on finding those approaches to self-awareness that work most effectively for the individual participant. These may include: sensory awareness, gestalt practice, group process, guided fantasy, meditation, massage.

There is also time to explore the natural magnificence of the Big Sur coast.

Recommended reading: Perls, Gestalt Therapy Verbatim (Real People Press). $350

Life Tides & Timelines in a Psychedelic World: A Weekend with Terence McKenna

Where is life carrying us in the brief interval between the Unknowable and the Unspeckable in which we have awareness? Is there sense to be made of being, or is it all sound and fury signifying nothing?

Come join Terence McKenna and his friends for a think-along journey into what matters most. Questioning everything, believing nothing, awakened to the presence of the cosmic giggle, an A-team gaggle of battle-scarred survivors of the sixties and Post-post-modern new explorers of the psychedelic world will join minds to discuss the real frontiers of sexuality, psilocybin, and surrealism.

We will reaffirm that the world is truly weird and bound to become stranger. That is the way we like it. Y'all come. $350
Massage Intensive for Couples
Brita Ostrom & Attila Vaas
This workshop is for partners who want to learn to massage each other. Emphasis will be on “hearing” with the hands, de-stressing the home, asking for what we need, and giving to those we love. Sessions will include demonstrations and hands-on guidance. Individual concerns will be addressed so participants can continue their practice at home. $350 per participant

Natural Genius: An Authenticity of Being
Elsa Lodge
Unleashing the creative spirit will happen only when we recognize that natural genius lies within everything and everybody.
—Buckminster Fuller
Natural genius is a powerful creative force that arises when a deep sense of self-worth and trust is felt, and reflects a wholehearted acceptance of the many facets of our being. We are all geniuses in wonderful and mysterious ways that lie within us waiting to be discovered.
Rather than being judged, evaluated, or fixed, participants are invited to embody and play with self-defeating personal patterns and beliefs that inhibit creativity and genuine self-expression.
By freeing breath, sound, feelings, energy and movement in an ecstatic expression of aliveness from within, participants can contrast the difference between self-imprisonment and inner freedom, pretense and presence, acting and being.
This process is an opportunity to dance our unique dance and voice the wisdom buried in our bones. There will be discussions, visualization, body movement, and exercises for contacting your belief system and developing intuition.

Sue McKibbin
Every day in the workplace situations arise that intermingle the competing pressures of individual integrity, organizational interest, and the greater good. The modern workplace has become an ethical minefield — full of demands and questions for which there are few clear, black-and-white answers. Workers are continually expected to act in ways that put some people at a great advantage over others.

Finding one’s way through these shades of grey is a formidable personal and professional challenge. This workshop will offer participants the insights and strategies they need to thrive in organizational settings without compromising their principles or sacrificing their careers.
Using guided imagery, group discussion, individual analysis, and teamwork, participants will reaffirm their deepest personal values, identify the ethical dilemmas they face at work, and discover ways to bridge the two. This exploration will help each individual reconnect with their own base of integrity and the power they have to live and act from that place — both on and off the job.
C.E. credit is available for nurses; see pages 53-54.

Protoanalysis℠ and the Enneagon: Transcending the Fixation
Michael Kramer, Paula Marx & Steven Smud
This workshop introduces the Arica theory and method of protoanalysis in which the ego fixation is revealed by muscular tensions of the face. Oscar Ichazo, founder of the Arica Institute and originator of the theory of protoanalysis, will determine each participant’s fixation from photographic slides submitted prior to the workshop.
The ego fixation is the area of the psyche in which a person is most sensitive. We defend this over-sensitivity with a cluster of reactions which becomes a fixed pattern in childhood. These nine fixations distort our perception of reality and veil our natural, spontaneous, and essential natures. Once we discover our fixation and break this habitual identification with one point of view, the eight remaining elemental parts of our psyche become enormously enriched. We begin to recognize the defense mechanisms of our fixation as processes which are comical in their predictability. This work is done with humor so that we recognize the ego fixations as simply characters in our “theater of the subjective.” The moment we transcend our ego character we experience a far more lucid state of self-awareness.
Participants will study a number of enneagons that work in harmony with the enneagon of the nine fixations. This workshop includes enneagon theory, meditation, di-akath breathing, and movement and theater techniques as a creative collaborative process. Dance is approached not as an inflexible physical regime, but as an expressive medium for people of all ages, backgrounds, and levels of experience.
Taught by Pilobolus’s artistic director, this workshop will focus on the choreographic process that makes movement the powerful means of expression it truly is. The group will investigate the lively mixture between form and flow, abstraction and theatricality, strength, force, and balance that define the realm of dance.
Participants will explore a wide variety of movement through improvisation and will choreograph a number of short dances. It will be an opportunity to indulge in the incredible panorama of human motion.
Extensive dance training is not necessary, although a reasonable degree of fitness is advised. Participants should be willing to be physically energetic and enthusiastic.

Week of May 16–21
A Week with Seymour Carter
Everyone has unused capacities for further personal development. When these capacities are recognized and given attention, a natural force is released which, like a tide, can carry the individual to a higher level of ability and action. Fritz Perls taught how to recognize the force of avoided issues in dealing with blocked energies. When unfinished issues are confronted and assimilated, it is possible to feel potent and in charge of one’s life.
In this workshop, participants will deal with these issues by examining the influence of the inner dialogue on thoughts and the nature of impasse, as well as tendencies within themselves toward psychological completion and well-being. The basis of this work is the gestalt method, supported by studies in various body disciplines, including sensory awareness, bioenergetics, and aikido. Each participant’s process of development will be honored, encouraged, and treated as unique.

exercises designed to nourish our essential natures.

Please Note: Four 35mm transparencies of each participant's face must be received by April 12, 1993. A letter of explanation about lighting and photography of the slides is available from Esalen, (408) 667-3000. Dreaming: The Magic Mirror that Never Lies
Jeremy Taylor
Participants will share and work with their dreams, drawing upon timeless mythological/archetypal images that shape our contemporary individual and collective lives. Although the focus will be dream interpretation in a collective context, the methods are designed to give participants the ability to engage in their own dream work upon returning home.

Those people who are just beginning to explore the world of their dreams, as well as professionals who work with dreams, are welcome. As Jeremy Taylor comments, "Only the dreamer can say with any certainty what meanings his or her dreams may hold, and dream work is one of the few activities that puts beginners and experts on an equal emotional footing from the outset."

Recommended reading: Taylor, Dream Work (Paulist Press); and Where People Fly and Water Flows Uphill (Warner Books). $675

The Healing Crisis: Fasting as a Pathway
Michael Barnett, Grace Stern Swanson & Robert Swanson
The leaders write: "Traumatic experiences are not only stored in our psyche, but may also be deposited in each cell, creating a 'cellular memory.' As we release psychic energy that has bound these experiences in our personalities, energy is often released from our tissues. This release of energy is often called disease by the Western medical model. This tissue release can be used to our advantage when viewed as a healing crisis. We have been culturally conditioned to avoid this possibility. The healing crisis is precipitated by the body's homeostatic imprint to achieve a balance of mental and physical health. The goal of the workshop will be to have participants experience healing on a cellular level using diet and fasting as the tool."

The workshop will consist of an opening live food meal, a day-plus of juice fasting, two full days of water fasting, another day-plus of juice fasting, and a final live food meal. There will be three, two-hour group sessions scheduled each day. Detailed didactic material will be shared to provide cognitive understanding. In the remainder of the group time, an eclectic approach to processing individual healing will be pursued. Because we will not have to break for "official" meals, groups can continue for as long as necessary. In addition, there will be a member of the leadership staff available around-the-clock.

Come with an agenda or allow your agenda to develop.

Weekend of May 21-23

Weekend Massage Intensive
Char Pias Brenner & Kathleen O'Shaughnessy
This workshop is designed for those individuals who are just beginning to explore the art of touch. The Esalen long-stroke massage will be the basis for all that is taught. Into this will be woven energetic work with visualization, movement meditation, cranial holding, and an introduction to Chinese point work. Discussion of various theoretical approaches to hands-on work will be included.
C.E. credit is available for nurses; see pages 53-54. $675

Big Sur Wilderness Experience
Steven Harper
Located on a narrow stretch of land between the Pacific Ocean and the coastal ridge of the Santa Lucia Mountains, Esalen is the trailhead to one of the world's most spectacular wilderness areas. With this natural reserve as the primary teacher, the group will walk into the Los Padres National Forest. Drawing on various traditions, participants can develop the quality of their awareness and open to the natural world.
Weeklong workshops will venture out on five hikes (4-10 miles in length). Weekend workshops will take two hikes (3-6 miles in length). Using Esalen as a base camp, the group will explore the different trails through the natural beauty of the Big Sur backcountry. Days will begin and end at Esalen with short stretching and sharing sessions. Each day-hike will begin after breakfast and will conclude in time to enjoy the hot springs and dinner each evening at Esalen. Basic outdoor skills such as map reading and minimum impact concepts will be practiced. Participants will be taught enough skills to begin exploring the wilderness on their own after these outings. More information will be sent upon registration. $350

The Awakened Mind:
Brainwave Training
Anna Wise
Inside each person there lies a wealth of knowledge, capacities, and power rarely transmitted to the conscious mind. Brainwave training combined with meditation and biofeedback monitoring helps develop these deeper resources, allowing access to greater creativity, reduced stress, and a deeper awareness and understanding of your inner self.

By assessing the brainwave patterns of hundreds of people who function unusually well, C. Maxwell Cade of the Institute for Psychological Research in London began to see similarities in the patterns of optimal states of mind. Drawing upon Cade's work, Anna Wise has developed a training program to help access these optimum states.

Different methods of meditation, visualization, and psycho-physiological relaxation affect our brainwaves in particular ways, as do specific acts such as tongue, eye, and body positions. In this workshop you will learn techniques for brainwave development and management, and begin to determine which methods of practice are best for your particular brainwave pattern.

You will also address how you can use these optimum states once they are achieved for your own creativity, mental flexibility, self-healing, problem-solving, and spiritual development. The Mind Mirror EEG will be used to demonstrate brainwave patterns, and each participant will be able to use an Electrical Skin Resistance Meter to measure the depth of arousal or relaxation of the nervous system.

Good Ideas Never Grow Old

Will Schutz

The leader writes: "After living and teaching at Esalen for almost 9 years, I left in 1975 searching for applications. How could I use the amazing things I had experienced at Esalen, combine them with my previous scientific education, and help illuminate the world's problems? I discovered several things; that the great new breakthroughs were in fact very old — or at least had old origins; that the world had not appreciated Freud enough to really use some of his ideas for solving society's problems; and that the principles of the American Revolution were wonderfully consistent with the principles of the human potential movement.

"This weekend we will explore these ideas — from both the young and old perspective. Various exercises will be used to work on experiencing the principles on which many of these ideas have been founded — honesty, openness, and self-determination." $350

Golf in the Kingdom:
An Exploration of the Inner Game

Stephen Cohen, Fred Shoemaker & John Allen

Ye'll come away from the links with a new hold on life, that is certain if ye play the game with all your heart. —Michael Murphy, (Shivas Irons), Golf in the Kingdom

The game of golf provides many opportunities to enhance the journey of self-discovery. It can be experienced not only as an athletic endeavor, but also as a metaphor for the way one lives. Just as in life, issues of self-confidence, fear, trust, discipline, and awareness emerge in the conflict between the ego's desire for success and the inner self's ability to achieve.

During these five days, teaching methods gleaned from a study of the inner game will be utilized, as well as principles from psychosynthesis and gestalt, to explore the inner self and how one interferes with its emergence. Two days will be spent on field trips to the Monterey Peninsula where participants will practice and play in some of the most beautiful golf country in the world. On other days there will be time to relax and enjoy the natural pleasures of Esalen and Big Sur.

Recommened reading: Murphy, Golf in the Kingdom (Delta); Gallwey, The Inner Game of Golf (Random House).

Sports Massage

David Streeter

This workshop will focus on aspects of sports massage that prove useful in other massage modalities. The curriculum includes: anatomy, to understand the rhythmic coordination of muscles working together; cross-fiber or cross-friction massage, simple strokes that promote healthy muscle tissue; and trigger point massage, to locate and relieve sensitive and congested points in muscle bundles and tendons. Trigger point work has proven beneficial in reducing myofascial pain caused by chronic tension.

In these five days, participants will progress through a study of the entire musculo-skeletal system via brief lectures, hands-on practice, and one-to-one instruction. This workshop takes a simplified approach to what is usually a complex subject and gives students a better idea of just what lies beneath their hands, and how to more effectively communicate with the human body. It is open to all levels.

Mid-Life Crisis as Spiritual Emergence

Karen Turner

Participants will view mid-life transition in the framework of spiritual emergence and renewal, a time when the old systems the individual has used as foundations seem stripped away, leaving chaos and challenging long-held beliefs. It is a time of soul-searching; of confronting both inflated and deflated self-concepts; of surrendering to deeper, more expanded states of awareness; of learning to trust inner guidance as absolute authority in one's life.

This workshop will be a rite of passage for both men and women going through this transition. Together they will have the opportunity to discover each participant's unique self, and how each is in relationship to self, each other, the world, and spirit. Tools for self-exploration and awareness gathered over 25 years from psychology, mysticism, and shamanism will be presented, with time for discussion and sharing. Each workshop is uniquely designed to meet the needs of those attending. $675
Opening the Feelings
Dale Cummings
Participants will employ Radix® and neoreichian methods of emotional release, the most important of which is the Radix® intensive, a period of individual work within a small group setting which can provide emotional support among participants.
Grief, pain, fear, and rage that have been held in since childhood can emerge. As the participant accepts and works through these negative feelings, he or she may discover a new capacity for pleasure, trust, and love. In time, the sexual experience may change as feelings of tenderness and sexuality intensify and merge.

Introduction to Vipassana Meditation
James Baraz
Vipassana (Insight) meditation is the practice described by the Buddha for developing wisdom, compassion, and peace. Vipassana, "to see things clear," means being mindful of what is actually happening in the present moment. Using the breath, body sensations, thought, and emotions as objects of attention, we can learn to be fully awake and bring a balanced awareness to all aspects of our lives.
Through vipassana meditation we experience the nature of reality as continual change. When we see that all phenomena are impermanent, we can begin to let go of clinging to the pleasant or avoiding the unpleasant. We are then more capable of meeting each situation with spontaneity, fearlessness, and love. Meditation also teaches us to see in each moment the interconnectedness of all things. Our hearts open to a natural expression of compassion and kindness.
Participants will be introduced to this method of meditation practice and the principles on which it is based. There will be periods of silent sitting and walking meditation, as well as discussion. As we bring attention to all of our activities at Esalen, we will continue to develop mindfulness through the weekend. This will provide a foundation for applying vipassana practice to everyday life.

A Weekend with Devers and Nathaniel Branden
In this experiential workshop, Nathaniel and Devers Branden will guide participants through an exploration of the meaning and dynamics of self-esteem, its role and importance in our life, and the most essential practices on which healthy self-esteem depends. Nathaniel Branden began pioneering this field almost four decades ago, and this workshop will include the most recent cutting-edge work done by the leaders.
The phenomena of subselves or subpersonalities will be examined, with particular emphasis on how integrating our various subpersonalities contributes to building high self-esteem. $350

Robert Nadeau & Julian Silverman
Bob: "I'll present the simplicity and naturalness of the centering process through innovative approaches to movement, grounding, energy awareness, and aikido."
Julian: "Fritz Perls loved the concepts of centering and balance as primary references for the gestalt awareness process. Our aim in the workshop will be to integrate the two approaches."
There will be body movement, so please wear loose fitting clothes.

Couples Workshop
Jack Rosenberg & Beverly Kitaen Morse
Most couples are reluctant to seek help in their relationships; instead they wait, hoping that the relationship will improve. If couples approached medical help the same way they approach marriage counseling, many of them would only visit the doctor when they ought to be lining up at the mortician's.
Designed on a preventive model, this workshop will deal with the underlying structures and defenses in relationships before they surface as terminal problems. It will also examine the attitudes and beliefs about sexuality and how to make sex better.

The Clean Cut: The Art of Bokken

Erik Van Riswold

For the striking sword, there is no mind.

—Anonymous

For the true warrior, the sword is not intended to cut another but rather to cut away one's own demons: fear, anger, hesitation, doubt. The sword is a powerful tool for bringing together mind, body, and spirit through concentrated practice and clear intention.

Participants will use the Japanese wooden sword or Bokken (Bow-ken). Balancing and centering through movement will be practiced, and we will learn to deliver clean, decisive, and loving strikes. Solo movements as well as partner practice will show how formal technique can lead to increased spontaneity and inspiration. Through non-competitive and non-combative sword work/play, the participant will experience building, focusing, and extending energy. Sword "play" brings one into the present moment, leading to experiences which are enlivening, empowering, and fun. The sword "serves to sever the edge between before and after." (Takuan Soho, Zen monk, 17th Century.)

This workshop is designed for people with little or no martial arts experience as well as those who would like to broaden their practice. The workshop will be active but not overly strenuous, with periods of gentle stretching and meditation throughout. Although this is a martial arts weapons class, it is based on the principles of aikido: peace, harmony, and concern for the welfare of others. All practice is done in the spirit of love, cooperation, and enjoyment.

Bokkens will be provided on loan or for sale at $20. $350

Short Stories: A Magical Carpet Ride

Michael Krasny

Short stories are a magical journey into worlds that fill us with wonder and provide insight into our own lives, our own stories. Literary artists often hold the mirror to nature and we, in turn, hold their work up as a mirror to ourselves.

This workshop will blend a high level of energetic intellect with the full range of your personal and emotional responses to selected great short stories. We will study a great range of work and search the texts and subtexts for meaning and wisdom applicable to life and the mysteries of the human heart.

Works by such writers as Chekhov, Carver, Munro, Joyce, Baldwin, and D.H. Lawrence will be included.

This experience will encourage you to see the artist's vision of both world and self, and help you to integrate, absorb, and grow. The short story can offer a magical carpet ride toward personal enlightenment, and this weekend will provide a dynamic, charged, and interactive environment where everyone can take a ride. A national literary scholar and award-winning broadcaster will be at the helm. $350

Gestalt Practice

Christine Stewart Price & Guest Leaders

The Way, when declared Seems so thin and flavorless.

Nothing to look at, nothing to hear —

And when used — is inexhaustible.

—Lao Tzu

Gestalt practice is a form —nonanalytic, noncoercive, nonjudgmental — evolving out of the work of Fritz Perls. The work integrates ways of personal clearing and development that are both ancient and modern. To the extent that awareness is made primary relative to action, gestalt practice has a strong relationship to some forms of meditation and visualization. This form is similar to some Reichian work as well, in that emotional and energetic release and rebalancing are allowed and encouraged.

The emphasis is interpersonal rather than intrapersonal. It is explicitly understood that participants are not patients but persons actively consenting to work (or play) in awareness. The leader functions to reflect, clarify, and respect whatever emerges in this process. The aim is unfoldment, wholeness, and growth, rather than adjustment, cure or accomplishment. Through group exercises, meditations, and open seat work, this workshop will introduce participants to the gestalt practice approach.

Mountains and Waves
Susan Harper & Steven Harper
Nature is a primary teacher of movement, creativity, and awareness. Being outdoors in the richness and beauty of the natural world awakens our outer senses. Continuum movement takes us inward, heightening the awareness of our inner senses. These five days will combine both practices, integrating the subtle inner explorations that Continuum movement inspires with the activity of day-hiking in the magnificent Big Sur back-country.

The day-hikes will introduce participants to basic and increasingly-refined awareness practices to enhance their sensitivity to all that wilderness and being out-of-doors offers. In doing so, not only will there be contact with the natural world, but it will be an opportunity to reawaken those elements of wilderness within.

In the indoor sessions, participants will explore movements which express and embody what they have taken in during their walks, enlivening their ability to feel what they see in nature, as well as their own inner nature. Engaging with this sensual environment, the group will play with movement, breath, sound, dreams, and ritual.

This is a time for contact with nature and wilderness, inside and out. Participants need not have previous experience in hiking or dance.

Cutting the Egoic Knot: The Challenge of Surrender
Eli Jaxon-Bear
The Enneagram of Character Fixation gives us the structure of the knots that strangle the heart. The Enneagram is a wisdom mirror for recognizing the ego, its desires and attachments. Together we will discover how the character fixation is an imitation of soul. We will work with the passions and attachments as obstructions of the soul’s awakening.

The wisdom of the Enneagram will be set in the ground of Vedanta and Buddhist cosmology and psychology. We will use group exercises, open seat, trance, truth-telling, role-playing, and movement to unmask the fixation and move towards soul awakening.

The Vision and Practice of Human Transformation
George Leonard
It may be argued that, in potential, every human being is a genius, and that the ultimate creative capacity of the human brain/body is, for all practical purposes, infinite. Each of us is a prodigious learning animal, and our ultimate destiny may well be to evolve capacities that would now be termed extraordinary. Perhaps it is only due to the limitations imposed by faulty notions of childrearing and schooling, along with the failure of national vision and practice, that we rarely develop even a small fraction of our potential.

In this hands-on workshop, human potential pioneer George Leonard, informed by his work with Michael Murphy in the development of Integral Transformatory Practice, outlines a new human vision and provides a practical map with which you can begin your journey toward the realization of your inborn genius and creativity. The workshop will involve discussion, demonstration, and the gentle movement and imaging exercises of Leonard Energy Training (LET), a practice inspired by the art of aikido.

Rod Stryker
Every human being is a uniquely gifted individual. Each of us is endowed with physical, intellectual, emotional, energetic, and spiritual capacities that can help us achieve peace and a life of limitless possibilities. Yoga can teach us how to awaken these powers, how to fuel the spark of our own uniqueness, and ultimately reach our fullest potential.

Participants will practice the tools of Ishta Yoga, which combine the yogas for body, mind, and energy cultivation. To unlock our individual potentials we’ll use all of the following: Yogic postures to strengthen and relax the body; breathing, chanting, and meditation to still the mind; and visualization to awaken the psyche’s deepest resources. The course will include open discussion and theory to personalize our practices.

Advanced Gestalt Practice
Christine Stewart Price & Guest Leader
This workshop is for those people who have previously taken a “Gestalt Practice” workshop, and want to return to a no frills group of straight open seat work. (Please refer to the “Gestalt Practice” description of January 1-3 for more information about introductory workshops.) The group will be limited to ten participants, and each person can count on time for an individual open seat session with one of the leaders. There will be some discussion and group exercises if time allows. This workshop is designed for those participants who have already experienced the value of group work and want to benefit from open seat sessions — both their own and those of other members of the group.

Leadership and Consciousness

Amy & Arnold Mindell

The leaders have written: "Individual and group problems in Moscow, Belfast, Berlin, Capetown, and San Francisco forced us to develop new methods for working with global, unmitigated personal and political abuse. We want to share new ideas on individual and group work related to male and female power, eldership, abuse in a global context, sustainable culture beyond adversarialism. Our hope is to awaken everyone to the signs of self and political abuse, to the unconscious use of dominance, humiliation, and rape."

"We will train in inner work, relationship and large group scenes, and discuss work done with terrorists. This seminar will be useful for those interested in connecting personal psychology and politics, abuse awareness and the environment, inner work and racism."

Please Note: Since the leaders are very popular and are not often at Esalen, this workshop is expected to have a very large enrollment.

Singing Gestalt: Solo or Duet

Nancy Kaye Lunney

"Singing Gestalt" is singing about yourself, who you are, what you feel, who you'd like to be. "Singing Gestalt" is about being yourself in front of other people without judging how well you sing. "Singing Gestalt" is not about performance. It is about contacting and feeling and expressing.

Come alone or bring someone who is important to you, perhaps a lover, friend, a parent, someone with whom you'd like to communicate in a different way than you've expressed before and possibly things you've never said. If you wish, bring photographs of significant people in your life, past or present.

If the idea of getting up and singing in front of other people terrifies you more than anything you can think of, this workshop is for you. If you love to sing in front of other people and want to stretch yourself further, this workshop is for you. If you've been too shy to try, this is your chance.

Some guided imagery and gestalt may be used. Accompaniment and lots of music are provided. But the workshop is really about you — singing. $350

Practical Intuition: Introduction

Laura Day

We are all psychics. Every time we draw a conclusion, we work with intuition as well as linear and emotional processes. Identifying how our intuitive faculty works enables us to use it selectively for effective decision-making. A predominantly linear process may be preferable when clear, empirical information is available. When little data is at hand or if the question relates to how current choices might affect future results, an intuitive process may be more efficient.

"Practical Intuition," an experiential workshop, introduces intuitive methods for gathering empirical information. Participants will give and receive several present- and future intuitive readings a day, focusing on predicting and retrieving verifiable data. Different intuitive styles, such as clairvoyance, clairaudience, and telepathy, will be taught, along with exercises for continued training at home.

Participants are requested to bring a few photographs of themselves and people they know well, their personal and business questions, and a willingness to work as if they already know how to do something that they in fact already know how to do. $350

Robert Hall
There is no fixing a damaged childhood. The best you can hope for is to make the sucker float. — Conroy

Robert Hall writes: “And so it is. This workshop is about making it float. How to. If you’re willing to spend some time with meditation, gestalt group process, making sounds, and experimenting with moving your body to your own rhythms, if you’re interested in how body awareness, psychotherapy, and meditation work together to loosen your identification with who you think you are, and if you still have your sense of humor, we’ll not only make it float, we’ll take a ride in it.”

Embodiment & Vision
Laura DeNuccio (Ma Prita)
In the sunlight of awareness, each thought, each action becomes sacred.

—Thich Nhat Hanh

Laura DeNuccio writes: “This is an invitation to those individuals who are aware of an emerging consciousness that is making itself felt and heard personally and globally, and who are searching to fulfill both higher and deeper callings in their lives.

“Through attunement with the Earth and each other, individuals can deepen their capacity to listen to the innate wisdom and intelligence of their bodies. Learning to listen from within can lead back to the ancient wisdom of the Earth — returning us to our sacredness and wholeness. Participants will use breath, sound, and movement as meditations for enlivening the vitality of cells and tissue, for dissolving energetic blockages, and to quiet, still, and expand the mind. The sound meditations have the potential of moving the individual past the limitations of language, creating openings for new thought and inspiration. The emphasis will be on self-care, renewal, and nourishment.

“The group will explore commitment and what it means to fully embody one’s inner vision. What would you love to see in your life? In your world? What is meaningful and significant to you? What’s truly of value? Ritual and the power of the Spoken Word will be used to bring this vision forth. While cultivating compassion, honesty, and kindness toward oneself and others, the group will experiment with co-creating community, an environment of trust and acceptance in which to explore this ever-unfolding adventure of spirit.

The Subtle Self
Judy Blackstone
All spiritual traditions refer to an essential dimension of existence, calling it unity consciousness, emptiness, universal consciousness, and many other names. This dimension is not an abstract concept. It is the core of our own true nature and can be experienced by anyone who is willing to approach it with patience and openness. Unity consciousness is experienced as clear, mirror-like space, pervading our body and our environment, transcending the duality of self and object. It is deeper than the physical and energetic levels of our being and beyond our psychological defenses, projections, images, and archetypes. Subtle Self Work is a precise method for attuning to the clear space of unity consciousness.

In this workshop we will explore how to relate to others in this clear space, how to commune with nature, how to experience and live in the inner depths of our body. Participants will use daily sitting meditation sounds to stimulate the subtle channels in the body, subtle movement exercises, and verbal and movement process work to stabilize and expand our sense of unity consciousness. In this essential dimension of ourselves, we can find the source of our love, clarity, vitality, and peace.

Elliot Walker Aronson & Ayala Pines

This workshop is designed for people who give service to others and are experiencing burnout. It will explore the impact of burnout on both the service provider and the client, ways of finding and recognizing support resources on the job, and positive methods of dealing with burnout and life's tedium.

Through lectures and group discussions, participants will have the opportunity to increase their understanding of those aspects of their own work and life that could cause burnout. Meeting the Shadow

Jeremiah Abrams

"One does not become enlightened by imagining figures of light," said C.G. Jung, "but by making the darkness conscious." Jung believed that realization of the shadow allows us to rediscover our own spiritual life and embody expanded awareness.

The shadow is the part of ourselves that we want to hide; the part we resist making conscious. Beginning with a confessional, shadow work invites an encounter with the shadow, leading us back to our buried potentials, to what we have rejected out of shame, fear, ignorance, or lack of love. Facing the shadow does not mean eliminating it, but rather undertaking the process of balancing and depolarizing, healing the split between our conscious self-concept and all else we are or might be. Confronting the shadow produces a new humility, allowing us to dissolve dualistic thinking and to live centered more in the existential present.

In this experiential workshop, participants will try to recognize, re-collect, and integrate the shadow projections that corrupt our relationships and our connection to the world. This can help defuse negativity, release guilt and shame, and allow us to more fully embody our imperfect humanity. The leader will utilize dreamwork, trance induction, active imagination techniques (writing, drawing, and clay), bioenergetics, and the group's evolving dialogue.

The Subtle Art of Meditation

David Streeter

The experience of insight, tranquility, inner strength, and aliveness can be found within our everyday life through the ancient art of meditation.

This workshop will approach traditional meditation practice in an unusual way. In our retreat atmosphere we will prepare the body-mind for silent listening with fluid movement from the martial arts and yoga. We will incorporate breathing methods (Prä-na-Yama), and energy work with Zazen (sitting meditation). Other activities will include a silent listening hike in the wilderness, group meditation in a nearby contemplative monastery, and Zazen at our new meditation center nestled close to a waterfall.

This approach to the subtle practice of meditation through the body can inspire the student to discover his or her rich interior life and that crystal clear still point described so well in every spiritual tradition.

The Power of Voice
Arthur Samuel Joseph

This workshop introduces a method called Vocal Awareness, which includes vocalizing, sound meditation, movement, song study, and development of the speaking voice as a means for deepening contact with the self. Participants will work individually and in groups exploring breathing, toning, a capella sonnets, and songs.

Vocal Awareness is an art form that addresses the brain in precise ways how language affects the brain. It is now well-known in the field of psychoneuroimmunology that endorphins are released by the brain in response to verbal cues and visual imagery. Research also points to a strong correlation between language, breath, and psycho-physical response. Knowing this, developing one's own language becomes a means for self-integration.

The aim of this workshop is to explore the voice as metaphor, to tap into issues of self-expression and self-esteem, and to have fun while developing vocal abilities. It is valuable for lay people and professionals alike, and is open to beginners through advanced. Tape recorders are required.

A Workshop for Children and Their Families
Lia Thompson-Clark & Eduardo Eizner

During these four days children can enroll in one of two programs at Essalen: The Gazebo School Park or the Annual Children's Safari. Parents will have the opportunity to experience gestalt process, massage, herbal baths, as well as to participate observe at either of the children's programs. (Those parents attending a different workshop other than this one can also arrange to have their children in this program).

The children's programs include:

- The Gazebo School Park is designed for children ages two through six to experience a unique outdoor environment rich with opportunities for physical, psychosocial, and intellectual development. The staff encourages each child's natural curiosity about the physical world, and believes that from spontaneous play children can discover valuable new knowledge.
- The Annual Children's Safari is a music and dance festival led by Babatunde Olatunji and his ensemble of musicians and dancers who teach musical ritual worldwide. Through storytelling, chanting, and learning African rhythms in drumming and dancing, the children will create a performance guided by Olatunji. His message is more than musical — it carries a dedication to the future: "We hope that children's programs will become the concern of all who work diligently for a peaceful world full of love for those who take our places tomorrow. Omolere — children are the reward of life."

Weekend of July 9–11

Movement from the Martial Arts
Yoshi Sakuyama & David Streeter

This weekend workshop will offer participants a wonderful opportunity to absorb the spirit of Shorinji Kempo, a Japanese martial art that is rooted in Zen Buddhism. Yoshi Sakuyama, a sixth-dan master from Japan, will introduce a basic exercise system that is the foundation for many martial arts strategies.

These powerful yet simple katas or dance-like movements amplify vital intrinsic energies that flow from the center of the body. The energy itself is called ki or chi in China, and prana in India. This ki power can be released through specific exercises to strengthen one's every expression. Easy to understand and fun to practice, this teaching can be applied to everyday life.

A Workshop for Couples: Independence and Intimacy
Mary Goldenson (Devarani)

Very little in our culture prepares couples for the challenge, "There is room for both use." Too often the relationship becomes a battleground for unresolved issues, hurts, and beliefs.

In this workshop, couples will have an opportunity to explore and reclaim the unspoken expectations they project onto each other, heal past hurts that create distance, and learn new ways of communicating. There will be a supportive environment where participants can experience themselves as courageous and capable of taking risks. Experimental processes will be drawn from gestalt, Reichian work, dance, imagery, and meditation.

Art & Physics:
Parallel Visions in Space, Time, and Light
Leonard Shlain

The root of the word "physics" means nature. Both artists and physicists are engaged in an ongoing attempt to describe nature's reality. The artist uses chiefly image and metaphor; the physicist, number and equation. This seminar will explore the connections between the conceptual ideas inherent in revolutionary art movements and the visionary breakthroughs that have occurred in physics. Throughout history, but particularly in the modern era, the artist sees the world in a new way. Later, the physicist discovers a new way to think about the world. When these two opposing viewpoints are superimposed on each other, their images and insights are seen to have an uncanny similarity. In this seminar, Leonard Shlain will propose that they are but two different aspects of the same reality.

The changing view of three basic constructs — space, time, and light — in various periods of art, science, and culture will be the basis for a slide show and discussion that explores the reciprocal nature between cubism and a new concept of space, futurism and a new concept of time, and fauvism as a new concept of light. From there, attention will turn to a theory of consciousness which posts the split brain model in the individual as the source of the art/science division in the general culture. Stressing the need to combine the two hemispheric viewpoints, this seminar will examine the benefits that accrue when art is seen in terms of its precognitive ability, and when the imagery of modern physics is understood.

There will be no equations and one need not have a background in either art or physics to enjoy and participate in this workshop. The only prerequisites are a sense of wonder, an open mind, and an innate curiosity.

When Success Is Not Enough
Peller Marion
If I had known what it would be like to have it all, I would have settled for less.
—Lily Tomlin
Since 1950 materialism has sky-rocketed in the United States. Indeed, many of us are wealthy beyond the wildest dreams of our ancestors, and yet we struggle more than ever for self-esteem and meaning in our lives.

When alternative measures of success are not available, the deep human need to be valued and respected by others is acted out through consumption. Buying things becomes both a means to self-esteem and social acceptance. "The avarice of mankind is insatiable," wrote Aristotle, who believed that as soon as one desire was satisfied, another would appear to take its place. If our wants are insatiable, there is simply no such thing as enough.

Peller Marion has designed a weekend that explores the questions: How much is enough? What is an achievement junkie? What is my definition of success at this time in my life? How do I create my own personal philosophy of life? How do I live by my own agenda?

Participants will have a supportive environment where they can experience and explore the paradox of success in their own life. A variety of experiential processes will be drawn from readings and discussion, games, gestalt, imagery, and meditation.

Homeopathy: Medicine for the Twenty-First Century
Dana Ullman
Homeopathy is a medical science and art that integrates ancient principles of healing with a sophisticated and systematic method of using natural drugs which stimulate the body’s own immune and defense system.

This workshop will explore homeopathic medicine in view of the most recent developments in physiology, physics, and immunology, and will integrate this information with insights from Jungian psychology, systems thinking, and energy medicine. Ecological thinking, as it directly relates to the homeopathic approach to infectious disease, including AIDS, will also be discussed.

In addition to learning the basics of homeopathic science, participants will learn how to use at least 15 homeopathic medicines for infectious diseases, women’s health problems, pediatric conditions, and common sports injuries. The leader will also provide helpful information for those who would like to pursue homeopathy for either personal or professionals reasons.

Children’s Moving Arts
Lia Thompson-Clark
This work/study program for ages seven and up is an opportunity for children to work in and learn about community, as well as to meet together for "moving arts." Children will be assigned to help in one of Esalen’s work departments in the morning, swim and eat lunch together, and in the afternoon combine their creativity through the many different moving arts — the arts we live by. These include opportunities for self-expression through song, dance, theater, painting, maskmaking, and bodywork. The curriculum and schedule may vary according to the special interests of the children.

This workshop is open to children whose parents are attending a concurrent Esalen seminar. For more information write the leader at: P.O. Box 815, Gambier, Ohio, 43022. $380

Zero Balancing: Basic I & II
Fritz Smith
Zero Balancing is a simple method for aligning body structure with body energy. Western science has shown that energy and matter are fundamentally coupled; advances in psychology have shown that the body and mind are also interconnected. Zero Balancing is born out of these perceptions, with roots in both Eastern and Western concepts of body function and structure. It is based on the experience that the balance of energy and structure within the body has a direct effect on the physical, mental, emotional, and spiritual health of an individual.

The structure/energetic interface of the body is beneath conscious awareness. When imbalances occur at this level, the body tends to compensate for them rather than resolve them directly. These imbalances often lead to loss of vitality, chronic body pain, and decreased potential for vibrant health. Zero Balancing can assist in overcoming these unbalanced patterns through touch.

In this workshop, anatomy, physiology, and skills of touch will be reviewed. Eastern concepts of chi energy, its movement in the body and the chakra system will be discussed. Zero Balancing methods will be presented, including those for evaluating and balancing the structural/energetic interface of the body. The workshop will be both didactic and experiential, with emphasis on new body work skills, and is open to all people in the healing arts. It is approved for C.E. credit for acupuncturists (and nurses — see below), and as Z.B. I or II in the Zero Balancing certification program.

The Enneagram in Action
Helen Palmer
The Enneagram is an ancient model of human development based on nine personality types and their interactions. The system allows us to look deeply into our own character, and to more clearly understand relationships with colleagues, clients, family, and friends.

The Enneagram will be demonstrated by a live panel of speakers, each representing one of the nine personality types. The workshop will focus on role play and enactments between the panelists and those in the group who wish to question them. This type of interaction pinpoints typical projections, blunders, and transformations that occur between people who relate from radically different perspectives. In joining insight about type with the technology of sacred tradition, the Enneagram demonstrates ways in which emotional red flags such as jealousy or fear can become the raw material, the energy source for spiritual liberation.
This workshop can be applied as one of the prerequisites for the Enneagram Professional Training Program. The emphasis will be on inner material, not personal process work. If you wish to discuss the workshop, please call (510) 843-7621.

Playing the Edge
David Schiffman
In the early stages of growth, success seems to be its own reward. The excitement and the willingness to stay with it comes bubbling up in those who are involved in new and successful ventures. To keep this spirit alive is not easy. The enormous pressures, the grinding routines and demands of daily life can dispirit even the healthiest people. To listen to one's heart and know what's real requires the courage to pause. In this willingness to stop and listen to the deeper self, the live true resources that guide and protect us.

The purpose of this week is to create a mood of sanctuary for people who are in transition and facing major changes in career, relationship, or matters of the spirit; those in need of a break from demanding, stressful responsibilities; and individuals interested in breaking new ground in the areas of self-nurturance, intuitive functioning, and problem-solving.

The process will be gently restorative and illuminating. The group intention will be to create a community based on trust and goodwill, with an emphasis on individual freedom. Traditional methods of self-inquiry (gestalt practice, bioenergetics, psychosynthesis) will be combined with innovative methods using music, meditation, poetry, and prayer to foster the spirit of living fully and comfortably.

Taoism and the Shen
Master Share K. Lew
Traditional Taoist concepts of health, longevity, and harmony with nature will be introduced by Master Lew, a temple-trained Taoist priest from southern China. The core of the workshop will be instruction in the "Shen," a set of twelve non-strenuous exercises (six standing, six sitting), whose primary purpose is self-healing. These exercises also develop concentration, increase visual and auditory acuity, and enhance sensitivity to oneself and others. Master Lew will discuss the use of everyday foods and Chinese herbs in healing, and tell stories from his life in the monastery.

Master Lew, now 75, first began to teach Taoist internal cultivation to non-Chinese in 1970. His monastery style, Tao Ahn Pai, dates back 1300 years to Lui Tung Pin, a historical personage of the Tang Dynasty and one of the Eight Immortals of Taoism.

Body Rejuvenation
Dub Leigh & Audrey Nakamura
The goal of this workshop is to start rejuvenating the body, mind, and spirit. A fast way to do this is to work the body. Transform the old, hard, short, nonresilient tissue into soft, lengthy, bouncy tissue free from trauma, stress, and pain. Work on changing the dependent, hopeless, negative, grouchy person into an enthusiastic, positive, upbeat one.

The recipe for beginning to rejuvenate the body will be demonstrated in one session to the group, and then experienced and performed by each participant.

This seminar is recommended for everyone.

The older you are, the more stuff you have to work with. Class size is limited (two students per table). Bring a swimsuit — two piece for women.

Please note: Since this is a hands-on class using particular methods, participants are asked not to receive body work outside of class until the workshop is over.

Drawing with Color
Leigh Hyams
Artwork comes straight through an open mind — and with it often comes clarity of vision, increased awareness of oneself in relation to the environment, and a deepening understanding of the world of art and its meaning in one's life.

Without freedom one cannot respond fully to the experience of drawing. The leader's unique teaching methods can help students to draw immediately — fearlessly, exuberantly, sensitively, and observantly. Participants will be introduced to a variety of media and techniques and the joys of working with color.

This is a workshop for people who want to revitalize their connection with art as well as those who have had no previous experience. The only prerequisites are curiosity about the creative process and a willingness to explore the rich possibilities inherent in the act of drawing.

The Transformation Lessons: Learning to Feel
Robert Raleigh
The Transformation Lessons is an innovative method of movement communication that activates and deepens specific core level abilities that are inherent in each of us, but are usually undeveloped or inactive. By deepening these abilities (i.e. the ability to be physically intimate, the will to be well), the capacity to "feelingly" understand one's drives and unconscious motives is heightened. Increasing the capacity to feel is essential if real transformational change is to be made.

Four transformation lessons will be introduced in this workshop. Tiny, gentle movements will be used to catalyze the changes that each lesson activates. Once you receive the functional information of a lesson, you begin to embody that ability more. This frees up new choices relative to the aspects of your life that the lesson affects. These lessons can be effective for behavioral changes related to diet, money, and work, and for spiritual-emotional patterns that affect your sex life and the ability to be loved and nurtured. $380

Introduction to Hand Analysis: Blueprint for Life
Richard Unger
Since ancient times, people have gazed into their palms and sought to learn about themselves. There has always been a suspicion that each unique pattern inscribed in our palms and sought to learn about themselves. There has always been a suspicion that each unique pattern inscribed in our hands might reveal something about our fate.

Research with electron microscopes confirms that dermatoglyphic (fingerprint) markings

$380 (plus $25 materials fee paid directly to the leader)
begin to form approximately thirteen weeks after conception, creating a topographic map of the developing fetal hand. There are five basic fingerprint patterns (plus subsets of these patterns), and eleven locations per hand where these patterns may be found. Articles published in medical, psychological, anthropological, morphological, genetic, and biological journals have attempted to detail the impact of these markings on human development.

If our physical bodies are but one expression of a higher vibrationary energy (i.e. spirit), it seems reasonable to try and study this energy by the impressions left on our own skins during our formation process. By examining our dermatoglyphic formations, we could be examining our "blueprint for life." $380

The Body and Zen
Dub Leigh & Audrey Nakamura
The goal of this seminar is twofold: 1) to use body work methods and principles for releasing tension, trauma, and toxins from connective tissue; and 2) to circulate the vital energy in an aligned body. The group will draw from Rolfing (structure), Feldenkrais (function), and Zen (energy) to obtain these results.

This is a hands-on workshop. Participants will give and receive body work and learn methods to recognize, work with, and relieve some types of chronic muscle pain. The class will be limited in size (two people per table).

Participants are asked to bring a swimsuit, two piece for women.

Please note: Since this is a hands-on class using particular methods, participants are asked not to receive body work outside of class until the workshop is over.

Relationships:
Letting Go -- Moving on
Mary Goldenson (Devarani) & Gustavo Rabin
For one human being to love another: that is perhaps the most difficult of all our tasks, the ultimate test and proof, the work for which all the other work is but preparation.

—Rainer Maria Rilke

The fabric of our lives is made up of relationships. All of life's relationships will be the focus of this workshop: family, friends, lovers, co-workers, partners.

Often beliefs, defenses, fears, and emotions about past relationships continue into our present relationships and keep us from spontaneous feelings of love, trust, and joy. The goal of this workshop is to experience these patterns and create new ways to relate in the moment to ourselves, others, and to our work. This workshop can help you:

- Find out how your relationships mirror you
- Get a clearer picture of what you want and how to get it
- Examine ways you sabotage yourself
- Learn more about how others see you
- Learn practical tools and knowledge that will help create empowered relationships. $740

Pottery at Esalen
Noel Mapstead

The Big Sur coast is uniquely endowed with numerous deposits of raw clays which have been decomposing from granite rock for millions of years. In this workshop we will come to the Big Sur clays for the first time to create form and metamorphosis.

Using Esalen as a base, the group will explore the Big Sur coast with morning walks to gather clay, make pottery, and bake the clay in small kilns and open-pit fires using cow dung at various locations in and around Esalen. Participants will learn to identify natural clays, process and work clay, and fire clay with traditional methods using our natural surroundings as an open studio. Other events will include clay baths and the building of small sweat lodges.

Experimental ceramics will be encouraged by exploring Big Sur alchemy and testing found-earth materials for coloring and glazing, and processing primordial clays. Emphasis will be on completing handmade objects to give to those we love. $740

Self-Inquiry
Joyce Lyke & David Silverstein

We are the night ocean filled with glints of light. We are the space between fish and moon, while we sit here together.

—Rumi

Our culture constantly delivers the message that happiness and success come from the outside — consumption and the attainment of material things. We tend to look outside ourselves for the things that will make our lives more fulfilling. But most of what we long for can't be purchased from the world; only given to us from ourselves. When we recognize that all we yearn for is not outside us but really deep within us, a process of self-inquiry begins that helps us discover what it is that we truly long for. This workshop is designed for people who want to know themselves in a deeper way, both emotionally and spiritually. We will create a safe place to deepen our awareness and explore whatever emerges using Sufi self-remembering exercises, meditation, gestalt awareness practice, and a connection to the earth at Esalen.

Cooking with All Your Senses
Alan Mello
This workshop is an opportunity for cooks at any level to find a new way to look at themselves through a creative process as subtle and complex as cooking. It will be a relaxed week with a meditation in the morning and then two daily cooking sessions.

Chef Alan Mello believes that today's best cooking combines classical techniques with modern health and environmental awareness. The group will work with meat, fish, and vegetarian dishes, cultivating an appreciation for lighter flavors. Participants will also experiment with soups, fresh pasta, and breads, touching on several international styles. There will be a contemporary approach to established flavors and dishes as well as "California kitchen" improvisation, utilizing the Esalen organic garden as our larger and source of inspiration.

Come and cook with all your senses. Lots of useful and delicious information will be passed on. $740

Freeing Our Bodies/Our Selves through Movement:
A Feldenkrais® Approach
Patrick Douce
The work of Moshe Feldenkrais is based on the natural process by which we learned to move as children. During this workshop, soft, easy, gentle movements will be used to increase awareness of the body and to improve the ease and ability of movement. Special emphasis will be placed on the difficulties in movement that arise from chronic conditions such as lower back and neck pain, shoulder pain, tension in the neck and shoulders, and knee injuries. Such conditions can be improved by approaching the difficulties as problems in learning rather than as therapeutic troubles. Situations which were "incurable" become "re-educable." Workshop participants will also be introduced to methods for improving their ability to sense each other's bodies through touch and massage.

Although this workshop is valuable for anyone interested in learning more about his/her body through direct experience, it may be of special interest and benefit to dancers, athletes, doctors, nurses, physical therapists, psychologists, health care professionals, and elderly citizens who may discover new ways of moving with ease and increased flexibility—painlessly and immediately.

Television: Window to the World or Tunnel to Nowhere?
David Marc
To grow up in America is, in most cases, to develop a lifelong relationship with TV. Television is at least as much a fact of life to the emerging personality as trees, the elements, and other people. Stimulus and desensitizer, miracle and burden, television is a ubiquitous and powerful creator of consciousness.

For the child, TV is a treasure box, beckoning to the innate will to learn. To the adolescent, it offers itself as a dependable source of behavioral norms. For the adult, it may serve as therapy for a loneliness that it helped create in the first place. For most of us, television viewing presents a complex approach-avoidance dilemma.

What is TV? Is it a communication resource that allows access to more information, more drama, and more ideas than any previous generation might have dared dream of? Or is it an insidious form of mind control that is creating a society of consumer sheep? Is it the cause of spreading illiteracy and ignorance of history? Or a democratic tool for education?

These questions will be explored as the group draws upon the ideas of Marshall McLuhan, Tania Modlewski, T.S. Eliot, and Walt Whitman. Three films will be shown: Modern Times, A Face in the Crowd, and Marshall McLuhan: The Man and His Message.

Other questions to be addressed will include: How is the concept of self affected by the form of address constantly iterated by TV? What are the consequences of internalizing a mass identity? Are you laughing at TV, or is TV laughing at you? $380
CoHousing: Creating Your Own Community
Kathryn McCamant & Charles Durrett

Dramatic demographic and economic changes have created a mismatch between today's household and most conventional American housing. Households experience this mismatch as they face a child-care crisis, deepening isolation, and a chronic time crunch. Things we once took for granted — family, community, a sense of belonging — must now be actively sought out.

CoHousing addresses many of these needs. Developed by the residents themselves, communities are made up of private dwellings complemented by extensive common facilities. Each dwelling is autonomous, yet the common house, with the opportunity for shared dinners and childcare, is a focal point of the community.

This workshop gives participants an overview of organizing, planning, and designing a CoHousing community, from site acquisition through group process, development and design, and construction and management.

Topics will include:
- An overview of the CoHousing development process, from initial meetings to moving in
- Development strategies and the advantages/disadvantages of working with a developer
- Forming and working with a group, and organizing for effective decision-making
- Financial options: ownership structures and money realities
- Designing for community: architectural considerations
- The next steps: your role, the group's role, services of professionals
- What other CoHousing groups are doing: the network and how to plug in.

Reawakening the Inner Child through Film
Francis Lu & Brother David Steindl-Rast

Return to the beginning: Become a child again. —Tao Te Ching

The child's delight in the movies can be reawakened in our adult life. There is a magic power to cinema. Through image, sound, and action, film can portray with unique power the joys and sorrows of childhood. It can help renew within us innocence, wonder, and creativity, and open our eyes to surprising discoveries.

Central to this seminar will be the discovery of the child within each one of us. Many have been helped by finding the right film at the right time. Should this help be left to chance? Viewing a film is an art; practicing this art for five days can heighten our enjoyment and deepen our insight.

For the fourth time, this annual gathering will bring together film enthusiasts, both those professionally connected with cinema or merely private movie buffs. In leisure we will view and discuss timeless classics as well as hard to obtain and little-known masterpieces of the screen. All this in the incomparable setting of Esalen — a film festival and more!

Carolyn Bradock

Countless numbers of children consider the exploitation of their bodies part of their formative experience. Trusted adults assault, neglect, and sexually abuse them, leaving physical and emotional scars. Professional counselors and others need special skills to work with these victim/survivors and the survivors themselves need to develop special skills to overcome the physical and emotional consequences of being abused.

During sexual abuse/assault, the body is the scene of the crime. This seminar will focus on interventions that include the body, mind, and spiritual belief systems, and will add a new body-focused dimension to traditional strategies in dealing with those who have experienced sexual abuse. The importance of understanding the various dimensions of a person's reactions — especially body reactions — to sexual abuse is the key to developing predictive tools and guidance for the intervention process.

The leader will present specific intervention strategies and will detail patterns of child abuse and neglect, family dynamics, and body reactions. Much of the seminar will be experiential. Participants will be actively involved in intervention demonstrations, discussions of ethical issues, and case experiences from a body-oriented perspective. The focus will be on individual and group process with some time devoted to legal issues.

Breath work, sound, movement, gestalt, body work, Tai Ji, role-playing, and creative cognitive work and play.

Time will allow for some individual work within the seminar and for scheduling massage and other body work.

C.E. credit is available for nurses; see pages 53-54.

Gestalt: Elements, Innovations, Traditions
Eric Erickson & Seymour Carter

Gestalt is one of the existentialist clinical traditions that deals with the issues of separation, loss, ambiguity, and choice. In this workshop, the leaders will use gestalt methods of inquiry to draw out, clarify, and help participants resolve inner conflicts. The focus will be on searching for aspects of the participant's world which seem fragmented and incomplete, and eventually combine these fragments to evoke the self-righting capacity of the human organism.
Both leaders have been long-time students of gestalt and Eastern philosophical traditions, and believe there is a strong complimentary relationship between Buddhist teachings and gestalt practice. Both practices emphasize mindful awareness as a basic tool. Much of the power of both traditions is brought forth by concentrating attention on the seeming simplicity of our moment-to-moment experience. Awareness practice from the perspective of both gestalt practice and Buddhist meditation will be explored.

Cooperating with God: Healing as Spiritual Practice
Elizabeth Stratton
Healing is a lifelong practice. It is the art of opening to, communicating, and cooperating with God. Each of us experiences God in a unique way — some as Spirit or Mystery, others as Life Force or Divine Presence. Our inner healing process, whether it be physical, emotional, or mental, takes place when our entire life becomes a spiritual practice dedicated to healing the wounds of the soul.

This workshop will explore the components of a life dedicated to healing the self and others. Emphasis will be placed on the physical body as an expression of the soul. Deep meditation, laying on of hands, psychic scanning, dreamwork, chakra opening, emotional insight work, and spiritual direction will be included. Workshop participants should bring three dreams that they consider significant.

This workshop is designed for those who work with others in a healing capacity, as well as those who need to focus on healing themselves.

Response vs. Reaction
Peter Ralston
A Warrior is measured according to this: that he learns from the dregs of the ancients and extracts clear liquid from them.
—Shissai (1728) Zen Sword Master

Much of our life is lived in the reactions we have to people, events, ideas, and circumstances. These reactions determine not only our level of effectiveness, but also our degree of satisfaction. Generally, we do not respond properly to what comes our way; we react to it. If we make a distinction between a reaction and a response, then we have a powerful way in which to change our experience of life.

A reaction is a programmed reflexive counter-action which takes the form of some sort of recoil or backlash, unconsciously (but purposefully) serving our ego survival in some way. It is often inappropriate for effective interactions or experience. A response is a conscious reply tailored to the event and arises from a calm mind and sensitive awareness. Without being dominated by fear or desire, it is an intelligent and appropriate action or expression.

Working on making these distinctions more clearly in our own experience, participants will use verbal communications and exercises with a partner, physical exercises and games, guided meditations, and dialogue with the leader to help make a shift from reactive tendencies to responsive actions.

The workshop leaders are married and have been together for over fourteen years.

Fun with the Violin: For Adults Who Always Wanted to Play the Violin and Never Have
Diane Egli
Are you one of the many adults who always wanted to play a musical instrument but never have? Or maybe you used to play but haven't since childhood. This workshop is an opportunity to learn to play or re-play the violin and have fun with the learning process.

Participants will increase their awareness of how it feels to learn a new skill—the challenge, the excitement, the frustration, and the success of accomplishment. The workshop will include various activities designed to enhance violin playing/fiddling, such as movement, music, and rhythm exercises. There will be time for listening to various types of music such as classical, jazz, and bluegrass, and we will do some music meditation and visualization.

Creative Bonding:
Changing Destructive Detachment
George Kohlrieser
Recent medical and psychological research validates the idea "no man is an island", and that bonding behavior to people, pets, places, things, and goals is central to physical, psychological, and spiritual well-being. Disruption in the bonding-grieving cycle can lead to destructive detachment, victimization, and chronic loneliness, which can shorten one's life and limit the quality of genuine aliveness.

Through presentations, guided imagery, emotional release, and group process, participants can explore, reinforce, or establish new and more effective ways to keep the bonding process alive and healthy.

Psychic Self-Defense
Elizabeth Stratton
As most of us know from our own experience, working with or around people who are depressed, hostile, or anxious can affect our own moods and feelings. We are constantly affected by the emotions and thoughts of those around us, as well as by the accumulated moods of the environment in which we live and work. We can also be affected by the illnesses of people we are close to, sometimes to the point of actually manifesting their symptoms ourselves.

During this weekend we will have the opportunity to explore our psychic boundaries and discover how and when they can overflow into areas that cause emotional confusion. We will learn how to release negativity and strengthen boundaries that can help us to be less vulnerable in the future.

Spiritual Healing:
Laying On of Hands
Maria Lucia Sauer Holloman
This workshop will present practical methods for using the hands as instruments of physical and spiritual healing. The emphasis will be on intentionality and personal clarity as fundamental tools in any healing art.

Maria Lucia Sauer Holloman studied and lived at Esalen for nine years. She currently studies with healers in Brazil and has a private practice in Rio de Janeiro where she applies Brazilian and North American approaches to healing.

Caring and Conflict
Joel Dweck Isaacs & Anne Clark Isaacs
The leaders write: "Our goal in this workshop is to help each person touch their deepest place of longing to be whole. Starting from this inner place, we will strive for group interactions of the same quality. Together, participants and leaders alike, the risks we take in knowing and revealing ourselves can create an intimate community.

"Feelings can provide self-knowledge, depth, and pleasure, especially when they flow freely. Relating to others is most gratifying when feelings are expressed openly and directly. We will work to realign the point of balance where the desire for contact and love is often countered by the fear of being engulfed or abandoned. We will explore ways to expand our options beyond isolation or losing oneself to be close."

The leaders have worked together for over a decade, sharing a commitment to relationship and community. Their training in numerous disciplines allows them to tailor each workshop to the needs and desires of the participants. Reichian emotional release, group process, play, nurturing, confrontation, and healing energy will all be used. When asked to characterize intimate relationship, one of them exclaimed, "It's heaven and hell!" This workshop aims toward easier access to heaven and shorter time in hell. $740

The Application of Altered States
Ronald Wong Jue
This workshop is for psychologists and health professionals who are interested in integrating transpersonal dimensions and strategies into their clinical practice. Participants will explore: how to move into a state of consciousness that allows the client a deeper awareness of his or her dynamics; the functionality of trance and the clinical application of altered states of consciousness in working with repressed memories; accessing spiritual resources of the client.

Utilizing David Bohm's theory of explicate and implicature order and Karl Pribram's holonomic theory to explain the phenomenology of trance, participants will delve into subjects ranging from myths and dream metaphors to shamanic journeys. The integration of this material into ordinary consciousness will be addressed. The final experiential portion of the workshop will focus on the healing of the inner child and parental introjects. These components of the psyche and their healing are important considerations in working with co-dependency, incest, rape, and addiction. Resource materials will be provided.

A Weekend with Seymour Carter

When Drummers Were Women

Layne Redmond
This century has seen a vast unearthing of the images of the Great Goddess and her priestesses. Throughout the ancient Mediterranean world, she is portrayed with her tambourine or frame drum. The frame drum is one of the oldest, most primal instruments and was played predominantly by women with their bare hands. A powerful trance inducing instrument, it was used in the religious rites of many goddesses, including Inanna, Ishtar, Cybele, Hathor, Isis, Sekmet, Aphrodite, Demeter, and Artemis.

This weekend will focus on hand drumming techniques and their relationship with the elements of earth, water, fire, and air. Working in a circle and using the force of gravity, participants will practice synchronizing with the energy of the earth and radiating a group pulse. These rhythmic rituals are an ancient technology for accessing higher levels of awareness and releasing a deeper feminine energy.

This workshop is for women only. No prior experience with frame drums is necessary. Drums will be provided. $380

A Weekend with Ilana Rubenfeld
This workshop will provide an introduction to the Rubenfeld Synergy™ Method, a healing system that uses gentle touch, movement, gestalt practice, creative imagination, music, and humor.

Memories and emotions stored in the body can result in energy blocks and imbalances. Through exercises designed to contact, release, transform, and balance these cellular patterns, participants can freely explore their innate healing potential. The atmosphere is one of acceptance, caring, and laughter, encouraging participants to move toward integration, empowerment, freedom, and new possibilities.

Participation in this workshop fulfills one of the requirements for acceptance into the Rubenfeld Synergy™ Training Program.

A Workshop on Rudolf Steiner and Life Stages
Robert & Ellen McDermott
This workshop will provide an opportunity to explore biographical themes through discussion and clay exercises.

The leaders will discuss Rudolf Steiner's spiritual-scientific description of the human being (physical, etheric, soul, and spirit), and his detailed accounts of the seven-year stages of life. The group will then explore the soul mood, tasks, and opportunities of each one of the seven stages. The clay exercises will allow for artistic experience and expression of the themes which emerge in conversation. $380

Intuition and Perception: Extending the Boundaries
Keith Harary & Darlene Moore
Most of us have had experiences in which we appeared to be aware of information that was not immediately available to our five familiar senses. Such experiences usually emerge spontaneously and can range from simple hunches, to feeling in touch with a loved one at a distance, to premonitions in which we seem to be inexplicably aware of impending events. Labeling such experiences as "psychic" does not explain them, but makes this fundamentally normal aspect of human awareness appear to be some sort of occult or supernatural process. Yet, such experiences most likely emerge out of a deep interconnectedness between consciousness and the physical world that is entirely natural and independent of any single philosophical or religious system. Specific techniques of extended perception will be taught in order to allow this capacity to become a consciously available resource in everyday life, rather than a strictly spontaneous phenomenon. Starting with the basics of learning how to manage mental impressions, participants will practice separating their most relevant feelings and images from various forms of "mental noise" in a variety of extended perception scenarios. A more advanced technique that involves using your own "mental noise" to help guide your intuition will also be taught so you can develop your own inner language for processing intuitive information. $380

Week of August 8–13

Movement, Touch, and the Healing Process

Patrick Douce
This workshop will approach the concept of a free, effortless body through Moshe Feldenkrais's work in movement and touch. Balinese and other Indonesian systems of working with the human body's energy field will broaden the Feldenkrais work.

Participants will be introduced to the complexity and simplicity of the spinal column. They will use soft, conscious movement to increase their sensitivity for safe, hands-on explorations. Moving away from the notion of a straight, stiff, rod-like back, they will find that posture and overall flexibility of the spine improves.

This program is designed for both beginners and professionals interested in movement and touch. Individuals with chronic tension or stress, and those with lower back, neck, shoulder, or hip pain may find alternatives through learning more about the human body's possibilities. $740

Five Days with Ilana Rubenfeld
This workshop introduces the Rubenfeld Synergy™ Method, a holistic system developed over the past twenty-five years that integrates body, mind, emotions, and spirit for healing of self and others. This blend of gestalt practice, Alexander Technique, Feldenkrais® exercises, and Ericksonian hypnosis will be utilized as a gateway to contact, express, and work through deep feelings and memories locked in the body. Group exercises and individual demonstrations will incorporate gentle touch, movement, music, and humor. Key issues will be:

- Surviving the wounds of a dysfunctional family
- Healing the inner child
- Evoking innate healing potential
- Interdependence between emotions and posture
- Dreams and body metaphors that reveal life patterns
- Playfulness and humor
- Tools for self-care

This workshop fulfills one of the requirements for acceptance into the Rubenfeld Synergy™ Training Program.

Awakened Mind:

Brainwave Training Intensive

Anna Wise

The Awakened Mind is a state of consciousness that releases deep inner resources, capabilities, and powers that often lie dormant or inaccessible. This workshop offers intensive brainwave training to help you learn to develop the intricate combinations of brainwave frequencies that underlie optimum mental states. Biofeedback monitoring combined with different methods of meditation, visualization or "sensualization," and deep psychophysiological relaxation will be used to help you learn to master your own brainwaves, with an emphasis on greater creativity, reduced stress, and deeper self-awareness.

Participants will investigate the difference between the "state of consciousness" and the "content of consciousness" and learn how to use each to affect the other. We will look at repressed memory retrieval, the benefits and pitfalls of unconscious "radar," using the content of the subconscious for self-healing, and discuss the brainwave patterns of higher spiritual states of consciousness. The leader will discuss the differences between meditation, hypnosis, prayer, contemplation, visualization, relaxation, and concentration. The interrelationship between brainwaves and the human energy system, specifically the kundalini process, will also be explored.

Throughout the workshop the Mind Mirror EEG will be used to demonstrate brainwave patterns, and Electrical Skin Resistance Meters will be used to measure the depth of arousal and relaxation of your autonomic nervous system.

Writing and the Act of Creation

George Leonard

Participants will be encouraged to break through ego-barriers and cultural conditioning that inhibit expression. In so doing, they will have a chance to experience the creativity that is inherent in all of life. There will be little in the way of theoretical discussion and no critiques of past works. Simple movement exercises will serve to reduce stress, free the mind, and focus the will. Participants will have the opportunity to write freely in the here and now and to get immediate feedback. Before the weekend has passed, they in all probability will have completed a short article or fictional work and will have experienced some of the joys and heartaches that accompany publication. Bring pencils, pens, or portable typewriters — and plenty of paper.

Rekindling the Spirit in Work

Howard Schechter & Barbara Lee

"Rekindling the Spirit in Work" is about reconnecting with yourself and the work you do. Through creative exercises and sharing with the group, you can gain clarity about your goals in work, the skills required to reach those goals, and a deeper awareness of your strengths. The process can help you confront and dissolve major blocks to rewarding work and helps integrate who you are with what you do. This process is far more effective than narrowly focused vocational perspectives. The emphasis is on the question, "Who is working?" From an identification with our highest self, what we do can flow more easily and be a direct expression in the world of who we are inside.

This workshop is for people who are beginning new careers, in transition, dissatisfied, or simply bored with their work. Participants often come away with a sense of clarity and purpose, and seldom feel the need to make radical shifts in their job or profession. Rather, the subtle inner adjustments of identity, attitude, and perspective create greater job satisfaction and offer direction for taking the next steps in work.

Therapeutic Touch

Janet Quinn

Therapeutic Touch (TT) is an approach to healing that can be learned by anyone with the intent to help. It is a derivative of the laying-on of hands, but need not be practiced within a religious framework. Beginning with the basic assumption that all human beings are energy fields, TT is a powerful tool for actualizing the innate healing capacities of both recipients and providers. Clinical research demonstrates that TT can decrease anxiety, increase human hemoglobin levels, decrease pain, and increase the rate of human wound healing, among other beneficial effects.

The practitioner of TT embarks on a journey to empower the healer she/he already is, and, in the process, to be healed. The work of remembering how to care, how to connect in unconditional love and compassion, and how to heal is perhaps our only hope for personal, community, and planetary survival.

This workshop will explore the scientific, theoretical, and clinical foundations of TT. It will blend both didactic and experiential learning into a balanced, grounded approach to this new version of an ancient healing art.

Relationships: Turning Toward Joy

Mariah Fenton Gladis

Creating stable and fulfilling relationships is a challenge that everyone faces. To be successful, human relating must be understood and accepted as an activity, an ability that requires movement, purpose, emotional capacity, and extensive contact skills. People often believe that good relating evolves naturally, but they discover in the routine of living with families, friends, and lovers that, in truth, they have not been adequately prepared—by their family backgrounds or society—to meet the demands of loving relationships.

This workshop will focus on the nature and basic requirements of healthy relationship. It will offer participants opportunities to access their abilities and disabilities, to develop awareness, and to practice risking positive action with others. It is for anyone who has "hit the wall" in a relationship or who has experienced being stuck at some seemingly impenetrable contact boundary and wants to break through. Particularly helpful for adult children of dysfunctional families, ACAs, and human relations professionals, this experiential and didactic workshop will blend individual and group gestalt work, spiritual healing, body work, and personal metaphor.

Week of August 15–20

Living Dance

Anna Halprin & Jamie McHugh

In early times, dance was the mother of all art forms and a way for people to connect with the natural world, integrate as a community, and affirm personal and tribal values. Ancient peoples expressed the most important experiences of life not with external materials, but with their own bodies. They danced to make sense of the mysteries of their existence—to celebrate victory, mourn loss, bring rain, initiate the young. Today, in an everyday world set apart from nature, people still need to tap into the deep resources of their bodies, moving and dancing to renew, inspire, teach, create, heal.

Through an approach Anna Halprin calls the Life/Art Process, participants will create dances from their own lives, deepening their life experience through expanded art expression. This workshop will range from structured practice to spontaneous, dramatic, and any group interactions. Visualizations, music, and outdoor environments will be incorporated.

This workshop is open to everyone. Potential students for the Tamalpa Trainings may find this a valuable orientation. For information on recommended reading and videotapes, contact Tamalpa Institute, P.O. Box 794, Kentfield, CA 94914. $740

Polarity Massage Intensive

Deborah Anne Medow

Polarity massage is a system for balancing the currents of life forces which naturally flow through the body. It is a holistic approach to healing whereby the practitioner and recipient work with thoughts and attitudes, nutritional needs, polarity yoga exercises, and the polarity massage session itself.

Participants in this five-day workshop will be instructed in basic concepts of the polarity system as applied to the human energy field through the medium of massage. Emphasis will be on theory, polarity points and counterpoints, energy balancing methods, nutrition, and polarity yoga. Three-hour class sessions will be held in the mornings and afternoons. Evenings will be for practice and occasional group meetings.

This workshop is designed both for the interested layperson and the professional body work practitioner, and serves as a good review for anyone who has previously taken a polarity workshop.

C.E. credit is available for nurses; see pages 53-54. $740

Chakra Psychology

Nancy Rosanoff

The chakra system is generally known to be an ancient Hindu concept of spiritual energy centers located along the spine, which are awakened or energized as individuals progress spiritually. This course can give participants a modern understanding of how to use the chakras as guides in their quest for psychological and spiritual development.

Awakening the chakras allows people to observe the interaction between the body, mind, and spirit. The chakras can thus become tools to balance daily life within the context of a greater spiritual reality, with such practical applications as: enhancing self-understanding, improving loving relationships, changing unwanted behavior patterns, and unblocking creative energy.

Participants will work with their chakra spirit guides, yoga stretches, chants, meditation, breathing and awareness exercises, drawing, and writing to explore their chakras and themselves, open blockages, and help heal past pains.

The Soul’s Theater: Improvisation, Storytelling, and Play

Corey Fischer

This workshop will address the soul’s hunger for images that nourish. Individuals will explore their own lived experience as a vital source of creativity.

A major vehicle for this work will be improvisation—entering into the unknown with the innocence of “beginner’s mind.” Our intention will be to create a community of trust that will enable us to risk giving up our internal censors.

The work will include solo and ensemble experiences. There will be theater games, guided fantasy, free writing, storytelling, vocal and physical exploration to locate the stories, dreams, memories, and voices that are inside us. In this way, we will seek to restore value to that which has been ignored, suppressed, and neglected.

As the workshop unfolds, issues of form and structure will also be addressed in order to understand how personal material can be shared through performance.

No previous theatrical experience is necessary. Workshop is limited to 12 participants. $740

Creating Exact Moments of Healing

Mariah Fenton Gladis

Adult children of alcoholic, dysfunctional, or abusive families (ACAs) must walk a road of recovery that requires determination, lifelong commitment, and the creation of specific moments of healing. This workshop offers participants an opportunity to take a major step toward health, helping them define a plan for the necessary moments they must create so they can move forward, transforming their personal history from one of liability to one of strength and wisdom. Focus will be on the promotion of healing in four fundamental relationships.

- With oneself: developing awareness, freedom from addiction, and healing of the body and soul from the residual effects of chronic trauma
• With others: improving one’s capacity for moving out of isolation and into direct, open communication and trust; expanding intimacy skills while securing healthy boundaries.
• In the world: moving away from chaos and deprivation towards stability and abundance.
• Spiritually: searching for the meaning of one’s history and accessing that part of the self that can utilize universal blessings. This workshop will be experiential and didactic, blending individual and group gestalt work, music, spiritual practices, and body work. A step-by-step recovery process developed by the leader will be incorporated throughout the workshop. The atmosphere will be one of trust and mutual support. This workshop is also appropriate for professionals who work with ACAs. Please bring a mirror and photographs of yourself at all ages.

Psychedelic Politics and the Shamanic Ethos:
A Weekend with Terence McKenna

Social responsibility and the personal quest for encounter with the Transcendent Other — are these concerns hopelessly opposed or part of the same intellectual and emotional enterprise? If there is to be a new era of social reform and tolerance for exploration of inner space, what obligations and opportunities does it imply for the individual and the community? Can psychedelics provide answers or lead to new approaches to the dilemmas posed by a toxified and over-populated planet ruled by capitalists and crypto-fascists? What would a world look like that actually took seriously the commitment to the ideal of a universal right to “life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness.” Join us and help in defining the end of the millenium agenda of the Archaic Revival. $380

Spirit and Body
Brother David Steindl-Rast

For many who come from a Western religious tradition there seems to be a tension — often a painful tension — between body and spirit. And yet, for the biblical tradition — Jewish as well as Christian — embodiment of the spirit is characteristic. Many of us have discovered the joy of spirit-in-the-body. This joy can be even greater when we find that we have in this very experience rediscovered our roots.

During this weekend at Esalen, Brother David will explore and discuss with participants some unexpected aspects of an ancient tradition and an ever new joy. $380

A Weekend with David Schiffman

The purpose of this workshop is to create a more positive and open-ended self-concept. Through the use of structured risk-taking situations, gestalt, role-playing, fantasy, and group process methods, participants can accept or transcend the self-imposed boundaries from which they approach the world. Emphasis is on searching out personality strengths, individual capacities, and latent powers as a means of achieving productive functioning. $380

Facial Communication
Lillian Lesefko

Your face is your identity, the external manifestation of your inner personality. The face can also be viewed as a topographical map of your life experiences. Learning to interpret the clues shown on the face can give you insight into your own psychological process as well as the health and character of others.

Based on the ancient science of Chinese facial analysis, derived from Chinese medicine, this workshop will introduce Oriental wisdom combined with modern research and techniques. Participants will learn how to evaluate the health indicators of the face, the genetic structure, and the traits and emotional issues often associated with these markings.

During this workshop, participants will expand their self-knowledge by attempting to unmask their real selves, learn to profile others, and explore ways to achieve their “Golden Path” in life.

Accepting Life’s Transitions: Letting Go – Moving On
Mary Golderson (Devanani)
For workshop description see May 7-9. $740

Living a Spiritual Life in a Practical World
Judyth Weaver

This workshop will focus on the practice of everyday living and the integration of body, mind, and spirit into our daily lives. Participants will be encouraged to look at ordinary activities through the lens of spiritual practices.

Traditional meditations such as Zazen and Vipassana, and non-traditional forms such as sensory awareness and inner movement, will be used. The group may spend one day in "noble silence" as an alternative to speaking, and might also engage in the Chinese energetic practices of T'ai Chi Ch'uan and Qi Kung.

Using our breath as a guide, participants will focus on fully living one moment at a time, exploring these experiences and investigating their creative applications in our lives. We will take time to process them and their effects on both ourselves and others. Such explorations can help us decide which practice we might want to include in our daily lives to experience a deeper sense of wholeness.

The Intelligence of the Heart

Joseph Chilton Pearce

The leader writes: “The intelligence of the heart is the only force that can pull the garments of the self together; it is the nurturing power so many of us missed right from the beginning of life, that unconditional love which assures us of the evolutionary progress nature intended.”

The heart’s intelligence is designed by nature to unfold from birth and to peak at adolescence, but unfortunately our cultural bias prevents most of us from activating it. For over 30 years, Joe Pearce has been studying the latest research on how the human intelligence unfolds, while at the same time developing his own inner awareness.

In this workshop, Pearce will share his findings about the three-part human brain, how each brain has its own language, its own developmental cycle, its own purpose, and how the three brains can only be held in balance by the heart. To understand the expanding capabilities of the human brain as a child grows up will give participants a deeper appreciation of their own developmental cycle and that of their children. Pearce will share new research into the actual physiological connection between the heart and brain, and propose that this connection can be made at any time in life.

Through discussion, meditation, and contemplation, participants will work to understand more deeply the significance of his or her own connection to the heart and how to deepen that connection.

Reconnecting with Living Nature:

New Science, Intuitive Experience, and the Resacralizing of the World

Rupert Sheldrake

Science has done much to alienate us from our direct, intuitive experience of nature. But now science itself is transcending the mechanistic paradigm and pointing toward a new sense of a living world. The cosmos is no longer like a machine running down; it is more like a developing organism with an inherent memory, and so is our planet, Gaia. The old idea of determinism has given way to a recognition of indeterminism and chaos. The laws of nature may be more like habits. Times and places have qualities, such as those traditionally recognized through seasonal festivals and pilgrimages.

In this workshop we will discuss some of the implications of the new animism for our own lives — for the greening of politics, economics, and religion, and for the resacralizing of nature. We will explore our own relationship with nature through direct experience outdoors; by calling to mind long-forgotten moments of insight; and through practical ways of reconnecting with the living world around us.

Healing the Healer

Peter Finkelstein

Working in the field of health care brings the practitioner into contact with sorrow and death. And although health care professionals accumulate great emotional burdens, many do not pay enough attention to staying whole, integrated, and non-depressed while doing this work. Often, in fact, institutional arrangements foster the opposite: isolation, dehumanization, withdrawal. Hence, it remains for the practitioner to find a personal approach in which to process sorrow, frustration, and fear, both wisely and well.

The heart of this workshop will be the telling of stories from the world of health care. Through such telling we can reveal and heal those sometimes invisible wounds that interfere with our own growth and ability to continue helping others. Dream interpretation, didactic material, and group process may all be used to deepen the experience. Special attention will be given to creating an atmosphere of trust.

Vision Painting

Helen Malcolm-Neeb

Vision painting is a transformative adventure recreating aspects of your life spiritually, professionally, and physically. Through meditation and guided visioning you can explore the many layers of self that motivate your life. Subconscious symbols and dream images are evoked on the path to the inner self. The painting becomes the process of the heart following the emotions and the heart, creating from your highest potential a personal map of the future as you would like it to be.

This is an opportunity to affirm the spirit within from a place of play, creativity, and strength. Beginners and artists are welcome. Create a vision of your future as you want it to be.

Recovery for Adult Children and Co-Dependents

Julie Bowden & Richard Balaban

This weeklong journey will be a healing of the "child within" in an atmosphere of safety and respect. Experiencing and integrating the past allows us to live in the present, no longer tyrannized by previous pain and outmoded behaviors. We can be freed to exist more fully in relationship with ourselves and others. Issues specific to both men and women will be explored. Treatment providers and people in all stages of recovery are welcome.

C.E. credit is available for nurses; see pages 53-54.

Couples in Creative Dialogue:

Creating New Worlds of Experience

Paul Lounsbury & Nancy Winston

This workshop is for couples who as individuals want to expand and enrich the spontaneity of their interaction. We will investigate certain patterns of unconscious interaction... that generate and maintain limiting and defining forms that relationships can embody. Rather than open us to the creative originality inherent in both people, these systemic patterns distance us from vital emotional contact that engenders spontaneity and freedom.

By investigating these interactions from a systemic perspective using principles and techniques from Ericksonian hypnosis, we will seek to disrupt the more confining patterns and mobilize the unconscious resources needed to construct new forms of behavior. The goal will be to help couples create more satisfying and original interaction and develop a more flexible range of connections that lead to deeper forms of intimacy. Group interaction, structured trance experiments, and discussion will support the workshop process.

Prerequisites are a willingness to expand your tolerance for closeness and distance, and an openness to experience humor in ways you may never have before.

$740 (plus an additional $50 fee for organic produce paid directly to the leader).

Accepting Life’s Transitions:
Letting Go—Moving On
Mary Goldenson (Devarani)
For workshop description see May 7–9

Inner Sound and Voice
Jill Purce
This workshop will teach practical explorations with sound for healing and the transformation of consciousness. By liberating the voice, it is possible to make contact with deep levels of the self and release an untapped source of energy.

Participants will work with the psychophysical effects of breathing, chanting, mantra, and sonic meditations, learning to tune and listen together, moving from the intuitive level into meditative states. Breath and sound will be developed so that different parts of the body-mind come into resonance to give sonic massage, and to heal and tune the chakras and subtle body. Participants will be taught ways to find their own note and hear inner sound, entering directly into the subtle dimensions of sound by the magical voice practices of traditional cultures including trance music, Mongolian and Tibetan overtone chanting, and other methods. $380

Jane Mileich, Grace Stern Swanson & Robert Swanson
One of life’s important decisions is choosing what we put in our bodies. But what is the optimum dietary program? There is special interest research to support almost any position. What we don’t know is monumental, but evidence suggests that holding on to cultural dietary habits and myths may be hazardous to our health.

In this workshop, we will practice dietary methods designed to cleanse the system and allow each individual to make clear, responsible choices about what to eat. Our food is harvested from the Esalen farm and other local organic farms, and delivered daily to our specially designed kitchen where we will practice a “gourmet” approach to health. Join in on the harvesting and get hands-on application of energy concepts. $740

Endarkenment
Will & Ailish Schutz
Sometimes in our search for enlightenment we become humorless, and our search becomes tedious. Growth demands a respite from intensive struggle.

This workshop can provide a vehicle for the turn downward. We shall explore: how to establish and maintain meaningless relations; what to worry about while meditating; advanced covert blaming and inducing guilt in loved ones; how to become the most sympathetic victim/martyr in your social group; guilt without sex.

This approach, similar to Feldenkrais’s “live the disasters” and the “homeopathic principle” (Will Schutz, Body Fantasy), can be as valuable for attaining enlightenment as the direct route — and more fun. In addition, participants will have an opportunity to explore, play with, and celebrate the shadow — that part of ourselves we usually hide.

Life Energy Process
Stephan Sabetti
The Life Energy Process (LEP) is a spiritually-oriented approach to self-development and professional growth based on Eastern and Western energy dynamics. Specially designed subtle and intensive movements (micromovements) can increase energy flow and lead to the discharge of non-essential processes in your body (e.g. repressed emotions, chemical toxins, etc.). Each of us has an energy frequency that can be felt when attuned through LEP. This unique vibration helps us center and ground ourselves as well as find clearer direction and meaning in daily life. Each participant will have a chance to feel their unique energy process and explore it through process inquiry.

Life Energy Process includes: dance, theater, massage, pool work, and various other forms. The workshop is of particular interest to professionals and laypersons who are excited by the integration of theory, pleasure, and hands-on application of energy concepts.

Five-Day Massage Intensive
CC. (Carl Chase) & Kathleen O'Shaughnessy
This workshop is for those individuals who are just beginning to explore touch as deep communication. The central theme will be primary approaches to full-body massage, which the leaders will introduce through demonstration and experiential exchanges. Self-awareness through movement, sound, and breath will be used to enhance the senses. Discussion will offer insights into various approaches to body work and how they address both the physiological and emotional body.
C.E. credit is available for nurses; see pages 53-54. $740

The Writer's Way: A Personal Adventure through Writing
Nancy Bacal
We all have stories that are aching to be told, but when asked to translate them onto the page, it is not uncommon to experience shame and self-judgement. This is an invitation to anyone with an open heart to gather together and mine the reservoir of personal experience. Beginning with a series of writing exercises designed to bypass the "critic", we will use the pen to lead us onto our own path. Daily excursions on the page will help us transform the burdens of our lives into story, the unwanted voices into characters, the failures and successes into material. Guid-ance will be specific enough to excite the imagination, loose enough for each of us to experiment with imagery and remain open to surprise.
This workshop offers a supportive and stimulating environment for the non-writer, the occasional writer, and the professional. The schedule will include writing in and out of the group, movement, meditation, reading and discussion of pertinent material. The inten-tion will be to coax the mind out of its cycle of expectation and disappointment into a positive, functioning relationship with our work.

Organizations of the 1990s: Managing with Heart
Maggie Seeley & Thom Allena
Human needs, environmental values, and spiritual concerns are finally being acknowledged as integral parts of organizational life. "Corporate soul" is a new buzz term in management circles and signifies the need for organizational life to become more human and cooperative. People are motivated to make a difference, and in today’s corporate world these differences now consist of psychological and spiritual considerations as well as economic concerns.
Organizational leaders now practice "power with" rather than "power over" employees and use quality circles, teamwork, and a "win-win" ethic as conflict resolution techniques. Employee ownership incentives are helping employees find their work more satisfying, productive, and profitable. Now that organizational life has been given a "heart," new ideas are constantly evolving to change the way management operates.
This workshop will provide tools, techniques, and experiential work for those who wish to:
• Improve their leadership effectiveness and organizational vision
• Find more intuitive ways to develop a "kinder, gentler" empowering management style
• Learn to balance profitability and productivity with human concerns
• Express their personal vision by working "spiritually smarter" rather than through workaholic or technoholic strategies
• Learn ways to integrate humor, creativity, and play as part of a more productive environment

Limekiln Campground

• Experience team building and partnership models based on the integration of masculine and feminine behaviors
• Examine theories X, Y, Z, then create a new management paradigm
• Create a workbook and develop a personal plan of action
This workshop is for leaders, managers, directors, supervisors, and other people who wish to work "spiritually smarter" and improve their own and their organization’s consciousness and business practices.

Self-Acceptance Training: Basic
Richard Olney & Heather Burch
This workshop is largely experiential; no time will be given to theoretical or didactic considerations. Self-acceptance training is a transpersonal practice that follows an educational model rather than a medical model. It is defined as "the experiencing of whatever I am in a given moment, without the inhibitions of self-judgement, self-criticism, or self-evaluation." The goal of this work is to reach the inner self, the inner teacher, and to feel alive and real. Although its practice includes devices drawn from gestalt, bioenergetics, mythic fantasy, eidetic imagery, and hypnosis, it is also a philosophy, a value system, and a view of the individual's relationship with the universe.
Self-acceptance training is a holistic approach which emphasizes body awareness, emotional charge and discharge, and cogni-

Freeing Our Bodies/Our Selves Through Movement: A Feldenkrais® Approach

Patrick Douce

The work of Moshe Feldenkrais is based on the natural process by which we learned to move as children. During this workshop, soft, easy, gentle movements will be used to increase awareness of the body and to improve the ease and ability of movement. Special emphasis will be placed on the difficulties in movement that arise from chronic conditions such as lower back and neck pain, shoulder pain, tension in the neck and shoulders, and knee injuries. Such conditions can be improved by approaching the difficulties as problems in learning rather than as therapeutic troubles. Situations which were "incurable" become "re-educable." Workshop participants will also be introduced to methods for improving their ability to sense each other's bodies through touch and massage.

Although this workshop is valuable for anyone interested in learning more about his/her body through direct experience, it may be of special interest and benefit to dancers, athletes, doctors, nurses, physical therapists, psychologists, health care professionals, and elderly citizens who may discover new ways of moving with ease and increased flexibility — painlessly and immediately.

Spiritual Survival in Corporate America
Jerry Johnson

Bill Moyers recently said he is devoting his time and broadcast coverage of the '90s to the spiritual pursuit of increasing numbers of Americans. His statement comes at a time when many of us who value a spiritual life are questioning whether it is possible to continue working within a context of traditional corporate values.

This workshop will carefully and playfully examine the choices open to those whose working life brings them inside companies, corporations, and institutions. We will explore the following:

- What is my own spiritual practice and what do I mean by a "spiritual life"?
- How do I identify differences between spiritual and religious?
- Is conflict between my job and spiritual life inevitable?
- How can I create a better work environment without compromising who I am?
- Can a corporate job accomplish my agenda?
- How can my spiritual values survive and thrive inside a company?

This workshop is designed for those who have serious questions about continuing to work within corporate structures, but who haven't yet given up hope.

Rituals of Transformation
Paul Rebillo & Audrey Savage

People are continually approaching thresholds, transition points from one state or condition of being to another. To live is to change. The tendency, however, is to resist change, to cling to the familiar, to remain stuck at the threshold. This tendency is the source of much stress and pain that people experience in life.

A ritual does not make a change happen. Instead, it awakens within the psyche the archetypal pattern of change; it teaches the participant how to change. By acting out the ritual, people learn, not only in their minds but in the feelings of their hearts and the movements of their bodies, the process of transformation. Rituals can both prepare people for change as it happens in the course of their lives, and help heal the passages that were not completed in the past.

During this workshop, group members will look at what they want to heal and transform in their lives, what they need to say goodbye to in the past, and what new steps they need to take in order to cross their present threshold. Sub-groups will work together to design and enact individual rituals in order to support and help their healing process.

Just as the body can move from one position into another, so can the full being: hearts can move, minds can move. The basic tenet of ritual is that one can trust the body to show the appropriate path, that way so supported by the full being that doors seem to open before one. Joseph Campbell said that when someone can discover his or her authentic path, this way seems to be blessed by magic.

To find this way is the work of "Rituals of Transformation." $380

New Maps for the New Millennium
Ralph Blum & Bronwyn Jones

Homo sapiens is completing its tour of duty and preparing to bow out. Waiting in the wings to take its place is a new species characterized by enhanced knowing and broader wisdom. The old maps are out of date and we are all cartographers now. We must create "New Maps for the New Millennium."

What matters now? Do the old concepts still apply now that we have entered a critical period of detoxing, cleansing, and realigning? We must identify the ways we disempower ourselves, find the means to reclaim our power, and work towards making ourselves whole.

The goal of this seminar is to provide insights into the workings of the Runes as a training tool for the intuition, and to engage in experiential, hands-on exercises to ground participants in the use of the Oracle. Using the Runes as "a compass for conduct," we will examine major themes such as healing, initiation, shifting your archetype, and the issues of will and resolution. Together we will explore what it means to become an oracular individual as we prepare ourselves to enter the twenty-first century.

This course is open both to beginners and advanced students of the oracular tradition. Recommended reading: Blum, The Book of Runes or The RuneCards (both, St. Martin's Press).

A Confluent Somatic Approach

Steven Vasquez

This workshop is about the nuances involved when illness, injury, or pain become resolved beyond the conventional expectations of medical science. Information from people who beat the odds of recovery from "terminal" illness, "incurable" diseases, or difficult injuries will be reviewed. The role of belief, attitudes, and relationships in affecting the body will be experientially explored.

This confluent somatic approach synthesizes medical research, cross-cultural concepts, ancient spiritual practices, and modern psychology. It combines methods drawn from Ericksonian hypnosis, Focusing, and family systems theory, with hands-on work to reduce physical symptoms. Abstract concepts like state-dependent memory, psychoneuroimmunology, and chakra systems are broken down into practical applications.

Workshop material will be experiential and didactic. Processes for tracking unconscious personal myths that underlie medical conditions will be demonstrated. Complex medical jargon, psychological processes, and esoteric energy methods will be simplified into functional uses than can affect health recovery in conventional psychological and medical settings.

Apprenticeship to the Earth with Little Bear Nason & Steven Harper

The purpose of this workshop is to reawaken participants to the spirit of the Earth and their intimate connection to all of nature. Working with Native California Indian traditions and contemporary somatic awareness practices, the group will apprentice to Earth's wisdom, seeking to unfold themselves in the forgotten arms of the landscape in order to rediscover and reinvigorate the earth as modern indigenous peoples.

Little Bear will share his peoples' way of obtaining harmony and balance with the Earth through ritual, stories, dance, and ceremonies. Much of this workshop takes place in direct contact with nature, outdoors on day hikes, and at special spots along Big Sur's spectacular coast. This event marks the first time the Esselen Indians have taught on their ancestral homelands at Esalen Institute.

The Hero's Journey

Paul Rebillot & Audrey Savage

Paul Rebillot writes: "Again and again in my work with people I have seen the suffering and confusion caused by our society's lack of significant rites of passage. Without shamans or ritual masters to guide them, modern women and men must find their own lonely and usually traumatic paths from one stage of life to another — whether it be a child's discovery that there is no Santa Claus, an adolescent's awkward approach to puberty, an adult's marriage or divorce, or a change of career. Every change requires a movement from one level of being to another.

"Seeing this need, I created a rite of passage universal enough to allow people to discover the pattern of change, whatever that change might be. That patterns is exemplified in the myth of the hero. The new stage of life that is to be reached calls forth a heroic action on the part of the person taking the journey. At the same time, as soon as a new goal begins to emerge, all of the resistance to that goal emerges as well. I call these two forces 'the hero' and 'the demon.' In order for the new state of being to be realized, these forces must discover how to communicate with each other and how to work together. The old forms must fall away so that the new form can emerge.

"My purpose is to give people a chance to experience a rite of passage so that they can enter the changes in their lives with a sense of joy and greater context. My hope is that through this process people will awaken to their own creative genius and enter into the drama of their lives with imagination and delight.

Yom Kippur: The Other Side of God
Rabbi William Cutter & Cantor William Sharlin

This weekend will include observance of the Jewish Day of Atonement, reflection of the year just past, and the work of personal purification and repentance. Prayer, meditation, music, and discussion will occupy us from sundown on Friday through the end of the day Saturday. Kol Nidre will be at 7:00 PM on Friday; Ne’ila (the concluding service) will end by dinner time Saturday evening when we will enter the New Year in ways both traditional and innovative. The Sunday morning workshop will include reactions to the experience and sharing of New Year stories.

The prayers will include traditional liturgy treated in a non-traditional way, and innovative text combined with music of generations past and present. Discussions in smaller groups will occur throughout, as will meditation and time just to be alone. Although the Yom Kippur experience itself will be "devotional," non-Jewish participants are welcomed. Fasting and personal restriction characterize the traditional Yom Kippur observance, but participants may choose to experience this holiday in their own way, with their own commitments.

Transpersonal Medicine
Jeanne Achterberg & Frank Lawlis

The concept of transpersonal medicine has been coined from two fields of study, transpersonal psychology and medicine. Transpersonal medicine is healing from beyond the self, and recognizes that there are many resources beyond what we consider our consensual reality. This definition honors the integration of many eras of health care, expanding to include the ancient practices of shamanic work as well as the contemporary frontiers of psychoneuroimmunology and imagery.

This workshop will present many of the doors to alternate realities and specific avenues for accessing the wisdoms that lie just beyond the boundaries of the limits of self. Altered states of consciousness, ritual, advanced imagery techniques, the experience of community through joy and transcendence are the basic topics for presentation. The workshop is designed to be primarily experiential with clinical applications for dealing with physical and mental problems from a professional perspective.

Process Work: Working with the Dreaming Body
Nisha Zenoof

Process Work, developed by Dr. Arnold Mindell and his associates in Zurich, is grounded in the belief that all of life’s events and experiences have the potential for being useful and meaningful. Nature makes no mistakes — even the unexpected, unusual, and nonsensical occurrences in our lives, if observed and explored, can provide us with valuable information. Process Work provides us with tools for exploring and working with a wide range of human experiences, including: chronic symptoms, dreams, movement, relationships, and groups. Based on the theory of the “Dreambody,” the body is seen to mirror dreams, myths, and fantasies. In effect, the body is a dream trying to happen.

A compassionate atmosphere will be provided for participants to gain skills for working on relationship issues, physical symptoms, and dreams. The focus will be on:

• The basic foundations of process work
• The practical skills needed to apply process work concepts to one’s personal and professional life
• Ways of bringing creativity and a sense of play into the serious business of being alive.

This workshop will include discussion, demonstration, and experiential work.

"Love is what we were born with. Fear is what we learned here." — A Return to Love

Take a spiritual journey with Marianne Williamson, lecturer and best-selling author of A Return to Love, as she teaches the basic principles of A Course in Miracles, a self-study system of spiritual psychotherapy, and discusses their application to daily life. Topics covered will include relationships, health, and career.

The weekend will focus on the relinquishment of fear and the acceptance of love back into our hearts. Living the good life has nothing to do with accumulating possessions or status or power; it has to do with understanding ourselves and serving others in order to expand the fund of love in the universe.

Participants will spend a thought-provoking weekend examining some key issues in the Course of Miracles’ philosophy: forgiveness, relationships as assignments, and healing of our personal wounds.

Biodrama
Lorenzo Ostuni
Everybody’s life is a journey that passes through the doors of birth, love, and death. Biodrama, an Italian method that synthesizes three-thousand years of philosophy (Egypt, Hebraism, Greece, Rome, and Italian Renaissance) and modern philosophy, is an individualized ritual experience in which each group member symbolically passes through these stages. It employs dream work, body language, poetry, imagery, symbols, and music; it is both contemplative and experiential. The goal is to develop a deeper awareness of the emotions of life and love through a creative relationship with the group, and a deeper renewal of the self through a broader awareness of one’s inner life.

Each participant will experience the two-part nature of Biodrama. The first part consists of the journey of the protagonist, helped by a team of Biodramatists, through the three stages of life. In the second part, Lorenzo Ostuni will interpret each participant’s ritual journey.

This workshop will be conducted in Italian and English. $740

Awakening Vision through Conscious Photography
Jeff Berner
Here was room for the imagination to work.
— Mark Twain

Whether you are starting out in photography, or are an advanced beginner, explore nature, people, and wildlife through the “mirror with a memory.” Jeff Berner will show you how to follow the path of photography as a meditation, a hobby, a sport, and an art. Without using technical jargon, he will also explain how to make your camera serve your personal vision.

As the author of five books in the field, including The Nikon Touch Photography Guide, and The Photographic Experience, the leader will help discover each individual’s talent and provide a continuous flow of “Aha!” experiences with an informal, spontaneous teaching style. Turn looking into really seeing — and snapshotting into fine photography.

Easy-going assignments include: Looking at Seeing, The Psychology of Lenses, The Selective Eye (Composition), Depth of Field, A Still Life is Still Life, The Click that “Kills,” Creative Accidents, Visual Meditation, and Uses of Color. There will be creative critiques of each participant’s work, in private consultation, and/or in the group. We’ll shoot and talk by day, and show and tell by night.

This workshop will emphasize the use of color or slide film. Bring 4-10 rolls of 36-exposure slide film rated ISO 100, 200 and/or 400, plus $7 per roll for overnight processing in Monterey. Any working 35MM SLR camera will be adequate: recent Pentax, Minolta, Maxxum, and Nikon models are recommended. The final evening will feature a group celebration of the projected results in a multi-media show with music.

You can call Jeff Berner to discuss the workshop at (707) 878-2000, weekdays, 9AM to 3PM only. $740

Psychoneurimmunology and Its Implications
George Solomon & Margaret Kemeny
The rapidly developing field of psychoneurimmunology (PNI) is concerned with the nature of complex interactions between the central nervous system (CNS) and the immune system. The central nervous system mediates stress effects, coping, emotions, and other psychological processes that, by way of the immune system, affect the onset and course of many diseases.

The leaders will present a didactic and interactive workshop which will describe the immune system, how it works, and how it is regulated. They will discuss human and animal research on the effects of stress and other experiential factors on immunity and on immunologically-resistant and mediated disease, including bacterial and viral infections, cancer, autoimmunity, disease, allergies, and AIDS. The as-yet poorly researched area of interventions, including psychotherapy, on immunity and disease will be discussed.

Some of the possible mechanisms underlying traditional and alternative healing systems and placebo effects will be explored.

Participants, whether health or mental health practitioners concerned with the clinical relevance of the field, or individuals who are concerned with maintaining or improving their own health, will be encouraged to set goals for their own particular health needs.

• Discovering and addressing blind spots in self-esteem
• The development of creative strategies for building support systems that facilitate the transformation of visions into realities.

A Workshop for Women of Experience: Mid-Life and Beyond
Levore Lefer & Anne Yeomans
The gifts of woman are many. They have too often been undervalued and made invisible until we cannot see them ourselves. Today, more than ever, the earth needs these gifts. This is an opportunity for women in mid-life and beyond to come together to explore the issues that are on our minds and in our hearts. What are the challenges we each face? How can we support each other in reclaiming and honoring our passion, our tears and our outrage, our laughter, and our beauty? How can we express our deepest values at this time in our lives?

The workshop will include time to speak and tell our stories, and time for silence. Each day will include periods of hatha yoga, walking meditation, and group process.

Themes to be explored include:

• Cultural perspectives on the older woman
• Issues of loneliness and companionship
• The wisdom of the body
• Sexuality and intimacy
• Menopause
• Power and self-expression
• Self-care in the midst of responsibilities
• Spiritual questions of mid-life

It is our hope that these days together will strengthen our trust and renew our spirit, so that we can return to our lives with more joy, more tenderness toward ourselves and others, and more boldness in living all that is important to us.  $380

Themes to be explored include:

• Personal growth and development
• Relationships and communication
• Mind-body healing

A full spectrum of treatment cartography will be used to clarify how gestalt, self psychology, and mind-body healing can be effectively integrated to address early developmental trauma, narcissistic issues of the self, and contact boundary disturbances. • Improving intervention skills as they relate to handling resistance, the nurturing of the real self, and facilitation and activation of unconscious healing processes through the use of mirroring, pacing, and the language of mind-body healing.

Particular attention will be paid to assisting therapists to become more aware and effective in dealing with countertransference and projective identification.

and unnecessary limitations. Freeing them results in relief of chronic pain or tightness, a more restful sleep, and a higher energy level. By changing muscular holding patterns, the entire protective posture is altered, deeply affecting the body's habitual defense system. Thus, new movement possibilities mean new self-image possibilities.

Fears and anxieties have corresponding muscular habits. Verbal information, no matter how brilliant, or spiritual practice that fails to extinguish these muscular habits, will fail to totally eliminate the toxic behavior.

This workshop is for those who are physically active and fit and want to increase their skills while learning to reduce risk or injury; for the sedentary or those dealing with aftereffects of injuries; for the athlete, the dancer, and those who “live in their heads”; and for individuals who feel chronically tired and stressed and want to learn how to take better care of their neck, shoulders, and back, and for those who want to improve their posture and breathing and live with more flexibility and comfort.

Self-Transformation: The Art of the Actor for Everyday Life
Jane Marla Robbins
Transforming feelings of anxiety and insecurity into feelings of self-confidence and joy is a miracle that can happen in all areas of one's life — physical, emotional, spiritual. This transformation can help us fulfill our potential for the roles we have chosen to play — whether it be child, parent, artist, shaman, charismatic speaker, sensualist, or spouse.

Some of the techniques to be explored and discussed include: the actor's physical preparation, vocal, preparation, mental and emotional preparation, spiritual preparation, relaxation, sense memory, the magic “as if”, personalization, substitution, playing a character, animal exercises, overcoming self-consciousness, perfect props, unspoken mantras, speaking the truth, breathing, the inner walnut, and the psycho-physical action.

Participants can learn how to replace old fears and paranoid projections with self-manufactured pleasures and positive projections. Many “real-life” situations ordinarily fraught with worry can easily be transformed using the Actor's Imagination. The power and pleasure of being able to create a sense of well-being and self-confidence at will can be experienced by everyone, and, once it has been discovered, it cannot be easily shaken. No previous acting experience is necessary. $380

Mythology in Film:
Wisdom from the Collective Dreamhouse
Geoffrey Hill
Believing that there is much wisdom to be gained from films, Geoffrey Hill has been interpreting them for many years. He sees the cinema as the collective tribal dreamhouse in which the audience participates in the magic of cinematic shamans, and believes that the wisdom gleaned from films can produce greater self-awareness and a broader social transformative consciousness. Geoffrey Hill has introduced a new school of film criticism through his book Illuminating Shadows: The Mythic Power of Film.

Leaning in a Jungian, eco-feminist, progressive direction, the the leader will explore with the group the archetypal symbolism of films in a way that has meaning for the collective soul.

The following films will be viewed and discussed during the workshop: Shane, Santa Sangre, and Brazil. Each film will be viewed in its entirety, then a discussion will follow wherein each workshop participant will offer his or her own associations and interpretations, as if participating in a tribal dreamfest.

Quantum Reality
Nick Herbert
More than 50 years ago Werner Heisenberg and his colleagues discovered a way of thinking about the physical world that has been immensely successful at dealing with natural phenomena at all scales from quark to Big Bang. Quantum theory, in the words of physicist Heinz Pagels, seems to be the Universe’s “cosmic code,” the correct language, or a dialect of that language, in which nature by humans can be fruitfully addressed.

Participants will examine aspects of the physical world that have been rendered transparent by this new language as well as mysteries left unsolved and explore possible applications of quantum thinking to other areas such as psychology and human relationships. Of particular interest is what quantum thinking might add to the issues of spontaneity, our perception of other people, and new models for human connectedness.

Gender Talk:
Communicating with the Opposite Sex
Mudita Nisker & Dan Claudman
If you speak English, you’re using language in the same way as the opposite sex, right? Not exactly.

Men and women often use language for different reasons and consequently misunderstand each other. Many men converse to determine who’s in charge — who’s one-up and one-down. Women, on the other hand, create intimacy by talking. Understanding men and women’s differing conversational styles is a crucial first step to bridging the gender gap.

This workshop will use information and practices from linguistics, Eastern philosophy, systems theory, and critical thinking. Using discussion, demonstration, and role-play, participants will explore certain skills that can help bring men and women together:

- Sending clear, concise messages that invite cooperation
- Sharing feelings that are difficult to express and still maintaining good will
- Improving listening skills even in tough situations
- Identifying assumptions men and women make when trying to satisfy their own and each other’s needs

The goal of the workshop will be to help individuals better identify communication “hot spots” and learn how to constructively work them out. This process can also help you discover some truths about yourself. $380

Unlocking our Prisons: Lessons on Freedom and Forgiveness
Edith Eva Eger
Each of us is locked in our own prison—prisons that have been built from guilt, shame, fear, grief, and many other emotions. Forty years after being a prisoner at Auschwitz, Dr. Eger returned there and realized that on a deep level she had never really been set free. Freedom, she discovered, was a complicated experience that involved letting go of guilt and shame, the fear of being truthful, and the comfort of being a victim.

This workshop will help participants explore the obstacles that have taken away an inner sense of freedom. It will be a “time-out” to acknowledge what those obstacles are and make an attempt to integrate them into the whole of your life. Participants will try to give these experiences a place where they don’t pathologize, but de-mythologize their psychological existence. Main themes will include: the need for self-acknowledgment and self-examination, dealing with guilt and shame, taking stock of your life and where you want to go, and the responsibilities that freedom entails. There will be lectures, discussions, and some experiential work. $740

Demystifying the Creative Process

Proprioceptive Writing is a method through which inner intelligence is stimulated; meaning is approached through feeling. Experience Psychic Intuitive Abilities

Anne & Jim Armstrong

Their experience with thousands of workshop participants over the past 27 years has led Anne and Jim Armstrong to believe that everyone is intuitive — that intuition is part of humankind’s standard equipment. The goal of this workshop is to have everyone experience their own innate intuitive ability, using it at will, on demand. This will be accomplished through exercises and meditation, with a minimum of discussion in order to allow each individual to recognize his or her own particular style of perception, and to trust the intuitive input one receives. Anne will use her intuitive abilities developed over the past 30 years to guide the participants in arriving at useful, accurate data.

The spiritual and ethical aspects of the intuitive/psychic process will also be addressed, as well as the leaders’ belief that intuition development is the gateway to divine wisdom, and should be the outgrowth of a healthy spiritual practice. We will demystify the intuitive/psychic process, and encourage participants to use it in all areas of their lives — personal, professional, and spiritual. Real life situations presented by participants will be selected for psychic-intuitive practice. $740

Life as Art: Art as Life

A Workshop with Wes (Scoop) Nisker & Nina Wise

Most of us spend our days concerned with the grocery list of life’s demands, paying the bills, keeping the gas tank filled, maintaining our hairdos and boiling the water or pasta. But just below the surface of our polite and upright lives, lurks the living room dances, the singing poet in the shower, and the storytelling fool. The Hindus call life “leila,” the sport of the gods. This workshop is about stepping onto the playing field. We will lift the serious veil of purpose and meaning so that our true nature, which is inherently playful, can emerge. Give up on self-transformation, forget about being politically correct or spiritually advanced, this is a come-as-you-are party!

Using stories from our lives, we will make art in a safe and supportive environment. Participants will be guided in vocal and movement exercises, theater games, storytelling, and imaginative meditations. We will create performances for and with one another by allowing the characters within us to have a voice; we will turn life into art. Bring your lipstick, your tutu, your cowboy boots, your smoking jacket, your worst memories, your favorite dance steps, and your bag of confetti. $380

Keeping a Good Relationship Alive

Gerald Smith

How to be close and vulnerable as partners, yet separate and free to grow as individuals, is a major dilemma in keeping a good relationship alive. Because each partner continues to change this dilemma is never quite resolved, but can be dealt with in ways that add to the aliveness in the relationship.

During the weekend much of the participants’ time will be spent with their partners (separate from other couples). Verbal, non-verbal, and written exercises to enhance openness, support, and affection will be used, as well as developing skills that help resolve differences in ways that do not produce “scar tissue.” And, since playing is an essential part of keeping a relationship alive, there will be exercises to rekindle the imagination and the willingness to play together. Limited to 12 couples $380 per participant

Living on Purpose

John Caple

“When I was growing up,” says Lili Tomlin, “I really wanted to be somebody. Now I realize I should have been more specific.” This workshop is for those who want to be more specific about who they are, what they bring to the world, and where they want to go with it. It is for those who want to be somebody, and for those who just want to be. It is for those in life transitions and those who want to develop transition management skills. It is for those who want more meaning in their lives, and for those who want the lightness, freedom, and joy that a sense of purpose offers.

This workshop integrates intuitive processes and practical advice. It reflects both the vision quest of Native Americans and corporate strategic planning technology. Each participant will create a life plan with a vision, goals, and strategic intent.

Please bring a mask, hat, or other statement of who you really are — or would like to be — for a Saturday night play in the spirit of Halloween.

The Political Psyche: Merging Psychology with Politics

Andrew Samuels

An inner journey and a desire to make something practical out of passionate political convictions are linked projects. It is often said that “the personal is political,” and we could add, conversely, that “the political is personal.”

This should mean that psychotherapists and psychologists become involved in politics as an ordinary part of their normal working lives. But, unfortunately, this has not happened. The clinical office has become insulated from the political world and remains an isolated experience for both the practitioner and the client.

British Jungian psychoanalyst Andrew Samuels proposes a radical and original engagement of psychology with politics. Through the framework that he proposes, the clinical office can become a bridge between psyche and world rather than a source of isolation of psyche from the world. Innovative experiential exercises will be incorporated with seminar-style presentation and discussion for a lively exploration of such themes as:

- The political development of the person
- The father’s body: a political reading
- The depth psychology of the market economy
- The political clinic: countertransference and politics
- Political problems of the mythopoetic men’s movement

Participants will also work in small groups, pairs, or in active imagination. $380

Certification in Clinical Hypnosis
Marc Lehrer, Maggie Phillips, Norman Katz & Adam Burke

This course is a synthesis of Ericksonian and Direct Hypnosis, Neurolinguistics, and Bi-hypnotic Monitoring. It satisfies the hypnosis course requirements for the MFCC and complies with the California State Requirement for Hypnosis Certification. It is designed to help develop hypnotic skills for counseling, medicine, nursing and other health areas, education, and body work. This program is also an opportunity for personal growth and transformation for anyone interested in hypnotic phenomena and the uses of suggestion in daily life.

Hypnotic suggestion, advanced imagery, and relaxation methods will be explored. There will be daily presentations, numerous practice sessions, video examples of Erickson and other practitioners, and extensive written support materials. A hypnosis library will be available for in-depth learning of advanced topic areas, and there will be an opportunity to explore personal goals with trance and biofeedback equipment.

The scientific basis of hypnosis as well as the ways hypnosis can be applied will be emphasized. Topic areas will include: induction methods, hypnotic testing, symptom and habit removal, individual and family counseling applications, pain control and psychosomatics, non-verbal and pendulum methods, biomedical hypnotic monitoring, metaphor and story-telling methods, hypnosis with children, regression and uncovering, redecisioning and reframing, self-concept enhancement, stress management, fears and phobias, early trauma, hypnotic dream programming, imagery conditioning, NLP methods, enhancing performance in sports, music, and sensation, self-hypnosis methods, teaching self-hypnosis classes, and other topics related to therapy, health, and personal growth. Selected ongoing exercises drawn from aikido, Feldenkrais, movement, massage, and shamanistic traditions will complement the traditional topic areas.

Since each of the leaders will present for a number of days, there will be an opportunity to model different ways of deepening your own hypnotic potential, trance induction, and utilization skills. This month-long experience with various faculty members gives each participant an in-depth opportunity to develop vivid personal imagery, make lasting self-suggestions, and relate more completely with the unconscious mind.

The certification offered through this program is equivalent to a University modified tutorial course. You will complete readings, assignments, and a paper for the hypnosis certificate. Certification is granted based upon the competency demonstrated to the faculty in applying hypnotic techniques with an ethical and professional approach and satisfactory completion of all Great Western University C.E.U. course requirements. The paper and assignments are due no later than four months following the completion of this program at Esalen. Course fees for the Hypnosis Certificate are $300 (12 C.E.U.s), payable to Great Western University upon begining the program at Esalen. It is also possible to obtain four transcripted Graduate Psychology courses rather than C.E.U.s (requires additional fees to Great Western University and you must have at least a B.A. degree). Contact Marc Lehrer, Chairman, Dept. of Psychology, Great Western University (415) 397-4929 for further details.

Space is limited so early registration is recommended. Reading lists and information about certificate and graduate credit will be sent upon request or registration.

C.E. credit is available for nurses; see pages 53-54.

Standard accommodations: $3150
Bunk Bed Room, if available: $2225
(Plus $300 fee for those who want certification, payable to Great Western University).

Painting Experience with Michell Cassou and Stewart Cubley

It is rare for most people to use painting for its qualities of inner adventure and self-discovery, to paint purely for the process of exploration, not for the result.

The purpose of this workshop is to provide a setting to explore the self through painting — to discover in form and color a powerful tool for uncovering and dissolving blocks to emotional and spiritual expression. Participants will be given the support and stimulation to develop a natural way of painting based directly upon feeling. The work takes place in an authentic studio setting with large white surfaces to confront the creative void, along with a rich spectrum of colors and brushes. The workshop may be of interest to persons involved in a wide variety of disciplines, including art, education, counseling, and meditative practices. No prior experience in painting is necessary. Please bring a smock.

For further information about this workshop, contact: The Painting Experience Studio, 2101 20th Avenue, San Francisco, CA 94116; (415) 564-8515.

$1500 (plus $30 materials fee paid directly to the leaders)

Massage Practitioner Certification Program

Esalen offers a California state-approved massage program. Upon completion of a 130-hour massage practitioner workshop, and after giving 30 additional massages elsewhere, graduates will receive their certificates. Workshops for certification are offered twice a year. This program provides at least 130 hours of instruction, including anatomy, supplemented by study in body-mind disciplines such as yoga, movement, and gestalt awareness work, fulfilling the state requirement.

Healthspring Outreach and Education

The Healthspring project offers education and referrals that extend Esalen's work in the healing arts and sciences to the outside world. It is an independent service-oriented program of Esalen teachers and their associates.

Healthspring offers a global referral system, linking visitors to Esalen with centers, body workers, teachers, and counselors from their home area. Esalen teachers are also available and may be contacted directly or through Healthspring.

The Healthspring library offers books on health and healing, body work, somatic studies, psychology, nutrition and related studies, which may be borrowed by students for a given period while at Esalen. Donations of appropriate books are greatly appreciated.

For access to this program, write to Laurie Lioness Parizk at Esalen, c/o Healthspring.

Big Sur Wilderness Journey: From Esalen to Tassajara
Zen Mountain Center

Steven Harper & Guest Leader

Nature can provide opportunities to stretch one's limits and explore one's inner wilderness. By living in a natural environment it is possible to expand and realize a deeper sense of self and richness of being.

The group will spend a day and a night at Esalen, leaving the next morning to hike through the Ventana wilderness. Participants will travel "light," with instruction in minimum impact camping, ecology, geography, and cultural history of the area.

Wilderness will be a mirror and primary teacher as the group lives simply and in direct contact with nature. Participants will explore their feelings and sensations as they emerge, using gestalt awareness practice and group process. Taking inspiration from natural and native purification practices, they will create a time of cleansing and contemplation, concluding in a 24-hour period alone. The group will hike on to Tassajara Zen Mountain Center, deep in a rugged wilderness valley with natural hot springs, for their last night together. Meditation instruction will be available at Tassajara for those who wish it.

Backpacking experience is not necessary, though participants should be prepared for the challenge of vigorous physical activity. More information will be sent upon registration. $675

July 9–16
Wilderness Sanctuary: A Natural Rite of Passage
Santa Lucia Mountains, Big Sur, California

Steven Harper

Sanctuary is defined as, "the most holy part of a sacred place." In this workshop we go to wilderness seeking this sacred place. With nature as our primary teacher, we follow the footsteps of more traditional and native cultures that have gone before us seeking vision, wisdom, and balance. This is a time to leave behind the way we normally define ourselves, to separate from daily life, work, family, and friends. It is a time to cross the threshold and immerse ourselves in wild nature with the barest of essentials, to enter into the unknown, to feel the mystery of life, to seek meaning, to simply be. It is a time of integration, to bring back and give back to self, to family, to community, and workplace.

Our group will spend two days together getting to know each other, creating personally meaningful rituals and ceremony, learning basic outdoor skills and safety procedures. Participants then journey forth to a "solo" spot for three days and three nights alone in the wilderness. We return to spend the next days integrating our experience into our selves, our group, and then, ultimately, our world.

Previous wilderness experience is not necessary, although participants should be prepared for the intensity of facing aloneness and the challenge of moderate physical activity. A detailed information packet is sent upon registration. $675

A Gentle Trip in the High Sierra

Maurica Anderson & Les Wilson

During this seven-day workshop in wildflower season, participants will hike eight miles to a clear mountain lake (alt. 10,000') in the John Muir Wilderness on the western side of the High Sierra. The lake is off the main trails and is surrounded by other lakes, grassy meadows, and cold streams fed by the surrounding snowfields.

Mules will carry all of the personal gear and food, so participants need carry only lunch, rain gear, and water on the hike in. The food will be exceptionally good—fresh or frozen meats, fruits, and vegetables. The group will spend the first night at the trailhead, then hike in and camp by the lake for six nights, taking short day-hikes and working with meditation, massage, psychodrama, gestalt, and gentle encounter. There will be some strenuous but optional side hikes, swimming, a sauna, and some time for doing nothing. Participants will be encouraged to concentrate on the sights and sounds and smells of the high country, on getting to know the mountains, one another, themselves, and on relaxing and laughing a lot.

Mountaineering experience is not necessary and most people are in good enough shape to make it in, but participants should be capable of hiking uphill at altitudes up to 11,000', and have a good sense of humor.

For a detailed information sheet, contact Maurica Anderson, 1112 Curtis Street, Albany, CA 94706; (510) 526-5814. Participants will meet in the Sierra on July 31. The fee includes food, wine, permits, and pack mules in and out.

Path of the River:
A Rogue River Journey
Steven Harper & Oregon River
Experiences Expeditions
Oregon's Rogue River provides a unique environment of dramatic variety, which is intimate and awesome, soft and demanding, yet always rewarding for those who are open to all it has to offer. The Rogue offers clear water, tall green forests, vertical walled canyons, and challenging rapids. The river is a teacher and primary metaphor. The group may draw from energy awareness, dance, meditation, and principles of aikido to enhance their experience of this majestic wilderness area.

Participants will have a choice of riding on a raft with a guide or piloting their own raft with a partner. Instructions will be offered in basic aspects of river life, such as paddling and minimum-impact river camping. There will be time to discuss the area's natural and cultural history, to hike, and to sit quietly and reflect.

River experience is not necessary, though participants should be prepared for the challenge of vigorous physical activity and to participate fully. The workshop begins September 21st at 8:30 A.M. in Galice, Oregon. There will be a pre-trip meeting the evening before at 7:00 P.M. Oregon River Experiences will supply all the necessary river rafting gear, guides, meals, and shuttle. Complete details and a personal equipment list will be sent upon registration. This is a unique opportunity and space is limited.

Due to Esalen's special arrangement with Oregon River Experiences, the following cancellation policy is in effect for this workshop: A $200 nonrefundable deposit per person will confirm your reservation. Balance is due August 7th. If you cancel prior to August 7, your nonrefundable deposit, less a $50 registration fee, can be applied to other Esalen programs, to be used within one year. No refunds are available after August 7th.

WORK STUDY PROGRAM

Work Study Program is for those who are interested in an intense and complete involvement with the Esalen environment. It is a work-oriented program, emotionally and physically, and only rarely is it restful. It is not for those who wish to take catalog workshops or for those who are unwilling to be fully engaged in the work-life of the community. Participants will work 32 hours per week in one of Esalen’s departments (kitchen, garden, farm, housekeeping, maintenance, or grounds) and will participate, along with staff and long-term students, in that department’s program. It is necessary for applicants to be able to speak and understand English.

During most evenings and one weekend intensive, work students are together as a group exploring different practices and approaches available at Esalen, with specifically assigned leaders who will be with the group throughout the month coordinating the study schedule and facilitating many of the evening sessions.

The selection of work students is done by Bette Dingman, the Work Study coordinator, in consultation with department supervisors. Since this is a work program, preference is given to applicants who are open and willing to learn about themselves within the work context as well as within the evening and weekend study/process groups. Applicants with particular skills or physically limiting conditions are urged to mention them on the application.

First-month work students, in particular, are assigned to departments largely on the basis of community need. No work students will be assigned to the office or Gazebo School/Park until they have fulfilled a minimum of one month in one of the aforementioned departments.

The study portion of the program is usually divided into two sections each month: each emphasizes one type of growth practice, such as gestalt, meditation, Reichian work, massage or somatics work, and so forth. Participants must be prepared to stay at Esalen for the full duration designated for that particular program, assuming that they meet the standards of the Work Study Program. Two programs are planned for each month. Those scheduled thus far for 1993 include:

May 2–30
Karuna Licht will lead a month-long journey using the creative processes of art, ritual, and guided imagery as the language of the heart.

May 2–June 27
Esalen Massage Certification Program
David Streeter & Massage Staff
This two-month program will offer an ongoing, well-structured massage program that will include yoga, meditation practice, anatomy, movement, and much more. There will also be an opportunity to take advantage of the personal growth that can come from full participation in community life.

Previous experience of one month as an Esalen work scholar is required. Please see page 51 for more information on this program.

C.E. credit is available for nurses.

$1830 (two-month fee)

May 30–June 27
Marilyn Harris Krieger will explore the possibility of relationships without blame, and work on the potentials of truth and freedom. The group will investigate the role of chemistry, choice, and commitment in our encounters with love. Gestalt and psychosynthesis will also be used.

David Streeter & Massage Staff. See May 2–June 27.

June 27–July 25
Eduardo Eizner & Guests will concentrate on emotional release work and self-awareness using gestalt, group and individual process, rituals, movement, and body work.

Dean Marson will guide participants on a somatic journey to deepen self-awareness and enhance the ability to connect with others using touch, movement, and mindfulness as the means of exploration.

July 25–August 22
Alan Schwartz will present a month-long program on struggle and freedom. Participants will compose individual histories, recognizing personal struggle as a freedom. Using gestalt group process, the group will acknowledge past damage, formulate repair, and build a supportive structure for future healing/growth. The leader will draw from energy modality and current knowledge about recovery from addictive behavior, sexual abuse (male & female), and twelve-step work.

Char Pias Brenner facilitates a month-long process of self-inquiry and renewal utilizing massage, expressive movement, meditation, and art.

August 22–September 19
Nina Wise will present a month-long program of “Motion Training,” a technique that utilizes sound, movement, language, and visual elements in the creation of spontaneous performances that arise from the inner life of the actor. The work enhances the ability to integrate language and movement, respond physically to emotional impulses, and give voice in sound and language to personal truths. In addition to performance work, the leader will also use meditation practice, writing practice, and experiment with integrating spontaneity and play into daily life.

The focus of the month with David Schiffman will be on the theme of transition. It is geared for people who are facing major changes and would like an opportunity to create a time for sanctuary and a mood of mutual support. The intention will be to cultivate an individual style of approaching change that is heartfelt, open minded, and resourceful in spirit.

September 19–October 17
With the emphasis on the practice of massage, David Streeter will explore the immense inner power of the human being. He will combine the fundamental essence of Zen meditation with movement from the martial arts and yoga. These principles will then be applied to the art of massage and the art of being in the world.

Phyllis Shankman offers a month of in-depth group process/gestalt work using the creative arts, as well as meditation, massage, and movement for self-exploration and healing.
October 17–November 14

Eduardo Eisner and guests will lead a month concentrating on emotional release work and self-awareness, incorporating Gestalt practice, group and individual process, rituals, movement, and body work.

Mary Goldenson’s (Devarani) program of letting go and moving on employs Reichian methods, dance, imagery, gestalt, and meditation.

Inasmuch as the Work Study Program is a complete program in itself, please do not plan to take regularly scheduled catalog workshops during your stay. Professional services, such as massage, are available at staff rates.

Accommodations are shared, with up to four people to a room, usually at South Coast Center, a staff complex located 1½ miles north of Esalen.

A deposit of $400 in U.S. currency is required with your application. For all programs listed before July 25th, the cost of all 28-day work study programs is $720 for the first month, $670 for the second month, and $620 for the third month. Beginning July 25th, the work scholar fee will be $750 each month for all 28-day work study programs. Work students may be invited to remain for a second or third month depending on space available and community needs. There are no scholarships available for the Work Study Program.

For more information contact Bette Dingman: (408) 667-3010.

Note: Application is not registration in the program. Registration is made only after approval of application and upon receipt of deposit. The balance of the fee is due on arrival. Of the original deposit, $100 is nonrefundable and may be transferred to other programs within one year of receipt. Please return the application form (see next page) with your deposit to:

The Dolphin Tape Series

Titles for this tape list are varied, ranging from a rather full selection from Carl Rogers, Buckminster Fuller, Huston Smith, Abraham Maslow, and Joseph Chilton Pearce, to the latest from Terence McKenna and Brother David Steindl-Rast. And there are a few sleepers and surprises, including several gems and jewels from unexpected sources.

There are also contributions from Laura Archera Huxley and from her husband Aldous Huxley, bringing back to life the original inspiration for the human potential movement, eloquently expressed in Huxley's public addresses in the years just before Esalen's birth.

Finally, we have the original conversations in a newly-published book entitled TRIALOGUES at the Edge of the West (Bear & Co. 1992), built from interplay between three explorers of chaos, imagination, and creativity.

Esalen Institute is a center to explore work in the humanities and sciences that promotes human values and potentials. Its activities consist of public seminars, residential work-study programs, invitational conferences, research, and semi-autonomous projects.

We exist to sponsor, encourage, synthesize, and attempt evaluation of work in these areas, both inside and outside our own organizational framework. Since we are a center for experimental education, we ask that persons come to our programs out of an educational interest. We ask that no one come whose interest is "cure." We point out here, as we have in workshops and seminars, that some people, particularly those with a history of psychiatric problems, may find some programs difficult, trying, or potentially risky. We recommend that in case of any doubt, a physician or trusted counselor be consulted.

Through this earth is flowing a stream of joy, day and night, like nectar that overflows into the endless sky.
The sun and the moon drink it by the handful to keep their light, imperishable, always bright.
The earth is full, ever, with life and light.
Why do you sit alone, wrapped up in yourself?
Why so immersed in your selfish ends?
Look about and spread your heart around — your small wounds, so insignificant, learn to disregard — and fill its emptiness with love.

— Rabindranath Tagore
Comparative religion scholar Frederic Spiegelberg talks about the historic twentieth-century meeting of East and West and his lifelong quest for a "religion of no religion."

The Astonishment of Being

The historian Arnold Toynbee, writing in the late 1960s, predicted that when the story of our time is recorded a thousand years hence, it will emphasize not the conflict of capitalism and communism, the war in Vietnam, or racial strife in American culture, but rather the inevitable interpenetration of Buddhism and Christianity: the historic meeting of East and West. When that epic story is told in its entirety, Frederic Spiegelberg will certainly emerge as a major protagonist.

And, for many, as a surprising one. Particular names come quickly to mind as influential front-line players in the transmission of Eastern psychology and religion to the West in our century: Alan Watts, Hermann Hesse, Thomas Merton, Gary Snyder, Jack Kerouac, D.T. Suzuki, Swami Vivekenanda, Aldous Huxley, Christopher Isherwood, and Madame Blavatsky, among myriad others. But only the most well-informed scholars are likely to include Frederic Spiegelberg, who developed a reputation for linking kindred spirits—today we would call it networking—beyond the scenes. Thus over time he gained respect from his more famous peers for playing a unique role in establishing an ongoing dialogue between these two great world cultures.

Now in his 97th year, Spiegelberg, also a seminal intellectual influence in the evolution of Esalen over 30 years ago, lives quietly near San Francisco’s Aquatic Park, receiving occasional visitors eager to hear about his extraordinary encounters with some of the great personalities of the twentieth century: European theologians Rudolf Otto and Paul Tillich, Martin Heidegger, Carl Jung, Rudolph Steiner, Alan Watts, abstract artist Paul Klee, and Indian spiritual teachers Aurobindo Ghose and Ramana Maharshi.

West Coast writer Keith Thompson, currently at work on a book about the meeting of East and West and the subsequent birth of global spiritual consciousness, has conducted several interviews with Spiegelberg in recent years. Here is his report:

“Being a student of cross-cultural religion and mythology, I knew of Frederic Spiegelberg through accounts of his meetings with spiritual teachers at ashrams and monasteries in India, Tibet, Siam, Ceylon, China, and Japan, and through several of his books, including The Religion of No-Religion, Bible of the World, and Spiritual Practices of India. Eventually our paths crossed, thanks to Esalen founder Michael Murphy, who was one of Dr. Spiegelberg’s students at Stanford many years earlier. When I asked Dr. Spiegelberg for an interview about his life and work, he agreed, stipulating only that I must agree to stop asking questions whenever I became ‘insufferably bored’ by his answers.

“Many hours of tape-recorded conversation later, my boredom threshold nowhere in sight, I faced a different kind of dilemma: how to draw to a close a fascinating conversation that had developed a life of its own, fueled by a combination of great interest on my part and Dr. Spiegelberg’s extraordinary intellectual vigor. Since the interviews took place in his living room overlooking San Francisco Bay, not far from where his longtime friend and colleague Alan Watts lived in Sausalito, it seemed apt to begin our first exchange by reading aloud to Dr. Spiegelberg a relevant passage from Watt’s autobiography, In My Own Way:

“When I first met Spiegelberg he wore a hat with an exceedingly wide brim, spoke English with a delicate German accent which always suggests a sense of authority and high culture, and was propagating the theory that the highest form of religion was to transcend religion. He called it the religion of nonreligion. I call it atheism in the name of God; that is, the realization that ordinary everyday life and consciousness is what the Hindus call sat-chit-ananda, and which I translate as ‘the which than which there is no whicher’ . . . Spiegelberg and I have always regarded ideas and conceptions of God, as well as compulsive and scheduled notions of the ‘right way’ of spiritual culture, as forms of idolatry more confusing than any amount of material images and icons. No sensible person ever confused a crucifix or an image of the Buddha with the divinity itself, and as for techniques of spiritual development, “The ways to the One are as many as the lives of men.”

Now, it is true Alan Watts and I developed a close friendship based very much on the viewpoint which, as his remarks indicate, we shared with remarkable agreement. You asked me to talk about how I came to view religion in this rather unusual way.

I was born in the beautiful, independent town of Hamburg, which today is part of Germany. But I was not raised with the consciousness of being German, not at all. Hamburgers considered themselves Hunzianic people, Hunzas, which is something very different from the idea “German.” My father, having gone to Paris, Naples, and London to study international trade, raised me with a sense that we as Hamburgers were closer, in spirit, to Geneva, Venice, and Athens than to Berlin or Munich. Not withstanding Bismarck’s atrocious success in destroying German culture by forcing 35 independent regions with their own identities into a so-called Deutschland, I still consider myself a Hamburger, and am at best mildly insulted when today I am asked, “So you are a German?”

This sense of autonomy was reinforced by my mother, who when I was quite young read the entire Old and New Testament of the Bible to me over a period of two years, at least 30 minutes each day. My mother was deeply religious, yet liberal enough to put her own question marks into the reading. If a particular miracle seemed to her unlikely, she conveyed this skepticism gently by an inflection of voice or an altogether subtle raising of the eyebrow.

From our family’s Lutheran minister I gained a similar impression of the many layers or dimensions of religious life. He was learned in Christian theology, yet not very interested in it finally. He gave sermons about Confucious, and about Mohammed, his deeds and misdeeds. All of this was very fascinating to my young mind, so that after completing my first round of education, I was asked by my parents, What will you do? What are your interests? What will you pursue?

I decided I wanted to find the right answers to all the greatest questions in life, and then do something useful for others. First of all, I wanted to embrace the ultimate questions. I knew this project would keep me a long time at the university, hopefully with the best teachers possible. Of course, this was less practical than to become a lawyer, a doctor, or a merchant like my father. My ally, so to speak, as my ill health. At sixteen I suffered an attack of appendicitis and was not expected to survive. When I recovered, my parents were so glad for the life of their only child that they were delighted for me to go to university to study something not apparently useful, such as the metaphysical wisdom of the whole world, in what seemed to me the promising field of theology.

Even so, my father was concerned. I remember quite well, he took me aside and said, “The church is a wonderful thing, it keeps families strong together, provides a place to meet each week. Yes, religion has many advantages, only one musn’t take it too seriously.” Even as I pursued the religions of the world, this wisdom from my father was always close to my heart, where it remains to this day. The mystery of being, the true essence of religion, has been my supreme fascination; yet for as long as I can remember the idea of being a partisan in matters of the spirit has seemed an abomination.

So, yes, I cannot take exception to what was said by my brilliant friend Alan Watts: “The ways to the One are as many as the lives of men.”
First, I studied church history with a magnificent professor by the name of Paul Altaus, who taught systematic theology but who was really asking for answers to the ultimate questions. Together, as student and teacher, we took many long, philosophical walks. In the Germany of that day, you didn’t philosophize by sitting in a room at the desk, but rather by going on long, beautiful walks.

I remember, too, a scientist, a marvelous man named Schlick, who was both a biologist and Jewish philosopher, a mystic. He combined science and religion in a way I found absolutely fascinating. How I can still remember, as if only yesterday his words: “Spiegelberg, I have not found the final answer in a synagogue, and I have not found the final answer in the many new discoveries of biologists and other scientists of our time. But I continue my search for answers, if there are any answers to be found, to the great question of existence. And so must we all.”

It was at this time, early in my academic career, that I made as motto for my life a quotation from Goethe: “Bewilderment about the fact that there is anything at all, and the curiosity about meeting that fact as a wonder, is the best part of man.” The world, the essence of being, is immense and unimaginable, and the question why is there anything at all, why is there isness, is an astounding question. It would be so much easier to understand if there were nothing at all, but instead there is something, and there was probably always something of unimaginable greatness; and even more astonishing than all of the particular and varied and unrepeatable moments of existence all around us, is the stupendous fact of being itself.

One of the finest theologians of the time was the famous Rudolf Otto, with whom I studied at Marburg. His classic book, The Idea of the Holy, was completely mistranslated in English as The Idea of the Holy. I can tell you without fear of contradiction that there was nothing in the world of less importance to Rudolf Otto than the “idea” of the holy, because there are always a great many silly ideas about the holy, nowadays generously dispensed through that pinnacle of theatrical genius known as TV evangelism.

What compelled Otto was something else, the holy itself, das heilige. Quite correctly he had already recognized the enormous loss which can only result from viewing the holy in a derivative sense, the danger of religion becoming nothing more than a kind of “morality touched with emotion.” This was his mission, to get to the sacred, per se. So Rudolf Otto coined the term “numinous” to capture the primordial, the non-reducible dimension of the sacred: the unspeakable thrill of awe and reverence, the sense of dependence, of existential impotence, along with the rapture and exaltation — all intrinsic to the astonishing encounter with being, the divine, God, “the which than which there is no whicher,” in the excellent phrase of the inimitable Alan Watts.

I walked with Otto for many hours, many miles, at Marburg. We both wanted to contact what is to be found above and beyond and within all, the important thing, the real thing, against which everything else became small and unimportant. It is almost comic — no, I would say tragic is a far better word — the extent to which so much of what today passes for religious experience pales utterly by comparison.

The Buddha predicted that 2,500 years after his death, the Buddhist dharma or teaching would become spread in the country of the red-faced people. Now, many take this as a prophecy of the Buddhist transmission to America, whose people were of course once predominantly red-faced. Henry David Thoreau in his own way anticipated the convergence of East and West when he observed, “there is an orientalism in the most restless pioneer, and the farthest west is but the farthest east.”

In 1983, three years before my birth, there occurred, in Chicago, the most remarkable convocation, the World’s Parliament of Religions. Some 150,000 people attended this gathering where representatives of the world’s spiritual paths — including Swami Vivekananda, heir to the teaching of Ramakrishna — met to discuss common ground among their traditions and practices. Thanks to my good friend, mentor, and diligent advocate Paul Tillich, to whom I served as what today would be called a university teaching assistant, my wife Rosalie and I came to the United States in 1937, where I taught at Columbia and Union Theological Seminary until about 1945, and then I went to Stanford where I had the good fortune to serve as Professor of Indian Culture and Thought in the Department of Asiatic Studies. Alan Watts came to America one year after I arrived.

You must undertake to imagine what extraordinary adventures were transpiring on the West Coast at that time, and more, in the United States as a whole, with respect to the transfusion of Eastern religions to the West. A financial gift from an American businessman made it possible for me to inaugurate the American Academy of Asian Studies in San Francisco in 1951, which I ran while continuing to teach at Stanford. We assembled a phenomenal faculty, including Haridas Chaudhuri from Calcutta, who made what must be counted a foundational contribution to the embryonic effort at that time to compare and contrast modern Western psychology and the ancient consciousness-transforming disciplines of India and the East.

The great Buddhist scholar D.T. Suzuki lectured at the Academy, as did renowned Cambodian and Thai scholars; and naturally Alan Watts played a great role in the festivities, as something of a star attraction. This was all happening in the midst of an extraordinary literary flowering, the San Francisco Renaissance, where Allen Ginsberg, Jack Kerouac, Gary Snyder first became known. This period reminds me strikingly of the rich burst of intellectual, artistic activity which had flowered in Germany in the 1920s and 1930s.

A year later, when our benefactor experienced business losses, there was no alternative to my closing the doors of the academy and returning to Stanford full time. My years on campus were wonderful, inspired by hundreds of students filled with passion to learn, students for whom it had not become evident that education must be phenomenally and preposterously tedious. One of these was a young man named Michael Murphy, who, I later learned, one day happened into one of my Stanford lectures by chance, not knowing the administration had switched lecture halls.

This day, lecturing on the Vedic hymns, I spoke the name “Brahman,” which in Western metaphysics is called the Absolute. More precisely, the Supreme Brahman is the Truth, the Knowledge, the Infinite, being also and at the same time the Reality in which all that is relative exists as its forms or its movements. Brahman then is the Absolute which takes all relatives in its embrace. In my lecture, I spoke the term “Brahman” with what one might call fullness of inflection, aided by the tremendous acoustics of the hall. Unbeknownst to me, this young Michael Murphy sat in the back, amidst the Hindi reverberation, wondering what strangeness he had happened upon.

Some time later Michael paid a visit to my office to meet me, saying his life had not been the same since that moment. I offered my condolences, but he said, no, it was all to the good, and could he please study philosophy and religion at my direction for the rest of his academic career? I recognized in his request my own impulse many years earlier, when I determined to find teachers who would guide me in finding the right answers to all the greatest questions in life, the last or ultimate questions, no matter that it would take many years of study. Once it became clear to me that this was truly what this eager young man intended for himself, I became his professor, and I must say, his friend, as he became mine.

Several years later, Michael and his friend Richard Price came to me seeking advice regarding their plans to convert a hot springs at Big Sur into a kind of small college for the exploration of new ideas. It seemed they envisioned something very similar to what I had in mind when I designed the American Academy of Asian Studies: the fusion of East and West, the modern and the ancient, religion and science, art and scholarship, body and mind. When they asked me to present lectures there, I was delighted to accept, for my retirement from Stanford was imminent. In the meantime, I sent them to speak with Alan Watts, who had always many dozens of ideas, most of them wonderfully subversive of the dogmatism one encounters in academia no less often than in ashrams.

I promised I would answer the awesome question you put to me at the start, which seemed to me at the moment an impossible query, concerning which teacher has been most influential in my life. You presented a rather intimidating list of my teachers, friends, colleagues, and peers, all of whom brought much wisdom: Heidegger, Tillich, Otto, Jung, Steiner, Watts, and still others. Naturally it would not occur to you to add the name of my mother to this roster, but please allow me to do so.

Something she said when I was quite young has continued to grow in significance as the years have passed. My mother was a woman who knew the Bible by heart, who surrounded the rooms of our home with large printed Bible verses, mostly from the psalms, which she changed each week from one frame to another. There she stood by the window, looking out upon the street underneath, horse carriages going by, sparrows and other birds feeding on our balcony. After a silence, she spoke quietly, “This old mother, this stupid old mother, sometimes must ask, ‘Was soll das alles?’”

Those four words were the most powerful expression for theological search that I have ever heard: “What is the meaning of all this?” There she stood, astounded, bewildered, by the miraculousness, the immense- ness, the unexplainableness of it all, standing there asking that. And knowing at the same time that it is a “stupid” question, for clearly she was aware she was pointing to something which cannot be answered but must be asked and lived time and time again.

It was years later that I had to think about this event, after studying theology and philosophy with the best scholars alive, who did not know the answer to my mother’s question any better than I. This explains how my parents could tolerate my outrageous, far-reaching, impractical studies because there was always the hope, in them and in me, that someday someone would know with certainty the correct answer to the question, Was soll das alles? The hope that there would be an answer that would resolve everything once and for all.

I must say I have long given up that search. Yes, I am content now with the fact that the question is. Content with holding to that question any better than I. This explains how my parents could tolerate my outrageous, far-reaching, impractical studies because there was always the hope, in them and in me, that someday someone would know with certainty the correct answer to the question, Was soll das alles? The hope that there would be an answer that would resolve everything once and for all.

I must say I have long given up that search. Yes, I am content now with the fact that the question is. Content with holding to that question any better than I. This explains how my parents could tolerate my outrageous, far-reaching, impractical studies because there was always the hope, in them and in me, that someday someone would know with certainty the correct answer to the question, Was soll das alles? The hope that there would be an answer that would resolve everything once and for all.

Esalen’s Primary Missions

Esalen is now thirty-one years old. We find ourselves in a fruitful period as we reexamine our work and clarify our purpose, our values, and our mission. Remaining committed to the ongoing work in Big Sur, we will also focus our programs and research in the areas of environmental design, transformative practices, and theoretical work related to the human potential.

We invite you to support us as we develop these programs for Esalen’s future.

Environmental Design

This program is built on the work that has previously been done at Esalen and the dreams that have been part of those plans. We would like to expand the existing organic agriculture program, the use of alternative energy sources, and the recycling and sustainability projects. Our aim is to integrate environmental awareness into all decisions, choices, practices, and purchases made by the Institute. An effort will be made to develop alliances with other organizations fostering environmental consciousness and ecologically sound design practices. We will also expand the number of public programs, seminars, and conferences devoted to environmental design.

Theory and Research

Esalen will foster strategic alliances with institutes, universities, healing centers, and individuals. We intend to bring people together from a variety of fields and backgrounds for ongoing, focused, discourse and collaboration. One of our objectives has been to provide support for scientists, scholars, and contemplatives whose work is neglected by mainstream institutions. We remain committed to these people and their endeavors as we work to overcome the fragmentation of knowledge in the diverse field of human potential.

Transformative Practices

Since its very beginning, Esalen has been a center for transformative practices. We will refine and expand these efforts by:

- Bringing transformative practices into a unified curriculum
- Beginning a systematic appraisal of such practices and their effectiveness
- Developing a specialized work-scholar track in transformative practices

Over the years, many people have given to Esalen. These gifts remain part of the Esalen property — the many beautiful trees, the benches, the stonework. Esalen would not be the beautiful place it is without the generosity of so many people.

You may leave your gift unspecified, or choose to designate the project you wish to fund. We will keep you updated through the Friends of Esalen newsletter, and in other ways, about each of our projects. You will receive the benefits of being a Friend of Esalen (see page 9).

We hope you will join us as we chart new directions for Esalen’s future. We will keep you informed as our missions and visions unfold.

Warmly,

Deborah Miller

Big House Programs

We are now scheduling workshops in our newly renovated Big House. This facility is available to groups of individuals who work together and would like to design their own Esalen program, drawing on our leaders and other resources. Ten bedrooms accommodating up to twenty individuals, ten bathrooms, a kitchen, dining room, and living room make it possible to house group members together, thereby enhancing the retreat environment.

To schedule or discuss possible formats, please contact Pat Le Wine, program coordinator at (408) 667-3038.

Friends of Esalen Quarterly Newsletter

The Friends of Esalen Newsletter is for and about the extended Esalen community. Published quarterly, it covers current events and other items not covered in the Catalog.

Through membership contributions, Friends of Esalen support the scholarship fund, the Friends network and newsletter, and other Esalen projects. In return, the Friends receive The Esalen Catalog three times a year, the quarterly Friends Newsletter, and opportunities to appear in the Friends Network Directory and to attend the annual Friends workshop.

Esalen’s Friends include people in 22 countries, from Big Sur to Nepal. If you would like to join us, please complete and return the membership form on page xx.

The Esalen Catalog (1962-1992) available via the Education Resources Information Center (ERIC)

Since 1962 there have been 103 issues of The Esalen Catalog. A Friends of Esalen project, organized by Ted Brandhorse and Deborah Miller, has collected these issues and entered them into the bibliographic database of the U.S. Department of Education’s Educational Resources Information Center (ERIC), where it is identified by the Accession Number/Order Number ED 347118. ERIC records are announced in the monthly abstract journal Resources in Education (RIE) and the entire database can be searched online via DIALOG and BRS, and on CD-ROM via SilverPlatter and DIALOG products.

Anyone interested in The Esalen Catalog as human potential movement historical source material for research purposes can now obtain the complete thirty-year set from ERIC’s document delivery arm, the ERIC Document Reproduction Service (EDRS, 7420 Fullerton Road, Suite 110, Springfield, Virginia 22153-2852; 1-800-443-3742).

Invitational Conferences

In its continuing commitment to the fields of education, religion, philosophy, and the physical and behavioral sciences, Esalen regularly sponsors invitational conferences that bring together experts who share their research and points of inquiry. As host, Esalen covers room and board expenses for participants as a way of advancing these particular studies. These are invitational conferences only and are not open to the public. Currently scheduled programs and their conveners are listed here.

Russian-American Exchange Center: Democracy, Civil Society & the New Russia

The Esalen Russian-American Exchange Center is inviting eight members of the Russian parliament to Big Sur to work with a small number of American specialists on the values and practices of civil society and democratic pluralism as a way to help Russia face its daunting challenge. The Center’s close colleague, Alexander Tsybko, will select the politicians to represent a wide ideological spectrum, and former diplomat Joseph Montville, director of the Center’s ethnic conflict resolution and democratization program will moderate.

Weekend of September 3–5

Accepting Life’s Transitions: Letting Go — Moving On
Mary Goldenson (Devarani)
The only certainty in life is change, yet we often resent our transitions because of patterns of fear and self-denial. Old beliefs keep us stuck in our resentments, unsuccessful marriages, friendships and careers, and can cause illness, sorrow, and the inability to forgive. Transitions are crossroads in our lives that give us the opportunity to take time out and reconnect with our truth. It is never too late to change. Transitions are doors to the renewal of our passions, courage, and commitments.

This workshop will provide you with ways to help complete the past, be open to the present, and create a future. Participants will experience a safe, supportive environment that includes taking risks, intense body work, gestalt imagery, dance, and meditation, in order to support the transitions that keep us committed to the process of discovering ourselves.

Inner Sound and Voice
Jill Purce
This workshop will teach practical explorations with sound for healing and the transformation of consciousness. By liberating the voice, it is possible to make contact with deep levels of the self and release an untapped source of energy.

Participants will work with the psychophysical effects of breathing, chanting, mantric and sonic meditations, learning to tune and listen together, moving from the intuitive level into meditative states. Breath and sound will be developed so that different parts of the body-mind come into resonance to give sonic massage, and to heal and tune the chakras and subtle body. Participants will be taught ways to find their own note and hear inner sound, entering directly into the subtle dimensions of sound by the magical voice practices of traditional cultures including trance music, Mongolian and Tibetan overtone chanting, and other methods.

Endarkenment
Will & Ailish Schutz
Sometimes in our search for enlightenment we become humorless, and our search becomes tedious. Growth demands a respite from intensive struggle.

This workshop can provide a vehicle for the turn downward. We shall explore: how to establish and maintain meaningless relations; what to worry about while meditating; advanced covert blaming and inducing guilt in loved ones; how to become the most sympathetic victim/martyr in your social group; guilt without sex.

This approach, similar to Feldenkrais’s “live the disasters” and the “homeopathic principle” (Will Schutz, Body Fantasy), can be as valuable for attaining enlightenment as the direct route — and more fun. In addition, participants will have an opportunity to explore, play with, and celebrate the shadow — that part of ourselves we usually hide.

Machine Dreams and Technoshamanism
Britt Welin & Ken Adams
Was Jimi Hendrix a shaman? Can pulsing light and sound heal the body and increase our intelligence? Is information immortal? What unexplored realms of spirit will we encounter with amazing new forms of computer and electronic hypermedia?

New myths will be needed. New mysteries will be encountered. How can ancient models of mind such as shamanism, Hinduism, or voodoo help us comprehend silicon-based consciousness? Why are neuro-enhancers crucial tools for so many computer innovators? Can humans share an erotic relationship with a machine being? Are Earth spirits at play in fields of photons and electron spin?

A neo-psychedelic subculture is co-evolving with new technologies to reveal glimpses of exotic futures. Participants will explore these realms in this workshop and demonstrate experimental approaches to shamanic methods with "machine allies and their collective Dreamtime Matrix. Join the leaders and help explore their creative partnership devoted to psychedelic applications of videography and computer arts.

Week of September 5–10

Life Energy Process

Stephano Sabetti

The Life Energy Process (LEP) is a spiritually-oriented approach to self-development and professional growth based on Eastern and Western energy dynamics. Specially designed subtle and intensive movements (microments) can increase energy flow and lead to the discharge of non-essential processes in your body (e.g., repressed emotions, chemical toxins, etc.). Each of us has an energy frequency that can be felt when attuned through LEP. This unique vibration helps us center and ground ourselves as well as find clearer direction and meaning in daily life. Each participant will have a chance to feel their unique energy process and explore it through process inquiry.

Life Energy Process includes: dance, theater, massage, pool work, and various other forms. The workshop is of particular interest to professionals and laypersons who are excited by the integration of theory, pleasure, and hands-on application of energy concepts. $740

CC, (Carl Chase) & Kathleen O'Shaugnessy

This workshop is for those individuals who are just beginning to explore touch as deep communication. The central theme will be primary approaches to full-body massage, which the leaders will introduce through demonstration and experiential exchanges. Self-awareness through movement, sound, and breath will be used to enhance the senses. Discussion will offer insights into various approaches to body work and how they address both the physiological and emotional body.

C. E. credit is available for nurses; see pages 50-51. $740

The Writer's Way: A Personal Adventure through Writing

Nancy Bacal

We all have stories that are aching to be told, but when asked to translate them onto the page, it is not uncommon to experience shame and self-judgement. This is an invitation to anyone with an open heart to gather together and mine the reservoir of personal experience. Beginning with a series of writing exercises designed to bypass the "critic", we will use the pen to lead us onto our own path. Daily excursions on the page will help us transform the burdens of our lives into story, the unwanted voices into characters, the failures and successes into material. Guidance will be specific enough to excite the imagination, loose enough for each of us to experiment with imagery and remain open to surprise.

This workshop offers a supportive and stimulating environment for the non-writer, the occasional writer, and the professional. The schedule will include writing in and out of the group, movement, meditation, reading and discussion of pertinent material. The intention will be to coax the mind out of its cycle of expectation and disappointment into a positive, functioning relationship with our work.

Organizations of the 1990s: Managing with Heart

Maggie Seeley & Thom Allena

Human needs, environmental values, and spiritual concerns are finally being acknowledged as integral parts of organizational life. "Corporate soul" is a new buzz term in management circles and signifies the need for organizational life to become more human and cooperative. People are motivated to make a difference, and in today's corporate world these differences now consist of psychological and spiritual considerations as well as economic concerns.

Organizational leaders now practice "power with" rather than "power over" employees and use quality circles, teamwork, and a "win-win" ethic as conflict resolution techniques. Employee ownership incentives are helping employees find their work more satisfying, productive, and profitable. Now that organizational life has been given a "heart," new ideas are constantly evolving to change the way management operates.

This workshop will provide tools, techniques, and experiential work for those who wish to:

- Improve their leadership effectiveness and organizational vision
- Find more intuitive ways to develop a "kinder, gentler" empowering management style
- Learn to balance profitability and productivity with human concerns
- Express their personal vision by working "spiritually smarter" rather than through workaholic or technoholic strategies
- Learn ways to integrate humor, creativity, and play as part of a more productive environment
- Experience team building and partnership models based on the integration of masculine and feminine behaviors
- Examine theories X, Y, Z, then create a new management paradigm
- Create a workbook and develop a personal plan of action

This workshop is for leaders, managers, directors, supervisors, and other people who wish to work "spiritually smarter" and improve their own and their organization's consciousness and business practices.

C. E. credit is available for nurses; see pages 50-51. $740

Self-Acceptance Training: Basic

Rachard Olney & Heather Burch

This workshop is largely experiential; no time will be given to theoretical or didactic considerations. Self-acceptance training is a transpersonal practice that follows an educational model rather than a medical model. It is defined as “the experiencing of whatever I am in a given moment, without the inhibitions of self-judgement, self-criticism, or self-evaluation.” The goal of this work is to reach the inner self, the inner teacher, and to feel alive and real. Although its practice includes devices drawn from gestalt, bioenergetics, mythic fantasy, eidetic imagery, and hypnosis, it is also a philosophy, a value system, and a view of the individual’s relationship with the universe.

Self-acceptance training is a holistic approach which emphasizes body awareness, emotional charge and discharge, and cognitive examination of the individual’s "pretends" and illusions that obstruct self-acceptance.

Limited to 25 people. $740
Weekend of September 10–12

Freeing Our Bodies/Our Selves Through Movement: A Feldenkrais® Approach
Patrick Douce

The work of Moshe Feldenkrais is based on the natural process by which we learned to move as children. During this workshop, soft, easy, gentle movements will be used to increase awareness of the body and to improve the ease and ability of movement. Special emphasis will be placed on the difficulties in movement that arise from chronic conditions such as lower back and neck pain, shoulder pain, tension in the neck and shoulders, and knee injuries. Such conditions can be improved by approaching the difficulties as problems in learning rather than as therapeutic troubles. Situations which were "incurable" become "re-educable." Workshop participants will also be introduced to methods for improving their ability to sense each other's bodies through touch and massage.

Although this workshop is valuable for anyone interested in learning more about his/her body through direct experience, it may be of special interest and benefit to dancers, athletes, doctors, nurses, physical therapists, psychologists, health care professionals, and elderly citizens who may discover new ways of moving with ease and increased flexibility — painlessly and immediately.

C. E. credit is available for nurses; see pages 50-51

Spiritual Survival in Corporate America
Jerry Johnson

Bill Moyers recently said he is devoting his time and broadcast coverage of the '90s to the spiritual pursuit of increasing numbers of Americans. His statement comes at a time when many of us who value a spiritual life are questioning whether it is possible to continue working within corporate structures, but who haven't yet given up hope.

Rituals of Transformation
Paul Rebillot & Audrey Savage

People are continually approaching thresholds, transition points from one state or condition of being to another. To live is to change. The tendency, however, is to resist change, to cling to the familiar, to remain stuck at the threshold. This tendency is the source of much stress and pain that people experience in life.

A ritual does not make a change happen. Instead, it awakens within the psyche the archetypal pattern of change; it teaches the participant how to change. By acting out the ritual, people learn, not only in their minds but in the feelings of their hearts and the movements of their bodies, the process of transformation. Rituals can both prepare people for change as it happens in the course of their lives, and help heal the passages that were not completed in the past.

During this workshop, group members will look at what they want to heal and transform in their lives, what they need to say good-bye to in the past, and what new steps they need to take in order to cross their present threshold. Subgroups will work together to design and enact individual rituals in order to support and help their healing process.

Just as the body can move from one position into another, so can the full being; hearts can move, minds can change. The basic tenet of ritual is that one can trust the body to show the appropriate path, that way so supported by the full being that doors seem to open before one. Joseph Campbell said that when someone can discover his or her authentic path, this way seems to be blessed by magic. To find this way is the work of "Rituals of Transformation." $380

Ralph Blum & Bronwyn Jones

Homo sapiens is completing its tour of duty and preparing to bow out. Waiting in the wings to take its place is a new species characterized by enhanced knowing and broader wisdom. The old maps are out of date and we are all cartographers now. We must create "New Maps for the New Millennium."

What matters now? Do the old concepts still apply now that we have entered a critical period of detoxing, cleansing, and realigning? We must identify the ways we disempower ourselves, find the means to reclaim our power, and work towards making ourselves whole.

The goal of this seminar is to provide insights into the workings of the Runes as a training tool for the intuition, and to engage in experiential, hands-on exercises to ground participants in the use of the Oracle. Using the Runes as "a compass for conduct," we will examine major themes such as healing, initiation, shifting your archetype, and the issues of will and resolution. Together we will explore what it means to become an oracular individual as we prepare ourselves to enter the twenty-first century.

This course is open both to beginners and advanced students of the oracular tradition. Recommended reading: Blum, The Book of Runes or The RuneCards (both, St. Martin's Press). $380

Five-Day Lomi Intensive
Kathryn Lydecker, Johanna Putnoi & Robert Sanoff

In the formative years of life, human beings learn to embody the beliefs and posture of their individual family system and the culture into which they are born. Many individuals unconsciously continue to shape their lives in reaction to these influences, often at the expense of their own creativity and vitality.

The aim of this workshop will be for participants to observe how they feel, think, and move themselves through life. By attending to bodily-felt experience, moment to moment, and by distinguishing between sensation and thinking, the path to reclaiming one's authentic self opens. Through this process of developing awareness, it is possible to make responsible choices in daily life and to live with integrity and gentleness.

This workshop provides an arena for developing mindful awareness and for unmasking habits that keep us from ourselves and hinder relationships. Lomi work includes meditation, movement, gestalt, aikido, and Reichian work. $740

Steven Vasquez

This workshop is about the nuances involved when illness, injury, or pain become resolved beyond the conventional expectations of medical science. Information from people who beat the odds of recovery from "terminal" illness, "incumbent" diseases, or difficult injuries will be reviewed. The role of belief, attitudes, and relationships in affecting the body will be experientially explored.

This confluent somatic approach synthesizes medical research, cross-cultural concepts, ancient spiritual practices, and modern psychology. It combines methods drawn from Ericksonian hypnosis, Focusing, and family systems theory, with hands-on work to reduce physical symptoms. Abstract concepts like state-dependent memory, psychoneuroimmunology, and chakra systems are broken down into practical applications.

Workshop material will be experiential and didactic. Processes for tracking unconscious personal myths that underlie medical conditions will be demonstrated. Complex medical jargon, psychological processes, and esoteric energy methods will be simplified into functional uses than can affect health recovery in conventional psychological and medical settings.

The purpose of this workshop is to reawaken participants to the spirit of the Earth and their intimate connection to all of nature. Working with Native California Indian traditions and contemporary somatic awareness practices, the group will apprentice to Earth's wisdom, seeking to enfold themselves in the forgotten arms of the landscape in order to rediscover and rehabit the earth as modern twentieth century indigenous natures. While the Native American way of life cannot be learned in a short time, this program is designed to give participants a comprehensive overview. In addition, the group will investigate how these ancient ways can be incorporated into daily life.

Little Bear will share his peoples' way of obtaining harmony and balance with the Earth through ritual, stories, dance, and ceremonies. Much of this workshop takes place in direct contact with nature, outdoors on day hikes, and at special spots along Big Sur's spectacular coast. This event marks the first time the Esalen Indians have taught on their ancestral home-land at Esalen Institute.

The Hero’s Journey

Paul Rebillot & Audrey Savage

Paul Rebillot writes: "Again and again in my work with people I have seen the suffering and confusion caused by our society's lack of significant rites of passage. Without shamans or ritual masters to guide them, modern women and men must find their own lonely and usually traumatic paths from one stage of life to another — whether it be a child's discovery that there is no Santa Claus, an adolescent's awkward approach to puberty, an adult's marriage or divorce, or a change of career. Every change requires a movement from one level of being to another.

"Seeing this need, I created a rite of passage universal enough to allow people to discover the pattern of change, whatever that change might be. That patterns is exemplified in the myth of the hero. The new stage of life that is to be reached calls forth a heroic action on the part of the person taking the journey. At the same time, as soon as a new goal begins to emerge, all of the resistance to that goal emerges as well. I call these two forces 'the hero' and 'the demon.' In order for the new state of being to be realized, these two forces must discover how to communicate with each other and how to work together. The old forms must fall away so that the new form can emerge.

"My purpose is to give people a chance to experience a rite of passage so that they can enter the changes in their lives with a sense of joy and greater context. My hope is that through this process people will awaken to their own creative genius and enter into the drama of their lives with imagination and delight.

During this week we will focus on how to develop a more adventurous, resourceful, and buoyant way of living. In an atmosphere based on warmth and humor, we will explore our capacity for mutual tenderness, respect, and honesty. Traditional psychological practices such as gestalt, bioenergetics, and psychosynthesis will be used for intensive individual work, as well as non-traditional innovative approaches in body work, kineesthetic retraining, music, and guided imagery. $740

Cortical Reeducation® and Integrated Awareness

Harriet Goslins & Lansing Barrett Gresham

The basic relationship between our emotions and our behavior can cause specific body locations to remain chronically contracted in alliance with specific emotional inhibitions. The choice not to make a certain movement can be an attempt to avoid re-experiencing the painful emotion that that particular movement elicits.

Anger, grief, shame, and fear seem to have predictable locations in the body, regardless of personal and cultural differences. A direct route to releasing these mental and emotional repressions, blocks, and denials is through specific movement patterns that can release obstructive habits. If you can’t make the movement, then you inhibit the behavior connected with it.

Participants will do floorwork to facilitate this reclaiming process.

C. E. credit is available for nurses; see pages 50-51. $740

Couples’ Group: The Truth

Will & Ailish Schutz

This workshop is for couples, mainly, and for individuals — those in a couple, formerly in a couple, or who want to be in a couple. It is only for those who are willing to tell the whole truth. The leaders will use a symphony of methods, old and new, tested and spontaneous, from problem resolution to massage.

Recommended reading: Schutz, Profound Simplicity and Joy: 20 Years Later (Ten Speed Press). $740

Self-Acceptance Training: Advanced

Richard Olney & Heather Lynne Burch

This workshop is basically experiential, but time will also be given to theoretical and didactic material of interest to professional therapists. Please refer to September 5-10 for complete enrollment.

Please note: Due to the time given to the didactic material in this advanced workshop, not everyone will have a chance to work personally with the leaders. $740

Weekend Massage Intensive

Vicki Topp & Esalen Massage Staff

This workshop is designed for those individuals who are just beginning to explore the art of touch. The Esalen long-stroke massage will be the basis for all that is taught. Into this will be woven energetic work with visualization, movement meditation, cranial holding, and an introduction to Chinese point work. Discussion of various theoretical approaches to hands-on work will be included.

C. E. credit is available for nurses; see pages 50-51. $380

Yom Kippur:
The Other Side of God

Rabbi William Cutter & Cantor William Sharlin

This weekend will include observance of the Jewish Day of Atonement, reflection of the year just past, and the work of personal purification and repentance. Prayer, meditation, music, and discussion will occupy us from sundown on Friday through the end of the day Saturday. Kol Nidre will be at 7:00 P. M. on Friday; Ne’ileh (the concluding service) will end by dinner time Saturday evening when we will enter the New Year in ways both traditional and innovative. The Sunday morning workshop will include reactions to the experience and sharing of New Year stories.

The prayers will include traditional liturgy treated in a non-traditional way, and innovative text combined with music of generations past and present. Discussions in smaller groups will occur throughout, as will meditation and time just to be alone. Although the Yom Kippur experience itself will be "devotional," non-Jewish participants are welcomed. Fasting and personal restriction characterize the traditional Yom Kippur observance, but participants may choose to experience this holiday in their own way, with their own commitments. $380

Jeanne Achterberg & Frank Lawlis

The concept of transpersonal medicine has been coined from two fields of study, transpersonal psychology and medicine. Transpersonal medicine is healing from beyond the self, and recognizes that there are many resources beyond what we consider our consensual reality. This definition honors the integration of many eras of health care, expanding to include the ancient practices of shamanic work as well as the contemporary frontiers of psychoneuroimmunology and imagery.

This workshop will present many of the doors to alternate realities and specific avenues for accessing the wisdoms that lie just beyond the boundaries of the limits of self. Altered states of consciousness, ritual, advanced imagery techniques, the experience of community through joy and transcendence are the basic topics for presentation. The workshop is designed to be primarily experiential with clinical applications for dealing with physical and mental problems from a professional perspective.

C. E. credit is available for nurses; see pages 50-51. $380

Golf in the Kingdom:
An Exploration of the Inner Game

Stephen Cohen, Fred Shoemaker & John Allen

Ye’l come away from the links with a new hold on life, that is certain if ye play the game with all your heart.

—Michael Murphy, (Shivas Irons), Golf in the Kingdom
The game of golf provides many opportunities to enhance the journey of self-discovery. It can be experienced not only as an athletic endeavor, but also as a metaphor for the way one lives. Just as in life, issues of self-confidence, fear, trust, discipline, and awareness emerge in the conflict between the ego's desire for success and the inner self's ability to achieve.

During these five days, reaching methods gleaned from a study of the inner game will be utilized, as well as principles from psycho-synthesis and gestalt, to explore the inner self and how one interferes with its emergence. Two days will be spent on field trips to the Monterey Peninsula where participants will practice and play in some of the most beautiful golf country in the world. On other days there will be time to relax and enjoy the natural pleasures of Esalen and Big Sur.

Embodiment & Vision
Laura DeNuccio (Ma Prita)

In the sunlight of awareness, each thought, each action becomes sacred.
—Thich Nhat Hanh

Laura DeNuccio writes: “This is an invitation to those individuals who are aware of an emerging consciousness that is making itself felt and heard personally and globally, and who are searching to fulfill both higher and deeper callings in their lives.

“Through attunement with the Earth and each other, individuals can deepen their capacity to listen to the innate wisdom and intelligence of their bodies. Learning to listen from within can lead back to the ancient wisdom of the Earth — returning us to our sacredness and wholeness. Participants will use breath, sound, and movement as meditations for enlivening the vitality of cells and tissue, for dissolving energetic blockages, and to quiet, still, and expand the mind. The sound meditations have the potential of moving the individual past the limitations of language, creating openings for new thought and inspiration. The emphasis will be on self-care, renewal, and nourishment.

“The group will explore commitment and what it means to fully embody one’s inner vision. What would you love to see in your life? In your world? What is meaningful and significant to you? What’s truly of value? Ritual and the power of the Spoken Word will be used to bring this vision forth. While cultivating compassion, honesty, and kindness toward oneself and others, the group will experiment with co-creating community, an environment of trust and acceptance in which to explore this ever-unfolding adventure of spirit.”

Process Work: Working with the Dreaming Body
Nisha Zenoft

Process Work, developed by Dr. Arnold Mindell and his associates in Zurich, is grounded in the belief that all of life’s events and experiences have the potential for being useful and meaningful. Nature makes no mistakes — even the unexpected, unusual, and nonsensical occurrences in our lives, if observed and explored, can provide us with valuable information. Process Work provides us with the tools for exploring and working with a wide range of human experiences, including chronic symptoms, dreams, movement, relationships, and groups. Based on the theory of the “Dreambody,” the body is seen to mirror dreams, myths, and fantasies. In effect, the body is a dream trying to happen.

A compassionate atmosphere will be provided for participants to gain skills for working on relationship issues, physical symptoms, and dreams. The focus will be on:

• The basic foundations of process work
• The practical skills needed to apply process work concepts to one’s personal and professional life
• Ways of bringing creativity and a sense of play into the serious business of being alive.

This workshop will include discussion, demonstration, and experiential work.

Recommended reading: Mindell, Working with the Dreaming Body and Working on Yourself Alone (both, Arkana). $740

Coyote Dance
Alberto Villoldo

Every night when the moon is full, Spider Woman sifts through the sands searching for coyote bones, and when she has assembled a full white skeleton and spun her silver threads through it, she blows her breath softly over each rib, each thigh and leg bone, until the flesh grows crimson and then furred like the desert sand. She then sings the song of life until it’s tail twitches and the coyote leaps into the air and bounds off into the dunes laughing like the morning wind.

This workshop will gather people together to collect those parts of themselves that are enduring, the whitened bones that Spider Woman gathers, and spin the web of life around everyone’s true life-force. The Soul-Mending Way will be explored through story-telling, magic theater, and ritual movement.

The Soul-Mending Way has been used for millennia by medicine peoples of the high Andes for healing ancient soul wounds and to quantum leap into their destiny, into who they are becoming. The groups will be immersed in the five rites of passage of the Soul-Mending Way:

Emergence: Renewal and regeneration;
Passage by Fire: Purification and transformation through humanity’s most ancient rite of passage;
Provenance: Return to the Mother-Goddess and claiming the Earth as mother and Sun as father;
The Luminous Warrior: Life/Death-Life — achieving the impeccability of the warrior who has conquered death;
Delivery: Return to the Father — surrendering the self, letting go, returning home.

These mythic passages will be translated into contemporary journeys of transformation. In selective trance states unique to shamanism, we will discover realms not bound by ordinary time, domains where there are no causes, only effects, and where one can hear the voices of the ancient ones in the wind, heal one’s past, and summon one’s destiny. $740

Weekend of October 1-3

A Weekend with Marianne Williamson

“Love is what we were born with. Fear is what we learned here.” —A Return to Love

Take a spiritual journey with Marianne Williamson, lecturer and best-selling author of A Return to Love, as she teaches the basic principles of A Course in Miracles, a self-study system of spiritual psychotherapy, and discusses their application to daily life. Topics covered will include relationships, health, and career.

The weekend will focus on the relinquishment of fear and the acceptance of love back into our hearts. Living the good life has nothing to do with accumulating possessions or status or power; it has to do with understanding ourselves and serving others in order to expand the fund of love in the universe.

Participants will spend a thought-provoking weekend examining some key issues in the Course of Miracles’ philosophy: forgiveness, relationships as assignments, and healing of our personal wounds.

Recommended reading: Williamson, A Return to Love

Please note: This workshop is expected to have a very large enrollment. $380
Making it Float
Robert Hall

There is no fixing a damaged childhood. The best you can hope for is to make the sucker float.

—Conroy

Robert Hall writes: "And so it is. This workshop is about making it float. How to. If you’re willing to spend some time with meditation, gestalt group process, making sounds, and experimenting with moving your body to your own rhythms, if you’re interested in how body awareness, psychotherapy, and meditation work together to loosen your identification with who you think you are, and if you still have your sense of humor, we’ll not only make it float, we’ll take a ride in it."

Gestalt Practice
Christine Stewart Price & Guest Leaders

The Way, when declared Seems so thin and flavorless. Nothing to look at, nothing to hear — And when used — is inexhaustible.

—Lao Tzu

Gestalt practice is a form —nonanalytic, noncoercive, nonjudgmental — evolving out of the work of Fritz Perls. The work integrates ways of personal clearing and development that are both ancient and modern. To the extent that awareness is made primary relative to action, gestalt practice has a strong relationship to some forms of meditation and visualization. This form is similar to some Reichian work as well, in that emotional and energetic release and rebalancing are allowed and encouraged.

The emphasis is intrapersonal rather than interpersonal. It is explicitly understood that participants are not patients but persons actively consenting to work (or play) in awareness. The leader functions to reflect, clarify, and respect whatever emerges in this process. The aim is unfoldment, wholeness, and growth, rather than adjustment, cure or accomplishment. Through group exercises, meditations, and open seat work, this workshop will introduce participants to the gestalt practice approach.

Biodrama
Lorenzo Ostuni

Everybody’s life is a journey that passes through the doors of birth, love, and death. Biodrama, an Italian method that synthesizes three-thousand years of philosophy (Egypt, Hebraism, Greece, Rome, and Italian Renaissance) and modern philosophy, is an individualized ritual experience in which each group member symbolically passes through these stages. It employs dream work, body language, poetry, imagery, symbols, and music; it is both contemplative and experimental. The goal is to develop a deeper awareness of the emotions of life and love through a creative relationship with the group, and a deeper renewal of the self through a broader awareness of one’s inner life.

Each participant will experience the two-part nature of Biodrama. The first part consists of the journey of the protagonist, helped by a team of Biodramatists, through the three stages of life. In the second part, Lorenzo Ostuni will interpret each participant’s ritual journey.

This workshop will be conducted in Italian and English.

Awakening Vision through Conscious Photography
Jeff Berner

Here was room for the imagination to work.

—Mark Twain

Whether you are starting out in photography, or are an advanced beginner, explore nature, people, and wildlife through the “mirror with a memory.” Jeff Berner will show you how to follow the path of photography as a meditation, a hobby, a sport, and an art. Without using technical jargon, he will also explain how to make your camera serve your personal vision.

As the author of five books in the field, including The Nikon Touch Photography Guide, and The Photographic Experience, the leader will help discover each individual’s talent and provide a continuous flow of “Aha!” experiences with an informal, spontaneous teaching style. Turn looking into really seeing — and snapshotting into fine photography.

Easy-going assignments include: Looking at Seeing, The Psychology of Lenses, The Selective Eye (Composition), Depth of Field, A Still Life is Still Life, The Click that “Kills,” Creative Accidents, Visual Meditation, and Uses of Color. There will be creative critiques of each participant’s work, in private consultation, and/or in the group. We’ll shoot and talk by day, and show and tell by night.

This workshop will emphasize the use of color slide film. Bring 4-10 rolls of 36-exposure slide film rated ISO 100, 200 and/or 400, plus $7 per roll for overnight processing in Monterey. Any working 35MM SLR camera will be adequate: recent Pentax, Minolta, Maxxum, and Nikon models are recommended. The final evening will feature a group celebration of the projected results in a multi-media show with music.

You can call Jeff Berner to discuss the workshop at (707) 878-2000, weekdays, 9AM to 3PM only.

The Vision and Practice of Human Transformation
George Leonard

It may be argued that, in potentia, every human being is a genius, and that the ultimate creative capacity of the human brain/body is, for all practical purposes, infinite. Each of us is a prodigious learning animal, and our ultimate destiny may well be to evolve capacities that would now be termed extraordinary. Perhaps it is only due to the limitations imposed by faulty notions of childrearing and schooling, along with the failure of national vision and practice, that we rarely develop even a small fraction of our potential.

In this hands-on workshop, human potential pioneer George Leonard, informed by his work with Michael Murphy in the development of Integral Transformative Practice, outlines a new human vision and provides a practical map with which you can begin your journey toward the realization of your inborn genius and creativity. The workshop will involve discussion, demonstration, and the gentle movement and imaging exercises of Leonard Energy Training (LET), a practice inspired by the art of aikido.

Psychoneurimmunology and Its Implications
George Solomon & Margaret Kemeny

The rapidly developing field of psychoneuroimmunology (PNI) is concerned with the nature of complex interactions between the central nervous system (CNS) and the immune system. The central nervous system mediates stress effects, coping, emotions, and other psychologi-
The leaders will present a didactic and interactive workshop which will describe the immune system, how it works, and how it is regulated. They will discuss human and animal research on the effects of stress and other experiential factors on immunity and on immunologically-resisted and mediated disease, including bacterial and viral infections, cancer, autoimmune disease, allergies, and AIDS. The as-yet poorly researched area of interventions, including psychotherapy, on immunity and disease will be discussed. Some of the possible mechanisms underlying traditional and alternative healing systems and placebo effects will be explored.

Participants, whether health or mental health practitioners concerned with the clinical relevance of the field, or individuals who are concerned with maintaining or improving their own health, will be encouraged to set goals for their own particular health needs.

A Retreat for Women of Experience: Mid-Life and Beyond

Lenore Lefer & Anne Yemenas

The gifts of woman are many. They have too often been undervalued and made invisible until we cannot see them ourselves. Today, more than ever, the earth needs these gifts.

This is an opportunity for women in mid-life and beyond to come together to explore the issues that are on our minds and in our hearts. What are the challenges we each face? How can we support each other in reclaiming and honoring our passion, our tears and our outrage, our laughter, and our beauty? How can we express our deepest values at this time in our lives?

The workshop will include time to speak and tell our stories, and time for silence. Each day will include periods of hatha yoga, walking meditation, and group process.

Themes to be explored include:
- Cultural perspectives on the older woman
- Issues of loneliness and companionship
- The wisdom of the body
- Sexuality and intimacy
- Menopause
- Power and self-expression
- Self-care in the midst of responsibilities
- Spiritual questions of mid-life

It is our hope that these days together will strengthen our trust and renew our spirit, so that we can return to our lives with more joy, more tenderness toward ourselves and others, and more boldness in living all that is important to us.

Rituals for Healing

Jeanne Achterberg & Frank Lawlis

Rituals give meaning, richness, and structure to life's passages. They are for communication and celebration, for solemnity and deep inner silence. They are a visible manifestation of common human experience. Most of all, rituals are ceremonies of healing.

During this workshop, participants will explore components of healing ritual and discuss why rituals work. Sounds and symbols of rituals from several cultures will be experienced. The group will create and participate in healing rites which incorporate ancient wisdom with the belief systems from modern medicine, science, and psychology. The focus of the ritual work will be the healing power of the imagination.

This program may be of interest to health professionals and others who are on a healing path — seeking harmony, balance, and wholeness.

Clinical Program for Professionals: Integrating Gestalt, Self Psychology, and Mind-Body Healing

Ronald Alexander & Bruce Gregory

This five-day training program will combine didactic discussion with experiential exercise, supervision of therapist-client dyads, and clinical demonstrations. A full spectrum of treatment cartography will be used to clarify how gestalt, self psychology, and mind-body healing can be effectively integrated to address early developmental trauma, narcissistic issues of the self, and contact boundary disturbances. Emphasis will be on:

- Improving diagnosis skills
- Formulation of treatment plans that attend to the transition points of the healing process
- Improving intervention skills as they relate to handling resistance, the nurturing of the real self, and facilitation and activation of unconscious healing processes through the use of mirroring, pacing, and the language of mind-body healing.

Particular attention will be paid to assisting therapists to become more aware and effective in dealing with countertransference and projective identification.

Recommended readings: Masterson, Countertransference and Psychotherapeutic Technique (Brunner Mazel); Erickson & Rossi, Hypnosis Casebook; and Polster, Gestalt Therapy Integrated (Brunner Mazel).

The Medicine Wheel Way

Carol Proudfoot-Edgar & Bob Edgar

This workshop will draw on the Native American Medicine Wheel ceremonies and teachings as resources for personal growth and renewed experiencing of ourselves within the larger web of the natural world. Just as Western psychological theory provides a framework for describing human stages of development, the Medicine Wheel offers a map for self-individuation. Both systems embody steps for healing. A primary difference, however, is that the Medicine Wheel way of living views humans as sacred beings and maintains that each individual must find their own path for "walking with beauty in the world."

The Medicine Wheel way illuminates the relationship of all things, each direction on the wheel having its particular meaning and pointing to aspects needed for fuller integration and individuation. Ceremonies and rituals mark the passage of seasons and significant events of individual and group life, and connect the individual to the great mystery of life.

This experiential workshop will use these ancient teachings while providing a supportive means for participants to continue their process of self-development and to deepen their relationship with the natural world. Activities will include: learning the Medicine Wheel and making medicine pouches, learning about shamanism and using the shamanic journey method for finding power animals and spiritual teachers, and drawing upon ancient, ancestral knowledge available to all of us. We will be drumming, rattling, and chanting throughout our time together. Participants are encouraged to bring journals, a bandana (to cover your eyes), drums, and rattles (if you have them).

Please note: This workshop has a sequential structure in which each session builds on activities from the previous one. Participants are requested to be present for all sessions and to arrange for massages or other non-workshop activities between session breaks.

Self-Transformation: The Art of the Actor for Everyday Life

Jane Marla Robbins

Transforming feelings of anxiety and insecurity into feelings of self-confidence and joy is a miracle that can happen in all areas of one's life — physical, emotional, spiritual. This transformation can help us fulfill our potential for the roles we have chosen to play — whether it be child, parent, artist, shaman, charismatic speaker, sensualist, or spouse.

Some of the techniques to be explored and discussed include: the actor's physical preparation, vocal, preparation, mental and emotional preparation, spiritual preparation, relaxation, sense memory, the magic "as if," personalization, substitution, playing a character, animal exercises, overcoming self-consciousness, perfect props, unspoken manners, speaking the truth, breathing, the inner walnut, and the psycho-physical action.

Participants can learn how to replace old fears and paranoid projections with self-manufactured pleasures and positive projections. Many "real-life" situations ordinarily fraught with worry can easily be transformed using the Actor's Imagination. The power and pleasure of being able to create a sense of well-being and self-confidence at will can be experienced by everyone, and, once it has been discovered, it cannot be easily shaken.

No previous acting experience is necessary. $380

Of Human Bondage

Kathleen Riordan Speeth

Slavery to habit, instinct, or addiction is demeaning. Reacting, instead of acting, is mechanical, not human. It robs us of the authorship of our own autobiographies. It lets chance write the plot. We all know the entropic sensation of being reactive. We feel it. But in the heat of the moment where is the presence of mind to act as we wish? How do we keep our buttons pushed again and again? Why does so much of what we do produce suffering for ourselves and others, and engender midnight regrets?

To be able to act we need a presence. We need awareness, acceptance, and self-understanding. To be conscious of one's own mind and body from moment to moment, in the eternal now, is to know what's going on without being fooled by the accretions of the past. We also need insight into the jumble of emotions and memories that distort perception. The goodness of our outward deeds depends upon the depth and clarity of our inward consciousness. To the degree we see without distortion, we cease to be a victim of the past and even present circumstances and become the creator of our own actions.

This workshop explores the structure and function of personal unfreedom. Through discussion, journaling, gestalt, and structured interaction, we will explore the emotional fetters that make each of us toys of circumstances when each would prefer to be free to act with authority. We will practice, with the help of Spinosa and other masters of wisdom, certain possibilities for breaking out of human bondage and moving into reality. $380

Harriet Golsins & Patti Lawrence

The habitual way a person sits, stands, or moves reflects patterns that are "wired in" to the nervous system. This information can be erased or changed. By reeducating the brain-muscle connection, restrictions in movement are freed, freeing also the lifetime habits that have organized around that movement.

This work is a relearning of the ease and fluidity that was taken for granted as a child and lost somewhere along the way. Physical injury, emotional trauma, or ongoing stress all evoke a protective response from the body. These patterns, necessary at the time, remain when no longer needed, outside of awareness, and cause discomfort and unnecessary limitations. Freeing them results in relief of chronic pain or tightness, a more restful sleep, and a higher energy level. By changing muscular holding patterns, the entire protective posture is altered, deeply affecting the body's habitual defense system. Thus, new movement possibilities mean new self-image possibilities.

Fears and anxieties have corresponding muscular habits. Verbal information, no matter how brilliant, or spiritual practice that fails to extinguish these muscular habits, will fail to totally eliminate the toxic behavior.

This workshop is for those who are physically active and fit and want to increase their skills while learning to reduce risk or injury; for the sedentary or those dealing with after-effects of injuries for the athlete, the dancer, and those who "live in their heads"; and for individuals who feel chronically tired and stressed and want to learn how to take better care of their neck, shoulders, and back, and for those who want to improve their posture and breathing and live with more flexibility and comfort.

This course is provider approved by the California Board of Dental Examiners, number 2586.

Living Better with Chronic Pain and Illness

David Levenson & Dayle Sarasohn

Caring for yourself is a rewarding and valuable experience, but it can also be a lonely one. Communication with your doctors, health care workers, and significant others becomes important in order to receive the support and assistance you need. Developing certain skills and having the proper attitude can help relieve physical and emotional distress and enhance the healing process. This workshop invites you to open your mind and heart to the healing capacity within yourself in order to reduce pain and improve the quality of your life.
The leaders will review each participant's health concerns and their past and current treatment. The full impact of pain in each person's life will be discussed — how it affects homelife, worklife, relationships, and social interactions. Self-hypnosis, imagery, and meditation will be used and explored to help control the pain and heal the body. These methods will be used throughout the workshop, while directing each person's caring and compassionate nature where it is needed — toward the self. This focus will not only help feel better physically, but can help you overcome the harsh self-criticism, guilt, and shame that often accompanies chronic pain.

Health care professionals, families, and others dealing with issues of pain and illness are encouraged to attend.

Big Sur Wilderness Experience
Steven Harper
Located on a narrow stretch of land between the Pacific Ocean and the coastal ridge of the Santa Lucia Mountains, Esalen is the trailhead to one of the world's most spectacular wilderness areas. With this natural reserve as the primary teacher, the group will walk into the Los Padres National Forest. Drawing on various traditions, participants can develop the quality of their awareness and open to the natural world.

Weeklong workshops will venture out on five hikes (4-10 miles in length). Weekend workshops will take two hikes (3-6 miles in length). Using Esalen as a base camp, the group will explore the different trails through the natural beauty of the Big Sur backcountry. Days will begin and end at Esalen with short stretching and sharing sessions. Each day-hike will begin after breakfast and will conclude in time to enjoy the hot springs and dinner each evening at Esalen. Basic outdoor skills such as map reading and minimum impact concepts will be practiced. Participants will be taught enough skills to begin exploring the wilderness on their own after these outings. More information will be sent upon registration.

Conscious Loving:
A Body-Centered Approach to Relationship Transformation
Gay & Kathlyn Hendricks
Relationships are the primary arena in which our deepest selves are either concealed or revealed. This workshop is designed for people in close relationships and professionals who counsel couples. Participants will work on the transformation of present relationships while exploring the seven major principles of conscious loving: commitment, learning to love yourself, learning to feel, claiming creativity, learning to tell the microscopic truth, keeping your agreements, and learning to live more consistently in a state of positive energy. This workshop has two major purposes: 1.) to expand the experience of love past previous limits; and 2.) to learn to rest in the essence that underlies persons.

Using video analysis, participants will learn to use the "Five Flags," the five nonverbal signals which reveal stress points in relationships. Based on the leaders' experience with over 1500 couples, they will introduce breadth and movement techniques that accelerate the process by which people in close relationships can attain their goals. Participants will learn techniques designed to make it easier to tell the truth, and take healthy responsibility for feelings and issues.

Among the tools to be used: video feedback, movement processes, breathwork, and dyadic communication activities. Reading Conscious Loving (Bantam) before the workshop is highly recommended.

Introduction to Vipassana Meditation
James Baraz
Vipassana (Insight) meditation is the practice described by the Buddha for developing wisdom, compassion, and peace. Vipassana, "to see things clearly," means being mindful of what is actually happening in the present moment. Using the breath, body sensations, thought, and emotions as objects of attention, we can learn to be fully awake and bring a balanced awareness to all aspects of our lives.

Through vipassana meditation we experience the nature of reality as continual change. When we see that all phenomena are impermanent, we can begin to let go of clinging to the pleasant or avoiding the unpleasant. We are then more capable of meeting each situation with spontaneity, fearlessness, and love. Meditation also teaches us to see in each moment the interconnectedness of all things. Our hearts open to a natural expression of compassion and kindness.

Participants will be introduced to this method of meditation practice and the principles on which it is based. There will be periods of silent sitting and walking meditation, as well as discussion. As we bring attention to all of our activities at Esalen, we will continue to develop mindfulness through the weekend. This will provide a foundation for applying vipassana practice to everyday life.

C. E. credit is available for nurses; see pages 50-51.

Sanctuary
David Schiffman & Susan Kuttner
This workshop is designed for people who are facing change. It will be a time to pause and step away from the deadlines, demands, distractions, and interruptions of everyday life.

Together we will create a mood of sanctity, balance, and peace for reflecting and acting on our own deepest concerns. It will be a chance to knowledge and restore our most essential personal resources.
Men and women often use language for different reasons and consequently misunderstand each other. Many men converse to determine who’s in charge — who’s one-up and one-down. Women, on the other hand, create intimacy by talking. Understanding men and women’s differing conversational styles is a crucial first step to bridging the gender gap.

This workshop will use information and practices from linguistics, Eastern philosophy, systems theory, and critical thinking. Using discussion, demonstration, and role-play, participants will explore certain skills that can help bring men and women together:

- Sending clear, concise messages that invite cooperation
- Sharing feelings that are difficult to express and still maintaining good will
- Improving listening skills even in tough situations
- Identifying assumptions men and women make when trying to satisfy their own and each other’s needs

The goal of the workshop will be to help individuals better identify communication “hot spots” and learn how to constructively work them out. This process can also help you discover some truths about yourself. $380

Quantum Reality

Nick Herbert

More than 50 years ago Werner Heisenberg and his colleagues discovered a way of thinking about the physical world that has been immensely successful at dealing with natural phenomena at all scales from quark to Big Bang. Quantum theory, in the words of physicist Heinz Pagels, seems to be the Universe’s “cosmic code,” the correct language, or a dialect of that language, in which nature by humans can be fruitfully addressed.

Participants will examine aspects of the physical world that have been rendered transparent by this new language as well as mysteries left unsolved and explore possible applications of quantum thinking to other areas such as psychology and human relationships. Of particular interest is what quantum thinking might add to the issues of spontaneity, our perception of other people, and new models for human connectedness.

Movement and Touch

Randy Cherner

Out beyond ideas of wrongdoing and rightdoing, there is a field. I’ll meet you there. —Rumi

Life is movement, and movement is the essence of what it means to be alive. Whether attending to very subtle and refined movements, or everyday movements like getting in and out of a car, a fundamental shift in perception is required. The more we are able to refine our sensitivity to movement and attend to how we move, the more we experience the deeper dimensions of both our physical and spiritual life. The development of one’s palpation and movement skills are interwoven with the development of one’s awareness, perception, and intuition.

Life is ever changing; impermanence underlies our very existence. Aikido, Feldenkrais, and Cranial Work will guide our explorations into the domain of ever-changing life. . . $740

Unlocking our Prisons:

Lessons on Freedom and Forgiveness

Edith Eva Eger

Each of us is locked in our own prison — prisons that have been built from guilt, shame, fear, grief, and many other emotions. Forty years after being a prisoner at Auschwitz, Dr. Eger returned there and realized that on a deep level she had never really been set free. Freedom, she discovered, was a complicated experience that involved letting go of guilt and shame, the fear of being truthful, and the comfort of being a victim.

This workshop will help participants explore the obstacles that have taken away an inner sense of freedom. It will be a “time-out” to acknowledge what those obstacles are and make an attempt to integrate them into the whole of your life.

Participants will try to give these experiences a place where they don’t “pathologize,” but de-mythologize their psychological existence. Main themes will include: the need for self-acknowledgment and self-examination, dealing with guilt and shame, taking stock of your life and where you want to go, and the responsibilities that freedom entails. There will be lectures, discussions, and some experiential work. $740

Proprioceptive Writing:

Demystifying the Creative Process

Linda Trichner-Metcalf & Tobin Simon

“Proprioception” is a physiological term for kinesthetic sensation — feelings that originate in the body’s interior. Proprioceptive Writing is a method through which inner intelligence is stimulated; meaning is approached through feeling. The originators of this method will lead participants in an experiential exploration of a simple yet richly subtle method of writing that demystifies the initial stages of the creative process.

Proprioceptive Writing is practiced to music in 25-minute sessions under stress-free conditions, either in groups or alone. This method tries to take the emphasis off writing and focus on the experience of inner hearing, activating the auditory imagination — the key to emotion and path toward feeling. Once the participant relaxes into a listening stance, their psychological space expands and they can begin to speak through their writing with simplicity and strength. Writing becomes textured as well as cathartic. Because this process releases the writer from the painful pressure to produce form, it feels fluent, like meaning in motion. It lets you enter your own mind and forget the world.

This workshop is valuable for people who are seeking a form of written expression, a creative ritual or meditative discipline, and also for those who desire increased focus and personal meaning in their lives. $740

Experiencing Psychic/Intuitive Abilities

Anne & Jim Armstrong

Their experience with thousands of workshop participants over the past 27 years has led Anne and Jim Armstrong to believe that everyone is intuitive — that intuition is part of human-kind’s standard equipment. The goal of this workshop is to have everyone experience their own innate intuitive ability, using it at will, on demand. This will be accomplished through exercises and meditation, with a minimum of discussion in order to allow each individual to recognize his or her own particular style of perception, and to trust the intuitive input one receives. Anne will use her intuitive abilities developed over the past 30 years to guide the participants in arriving at useful, accurate data.

The spiritual and ethical aspects of the intuitive/psychic process will also be addressed, as well as the leaders’ belief that intuition development is the gateway to divine wisdom, and should be the outgrowth of a healthy spiritual practice. We will demystify the intuitive/psychic process, and encourage participants to use it in all areas of their lives — personal, professional, and spiritual. Real life situations presented by participants will be selected for psychic-intuitive practice.

Singing Gestalt: Solo or Duet

Nancy Kaye Lunney

“Singing Gestalt” is singing about yourself, who you are, what you feel, who you’d like to be. “Singing Gestalt” is about being yourself in front of other people without judging how well you sing. “Singing Gestalt” is not about performance. It is about contacting and feeling and expressing.

Come alone or bring someone who is important to you, perhaps a lover, friend, a parent, someone with whom you’d like to communicate in a different way things you’ve expressed before and possibly things you’ve never said. If you wish, bring photographs of significant people in your life, past or present.

If the idea of getting up and singing in front of other people terrifies you more than anything else, this workshop is for you. If you’ve been too shy to try, this is your chance. If the idea of getting up and singing in front of other people terrifies you more than anything else, this workshop is for you. If you’ve been too shy to try, this is your chance.

Some guided imagery and gestalt may be used. Accompaniment and lots of music are provided. But the workshop is really about you — singing.

Keeping a Good Relationship Alive

Gerald Smith

How to be close and vulnerable as partners, yet separate and free to grow as individuals, is a major dilemma in keeping a good relationship alive. Because each partner continues to change this dilemma is never quite resolved, but can be dealt with in ways that add to the aliveness in the relationship.

During the weekend much of the participants’ time will be spent with their partners (separate from other couples). Verbal, non-verbal, and written exercises to enhance openness, support, and affection will be used, as well as developing skills that help resolve differences in ways that do not produce “scar tissue.” And, since playing is an essential part of keeping a relationship alive, there will be exercises to rekindle the imagination and the willingness to play together.

Limited to 12 couples $380 per participant

Life as Art: Art as Life.

A Workshop with Wes (Scoop)

Nisker & Nina Wise

Most of us spend our days concerned with the grocery list of life’s demands, paying the bills, keeping the gas tank filled, maintaining our hairdos and boiling the water for pasta. But just below the surface of our polite and upright lives, lurks the living room dances, the singing poet in the shower, and the story-telling fool. The Hindus call life “leila,” the spirit of the gods. This workshop is about stepping onto the playing field. We will lift the serious veil of purpose and meaning so that our true nature, which is inherently playful, can emerge. Give up on self-transformation, forget about being politically correct or spiritually advanced, this is a come-as-you-are party!

Using stories from our lives, we will make art in a safe and supportive environment. Participants will be guided in vocal and movement exercises, theater games, storytelling, and imaginative meditations. We will create performances for and with one another by allowing the characters within us to have a voice; we will turn life into art. Bring your lipstick, your tutu, your cowboy boots, your smoking jacket, your worst memories, your favorite dance steps, and your bag of confetti.

The Political Psyche:
Merging Psychology with Politics

Andrew Samuels

An inner journey and a desire to make something practical out of passionate political convictions are linked projects. It is often said that “the personal is political,” and we could add, conversely, that “the political is personal.” This should mean that psychotherapists and psychologists become involved in politics as an ordinary part of their normal working lives. But, unfortunately, this has not happened. The clinical office has become insulated from the political world and remains an isolated experience for both the practitioner and the client.

British Jungian psychoanalyst Andrew Samuels proposes a radical and original engagement of psychology with politics. Through the framework that he proposes, the clinical office can become a bridge between psyche and world rather than a source of isolation of psyche from the world. Innovative experiential exercises will be incorporated with seminar-style presentation and discussion for a lively exploration of such themes as:

- The political development of the person
- The father’s body: a political reading
- The depth psychology of the market economy
- The political clinic: countertransference and politics
- Political problems of the mythopoetic men’s movement

Participants will also work in small groups, pairs, or in active imagination.

Advanced Trigger Point I and Esalen Massage
Arthur Munyer & Esalen Massage Practitioners

The human body is a rich source of information and intelligence. Trigger point, the movement of myofascial tissue through soft, deep contact with pressure points, and Esalen massage are methods of working with the body that can help the practitioner contact areas of tension, chronically troubled areas, toxins, and trauma from connective tissue. This workshop will combine these techniques, along with joint release, Tai Chi, and studies in anatomy.

The group will also address issues such as burnout, nurturing, creativity, and peer support for those who have chosen a demanding profession. It is especially suggested for body workers, physicians, physical therapists, chiropractors, and other health care practitioners who want to expand their hands-on skills.

Courage
Joyce Frazee

In the mouth of the dragon there are many jewels. — Buddhist proverb

For some of us it takes courage just to live our daily lives. Every day we awaken to face the demons in our lives — demons that come in many forms: perfectionism, guilt, avoidance, shame, despair, failure. Time passes and we become skillful at living despite the constant awareness that these demons are preventing us from experiencing the fullness of life. Their existence drains our energy and limits our joy and freedom. But getting close to them, allowing ourselves to confront them, is very difficult to do.

This week will give us an opportunity to find the courage to face our demons. Participants will be encouraged to look at the things in their lives that are difficult to face and will be given support to help recognize and confront them. This will be done through gestalt practice, dream work, and bioenergetics. Drawing, dance, and meditation may also be used to recover the jewels from the dragon. $740

Handwriting: A Path Inward
Vimala Rodgers

Using handwriting as a tool, this workshop will help give participants a more expansive view of themselves and a broader means of self-expression. Although our hand moves the pen with explicit intentions, it is our belief system within the alphabet by experiencing each letter as a unique neurological pattern. We will do visualizations, left and right-handed writing, and touch on the meaning of the alphabet by experiencing each letter as a sacred symbol that reflects a part of us. From this perspective, participants can learn to identify their own limiting beliefs and attitudes, and use their handwriting as a tool to help heal, transform, and move beyond them. Non-intrusive yet challenging, the transformational process is truly in the hands of the writer.

Weekend of November 5–7

The Toltec Seers: The Legacy of Don Juan
Florinda Donner, Taisha Abelar & Carol Tiggs

This rare event is an opportunity to study with practitioners from one of the world's most mysterious spiritual traditions. The books of Carlos Castaneda, Florinda Donner, and now Taisha Abelar have changed the way an entire generation thinks and perceives the world.

Their ancient tradition, sometimes called Toltec sorcery, originated in pre-Conquest Central American shamanism. It includes teachings on Seeing, Dreaming, Stalking, Intent, and the discipline of Warriorship. Practitioners begin to see the universe in a new way, one that cultivates personal power and presents the potential for unlimited freedom.

Anthropologist Florinda Donner completed an apprenticeship in Toltec sorcery with the renowned don Juan Matus (discussed in the works of Carlos Castaneda). She is the author of Being in Dreaming, The Witch's Dream, and Shabono. Taisha Abelar, author of The Sorcerers' Crossing, is a martial artist and scholar who also apprenticed with don Juan. Carol Tiggs is the mysterious "Nagual Woman" referred to in the books.

They will be assisted by colleagues from their tradition, the two "Chac Mools." The weekend is a combination of teaching lectures and practical work, yet the work itself is unpredictable. You will be participating in several sorceric movements which are designed to revitalize and replenish one's energy.

Please note: Photographs, videos, or audio recordings are not permitted at any time during this workshop. $380

Sensory Awareness: Awake, Tune-In & Unfold
Charlotte Selver

Some forty years ago Charlotte Selver’s teacher, Elsa Gindler, began exploring the natural potential of the human being. The work that evolved was an approach through a disciplined practice, involving the person as total organism. Gindler's innovative methods very often unearthed, liberated, and cultivated abilities and sensitivities which her students had never been conscious of possessing.

In the process of "awakening", one's neuromuscular and perceptive energies become altered, leading to greater movability, both psychologically and physically, and to a fuller use of the senses and intuitive powers. In order for this to occur, a deeper peace is cultivated so that sensations can become clearer, and rigidities, pressures, and preconceptions can gradually dissolve. In becoming "tuned in" by another person, or by a task or given situation, powers arise and come into play which correspond exactly to the demands of the occasion. This calls for permissiveness, subtle reactiveness, and openness to the moment.

With the cultivation of these functions, our lives can unfold in a far richer and more responsive way than what we are used to. We can restore the delight of ever-new experiencing, which was our birthright in childhood, but lost. A heightened sense of well-being in your life: $380

Beyond Childhood

Elliot Waker Aronson & Gabriele Hilberg

Most of us have unfulfilled longings for recognition from our parents. If only our father had acknowledged us, had expressed more warmth and affection, our path would have been easier. If our mother had only loved us unconditionally, had comforted us and supported us in our feelings, our life would be more harmonious. When parents fail to satisfy our needs, we develop longings that can interfere with our ability to live in the moment and form satisfying relationships.

This workshop can help participants identify what is hoped for in the father/son and mother/daughter relationship, and see how these longings can make the quest to become a man or a woman very difficult. Moving beyond parental ties and habitual disappointment can make us available to rich learning experiences from the collective unconscious. By tapping into other resources in the human experience, we can transcend the limitations of our childhood.

Fantasy and group process will be used to gain insights into our personal history and myths. $380

Week of November 7–12

Authentic Movement

Tina Stromsted

Our bodies form our closest link to the unconscious, providing avenues for deep and lasting change. "Authentic Movement" is a meditative form of dance influenced by the depth psychology of C. G. Jung. Through moving and witnessing each other move, participants will explore their own inner dance, finding freedom of expression while healing wounds and uncovering images of the self that may have locked them into painful or dissatisfying ways of living. Body-related issues, unresolved developmental material, preverbal memories, and transpersonal experience may emerge, leading toward integration and wholeness.

Designed for mental health professionals, artists, and those interested in personal growth, this experiential process assists participants in bridging body and psyche through expressive movement. Offering a structure within which natural movement can bloom and be nurtured, it allows individuals to discover ways to engage their creativity and make soulful self-contact.

C. E. credit is available for nurses; see pages 50-51. $740

Gestalt and Sensory Awareness

Charlotte Selver & Seymour Carter

Both gestalt and sensory awareness are concerned with finding a connection to our existence which is unconditioned by the shadows of our analytical mind, or the habitual cliches of our personality. It is an attempt to discover what it means to be "tuned in" and present for our own life and the way we live it.

By working with both practices, the leaders will help participants explore the nature of immediacy, its potency and potential. $740

Body, Heart, and Soul

Paul & Niyaso Christine Carter

This workshop explores the many aspects of sexual life, with the objective of helping to heal old wounds, letting go of restrictive programs, dissolving fears, and becoming free to appreciate your own sensual-sexual nature. The five days are structured as a series of initiations beginning with conception and going through childhood, puberty, adolescence, into the mature union of sexual energy and open-hearted love. The goal of the workshop will be to help bring back into your life:

- A heightened sense of well-being in your body
- The ability to communicate without fear
- Deeper intimacy in your relationships

When we are free to appreciate our sexual aliveness, when our sexual energy is integrated with the energy of our heart, and when we can let our bodies, hearts, and souls experience their own natural flow, true intimacy can happen in our lives. Touching this space is not only a delight, it can also transform every aspect of our lives. $740

Rekindling the Spirit in Work and Love

Howard Schechter & Barbara Lee

"Rekindling the Spirit" can help you integrate who you are with what you do. Through a series of creative exercises, as well as group and individual work, this workshop will encourage your natural vitality to emerge so you can experience yourself in a more authentic way from the deeper dimensions of the self.

Participants will explore their blocks to finding deeper satisfaction in both work and love. Through the use of specific exercises, participants will strive to experience a greater sense of purpose and increased emotional strength and healing. The method designed by the leaders is often more effective than narrowly defined vocational approaches or static formulae for dealing with relationships and work situations.

If you are beginning a new career or relationship, in transition, or dissatisfied with the quality of work or intimacy in your life, this workshop can help you explore new pathways to successful and meaningful relationships. Participants find they seldom need to make radical shifts in their lives. Subtle, inner adjustments of attitude, identity, and perspective can create greater satisfaction and clearer vision.

Healing from Sexual Abuse: A Seven-Day Intensive for Survivors

Carolyn Braddock & Guest Staff

Most survivors have been told to keep their abuse a secret and as a consequence become silent about their experience. Our bodies may learn to express the experience, yet our emotional voices remain quiet.

Through breath, sound, and movement, participants will learn what it means to have a voice, and to express that voice. Attention will be paid to ways in which sexual abuse/assault is carried in the body/mind, how it affects flashbacks and dissociation, old messages (self-destructive beliefs), addictions, and the ability to let go. Since the body was where the abuse occurred, we will focus on body-oriented healing. The leader will create an atmosphere in which healing does not become a struggle. It will be gentle, sensitive, and friendly.

Participants will learn and practice specific tools for wholeness. Humor, energy awareness, gestalt, role-playing, meditation, Tai Ji, and play will be used, as well as sessions that focus on feelings concerning sexuality, relationships, touch and intimacy, and accepting new patterns. New ways of creating support and phasing back gently will be discussed. This will be a week of safety, exploration, and integration. Individual work within the group will be possible.

ties for healing are abundant once fathers and daughters move beyond blame and denial. Participants will explore:

- The father-daughter relationship as a drama beginning with an adult father and baby girl; one that goes back in time to include the father's childhood as well;
- Issues of power, sexuality, emotional expression, and conflicts in values;
- Ways of healing, forgiving, and moving on to a mutually rewarding relationship.

Fathers and daughters, either alone or as pairs, are welcomed to celebrate the joys of the father/daughter relationship, reckon with unanswered questions, and acknowledge, feel, and work on healing the wounds and losses. $380

The Doors of Compensation℠

Michael Kramer & Paule Marx

In the course of our daily lives we accumulate many tensions — meeting deadlines, dealing with our work environment, our relationships, and our internal needs. These tensions accumulate and eventually need to be resolved. In the Arica theory, designed by Oscar Ichazo, these tensions are released through 9 Doors of Compensation. These 9 Doors are closely related to the nine ego fixations of the enneagon. For example, there is a relationship between the ego fixation of the over "justice-maker" and the corresponding door of compensation of cruelty.

Participants will examine and clarify their experiences in all 9 Doors — cruelty, gluttony, panic, phobias, crime, over-exertion, psychosomatic illness, toximania, and sensuality. They will begin to recognize three distinct degrees of compensation across the four realms of life experience: the physical, emotional, intellectual, and spiritual.

As we learn to observe our own psyche without judgment, our internal tensions begin to relax. The recognition of habitual modes of behavior is in itself a change of awareness. With a more developed sense of fair and accurate self-observation, we can generate a positive arc of energy that directly benefits our evolution.

Meditation, theater games, group work, breathing and movement exercises, as well as enneagon theory, will all be part of the workshop.

Ecopsychology

Theodore Roszak & Betty Roszak

The urgent need to discover our bond with the living planet radically changes our psychological priorities. Ecopsychology is a new approach to therapeutic theory and practice that seeks to address the anguish of what Theodore Roszak calls the "ecological unconscious," the voice of the Earth within us. Ecopsychology's goal is a new definition of sanity that goes beyond what Robinson Jeffers called "man apart" to what is boundlessly greater: the "transhuman magnificence" of the natural world.

Drawing upon The Voice of the Earth, Theodore Roszak's latest book, this workshop will review the relevance of Freud, Jung, Gestalt, humanistic psychology, and other schools of therapeutic thought to the environmental crisis of our time and to ecopsychology.

Through poetic soundtexts and discussions, Betty Roszak will present the ancient tradition of the "Earthbody" in the light of recent scientific discoveries and the new cosmology. She writes: "Our emerging cosmological vision requires an enlargement of our capacity to listen to the planet, to feel our kinship with the nonhuman. Through the experience of art, we can awaken the organic imagination that allows us to hear the transhuman speaking to us."

Transition and Renewal
David Schiffman & Susan Kuttner

This workshop is designed for people who are contemplating major changes in career, relationship, place of living, or spiritual orientation. The objective will be to examine what personal perspectives and resources can help us through the process of transition in a thorough, honest, and heartfelt way.

These five days are an opportunity to gather strength and clarity for creating simple, effective solutions for dealing with change and uncertainty. It will combine:

- Emotional clearing work — simple ways to maintain a mood of self-acceptance and personal clarity; methods for cultivating the emotional strength and integrity we need to express ourselves freely; taking risks effectively;
- Physical atunement — practices using movement and massage to restore and nourish ourselves; re-experiencing the physical roots of our own playfulness;
- Unraveling the mysteries of the spirit — using poetry, prayer, music, ritual, and ceremony to mark the passages we move through as we grow older.

The pace will be gentle and restorative with ample time to consider each individual's dreams, desires, and dilemmas. We will approach the process of transition with an open-mind and buoyant spirit.

The Subtle Art of Meditation
David Streeter

The experience of insight, tranquility, inner strength, and aliveness can be found within our everyday life through the ancient art of meditation.

This workshop will approach traditional meditation practice in an unusual way. In our retreat atmosphere we will prepare the body-mind for silent listening with fluid movement from the martial arts and yoga. We will incorporate breathing methods (Prana-Yama) and energy work with Zazen (sitting meditation). Other activities will include a silent listening hike in the wilderness, group meditation in a nearby contemplative monastery, and Zazen at our new meditation center nestled close to a waterfall.

This approach to the subtle practice of meditation through the body can inspire the student to discover his or her rich interior life and that crystal clear still point described so well in every spiritual tradition.

Laying on of Hands
Maria Lucia Sauer Hollomon

This workshop will explore various methods of contacting our spiritual natures as a process of working with the subtle energy body.

Maria Lucia, a longtime student of Native American and Brazilian methods of shamanic healing, will demonstrate the power of the natural forces and their use in healing, as well as practical methods of using the hands as instruments for physical, emotional, and spiritual healing.

Cosmic Conspiracy:
A Game of Enlightenment
Robert Anton Wilson

Robert Anton Wilson writes: "Based on my psychological works and science-fantasy novels, this Game may shake the foundations of your world. When you enter the portals of Chapel Perilous, you will be given a deceptive Cover Story and a Real Identity — which is also fiction and exists only for the duration of the Game (if you're lucky). Thus, every participant is a liar — and you can't be too sure about the leader either. In regular sessions, I will lecture on such concepts as the presentation of the self in everyday life, the social creation of reality, the Game element in behavior, for between sessions you will have to deal with these abstract concepts in very concrete ways as spies, criminals, government agents, and extraterrestrials, as Cosmic Forces of Good and Evil attempt to lure you into their plots and counter-plots.

Relationship Intensive for Sexual Abuse Survivors and/or Partners
Carolyn Braddock & Guest Staff

The objective of this workshop is to help release participants from the "victim" position in relationships, both verbally (what is spoken) and nonverbally (what the body speaks). Focus will be on the areas and dynamics in relationships which are most commonly affected by sexual abuse and how they can become barriers to intimacy. These include: body image, sexuality, trust, establishing clear boundaries, and taking responsibility for the kind of relationships you want to create. Survivors often have great difficulty sharing what they think and feel because old patterns have prohibited them from "telling secrets" and expressing themselves emotionally.

Participants will explore new ways of being emotionally honest and "feeling" their experiences, and work on developing new patterns that empower relationships. Using breath, sound, and movement, the group will role-play and use video and experiential exercises to demonstrate new patterns of reacting and relating. The goal will be to develop healthy ways of creating safety, trust, and aliveness in close relationships. Gestalt, body work, creative cognitive work, humor, and play will also be used.

Please Note: This workshop is for couples and singles, and professionals who counsel.

Will you spot the CIA assassin before you're 'killed' and removed from the Game? If you do get 'killed,' what will happen in Rebirthing before you can enter the Game with a new Ego? As you deal with these increasingly urgent questions, you will also have to decide if this "Game" is teaching you social psychology, mysticism, agnosticism, paranoia, or if it's just a Game after all.

Relationships:
Letting Go — Moving On
Mary Goldenson (Devarani) & Gustavo Rabin

For one human being to love another: that is perhaps the most difficult of all our tasks, the ultimate test and proof, the work for which all the other work is but preparation. —Rilke

The fabric of our lives is made up of relationships. All of life's relationships will be the focus of this workshop: family, friends, lovers, co-workers, partners.

Often beliefs, defenses, fears, and emotions about past relationships continue into our present relationships and keep us from spontaneous feelings of love, trust, and joy. The goal of this workshop is to experience these patterns and create new ways to relate in the moment to ourselves, others, and our work. This workshop can help you:

• Find out how your relationships mirror you;
• Get a clearer picture of what you want and how to get it;
• Examine ways you sabotage yourself;
• Learn more about how others see you;
• Learn practical tools and knowledge that will help create empowered relationships.

The Power of Voice
Arthur Samuel Joseph

This workshop introduces a method called Vocal Awareness, which includes vocalizing, sound meditation, movement, song study, and development of the speaking voice as a means of deepening contact with the self. Participants will work individually and in groups exploring breathing, toning, a capella, and accompanied vocalizing with poetry, sonnets, and songs.

Vocal Awareness is an art form that addresses in precise ways how language affects the brain. It is now well-known in the field of psychoneuroimmunology that endorphins are released by the brain in response to verbal cues and visual imagery. Research also points to a strong correlation between language, breath, and psychophysical response. Knowing this, developing one's own language becomes a means for self-integration.

The aim of this workshop is to explore the voice as metaphor, to tap into issues of self-expression and self-esteem, and to have fun while developing vocal abilities. It is valuable for lay people and professionals alike, and is open to beginners through advanced. Tape recorders are required.

Loving Presence:
Psychotherapy as Spiritual Practice
Ron Kurtz

True love is no game of the faint hearted and the weak. It is born of strength and understanding. — Meher Baba

How do we become full human beings? Where do we find the strength for "true love," and how do we develop "true love," the kind of presence that tells clients, "nevertheless there is meaning?" How do we express all this first as qualities we bring to relationship and finally as method and technique? In what ways is psychotherapy basically a spiritual discipline?

We will approach these questions using the wisdom of Buddhism and Taoism and the teaching methods of Hakomi Body-Centered Psychotherapy. The emphasis will be on discovery, particularly the discovery of how we do what we do by being who we are. We will also study how the images and energies which give rise to this way of being are evoked, nourished, and sustained.

The work will be experiential, with short talks, exercises, and demonstrations. And of course we will be laughing, singing, dancing, and otherwise conducting ourselves with love and joy.

A Weekend with Seymour Carter

Everyone has unused capacities for further personal development. When these capacities are recognized and given attention, a natural force is released which, like a tide, can carry the individual to a higher level of ability and action. Fritz Perls taught how to recognize the force of avoided issues in dealing with blocked energies. When unfinished issues are confronted and assimilated, it is possible to feel potent and in charge of one's life.

In this workshop, participants will deal with these issues by examining the influence of the inner dialogue on thoughts and the nature of impasse, as well as tendencies within themselves toward psychological completion and well-being. The basis of this work is the gestalt method, supported by studies in various body disciplines, including sensory awareness, bioenergetics, and aikido. Each participant's process of development will be honored, encouraged, and treated as unique.

Giving Values a Voice: Marketing in the New Paradigm
Terry Mandel

People are hungrier than ever for genuine human contact. In spite of the progress being made in business to respond to that need, marketing still rings mostly false. Even people committed to running businesses that reflect their inner convictions often use approaches that play on people’s fantasies and fears—or they avoid marketing entirely.

When we align our attitudes and actions with our values and vision, however, marketing becomes a vehicle for transformation as much as for information. Freed from the stigma of how others use or abuse it, marketing offers us the power to give voice to that which most inspires us.

In this experiential workshop, we will use storytelling, guided meditation, and individual, partnered, and group process to:

- uncover beliefs, attitudes, and assumptions about what we have to do to be successful;
- explore a new paradigm of marketing that values both transactions and relationships;
- identify audiences most receptive to our offerings and how to reach them most effectively;
- turn our messages into magnets rather than hooks;
- challenge the myth of competition; and
- learn to successfully promote ourselves in a way that is consistent with our individual and organizational style, values, and intentions.

Highly experiential, this workshop is appropriate for entrepreneurs, consultants, healing professionals, artists, and others who want to improve the quality of their professional relationships.

Conscious Health Communication (CHC): A New Model for Ultimate Aliveness
Richard Helfant & Robert Corff

Thoughts in your mind have made you what you are and thoughts in your mind will make you what you become. — Fonder

Do you want to live a healthier, more empowering life? A new approach has been developed to make this possibility available to everyone. The Conscious Health Communication (CHC) model provides the tools to re-energize your sense of self, your body, your stress coping skills, and helps you prepare for a healthier future. Health can be defined as the full, free flow of vital life energy throughout the mind and body. This energy is affected by one’s internal and external communication. An unacknowledged inner voice can exist which controls the forces for health and vitality, or sickness and fatigue. This inner voice often contains strong beliefs about your body’s well-being. The body may respond to these messages with either enhanced energy and vigor or by constraining, cutting down, and blocking off.

This workshop will provide an exploration of your own CHC. Through simple exercises, participants will re-awaken a healthy flow of energy throughout their internal and external worlds. Experiential techniques will be used to help restore a sense of power, vigor, and control over your body/mind, and unlock your ability to achieve a higher level of ultimate aliveness.

New tools for coping with stress, eating habits, and organizational style, values, and intentions will be explored.

Body Rejuvenation

Dub Leigh & Audrey Nakamura

The goal of this workshop is to start rejuvenating the body, mind, and spirit. A fast way to do this is to work the body. Transform the old, hard, short, nonresilient tissue into soft, lengthy, bouncy tissue free from trauma, stress, and pain. Work on changing the despondent, hopeless, negative, grouchy person into an enthusiastic, positive, upbeat one. The recipe for beginning to rejuvenate the body will be demonstrated in one session to the participants. Participants are asked not to work body work outside of class until the workshop is over.

A Weekend with Ilana Rubenfeld

This workshop will provide an introduction to the Rubenfeld Synergy™ Method, a healing system that uses gentle touch, movement, gestalt practice, creative imagination, music, and humor. Memories and emotions stored in the body can result in energy blocks and imbalances. Through exercises designed to contact, release, transform, and balance these cellular patterns, participants can freely explore their innate healing potential. The atmosphere is one of acceptance, caring, and laughter, encouraging participants to move toward integration, empowerment, freedom, and new possibilities.

Participants are asked not to receive body work outside of class until the workshop is over.

Introduction to Focusing

Melanie Jones

Focusing is a step-by-step process for gaining entry into a physically felt intelligence called "body wisdom" or "body knowing." This method evolved from research conducted by Eugene Gendlin and his associates at the University of Chicago. They wanted to determine what leads to successful outcomes in psychotherapy and found that success cannot be predicted by either the personality of the client or the orientation of the therapist, but instead is related to the client's awareness of felt experience in the body. They also found that this awareness can be cultivated. The Focusing method developed by Gendlin teaches this awareness of felt experience.

This workshop will cover the six steps outlined in Eugene Gendlin's Focusing, which participants are encouraged to read before the workshop. Participants will be introduced to a holistic way of paying attention to themselves and others by creating an inner climate of gentleness, friendliness, allowing receiving, being with, touching, listening, and waiting. This differs from the usual outside climate of forcing, pushing, shoving, and demanding. Both positive and negative experiences as they are carried in the body will be explored, without the usual response of being overwhelmed by feelings or running away from them.

Focusing's applications extend far beyond its use in psychotherapy. It enhances other methods of change or growth and is used in education, business, and work with the terminally ill. The Focusing process will be experienced through demonstrations, and working in partnerships with supervision and feedback.

Energy, Resources, Environment, Development, and Security

Amory Lovins

Energy policy is well along in a revolution which the leader's 1976 Foreign Affairs article helped to launch. That paper redefined the problem as not simply how to get more energy, of any kind, from any source, at any price, but rather how to find just the amount, type, scale, and source that would do each desired task at least cost. This end-use/least-cost approach has proven fruitful in examining a wide range of other issues too, ranging from efficient use of water and minerals to the interlinked problems of sustainable, economic development (from local to global), redefining security, rethinking agriculture, and protecting the earth.

Understanding the links between these subjects often makes it possible to solve many problems at once. Efficient energy use, for example, can simultaneously help the poor, displace insecure (or all) sources of oil, abate global warming and acid rain, stem nuclear proliferation, save wildlands, cleanse air and water, create wealth, and preserve the interests of our descendants.

This seminar will begin with energy — chiefly its efficient use and renewable supply — both as factual background and as a conceptual launching pad for related issues. It will then branch out in the directions of most interest to participants, emphasizing interconnections and a vision across boundaries between various disciplines. Modest acquaintance with numbers and with technical economic fundamentals will be helpful, though not essential, as the seminar is equally concerned with social, political, and ethical issues and with practical methods of implementation — drawing on the participants' diverse perspectives and experience. $380

The Core Self: The Heart of the Matter

Ron Alexander

Resources for healing such as spontaneity, curiosity, trust, creativity, and joy, are found in the core self. Time also heals and helps activate these resources. This workshop will assist participants — especially health professionals — in their process of healing and acquiring new experiences and skills in microanalysis of mind/body process. Participants will be encouraged to cultivate a friendly relationship with their unconscious in order to heal old patterns and create healthier pathways for new learning connected to living, loving, working, and relating.

The goals of this work will be to enhance self-esteem; to become free of trauma and self-images of the past; to become conscious in the present moment; to communicate well; to become empowered as a leader; and to develop a cohesive personal vision. The tools we will use include: gestalt practice, self-psychology, metaphor, insight (Vipassana) and Zen meditation, breathing skills, guided imagery, dream work, deep music, group process, and immersion into nature.

Focusing, Dream Work, and Interactional Relationships

Melanie Jones

Focusing is a step-by-step process for gaining entry into a physically felt intelligence called "body wisdom" or "body knowing." This method evolved from research conducted by Eugene Gendlin and his associates at the University of Chicago. They wanted to determine what leads to successful outcomes in psychotherapy and found that success cannot be predicted by either the personality of the client or the orientation of the therapist, but instead is related to the client's awareness of felt experience in the body. This workshop is for anyone in a helping profession, or for individuals involved in business or personal relationships. Focusing can help you become more aware of your own inner process, which in turn allows you to become more sensitive to the inner process of others. Participants will practice the focusing process called "Experiential Listening," a method of listening for the bodily felt sense in what the other is saying and responding from one's own felt sense of the situation.

There will be an introduction to Gendlin's integrative approach to dream work. Theories of Freud, Jung, Perls, and others will serve as a resource for questions and discussion.

The workshop will include demonstrations and working in partnerships with supervision and feedback. It might be a good idea to bring a partner to work with you.

Drawing and Painting

Leigh Hyams

Artwork comes straight through an open mind — and with it comes clarity of vision, increased awareness of oneself in relation to the environment, and a deepening understanding of the world of art and its meaning in one's life.

The leader's unique teaching methods help students to work fearlessly, exhilarantly, sensitively, and observantly from the very first session. Using a wide variety of art materials, many techniques and ideas about image-making will be explored. Participants will work from Esalen's natural landscape, still lifes, models, dreams, myths, fantasies, and memories.

Individual and group critiques, demonstrations, slides, and discussions of art from many cultures will be used to give the group a broader understanding of visual language. Each participant will complete a portfolio of their own drawings and paintings, and work toward developing a new sense of themselves as an artistic, creative human being.

This is a workshop for people who want to revitalize their connection with art and the environment, as well as those who have had no previous experience. The only prerequisites are curiosity about the creative process and a willingness to explore the rich possibilities inherent in the act of drawing.

Weekend of December 24-26

Improvational Wisdom: Finding the Robin Williams in You

Paula Shaw

The nature of creativity is elusive and inexplicable. Our most creative moments often seem to come from nowhere and may happen when we least expect them. Einstein's theory of relativity came to him suddenly and unscientifically, and Mozart saw many of his greatest compositions "tout ensemble," or all-at-once. At the other end of the creative spectrum, we marvel at the lightning quick humor of Robin Williams, a kind of brilliance that seems boundless. What are the conditions that put us in touch with our own creativity and brilliance, and how do we access them?

This weekend is a playful introduction to getting go of your own programmed patterns and discovering the joy of spontaneous creation. The first premise of improvational theater games (which Robin Williams claims unleashed him) is to "go in blank." Within the game structures, participants are coached to be receptive — stop, look, and listen; deny nothing; release control; let go of planning ahead. This process can help you learn to trust your own intuition, sense of humor, eloquence, and physical grace, and lets you get out of your own way to make room for exhilarating flashes of creative brilliance. The workshop is also just a lot of fun. $380

On Longing

Elliott Waker Aronson & Kim McCourt

Most of us have longed for something in our lives — a warm, communicative relationship with a parent, or brothers and sisters; deeper satisfaction with a job or career; being a parent; a fulfilling love relationship; closer ties with our friends or children.

Some of these longings might be fulfilled eventually, but others may always remain distant or elusive. In either case, it is important to recognize and explore these longings. If they remain buried and unacknowledged, the vacuum is often filled with fear and resentment. Acquiring the ability to express our longings is a path towards knowing and loving ourselves. This can open the door to living a more joyous and fulfilling life.

The purpose of this workshop is to identify and explore our deepest longings. A safe and supportive environment will be provided where participants are encouraged to make use of a variety of verbal and non-verbal techniques, including art, fantasy, and movement. $380

Spiritual Autobiography

Dan Wakefield

Participants will use drawing to evoke memories of former eras of their lives, to look at past experience in a new way, to write about it and share their stories with others. Insights from childhood and adolescence, singular experiences of their lives, and the role of a friend or mentor will provide the material for creation in pictures and words. Such re-experiencing can offer fresh understanding and appreciation of the richness of one's life; connections can emerge as the story of crucial turning points is told.

A concluding exercise will show participants how to draw a road map of their journey that can serve as a guide for continuing to write their on-going spiritual autobiography. The "right to reticence" and confidentiality will be honored in the process. The workshop offers acknowledgment and appreciation rather than criticism of writing or experience. $380

Rituals of Transformation

Paul Rebillot & Audrey Savage

People are continually approaching thresholds, transition points from one state of being to another. To live is to change. The tendency, however, is to resist change, to cling to the familiar, to remain stuck at the threshold. This tendency is the source of much stress and pain that people experience in life.

A ritual does not make a change happen. Instead, it awakens within the psyche the archetypal pattern of change; it teaches the participant how to change. By acting out the ritual, people learn, not only in their minds but in the feelings of their hearts and the movements of their bodies, the process of transformation. Rituals can both prepare people for change as it happens in the course of their lives and help heal the passages that were not completed in the past.

During this workshop, group members will look at what they need to say good-bye to in the past, and what new steps they need to take in order to cross their present threshold. Sub-groups will work together to design and enact individual rituals in order to support and help their healing process.

Just as the body can move from one position into another, so can the full being; hearts can move, minds can move. The basic tenet of ritual is that one can trust the body to show the appropriate path, that way so supported by the full being that doors seem to open before one. Joseph Campbell said that when someone can discover his or her authentic path, the way seems blessed with magic. To find this way is the work of "Rituals of Transformation." $380

Biofeedback Assisted Open Focus and Brain Wave Synchrony Training

Les Felmi & Susan Shor

Brain wave activity is directly correlated with the way one pays attention. Synchrony is associated with "in-to-it," broadscoped attention and effortless performance; desynchronized brain wave activity is associated with remote, narrow-focused attention and effortful performance. Brain wave synchrony and attention training can guide one toward an awareness that is simultaneously narrowed-in on detail, panoramic in scope, and bathed in an effortless sense of the moment.

The Open Focus methods presented in this experiential workshop support the rapid reduction of both conscious and unconscious physical and emotional stress and pain. Rather than ignoring unpleasant experience, participants will practice melting it directly, using attention skills they already possess. This method of dissolving stress and pain generates a sense of well-being and creative energy. Interested workshop participants will receive biofeedback training using an instrument that monitors brain activity from the major lobes of the brain and provides a feedback signal when whole-brain, in-phase synchrony is produced. An Open Focus tape will be provided for home practice.

Holidays inspire the desire for closeness. Give yourself the present of learning fundamental self-intimacy skills that can blossom into intimacy with others.

Week of December 26-31

Play, Spontaneity, and Performance Art

Nina Wise

The leader writes: "I read once that rats were once put in a maze with one path leading to a small room with food, another leading to a room charged with an electrical current, and a third path leading to a room with play things. The rats learned to avoid the electric shock. But the food room and the play room were equally popular. Play, it seems, is as essential to rats as nutrition."

Play is also an integral part of human culture. In tribal societies, people sing, make music, drum, dance, and tell stories as part of their daily lives. With the advent of technology and specialization, we modernized folk have forgotten how to play together. Singers sing, dancers dance, actors act, while the rest of us sit and watch.

This workshop is about remembering: remembering how to dance, how to sing, how to tell stories about our lives, how to make it up as we go along, how to be together in a way that is lively, spontaneous, and creative. The workshop will include meditation, chanting, relaxation, movement, singing, writing, dancing, and theater games. We will also do spontaneous performance with and for each other in a safe and supportive environment.

Note: Everyone is afraid of performing, even professionals. Don't let your fear stop you. It's fun, challenging, and rewarding. $740

Five-Day Massage Intensive

Kathleen O'Shaughnessy & Rita Thangaraj

This workshop is for those individuals who are just beginning to explore touch as deep communication. The central theme will be primary approaches to full-body massage, which the leaders will introduce through demonstration and experiential exchanges. Self-awareness through movement, sound, and breath will be used to enhance the senses. Discussion will offer insights into various approaches to body work and how they address both the physiological and emotional body.

C. E. credit is available for nurses; see pages 50-51.

You Can't Get Enough of What You Don't Really Want

David Hawkins

We become who we are in an interpersonal world. Our lifestyles, our personalities, and our bodies are shaped by the relational strategies we develop in response to our needs and the demands/possibilities of our early environment. As adults, we often find that these strategies contain patterns that are repetitive, uncomfortable, and self-defeating. Nevertheless, they are temporarily rewarding enough for us to pursue them in an addictive fashion. But these addictive patterns can be substitutes for ways of being that would bring us closer to what we want. We often avoid patterns that give us what we want because they can evoke our vulnerability and put us in touch with our most private shames.

A self-examining group can become a social microcosm in which we play-out and observe the addictive patterns. More importantly, it can become the source of support for us to risk being more fully ourselves, to overcome shame, and to get what we truly desire.

Participants in the workshop will:

- work together to create a climate for exploration;
- experience how the group can become a corrective lens through which to see ourselves and others more clearly;
- identify addictive interpersonal behavior patterns;
- come to appreciate the group’s extraordinary capacity to metabolize shame;
- learn to access the support needed for change.

Awakening Inner Power

Deborah Anne Medow, Mary Tesoro & Tom Elliott

Operating from the assumption that one's innate energies lie largely untapped, this group will explore alternative means of gathering inner power. Leonard Energy Training, a comprehensive system offering tools to meet the problems, pressures, and pain of everyday life situations, will be combined with gestalt to provide a foundation for personal growth and change and massage will be interwoven elements of the martial art of aikido to increase the flow of vital energy through the body, mind, and spirit. $740

Enhancing Communication Hypnotically

Paul Lounsby & Nancy Winston

Embedded in a world of our own constructions, we can become deeply identified with the patterns that recursively tune our perceptions, color our emotion, shape our ideas, and inform our action. Finding the courage to break out of these roles can create a fresh and inviting quality of relatedness.

Therapeutic techniques developed from the leaders’ training in hypnosis and psychotherapy with Milton Erickson, conceptual tools crafted from Gregory Bateson’s communication research, and advances in cognitive neuro-science and the “New Cybernetics” will all be used to help participants increase the flexibility and control they have in their interpersonal communication.

Through instruction, group interaction, playful experiments, and hypnotic inductions, the leaders will guide participants through various dimensions of the communication process. Special attention to the hypnotic relationship, recognizing individual uniqueness, utilizing conscious and unconscious awareness, and the dynamics of induction, influence, and suggestion will highlight the workshop process.

Participants will explore ways to be more responsive, more willing to enter unknown territory, and more capable of extending the range and flexibility of sensory motor, emotional, and mental controls in their communication behavior.

Group process and hypnotic experiments will focus on expanding awareness and increasing appreciation of interpersonal differences. Prerequisites include tolerance for a modicum of confusion, willingness to be a group member, a sense of humor, and a desire for novel experience.

Weekend Massage Intensive

George King & Ingrid May

Participants will be instructed in basic methods used in giving a pleasurable and beneficial massage. Fundamental elements of body work, such as breath awareness, grounding movement, quality of touch, and stress reduction will be introduced. The workshop is available to beginners as well as those who wish to brush up on their massage skills.

Renewal: New Beginnings in Midlife

Mark Gerzon

The tradition of making resolutions at the beginning of a new year reflects a deep yearning for growth throughout the life cycle. From work based on his new book about midlife entitled Coming Into Our Own, Mark Gerzon invites participants to dig more deeply into the spiritual ground in which our New Year’s resolutions may be rooted. The workshop will provide a safe, healing space in which men and women can listen to their own and each other’s stories of midlife transformation regarding work, love, health, and spiritual growth.

The purpose of the workshop, however, is to see beyond our own biographies. As in the lives of Jesus, Moses, Buddha, Mohammed, and other spiritual pathfinders, the middle years of adulthood are a time when many of us are deepening our spiritual quest. This is more than an individual quest to come to terms with growing older. It is a transpersonal rite of initiation into another stage of the human journey, into what C. G. Jung called the “second half” of life. $380

David Darling

David Darling’s magical work with late bloomers, non-prodigies, professional musicians, and “burned out” teachers has been opening hearts to the mystery of sound for the last two decades. “Music for Everyone” is an adventure into music making, rhythmic grooving, song writing, laughing, and listening.

Regardless of prior experience, this workshop will take you to a deeper, more powerful music level. Bring an instrument or play on David’s collection of world instruments. $380

Completion and Continuance

Will Schutz

The leader writes: “I want to use the celebration of New Year’s Eve to explore and experiment with several relevant ideas that fascinate me:

- ‘You must close the old door before you open the new,’ an observation of Elvin Semrad, a training analyst and my teacher for small groups
- ‘Some people grow up and others merely grow old,’ a comment from Kings Row.
- ‘Reflect on the wonderful opportunity for annual new beginnings every New Year’s eve
- ‘Muse on age and the passage of time from the perspective of a new bumper sticker, ‘I am younger now than I ever will be.’” $380
Exploring the World of Lucid Dreaming
Stephen LaBerge

Dreams are worlds of wonder, where anything imaginable can happen. Unfortunately, most of us sleep through our nightly journeys, unaware of the opportunities available. Only upon awakening do we realize that we have been dreaming.

We are not bound, however, to forever sleepwalk through our dreams. Lucid dreams are dreams in which we know we are dreaming while we’re dreaming. Lucid dreamers are fully conscious that the world they are experiencing in the dream is a mental creation, and are completely free to act in the dream without constraints.

Research has shown that people can develop the skill of lucid dreaming, and that it can profoundly affect our brains and bodies. Participants will learn techniques for inducing lucid dreams and explore its uses: self-exploration, creative will learning, and that it can provide a sense of transcendence.

The scope of the seminar will extend beyond healing, adventure, and self-integration leading to problem solving, enhancing self-confidence, and exploring its uses: self-exploration, creative will learning, and that it can provide a sense of transcendence.

Meditation and Chi Gong breathing exercises in the fresh ocean air while David Darling plays Bach on the cello. Everyone is invited to rediscover the fundamentals of creative expression and the revitalization of body, mind, and spirit through Tai Ji dancing and music.

Feeling and Innovation
Dale Cummings & Karel Samson

Discovering creative solutions in our personal and occupational lives can transform leisure and work and enliven our experience. Webster defines feeling as “the capacity to respond emotionally” and innovation as the “introduction of something new.” How these two themes interconnect will be the focus of this workshop.

Participants will use neo-Reichian methods of emotional release, exercises in creativity and innovation, role-playing, and discussion. A period of individual work in a small group setting will provide a safe environment of emotional support. As negative feelings are worked through, active creativity can emerge.

Through its focus on feelings and creativity, this workshop offers encouragement and practical ideas for reinventing personal and organizational experiences and for pursuing innovation and new (ad)ventures in daily life. $740

Mending the Fragmented Self through Soul Retrieval and Shamanic Practices
Sandra Ingerman & Carol Proudfoot-Edgar

Shamanism is the oldest spiritual system used for healing, problem-solving, and the general well-being of both the individual and the community. From a shamanic perspective, emotional and physical dis-spiritedness often results from “soul-loss,” a trauma that keeps us dissociated from life, our bodies, our relationships, and from feeling our connection with the natural world.

This workshop will involve both soul retrieval and shamanic methods for integrating retrieved parts. Workshop space is available for 12 participants who will have a private session with a workshop leader who will act in the role of the shaman to spiritually retrieve parts lost in life traumas. Workshop space is also available for others who have already had a soul retrieval done.

The major focus of the workshop involves elements of core shamanism and practices involved in the reintegration of retrieved parts. The shamanic journey method and other practices for accessing important information for one’s healing will be taught. Activities will include rituals and ceremonies focusing on “release and renewal” as each individual discovers their own personal vision of well-being. There will be an emphasis on raising and using the power of our circle for personal healing and growth.

Please bring a bandana, journal, drums, and rattles (if you have them).

Painting Experience with Michell Cassou & Stewart Cubley

It is rare for most people to use painting for its qualities of inner adventure and self-discovery, to paint purely for the process of exploration, not for the result.

The purpose of this workshop is to provide a setting to explore the self through painting — to discover in form and color a powerful tool for uncovering and dissolving blocks to emotional and spiritual expression. Participants will be given the support and stimulation to develop a natural way of painting based directly upon feeling. The work takes place in an authentic studio setting with large white surfaces to confront the creative void, along with a rich spectrum of colors and brushes. The workshop may be of interest to persons involved in a wide variety of disciplines, including art, education, counseling, and meditative practices. No prior experience in painting is necessary. Please bring a smock.

For further information about this workshop, contact: The Painting Experience Studio, 2101 20th Avenue, San Francisco, CA 94116 (415) 564-8515 (plus $30 materials fee paid directly to the leaders) $1110

Sexual Abuse Survivors:
Specific Strategies for Body, Mind &
Spiritual Healing

Carolyn Braddock

Countless numbers of children consider the exploitation of their bodies part of their formative experience. Trusted adults assault, neglect, and sexually abuse them, leaving physical and emotional scars. During sexual abuse/assault, the body is the scene of the crime. Consequently, body sensations may be blocked and a protective body belief system develops. The child learns very early to not have a voice. Focusing on body, mind, and spiritual intervention, this seminar adds new body-focused dimensions to traditional strategies in dealing with those who have experienced sexual abuse.

Professional counselors and others need special skills to work with these victims/survivors. The survivors themselves need to develop procedures to overcome the physical and emotional consequences of being abused. Seminar participants will

Practical Application of Ancient Initiatory Mysteries

Gideon Dreyer

Difficulties and obstructions tend to throw us back upon ourselves. During hard times we are often confronted with the parts of ourselves we usually try to avoid. It becomes easy to blame others for our difficulties, and we often deny what is happening in order to avoid dealing with ourselves. Difficult situations arise — that we can’t change. But what we can change is the way we react to them, and how we let them affect our lives.

Participants will examine and focus on the tendency to become immobilized when obstacles cross their path. The teachings given to neophytes during initiation rites in ancient India, Egypt, and Greece will be passed on and explored for their practical application in contemporary life. These initiation rites can help each individual reach a personal understanding of what is needed in order to react to difficult times with strength and confidence.

The workshop will focus on spiritualizing thoughts, feelings, and actions, and cultivating the will to act accordingly. In this way, external obstacles become an occasion for inner enrichment and education. The workshop itself could be considered an initiation, inasmuch as each participant can emerge from it existentially changed.

Reinventing Love

Robert Solomon & Heather Maycock Ogilvy

"Reinventing Love" is an interpersonal probe into the most highly valued of all passions, its promise and its disappointments. The workshop will emphasize the essential creativity of love and the need to express and "reinvent" an emotion that is not torn between defensive individualism and independence. We will explore the myths of love in order to find out why love goes wrong, why we choose the wrong partners, and how to choose the right one in order for love to succeed.

Chakra Integration:
A Total Approach to Health
Laurie Lioness Parizek & The Esalen Teaching Staff
This workshop addresses everyone but is of special interest to health care workers, physicians, nurses, chiropractors, bodyworkers, and those interested in developing a working knowledge of the chakra system.

Chakras are vital life-enhancing centers that have their roots in the physical body, along the spine and deep in the brain. When open, they blossom like energetic flowers. When balanced, they refine the mainstream current of energy in the central nervous system and integrate the physical, spiritual, and energetic life of each individual.

This workshop will use meditation, sound, supportive hands-on work, and sensitive touch to balance the chakras and the mainstream spinal current. The aim is to gently and consciously open the channel that connects the earth to the heavens in each one of us. Experiences will be both private and shared. There will be an emphasis on centering, grounding, and breath practices.

Gentle, energetic touch, healing visualizations, a fluid bodywork style and deep pressure point release will be explored and integrated. How each participant can use this work with clients and patients, as well as friends and family, will be a focus of the workshop.

Healthy eating patterns that nourish the spiritual as well as the physical will be discussed and encouraged. Meditation will be used throughout the week to bring serenity and a deeper personal understanding and integration of the chakras.

Participants are invited to bring their favorite musical instrument and/or personal healing tools.

Creative Aging
Cecelia Hurwich
There is no such thing as a typical experience of old age. Late life offers unique opportunities to grow on all levels — cognitive, moral, emotional, and spiritual. It can be the best and most rewarding time of life. Adapting to life’s circumstances and developing the power to influence our destiny as we age is to be vitally involved in creative aging.

The leader writes: “My ten-year longitudinal study on vitality and aging reveals four important characteristics present in creative ages: perceiving one’s life as meaningful; having close relationships with friends of all ages; continuing to grow; and maintaining one’s optimism.” During the weekend, participants will learn ways to tap into the characteristics that enhance creativity in later life. There will be a variety of experiential exercises with supportive discussion, focusing on how to incorporate these characteristics into our own aging process.

Participation in this workshop will be valuable for persons who want to explore new approaches to creative aging, as well as people dealing with aging family members and professionals working with older persons. $380

Learning the Craft of Dreamwork
Stephen Aizenstat
Dreams can be imagined as looking-glass parables, each a complex story that reflects the personality and soul of the dreamer. This weekend's program will emphasize the healing potential of dream work. In so doing, the leader will review methods of dream work that consider the personal and collective unconscious.

New methods of dreamwork which take into account the world unconscious will be described. The world unconscious is seen as a deeper and broader dimension of the psyche and is imagined to contain the subjective inner natures (and subtle body) of all phenomena. It is believed that these inner subjective properties are reflected in the images of dreams and are, at an essential level, interrelated. It is at this level of the psyche that dream images provide access to an interconnected source of healing energy. This view, grounded in modern research and ancient wisdom, has practical implications for the use of dreams in physical and psychological healing.

Participants will learn how to employ specific methods of dreamwork which honor and actualize the healing potential of the psyche. Common dream themes, nightmares, lucid dreaming, archetypal imagery, and the recurring dream will all be discussed.

Intimate Connections

Mariah Fenton Gladis

Creating stable and fulfilling relationships is a challenge that everyone faces. To be successful, human relating must be understood and accepted as an activity, an ability that requires movement, purpose, emotional capacity, and extensive contact skills. People often believe that good relating evolves naturally, but they discover in the routine of living with families, friends, and lovers that, in truth, they have not been adequately prepared to meet the demands of loving relationships.

This workshop will focus on the nature and basic requirements of healthy relationships. It will offer participants opportunities to assess their abilities and disabilities, to develop awareness, and to practice risking positive action with others. It is for anyone who has "hit the wall" in a relationship or who has experienced being stuck at some seemingly impenetrable contact boundary and wants to break through. Particularly helpful for adult children of dysfunctional families, ACAs, and human relations professionals, this experiential and didactic workshop will blend individual and group gestalt work, spiritual healing, body work, and personal metaphor.

Cross-Cultural Shamanic Practices

Angeles Arrien

Participants of this workshop will be introduced to shamanic tools from diverse cultures in order to access and empower their inner teacher, healer, visionary, and warrior. The universal healing salves of singing, storytelling, dancing, and silence will be engaged to rekindle the spirit and retrieve any soul loss.

Group members will work individually and collectively to honor ancestor spirits by releasing limiting family patterns, enhancing personal and professional power by speaking with "spirit tongue" (truth-telling), and experiencing practices that reveal internal mythology, help heal wounds, and adjust imbalances.

This week qualifies as a foundational training for the Four-Fold Way, a cross-cultural shamanic training program by Angeles Arrien.

Creating is a Joy

James Fadiman

The body and mind screen and reveal the light blazing inside us. Creating is always self-healing. Real freedom allows real creativity.

Together we will strive to maintain an open flow between ourselves and our creative projects. Mornings we will uncover what inspires you, interrupts you, defeats you, and sustains you. When we need it, we will use teaching stories and beauty-finding exercises. Afternoons we will work on our own projects, alone or together. Evenings we will share, support, and help one another pry our jewels out of our stones.

Bring projects you are stuck on, working with, or starting. Include whatever you need to do your work, be it paints and canvas, wordprocessors, or carving tools. You just might have a breakthrough.

Weekend of January 21–23

Introduction to Vipassana Meditation

James Baraz

By using the body as a reference point, we can experience boundaries energetically in addition to emotionally. Exercises done as a group or in pairs provide an opportunity to observe our patterns of inter-relating and to practice contacting our bodily intuition. These exercises, derived from the principles of aikido, enable us to train our states of attention, deepen our sense of self, and strengthen our capacity for relationships.

Participants will try to cultivate the "art of not knowing," the "power of not doing, but rather of being." Our masculine side, "the do-er" tends to overshadow our less developed feminine side — the non-active "being." There is a profound power in stillness and vulnerability awaiting our discovery.

No previous knowledge/experience of aikido is needed.

Gestalt Practice

Christine Stewart Price & Guest Leaders

This workshop is for those people who have previously taken a "Gestalt Practice" workshop and want to return to a no frills group of straight open seat work. (Please refer to the "Gestalt Practice" description of October 3-8 for more information about introductory workshops.) The group will be limited to ten participants, and each person can count on time for an individual open seat session with one of the leaders. There will be some discussion and group exercises if time allows. This workshop is designed for those participants who have already experienced the value of group work and want to benefit from open seat sessions — both their own and those of other members of the group.

Charles Muir & Caroline Muir

Few of us have been blessed with healthy childhood conditioning and education regarding the mysteries of sexual love and sexual energy. This can leave many individuals less aware and conscious about their sexuality than they are in other aspects of their lives. Tantra can transform sex into a loving meditation, putting more consciousness, energy, intimacy, joy, and love into sexual exchanges.

Participants will learn and discuss various ways to increase intimacy and passion in their relationship. Tantric meditation and ways to exchange sexual energy in a safe, non-sexual manner will also be taught in the workshop. These methods can then be practiced in a sexual way in the privacy of your own home.

This workshop is open to couples only.

Spiritual Dimensions of Healing

Elizabeth Stratton

The desire to heal and be healed is a deep need within every human being. Seeing someone we love in pain brings out the instinct to touch that person in a compassionate way. Feeling or being ill ourselves can lead us to explore both spiritual and scientific dimensions of healing that we would otherwise not be open to.

Psychic healing, with its focus on the laying on of hands, understanding the meaning of the illness, and seeing into the heart of the person who is ill, brings a spiritual dimension to healing that can be a valuable adjunct to modern medicine and its high technology.

This workshop will provide both theoretical and practical tools to awaken the healer within. Self-healing methods such as opening the energy centers (chakras), communicating with the body, and guided healing imagery will be explored to assist participants in taking charge of their own health. In addition, participants will begin to learn to work with others in a healing capacity through laying on of hands and psychic healing.

Walking the Labyrinth: Reflecting on the Spirit in Our Lives

Lauren Artress

The labyrinth is a model of spiritual cosmology that is quite unrecognizable to the modern mentality since this understanding disappeared after the acceptance of Descartes' world view and the split of the mind/body/spirit. — Keith Critchlow, Architect and expert on the sacred geometry of Chartres Cathedral.

We are pressured and rushed most of our waking hours, and consequently forget or neglect to encourage and honor our connection to the Source, the Divine, however one defines the sense of something greater than ourselves.

This contemplative weekend will be spent walking the labyrinth as a way to wind down and reflect on what we hold sacred in our lives. Walking meditation will be the central focus supported by journaling exercises and mandala drawing to review our peaks and valleys. Participants will work toward gaining perspective on the major concerns presently confronting them in their lives. $380

A Healing for Healers

Carolyn Braddock

The people we serve in the healing professions can only go as far as we're willing to go in our own healing process. Past traumas of our own sexual abuse (and/or other forms of abuse) are often triggered as we work deeply with our clients. When these events are triggered, all our relationships are affected — those with our clients, ourselves, and those close to us. In order to work most effectively and compassionately in our profession, we need to work towards clearing up our unresolved issues. This workshop will help explore the ways in which we block our own growth and healing.

Participants will work on clearing the old, unresolved issues in their lives and explore the belief systems that have acted as barriers to their own personal healing process. In doing this, a balance will be created between work and play.
Time will also be spent working on setting limits and defining clear boundaries.

Through gestalt, ritual, humor, breath, sound, movement, creative arts exercises, and case presentations, new ways of intervention and healing will be explored, both for ourselves and our clients.

Please Note: This workshop is for professionals and those in training.

Psychic Self Defense

Elizabeth Stratton

As most of us know from our own experience, working with or around people who are depressed, hostile, or anxious can affect our own moods and feelings. We are constantly affected by the emotions and thoughts of those around us, as well as by the accumulated moods of the environment in which we live and work. We can also be affected by the illnesses of people we are close to, sometimes to the point of actually manifesting their symptoms ourselves.

During this weekend we will have the opportunity to explore our psychic boundaries and discover how and when they can overflow into areas that cause emotional confusion. We will learn how to release negativity and strengthen boundaries that can help us to be less vulnerable in the future.

Partnerships of Love and Work: The Enneagram of Relationships

Helen Palmer

The logic and integrity of different styles of relating is modeled by an ancient typology called the enneagram, which identifies nine personality types and the way in which they interact. The outer study of the system correlates well with current psychological thinking, but describes optimal ways of relating rather than pathological trends. No way is better than another, but they differ radically in their point of view. At a deeper level of understanding, the preoccupations of thought and emotion that characterize each type are revealed as a continuum of experience that leads us to aspects of type such as empathy, omniscience, and love.

We will review the nine types from panels drawn from the class, and in so doing experience the styles of other seminar participants without interference from our own relationship bias. Adopting the view of a close companion breeds compassion and allows us to:

- see ourselves through the eyes of others and feel the pressure of their emotional life
- recognize those "irreconcilable differences" that are simply the result of different internal logic
- understand different views on relating
- transform our tendencies into their higher attributes

Emphasis will be on inner material, not personal process work. This is a highly interactive format. Bring your current relationship questions. This intensive can be applied as one of the prerequisites for the Enneagram Professional Training Program. Previous work with the enneagram is required. If you would like to discuss your background, contact the leader at (510) 843-7621. Workshop is limited to 40 participants.

Sports Massage

David Streeter

This workshop will focus on aspects of sports massage that prove useful in other massage modalities. The curriculum includes: anatomy, to understand the rhythmic coordination of muscles working together; cross-fiber or cross-friction massage, simple strokes that promote healthy muscle tissue; and trigger point massage, to locate and relieve sensitive and congested points in muscle bundles and tendons. Trigger point work has proven beneficial in reducing myofascial pain caused by chronic tension.

Participants will progress through a study of the entire musculoskeletal system via brief lectures, hands-on practice, and one-to-one instruction. This workshop takes a simplified approach to what is usually a complex subject and gives participants a better idea of just what lies beneath their hands, and how to more effectively communicate with the human body. It is open to all levels.

Self-Empowerment and Purification: The Farther Reaches of Gestalt Therapy

Julian Silverman

We badly need a new orientation, a new perspective," wrote Fritz Perls. "We have graduated from the infants', 'I can't help myself,' to the adults', 'I can't help myself because...' But psychology and psychiatry were never meant to be after-the-fact justifications for continuing neurotic behavior, behavior which does not permit the individual to live up to the maximum of his capabilities.

This workshop combines experiential and didactic sessions. It's primary focus is on developing a new perspective — the integration of a "purification process" with a personal psychology of empowerment. This psychology of self-empowerment is grounded in modern science and ancient wisdom.

Journey to a Conscious Partnership

Harville Hendrix & Helen Hunt

Intimate relationships between men and women are a source of emotional healing, psychological growth, and spiritual evolution. In contrast to traditional views of healing that focus on the individual, this workshop views the intimate male/female relationship as a more effective path to healing and personal self-completion. Exploring the thesis that the purpose of the unconscious in a relationship is to complete your childhood, participants will be introduced to Imago Relationship Therapy and guided through exercises that will enable them to reinterpret conflict as an unconscious attempt at self-healing, use their relationship to achieve personal wholeness, and create a conscious partnership characterized by safety and passion.

Somatics: Mastery of Muscles and Emotions

Toward a Common Language: Psychotherapy and 12-Step Recovery

Peter Finkelshtein & Peter Ways

Participants in "12-Step" programs are often irritated or bored when faced with conventional psychodynamic discussions of their addictive behavior patterns. Similarly, adherents to more classical psychological approaches are frequently condescending and dismissive when they encounter the AA point of view. Although both groups employ combinations of insight and social support in their work, their differences in basic orientation and treatment experience often cause defensiveness and frustration. As a consequence, it becomes very difficult for those involved in these two approaches to learn from each other.

This workshop, co-lead by a psychodynamic psychiatrist and a recovering physician steeped in 12-Step work, will attempt to develop a common language and inclusive style for dealing with addictive patterns that gather strength from each model. The workshop will be useful to counselors and therapists from both sides of this conceptual gap, and for all persons wrestling with the similarities and contradictions of 12-Step and psychotherapeutic approaches. $380

Belonging to the Universe

Fritjof Capra & Brother David Steindl-Rast

For many years Fritjof and David have met at Esalen to discuss new ways of thinking that affect all of us at the end of this millennium. Their conversations — at table, in the hot tubs, on cliffs overlooking the Pacific — have become a book, Belonging to the Universe (Harper San Francisco, 1992). Translated into German, Italian, Portuguese, Korean, and other languages, their dialogue is now available to people all over the world. But few people have had the opportunity to share in its "live" continuation.

This workshop will provide an opportunity to do just that — to talk with authors in the beautiful surroundings in which their book originated. No training in science is necessary to participate, only an honest concern for basic human questions, a readiness to celebrate life, and an openness toward the joy of belonging to the universe. $740

Char Pias Brenner & Dean Marson

The basic approach of Esalen massage consists of long, flowing strokes which contribute to deep relaxation and a feeling of wholeness. To achieve these goals, participants will be instructed in fundamental methods of Esalen massage which includes quality of touch, breath awareness, stress reduction, and grounding techniques. The concept of working with someone's essential being is another aspect that will be addressed.

Meditation will be used to promote focusing abilities. The workshop is available to beginners as well as those who wish to brush up on their massage skills.

Awakened Mind: Five-Day Brainwave Training Intensive

Anna Wise

The Awakened Mind is a state of consciousness that releases deep inner resources, capacities, and powers that often lie dormant and unaccessible. This workshop will help you develop the intricate combinations of brainwave frequencies that underlie optimum mental states. Biofeedback monitoring combined with different methods of meditation, visualization or "sensualization," and deep psycho-physiological relaxation will help you learn how to master your own brainwaves.

Techniques for accessing repressed memories and creating a bridge between your conscious and your unconscious mind will be taught. Bridging this gap and making this connection with your innermost self allows you to begin a process that encourages healing and integration. The leader will also focus on the importance of the interrelationship between brainwaves and the human energy system, specifically the kundalini process.

Throughout the workshop, the Mind Mirror EEG will be used to demonstrate brainwave patterns and Electrical Skin Resistance Meters will be used to measure the depth of arousal and relaxation of your autonomic nervous system, illuminating the interrelationship between your body and your mind.

Couples Workshop

Jack Rosenberg & Beverly Kitaen Morse

Most couples are reluctant to seek help in their relationships; instead they wait, hoping that the relationship will improve. If couples approached medical help the same way they approach marriage counseling, many of them would visit the doctor when they ought to be lining up at the mortician.

Designed on a preventive model, this workshop will deal with the underlying structures and defenses in relationships before they surface as terminal problems. It will also examine attitudes and beliefs about sexuality and how to make sex better.

The Light at the End of History
Terence McKenna

Nature as both the ground of being and the mysterious transcendent dimension into which history is being dissolved will set the theme. The approach of the Third Millennium provides a sense of urgency and exuberance as we explore the implications of different cultural images of nature from Archaic Gaiaism to post-Hegelian Christianity, anthropomorphic modernity, and psychedelic and technomorphic millenarianism. A kind of strolling lawn party through the pleasantly replanted wreckage of Western Civilization is planned. The stress will be on sharing experiences and ideas that empower each of us and the language composed reality that is ours alone. The power of experience, understanding, language, and imagination in the life of the emergent neo-archaic movement will be our springboard to deeper matters: nature, history, and making conscious the task of fusing current cultural chaos into the feminized silicidespace of true post-history.

Mastering the Competitive Mind
Jena Marcovicci

In athletics as well as our professional lives, what matters most is the "score." Challenges are about winning at the expense of your partner and who you are. What has been lost is the fun and joy of just playing or finding meaning in what you do.

Jena Marcovicci is a sports psychotherapist who has worked with world-class tennis players and has seen what the pressures of competition can do to the human psyche. He leads "Dance of Tennis" workshops throughout the world and is experienced at helping people let go of conditioned behavior patterns that sabotage the joy and effort of playing a sport, or simply being successful in a particular aspect of either their professional or personal life.

The leader writes: "The more you relax, the better you play. It's the law of 'reversed effort.' By combining the Greek root of competition, meaning 'to rise together,' with the joy of your organic rhythms, you liberate yourself from your fight and flight reptilian mind set that envisions the person on the other side as the enemy. The result is a more balanced perspective that expresses power with as opposed to power over."

Whether you are a serious athlete, a would-be athlete, or someone who wants to learn to master your "competitive mind," this workshop can help redefine what winning means to you on a very personal level. Yoga, Tai Chi, discussion, and visual imagery will be used. Turn your adversaries into dancing partners and enjoy a whole new perspective on what winning really means.

Craniosacral System: Basic Workshop
Jim Asher

This workshop is an opportunity to learn and practice gentle yet powerful skills to bring the craniosacral system into balance. There will be lectures and slides on functional anatomy of the cranial system. Cranial work can be effective in shifting emotional holding patterns and draining accumulated stress in the nervous system.

Demonstrations will be followed by supervised practice. Time will also be spent evoking and developing palpatory sensitivity and fine-tuning the quality of touch.

This workshop is for people with a strong interest in developing hands-on skills and for those already practicing body work or counseling. Much of the focus will be on the head, jaw, neck, pelvis, and diaphragm systems. Cranial work can be effective in shifting emotional holding patterns and draining accumulated stress in the nervous system.

Fire in the Earth:
Poetry, Silence, and the Heart's Desire
David Whyte

This is a workshop for the New Year concerned with remembering half-forgotten and neglected desires that are central to our personal creativity and destiny. Fire has been an abiding image for creativity throughout human history, but the first steps into that flame depend upon our ability to rest in the silence present in our own bodies. These disciplines of silence are a way of understanding desire at a level deeper than we ordinarily experience.

Playing the Edge
David Schiffman

In the early stages of growth, success seems to be its own reward. Excitement, vitality, and the willingness to face life boldly are often characteristics of those who are involved in new and successful ventures. To keep this spirit alive is not easy. The enormous pressure, the grinding routines and demands of substantial involvement can dispirit even the healthiest people. To listen to one's heart and know what's real requires the courage to pause. In this willingness to stop and listen to the deeper self lives the true resources that guide and protect us.
The purpose of this week is to create a mood of sanctuary for people who are in transition and facing major changes in career, relationship, or matters of the spirit; those in need of a break from demanding stressful responsibilities; individuals interested in breaking new ground in the areas of self-nurturance, intuitive functioning, and problem-solving.

The process will be gently restorative, illuminating, and enlivening. The group intention will be to create a community based on trust and goodwill with emphasis on individual freedom. Traditional methods of self-inquiry (gestalt practice, bioenergetics, psychosynthesis) will be combined with innovative methods using music, meditation, poetry, and prayer to foster this spirit of living fully and comfortably.

Opening to Spirit
Joyce & Brian Lyke

As we approach the end of the millennium, humankind appears to be returning to the place where this cycle of spiritual and intellectual development began. We have thirsted for knowledge and an understanding of the nature of things. We have hungered for power and dominance over our environment. We have searched and explored the far reaches of our planet and solar system, and we have longed to find meaning and purpose in our activities. Instead, we have found that our technical abilities and scientific explorations have outpaced our spiritual understanding and our ability to be effective caretakers of this planet. There is much suffering, pain, and disillusionment among us. We have gained the world, and lost our souls.

This workshop is about Spirit, and listening and opening to its voice. Our intention is to find and nourish the Spirit within each one of us and in the circle we form together. We will use Sufi self-remembering exercises, meditation, gestalt awareness practice, movement, and rituals drawn from Native American tradition. Our primary resource, apart from our collective life experience, is Nature and the Spirit of the Esselen land.

Feldenkrais and Musical Improvisation (Or You Don’t Have to Suffer to Sing the Blues)
Phil Cardillo

The Feldenkrais Method is becoming well-known throughout the world as a subtle and powerful tool for self-growth. Its usefulness is wide-ranging. It is extremely effective for dealing with back and neck pain, for children with learning disabilities, for athletes or dancers who want to move more elegantly and gracefully, for artists who want to stimulate their creativity, and for anyone who wants to increase their sensitivity and kinesthetic awareness.

The work is effective in all these settings because of a process which it stimulates in the nervous system: a process of LEARNING.

This workshop will focus this powerful learning method on the art of musical improvisation. In a safe, supportive environment, we will explore simple jazz standards, blues, and modal improvisation. Players of all instruments (including voice) at all levels, are welcome, especially beginners. We’ll spend lots of time singing and jamming, tuning into our bodies, allowing music to flow through us that will surprise and delight us with its beauty and passion. Come prepared for five days of deep work, cleverly disguised as lots of fun. $380

Toward Waking Up: Cultivating Mindfulness
Charles Tart

Ordinary consciousness is a kind of waking sleep, an absorption in our personal and cultural illusions. This apparently strange Eastern concept is actually supported in detail by Western psychological data. Given this, how can we awaken? Our essential selves are often invalidated and suppressed in childhood, as part of “education.” How can we rediscover and nourish them? Our instinctual and sensory wisdom lies buried under cultural noise and distraction. How can we come to our senses?

G. I. Gurdjieff, one of the first teachers to adapt Eastern spiritual methods to Western culture, developed practices for awakening from our sleep, our cultural trance. Occasional retreats to exotic places like Esselen are quite useful, but ordinary life is the best setting for using psychological and spiritual development practices that emphasize balanced work on mind, emotions, instincts, and body. In this workshop we will examine Gurdjieff’s main ideas, adding to them from, and integrating them with, modern growth psychology.

Self-observation and self-remembering will be taught as a primary meditation-in-life for increasing self-understanding and living more effectively in the here-and-now. These techniques use that most marvelous tool that is always with us, our bodies. We will also review basic formal meditation practice as an aid to mindfulness. Emphasis will be on practicing awakening as part of everyday life.

Writing through Loss
Nancy Bacal
To write from the heart is to heal the heart...

One of life’s most unavoidable realities is that we all experience loss. Whether it be with love, death, youth, health, marriage or work, and whether we like it or not, we are all subject to the rules of the universe. Illusion begins when we expect continuance; when we believe we can manipulate life in accordance with our plans. Loss inevitably involves pain, and pain becomes suffering when we resist life as it is — when we deny ourselves the natural rhythms of mourning and change.

This workshop is intended to help participants pave a way to joy through surrender and the expression of true feelings. It is also an opportunity to use loss as a bridge to a new perspective on life. Rather than let ourselves feel diminished by what is gone, we will utilize it as material for writing. Even the cruelest tragedy can be transformed through the practice of writing and the telling of stories. As we write, we come to know ourselves; as we share, we move out of isolation. The dark riches of our lives are released to deepen our emotional and creative lives, and inspire the journey of our companions.

Mediation, movement and/or hiking will be included, but our primary tools will be pen and paper. More than skill, enthusiasm for the writing process and a desire for change are the only requirements.
Very little in our culture prepares couples for the challenge, “There is room for both of us.” Too often the relationship becomes a battleground for unresolved issues, hurts, and beliefs.

In this workshop, couples will have an opportunity to explore and reclaim the unspoken expectations they project onto each other, begin healing past hurts that create distance, and learn new ways of communicating. They will have a supportive environment where they can experience themselves as courageous and able to take risks. Experiential processes will be drawn from gestalt, Reichian work, dance, imagery, and meditation.

Prisons, Passions & Play
Stephanie Waxman & Dennis Hicks

Is your passion withering, locked behind bars of old fears and new worries? Is your playfulness kept prisoner by a self-conscious, upight guard?

This workshop will utilize two processes that can help passion and play become a more dynamic part of your life. “Council,” also known as “talking circle,” is a process that uses a talking stick to implement communication. Council may be the oldest democratic group process in the world. Used by many peoples, including Native Americans and Quakers, Council allows each person to speak his or her truth and each listener to bear witness. This traditional process can have a powerful effect on communication and introspection.

Interspersed with the Councils will be a process of play based on theater games. Insights gained from working together in Council will be explored through improvisational theater techniques such as mirroring, nonverbal and physical work with images, and the re-enactment of our personal and collective metaphors. The centering experience of Council combined with the healing power of play can help you discover the keys to your own prisons.

The workshop will take advantage of the unique atmosphere at Esalen. Participants will draw on the natural environment so they can create their own talking stick, making it easier to bring Council home with you.

Each participant is asked to bring an “object of passion” to the first session. It should be something about which you feel passionate or desire was satisfied, another would appear to be locked behind bars of old fears and new worries.

Participants will explore the paradox of success and fulfillment as two essential elements in self-transformation that can enable participants to live more fully—opening and clearing the personal self, while developing and expanding one’s higher self.

A Conscious Choice to Live
Laura De Nuccio & Guest Leaders

In the sunlight of awareness, each thought and action becomes sacred.

— Thich Nhat Hanh

To live fully is a choice only each individual can make. This workshop will be concerned with two essential elements in self-transformation that can enable participants to live more fully—opening and clearing the personal self, while developing and expanding one’s higher self.

Participants will explore many aspects of the unfolding self—physically, sexually, emotionally, mentally, and spiritually. Each of these aspects will be addressed through conscious breathwork, movement, meditation, and earth ritual. Guided meditations will be included for enlivening the vitality of cells and tissue, for dissolving energetic blockages and to quiet, still, and expand the mind. Emphasis will be on cultivating compassion and patience as we learn how to come into alignment with our own truths in a healthy relationship to others and to the planet.

A creative cognitive process will be used to attend to “unfinished business” from the past or present that holds significant “charge” (energy). Focus will be on forgiveness of one’s self and others while speaking your personal truth.

Time will be scheduled for group meditation, yoga, and light hiking in the beauty of Big Sur. This is a time of nurturing and giving thanks for the life that we live and share.

The workshop is neopaganism and goddess spirituality. The basic philosophy that informs this workshop is neopagansm and goddess spirituality. This perspective is non-hierarchical and starts with the idea that we, ourselves, are sacred and flowing with potential. Ritual is a tool that can end our alienation from nature and from each other. The workshop explores ways of reclaiming the vitality and mystery of ecstatic religions without the dogmatic and patriarchal attitudes that have caused so many women to leave their own religious traditions.

The workshop will combine joyful exuberance (chants, songs, and drumming) with time for quiet meditation, including a voyage to meet the Goddess within ourselves. This should be two days filled with joy and fun. Please bring drums, rattles, instruments, and one or two personal items that have special significance to place on a community altar as a way of sharing your own stories.

Since 1950, materialism has sky-rocketed in the United States. Indeed, many of us are wealthy beyond the wildest dreams of our ancestors, and yet we struggle more than ever for self-esteem and meaning in our lives.

When alternative measures of success are not available, the deep human need to be valued and respected by others is acted out through consumption. Buying things becomes both a means to self-esteem and social acceptance.

“The avarice of mankind is insatiable,” wrote Aristotle, who believed that as soon as one desire was satisfied, another would appear to take its place. If our wants are insatiable, there is simply no such thing as enough.

Peller Marion has designed a weekend that explores the questions: How much is enough? What is an achievement junkie? What is my definition of success at this time in my life? How do I create my own personal philosophy of life? How do I live by my own agenda?

Participants will explore the paradox of success in their own lives. A variety of experiential processes will be drawn from readings and discussion, games, dance, gestalt, imagery, and meditation.

Ritual, Ectasy, and Women’s Spirituality

Margo Adler

This workshop for women explores the ideas, the rituals, and the celebrations that come out of the women’s spirituality movement. Margo Adler uses chant, songs, and sacred circles as ways for women to explore the healing power, joy, and ease that comes from doing rituals with women. The basic philosophy that informs this workshop is neopaganism and goddess spirituality. This perspective is non-hierarchical and starts with the idea that we, ourselves, are sacred and flowing with potential. Ritual is a tool that can end our alienation from nature and from each other. Painting Experience with Michell Cassou and Stewart Cubley

It is rare for most people to use painting for its qualities of inner adventure and self-discovery, to paint purely for the process of exploration, not for the result.

The purpose of this workshop is to provide a setting to explore the self through painting — to discover in form and color a powerful tool for uncovering and dissolving blocks to emotional and spiritual expression. Participants will be given the support and stimulation to develop a natural way of painting based directly upon feeling. The work takes place in an authentic studio setting with large white surfaces to confront the creative void, along with a rich spectrum of colors and brushes. The workshop may be of interest to persons involved in a wide variety of disciplines, including art, education, counseling, and meditative practices. No prior experience in painting is necessary. Please bring a smock.

For further information about this workshop, contact: The Painting Experience Studio, 2101 20th Avenue, San Francisco, CA 94116; (415) 564-8515.

Path of the River: A Rogue River Journey

Steven Harper & Oregon River Experiences Expeditions

Oregon's Rogue River provides a unique environment of dramatic variety, which is intimate and awesome, soft and demanding, yet always rewarding for those who are open to all it has to offer. The Rogue offers clear water, tall green forests, vertical walled canyons, and challenging rapids. The river is a teacher and primary metaphor. The group may draw from energy awareness, dance, meditation, and principles of Aikido to enhance their experience of this majestic wilderness area.

Participants will have a choice of riding on a raft with a guide or piloting their own raft with a partner. Instructions will be offered in basic aspects of river life, such as paddling and minimum-impact river camping. There will be time to discuss the area's natural and cultural history, to hike, and to sit quietly and reflect.

River experience is not necessary, though participants should be prepared for the challenge of vigorous physical activity and to participate fully. The workshop begins September 21st at 8:30 A.M. in Galice, Oregon. There will be a pre-trip meeting the evening before at 7:00 P.M. Oregon River Experiences will supply all the necessary river rafting gear, guides, meals, and shuttle. Complete details and a personal equipment list will be sent upon registration. This is a unique opportunity and space is limited.

Due to Esalen's special arrangement with Oregon River Experiences, the following cancellation policy is in effect for this workshop: A $200 nonrefundable deposit per person will confirm your reservation. Balance is due August 20th. If you cancel prior to August 20th, your nonrefundable deposit, less a $50 registration fee, can be applied to other Esalen programs, to be used within one year. No refunds are available after August 20th. $700

Work Study Program is for those who are interested in an intense and complete involvement with the Esalen environment. It is a work-oriented program, emotionally and physically, and only rarely is it restful. It is not for those who wish to take catalog workshops or for those who are unwilling to be fully engaged in the work-life of the community. Participants will work 32 hours per week in one of Esalen’s departments (kitchen, garden, farm, housekeeping, maintenance, or grounds) and will participate, along with staff and long-term students, in that department’s program. It is necessary for applicants to be able to speak and understand English.

During most evenings and one weekend intensive, work students are together as a group exploring different practices and approaches available at Esalen, with specifically assigned leaders who will be with the group throughout the month coordinating the study schedule and facilitating many of the evening sessions.

The selection of work students is done by Bette Dingman, the Work Study coordinator, in consultation with department supervisors. Since this is a work program, preference is given to applicants who are open and willing to learn about themselves within the work context as well as within the evening and weekend study/process groups. Applicants with particular skills or physically limiting conditions are urged to mention them on the application.

First-month work students, in particular, are assigned to departments largely on the basis of community need. No work students will be assigned to the office or Gazebo School/Park until they have fulfilled a minimum of one month in one of the aforementioned departments.

The study portion of the program is usually divided into two sections each month: each emphasizes one type of growth practice, such as gestalt, meditation, Reichian work, massage or somatics work, and so forth. Participants must be prepared to stay at Esalen for the full duration designated for that particular program, assuming that they meet the standards of the Work Study Program. Two programs are planned for each month. Those scheduled thus far for 1993 include:

September 19—October 17

With the emphasis on the practice of massage, David Streeter will explore the inner power of the human being. He will combine the fundamental essence of Zen meditation with movement from the martial arts and yoga. These principles will then be applied to the art of massage and the art of being in the world.

Mary Goldenson’s (Devraau) program of letting go and moving on employs Reichian methods, dance, imagery, gestalt, and meditation.

October 17—November 14

Eduardo Eisner and guests will lead a month concentrating on emotional release work and self-awareness, incorporating gestalt practice, group and individual process, rituals, movement, and body work.

Eric Erickson and Steven Harper will lead a monthlong exploration of integral practices using meditation, movement work, wild nature, and gestalt for inter and intrapersonal learning.

November 14—December 12

A men’s group will be led by Pennell Rock. Through gestalt, psycho-drama, movement, meditation, and discussion, the group will work with four archetypes of manhood: king, warrior, magician, and lover. There may be some crossover sessions with the women’s group.

Karuna Licht will lead a women’s group. Through guided imagery, gestalt practice, mask making, art, and dance, we will awaken our intuitive awareness as women.

December 12—January 9

Robert Nadeau will emphasize functional centering. Using grounding, energy awareness, aikido, and movement work, the physical, mental, and spiritual aspects of centering will be explored.

Dianne Lawrence and participants will explore their relationship with themselves and others through acting, writing, theater, and painting.
The group will create a communal performance to be presented at month's end.

January 9–February 6
This month with Gideon Dreyer will focus on the experience of becoming immobilized when confronted with certain obstacles and how we can use these situations for inner enrichment and education. Participants will focus on spiritualizing their thoughts, feelings, and actions, and cultivating the will to act accordingly.

Eric Erickson will lead a group devoted to the development of integral practices. Gestalt practice, meditation, movement exercises, the experience of nature, and body work will be explored as complementary awareness practices which, when combined, integrate mind-body-spirit into a greater whole and enhance personal development and transformation.

February 6–March 6
Julian Silverman's program will be based on A Course in Miracles. The program provides a format for thoughtfulness using the Course's teachings in such areas as communication, relationship, goal-setting, decision-making, and spirituality in everyday life.

Maria Lucia Sauer Holloman & Anita Eubank Donovan will invite the creative spirit to come alive during this monthlong by combining music, art, movement, and ritual with practice of the fundamental healing art of laying-on-of hands.

DOLPHIN TAPES, P.O. Box 71, Big Sur, CA 93920

Advertisement: Dolphin Tapes is a private company independent of Esalen.
Esalen lies 300 miles north of Los Angeles and 175 miles south of San Francisco, situated directly over the Pacific with the Santa Lucia Range rising sharply behind. The property, which has natural hot springs, was once the home of a Native American tribe known as Esselen.

We are a 45-mile drive south from Monterey, 11 miles south of Nepenthe, on Coast Route 1. From the south, we are 50 miles north of San Simeon. A lighted sign on the ocean side of the highway reads: Esalen Institute, By Reservation Only.

There are various ways to experience Esalen, ranging from an overnight visit to a long-term stay as a seminarian. The weekend and five-day workshops described throughout the catalog are the standard route for coming to Esalen and learning the methods of personal growth available here. The “Experiencing Esalen” workshops, scheduled periodically, offer an introduction to practices such as gestalt, massage, sensory awareness, and meditation. From such a sampling, participants can then choose those approaches they are most attracted to and pursue them in subsequent seminars.

Another way of being at Esalen which allows a much greater involvement with the place and its community at a lower expense is the Work Study Program, an intensive work-oriented program for individuals who want to make a directed, personal commitment to self-exploration and growth and a contribution to the Esalen community. Participants can enroll in the general interest track, which gives an overview of several disciplines, or choose a more specific course of study from the focused track, such as gestalt, meditation, Reichian work, or massage.

Information regarding special interest sections may be obtained by writing Bette Dingman, c/o Esalen. For a full description of the Work Study Program, please turn to page 52.

For those who wish an extended stay of a month or more, there are frequent long-term programs which involve didactic seminars or professional trainings as well as experiential workshops. Please see Special Programs.

Finally, there are other events that enrich life at Esalen. There are occasional forums in which writers and thinkers, both visiting and resident, share their ideas with the community. On Wednesday nights there may be lectures, films, dance performances, or other forms of entertainment. Body work of various kinds is available by appointment with individual practitioners. There is also a community event schedule offered. Please check the bulletin board for details when you arrive.

Conferences at Esalen

It is now possible to arrange for your group or organization to hold its conferences at Esalen. We schedule approximately a year in advance for large groups (up to 100) on a space available basis. For further information, contact the conference coordinator, (408) 667-3038.

With the completion of the Big House renovation, we can now accommodate groups of people in a single facility. The Big House provides meeting rooms, ten bedrooms with twenty beds, a kitchen for meal preparation, and a dining area. We invite people who work together on a regular basis, be they corporate, government, legal, artistic, or familial groups, to design a workshop according to their own needs, using Esalen resources and catalog faculty. Participants also have access to other Esalen amenities, including massage, the hot springs, swimming pool, and bookstore. Reservations for the Big House must be made at least nine months in advance. For more information contact Pat LeWine, (408) 667-3038.

Catalog Subscriptions

If you would like to receive the next three issues of the Esalen Catalog, please refer to the inside front cover for subscription rates and send your check or money order (U.S. currency) in the enclosed subscription envelope, or mail it to Subscriptions, Esalen Institute, Big Sur, CA 93920.

Contributions to Esalen Institute are tax-deductible. The expenses of attending Esalen, including travel, are deductible for federal income tax purposes as an educational expense if incurred to maintain or improve professional or work skills. (See Income Tax Regulation 1.162-5.) Esalen Institute reserves the right to cancel any program at any time.

The Hot Springs at Esalen

We would like those people who are planning their first visit to Esalen to know that swimsuits are optional, and nudity common, in the hot springs, massage area, and swimming pool. We encourage each individual to choose what is most comfortable, either wearing a swimsuit or not, and emphasize that the environment at Esalen is one of personal sanctuary and respect for the human body.

Accreditation

Many formal educational institutions recognize the time spent at Esalen as being worthy of credit in their own curriculum; check with your university or college for further information. We would be glad to supply information to your school regarding any of our programs or series of programs. Please submit a written request to the office supervisor.

Medical Programs

Some programs offered at Esalen qualify for continuing education credit with the California Board of Registered Nursing. For current C.E. listings, see pages 50-51.

Recommended Reading and Mail Order Books

Most books listed as recommended reading for workshops are available through Esalen’s bookstore. Other merchandise is also available. For ordering information please call (408) 667-3049.

Disabled Access

Esalen now provides a means of transportation to the baths for those with physical limitations which prevent them from walking. A vehicle was purchased, in part, through the generosity of Dr. John W. Harris who believes, as we do, that those among us who are aged, infirm, or handicapped should also be able to enjoy the hot springs.

If you are disabled and would like to plan a visit to Esalen or participate in a workshop, please give the office as much advance notice as possible. While disabled access to some parts of the property is difficult, with enough planning, arrangements can be made for access to most of our facilities.

Esalen Institute is a center to explore work in the humanities and sciences that promotes human values and potentials. Its activities consist of public seminars, residential work-study programs, invitational conferences, research, and semi-autonomous projects.

We exist to sponsor, encourage, synthesize, and attempt evaluation of work in these areas, both inside and outside our own organizational framework. Since we are a center for experimental education, we ask that no one come to our programs out of an educational interest. We ask that no one come whose interest is “cure.” We point out here, as we have in workshops and seminars, that some people, particularly those with a history of psychiatric problems, may find some programs difficult, trying, or potentially risky. We recommend that in case of any doubt, a physician or trusted counselor be consulted.

A Circle

The incense wants to be one with the scent, the scent to wrap itself round the incense.
Melody wants to take shape in rhythm, rhythm turns to melody instead,
feeling looks for a body in form, form can only find itself in feeling.

The infinite seeks the intimate presence of the finite,
the finite to disappear in the infinite.
I do not know whose scheme this is in the eternal cycle of beginning and end that between feeling and form should be this interchange, that the bound should be on a search after freedom — freedom asking to be housed in the bound.

— Rabindranath Tagore
FRIENDS OF ESALEN

An Update and an Invitation

Esalen is now thirty-one years old. We find ourselves in a fruitful period as we reexamine our work and clarify our purpose, our values, and our mission. Remaining committed to the ongoing work in Big Sur, we will focus our programs and research in the areas of environmental design, transformative practices, and theoretical work related to the human potential.

We invite you to support us as we develop these programs for Esalen's future.

Environmental Design
This program is built on the work that has previously been done at Esalen and the dreams that have been part of those plans. We would like to expand the existing organic agriculture program, the use of alternative energy sources, and the recycling and sustainability projects. Our aim is to integrate environmental awareness into all decisions, choices, practices, and purchases made by the Institute. An effort will be made to develop alliances with other organizations that are fostering environmental consciousness and ecologically sound design practices. We will also expand the number of public programs, seminars, and conferences devoted to environmental design.

Theory and Research
Esalen will foster strategic alliances with institutes, universities, healing centers, and individuals. We intend to bring people together from a variety of fields and backgrounds for ongoing focused discourse and collaboration. One of our objectives has been to provide support for scientists, scholars, and contemplatives whose work is neglected by mainstream institutions. We remain committed to these people and their endeavors as we work to overcome the fragmentation of knowledge in the diverse field of human potential.

Transformative Practices
Since its very beginning, Esalen has been a center for transformative practices. We will refine and expand these efforts by:
• Bringing transformative practices into a unified curriculum
• Beginning a systematic appraisal of such practices and their effectiveness
• Developing a specialized work-scholar track in transformative practices

Over the years, many people have given to Esalen. These gifts remain part of the Esalen property—the many beautiful trees, the benches, the stonework. Esalen would not be the beautiful place it is without the generosity of so many people.

You may leave your gift unspecified, or choose to designate the project you wish to support. We will keep you updated about each of our projects through the Friends of Esalen newsletter. You will also receive the benefits of being a Friend of Esalen (see page 3).

We hope you will join us as we chart new directions for Esalen's future.

Warmly,

Deborah Miller

Big House Availability
We are now scheduling workshops in our newly renovated Big House. This facility is available to groups of individuals who work together and would like to design their own Esalen program, drawing on our leaders and other resources. Ten bedrooms accommodating up to twenty individuals, ten bathrooms, a kitchen, dining room, and living room make it possible to house group members together, thereby enhancing the retreat environment.

To schedule or discuss possible formats, please contact Pat LeWine, program coordinator at (408) 667-3038.

Friends of Esalen Quarterly Newsletter
The Friends of Esalen Newsletter is for and about the extended Esalen community. Published quarterly, it covers current events and other items not covered in the Catalog.

Through membership contributions, Friends of Esalen support the scholarship fund, the Friends network and newsletter, and other Esalen projects. In return, the Friends receive The Esalen Catalog three times a year, the quarterly Friends Newsletter, and opportunities to appear in the Friends Network Directory and to attend the annual Friends’ workshop.

Esalen’s Friends include people in 22 countries, from Big Sur to Nepal. If you would like to join us, please complete and return the membership form on page 55, or complete inside flap of envelope insert.

The Esalen Catalog (1962-1992) available via the Education Resources Information Center (ERIC)
Since 1962 there have been 103 issues of The Esalen Catalog. A Friends of Esalen project, organized by Ted Brandhorse and Deborah Miller, has collected these issues and entered them into the bibliographic database of the U.S. Department of Education’s Educational Resources Information Center (ERIC), where it is identified by the Accession Number/Order Number ED 347118. ERIC records are announced in the monthly abstract journal Resources in Education (RIE) and the entire database can be searched online via DIALOG and BRS, and on CD-ROM via SilverPlatter and DIALOG products.

Anyone interested in The Esalen Catalog as human potential movement historical source material for research purposes can now obtain the complete thirty-year set from ERIC’s document delivery arm, the ERIC Document Reproduction Service (EDRS, 7420 Fullerton Road, Suite 110, Springfield, Virginia 22153-2852; 1-800-443-3742).

A Special Opportunity for Friends of Esalen
To celebrate the publication of Michael Murphy’s book, The Future of the Body, we are offering an opportunity to become a Friend of Esalen for a gift of $100 or more and receive an autographed copy of Michael’s book with the inscription of your choice. You will also receive the Friends Newsletter, Directory, and the opportunity to attend the yearly Friends’ workshop. Please send your check to Friends of Esalen, Esalen Institute, Big Sur, CA 93920.

Aldous Huxley Centenary Conference
Aldous Huxley will be honored on the centenary of his birth at the conference “Children: Our Ultimate Investment.” The conference will be presented by Laura Huxley and held in Los Angeles at the Wilshire Ebell Theatre on April 28 through May 1, 1994. Keynote speakers will include Joan Borysenko, David Chamberlain, Ram Dass, Piero Ferrucci, John Robbins, Chungliang Al Huang, Laura Huxley, Ashley Montagu, Michel Odent, Brother David Steindl-Rast, Michael Murphy, and Jean Houston. The conference is sponsored by the nonprofit organization “Our Ultimate Investment,” founded by Laura Huxley in 1977.

The plenary sessions on April 30th will be dedicated to Aldous Huxley. Friends and scholars will speak about their relationships with Aldous and the impact he had on their lives. "The purpose of Aldous’s work," says Laura Huxley, "was to remind us that we have choices, and that a saner and more loving society is a possibility. This conference is a pragmatic confirmation of that purpose." For tickets or information call or fax (213) 461-8248.

Renewal: New Beginnings in Midlife
Mark Gerzon
The tradition of making resolutions at the beginning of a new year reflects a deep yearning for growth throughout the life cycle. From work based on his new book about midlife entitled Coming Into Our Own, Mark Gerzon invites participants to dig more deeply into the spiritual ground in which our New Year’s resolutions may be rooted. The workshop will provide a safe, healing space in which men and women can listen to their own and each other’s stories of midlife transformation regarding work, love, health, and spiritual growth.

The purpose of the workshop, however, is to see beyond our own biographies. As in the lives of Jesus, Moses, Buddha, Mohammed, and other spiritual pathfinders, the middle years of adulthood are a time when many of us are deepening our spiritual quest. This is more than an individual quest to come to terms with growing older. It is a transpersonal rite of initiation into another stage of the human journey, into what C. G. Jung called the “second half” of life.

Music for Everyone: Finding Your Long-Lost Musician
David Darling
For 21 years the leader’s music improvisation workshops have touched many groups of people, including corporate executives, school children, teachers, professional musicians, prisoners, and therapists, and opened their hearts to the mystery of sound. A former member of the Paul Winter Consort, Darling has performed with such diverse artists as Bobby McFerrin, Jan Garbarek, Peter, Paul & Mary, The Western Wind, and Spyro Gyra. His most recent activity includes collaboration as solo cellist on Wim Wenders’ movie soundtrack, Until the End of the World.

“Music for Everyone” is an adventure into music-making, rhythmic grooving, song writing, laughing, and listening. Regardless of prior experience, this workshop will take you to a deeper, more powerful music level. Bring an instrument or play on David’s collection of world instruments.

Completion and Continuance

Will Schutz

The leader writes: "I want to use the celebration of New Year's Eve to explore and experiment with several relevant ideas that fascinate me:

- 'You must close the old door before you open the new,' an observation of Elvin Semrad, a training analyst and my teacher for small groups
- 'Some people grow up and others merely grow old,' a comment from Kings Row
- Reflect on the wonderful opportunity for annual new beginnings every New Year's Eve
- Muse on age and the passage of time from the perspective of a new bumper sticker, 'I am younger now than I ever will be.'"

Exploring the World of Lucid Dreaming

Stephen LaBerge

Dreams are worlds of wonder, where anything imaginable can happen. Unfortunately, most of us sleep through our nightly journeys, unaware of the opportunities available. Only upon awakening do we realize that we have been dreaming.

We are not bound, however, to forever sleep-walk through our dreams. Lucid dreams are dreams in which we know we are dreaming while we're dreaming. Lucid dreamers are fully conscious that the world they are experiencing in the dream is a mental creation, and are completely free to act in the dream without constraints.

Research has shown that people can develop the skill of lucid dreaming, and that it can profoundly affect our brains and bodies. Participants will learn techniques for inducing lucid dreams and explore its uses: self-exploitation, creative problem-solving, enhancing self-confidence, healing, adventure, and self-integration leading to transcendence.

The scope of the seminar will extend beyond dreams and dream lucidity to provide an understanding of the nature of our experience of the world and our perceptions of "reality." Discussions will explore the possibility of comprehending all perceptions as illusory and waking realities as mental constructions very much like dreams.

The seminar is intended for avid dreamers and people seriously interested in self-exploration and the enhancement of consciousness.

Week of January 2–7

A Retreat for Women of Experience: Midlife and Beyond

Lenore Lefer & Anne Yeomans

The gifts of woman are many. They have too often been undervalued and made invisible until we cannot see them ourselves. Today, more than ever, the earth needs these gifts.

This is an opportunity for women in midlife and beyond to come together to explore the issues that are on their minds and in their hearts. What are the challenges we each face? How can we support each other in reclaiming and honoring our passion, our tears, our outrage, our laughter, and our beauty? How can we express our deepest values at this time in our lives?

The workshop will include time to speak and tell our stories, and time for silence. Each day will include periods of hatha yoga, walking meditation, and group process.

Themes to be explored include:

- Cultural perspectives on the older woman
- Issues of loneliness and companionship
- The wisdom of the body
- Sexuality and intimacy
- Menopause
- Power and self-expression
- Self-care in the midst of responsibilities
- Spiritual questions of midlife.

It is our hope that these days together will strengthen our trust and renew our spirit, so that we can return to our lives with more joy, more tenderness toward ourselves and others, and more boldness in living all that is important to us.

The Tao of Music Improvisation and Movement Meditation

Chungliang Al Huang & David Darling

The leaders will continue their traditional New Year's celebration with music and Tai Ji during the southern migration of gray whales and monarch butterflies. Chungliang Al Huang will lead participants each morning in Tai Ji meditation and Chi Gong breathing exercises in the fresh ocean air while David Darling plays Bach on the cello. Everyone is invited to rediscover the fundamentals of creative expression and the revitalization of body, mind, and spirit through Tai Ji dancing and music.

Recommended listening: Darling, Cycles and Journal October (both, ECM), Minor Blue and Rhythm and Blues Suite (both, Music for People (203) 672-0275). $740

Feeling and Innovation

Dale Cummings & Karel Samson

Discovering creative solutions in our personal and occupational lives can transform leisure and work and enliven our experience. Webster defines feeling as "the capacity to respond emotionally" and innovation as the "introduction of something new." How these two themes interconnect will be the focus of this workshop.

Participants will use neo-Reichian methods of emotional release, exercises in creativity and innovation, role-playing, and discussion. A period of individual work in a small group setting will provide a safe environment of emotional support. As negative feelings are worked through, active creativity can emerge.

Through its focus on feelings and creativity, this workshop offers encouragement and practical ideas for reinvigorating personal and organizational experiences and for pursuing innovation and new (ad)ventures in daily life.

Mending the Fragmented Self through Soul Retrieval and Shamanic Practices

Sandra Ingerman & Carol Proudfoot-Edgar

Shamanism is the oldest spiritual system used for healing, problem-solving, and the general well-being of both the individual and the community. From a shamanic perspective, emotional and physical "dis-spiritedness" often results from "soul-loss," a trauma that keeps us dissociated from life, our bodies, our relationships, and from feeling our connection with the natural world.

This workshop will involve both soul retrieval and shamanic methods for integrating retrieved parts. Workshop space is available for 12 participants to have a private session with a workshop leader who will act in the role of the shaman to spiritually retrieve lost parts lost in life traumas. Workshop space is also available for others who have already had a soul retrieval done.

The major focus of the workshop involves elements of core shamanism and practices involved in the reintegration of retrieved parts. The shamanic journey method and other practices for accessing important information for one’s healing will be taught. Activities will include rituals and ceremonies focusing on release and renewal as each individual discovers their own personal vision of well-being. There will be an emphasis on raising and using the power of our circle for personal healing and growth.

Please bring a bandana, journal, drums, and rattles (if you have them).

The Painting Experience
Michell Cassou & Stewart Cubley

It is rare for most people to use painting for its qualities of inner adventure and self-discovery, to paint purely for the process of exploration, not for the result.

The purpose of this workshop is to provide a setting to explore the self through painting — to discover in form and color a powerful tool for uncovering and dissolving blocks to emotional and spiritual expression. Participants will be given the support and stimulation to develop a natural way of painting based directly upon feeling. The work takes place in an authentic studio setting with large white surfaces to confront the creative void, along with a rich spectrum of colors and brushes. The workshop may be of interest to persons involved in a wide variety of disciplines, including art, education, counseling, and meditative practices. No prior experience in painting is necessary. Please bring a smock.

For further information about this workshop, contact: The Painting Experience Studio, 2101 20th Avenue, San Francisco, CA 94116, (415) 564-8515. $1110

Join the music, dancing, and celebration!

Practical Application of Ancient Initiatory Mysteries
Gideon Dreyer

Difficulties and obstructions tend to throw us back upon ourselves. During hard times we are often confronted with the parts of ourselves we usually try to avoid. It becomes easy to blame others for our difficulties, and we often deny what is happening in order to avoid dealing with ourselves. Difficult situations arise — that we can’t change. But what we can change is the way we react to them, and how we let them affect our lives.

Participants will examine and focus on the tendency to become immobilized when obstacles cross their path. The teachings given to neophytes during initiation rites in ancient India, Egypt, and Greece will be passed on and explored for their practical application in contemporary life. These initiation rites can help each individual reach a personal understanding of what is needed in order to react to difficult times with strength and confidence. The workshop will focus on spiritualizing thoughts, feelings, and actions, and cultivating the will to act accordingly. In this way, external obstacles become an occasion for inner enrichment and education. The workshop itself could be considered an initiation, inasmuch as each participant can emerge from it existentially changed.

Reinventing Love
Robert Solomon & Heather Maycock Ogilvy

"Reinventing Love" is an interpersonal probe into the most highly valued of all passions, its promise and its disappointments. The workshop will emphasize the essential creativity of love and the need to express and "reinvent" an emotion that is not torn between defensive individualism and independence. We will explore the myths of love in order to find out why love goes wrong, why we choose the wrong partners, and how to choose the right one in order for love to succeed.

Participants will examine the connection between intimacy and anger, and the fragile connection between love and dependency. Above all, our aim will be to understand why love is so important to us and why it cannot be abandoned.

Regenerative Architecture: Making Nature Visible through Design
Sim Van der Ryn

Is it possible to design environments — buildings, neighborhoods, cities — integrated into the beauty and function of living nature? How can nature and transformative processes — including human consciousness — serve as a model and analog for the design of human environments that, like nature, live off solar income, create no wastes, and provide biodiversity?

This workshop is for anyone interested in the principles of creating whole, healthy environments. We will examine ways to weave basic natural processes and cycles — food and energy production, waste and water recycling — into the design of everyday life in homes, neighborhoods, and cities, thus reuniting production, consumption, and reuse in ways that inform and develop a new ecologically-based aesthetic. The instructor will illustrate with examples from his own architectural and sustainable design practice.

The Esalen environment will be used as a study site to examine design opportunities and our own awareness of environmental processes and the many possibilities for living in harmony with them. $380

Body Poetry East & West
Chungliang Al Huang & Brother David Steindl-Rast

Both Chungliang and Brother David have given many workshops at Esalen. This is the first time, however, that these longtime friends are offering an Esalen workshop together. As two bridge builders between East and West, they will lead participants in exploring the ancient metaphors of fire, water, wood, metal, and earth through Tai Ji body movement and the play of poetic imagination.

Esalen provides a unique environment for this weeklong celebration of life: ocean, garden, hot springs, ancient trees, and human companionship all help us to find once again the hidden springs of aliveness and to release the powers of creativity.

Sexual Abuse Survivors: Specific Strategies for Body, Mind & Spiritual Healing
Carolyn Braddock

Countless numbers of children consider the exploitation of their bodies part of their formative experience. Trusted adults assault, neglect, and sexually abuse them, leaving physical and emotional scars. During sexual abuse/assault, the body is the scene of the crime. Consequently, body sensations may be blocked and a protective body belief system develops. The child learns very early not to have a voice. Focusing on body, mind, and spiritual intervention, this seminar adds new body-focused dimensions to traditional strategies in dealing with those who have experienced sexual abuse.

Professional counselors and others need special skills to work with these victims/survivors. The survivors themselves need to develop procedures to overcome the physical and emotional consequences of being abused. Seminar participants will learn a unique form of body-centered intervention. The focus will be on several different ways in which survivors have embodied the sexual abuse and ways of working with each embodiment through breath, sound, and movement. This approach is applicable for the traditional psychotherapist, body worker, and those in the medical profession.

Participants will explore the survivor's body, mind, and spiritual belief systems, and the physical and behavioral manifestation of moving beyond these experiences. The importance of understanding the various dimensions of a person's reactions, especially body reactions, to sexual abuse is the key to developing predictive tools and guidance for the intervention process.

The leader will present specific body-centered intervention strategies and will detail patterns of child abuse and neglect, family dynamics, and body reactions. Participants will be actively involved in intervention demonstrations, discussions of ethical issues and case presentations from a body-oriented perspective. The focus will be on individual and group process with some time devoted to legal issues. Breathwork, sound, movement, gestalt, bodywork, Tai Ji, role-playing, and creative cognitive work will also be used, creating a balance between work and play.

Note: This workshop is for professionals, those in training, and others who are interested in a new body-oriented approach to working with sexual abuse survivors.

Chakra Integration: A Total Approach to Health
Laurie Lioness Parizek & The Esalen Teaching Staff

This workshop addresses everyone but is of special interest to health-care workers, physicians, nurses, chiropractors, bodyworkers, and those interested in developing a working knowledge of the chakra system.

Chakras are vital life-enhancing centers that have their roots in the physical body, along the spine and deep in the brain. When open, they blossom like energetic flowers. When balanced, they refine the mainstream current of energy in the central nervous system and integrate the physical, spiritual, and energetic life of each individual.

This workshop will use meditation, sound, supportive hands-on work, and sensitive touch to balance the chakras and the mainstream spinal current. The aim is to gently and consciously open the channel that connects the earth to the heavens in each one of us. Experiences will be both private and shared. There will be an emphasis on centering, grounding, and breath practices.

Gentle, energetic touch, healing visualizations, a fluid bodywork style, and deep pressure-point release will be explored and integrated. How each participant can use this work with clients and patients, as well as friends and family, will be a focus of the workshop.

Healthy eating patterns that nourish the spiritual as well as the physical will be discussed and encouraged. Meditation will be used throughout the week to bring serenity and a deeper personal understanding and integration of the chakras.

Participants are invited to bring their favorite musical instrument and/or personal healing tools.

The Art of Talking & Listening
Mudita Nisker & Dan Clurman

Every day we swim in an ocean of words, talking and listening. Yet many people can barely tread water with their communication skills. Making yourself understood and understanding others is a subtle and precise art, yet it is often a neglected part of our education. Fortunately, you don't have to be a born communicator; it's something you can learn.

This workshop will teach you new ways to deal with many situations from negotiating with your partner, boss, or associates, to engaging your child's cooperation. Using discussion, demonstration, and role playing, participants will explore ways to:

- Give and receive criticism skillfully
- Send clear, concise messages which invite cooperation
- Share difficult to express feelings and still maintain good will
- Improve listening skills even in tough situations
- Identify your key assumptions and their effect on your communication patterns
- Develop non-verbal skills to enhance spoken messages
- Experience more delight in being with others.

This work draws from cognitive psychology, critical thinking, system theory, and Eastern philosophy. The objective will be to help each individual cultivate the ability to identify communication hot spots and work them out constructively. In the process, you can discover your own truth and honor the truth of others.

Powerfully Presenting Yourself
Mary Goldenson (Devarani), Paula Shaw & Robert Corff

This workshop will explore the inhibitions to self-expression and communication, and help us move beyond them with more freedom in both our personal and professional lives. It is designed for people who want to develop a more powerful personal and public presentation, and better professional and business communication skills.

Workshop leaders combine their expertise in the fields of psychology and the performing arts to guide you through this exciting adventure. The focus will be on self-exploration through individual and group work. Participants will use voice and body to express themselves with more power and passion. This process can help awaken your dreams and invigorate your life. $380

Cecelia Hurwich
There is no such thing as a typical experience of old age. Late life offers unique opportunities to grow on all levels — cognitive, moral, emotional, and spiritual. It can be the best and most rewarding time of life. Adapting to life’s circumstances and developing the power to influence our destiny as we age is to be vitally involved in creative aging.

The leader writes: “My ten-year longitudinal study on vitality and aging reveals four important characteristics present in creative agers: perceiving one’s life as meaningful; having close relationships with friends of all ages; continuing to grow; and maintaining one’s optimism.” During the weekend, participants will learn ways to tap into the characteristics that enhance creativity in later life. There will be a variety of experiential exercises with supportive discussion, focusing on how to incorporate these characteristics into our own aging process.

Participation in this workshop will be valuable for persons who want to explore new approaches to creative aging, as well as people dealing with aging family members and professionals working with older persons. $380

Learning the Craft of Dreamwork
Stephen Aizenstat
Dreams can be imagined as looking-glass parables, each a complex story that reflects the personality and soul of the dreamer. This weekend’s program will emphasize the healing potential of dream work. In so doing, the leader will review methods of dreamwork that consider the personal and collective unconscious.

New methods of dreamwork which take into account the world unconscious will be described. The world unconscious is seen as a deeper and broader dimension of the psyche and is imagined to contain the subjective inner nature (and subtle body) of all phenomena. It is believed that these inner subjective properties are reflected in the images of dreams and are, at an essential level, interrelated. It is at this level of the psyche that dream images provide access to an interconnected source of healing energy. This view, grounded in modern research and ancient wisdom, has practical implications for the use of dreams in physical and psychological healing.

Participants will learn how to employ specific methods of dreamwork which honor and actualize the healing potential of the psyche. Common dream themes, nightmares, lucid dreaming, archetypal imagery, and the recurring dream will all be discussed. $380

Mariah Fenton Gladis
Creating stable and fulfilling relationships is a challenge that everyone faces. To be successful, human relating must be understood and accepted as an activity, an ability that requires movement, purpose, emotional capacity, and extensive contact skills. People often believe that good relating evolves naturally, but they discover in the routine of living with families, friends, and lovers that, in truth, they have not been adequately prepared to meet the demands of loving relationships.

This workshop will focus on the nature and basic requirements of healthy relationships. It will offer participants opportunities to assess their abilities and disabilities, to develop awareness, and to practice risking positive action with others. It is for anyone who has “hit the wall” in a relationship or who has experienced being stuck at some seemingly impenetrable contact boundary and wants to break through. Particularly helpful for adult children of dysfunctional families, ACAs, and human relations professionals, this experiential and didactic workshop will blend individual and group gestalt work, spiritual healing, body work, and personal metaphor. $380

Cross-Cultural Shamanic Practices
Angeles Arrien
Participants in this workshop will be introduced to shamanic tools from diverse cultures in order to access and empower their inner teacher, healer, visionary, and warrior. The universal healing salves of singing, storytelling, dancing, and silence will be engaged to rekindle the spirit and retrieve any soul loss.

Group members will work individually and collectively to honor ancestor spirits by releasing limiting family patterns, enhancing personal and professional power by speaking with “spirit tongue” (truth-telling), and experiencing shamanic practices that reveal internal mythology, help heal wounds, and adjust imbalances.

This week qualifies as a foundational training for the Four-Fold Way, a cross-cultural shamanic training program by Angeles Arrien. $740

Creating is a Joy
James Fadiman
The body and mind screen and reveal the light blazing inside us. Creating is always self-healing. Real freedom allows real creativity.

Together we will strive to maintain an open flow between ourselves and our creative projects. Mornings we will uncover what inspires, interrupts, defeats, and sustains us. When we need it, we will use teaching stories and beauty-finding exercises.

Afternoons we will work on our own projects, alone or together. Evenings we will share, support, and help one another pry our jewels out of our stones.

Bring projects you are stuck on, working with, or starting. Include whatever you need to do your work, be it paints and canvas, word-processors, or carving tools. You just might have a breakthrough. $740

Creating Exact Moments of Healing
Mariah Fenton Gladis
Adult children of alcoholic, dysfunctional, or abusive families (ACAs) must walk a road of recovery that requires determination, life-long commitment, and the creation of specific moments of healing. This workshop offers participants an opportunity to take a major step toward health, helping them define a plan for necessary moments of innocence so they can move forward, transforming their personal history from one of liability to one of strength and wisdom. Focus will be on the promotion of healing in four fundamental relationships:

- With oneself — developing awareness, freedom from addictions, and healing of the body and soul from the residual effects of trauma;
- With others — improving one's capacity for moving out of isolation and into direct, open communication and trust; expanding intimacy skills while securing healthy boundaries;
- In the world — moving away from chaos and deprivation toward stability and abundance;
- Spiritually — searching for the meaning of one's history and accessing that part of the self that can utilize universal blessings.

This workshop will be experiential and didactic, blending individual and group gestalt work, music, spiritual practices, and body work. A step-by-step recovery process developed by the leader will be incorporated throughout the workshop. The atmosphere will be one of trust and mutual support. This workshop is also appropriate for professionals who work with ACAs. Please bring a mirror and photographs of yourself at all ages.

Introduction to Vipassana Meditation

James Baraz

Vipassana (Insight) meditation is the practice described by the Buddha for developing wisdom, compassion, and peace. Vipassana, "to see things clearly," means being mindful of what is actually happening in the present moment. Using the breath, body sensations, thought, and emotions as objects of attention, we can learn to be fully awake and bring a balanced awareness to all aspects of our lives.

Through Vipassana meditation we experience the nature of reality as continuous change. When we see that all phenomena are impermanent, we can begin to let go of clinging to the pleasant or avoiding the unpleasant. We are then more capable of meeting each situation with spontaneity, fearlessness, and love. Meditation also teaches us to see in each moment the interconnectedness of all things. Our hearts open to a natural expression of compassion and kindness.

Participants will be introduced to this method of meditation practice and the principles on which it is based. There will be periods of silent sitting and walking meditation, as well as discussion. As we bring attention to all of our activities at Esalen, we will continue to develop mindfulness through the weekend. This will provide a foundation for applying Vipassana practice to everyday life.

Boundaries and Relationships: Principles from Aikido and Intuition Training

Wendy Palmer

By using the body as a reference point, we can experience boundaries energetically in addition to emotionally. Exercises done as a group or in pairs can provide an opportunity to observe our patterns of inter-relating and to practice contacting our bodily intuition. These exercises, derived from the principles of aikido, enable us to train our states of attention, deepen our sense of self, and strengthen our capacity for relationships.

Participants will try to cultivate the "art of not-knowing," the "power of not doing, but rather of being." Our masculine side, "the doer" tends to overshadow our less developed feminine side — the non-active "being." There is a profound power in stillness and vulnerability awaiting our discovery.

No previous knowledge/experience of aikido is needed.

Christine Stewart Price & Guest Leaders

This workshop is for those people who have previously taken a "Gestalt Practice" workshop and want to return to a no frills group of straight open-seat work. (Please refer to the "Gestalt Practice" description of January 23-28 for more information about introductory workshops.) The group will be limited to ten participants, and each person can count on time for an individual open seat session with one of the leaders. The Evil Eye: A Workshop on Envy

Kathleen Riordan Speeth

Envy is perhaps the deadliest of the seven deadly sins: it is hatred for the good just because it is good. Yet almost every human being has felt its pangs, or the intense discomfort of being its target. There is the envy of the loser for the winner, of youth for maturity, of women for men and men for women, not to mention power-envy, sibling rivalry, mother-envy, sexual envy, and even spiritual envy. The nursery, the boardroom, and the corridors of power are rife with envy. What to do? Everywhere those who deem themselves "have-nots" live in envy of those they perceive as "haves." In this atmosphere of dissatisfaction, ill-will abounds.

During this weekend we will study the plight of feeling envy or being envied, and explore ways to prevent its destructive effects. Fear of being envied diminishes creativity and compassion. What is the best strategy? Confrontation? Withdrawal? There must be better ways.

The experience of envy itself, its lineaments and worries, its night anguish and day slips, will be exposed so that healing can begin. There are ways to use envy energy for the betterment of all. The possibilities of constructive repentence and reframing, of emulation and goodwill, are always available. Envy is despair of ever grasping the good — yet abundance is a choice and a frame of mind that is always available to those who wish it.

The antidote to envy is lovingkindness. Come rid yourself of the destructive effects of giving — or receiving — the evil eye.

Introduction to Vipassana Meditation

James Baraz

Vipassana (Insight) meditation is the practice described by the Buddha for developing wisdom, compassion, and peace. Vipassana, "to see things clearly," means being mindful of what is actually happening in the present moment. Using the breath, body sensations, thought, and emotions as objects of attention, we can learn to be fully awake and bring a balanced awareness to all aspects of our lives.

Through Vipassana meditation we experience the nature of reality as continuous change. When we see that all phenomena are impermanent, we can begin to let go of clinging to the pleasant or avoiding the unpleasant. We are then more capable of meeting each situation with spontaneity, fearlessness, and love. Meditation also teaches us to see in each moment the interconnectedness of all things. Gestalt Practice

Christine Stewart Price & Guest Leaders
The Way, when declared
Seems so thin and flavorless.
Nothing to look at, nothing to hear—
And when used—is inexhaustible. —LAO Tzu

Gestalt practice is a form—nonanalytic, noncoercive, nonjudgmental—evolving out of the work of Fritz Perls. The work integrates ways of personal clearing and development that are both ancient and modern. To the extent that awareness is made primary relative to action, gestalt practice has a strong relationship to some forms of meditation and visualization. This form is similar to some Reichian work as well, in that emotional and energetic release and rebalancing are allowed and encouraged.

The emphasis is intrapersonal rather than interpersonal. It is explicitly understood that participants are not patients but persons actively consenting to work (or play) in awareness. The leader functions to reflect, clarify, and respect whatever emerges in this process. The aim is unfolding, wholeness, and growth, rather than adjustment, cure or accomplishment. Through group exercises, meditations, and open-seat work, this workshop will introduce participants to the gestalt practice approach.

Spiritual Dimensions of Healing
Elizabeth Stratton

The desire to heal and be healed is a deep need within every human being. Seeing someone we love in pain brings out the instinct to touch that person in a compassionate way. Feeling or being ill ourselves can lead us to explore both spiritual and scientific dimensions of healing that we would otherwise not be open to.

Psychic healing, with its focus on the laying on of hands, understanding the meaning of the illness, and seeing into the heart of the person who is ill, brings a spiritual dimension to healing that can be a valuable adjunct to modern medicine and its high technology.

This workshop will provide both theoretical and practical tools to awaken the healer within. Self-healing methods such as opening the energy centers (chakras), communicating with the body, and guided healing imagery will be explored to assist participants in taking charge of their own health. In addition, participants will begin to learn to work with others in a healing capacity through laying on of hands and psychic healing.

Weekend of January 28-30

A Weekend with David Schiffman

To make effective, creative choices, you need courage, imagination, and the willingness to know your heart and be true to the dreams that live inside it. Choosing this deeper wisdom can often involve the risk of breaking set—the choice to move against the powerful grain of old fears, habits, and constant pressure of other people's expectations. To foster this spirit means contacting the elemental, instinctual parts of our natures, befriending rather than suppressing or denying the sexuality and power out of which initiative and enthusiasm spring.

During this weekend we will focus on how to develop a more adventurous, resourceful, and buoyant way of living. In an atmosphere based on warmth and humor, we will explore our capacity for mutual tenderness, respect, and honesty. Traditional psychological practices such as gestalt, bioenergetics, and psychosynthesis will be used for intensive individual work, as well as non-traditional innovative approaches in bodywork, kinesthetic retraining, music, and guided imagery.

Walking the Labyrinth: Reflecting on the Spirit in Our Lives

Lauren Artress

The labyrinth is a model of spiritual cosmology that is quite recognizable to the modern mentality since this understanding disappeared after the acceptance of Descartes' world view and the split of the mind/body/spirit. —Keith Critchlow, Architect and expert on the sacred geometry of Chartres Cathedral.

We are pressured and rushed most of our waking hours, and consequently forget or neglect to encourage and honor our connection to the Source, the Divine. However, one defines the sense of something greater than ourselves.

This contemplative weekend will be spent walking the labyrinth as a way to wind down and reflect on what we hold sacred in our lives. Walking meditation will be the central focus supported by journaling exercises and mandala drawing to review our peaks and valleys. Participants will work toward gaining perspective on the major concerns presently confronting them in their lives. $380

Carolyn Braddock

The people we serve in the healing professions can only go as far as we're willing to go in our own healing process. Past traumas of our own sexual abuse (and/or other forms of abuse) are often triggered as we work deeply with our clients. When these events are triggered, all our relationships are affected—those with our clients, ourselves, and those close to us. In order to work most effectively and compassionately in our profession, we need to work towards clearing up our unresolved issues. This workshop will help explore the ways in which we block our own growth and healing.

Participants will work on clearing the old, unresolved issues in their lives and explore the belief systems that have acted as barriers to their own personal healing process. In doing this, a balance will be created between work and play. Time will also be spent working on setting limits and defining clear boundaries.

Through gestalt, ritual, humor, breath, sound, movement, creative arts exercises, and case presentations, new ways of intervention and healing will be explored, both for ourselves and our clients.

Note: This workshop is for professionals and those in training.

Psychic Self Defense

Elizabeth Stratton

As most of us know from our own experience, working with or around people who are depressed, hostile, or anxious can affect our own moods and feelings. We are constantly affected by the emotions and thoughts of those around us, as well as by the accumulated moods of the environment in which we live and work. We can also be affected by the illnesses of people we are close to, sometimes to the point of actually manifesting their symptoms ourselves.

During this weekend we will have the opportunity to explore our psychic boundaries and discover how and when they can overflow into areas that cause emotional confusion. We will learn how to release negativity and strengthen boundaries that can help us to be less vulnerable in the future.

Accepting Life’s Transitions: Letting Go — Moving On

Mary Goldenson (Devarami)

The only certainty in life is change, yet we often resist our transitions because of patterns of fear and self-denial. Old beliefs keep us stuck in our resentments, unsuccessful marriages, friendships and careers, and can cause illness, sorrow, and the inability to forgive. Transitions are crossroads in our lives that give us the opportunity to take time out and reconnect with our truth. It is never too late to change. Transitions are doors to the renewal of our passions, courage, and commitments.

This workshop will provide you with ways to help complete the past, be open to the present, and create a future. Participants will experience a safe, supportive environment that includes taking risks, intense bodywork, gestalt imagery, dance, and meditation, in order to support the transitions that keep us committed to the process of discovering ourselves.

Partnerships of Love and Work: The Enneagram of Relationships

Helen Palmer

The logic and integrity of different styles of relating is modeled by an ancient typology called the enneagram, which identifies nine personality types and the way in which they interact. The outer study of the system correlates well with current psychological thinking, but describes optimal ways of relating rather than pathological trends. No way is better than another, but they differ radically in their point of view. At a deeper level of understanding, the preoccupations of thought and emotion that characterize each type are revealed as a continuum of experience that leads us to aspects of type such as empathy, omniscience, and love.

We will review the nine types from panels drawn from the class, and in so doing experience the styles of other seminar participants without interference from our own relationship bias. Adopting the view of a close companion breeds compassion and allows us to:

- See ourselves through the eyes of others and feel the pressure of their emotional life
- Recognize those “irreconcilable differences” that are simply the result of different internal logic
- Understand different views on relating
- Transform our tendencies into their higher attributes.

Emphasis will be on inner material, not personal process work. This is a highly interactive format. Bring your current relationship questions. This intensive can be applied as one of the prerequisites for the Enneagram Professional Training Program. Previous work with the enneagram is required. If you would like to discuss your background, contact the leader at (510) 843-7621. Workshop is limited to 40 participants.

Sports Massage

David Streeter

This workshop will focus on aspects of sports massage that prove useful in other massage modalities. The curriculum includes: anatomy, to understand the rhythmic coordination of muscles working together; cross-fiber or cross-friction massage, simple strokes that promote healthy muscle tissue; and trigger point massage, to locate and relieve sensitive and congested points in muscle bundles and tendons. Trigger point work has proven beneficial in reducing myofascial pain caused by chronic tension.

Participants will progress through a study of the entire musculoskeletal system via brief lectures, hands-on practice, and one-to-one instruction. This workshop takes a simplified approach to what is usually a complex subject and gives participants a better idea of just what lies beneath their hands, and how to more effectively communicate with the human body. It is open to all levels.

Self-Empowerment and Purification: The Farther Reaches of Gestalt Therapy

Julian Silverman

“We badly need a new orientation, a new perspective,” wrote Fritz Perls. “We have graduated from the infants’, ‘I can’t help myself,’ to the adults’, ‘I can’t help myself because . . . ’ But psychology and psychiatry were never meant to be after-the-fact justifications for continuing neurotic behavior, behavior which does not permit the individual to live up to the maximum of his capacities.”

This workshop combines experiential and didactic sessions. It’s primary focus is on developing a new perspective — the integration of a “purification process” with a personal psychology of empowerment. This psychology of self-empowerment is grounded in modern science and ancient wisdom.

Introductory Workshop Principle #1: Take responsibility for every emotion, every movement you make, every thought you have.

Journey to a Conscious Partnership

Harville Hendrix & Helen Hunt

Intimate relationships between men and women are a source of emotional healing, psychological growth, and spiritual evolution. In contrast to traditional views of healing that focus on the individual, this workshop views the intimate male/female relationship as a more effective path to healing and personal self-completion. Exploring the thesis that the purpose of the unconscious in a relationship is to complete your childhood, participants will be introduced to Imago Relationship Therapy and guided through exercises that will enable them to reinterpret conflict as an unconscious attempt at self-healing, use their relationship to achieve personal wholeness, and create a conscious partnership characterized by safety and passion.

The concept of working with someone's essential being is another aspect that will be addressed.

Awakened Mind: Five-Day Brain-Wave Training Intensive

Anna Wise

The Awakened Mind is a state of consciousness that releases deep inner resources, capacities, and powers that often lie dormant and inaccessible. This workshop will help you develop the intricate combinations of brain wave frequencies that underlie optimum mental states. Biofeedback monitoring combined with different methods of meditation, visualization or "sensualization," and deep psychophysiological relaxation will help you learn how to master your own brain waves.

Techniques for accessing repressed memories and creating a bridge between your conscious and your unconscious mind will be taught. Bridging this gap and making this connection with your innermost self allows you to begin a process that encourages healing and integration. The leader will also focus on the importance of the interrelationship between brain waves and the human energy system, specifically the kundalini process.

Jack Rosenberg & Beverly Kitaen Morse

Most couples are reluctant to seek help in their relationships, instead they wait, hoping that the relationship will improve. If couples approached medical help the same way they approach marriage counseling, many of them would visit the doctor when they ought to be lining up at the mortician.

Designed on a preventive model, this workshop will deal with the underlying structures and defenses in relationships before they surface as terminal problems. It will also examine attitudes and beliefs about sexuality and how to make sex better.

The Light at the End of History

Terence McKenna

Nature as both the ground of being and the mysterious transcendent dimension into which history is being dissolved will set the theme. The approach of the Third Millennium provides a sense of urgency and exuberance as we explore the implications of different cultural images of nature from Archaic Gaiaism to constituted Christianity, thanatoptic modernity, and psychedelic and techno-millenarianism. A kind of strolling lawn party through the pleasantly replanted wreckage of Western Civilization is planned. Emphasis will be on sharing experiences and ideas that empower each of us and the language composed reality that is ours alone. The power of experience, understanding, language, and imagination in the life of the emergent neoclassical movement will be our springboard to deeper matters: nature, history, and making conscious the task of fusing current cultural chaos into the feminized psilochannel.

Mastering the Competitive Mind

Jena Marcovicci

In athletics as well as our professional lives, what matters most is the "score." Challenges are about winning at the expense of your partner and who you are. What has been lost is the fun and joy of just playing, or finding meaning in what you do.

Jena Marcovicci is a sports psychotherapist who has worked with world-class tennis players and has seen what the pressures of competition can do to the human psyche. He leads "Dance of Tennis" workshops throughout the world and is experienced at helping people let go of conditioned behavior patterns that sabotage the joy and effort of playing a sport, or simply being successful in a particular aspect of either their professional or personal life.

The leader writes: "The more you relax, the better you play. It's the law of 'reversed effort.' By combining the Greek root of competition, meaning 'to rise together,' with the joy of your organic rhythms, you liberate yourself from your fight and flight reptilian mind set that envisions the person on the other side as the enemy. The result is a more balanced perspective that expresses power with, as opposed to power over."

Whether you are a serious athlete, a would-be athlete, or someone who wants to learn to master your "competitive mind," this workshop can help redefine what winning means to you on a very personal level. Yoga, Tai Chi, discussion, and visual imagery will be used. Turn your adversaries into dancing partners and enjoy a whole new perspective on what winning really means. $380

David Whyte

This is a workshop for the New Year concerned with remembering half-forgotten and neglected desires that are central to our personal creativity and destiny. Fire has been an abiding image for creativity throughout human history, but the first steps into that flame depend upon our ability to rest in the silence present in our own bodies. These disciplines of silence are a way of understanding desire at a level deeper than we ordinarily experience.

Much of modern life distances us from our bodies, presenting the body as a problem to overcome rather than the center of our experience. In hard times we often find it more difficult to remember rest and silence, and it's during these times that we need them the most. At the very start of the new year, this should be a time to remember through poetry, silence, voice work, and movement, the priorities closest to our heart's desire.

Ability or knowledge of poetry welcomed, but not the least bit necessary. $380

This workshop is an opportunity to learn and practice gentle yet powerful skills to bring the craniosacral system into balance. There will... be hands-on demonstrations of a variety of methods for tapping into bone and membrane motion, rhythm, amplitude quality, restriction, and interference.

Demonstrations will be followed by supervised practice. Time will also be spent evoking and developing palpatory sensitivity and fine-tuning the quality of touch.

This workshop is for people with a strong interest in developing hands-on skills and for those already practicing body work or counseling. Much of the focus will be on the head, jaw, neck, pelvis, and diaphragm systems. Cranial work can be effective in shifting emotional holding patterns and draining accumulated stress in the nervous system.

Playing the Edge

David Schiffman

In the early stages of growth, success seems to be its own reward. Excitement, vitality, and the willingness to face life boldly are often characteristics of those who are involved in new and successful ventures. To keep this spirit alive is not easy. The enormous pressure, the grinding routines and demands of substantial involvement can dispirit even the healthiest people. To listen to one's heart and know what's real requires the courage to pause. In this willingness to stop and listen to the deeper self lives the true resources that guide and protect us.

The purpose of this week is to create a mood of sanctuary for people who are in transition and facing major changes in career, relationship, or matters of the spirit; those in need of a break from demanding stressful responsibilities; individuals interested in breaking new ground in the areas of self-nurturance, intuitive functioning, and problem-solving.

The process will be gently restorative, illuminating, and enlivening. The group intention will be to create a community based on trust and goodwill with emphasis on individual freedom. Traditional methods of self-inquiry (gestalt practice, bioenergetics, psychosynthesis) will be combined with innovative methods using music, meditation, poetry, and prayer to foster this spirit of living fully and comfortably. $740

Joyce & Brian Lyke

As we approach the end of the millennium, humankind appears to be returning to the place where this cycle of spiritual and intellectual development began. We have thirsted for knowledge and an understanding of the nature of things. We have hungered for power and dominance over our environment. We have searched and explored the far reaches of our planet and solar system, and we have longed to find meaning and purpose in our activities. Instead, we have found that our technical abilities and scientific explorations have outpaced our spiritual understanding and our ability to be effective caretakers of this planet. There is much suffering, pain, and disillusionment among us. We have gained the world, and lost our souls.

This workshop is about Spirit, and listening and opening to its voice. Our intention is to find and nourish the Spirit within each one of us and in the circle we form together. We will use Sufi self-remembering exercises, meditation, gestalt awareness practice, movement, and rituals drawn from Native American tradition. Our primary resource, apart from our collective life experience, is Nature and the Spirit of the Esselen land. $740

Phil Cardillo

The Feldenkrais Method is becoming well-known throughout the world as a subtle and powerful tool for self-growth. Its usefulness is wide-ranging. It is extremely effective for dealing with back and neck pain, for children with learning disabilities, for athletes or dancers who want to move more elegantly and gracefully, for artists who want to stimulate their creativity, and for anyone who wants to increase sensitivity and kinesthetic awareness.

The work is effective in all these settings because of a process which it stimulates in the nervous system: a process of LEARNING.

This workshop will focus this powerful learning method on the art of musical improvisation. In a safe, supportive environment, we will explore simple jazz standards, blues, and modal improvisation. Players of all instruments (including voice) at all levels, are welcome, especially beginners. We'll spend lots of time singing and jamming, tuning into our bodies, allowing music to flow through us that will delight us with its beauty and passion.

Come prepared for a weekend of deep work, cleverly disguised as lots of fun. $380

Toward Waking Up: Cultivating Mindfulness

Charles Tart

Ordinary consciousness is a kind of waking sleep, an absorption in our personal and cultural illusions. This apparently strange Eastern concept is actually supported in detail by Western psychological data. Given this, how can we awaken? Our essential selves are often invalidated and suppressed in childhood, as part of "education." How can we rediscover and nourish them? Our instinctual and sensory wisdom lies buried under cultural noise and distraction. How can we come to our senses?

G. I. Gurdjieff, one of the first teachers to adapt Eastern spiritual methods to Western culture, developed practices for awakening from our sleep, our cultural trance. Occasional retreats to exotic places like Esalen are quite useful, but ordinary life is the best setting for using psychological and spiritual development practices that emphasize balanced work on mind, emotions, instincts, and body. In this workshop we will examine Gurdjieff's main ideas, adding to them from, and integrating them with, modern growth psychology.

Self-observation and self-remembering will be taught as a primary meditation-in-life for increasing self-understanding and living more effectively in the here-and-now. These techniques use that most marvelous tool that is always with us, our bodies. We will also review basic formal meditation practice as an aid to mindfulness. Emphasis will be on practicing awakening as part of everyday life.

Making It Float

Robert Hall

There is no fixing a damaged childhood. The best you can hope for is to make the sucker float.

—CONROY

Robert Hall writes: "And so it is. This workshop is about making it float. How to. If you're willing to spend some time with meditation, gestalt group process, making sounds, and experimenting with moving your body to your own rhythms, if you're interested in how body awareness, psychotherapy, and meditation work together to loosen your identification with who you think you are, and if you still have your sense of humor, we'll not only make it float, we'll take a ride in it."

Writing through Loss

Nancy Bacal

To write from the heart is to heal the heart...

One of life's most unavoidable realities is that we all experience loss. Whether it be with love, death, youth, health, marriage, or work, and whether we like it or not, we are all subject to the rules of the universe. Illusion begins when we expect continuance; when we believe we can manipulate life in accordance with our plans. Loss inevitably involves pain, and pain becomes suffering when we resist life as it is — when we deny ourselves the natural rhythms of mourning and change.

This workshop is intended to help participants pave a way to joy through surrender and the expression of true feelings. It is also an opportunity to use loss as a bridge to a new perspective on life. Rather than let ourselves feel diminished by what is gone, we will utilize it as material for writing. Even the cruelest tragedy can be transformed through the practice of writing and the telling of stories. As we write, we come to know ourselves; as we share, we move out of isolation. The dark riches of our lives are released to deepen our emotional and creative lives, and inspire the journey of our companions.

Meditation, movement, and/or hiking will be included, but our primary tools will be pen and paper. More than skill, enthusiasm for the writing process and a desire for change are the only requirements.

Turning on the Light:
A Choice to Live Consciously

Laura DeNuccio & Guest Leaders

In the sunlight of awareness, each thought and action becomes sacred. —THICH NHAT HANH

Living life fully is a choice that is made moment-to-moment by each individual. In this workshop, a safe environment will be created to honor, empower, and celebrate each person as we explore what it means to live life more fully.

This workshop will engage participants in personal exploration and growth as it relates to daily living. This will be offered primarily as an awareness practice for increasing mindfulness, self-understanding, and the ability to enter one's experience more fully.

Emphasis will be on cultivating compassion and patience as we each learn how to come into alignment with our truths in a healthy relationship with ourselves, others, and the planet.

Participants will explore many aspects of the unfolding self — physically, energetically, mentally, sexually, and spiritually. Each of these aspects will be addressed through conscious breathwork, sound, creative movement, and visioning. Guided meditations will be included for increasing body awareness and aliveness, for dissolving and balancing energetic blockages, and to quiet, still, and expand the mind.

During this week of self-care, time will be scheduled for group meditation, yoga, and light hiking in the beauty of Big Sur. Applying the creative use of the Spoken Word, participants will explore and expand the possibilities both for themselves and the world in which they live.

A Workshop for Couples: Independence & Intimacy

Mary Goldenson (Devarani)

Very little in our culture prepares couples for the challenge, "There is room for both of us." Too often the relationship becomes a battleground for unresolved issues, hurts, and beliefs. In this workshop, couples will have an opportunity to explore and reclaim the unspoken ground for unresolved issues, hurts, and beliefs. They will have a supportive environment where they can experience themselves as courageous and able to take risks. Experiential processes will be drawn from gestalt, Reichian work, dance, imagery, and meditation. $380

Prisons, Passions & Play

Stephanie Waxman & Dennis Hicks

Is your passion withering, locked behind bars of old fears and new worries? Is your playfulness kept prisoner by a self-conscious, uptight guard?

This workshop will utilize two processes that can help passion and play can become a more dynamic part of your life. "Council," also known as "talking circle," is a process that uses a talking stick to implement communication. Council may be the oldest democratic group process in the world. Used by many peoples, including Native Americans and Quakers, Council allows each person to speak his or her truth and each listener to bear witness. This traditional process can have a powerful effect on communication and introspection.

The Vision and Practice of Human Transformation

George Leonard

It may be argued that, in potenca, every human being is a genius, and that the ultimate creative capacity of the human brain/body is, for all practical purposes, infinite. Each of us is a prodigious learning animal, and our ultimate destiny may well be to evolve capacities that would now be termed extraordinary. Perhaps it is only due to the limitations imposed by faulty notions of child-rearing and schooling, along with the failure of national vision and practice, that we rarely develop even a small fraction of our potential.
Interspersed with the Councils will be a process of play based on theater games. Insights gained from working together in Council will be explored through improvisational theater techniques such as mirroring, nonverbal and physical work with images, and the re-enactment of our personal and collective metaphors. The centering experience of Council combined with the healing power of play can help you discover the keys to your own prisons.

The workshop will take advantage of the unique atmosphere at Esalen. Participants will draw on the natural environment so they can create their own talking stick, making it easier to bring Council home with you.

Each participant is asked to bring an “object of passion” to the first session. It should be something about which you feel passionate or something which represents your passion.

When Success Is Not Enough
Peller Marion

If I had known what it would be like to have it all, I would have settled for less. —LILY TOMLIN

Since 1950, materialism has sky-rocketed in the United States. Indeed, many of us are wealthy beyond the wildest dreams of our ancestors, and yet we struggle more than ever for self-esteem and meaning in our lives.

When alternative measures of success are not available, the deep human need to be valued and respected by others is acted out through consumption. Buying things becomes both a means to self-esteem and social acceptance. “The avarice of mankind is insatiable,” wrote Aristotle, who believed that as soon as one desire was satisfied, another would appear to take its place. If our wants are insatiable, there is simply no such thing as enough.

Peller Marion has designed a weekend that explores the questions: How much is enough? What is an achievement junkie? What is my definition of success at this time in my life? How do I create my own personal philosophy of life? How do I live by my own agenda?

Participants will explore the paradox of success in their lives. A variety of experiential processes will be drawn from readings and discussion, games, dance, gestalt, imagery, and meditation.

Ritual, Ecstasy, and Women’s Spirituality
Margo Adler

This workshop for women explores the ideas, the rituals, and the celebrations that come out of the women’s spirituality movement. Margo Adler uses chant, songs, and sacred circles as ways for women to explore the healing power, joy, and ease that comes from doing rituals with women. The basic philosophy that informs this workshop is neopaganism and goddess spirituality. This perspective is non-hierarchical and starts with the idea that we, ourselves, are sacred and flowing with potential. Ritual is a tool that can end our alienation from nature and from each other. The workshop explores ways of reclaiming the vitality and mystery of ecstatic religions without the dogmatic and patriarchal attitudes that have caused so many women to leave their own religious traditions.

The workshop will combine joyful exuberance (chants, laughter, songs, and drumming) with time for quiet meditation, including a voyage to meet the Goddess within ourselves. This should be two days filled with joy and fun. Please bring drums, rattles, instruments, and one or two personal items that have special significance to place on a community altar as a way of sharing your own stories. $380

Language of the Drums: African Percussion, Chanting, and Dance
Babatunde Olatunji & Friends

Nigerian musician Babatunde Olatunji has been bridging the gap between American and African culture for thirty years. In this workshop he will show how drum sounds and rhythms communicate, stimulate, and pace the activities of traditional African life. He will teach the consonants of the Yoruba language, reproducing its sounds on drums and through chants, body percussion, and dance. This workshop is for dancers, percussionists, musicians, and anyone who wants to speak the language of the drums. Drummers can experience the dance, and dancers can experience the drums. Bring a drum if you have one.

Please Note: This has always been a popular workshop, with lots of people drumming and dancing in a small area. The energy runs high — be prepared for a crowded, exuberant atmosphere. $740

The Russian Idea: Why Is It So Appealing?
Viktor Erofeyev, Slava Loutchkov & Dulce Murphy

While all nations are different, some are "more different" than others. This is particularly true about Russia — Western oriented, Christian in faith, and yet historically and geographically obliged to process a millennium of the East. Russian culture has always been somewhere between East and West, never completely Eastern, never completely Western, always uniquely Russian. The West for centuries has lived as a community of nations, while Russia, although feeling close to the West, was never perceived as a legitimate part of this family. And for the past 75 years Russia has been led down a dark path of communist experimentation. They never were the same, but the Russians are now unbelievably different from Americans in their ideas about love, death, authority, money, God, truth, freedom, democracy, alcohol, fun, sex, crime, and punishment!

The leaders will help you enter the world that is Russia. Viktor Erofeyev is a writer from Moscow. His most recent book, Russian Beauty, has just been published by Viking Press. Slava Loutchkov is a Russian psychologist who is also the vice-president of the Esalen Russian-American Exchange Center and coordinator of the Russian-American Program for Promotion of Psychology in Russia. Dulce Murphy, executive director of the Esalen Russian-American Exchange Center, has 14 years of experience working in and with Russia. She has travelled to Russia over thirty times and survived!

You will be introduced to maps and photographs of Russia, as well as Russian movies, music, and works of art. Together the group will try to expand perspectives on the psychological, political, and economic life of Russia today.

Soul Dramas: Past-Life Regression & Spiritual Healing
Roger Woolger

Soul dramas are the daily emotional patterns, roles, and scripts we get stuck in and habitually act out. Some believe that although the soul first staged its dramas around childhood trauma, it had already rehearsed them in utero and had written them long ago from the ancient store of past-life melodramas we all carry.

Soul dramas can be tragic, pathetic, humorous, or banal, and when left unrecognized can cause anxiety, depression and rage, or a deep sense of dissatisfaction and alienation. The leader's method of releasing and transforming these compulsive dramas involves regression to buried memories and past lives, as well as after-death encounters in the spirit realms called "bardos" by Tibetan Buddhists. Participants will be taught simple methods for body release, healing catharsis, and the reintegration of lost parts of the soul.

Through his experience in psychotherapy and bodywork (Jung, Reich, and Gestalt), Roger Woolger can help bring people through deep transformative experiences with great compassion, creating an atmosphere that is safe and contained. He can also help illuminate the broader spiritual picture: everything from Sufism to Western mysticism to Shakespeare — teaching with humor through poetry, music, story, and meditation.

Toward an Embodied Wisdom
Brita Ostrom & Staff

The significant problems we face cannot be solved at the same level of thinking we were at when we created them. — ALBERT EINSTEIN

This workshop will draw upon the growing field of somatics in order to identify and open new sources of personal guidance. Rather than abiding by the old adage "Use your head!", participants will access the knowledge available through their body/mind experiences to help find creative solutions and direction in their lives.

Participants will work to gain access to this somatic wisdom by educating their senses to once again feel and respond. Attitudinal blocks in the body will be explored and unlocked, in order for new information and different "mind sets" to become available. Through this work participants can discover their own sense of "environmental awareness" as a source of spiritual renewal, as well as be replenished by the mountains, sea, and land.

The group will use the tools of meditation, personal awareness work, guided massage, non-strenuous movement, and the Big Sur environment.

This workshop is suitable for those seeking creative growth or healing, beginning and advanced bodywork students, and those looking for ways to bring a sense of embodied wisdom into their work.

The Language of the Drum: Advanced Level
Babatunde Olatunji

This workshop is designed for those who would like to further explore the polyrhythmic aspect of African music. It will include exploring varying combinations of rhythmic patterns, rhythmic exercises to help develop stamina and dexterity of the hands and fingers on the drum, the ability to play rhythmic patterns on two drums, and the use of sticks in playing. Participants will be introduced to different styles of playing the Agogo (cow bell), Sekere (African maracas), and body percussion.

There will be time devoted to open discussion of the healing power of the drum through history. The group will learn how to meditate with drumming and chanting. No special dancing is involved in this class except for occasional movements conducted by the leader.

Class is open to those who have taken at least two full workshops with Babatunde Olatunji or a professional percussionist.

Things to bring: one or two drums, Congas, Djembes, or Ashikos; Sekere (African maracas); Agogo (cow bells); and Junjun (not required). $380

Courage
Joyce Frazee

In the mouth of the dragon there are many jewels. — BUDDHIST PROVERB

For some of us it takes courage just to live our daily lives. Every day we awaken to face the demons in our lives — demons that come in many forms: perfectionism, guilt, avoidance, shame, despair, failure. Time passes and we become skillful at living despite the constant awareness that these demons are preventing us from experiencing the fullness of life. Their existence drains our energy and limits our joy.
Clinical Program for Professionals: Treatment of Post-Traumatic Stress Disorder and Dissociative Disorders
Daniel Brown
This workshop is for clinicians actively treating patients with post-traumatic stress disorder (PTSD) or dissociative personality disorder, who wish an overview of the assessment of PTSD and DD and a detailed account of treatment. The workshop includes a model for assessing simple and complicated post-traumatic sequelae and an integrative phase-oriented treatment plan.

As a treatment-focused workshop, the course will cover in-depth specific psychotherapeutic strategies for each stage in the overall treatment course: stabilization, systematic uncovering of traumatic memories, integration of fragmented representations, self-development, attenuating physiological reactivity, and self/affect integration. A rationale will be given for systematic treatment selection from a wide range of interventions (psychodynamic, developmental, behavioral, hypnotherapeutic, systemic, somatic, and cultural), according to the specificity of PTSD or DD sequelae and the stage of recovery.

The format will be both didactic and experiential and will include: lectures, group discussion, demonstration and practice of therapy methods, verbal and video case presentations, and selected consultation on case vignettes by participants.

Practical Intuition: Introduction
Laura Day
We are all psychics. Every time we draw a conclusion, we work with intuition as well as linear and emotional processes. Identifying how our intuitive faculty works enables us to use it selectively for effective decision-making. A predominantly linear process may be preferable when clear, empirical information is available. But when little data is at hand, or if the question relates to how current choice might affect future results, an intuitive process may be more efficient.

"Practical Intuition," an experiential workshop, introduces intuitive methods for gaining empirical information. Participants will give and receive several present and future intuitive readings a day, focusing on predicting and retrieving verifiable data. Different intuitive styles, such as clairvoyance, clairaudience, and telepathy will be taught, along with exercises for continued training at home.

Participants are requested to bring a few photographs of themselves and people they know well, their personal and business questions, and a willingness to work as if they already know how to do something that they, in fact, already know how to do. $380

The MAX: Stretching the Limits of Your Self-Expression
Paula Shaw
"The MAX" is an outrageous voyage through your own humanity — a journey to turn yourself inside out and explore the full extent of your self-expressive power. It employs a variety of acting, observation, and communication techniques designed to expand your current limits "to the max" and move you into a new arena of personal creativity and self-expression.

Formerly offered only to the in-house community at Esalen, "The MAX" is an extremely challenging course. Participants must be committed to a rigorous exploration of the sources of their emotional limitations. Seminar hours will be longer than usual early in the week (and shorter later in the week), attendance is necessary at all sessions, and a brief memorized performance piece is required.

Participants will be working individually in front of the room, playing to and with other members of the group. There will be exercises that use raw emotion, personal role-playing and "dress-up" assignments.

This workshop is an opportunity to experience yourself in a way you may have dreamed about but never imagined possible. The name of the game is risk, the premise — that you are either daring or dead, and that the most unsafe thing you can do in life is to play it safe. Clearly, this course is not for the faint of heart, but it is full of heart, humor, and irreverence, and is constructed with the understanding that this kind of risk-taking requires a very safe workspace.

"The MAX" is a thrilling celebration of who you are — lightside, darkside, all of you. If your heart beats faster when you think of taking this workshop, then maybe it's just the thing to do. If you've got the courage, we've got the program. Come play!

Required: A 1-2 minute memorized piece — monologue, poem, passage, song, etc.

Hours: Sun 8:30-10:30; MT 10-1, 3-6, 8-11; W 10-1, 3-6; Th 8-11 p.m.; F 10-12.

Changing One's Life
Joyce Frazee
Sent out by your senses go to the very edge of your longing... Let everything happen to you, beauty and terror. One needs only to go. No feeling is the farthest out.

—RILKE

Some of us long for change, yet are afraid of it. Some of us command ourselves to change — nothing happens. We despair. Some of us believe "things" will change. But often they don't. And whether you choose to make a change or life forces you to make a change, these thresholds are often accompanied by fear and confusion.

If you are at a time in your life when you long for a change, or if you are at a time in your life when a drastic change has occurred, or if you are just curious about how to make a difference in the quality of your life, this workshop is for you.

The approach will be gentle—a gentle observation of what is with awareness. Fritz Perls said "awareness itself is healing." We will use gestalt practice, gestalt and senoi dreamwork, meditation, movement, drawing, and bioenergetics to move toward the truth—the truth of the changes and the longing for change in our lives. We can then learn to trust that these longings, changes, and difficulties are a step toward wholeness.

The Art of Saying Goodbye
Paul Rebillot

The loss of a loved one, whether through death or separation, is a huge rent in the fabric of one's life. Confronting loss and the pain it brings is difficult but essential if we want to heal the suffering and move on with our lives and our other relationships.

Participants will seek to give birth to new life out of the anguish of separation and death. Death is the support of life, just as the loss of the past is the ground out of which the present and the future are born.

Using open seat and emotional release work, members of the group will deal with their losses—not only through pain, but also artistically, creating a ritual of release and renewal.

This workshop is about saying goodbye, experiencing the tears and the grief, and giving birth to a symbol that completes that relationship, and, more importantly, reconnects each person with the source of his or her own life. $740

Chuck Miller & Maty Ezraty

Yoga is an ancient system that uses the body, breath, and mind to energize and transform all aspects of living. The invigorating effects of yoga can become readily apparent as the body opens and stretches. It is not only an excellent source of physical exercise, but a unique and powerful tool for self-realization. The practice of yoga can help release blocks that cause mental and physical pain and prevent us from knowing our divine nature. It is also a great way of dealing with the stress of daily living.

The serenity and clarity that is the goal of yoga will be sought through meditation exercises that can calm and focus the mind. Since breath is the link between mind and body, various breathing methods will be taught to help reduce tension and cleanse the system. Yoga philosophy and theory will be discussed, as well as nutrition and its role in overall physical health.

All levels are welcome and no prior experience is required, only an adventurous spirit. For further information contact the leaders at (310) 393-5150. $380

The Core Self: The Heart of the Matter
Bruce Gregory

Resources for healing, such as spontaneity, curiosity, trust, creativity, and joy, are found in the core self. This workshop will assist participants, especially health professionals, in acquiring new skills in microanalysis of mind/body processes. Participants will also work on cultivating a friendlier relationship with their unconscious in order to heal old patterns and create healthier pathways for new learning connected to loving, working, and relating.

The goals of this weekend will be to enhance self-esteem, to let go of self-images of the past, to become conscious of the present moment, to communicate better, to become more empowered as a leader, and to develop a cohesive personal vision. The tools that will be used include gestalt practice, metaphor, meditation, breathing skills, guided imagery, dream work, music, group process, and immersion into nature.

Rituals of Transformation
Paul Rebillot

People are continually approaching thresholds, transition points from one state to another. To live is to change. Unfortunately, we have a tendency to resist change, to cling to the familiar, to remain stuck at the threshold. This resistance eventually causes us much stress and pain.

Rituals can prepare people for change and help heal the passages that were not completed in the past. A ritual does not make a change happen; rather, it awakens within the psyche the archetypal patterns of change—it teaches the participant how to change. By acting out the ritual, people learn, not only in their minds but in their hearts and the movements of their bodies, the process of transformation.

Participants will look at what they want to heal and transform in their lives, what they need to say goodbye to, and what they need in order to cross their present threshold. Small groups will work together to design and enact individual rituals in order to support and help this healing process.

Just as the body can move from one position into another, so can the full being; hearts can move, minds can move. Rituals let the body show the appropriate path and let the full being open all the doors waiting to be open. Joseph Campbell said that when someone discovers his or her authentic path, the way seems blessed with magic. To find this way is the work of "Rituals of Transformation." $380

Gestalt Practice

For workshop description see January 23-28. $740
Also be on the survivor's breath patterns, practitioner/client relationship. Focus will be placed on establishing safety, knowing and seeing, being present, and a specific sensitivity to the risks the client feels. Sensitivity to the many dimensions of communication methods. More about specific body-oriented intervention methods.

Carolyn Braddock & Char Pias Brenner

Note: This workshop is for professionals and others who work with sexual trauma survivors.

Awareness of the effects of post-trauma stress and sexual trauma is growing among massage practitioners, bodyworkers, and other professionals. In the case of sexual trauma, the body was the scene of the crime. For that reason, survivors often utilize massage and other forms of bodywork as part of their healing process. When a worker places his or her hands on a survivor, memories can begin to flood in, or body sensations may be blocked.

The focus of this workshop will be to explore specific strategies for working with post-trauma stress and particularly sexual trauma survivors. It will be oriented toward massage practitioners, bodyworkers, medical professionals, and anyone interested in learning more about specific body-oriented intervention methods.

In working with sexual trauma survivors, sensitivity to the many dimensions of communication is critical; communication must be clear, with an awareness of the power and effect of words. Boundary issues, intuitive knowing and seeing, being present, and a special sensitivity to the risks the client feels when being touched are also important. Emphasis will be placed on establishing safety, choice, control, and trust in the practitioner/client relationship. Focus will be on the survivor's breath patterns, responses of dissociation, flashbacks, body sensations, energy blocks, and difficulty accepting the positive. Much of the week will be experiential.

Time will allow for some individual work and for scheduling massage and other bodywork.

Recommended reading: Braddock, Bodyvoices. Emphasis will be placed on establishing safety, knowing and seeing, being present, and a specific sensitivity to the risks the client feels. Sensitivity to the many dimensions of communication methods. More about specific body-oriented intervention methods.

A Modern Shamanic Initiation

Richard Yensen Pérez-Venero & Donna Dreyer Pérez-Venero

This workshop explores shamanic tradition as a means for self-healing and spiritual growth. Through music, art imagery, visualization, breath, and bodywork, participants will travel through altered states of consciousness to a source of healing and meaning within themselves. Shamanic cultures call this realm the "world of the spirit," where one can find true power and the ability to bring an open heart to his or her life's path.

Participants will study maps of consciousness drawn from research in psychedelics, from archetypal themes of death and rebirth, and from shamanism. Experiential sessions will combine modern technology, ancient ritual, and specially developed media portrayals of the transformative journey.

Sensory Awareness

Charlotte Selver

Some seventy years ago Charlotte Selver's teacher, Elsa Gindler, began exploring the natural potential of the human being. The work that evolved was an approach through a disciplined practice, involving the person as total organism. Gindler's innovative methods very often unearthed, liberated, and cultivated abilities and sensitivities which her students had never been conscious of possessing.

To "awaken" means that one's energies — neuromuscular and perceptive — become altered, leading to greater movability, both psychologically and physically, and to a fuller use of the senses and intuitive powers. In order for this to occur, a deeper peace is needed so that sensations become clearer, and rigidities, pressures, and preconceptions can gradually dissolve. In becoming "tuned in" by another person, or by a task or given situation, powers arise and come into play which correspond exactly to the demands of the occasion. This calls for permissiveness, subtle receptiveness, and openness to the moment.

With the cultivation of these functions, our lives can unfold in a far richer and more responsive way. We can restore the delight of ever-new experiencing which was our birthright in childhood, but lost in the course of our education into adulthood.

Recommended reading: Brooks, Sensory Awareness (Viking; Felix Morrow). $380

Gestalt Practice: The Art of Being Present

Christine Stewart Price & Guest Leaders

Gestalt practice suggests that being fully present with our experience of the moment, whatever that may be, can increase our ability to cope and provide a deeper sense of aliveness. The premise is that the human organism instinctively moves toward balance and well-being. This natural equilibrium can be interfered with, however, through individual patterns of physical tension, emotional blocking, and mental attitude. In gestalt practice, no feeling, thought, or sensation is treated as forbidden or wrong; instead, each experience is contacted and explored with as much equanimity as possible.

The leader will provide tools for developing awareness and increasing the ability to contact, enter, and express feelings, thoughts, and other realms of experience. Group exercises and guided meditations will focus on breath and physical sensation as keys to being present. Participants will have the opportunity to explore and experiment in a safe environment with sound, movement, and role playing. Everyone is encouraged to bring patience, tolerance, and humor to the workshop.

Writing about Self and Family: A Personal Investigation

Carole Ione (Ione)

Many of us feel the call to create work that comes from a deeply personal source of inspiration — our own lives and families. Whether we are writing memoirs or fiction, this undertaking requires courage and patience as we touch painful as well as joyful memories and learn how to guide them onto the written page.
During this workshop, lone will explore the importance of our personal stories, honoring events that are key moments of revelation. Participants will claim their most powerful life themes and identify ancestral patterns. Key topics will include: turning self-consciousness into consciousness of self; defusing secrets; accessing memories, dreams, and visions; claiming personal writing rhythms; and listening to and identifying the many voices within.

There will also be journal exercises, guided meditations, and partnering to further the writing experience. Please bring a journal and writing materials. $380

The Joseph Campbell Foundation: A Mythological Toolbox

Coordinated by Robert Walter

In Memories, Dreams, Reflections, Carl Jung tells us that he had hardly finished writing Symbols of Transformation when he suddenly realized "what it means to live with a myth, and what it means to live without one." When he asked himself by what myth he was living, he found that he did not know; and so, he writes, "I took it upon myself to get to know 'my' myth, and I regarded this as the task of tasks."

How do you come to know the myth that has shaped your life, the myth that governs it? How can you nourish, enrich, or, when necessary, transform that myth?

This workshop will explore various mythological tools — including storytelling, movement, journalizing, life maps, masks, and mandalas — that you can use to examine and answer questions about the myths that shape your life. There will be slide lectures, experimental exercises, and shared play to awaken the mythic imagination. Participants will survey some of Joseph Campbell's essential ideas — including the hero's journey, sacred space, and metaphor. Participants will chart their personal rites of passage.

The group will be joined by Tai Ji dancer and philosophical entertainer, Chungliang Al Huang; architect Mimi Lobell, a scholar of myth and symbol; architecture professor/author, John Lobell; and other special guests who were close associates of Joseph Campbell.

Each participant is asked to bring a journal and a favorite story, poem, or childhood memory. All are asked to read the Foundation's publication, Joseph Campbell: The Man and His Ideas, which will be sent to registered participants prior to the workshop.

Recommended reading: Any book by Joseph Campbell, including The Hero with a Thousand Faces and The Mythic Image (both, Princeton); Myths to Live By (Bantam).

Recommended viewing: "Joseph Campbell and the Power of Myth" with Bill Moyers (Mystic Fire Video) and "The Transformations of Myth through Time" (Public Media Video).

Recommended audio: any Joseph Campbell audiotape from New Dimensions or Dolphin/Big Sur Tapes (ordering information on page 58). $740
Sanctuary
David Schiffman & Susan Kutner

This workshop is designed for people who are facing change. It will be a time to pause and step away from the deadlines, demands, distractions, and interruptions of daily life.

These five days will be an opportunity to come back to your own heart in the company of kindred spirits. Participants will work to gather strength and clarity for making simple, effective plans for dealing with changes and uncertainties.

The pace will be gentle and restorative, with ample time to consider each individual’s dreams, desires, and dilemmas. The intention will be to see how the process of transition can be approached in a heartfelt, open-minded, and buoyant spirit. Together the group will create a mood of sanctity, balance, and peace for reflecting and acting on each individual’s deepest concerns. Resources and influences will be drawn from a variety of traditional psychological approaches, as well as movement, music, ritual, and ceremonial practice.

Coming Out, Coming In: Defining Oneself within the Group
David Hawkins

We each have a need to “come out,” to express and celebrate our difference. We also have a need to “come in,” to join and be seen, respected, validated, and valued. Unless we come out, we risk feeling fraudulent and diminished; unless we come in, we risk feeling alienated and can suffer from the continued, often unconscious, influence of shame. Using a self-examining group as a social microcosm, we can learn to recognize our own use of shame and scapegoating, and create a haven for both coming out and coming in.

If you have been excited, curious, resistant, or insistent to proclaim your identity, this workshop offers a time for reflection, comparison, and support. Our goal is to appreciate the unique balance of belonging and individuating that shapes each of our lives. Participants will work towards a deeper understanding of the following issues:

- the costs and benefits of various shame management strategies
- the value of the minority voice to the group
- the four perspectives from which any group can be viewed
- how to use these to make the group a corrective lens through which to see more of ourselves.

Gestalt in the Workplace and in Your Life
Mariah Fenton Gladis & Bruce Mills

Most people want to create satisfaction, harmony, and fulfillment in the work they do, yet for a variety of reasons they find this hard to do. What is needed to reach this goal is an examination of both the preconceptions that an individual brings to the workplace and the skills to cope with others who may bring their own unique problems to the same environment.

Feelings of satisfaction and enjoyment in the workplace arise when we have confidence in the ability to identify our needs, and either express these needs to others or take the actions required to satisfy these needs ourselves. Obstructions in this process happen when prior experiences both in and away from the workplace must be worked through, or problems in the work environment require us to learn new coping skills.

The focus will be on enabling participants to more readily find fulfillment and fun in the work they do by learning to:

- Accept the work itself by better understanding the needs of both themselves and the tasks they are asked to perform, and by bringing these needs to satisfactory closure
- Improve their relationship with the rest of the organization by learning to more fully express and satisfy their needs, while responding appropriately to inappropriate behavior on the part of others.

Gestalt methods will be utilized in both individual and group activities. Some participants will have the opportunity to work individually on a specific workplace problem. All participants will receive feedback concerning their contact styles through information collected and derived from the Gestalt Contact Function Instrument.

This workshop is for managers, employees, and anyone who would simply like to find more fulfillment and satisfaction in their work.

T'ai Chi Ch'uan: An East/West Approach
Kenn Chase

This seminar will present a demonstration form of t'ai chi ch'uan, a shortened version derived from the classical Yang style, which contains 54 balanced, fluid and graceful postures. Also included will be mind/body alignment methods, chi kung Taoist breathing methods, and practice and refinement of the traditional t'ai chi movements. Practiced five to ten minutes daily, this gentle martial art can calm the mind and aid the student in achieving a centered perspective for daily living in a busy world.

Wild Heart Dancing
Elliot Sobel & Jessica Britt

It requires enormous courage and vulnerability to resurrect one's innate creative flow once it has been stifled in early childhood. Heavy clouds of fear and self-consciousness prevent access to the joyful, spontaneous expressions which at one time were native to all of us.

"Wild Heart Dancing" will explore the expressive arts — singing, dancing, writing, and painting — as vehicles of healing and conduits for the expression of the unfolding self. Against a backdrop of contemplative silence, the workshop will generate an atmosphere of safety necessary for participants to risk stepping forth, be it through a gentle poetic fragment, an explosive primitive dance, a poignant, heartfelt love song, or a childlike impressionist painting.

Very few two-year olds have ever been known to say, "I can't carry a tune," or "I can't draw." On the contrary, the crudest scribblings of children are proudly displayed on refrigerators across the land! And with good reason — they reflect a certain freshness of vision, unfettered by the painful inhibitions of a rigid, adult personality. We will explore the origins of these inhibitions and develop tools for defending against them and their source, the inner critic.

It is possible for the hidden artist to re-emerge; for the careful, constructed grown-up to give way to the passionate, unrehearsed outpourings of the soul. The elements required for such a transformation are a quieting of the mind and inner critic, gentle permission, and curiosity. "Wild Heart Dancing" will provide an opportunity for these qualities to arise and rekindle the very heart of creativity and authentic self-expression. $740

David Hawkins

Our capacity to enter and sustain intimate relationships depends greatly on the role models and experiences we encountered in our families. For gay men in particular, adult loving relationships are shaped by the ways we "came out" and differentiated from our families, and by the ways we were able to remain involved with family and social values needed for our adult journey. They were also influenced by how successfully we found and joined a supportive community and exchanged inherited values for new values more appropriate to a changing lifestyle.

This workshop is for gay men who want to improve the quality of their relationships by:
- Constructing their journey to adult sexuality
- Reevaluating methods for seeking acceptance and avoiding rejection
- Reexamining the costs/benefits of strategies for managing stigma
- Rethinking limits on involvement and commitment. $740

Enhancing Communication Hypnotically
Paul Lounsbury & Nancy Winston

Embedded in a world of our own constructions, we easily habituate to conversations that come from a very personal framework and unique make-up. We are often unaware of how deeply identified we are with the patterns that recursively tune our perceptions, color our emotions, shape our ideas, and inform our actions. If we act with courage to break out of these roles, a magical new world can appear, bringing with it a fresh and inviting quality of relatedness. This workshop is for people who would like to go beyond their current thresholds of awareness to develop more original, vital, and effective communication.

Prerequisites include tolerance for a modicum of confusion, willingness to be a group member, a sense of humor, and a desire for novel experience. This learning experience has particular value for therapists, trainers, and managers. C.E. credit is available for nurses; see pages 50-52. $740

Crazy Wisdom: A Weekend of Philosophy and Laughter
Wes "Scoop" Nisker, Paul Krassner & Ed Greenberg

Seriousness is the only refuge of the shallow. — OSCAR WILDE
This is an opportunity to spend April Fools’ Day having a real good time while exploring your own sense of humor and ability to play. Through the use of improvisational theater games, writing exercises, leader presentations, and group discussion, participants will allow themselves to become clowns, jesters, trick-sters, and fools as they examine the lighter side of their lives and time.

Workshop presentations will include customary stories, Taoist and Zen humor, the writings of Mark Twain, as well as audio and videotape excerpts from great humorists such as Charlie Chaplin, Lenny Bruce, Nichols and May, Robin Williams, and Richard Pryor. Participants will also work in groups to develop a humorous theatrical presentation for our traditional Saturday night gathering.

You don’t have to be funny to join this workshop, simply open to the playful possibilities of the moment. At least one belly laugh is guaranteed. $380

Play, Spontaneity, and Performance Art
Nina Wise
The leader writes: “I read once that rats were put in a maze with one path leading to a small room with food, another leading to a room charged with an electrical current, and a third path leading to a room with play things. The rats learned to avoid the electric shock, but the food room and the play room were equally popular. Play, it seems, is as essential to rats as nutrition.”

Play is also an integral part of human culture. In tribal societies, people sing, make music, drum, dance, and tell stories as part of their daily lives. With the advent of technology and specialization, we modernized folk have forgotten how to play together. Singers sing, dancers dance, actors act, while the rest of us sit and watch.

This workshop is about remembering how to dance, how to sing, how to tell stories about our lives, how to make it up as we go along, how to be together in a way that is lively, spontaneous, and creative. The workshop will include meditation, chanting, relaxation, movement, singing, writing, drawing, and theater games. We will also do spontaneous performance with and for each other in a safe and supportive environment.

Note: Everyone is afraid of performing, even professionals. Don’t let your fear stop you. It’s fun, challenging, and rewarding. $740

The Healing Crisis: Fasting as a Pathway
Michael Barnett, Grace Stern Swanson & Robert Swanson
Very often in group process there is subtle pressure on participants to work and complete their task, and pressure on the leader to “make it happen.” Where does the direction of group process come from? In this workshop, the material used will not be generated from the leaders or the group, but from each individual’s heart, head, and spirit.

Using fasting as the tool, participants will experience the unique link between their body, mind, and spirit. When the body stops eating, it allows the cells to release waste material that is most pressing to the body’s health. Since this waste material can have emotional content (it was put in with emotion, it comes out with emotion), the most poignant and pressing psychological material can often come to the surface when it is released. This release is the “healing crisis,” an opportunity for the organism to move to a homeostatic mental and physical balance. To rely on our cells, our bodies, to direct our healing is a much different experience than relying on our intellects or group expectations.

The workshop will consist of an opening live food meal, a day-plus of juice fasting, two full days of water fasting, another day of juice fasting, and a fruit banquet. Three two-hour group sessions will be scheduled each day.

Detailed didactic material will be shared to provide cognitive understanding. In the remainder of group time, an eclectic approach to processing individual material will be pursued. Because we will not have to break for “official” meals, the group meeting can continue for as long as necessary. In addition, there will be a member of the leadership staff available around-the-clock.

Come with an agenda, or allow your agenda to develop.

C.E. credit is available for nurses; see pages 50-52.

Midlife Crisis as Spiritual Emergence
Karen Turner
Participants will view midlife transition in the framework of spiritual emergence and renewal, a time when the old systems the individual has used as foundations seem stripped away, leaving chaos and challenging long-held beliefs. It is a time of soul-searching: of confronting both inflated and deflated self-concepts or surrendering to deeper, more expanded states of awareness; of learning to trust inner guidance as absolute authority in one’s life.

This workshop will be a rite of passage for both men and women going through this transition. It is an opportunity for each participant to discover his/her unique self, and how each is in relationship to self, each other, the world, and spirit. Tools for self-exploration and awareness gathered over 25 years from psychology, mysticism, and shamanism will be presented, with time for discussion and sharing. Each workshop is uniquely designed to meet the needs of those attending. $740

Cosmos and Psyche
Richard Tarnas

During the ten years they worked together at Esalen, Richard Tarnas, Esalen’s former director of programs, and Stanislav Grof, a scholar-in-residence and pioneering psychologist, repeatedly encountered an extraordinary correlation between specific planetary positions and a wide range of psychological states. Besides providing invaluable insight into both the timing and the specific archetypal character of psychotherapeutic transformation, these planetary synchronicities suggested that the relationship between the cosmos and human experience was very different from that assumed in the disenchanted, mechanistic world view of conventional modern science.

Richard Tarnas will present both the practical applications of this research and its larger philosophical implications, with special attention to how he approaches the analysis of birth charts and transits. Specific topics will include precise descriptions of the psychological correlations observed; instructions for calculating and evaluating one’s own transits; a look at major present and coming planetary alignments; the specific planetary correspondences with Grof’s stages of birth and psychospiritual transformation; the relevance of this work to the larger depth psychology tradition (Freud, Jung, Hillman); and an overview of the evolution of the Western mind as illuminated by this recovery of the intimate relationship between the human being and the cosmos — “the return of the soul to the world.”

Though useful, a background in astrology is not necessary. Participants should bring a copy of their birth chart.

Recommended reading: The Epilogue to Richard Tarnas’s The Passion of the Western Mind (Ballantine, 1993); and any book by Stanislav Grof.

Gestalt Practicum
Christine Stewart Price & Guest Leaders

This workshop is designed for people who would like to further explore the gestalt practice form in theory as well as through personal experience. It is especially appropriate for those in the helping professions, such as counselors, bodyworkers, and teachers who are interested in integrating this approach into their current practice. The format will include open seat sessions with the leaders, structured exercises where participants work with each other, didactic presentation, and discussion.

The prerequisite for admission into the workshop is previous participation in a workshop specifically in gestalt practice led by one of the Esalen gestalt staff (Eric Erickson, Christine Price, or Joyce Lyke). Persons without that previous experience can fulfill this requirement by attending one of the gestalt practice workshops offered throughout this catalog. Others may send a letter of application to Christine Price, 31 Onyx Street, Larkspur, CA 94939, and will be considered if there is space available.

Self-Esteem through Endarkenment
Will Schutz

The technology developed by Will Schutz in his “Endarkenment” workshops will be used for the first time in a specific area — self-esteem. One of the goals of the workshop will be to challenge the philosophy, “no pain — no gain.”

By expressing the parts of yourself that you like least — those that reduce your self-esteem — it is possible to grow a great deal watching yourself playing your games. By exaggerating these parts, analyzing them, even teaching the other workshop members how to do them really well, new, more effective patterns can emerge. And this can happen without pain. It can be done with joy and excitement. From this viewpoint, participants will work in-depth on self-esteem.

Pre-homework: Practice your defenses — denier, critic, victim, helper, demander, intellectualizer, etc. Come prepared to demonstrate how a real pro performs them!

TA KE TI NA: The Forgotten Power of Rhythm
Reinhard Flatischler

Everyone of us is deeply rhythmical: hearts beat, lungs breathe, cells pulsate — we are rhythm. From Europe, Reinhard Flatischler brings TA KE TI NA, a synthesis of the rhythmic knowledge of many cultures, leading back to the primal rhythmic knowledge that lives within every human being. TA KE TI NA connects musical rhythms with the rhythms of daily life, the body, and the rhythms of our consciousness. The experience of TA KE TI NA comes through the simultaneity of basic stepping, clapping, vocal rhythms, and chanting. The workshop takes on the quality of a ritual as the participants, standing and moving in a circle, clapping and chanting rhythmic syllables, gradually create a group unity. The principle underlying the exercises is the simultaneous performance of different rhythm sets. The feet, for example, move in a double meter while the hands clap a triple meter, and ultimately the voice changes other rhythmic layers over the hands and feet.

The leader will alternately support and challenge the group as he taps rhythms on a berimbao, a Brazilian single-string instrument. His rare ability to hold rhythmic polarities brings with it a joyous quality that can lift the group to new dimensions. The skills found through TA KE TI NA can be applied to daily life, as well as to all musical fields.

Singing Gestalt: Solo or Duet
Nancy Kaye Lunney

Singing gestalt is singing about yourself, who you are, what you feel, who you'd like to be. Singing gestalt is about being yourself in front of other people without judging how well you sing. Singing gestalt is not about performance. It is about making contact, feeling, expressing, and being there, with and for yourself and others.

Come alone or bring someone who is important to you, perhaps a lover, friend, a parent, someone with whom you'd like to communicate in a different way things you've expressed before and possibly things you've never said. If you wish, bring photographs of significant people in your life, past or present.

If the idea of getting up and singing in front of other people terrifies you more than anything you can think of, this workshop is for you. If you love to sing in front of other people and want to stretch yourself further, this workshop is for you. If you've been shy to try, this is your chance.

Some guided imagery and gestalt may be used. Accompaniment and lots of music are provided. But the workshop is really about you and about you singing.

Writing About Our Lives: A Workshop for Women
Ellen Bass

The leader writes: "The philosophy behind this workshop experience is best expressed by Martha Graham who said: 'There is a vitality, a life-force, an energy, a quickening that is translated through you into action. And because there is only one of you in all time, this expression is unique. And if you block it, it will never exist through any other medium, and be lost. The world will not have it. It is not your business to determine how good it is, nor how valuable, nor how it compares with other expressions. It is your business to keep it yours clearly and directly, to keep the channel open.'"

"This workshop will keep the channels open. It will be a supportive place to share our lives and work, our voice, our creativity. There will be time for writing and time for sharing and feedback. From beginners to experienced, all women writers are welcomed. Whether you are interested in poetry, fiction, non-fiction, journal writing, or just jotting down your thoughts, this workshop can help you open up and expand your world through writing."

Note: This is a creative writing workshop open to women only.

The Modern Warrior
George Leonard

A man or woman with outward courage dares to die;
A man or woman with inward courage dares to live.

—Lao Tzu

The Modern Warrior is not one who goes to war but rather one who exhibits integrity in every aspect of living, one who seeks to attain control then act with abandon. For the Modern Warrior, life is vivid, immediate, and joyful. He or she lives each day to the fullest, and is fulfilled in serving others. This workshop is based on the premise that to achieve peace in the world and harmony in daily life, it might well be necessary for men and women to reown the warrior ideal.

Through the centering and movement exercises of LET (Leonard Energy Training), you will be invited to get in touch with your own unacknowledged powers, and thus to discover the hidden warrior within. You will practice alternative ways of dealing with conflict and stress. Guidance will be offered on how to apply the warrior ideal to daily life. If appropriate, a psychologically intense Samurai Game will be played. This workshop will not be physically strenuous. All that is needed is a generous heart and a willingness to participate.

Caring for the Dying
Zoketsu Norman Fischer & Frank Ostaseski
—Zen Hospice Project

This workshop explores a mindful and compassionate approach to caring for those with chronic or life-threatening illness. Drawing on the experience of the Zen Hospice Project, a nationally innovative model of conscious care, the aim is to demystify the care-giving process, investigate our response to suffering, and clarify our intention in service.

The leaders will introduce traditional meditation practices of awareness, impermanence, and forgiveness; provide exercises designed to explore accumulated grief; and discuss the importance of ritual and memories. Through silence, writing, storytelling, and the collective wisdom of the group, we will discover ways of encouraging our innate generosity and skillful means in order to stay present in difficult or impersonal care-giving situations.

The workshop offers renewal and a fresh perspective on service to professionals or individuals caring for friends or family. All are invited, but those caring for people with AIDS or cancer are particularly encouraged to attend. Please wear comfortable clothing and bring writing materials.

Settling with Oneself
Kathleen Riordan Speeth

With the help of Albert Camus's insights, David Rosenman-Taub's music, and Jan van Eyck's images, we will explore the guilt and glories of midlife in this weekend together. You want to lead a comfortable existence like everyone else? Have a job with no little success? Perhaps a family? And probably some organized leisure activities? Then why do you have a nagging feeling that some crucial element is missing from your experience something you must know, some account you have to settle with yourself before it all turns to dust? A midlife crisis? Why?

We have our secrets. Toward certain others, perhaps, we feel obligated without ever owing anything. We are sometimes generous toward the dead, but the irony is inescapable when we think of what we have and have not felt toward the living. 1, 1, 1, is the usual rhythm we march to — and it confuses and frightens us. We suffer indecision, not able to stand up fully nor give up and rest. We long to be immortal. We want absolution. There are no points for good intentions, extenuating circumstances, or respectable mistakes. Can something worthy come of this?

Bring a journal. Take the risk. We will meet Jean-Baptiste Clamance, Camus's erstwhile lawyer who has become a "judge-penitent," and who waits to buttonhole us all, possibly with good result. Through solitary self-study and structured interaction, we will move toward understanding a jewel of a musical poem and a rare stolen painting, both of which will inevitably have personal implications.

Pilobolus Technique: Choreographic Creation
Michael Tracy

Since its first appearance, Pilobolus Dance Theatre has been a pioneer in American contemporary dance, creating its own unique method of choreography. This workshop is based on Pilobolus's evolving understanding of technique as a creative collaborative process. Dance is approached not as an inflexible physical regime, but as an expressive medium for people of all ages, backgrounds, and levels of experience.

Taught by Pilobolus's Artistic Director Michael Tracy, this workshop will focus on the choreographic process that makes movement the powerful means of expression it truly is. The group will investigate the lively mixture between form and flow, abstraction and theatricality, strength, force, and balance that define the realm of dance.

Participants will explore a wide variety of movement through improvisation and will choreograph a number of short dances. It will be an opportunity to indulge in the incredible panorama of human motion.

Extensive dance training is not necessary, although a reasonable degree of fitness is advised. Participants should be willing to be physically energetic and enthusiastic. $740

Meeting the Madwoman & The Reindeer Woman: The Challenge for Feminine Spirit
Linda Leonard

Based on material from her book, Meeting the Madwoman: An Inner Challenge for Feminine Spirit (Bantam, 1993) and a book she is currently writing, the leader will explore the Madwoman and Reindeer Woman archetype (an energy in both men and women), using ancient myths and fairy tales, films and literature, and the stories of historical and contemporary women and men. Participants will explore archetypal patterns of Madwoman energy such as: Mad Mothers and Mad Daughters, the Caged Bird, the Rejected Lover, the Recluse, the Revolutionary, the Bag Lady, and the Visionary.

The Reindeer Woman as an image for healing through the mystical feminine will also be a topic for exploration. Linda Leonard has spent time in the Siberian wilderness living with a nomadic group of "reindeer people," and travelled to Lappland to study a native people's relationship to reindeer. She will present the Reindeer Woman as a metaphor for a feminine instinctual energy — an energy that is gentle and compassionate, yet strong and free. Fairy tales, legends, and myths drawn from the shamanic peoples of the North will be used to introduce a vision of the Reindeer Woman as a manifestation of this feminine archetypal energy.

Participants are welcomed to bring dreams and images relating to the Madwoman archetype, and to reindeer, deer, and other healing bonds of nature.

This workshop is open to both men and women. $740

— Judith McKinnon

This week is structured for beginners and those who would like a review of basic massage skills. The longer morning sessions will be a demonstration and hands-on practice of the fundamental methods used in a full-body, Esalen-style massage. Emphasis will be on quality contact through mindfulness rather than technique.

Most days participants will have time from lunch until dinner to enjoy the baths, community, and grounds, or to explore the magnificent Big Sur coast and nearby hiking trails. Evening sessions will include movement for bodyworkers and group discussion.

Nature and Contemplation
Steven Harper & Brother David Steinall-Rast

From time immemorial, nature has inspired human hearts to contemplation. Can we make this experience our own today? This week is designed to help participants experience both nature and contemplation deeply. Direct experience and contemplative reflection are the key words.

Earth under our feet on gentle hikes, water of the Pacific pounding against the shore, air of Big Sur’s refreshing breezes, fire that heats Esalen’s hot springs—all the elements of nature combine to touch our bodies and to raise our minds and spirits.

“Nature is never spent: there lives the dearest freshness deep down things,” wrote the mystic poet Gerard Manley Hopkins. To drink from nature’s mysteries, the nature of language, and the techniques of ecstasy that have developed in non-Western societies to navigate to and from invisible worlds. The role of hallucinogenic plants will be discussed — their role in shamanism, and their impact on the general evolution of human beings.

Participants will discuss making reasonable choices about spiritual development and techniques. The rich historical foundations of techno-shamanism will be surveyed and the roles that we may each play in unfolding the raves of cybercultural post-historicity will be explored. This is a think-along experience for those who want to take a few moments to chill out from the dance of life. $380

Healing the Grief of Human Relationship: The African Shamanic Perspective
Malidoma & Sonbonfu Somé

The underlying belief in most Western relationships is that other people are responsible for our happiness. We struggle with the illusion that we “need” another person to behave in a certain way in order for us to feel good. From the African shamanic perspective, a person who does not maintain a dynamic connection with their spirit guides or higher self will never be fulfilled and will continue to look toward others for their happiness.

Malidoma and Sonbonfu will share their fascinating story of meeting for the first time after their wedding ceremony had taken place and beginning their journey “up the mountain” together. They will use ritual, storytelling, and interaction with workshop participants to challenge and heal those concepts that have caused relationship grief and resentment.

This workshop is an excellent opportunity for both couples and individuals to bring their stories of relationship success and failure and, with the help of Malidoma and Sonbonfu, to look at them through the lens of shamanic empowerment. This perspective can offer participants new pathways for dynamic change. $380

Voice in the Head: Conversation at the Edge of Magic Terence McKenna

Author and explorer, shamanologist and rave philosopher, Terence McKenna brings a unique perspective to being in the world that assumes an impending transformation of the human world that will involve everyone.

With humor and in-depth, participants will examine attitudes toward the Other, time and space, the nature of language, and the techniques of ecstasy that have developed in non-Western societies to navigate to and from invisible worlds. The role of hallucinogenic plants will be discussed — their role in shamanism, and their impact on the general evolution of human beings.

Participants will discuss making reasonable choices about spiritual development and techniques. The rich historical foundations of techno-shamanism will be surveyed and the roles that we may each play in unfolding the raves of cybercultural post-historicity will be explored. This is a think-along experience for those who want to take a few moments to chill out from the dance of life. $380

Golf in the Kingdom: An Exploration of the Inner Game
Stephen Cohen, Fred Shoemaker & Brian Bergstrom

Ye’ll come away from the links with a new hold on life, that is certain if ye play the game with all your heart.

— Michael Murphy, (Shivas Irons), Golf in the Kingdom

The game of golf provides many opportunities to enhance the journey of self-discovery. It can be experienced not only as an athletic endeavor, but also as a metaphor for the way one lives. Just as in life, issues of self-confidence, fear, trust, discipline, and awareness emerge in the conflict between the ego’s desire for success and the inner self’s ability to achieve.

During these five days, teaching methods gleaned from a study of the inner game will be utilized, as well as principles from psychosynthesis and gestalt, to explore the inner self and how one interferes with its emergence. Two days will be spent on field trips to the Monterey Peninsula where participants will practice and play in some of the most beautiful golf country in the world. On other days there will be time to relax and enjoy the natural pleasures of Esalen and Big Sur.

Dzogchen: A Silent Meditation & Self-Inquiry Retreat
Lama Surya Das

Buddhism teaches awareness techniques for awakening to inner freedom. Dzogchen — the Natural Great Perfection — directly introduces the inherent freedom, purity, and perfection of innate Buddha-Mind. Dzogchen is considered the summit of all Buddhist teachings: swift, easy, joyful, and the most direct and naked tantric vehicle.

Through meditation, chanting, energy exercises, self-inquiry, and personal instruction (including talks and individual interviews), this quintessential Vajrayana path will be introduced and practiced according to the nonsectarian way of the Practice Lineage of Tibetan Buddhism, relying on authentic Tibetan texts, meditation manuals, and oral tradition. A constant theme in this nondual awareness practice is opening to effortlessness.

This silent meditation retreat offers a unique opportunity for experienced practitioners of meditation as well as beginners to better know themselves through the timeless wisdom of this ancient Tibetan teaching. Much of the day will be devoted to sitting practice, interspersed with both guided and walking meditations, chanting, and breath/energy relaxation exercises. The retreat will be conducted in silence. $740

Relationships: Letting Go — Moving On
Mary Goldenson (Devarani)

For one human being to love another: that is perhaps the most difficult of all our tasks, the ultimate test and proof, the work for which all the other work is but preparation.

—RILKE

The fabric of our lives is made up of relationships. All of life’s relationships will be the focus of this workshop: family, friends, lovers, co-workers, partners.

Often beliefs, defenses, fears, and emotions about past relationships continue into our present relationships and keep us from spontaneous feelings of love, trust, and joy. The goal of this workshop is to experience these patterns and create new ways to relate in the moment to ourselves, others, and our work.

This workshop can help you:
- find out how your relationships mirror you
- get a clearer picture of what you want and how to get it
- examine ways you sabotage yourself
- learn more about how others see you
- learn practical tools and knowledge that will help create empowered relationships.

Change & Self-Esteem
Phyllis Shankman

Change is an ever-present aspect of living which must be accepted and used creatively if one is to sustain a healthy, interesting, and exciting life. Many individuals talk about wanting change while actively or passively resisting it. Self-esteem, which includes self-acceptance, self-appreciation, and self-confidence, is the aspect of self that enables one to confront resistance and fear, and increases the willingness to change and take risks.

This workshop includes an in-depth process for finding and allowing self-acceptance and for creatively confronting opportunities for change and growth. Group activities include gestalt process work, discussion, meditation, music, dance, art imagery exercises, and whatever else happens spontaneously.

Clinical Program for Professionals: Integrating Gestalt, Self Psychology, and Mind-Body Healing
Ronald Alexander & Bruce Gregory

This five-day training program will combine didactic discussion with experiential exercise, supervision of therapist-client dyads, and clinical demonstrations. A full spectrum of treatment cartography will be used to clarify how gestalt, self psychology, and mind-body healing can be effectively integrated to address early developmental trauma, narcissistic issues of the self, and contact boundary disturbances.

Emphasis will be on the following:
- Improving skills of diagnosis
- Formulation of treatment plans that attend to the transition points of the healing process
- Improving intervention skills as they relate to handling resistance, the nurturing of the real self, and facilitation and activation of unconscious healing processes through the use of mirroring, pacing, and the language of mind-body healing.

Weekend of April 29-May 1

The Six Pillars of Self-Esteem
Nathaniel Branden

This will be a weekend with a pioneer in the self-esteem movement. Nathaniel Branden, psychological theorist and practicing psychotherapist, has made a major contribution to the awareness of self-esteem as an important and vital aspect of human well-being. He will conduct an experiential/participatory exploration of the following:
- The meaning of self-esteem and the confusions surrounding the concept
- The role of self-esteem in our lives
- The actions and practices it most crucially depends upon.

There will be discussion, group work, some individual work, sentence-completion exercises, and other processes — all aimed at strengthening the self-esteem of participants in the workshop.

Massage Intensive for Couples
Brita Ostrom & Attila Vaas

This workshop is for partners who want to learn to massage each other. Emphasis will be on “hearing” with the hands, de-stressing the home, asking for what we need, and giving to those we love. Sessions will include demonstrations and hands-on guidance. Individual concerns will be addressed so participants can continue their practice at home.

Natural Genius: An Authenticity of Being
Elisa Lodge

Natural genius is a powerful creative force that arises when a deep sense of self-worth and trust is felt, and reflects a wholehearted acceptance of the many facets of our being. We are all geniuses in wonderful and mysterious ways that lie undiscovered within us.

Participants will have an opportunity to explore self-defeating patterns and beliefs that inhibit natural genius and learn practical tools to unleash untapped energy, passion, and creativity.

Individual and group exercises will be used, including a whole-body thinking process to balance right and left brain, stimulate intuition, and support more spontaneous “feeling” aspects of our thinking. By freeing and integrating breath, sound, feelings, energy, and movement as the nonverbal expression of our aliveness, participants can contrast the difference between self-imprisonment and inner freedom, pretense and presence, acting and being.

Imagery Training for Health-Care Professionals
Jeanne Achterberg & Frank Lawlis
The power of the imagination has historically been recognized as a vital key in determining whether people stay well, become ill, or respond positively to a diagnosis of disease. Currently, an impressive and expanding body of clinical and research evidence supports its use in a broad range of treatment settings, for many medical disorders, and as a preeminent factor in the psychological, emotional, and spiritual issues confronted in the wake of crisis.

This program will focus on imagery as a health care tool for the seriously ill. The common threads of imagery in ancient rituals will be related to modern settings; new research on the physiological and biochemical pathways of the imagination will be discussed. Imagery will be explored and demonstrated as mental rehearsal for challenging events or treatments, diagnosis, and as an adjunctive treatment procedure for catastrophic and chronic conditions such as cancer, AIDS, autoimmune disorders, injuries, and chronic fatigue syndrome. A major section will deal with methods for enhancing immunity.

The discussion material will be accompanied by demonstrations, experiential sessions, case studies, and role playing. Participants will view slides and two important films, and have the opportunity to ask questions and network.

This program is designed primarily for health professionals, although health consumers who take an active role in their treatment and recovery will also find it useful. It is suggested that participants read Imagery in Healing: Shamanism and Modern Medicine (Achterberg) prior to attending the workshop.

Yoga: A Week of Learning and Rejuvenation
Ganga White & Tracey Rich
Presenting East/West teachings in a way that is contemporary, humorous, and applicable to modern living, the leaders will offer a week of physical, mental, and spiritual rejuvenation. Days will begin with instruction in an ancient Hatha yoga movement series that is new to this country and combines grace and flow with posture, pranayama (breath), and meditation. Participants will be shown a 45-minute balanced, aerobic yoga practice that they can continue at home. Afternoons and evenings will be for group discussion and exploration into the teachings and principles of the art of enlightened living.

Topics will include diet and nutrition, how yoga works, aligning and restructuring the body, and awakening subtle energies. Through Jhana (the yoga of wisdom and perception), participants will begin observing the thought processes and patterns that dictate their lives. They will look at the areas of love, responsibility, relationship, freedom, and death.

Participants at all levels are welcome; no previous experience is necessary. For additional information, contact the leaders at (805) 964-1944. $740

Watercolor: A Window into Nature and the Self
Sim Van der Ryn
Watercolor sketching outdoors is a simple, fluid, and fun way to record your reactions and impressions of landscape and nature. It teaches you many things about self and place without formal training in drawing or painting. The leader’s method focuses on letting go of the feeling that you “don’t know how to draw” so that you can directly experience changing light, form, and color — the essence of place.

The class is designed for beginners as well as those with watercolor experience. Participants will use a simple field kit so that equipment and technique do not get in the way of individual possibilities and responses. The rich and varied Esalen landscape offers all kinds of inspiring watercolor possibilities that the leader can help you experience and paint.

$740 (plus $85 materials fee paid directly to the leader. It includes a “field kit” of brushes, pigments, palette, and papers which will last for many painting sessions after the workshop. If you already watercolor, contact the leader at 415-332-5806 for the recommended supplies.)

The Personal is Political: Interfacing Personal Growth & Social Action
Bill Monning & Phyllis Shankman
As we approach the new millennium, we are being challenged globally, nationally, and locally with a multitude of social, economic, and environmental problems. Our capacity to build wholesome and healthy lives is dependent upon our ability to meet the challenges of our time with a new consciousness — one that can empower individuals, while also building communities of involvement and social action. A new politics is emerging globally that seeks to achieve a balance between personal and social responsibility. What is liberating for the soul can and must include a commitment to the larger human family.

The leaders will help the group explore shared values, commitments, and concerns about living both the personal and political. There will be discussion and guided exercises. Participants will identify, share, and move through their concerns about how to live their visions with more clarity and integrity while working together to build a strong base of political and social action for our communities, our nation, our planet.

Bill Monning is a lawyer/organizer/activist, and Phyllis Shankman is a psychotherapist/teacher/activist. This workshop is for anyone who is involved, or who would like to become more involved, in social action, and for those who want to learn new and better ways to take care of themselves personally and spiritually. $380

Integrating Jungian Spirituality and Alexander Bodywork
David Richo & Doris Green
Beginning in childhood, the body adopts many poses and armings that block the emergence of our true, vulnerable, and natural self. These limits, imposed by a lifetime of denial and misuse, can be dissolved through a reeducation of habitual stances and movements. With this refinement of the body’s language, dreams, images, and personal myths can arise, allowing the most visible form of the unconscious to emerge.
A combination of Jungian and Alexander methods will be presented to help foster “body literacy” — the ability to read and evoke the body’s messages. Combining active imagination and movement, the group will discover ways to move through their stuck-points and voices. This process can allow each individual to locate where in the body they hold on, hold back, or store archaic hurts. Imagination and movement can then be used to let go and open up.

Medicinal Herbology: An Esalen Garden Workshop

Jeannine Pollak

This weekend workshop will present in-depth coverage of forty useful plants growing fresh in the Esalen garden. How to identify, prepare, and formulate will be covered with respect to the medicinal, nutritional, and cosmetic aspects of the plants. Using the garden as a classroom, participants will make fresh infusions, sun teas, tinctures, and tinctures. Safe and effective formulas for common colds, flus, sore throats, headaches, and digestive/respiratory systems will also be discussed. Modern scientific research and herbal pharmacology, as well as tradition and folklore, are areas the leader will draw from as the uses and energetics of each plant are explored. Participants will gain detailed knowledge of many common plants and the safe and effective use of herbs in daily life.

C.E. credit is available for nurses; see pages 50-52.

Harmonizing with the Spirit of the Universe: Aikido as an Integral Transformation Practice

Eric Van Riswold

In his book The Future of the Body, Michael Murphy writes that “certain martial arts facilitate a many-sided, integral development of human nature. Some, such as aikido, are superior to modern sports in their reliance upon spiritual principles, and superior to quiet meditation in their cultivation of stillness in action.”

This workshop offers you the opportunity to experience a unique martial art that fosters grace, flexibility, power, and overall body awareness. Aikido is a strong self-defense art, yet is non-aggressive, non-competitive, and does not rely on muscular strength. It is a way of being as well as doing, a meaningful philosophy that becomes truly powerful when experienced as a living, embodied practice. You will learn to sense and direct the flow of energy, to locate and move from center, to relax under pressure, and to use alternative ways of dealing with conflict. Throughout, you will follow the injunction of the founder of aikido, Moriehi Ueshiba, “Always practice in the spirit of joy.”

This is a workshop designed for women who want to explore the art of self-renewal within the context of midlife. The ages between 35 and 60 can be a metamorphic period during which we reflect on our first thirty years and prepare for the years of wisdom and elderhood. Midlife is an opportunity to reshape our lives in order to experience the rest of life to the fullest and contribute our gifts and skills to personal and planetary well-being.

Participants will ask themselves the questions: What is my vision of the life I want to live? What is meaningful work? How can I cultivate spirituality and creativity in my daily life? What would I like to contribute to our global community?

There will be in-depth personal reflection and an opportunity for midlife reorganization by redefining success through internal values and actual life circumstances. Writing, art, group process, and purification ceremonies will be used to create a supportive circle of women sharing their stories, fears, visions, and strengths. Participants will engage their internal allies: creativity, spirituality, passion, imagination, and wisdom. The group will meditate, hike, bathe, sing, and dance together in celebration of the beauty and transformative power of this passage.

This is a workshop for women only.

Five-Day Lomi Intensive

Kathryn Lydecker, Johanna Putnoi & Robert Sanoff

In the formative years of life, human beings learn to embody the beliefs and posture of their individual family system and the culture into which they are born. Many individuals unconsciously continue to shape their lives in reaction to these influences, often at the expense of their own creativity and vitality.

The aim of this workshop will be for participants to observe how they feel, think, and move themselves through life. By attending to bodily-felt experience, moment to moment, and by distinguishing between sensation and thinking, the path to reclaiming one’s authentic self opens. Through this process of developing awareness, it is possible to make responsible choices in daily life and to live with integrity and gentleness.

This workshop provides an arena for developing mindful awareness and for unmasking habits that keep us from ourselves and hinder relationships. Lomi work includes meditation, movement, gestalt, aikido, and Reichian work.

Celebrating Midlife Discoveries: Women and Aging

Cathleen Rountree and Phyllis Shankman

The Way of the Lover

Andrew Harvey

If you want to live, die in love:

Die in love if you want to remain alive. — Rumi

Teilhard de Chardin said “Humanity has come to the moment when it must choose between suicide and adoration.” It is adoration that is the way of the lover, for adoration opens the heart and mind in stages to the full presence of the Divine in all things.

Adoration radiates from the feminine aspect of the psyche. The return of the feminine in our time is bringing back to the human race its lost powers of worship and praise, powers it now urgently needs to provide the insight and vision necessary for its survival.

Andrew Harvey will open up the path of adoration by a mixture of reading from his own translations of sacred texts (the Upanishads, Rumi, St. John of the Cross), meditation, singing, and writing exercises designed to expand the spiritual imagination.

The weekend will be devoted to leading all participants into the truth of their own hearts.
The Rosen Method: Bodywork and Movement
Marion Rosen & Sue Brenner

The Rosen Method was developed out of Marion Rosen’s fifty years’ experience as a physical therapist and health educator. Her unique approach to bodywork has earned her recognition as a leader in the field of body-oriented therapies. “The body tells us in the clearest terms what we want to hide the most,” she writes. “This work is about transformation — from the person we think we are to the person we really are.”

The Rosen Method is a powerful process using nonintrusive touch and awareness of breath. By adding verbal interaction to therapeutic bodywork, a link is made between emotional trauma and physical tension. At its heart, the Rosen Method is simplicity itself. It works with muscles and brings about physical and emotional awareness through relaxation. The practitioner’s hands contact tense muscles, matching tension with equal pressure. Often the tightness softens and the area that was held begins to move with the breath. These changes are then used as guides to the client’s inner processes — buried feelings, attitudes, and memories that may surface.

This bodywork is complemented by movement that encourages natural, free breathing and uses gentle stretching, swinging, and jumping exercises to improve body alignment and flexibility. The goal is to release holding and rediscover the joy of movement.

The training can be used by those interested in personal growth, by mental health professionals who want to learn more about the role of the body in healing, and by bodyworkers who want to know how to be more verbal with clients.

This is a hands-on workshop where participants will be doing body work on each other. Please bring one set of sheets (top and bottom), a pillow and blanket. You may want to bring a bathing suit (two-piece for women).

C. E. credit is available for nurses; see pages 50-52. $380 per participant.

Buddhism and Deep Ecology
Christopher Reed

How is it possible to live with an awareness of what is happening in our society and in our world? For many there is deep grief, for all of us a nagging malaise. We are destroying our environment, our own home, and neither denial nor activism can fully address the pain and discontent we feel.

Increasingly we discover that the practice of meditation, as taught by the Buddha, is an invitation to engage with life. It is not a way to cut yourself off. The practice of whole-hearted awareness naturally leads to an experience of deep interconnectedness. As we acknowledge the source of our pain — the illusion of separation from the world — we naturally begin to take full and joyful responsibility in our lives.

This workshop is open to anyone who has an interest in the practice of engaged Buddhism and meditation whether or not he/she has prior meditation experience. It is open to anyone who has ever questioned how they might respond to these difficult times while cultivating an authentic spirituality.

Participants will cultivate the practice of mindfulness with formal sitting and walking meditation. Interactive exercises to enhance the capacity for deep listening will be used. The group will also explore contemplative practices that can be used effectively in daily life situations.

Time-Shifting: Creating Time for Your Life
Stephan Rechtschaffen

As we constantly strive to be “on time” in our fast-paced, over-scheduled lives, we lose touch with living in the flow of time. We are a society plagued with time-sickness. Caught up in the stress of running to work, home, recreation, or other responsibilities and interests, we don’t have time for the important things. Anxious about the future, regretful of the past, we miss the fullness of the moment.

This workshop will help participants understand their own attitudes toward time and how those attitudes affect their lifestyle, health, and longevity. Methods that move perception away from societal time pressures into the often unexplored territory of free-time within time will be introduced, along with meditation, visualization, time-evaluation, and planning (not scheduling).

From this vantage point, participants can explore how dysrhythmic, hurried schedules affect their relationships, work, and creativity; use their expanded sense of time to define what they really want in their lives and what their real priorities are; and enjoy the simple power and pleasure of being present in each moment.

Week of May 15-20

Accepting Life’s Transitions: Letting Go — Moving On
Mary Goldenson (Devarani)

For workshop description see January 30-February 4.

Continuum
Emilie Conrad-Da’oud

This workshop explores the idea that movement is something we are rather than something we do, that what we call a “body” is actually life expressing itself.

Using deep rhythms and intrinsic motion, participants can discover a sensitivity to movement at all levels — not just familiar movements, but what the leader calls the “dance of intelligent life.” Both individually and in rapport with a partner, participants will explore the subtleties of breath and tissue, the undulation of the spine, and the effect of being witnessed by others. The goal will be to experience a visceral, neuromuscular connection to all life, celebrating a richness and depth that go far beyond social or cultural connections. Emilie Conrad-Da’oud writes: “As we enliven ourselves from the inside, our dynamic expressions in the world increase. This remarkable oscillation from intrinsic to extrinsic, this elegant movement of creativity from cell to action, this flow of life urging itself into new creative channels — this is Continuum.

As a movement specialist at UCLA, the leader has contributed to a study demonstrating that primary movement is essential to mediating disease and aging. Her visionary work is incorporated into the fields of physical therapy, massage, and psychoimmunology. This workshop can give participants a deeper awareness of the body as a system where change, growth, and innovation are possible.

No dance or movement experience is necessary.

Intermediate Massage Intensive
CC. (Carl Chase) and Kathleen O’Shaughnessy

This workshop is directed towards those individuals who have already had basic massage training, have been in practice for awhile, and who feel themselves wanting to expand beyond their present edges into new territory. It is also for those who want to add to what they are doing by learning more about specific areas such as the neck and low back.

A portion of the format will include the traditional Esalen style of long, integrative strokes and methods for deep contact with the recipient, which we will then trim down to detail. Since we anticipate working with experienced individuals, another part of the format will have the flavor of a musician’s open jam session with two lead players, thus eliciting a cross-pollination of ideas and approaches from all of the participants.

Personal centering through Zen practice and breathing methods, as well as dynamic movement and hatha yoga stretches, will be juxtaposed to the hands-on work.

Mythmakers: Discovering the Healing Power of Images
Jeremiah Abrams & Linda Piscitelli

Call the world if you please, ‘The vale of Soul-making’
Then you will find out the use of the world.
— JOHN KEATS

C.G. Jung discovered his own individual myth and introduced us to a new mode of existence. The mind has a poetic basis, whose high purpose is soul-making, in order to generate meaning for ourselves and our culture. Our task, Jung discovered, is to “create more and more consciousness,” to trust the contents and the images that spontaneously “press up” from the unconscious. In other words, we each need to live our own myth.

In this experiential workshop, the focus will be on accessing the mythmaker within, the “one who remembers” the higher purpose of soul-making, the visionary inner healer who can draw upon the living symbolic language of the soul in order to consciously evolve the soul. Accessing one’s own personal myth gives us the bigger picture, restoring meaning and purpose to our life’s journey.

Trance induction, dream incubation, evocative music, deep core breathing, active imagination, bioenergetics, movement, didactic presentation, and group dialogue will all be used to constellate the living symbols of each individual’s personal myth. As an ancient Latin proverb says, “For those who have a symbol, it is easier to change.”

C.E. credit is available for nurses; see pages 50-52. $740

Big Sur Wilderness Experience
Steven Harper

Located on a narrow stretch of land between the Pacific Ocean and the Coastal ridge of the Santa Lucia Mountains, Esalen is the trailhead to one of the world’s most spectacular wilderness areas. With this natural reserve as the primary teacher, the group will walk into the Los Padres National Forest. Drawing on various traditions, participants can develop the quality of their awareness and open to the natural world.

Week-long workshops will venture out on five hikes (4-10 miles in length); weekend workshops will take two hikes (3-6 miles in length). Using Esalen as a base camp, the group will explore the different trails through the natural beauty of the Big Sur backcountry. Days will begin and end at Esalen with short stretching and sharing sessions. Each day hike will begin after breakfast and conclude in time to enjoy the hot springs and dinner each evening at Esalen. Basic outdoor skills such as map reading and minimum impact concepts will be practiced. Participants will be taught enough skills to begin exploring the wilderness on their own after these outings. More information will be sent upon registration.

Weekend of May 20-22

Building a Successful Career as a Writer, Public Speaker, and Consultant to Business and Industry

Ken Dychtwald

The leader writes: "During the past twenty years I have made nearly every mistake in the book as I struggled to be successful as a writer, consultant, and entrepreneur. In spite of these blunders, however, I have managed to become a Ph.D. psychologist and gerontologist; an advisor to the U.S. Congress, Time Inc., CBS, and Chrysler; a special correspondent on aging for CBS News; a public speaker, the founder and chairman of Age Wave, Inc; the producer of best-selling audio and video programs; and the author of eight books.

"In this seminar, I will share some of the strategies that I have learned — how to avoid mistakes, how to achieve inner and outer success in writing, public speaking, consulting and business development. Topics will include: the best way to get an article or book published and what to expect from the process; shortcuts to a rewarding career as a public speaker or consultant; methods for gaining access to broadcast media; strategies for effective self-promotion; tips for building a leveraged business around your energy and ideas."

In addition to the meeting agenda, ample time will be provided to enjoy the wonders of Esalen and Big Sur.

Note: The leader is donating his fee to the Esalen scholarship fund. Bring a friend! $380

Shaping a Sacred Vessel: The Art of Basketry

Peg Elliott Mayo

You want psychoanalytic advice? Gather bones! — Clarissa Estes

The vessel is an age-old form which can either be highly functional, exquisitely aesthetic or symbolic, or be a melding of meanings. This is a workshop that can help you discover the delight of creative works of the hand. The medium will be basketry and the size, form, and spirit will be unique to each individual.

The workshop will begin with a sharing of visions and an appreciation of the hands as a wonderfully versatile tool that can move us away from our intellect into a liberating creative consciousness. The leader will give a demonstration of several techniques and will provide samples and books to stimulate the eyes and heart. Participants will then work independently, listening to inner guidance and receiving practical help as needed.

Basketry sculpture will be available for inspiration and purchase. Each participant can expect to either finish a piece by the end of the workshop or to have gained the skills to complete the work later. No prior knowledge of basketry is required.

The leader is also a professional storyteller who will delight you with Celtic tales in the oral tradition, and there will be music-making by her assistants.

Please bring sacred objects — shells, wood, stones, beads, bones, antlers, whatever — to incorporate in your piece. These will have to be glued, drilled, or lashed to the piece unless you choose to have them loose within.

Note: You will need to bring a sharp pocket knife, a pair of scissors, and comfortable, washable clothes.

$380 (plus a $25 materials fee paid directly to the leader)

The Awakened Mind: Brain-Wave Training

Anna Wise

Inside each person there lives a wealth of knowledge, capacities, and power rarely transmitted to the conscious mind. Brainwave training combined with meditation and biofeedback monitoring helps develop these deeper resources, allowing access to greater creativity, reduced stress, and a deeper awareness and understanding of your inner self.

By assessing the brainwave patterns of hundreds of people who function unusually well, C. Maxwell Cade of the Institute for Psychobiological Research in London began to see similarities in the patterns of optimal states of mind. Drawing upon Cade’s work, Anna Wise has developed a training program to help access these optimum states.

Different methods of meditation, visualization, and psycho-physiological relaxation affect our brainwaves in particular ways, as do specific acts such as tongue, eye, and body positions. In this workshop you will learn techniques for brainwave development and management, and begin to determine which methods of practice are best for your particular brainwave pattern. You will also address how you can use these optimum states once they are achieved for your own creativity, mental flexibility, self-healing, problem-solving, and spiritual development. The Mind Mirror EEG will be used to demonstrate brainwave patterns, and each participant will be able to use an Electrical Skin Resistance Meter to measure the depth of arousal or relaxation of the nervous system.

Refilling the Chalice: Time Out for Healers

Joan & Myrin Borisenko

The leaders write: “We are offering this workshop as much for ourselves as we are for you. Several times each year we retreat in a solitary or protected group setting to enjoy nature, open to the still voice within, and refill the chalice of caring and love from which others sip throughout the year. Esalen is a wonderful setting for such a retreat. We will schedule time for group meditation and yoga, prayer, silent mindful walking in the beauty of Big Sur, dreamwork, listening to sacred music, and discussing the nature of healing. This is a time to nourish ourselves and to honor the sacred trust we have been given by taking time to welcome and thank the Spirit that we serve.”

Acupressure Energy Workshop

Pauline Kirby

Traditional acupuncture is a healing art and science that teaches one how to see the entire human being in relationship to the body, mind, and spirit. It is a form of healing that emphasizes balance and harmony, focusing on health rather than disease.

This workshop will explore the five elements used in Traditional Chinese Medicine, using the metaphor that the body is like a garden rather than a machine. We will look closely at the body’s energy system and discuss how these meridian pathways can enhance one’s health. The concepts of traditional acupuncture and acupressure that will be discussed and demonstrated will include pulse diagnosis, the flow of meridian pathways, point location, an in-depth study of the five elements, and special application for stress reduction and health maintenance.

Hands On: The Roots of Rhythm through Drumming and Massage
Gordy Ryan & Peggy Horan

The fundamental nature of hand drumming and massage is very much the same: relaxation into the river of rhythm whose waters soothe our souls and heal our bodies. With this as the goal, participants will explore traditional rhythm and songs from Africa, Brazil, the Caribbean, and New Orleans, with an emphasis on the relaxation and internal equilibrium produced when the player opens to an awareness of "the groove" of giving and receiving vital energy.

Through the hands-on practice of massage work, participants will be encouraged to let their inner rhythm guide them in healing the body through intuitive touch.

Bring a hand drum and/or bells, shakers, log drum, etc. $740

Through a Glass, Darkly
We are the mirror as well as the face in it. We are tasting the taste this minute of eternity. We are pain and what cures pain. We are the sweet, cold water, and the jar that pours.

— Rumi

Joyce Lyke & David Silverstein

With our limited perception of how things really are, we're like Plato, looking at shadows on the wall of the cave, or St. Paul, who described reality as but dim reflections in a mirror. And the closer we get to the truth of how things really are, the more we retreat in confusion because it seems too simple to accept. Living with paradox, with apparent contradiction, is difficult for our minds because of our need for clarity and certainty. But what if it were true that each of us, longing for peace and strength and clarity and joy, already possessed those essential qualities and somehow didn't know it?

This workshop is about discovering "the cure" for pain in the pain itself. It is about stopping the futile search outside ourselves for the comfort and contentment we all seek. The deep longings we have, in themselves, point y to their satisfaction.

Using Sufi self-remembering exercises, meditation, Reichian breathwork, gestalt awareness practice, and a connection to the earth at Esalen, we will create a safe place to deepen our awareness and explore the depths of this apparent contradiction. $740

Jeremy Taylor

The basic language of dreams is symbol and metaphor. Dreams address everyone in essentially the same way, regardless of the uniqueness of our individual lives and circumstances.

Participants will share and work with their dreams, drawing on the mythological/archetypal images that shape our contemporary individual and collective lives. Although the focus will be dream interpretation in a collective context, the methods are designed to give participants the ability to engage in their own dream work upon returning home.

Everyone is welcome — those people who are just beginning to explore the world of their dreams, as well as professionals who work with dreams. As the leader comments: "Only the dreamer can say with any certainty what meanings his or her dreams may hold, and dream work is one of the few activities that puts beginners and experts on an equal emotional footing from the outset."

African Dance: Expressions of Spiritual Energy
Yao Tamakloe & Sarah Abukutsa

Yao Tamakloe is a teacher of dance, drumming and ethology. He is a third generation jazz performance artist and has danced and taught with Babatunde Olatunji and Katherine Dunham for over ten years. Along with his wife, Sarah Abukutsa, one of Kenya's most celebrated singers who has also studied West African dance, Tamakloe will teach the exciting technique of African dance and the symbolic stories it can portray.

Participants will experience the dynamics of war, harvest, and initiation dances, as well as the subtle healing, funeral, and recreational dance forms.

Live drumming will accompany this joyful marriage of power and fluidity inherent in dance. The different movements that relate to various roles in society will be presented. Drumming to accompany dances will be taught using Babatunde Olatunji's Gun Go Do PaTa method. Bring a drum if you can. $380

Creative Writing Brainstorming
Herbert Gold

Even professional writers can learn to speak from the heart — in fact, anyone can whose feelings are strong, buried, and complex. Participants will struggle with the issues of love and death, communicate with each other, and explore the talents even gifted artists don't fully understand. Everyone will make some jump starts.

Bring paper, writing equipment, and a willingness to ride the rhythms of "speed eloquence." $380

Experiencing Psychic/Intuitive Abilities
Anne & Jim Armstrong

Their experience with thousands of workshop participants over the past thirty years has led Anne and Jim Armstrong to believe that everyone is intuitive — that intuition is part of humankind's standard equipment. The goal of this workshop is to have everyone experience their own innate intuitive ability, using it at will, on demand. This will be accomplished through exercises and meditation, with a minimum of discussion, allowing each individual to recognize his or her own particular style of perception and to trust the intuitive input they receive. Anne will use her intuitive abilities developed over the past thirty-three years to guide the participants in arriving at useful, accurate data.
The spiritual and ethical aspects of the intuitive/psychic process will also be addressed, as well as the leaders' belief that intuition development is the gateway to Divine Wisdom and should be the outgrowth of a healthy spiritual practice. They will demystify the intuitive/psychic process and encourage participants to use it in all areas of their lives — personal, professional, and spiritual. Real life situations presented by participants will be selected for psychic/intuitive practice.

Acting is Doing

Stephen Book

Remove the restrictions, both inner and outer, which suppress the spontaneity of any human being, and his/her natural spontaneity will show itself as artistic creativeness. In this workshop, complicated theater techniques are transformed into simple game forms which produce spontaneous behavior through playing. True play is spontaneous and requires focus — absorption in what one is doing, to the exclusion of other thoughts.

This experiential workshop, which is designed for the layperson, emphasizes playing and focusing. Participants will heighten and focus energy, increase communication skills, extend powers of observation and concentration, and improvise imagined realities.

Vision Painting

Helen Malcolm-Neeb

Vision painting is a process through which a personal vision of the future is crafted. Aspects of each individual's life, spiritually, professionally, and personally, are addressed from their highest potential. Through guided visioning, the participants can witness a flow of images from levels beyond the conscious rational mind. Inner yearnings are prompted from the heart, through the hand, and onto the paper. The vision painting becomes an affirmation of areas in the participant's life that desire improvement or healing.

Vision painting is an active meditation. Self-expression is experienced through feelings, color, sound, movement, and dream images. The participant is encouraged to trust the creative impulse and move beyond judgments about good/bad, darkness/light. Painting from spirit is a sacred journey into the self.

This is an opportunity to create from a place of play and strength. Beginners and artists are welcome. $740

(plus $30 material fee)

Self-Empowerment and Purification: The Farther Reaches of Gestalt

Julian Silverman

"We badly need a new orientation, a new perspective," wrote Fritz Perls. "We have graduated from the infants', 'I can't help myself,' to the adults', 'I can't help myself because...' But psychology and psychiatry were never meant to be after-the-fact justifications for continuing neurotic behavior, behavior which does not permit the individual to live up to the maximum of his capacities."

This workshop combines experiential and didactic sessions. Its primary focus will be on developing a new perspective — the integration of a "purification process" with a personal psychology of empowerment. This perspective is grounded in modern science and ancient wisdom.

Introductory Workshop Principle #1: Take responsibility for every emotion, every movement you make, every thought you have.

Deborah Anne Medow & Esalen Massage, Movement, and Bodywork Instructors

In celebration of the 10th anniversary of the Esalen Massage School, Deborah Anne Medow and the Esalen teacher/practitioners invite you to participate in this special weekend program. The symposium is designed for bodyworkers, health-care providers, physical therapists, athletes, dancers, massage and movement-oriented practitioners. For example, at one time there may be classes offered in sports massage, the Feldenkrais approach, and facial massage. Other two- or three-hour segments might include trigger point work, massage focused on head, neck, and shoulders, and tai chi movement.

Mountains and Waves

Susan Harper & Steven Harper

Nature is a primary teacher of movement, creativity, and awareness. Being outdoors in the richness and beauty of the natural world awakens our outer senses. Continuum movement takes us inward, heightening the awareness of our inner senses. These five days will combine both practices, integrating the subtle inner explorations that Continuum movement inspires with the activity of day hiking in the magnificent Big Sur backcountry.

The day hikes will introduce participants to basic and increasingly refined awareness practices to enhance their sensitivity to all that wilderness and being out-of-doors offers. In doing so, not only will there be contact with the natural world, but it will be an opportunity to reawaken those elements of wilderness within.

In the indoor sessions, participants will explore movements which express and embody what they have taken in during their walks, enlivening their ability to feel what they see in nature, as well as their own inner nature. Engaging with this sensual environment, the group will play with movement, touch, sound, dreams, and ritual.

This is a time for contact with nature and wilderness, inside and out. Participants need not have previous experience in hiking or dance. $740

Healing the Heart

Julie Bowden & Richard Balaban

This five-day workshop will be a journey into the vulnerable, tender part of the self that carries childhood traumas. Experiencing and integrating the pain from our past allows us to live more fully in relationship to ourselves and others, and helps us to acknowledge and nurture our inner voice. Enhancing intimacy and relationship skills is an important part of this work. Issues specific to both men and women will be explored.

We welcome adult children of alcoholic and dysfunctional families, people with a history of unfulfilling relationships, recovering alcoholics and addicts, codependents and treatment providers. Participants are asked to forego alcohol and other mood-altering, non-prescription drugs for these five days. This will help create an atmosphere of safety, care, and respect for core issues to emerge. An environment will be created to facilitate transformation.

If there is unresolved pain from your past, or relationship issues in your present, this workshop is designed for you. Do it.

Freeing Our Bodies/Our Selves through Movement: A Feldenkrais® Approach

Patrick Douce

The work of Moshe Feldenkrais is based on the natural process by which we learned to move as children. During this workshop, soft, easy, gentle movements will be used to increase awareness of the body and to improve the ease and ability of movement. Special emphasis will be placed on the difficulties in movement that arise from chronic conditions, such as lower back and neck pain, tension in the neck and shoulders, and knee injuries. Such conditions can be improved by approaching the difficulties as problems in learning rather than as therapeutic troubles. Situations which were “inculable” become “reeducable.” Workshop participants will also be introduced to methods for improving their ability to sense each other’s bodies through touch and massage.

Although this workshop is valuable for anyone interested in learning more about his/her body through direct experience, it may be of special interest and benefit to dancers, athletes, doctors, nurses, physical therapists, psychologists, health care professionals, and elderly citizens who may discover new ways of moving with ease and increased flexibility — painlessly and immediately.

Optimum Health: Theory & Practice

Nick Hall & Jim Loehr

The effects of stress on the body are still largely unknown, but research over the past decade has indicated that it may be linked to various diseases. This workshop will explore the theoretical and practical issues relating to stress and outline a training program for optimum health and stress reduction.

Nick Hall, a pioneer in researching the relationship between the brain and the immune system, will review the practical issues concerning stress and psychoneuroimmunology. He has published over 100 articles on psychoneuroimmunology and has been featured on “60 Minutes” for his work using imagery with cancer patients. Participants will explore behavioral-based techniques such as relaxation, guided imagery, conditioning, and nutrition as anti-stress interventions.

Jim Loehr will demonstrate his Toughness Training System, which evolved from his work with world-class tennis players, including Gabriela Sabatini and Martina Navratilova. Strategies for toughening physically, mentally, and emotionally will be explored. His method for calculating units of stress, units of recovery, and markers of overtraining will be experienced by each participant. The importance, function, and timing of recovery in terms of sleep, diet, active and passive rest will be reviewed in the context of Life Toughening.

Participants need not be extremely athletic or highly conditioned, only interested in increasing their level of fitness.

Finding Inspired Work in Midlife
Peller Marion

At the age of 93, as he was accepting the American Comedy Award, George Burns said, "The first half of my life has been good, and I look forward to the second half being even better." While most people usually don't live to the age of 93, some, like George Burns, remain charismatic and magnetic. Others are drawn to them, largely because their life seems effortless, playful, and meaningful.

How we define ourselves and what success means is integral to our personal growth as we age into the second half of our lives. Participants in this workshop will explore these issues through structured exercises and open exploration of topics such as, "What am I dissatisfied with? Who am I? What's my definition of success?" The leader will coach participants to create a vision for the second half of their lives based on internal values that are meaningful and significant.

What this workshop offers is a playful and rich way to reevaluate one's work and relationships to gain clarity, focus, and direction. It is recommended for professionals in diverse areas who want to revitalize and renew their vision.

ISHTA: The Yoga of Empowerment
Rod Stryker

Each one of us is filled with unique potential and yearns for fulfillment. To realize ourselves fully, we must develop an understanding of who we are and what our hearts truly desire. The practice of ISHTA yoga sensitizes us to our natural physical, intellectual, energetic, and spiritual gifts and empowers us to utilize these gifts in our daily life.

This workshop will include: daily yoga routines to strengthen and purify the body; breathing practices for rejuvenation and healing; and meditation (including yogic visualization practices) to still the mind and deepen the experience of the self. The course will include open discussion and some theory to personalize our practices. The power and majesty of the Esalen surroundings will also be used to feed our journey towards wholeness and integration.

Since parts of the workshop will be held outside, please bring warm clothing.

Renewal: A Hands-On Workshop for Health Professionals
Laurie Lioness Parizek, Sherry Sanders Galloway & Guest Teachers

This workshop will provide a time for renewal, both personal and professional, for healthcare workers, physicians, nurses, bodyworkers, chiropractors, physiotherapists, and all those actively involved in the healing professions.

Heartful communication, active listening, and focused healing touch are effective tools that are often neglected in today's busy world. This workshop encourages health-care workers to develop these practices in their own fields of expertise. There will be discussions and demonstrations of the specific uses of subtle energy balancing, meridian relationships, and acupressure and trigger points. These methods are effective for pain relief and for opening blocked areas that often inhibit the effectiveness of healing.

In the early spring, the fragrant and regenerative energy of the moment offers great opportunities for gaining new strength and insight. Meditation, Taoist exercises, and yoga will be used to encourage serenity and personal growth. The leaders will also make use of Esalen's beautiful grounds and gardens, with walks to acquaint participants with local herbs and flowers. Hands-on sessions at the baths will allow participants to integrate the more specific work into their own personal bodywork.

The Practical Art of Creative Risk-Taking
David Schiffman

To make effective, creative choices, you need courage, imagination, and the willingness to know your heart and be true to the dreams that live inside it. Choosing this deeper wisdom can often involve the risk of breaking set — the choice to move against the powerful grain of old fears, habits, and the constant pressure of other people's expectations. To foster this spirit means contacting the elemental-instinctual parts of our natures, befriending rather than suppressing or denying the sexuality and power out of which initiative and enthusiasm spring.

During this week we will focus on how to develop a more adventurous, resourceful, and buoyant way of living. In an atmosphere based on warmth and humor, we will explore our capacity for mutual tenderness, respect, and honesty. Traditional psychological practices such as gestalt, bioenergetics, and psychosynthesis will be used for intensive individual work, as well as non-traditional innovative approaches in bodywork, kinesthetic retraining, music, and guided imagery.

Story Magic and Jewish Intuition
Rabbi William Cutter & Stephanie Waxman
In the beginning was the word... — JOHN 1:1
Jews have always seen stories as the “unfolding of God.” Jewish stories reflect an attempt to understand the spiritual possibility in the common event.

This workshop combines the religious insights of the Jewish tradition with the story-telling techniques of theater improvisation. The group will use non-verbal interpretation and will draw on personal memories. The leaders will tell Jewish stories — from the Bible, tales, stories of the Baal Shem Tov and Nachman of Bratzlav — to uncover the deeper meanings which have resonated for centuries and still speak to our twentieth-century lives. Through the combination of several approaches, participants will explore the nature of story-telling in general, and Jewish stories in particular.

Participants are asked to bring a story about a time when they experienced the unfolding of God — a deep insight, a miracle, an epiphany.

Weekend of June 19-24

Ceremony
Gabrielle Roth
This workshop will weave tribe, trance, and transformation into a living prayer for the earth and all its sentient beings. Participants will invoke primal energies from the five elements and their own souls in an ecstatic ceremony of terrestrial art, dance, and music.

Rooted in the dynamic practice of THE WAVE, the five sacred rhythms, we will enter an unpredictable, organic process of community. CEREMONY will be a large gathering supporting smaller, core groups led by special guest teachers who will assist Gabrielle in drawing forth the group’s collective voice in ritual theater. Much of the work will be done outside on the beautiful Esalen grounds. Bring any costumes, masks, or sacred objects that you wish to share.

Positive Approaches to Menopause
Lonnie Barbach
This workshop can help turn the myths of menopause upside down and help women make the “third-third” of life the most productive and fulfilling. By combining a woman’s support group format with the most up-to-date information available, women will gain access to options and insights. In addition, drawing on her extensive work on sexuality, the leader will discuss the sensitive subjects of intimacy, desire, and sexual practices, and provide truly helpful advice for this time in a woman’s life. You will learn about:

- Early, often overlooked, symptoms of menopause — and what to do about them
- Managing moodiness, irritability, rage, and feelings of anxiety
- How to get dramatic relief with exercise and diet adjustment
- Herbal remedies and vitamin supplements that work for PMS and menopause-related difficulties
- Chinese herbs, acupuncture, and homeopathic treatments
- Ways to benefit from hormones while you’re still menstruating
- How to handle physicians who may not offer the information or help you need.

This workshop will focus on helping participants feel in control, empower them to make informed choices about the options they face, and help them experience this major turning point without fear and discomfort. It can be a time of strength, confidence, and glowing good health.

Awakening the Wisdom of the Body
Richard Strozzi Heckler
To work with someone bodily is to work with the shape of their experience. To see the person through their body is to see how they contain, express, and awaken their excitation. The way we rigidify who we are, and how we seek that which we long for, can be discovered in the way our excitation interacts with the world. How we are drawn through our bodies tells us who we are in the present, and what we have denied in the past. By turning our attention to the life of the body, it is possible to experience a greater depth of feeling, compassion, and intuition.

This seminar will focus on character armoring, states of attention, contact and expression, and aiki principles of center, ground, and blending while working with others. The modalities of movement, breath, and touch will also be used.

Recommended reading: Heckler, The Anatomy of Change and In Search of the Warrior Spirit. $380
Cortical Reeducation® and the Feldenkrais Method®

Harriet Goslins & Patti Lawrence

The habitual way a person sits, stands, or moves reflects patterns that are "wired in" to the nervous system. This information can be erased or changed. By reeducating the brain-muscle connection, restrictions in movement are freed, freeing also the lifetime habits that have organized around that movement.

This work is a relearning of the ease and fluidity that was taken for granted as a child and lost somewhere along the way. Physical injury, emotional trauma, or ongoing stress all evoke a protective response from the body. These patterns, necessary at the time, remain when no longer needed, outside of awareness, and continue to cause discomfort and unnecessary limitations. Freeing them results in relief of chronic pain or tightness, a more restful sleep, and a higher energy level. By changing muscular holding patterns, the entire protective posture is altered, deeply affecting the body's habitual defense system. Thus, new movement possibilities mean new self-image possibilities.

Fears and anxieties have corresponding muscular habits. Verbal information, no matter how brilliant, or spiritual practice that fails to extinguish these muscular habits, will fail to totally eliminate the toxic behavior.

This workshop is for those who are physically active and fit and want to increase their skills while learning to reduce risk or injury; for the sedentary or those dealing with after-effects of injuries for the athlete, the dancer, and those who "live in their heads," for individuals who feel chronically tired and stressed and want to learn how to take better care of their neck, shoulders, and back; and for those who want to improve their posture and breathing and live with more flexibility and comfort.

This course is provided by the California Board of Dental Examiners, number 2586.

Week of June 26-July 1

A Week with Seymour Carter

Everyone has unused capacities for further personal development. When these capacities are recognized and given attention, a natural force is released which, like a tide, can carry the individual to a higher level of ability and action. Fritz Perls taught how to recognize the force of avoided issues in dealing with blocked energies. When unfinished issues are confronted and assimilated, it is possible to feel potent and in charge of one's life.

In this workshop, participants will deal with these issues by examining the influence of the inner dialogue on thoughts and the nature of impasse, as well as tendencies within themselves toward psychological completion and well-being. The basis of this work is the gestalt method, supported by studies in various body disciplines, including sensory awareness, bioenergetics, and aikido. Each participant's process of development will be honored, encouraged, and treated as unique. $740

The Subtle Art of Meditation

David Streeter

The experience of insight, tranquility, inner strength, and aliveness can be found within our everyday life through the ancient art of meditation.

This workshop will approach traditional meditation practice in an unusual way. In our retreat atmosphere we will prepare the bodymind for silent listening with fluid movement from the martial arts and yoga. We will incorporate breathing methods (Prana-Yama) and energy work with Zazen (sitting meditation). Other activities will include a silent listening hike in the wilderness, group meditation in a nearby contemplative monastery, and Zazen at our new meditation center nestled close to a waterfall.

This approach to the subtle practice of meditation through the body can inspire the student to discover his or her rich interior life, and that crystal clear still point described so well in every spiritual tradition.

Starting to Heal Yourself

Meir Schneider

Subtle expectations about aging and health have programmed us to believe that our bodies are destined for certain levels of decline; that fatigue will increase as the day progresses; and that health naturally declines with age. This workshop will encourage a change in those expectations. Participants will imagine a higher level of optimum health and mobilize those resources that promote healing through proper awareness and movement.

Meir Schneider's methods of self-healing will be explored using subtle movement, breathing, relaxation, self-massage, and vision exercises in order for each person to get in touch with his/her body. The effects of both correct and incorrect movement will be discussed. Imagery will be used to help free us from physical limitations and the restricted concepts of health which accompany them.

The leader's self-healing methods have been very helpful with a variety of stress and lifestyle-related diseases, among them:

- Arthritis, both osteo- and rheumatoid
- Spine problems, including scoliosis, sciatica, and degenerated disks
- Vision problems, from myopia to macula degeneration
- Neuromuscular ailments such as multiple sclerosis and muscular dystrophy
- Digestive disorders such as spastic colon, colitis, chron's disease, and constipation
- Respiratory problems such as asthma.

themselves and their own fulfillment.
A necessary part of healing is moving from being codependent toward a state of emotional sobriety. Through self-exploration, participants will have the opportunity to access, express, and release blocked emotions that they still carry from childhood, and to tap the aliveness that was sacrificed when they buried their anger, fear, and grief. Points of focus for this workshop will include:
• Emotional Sobriety: Having a personal sense of balance and physical boundaries from which to find peace and a capacity for genuine sharing and pleasure
• Pleasure/Addictions: Learning that true pleasure is a life-affirming, non-addictive experience
• Sexuality: Separating the unmet needs of the wounded child from adult intimate relationships; learning basic tools for nurturing and sustaining healthy relationships
• Boundaries: Looking at the tendency to alternate between fusing with another and then completely isolating oneself
• Spirituality: Learning to have faith despite the horror experienced in childhood • Learning New Behaviors: Identifying and overcoming old ways of reacting
• Looking beyond the Label: Knowing when to stop calling oneself codependent.

Emotional Healing: From Co-
Dependence to Aliveness
Terry Hunt & Katie Hemmeter Ray
Children who grow up in alcoholic, abusive, or otherwise unhealthy homes often develop disabilities that last through their lifetime unless they are deliberately addressed. These disabilities can include: an inordinate need to control, an over-developed sense of responsibility, fear of authority figures, inability to trust, difficulty having fun, compulsive behavior, fear of abandonment,
and chronic lack of self-esteem.
All addictions and codependency are diseases of denial. This includes workaholism and other compulsive activities, as well as substance abuse. Sufferers of addictions and their offspring tell themselves that it really wasn't so bad, and they learn not to feel what they cannot tolerate. As they deny pain, they screen out joy, and their adult lives can be filled with depression and loneliness. These same individuals are also survivors, however,

The Painting Experience
Michelle Cassou & Stewart Cubley
It is rare for most people to use painting for its qualities of inner adventure and self-discovery, to paint purely for the process of exploration,
not for the result.
The purpose of this workshop is to provide a setting to explore the self through painting — to discover in form and color a powerful tool for uncovering and dissolving blocks to emotional and spiritual expression. Participants will be given the support and stimulation to develop a natural way of painting based directly upon feeling. The work takes place in an authentic studio setting with large white surfaces to confront the creative void, along with a rich spectrum of colors and brushes.
The workshop may be of interest to persons involved in a wide variety of disciplines, including art, education, counseling, and meditative practices. No prior experience in painting is necessary. Please bring a smock.

Certification in Clinical Hypnosis
Marc Lehrer, Maggie Phillips, Norman Katz & Adam Burke
This course is a synthesis of Ericksonian and Direct Hypnosis, neurolinguistics, and bio-hypnotic monitoring. It satisfies the hypnosis course requirements for the MFCC and complies with the California State Requirement for Hypnosis Certification. It is designed to help develop hypnotic skills for counseling, medicine, nursing and other health areas, education, and bodywork. This program is also an opportunity for personal growth and transformation for anyone interested in hypnotic phenomena and the uses of suggestion in daily life.
Hypnotic suggestion, advanced imagery, and relaxation methods will be explored. There will be daily presentations, numerous practice sessions, video examples of Erickson and other practitioners, and extensive written support materials. A hypnosis library will be available for in-depth learning of advanced topic areas, and there will be an opportunity to explore personal goals with trance and biofeedback equipment.

The scientific basis of hypnosis as well as the ways hypnosis can be applied will be emphasized. Topic areas will include: induction methods, hypnotic testing, symptom and habit removal, individual and family counseling applications, pain control and psychosomatics, nonverbal and pendulum methods, biomedical hypnotic monitoring, metaphor and story-telling methods, hypnosis with children, regression and uncovering, redecisioning and reframing, self-concept enhancement, stress management, fears and phobias, early trauma, hypnotic dream programming, imagery conditioning, NLP methods, enhancing performance in sports and music, self-hypnosis methods, teaching self-hypnosis classes, and other topics related to therapy, health, and personal growth. Selected ongoing exercises drawn from aikido, Feldenkrais, movement, massage, and shamanistic traditions will complement the traditional topic areas.

Since each of the leaders will present for a number of days, there will be an opportunity to model different ways of deepening your own hypnotic potential, trance induction, and utilization skills. This month-long experience with various faculty members gives each participant an in-depth opportunity to develop vivid personal imagery, make lasting self-suggestions, and relate more completely with the unconscious mind.

The certification offered through this program is equivalent to a University modified tutorial course. You will complete readings, assignments, and a paper for the hypnosis certificate. Certification is granted based upon the competency demonstrated to the faculty in applying hypnotic techniques with an ethical and professional approach and satisfactory completion of all Great Western University CEU course requirements. The paper and assignments are due no later than four months following the completion of this program at Esalen. Course fees for the Hypnosis Certificate are $300 (12 CEUs), payable to Great Western University upon beginning the program at Esalen. It is also possible to obtain four transcripted Graduate Psychology courses rather than CEUs.

Space is limited so early registration is recommended. Since each of the leaders will present for a number of days, there will be an opportunity to model different ways of deepening your own hypnotic potential, trance induction, and utilization skills. This month-long experience with various faculty members gives each participant an in-depth opportunity to develop vivid personal imagery, make lasting self-suggestions, and relate more completely with the unconscious mind.

Healthspring offers a global information network linking visitors to Esalen with centers, teachers, and health professionals focused in the fields of somatics and psychology that are located in their home area. Our listings are public information and are not meant to be an endorsement of any individual or institution.

The Healthspring library offers books on health and healing, bodywork, somatic studies, psychology, nutrition, and related studies which may be borrowed by students for a given period while at Esalen. Donations of appropriate books are greatly appreciated.

Esalen Wilderness Programs
Refund Policy

Most expenses in wilderness programs are incurred preparing for your arrival. The standard refund policy reflects the fact that few of these expenses can be recovered.

To reserve a space in a wilderness workshop, we require a deposit of $200. The balance of the fee is due 14 days before the program begins. If you cancel prior to 30 days before the program begins, your nonrefundable deposit may be applied to other Esalen programs, to be used within one year. If you cancel from 30 days up to the starting date of the trip, your deposit is forfeited.

Big Sur Wilderness Journey:
From Esalen to Tassajara Zen Mountain Center
Steven Harper & Guest Leader

Nature can provide opportunities to stretch one's limits and explore one's inner wilderness. By living in a natural environment it is possible to expand and realize a deeper sense of self and richness of being.

The group will spend a day and a night at Esalen, leaving the next morning to hike through the Ventana wilderness. Participants will travel "light," with instruction in minimum impact camping, ecology, geography, and cultural history of the area.

Wilderness will be a mirror and primary teacher as the group lives simply and in direct contact with nature. Participants will explore their feelings and sensations as they emerge, using gestalt awareness practice and group process. Taking inspiration from natural and native purification practices, they will create a time of cleansing and contemplation, culminating in a 24-hour period alone. The group will hike on to Tassajara Zen Mountain Center, deep in a rugged wilderness valley with natural hot springs, for their last night together. Meditation instruction will be available at Tassajara for those who wish it.

Backpacking experience is not necessary, though participants should be prepared for the challenge of vigorous physical activity. More information will be sent upon registration.

WORK STUDY PROGRAM

The Work Study Program is for those who are interested in an intense and complete involvement with the Esalen environment. It is a work-oriented program, emotionally and physically, and only rarely is it restful. The Work Study Program is an educational program and does not offer any form of therapy or personal psychotherapeutic assistance. It is not for those who wish to take catalog workshops or for those who are unwilling to be fully engaged in the work life of the community. Participants work 32 hours per week in one of Esalen's departments (kitchen, garden, farm, housekeeping, maintenance, or grounds) and participate, along with staff and long-term students, in that department's program. It is necessary for applicants to be able to speak and understand English.

During most evenings and one weekend intensive, work students are together as a group exploring different practices and approaches available at Esalen, with specifically assigned leaders who will be with the group throughout the month coordinating the study schedule and facilitating many of the evening sessions.

The selection of work students is done by Bette Dingman, the Work Study coordinator, in consultation with department supervisors. Since this is a work program, preference is given to applicants who are open and willing to learn about themselves within the work context as well as within the evening and weekend study/process groups. Applicants with particular skills or physically limiting conditions are urged to note them on the application.

First-month work students, in particular, are assigned to departments largely on the basis of community need. No work students will be assigned to the office or Gazebo School/Park until they have fulfilled a minimum of one month in one of the aforementioned departments.

The study portion of the program is usually divided into two sections each month: each emphasizes one type of growth practice, such as gestalt, meditation, Reichian work, massage or somatics work, and so forth. Participants must be prepared to stay at Esalen for the full duration designated for that particular program, assuming that they meet the standards of the Work Study Program. Two programs are planned for each month.

It is sometimes possible to receive college unit credit for participating in the Work Study Program. Please check with your college or university for eligibility requirements.

Work study programs currently scheduled for 1994 include:

January 9–February 6
This month with Gideon Dreyer will focus on the experience of becoming immobilized when confronted with certain obstacles and how we can use these situations for inner enrichment and education. Participants will focus on spiritualizing their thoughts, feelings, and actions, and cultivating the will to act accordingly.

February 6–March 6
Eric Erickson will lead a group devoted to the development of integral practices. Gestalt practice, meditation, movement exercises, the experience of nature, and bodywork will be explored as complementary awareness practices which, when combined, integrate mind-body-spirit into a greater whole and enhance personal development and transformation.

Julian Silverman's program will be based on A Course in Miracles. The program provides a format for thoughtfulness using the Course's teachings in such areas as communication, relationship, goal-setting, decision-making, and spirituality in everyday life.

Maria Lucia Sauer Holloman & Anita Eubank Donovan will invite the creative spirit to come alive during this monthlong by combining music, art, movement, and ritual with practice of the fundamental healing art of laying-on-of hands.

March 6-April 3

Vicki Topp and friends will lead a monthlong journey exploring ourselves and our environment in a weaving of integral healing practices which may include massage, sensory awareness, imagery, storytelling, gestalt, creative movement, and spiritual nourishment.

Steven Harper will lead a group exploring into the theory and practice of ecopsychology. With nature as a teacher, the group will draw from various somatic and contemplative traditions that enhance personal awareness to further explore ourselves, family, the workplace, society, and the natural environment.

April 3-May 1

During this monthlong Kenn Chase will teach the entire sequence of T'ai Chi Ch'uan meditation technique. There are 54 postures which will be taught along with various East/West mind body techniques. He will integrate body alignment, Taoist breathing exercises, deep relaxation methods, sensory awareness, and visualization processes.

The focus of a month with David Schiffman will be on the theme of transition. It is geared for people who are facing major changes and would like an opportunity to create a time for sanctuary and a mood of mutual support. The intention will be to cultivate an individual style of approaching change that is heartfelt, open-minded, and resourceful in spirit.

May 1-May 29

Eric Erickson will lead a group devoted to the development of integral practices. Gestalt practice, meditation, movement exercises, the experience of nature, and body work will be explored as complementary awareness practices which, when combined, integrate mind-body-spirit into a greater whole and enhance personal development and transformation.

With the emphasis on the practice of massage, David Streeter will explore the inner power of the human being. He will combine the fundamental essence of Zen meditation with movement from the martial arts and yoga. These principles will then be applied to the art of massage and the art of being in the world.

May 29-June 26

Eduardo Eizner and guests will lead a month concentrating on emotional release work and self-awareness, incorporating gestalt practice, group and individual process, rituals, movement, and bodywork.

Daniel Brown & Marushka Glissen will lead a monthlong in which each week is devoted to one of the four domains of overall development: psychological, interpersonal, spiritual, and health and wellness. Group experiences, meditation, visualizations, guided imagery, self-hypnosis, and structured exercises will all be used.

June 26-July 17

Anna Wise will present a program of Awakened Mind brainwave training. Different methods of meditation, visualization or "sensualization," and deep psychophysiological relaxation will help you learn to develop the intricate combinations of brainwave frequencies that underlie optimum mental states. Mind Mirror EEGs and Electrical Skin Resistance Meters will be available for biomonitoring and biofeedback. Patrick Douce will share the essence of his work with Moshe Feldenkrais, Balinese healers, and Indonesian Silat Martial-Art-for-Health systems. This monthlong program will focus on movement and touch techniques to increase the sensitivity, flexibility, coordination, relaxation, and freedom of the body. Individual chronic problem areas will be approached in order to improve chronic stiffness and pain. Group experience and interaction will help facilitate balance in the overall growth of each participant.

Institute of Transpersonal Psychology Offers External Master's Degrees

Work students now have the opportunity to integrate their work study experience at Esalen with the external degree program of the Institute of Transpersonal Psychology. The external degree format enables students to study at any location. Work students will be able to continue the dynamics of personal growth fostered at Esalen while earning master's degrees in transpersonal studies or in transpersonal psychology.

Inquiries and applications should be made directly to ITP. Contact: Nancy Fagen External Program Institute of Transpersonal Psychology 744 San Antonio Road Palo Alto, CA 94303 (415) 493-4430

If a student chooses to do independent study at any location, they have the option to do one or two months at Esalen and then transfer to another program in the ITP. Work students may be invited to remain for a second or third month depending on space available and community needs. There are no scholarships available for the Work Study Program.

For more information contact Bette Dingman: (408) 667-3010.

Note: Application is not registration in the program. Registration is made only after approval of application and upon receipt of deposit. The balance of the fee is due on arrival. Of the original deposit, $100 is nonrefundable and may be transferred to other programs within one year of receipt. Please return the application form (see next page) with your deposit to:

LET THE BEAUTY WE LOVE BE WHAT WE DO. —Rumi
GENERAL INFORMATION

Esalen lies 300 miles north of Los Angeles and 175 miles south of San Francisco, situated directly over the Pacific with the Santa Lucia Range rising sharply behind. The property, which has natural hot springs, was once the home of a Native American tribe known as Eselen.

We are a 45-mile drive south from Monterey, 11 miles south of Nepente, on Coast Route 1. From the south, we are 50 miles north of San Simeon. A lighted sign on the ocean side of the highway reads: Esalen Institute, By Reservation Only.

There are various ways to experience Esalen, ranging from an overnight visit to a long-term stay as a seminarist. The weekend and five-day workshops described throughout the catalog are the standard route for coming to Esalen and learning the methods of personal growth available here. The "Experiencing Esalen" workshops, scheduled periodically, offer an introduction to practices such as gestalt, massage, sensory awareness, and meditation. From such a sampling, participants can then choose those approaches they are most attracted to and pursue them in subsequent seminars.

Another way of being at Esalen which allows a much greater involvement with the place and its community at a lower expense is the Work Study Program, an intensive work-oriented program for individuals who want to make a directed, personal commitment to self-exploration and growth and a contribution to the Esalen community. Participants can enroll in the general interest track, which gives an overview of several disciplines, or choose a more specific course of study from the focused track, such as gestalt, meditation, Reichian work, or massage.

Information regarding special interest sections may be obtained by writing Bette Dingman, c/o Esalen. For a full description of the Work Study Program, please turn to page 53.

For those who wish an extended stay of a month or more, there are frequent long-term programs which involve didactic seminars or professional trainings as well as experiential workshops. Please see Special Programs.

Finally, there are other events that enrich life at Esalen. There are occasional forums in which writers and thinkers, both visiting and resident, share their ideas with the community. On Wednesday nights there may be lectures, films, dance performances, or other forms of entertainment. Body work of various kinds is available by appointment with individual practitioners. There is also a community event schedule offered. Please check the bulletin board for details when you arrive.

Conferences at Esalen

It is now possible to arrange for your group or organization to hold its conferences at Esalen. We schedule approximately a year in advance for large groups (up to 100) on a space available basis. For further information, contact the conference coordinator, (408) 667-3038.

With the completion of the Big House renovation, we can now accommodate groups of people in a single facility. The Big House provides meeting rooms, ten bedrooms with twenty beds, a kitchen for meal preparation, and a dining area. We invite people who work together on a regular basis, be they corporate, government, legal, artistic, or familial groups, to design a workshop according to their own needs, using Esalen resources and catalog faculty. Participants also have access to other Esalen amenities, including massage, the hot springs, swimming pool, and bookstore. Reservations for the Big House must be made at least nine months in advance. For more information contact Pat LeWine, (408) 667-3038.

Catalog Subscriptions

If you would like to receive the Esalen Catalog, please refer to the inside front cover for subscription rates and send your check or money order (U.S. currency) in the enclosed subscription envelope, or mail it to Subscriptions, Esalen Institute, Big Sur, CA 93920 (see Income Tax Regulation 1.162-5). Esalen Institute reserves the right to cancel any program at any time.

The Hot Springs at Esalen

We would like those people who are planning their first visit to Esalen to know that swimsuits are optional, and nudity common, in the hot springs, massage area, and swimming pool. We encourage each individual to choose what is most comfortable, either wearing a swimsuit or not, and emphasize that the environment at Esalen is one of personal sanctuary and respect for the human body.

Accreditation

Many formal educational institutions recognize the time spent at Esalen as being worthy of credit in their own curriculum; check with your university or college for further information. We would be glad to supply information to your school regarding any of our programs or series of programs. Please submit a written request to the office supervisor.

Medical Programs

Some programs offered at Esalen qualify for continuing education credit with the California Board of Registered Nursing. For current C.E. listings, see pages 50-52.

There is a $10 processing fee for each certificate of completion requested.

Recommended Reading and Mail Order Books

Most books listed as recommended reading for workshops are available through Esalen's bookstore. Other merchandise is also available. For ordering information please call (408) 667-3049.

Disabled Access

Esalen now provides a means of transportation to the baths for those with physical limitations which prevent them from walking. A vehicle was purchased, in part, through the generosity of Dr. John W. Harris who believes, as we do, that those among us who are aged, infirm, or handicapped should also be able to enjoy the hot springs.

If you are disabled and would like to plan a visit to Esalen or participate in a workshop, please give the office as much advance notice as possible. While disabled access to some parts of the property is difficult, with enough planning, arrangements can be made for access to most of our facilities.
The Dolphin Tape Series

Titles for this tape list are varied, ranging from a rather full selection from Carl Rogers, Buckminster Fuller, Huston Smith, Abraham Maslow, and Joseph Chilton Pearce, to the latest from Terence McKenna and Brother David Steindl-Rast. And there are a few sleepers and surprises, including several gems found among the single tapes. There are also contributions from Laura Archera Huxley and from her husband, Aldous Huxley, bringing back to life the original inspiration for the human potential movement, eloquently expressed in Huxley’s public addresses in the years just before Esalen’s birth.

Finally, we have the original conversations in a newly-published book entitled TRIALOGUES at the Edge of the West (Bear & Co. 1992), built from interplay between three explorers of chaos, imagination, and creativity.

Esalen Institute is a center to explore work in the humanities and sciences that promotes human values and potentials. Its activities consist of public seminars, residential work-study programs, invitational conferences, research, and semi-autonomous projects.

We exist to sponsor, encourage, synthesize, and attempt evaluation of work in these areas, both inside and outside our own organizational framework. Since we are a center for experimental education, we ask that persons come to our programs out of an educational interest. We ask that no one come whose interest is "cure."

We point out here, as we have in workshops and seminars, that some people, particularly those with a history of psychiatric problems, may find some programs difficult, trying, or potentially risky. We recommend that in case of any doubt, a physician or trusted counselor be consulted.

Esalen Institute is a center to explore work in the humanities and sciences that promotes human values and potentials. Its activities consist of public seminars, residential work-study programs, invitational conferences, research, and semi-autonomous projects.

We exist to sponsor, encourage, synthesize, and attempt evaluation of work in these areas, both inside and outside our own organizational framework. Since we are a center for experimental education, we ask that persons come to our programs out of an educational interest. We ask that no one come whose interest is "cure." We point out here, as we have in workshops and seminars, that some people, particularly those with a history of psychiatric problems, may find some programs difficult, trying, or potentially risky. We recommend that in case of any doubt, a physician or trusted counselor be consulted.
Esalen lies 300 miles north of Los Angeles and 175 miles south of San Francisco, situated directly over the Pacific with the Santa Lucia Range rising sharply behind. The property, which has natural hot springs, was once the home of a Native American tribe known as Esselen.

We are a 45-mile drive south from Monterey, a 11 miles south of Nepenthe, on Coast Route 1. From the south, we are 50 miles north of San Simeon. A lighted sign on the ocean side of the highway reads: Esalen Institute, By Reservation Only.

There are various ways to experience Esalen, ranging from an overnight visit to a long-term stay as a seminar. The weekend and five-day workshops described throughout the catalog are the standard route for coming to Esalen and learning the methods of personal growth available here. The "Experiencing Esalen" workshops, scheduled periodically, offer an introduction to practices such as gestalt, massage, sensory awareness, and meditation. From such a sampling, participants can then choose those approaches they are most attracted to and pursue them in subsequent seminars.

Another way of being at Esalen which allows a much greater involvement at a lower expense is the Work Study Program, an intensive twenty-eight day work-oriented program for individuals who want to make a directed, personal commitment to self-exploration and growth and a contribution to the Esalen community. Participants may enroll in the general interest track, which gives an overview of several disciplines, or choose a more specific course of study from the focused track, such as gestalt, meditation, Reichian work, or massage.

Information regarding special interest sections may be obtained by writing Bette Dingman, C/O Esalen. For a full description of the Work Study Program, please turn to page 62.

For those who wish an extended stay of a month or more, there are frequent long-term programs which involve didactic seminars or professional trainings as well as experiential workshops. Please see Special Programs.

Finally, there are other events that enrich life at Esalen. There are occasional forums in which writers and thinkers, both visiting and resident, share their ideas with the community. On Wednesday nights there may be lectures, films, dance performances, or other forms of entertainment. Bodywork of various kinds is available by appointment with individual practitioners. There is also a community event schedule offered. Please check the bulletin board for details when you arrive.

Conferences at Esalen
It is now possible to arrange for your group or organization to hold its conferences at Esalen. We schedule approximately a year in advance for large groups (up to 100) on a space-available basis. For further information, contact the conference coordinator, 408-667-3038.

With the completion of the Big House renovation, we can now accommodate groups of people in a single facility. The Big House provides meeting rooms, ten bedrooms with twenty beds, a kitchen for meal preparation, and a dining area. We invite people who work together on a regular basis, be they corporate, government, legal, artistic, or familial groups, to design a workshop according to their own needs, using Esalen resources and catalog faculty. Participants also have access to other Esalen amenities, including massage, the hot springs, swimming pool, and bookstore. Reservations for the Big House must be made at least nine months in advance. For more information contact Pat Lewine, 408-667-3038.

Accreditation
Many formal educational institutions recognize the time spent at Esalen as being worthy of credit in their own curricula; check with your university or college for further information. We would be glad to supply information to your school regarding any of our programs or series of programs. Please submit a written request to the office supervisor.

Continuing Education for Nurses
Some programs offered at Esalen qualify for continuing education credit with the California Board of Registered Nursing. For current C.E. listings, see pages 60-61.

There is a $10 processing fee for each certificate of completion requested.

Recommended Reading and Mail Order Books
Most books listed as recommended reading for workshops are available through Esalen's bookstore. Other merchandise is also available. For ordering information please call 408-667-3049.

Disabled Access
Esalen now provides a means of transportation to the baths for those with physical limitations which prevent them from walking. A vehicle was purchased, in part, through the generosity of Dr. John W. Harris, who believes, as we do, that those among us who are aged, infirm, or handicapped should also be able to enjoy the hot springs.

If you are disabled and would like to plan a visit to Esalen or participate in a workshop, please give the office as much advance notice as possible. While disabled access to some parts of the property is difficult, with enough planning, arrangements can be made for access to most of our facilities.
Big House Programs
We are now scheduling workshops in our newly renovated Big House. This facility is available to groups of individuals who work together and would like to design their own Esalen program, drawing on our leaders and other resources. Ten bedrooms accommodating up to twenty individuals, ten bathrooms, a kitchen, dining room, and living room make it possible to house group members together, thereby enhancing the retreat environment.
To schedule or discuss possible formats, please contact Pat Lewine, program coordinator at 408-667-3038.

Friends of Esalen
Through membership contributions, the Friends of Esalen support the scholarship fund and other Esalen projects. In return, the Friends receive The Esalen Catalog two times a year, the quarterly Newsletter, the annual Directory, and the opportunity to attend the Friends' workshop in December.
The Group 2000, another arm of the Friends of Esalen, is committed to helping Esalen have the long-term financial capability to fulfill its vision into the year 2000. The members have an opportunity to attend two weekends at Esalen as a group activity.
If you would like to join us, please complete and return the membership form on page 6, or complete the inside flap of the envelope insert.
If your membership donation is $100 or more, you will receive an autographed copy of Michael Murphy's book, The Future of the Body.

The Esalen Catalog (1962-1992) available via the Education Resources Information Center (ERIC)
Since 1962 there have been 105 issues of The Esalen Catalog. A Friends of Esalen project, organized by Ted Brandhorse and Deborah Miller, has collected these issues and entered them into the bibliographic database of the U.S. Department of Education's Educational Resources Information Center (ERIC), where it is identified by the Accession Number/Order Number ED 347118. ERIC records are announced in the monthly abstract journal Resources in Education (RJE) and the entire database can be searched online via DIALOG and BRS, and on CD-ROM via SilverPlatter and DIALOG products.
Anyone interested in The Esalen Catalog as human potential movement historical source material for research purposes can now obtain the complete thirty-year set from ERIC's document delivery arm, the ERIC Document Reproduction Service (EDRS, 7420 Fullerton Road, Suite 110, Springfield, Virginia 22153-2852; 1-800-443-3742).

Correction: Our January-June 1994 catalog showed Great Western University as sponsor of the May 22-June 17 Clinical Hypnosis Certification Program. Great Western University is in no way associated with this program.

Early Childhood Program
The Gazebo School Park is a unique educational experience for children one to six years. It is open year-round and has an average of 15 to 20 children in attendance each day.

The Early Childhood Program is available to seminarians who would like child care at Esalen. Child care is provided during workshop hours only. Daytime activities for the children include gardening, pony rides, learning about animal care, exploring nature, a real boat, the magic castle, and an Indian tepee. Evenings are spent with a teacher in the Gazebo Farmhouse, engaged in activities that are age appropriate, such as reading, learning and playing with the computer, baking, arts and crafts, or building-block play.

Reservations should be made at least a month in advance. Call the Gazebo Farmhouse, 408-667-3026, for more information and reservations.

FRIENDS OF ESALEN

An Update and an Invitation

Esalen is now thirty-two years old. As we reexamine our work and clarify our purpose, our values, and our mission, we remain committed to the ongoing work in Big Sur, and will focus our programs and research in the areas of environmental design, transformative practices, and theoretical work related to the human potential.

We invite you to support us as we develop these programs for Esalen’s future.

- Environmental Design
  This program is built upon the environmental work that has previously been done at Esalen. We intend to expand the existing organic agriculture program, the use of alternative energy sources, and the recycling and sustainability projects. Our aim is to integrate environmental awareness into all decisions, practices, and purchases made by the Institute. We will seek to develop alliances with other organizations that are fostering environmental consciousness and ecologically sound design practices. We will also expand the number of public programs, seminars, and conferences devoted to environmental design.

- Transformative Practices
  Since its very beginning, Esalen has been a center for transformative practices. We will refine and expand these efforts by:
  - Bringing transformative practices into a unified curriculum
  - Beginning a systematic appraisal of such practices and their effectiveness
  - Developing a specialized work-scholar track in transformative practices

- Theory and Research
  Esalen will foster strategic alliances with institutes, universities, healing centers, and individuals. We intend to bring people together from a variety of fields and backgrounds for ongoing, focused discourse and collaboration. One of our objectives has been to provide support for scientists, scholars, and contemplatives whose work is neglected by mainstream institutions. We remain committed to these people and their endeavors as we work to overcome the fragmentation of knowledge in the diverse field of human potential.

The Friends of Esalen program also supports the scholarship fund which provides financial aid to people who want to attend our workshops but cannot otherwise afford them.

We invite you to join us. In addition to knowing that you have given someone else the opportunity to experience Esalen and are supporting our ongoing work, you will receive the Esalen Catalog, The Friends of Esalen Newsletter, and the Friends Annual Directory for one year. We hope that you will join us in extending Esalen into the lives of other people.

Language of the Drums: African Percussion, Chanting, and Dance
Babatunde Olatunji & Friends
Nigerian musician Babatunde Olatunji has been bridging the gap between American and African culture for over thirty years. In this workshop he will show how drum sounds and rhythms communicate, stimulate, and pace the activities of traditional African life. He will teach the consonants of the Yoruba language, reproducing its sounds on drums and through chants, body percussion, and dance. This workshop is for dancers, percussionists, musicians, and anyone who wants to speak the language of the drums. Drummers can experience the dance and dancers can experience the drums. Bring a drum if you have one.

Please note: This has always been a popular workshop with lots of people drumming and dancing in a small area. The energy runs high; be prepared for a crowded, exuberant atmosphere.

Family Week
Lia Thompson-Clark & Eduardo Eizner
In this workshop families of all forms with children ages 12 and under will have the opportunity to experience Esalen’s unique environment with time for play, discovery, and relaxation.

Reawakening and Re-Visioning: Landscape Perception and Love
Laura Sewall

Our visual habits and the worldview we maintain largely determine our consciousness. Our vitality as individuals and our ecological crisis call for a reawakening of our senses and a consequent shift in consciousness.

This workshop is devoted to the reawakening of visual awareness and to altering visual and perceptual patterns in order to deepen one's relationship with the earth, and thus develop an ecological consciousness. This includes expanding sensory awareness and appreciation for interdependence and beauty, and cultivating a sensuous, embodied response to the landscape. The group will consider various ways of seeing, cultural influences on perception, and the power of perception on consciousness and behavior. Using exercises both conceptual and perceptual, participants will engage in the practices of:

- Learning to attend, or becoming visually mindful
- Learning to see relationships and processes within the landscape
- Developing perceptual flexibility
- Learning to perceive and experience oneself as part of a vast, living system
- Nurturing imagination, or developing guiding images

These elements constitute an ecological way of seeing, the theory and practice of which will form the group’s experience together. Most essentially, the group will play with vision toward coming to love what we see. $640

Eros, Chaos, and Meaning's Edge
Terence McKenna

Terence McKenna writes, “The plot thickens and the stakes rise as we approach the end of the Millennium. Join us for the midsummer meditation on the state of the condensing technolap and the mysteries of the attractor at the end of time. We will discuss self-directed psychedelic cartography, mapmaking, and sail repair. Excursions into botany, ontology, epistemology, and 'pataphysics are bound to occur. Think along fun for double Scorpios, pagans, explorers, fans of Tantra and alchemy. Think practical approaches to rave culture, the problem of post-modernism, and the search for real love and community. All are welcome.”

Learning to See: Freeing the Artistic Spirit
Leigh Hyams

Too often we allow our busy, complicated lives and chattering minds to block awareness of the ever-present visual delights in the world around us. Similarly, many otherwise intelligent, well-functioning people are visually illiterate and unthinkingly deny themselves the pleasure, excitement, and significance art can have in their daily lives.

Leigh Hyams is an artist whose unorthodox teaching methods have enabled students to release their own creativity and, consequently, to open their eyes. These methods can help participants to work fearlessly, exuberantly, sensitively, and imaginatively, from the very first session. The workshop will employ a variety of art materials and techniques, working both indoors and outdoors, using models, dreams, music, memories, fantasy, synesthesia, and Esalen's natural landscape. Informal discussions, demonstrations, and slides from many cultures will help expand understanding of visual language.

Participants will complete the workshop with a portfolio of their own artwork. They may also discover a revitalized connection with art and the environment and a new sense of themselves as creative human beings.

No previous art experience is necessary. The only prerequisites are curiosity about the creative process and a desire to see the world with fresh eyes. $480

Fun with the Violin: For Adults Who Always Wanted to Play the Violin and Never Have
Diane Egli

Are you one of the many adults who always wanted to play a musical instrument but never have? Or maybe you used to play but haven’t since childhood. This workshop is an opportunity to learn to play or re-play the violin and have fun with the learning process.

Participants will increase their awareness of how it feels to learn a new skill — the challenge, the excitement, the frustration, and the success of accomplishment. The workshop will include various activities designed to enhance violin playing/fiddling, such as movement, music, and rhythm exercises. There will be time for listening to various types of music such as classical, jazz, and bluegrass, and participants will do some music mediation and visualization.

Recommended reading: Shinichi Suzuki, Nurtured by Love; Holt, Never Too Late. $480 (plus $15 violin rental fee paid directly to the leader)

Weekend of July 8-10

The Language of the Drum: Advanced Level
Babatunde Olatunji
This workshop is designed for those who would like to further explore the polyrhythmic aspect of African music. It will include exploring varying combinations of rhythmic patterns, rhythmic exercises to help develop stamina and dexterity of the hands and fingers on the drum, the ability to play rhythmic patterns on two drums, and the use of sticks in playing. Participants will also be introduced to different styles of playing the agogo (cow bell), shekere (African maracas), and body percussion.

There will be time devoted to open discussion of the healing power of the drum through history. The group will learn how to meditate with drumming and chanting. No special dancing is involved in this class except for occasional movements conducted by the leader.

Please note: Class is open to those who have taken at least two full workshops with Babatunde Olatunji or a professional percussionist.

Things to bring: one or two drums, congas, djembes, or ashidos; shekere (African maracas); agogo (cow bell); and djun-jun (not required). $380

A Workshop for Couples: Independence & Intimacy
Mary Goldenson (Devarami) & Gustavo Rabin
Very little in our culture prepares couples for the challenge, "There is room for both of us." Too often the relationship becomes a battleground for unresolved issues, hurts, and beliefs.

In this workshop, couples will have an opportunity to explore and reclaim the unspoken expectations they project onto each other, begin healing past hurts that create distance, and learn new ways of communicating. They will have a supportive environment where they can experience themselves as courageous and able to take risks. Experiential processes will be drawn from gestalt, Reichian work, dance, imagery, and meditation. $380

Replenishing the Vision: A Retreat for Educators
Betty Halpern, Patricia Monighan Nowrot, Lia Thompson-Clark, Eduardo Eitzen, & the Gazebo Staff
Based on the vision and educational philosophy of Janet Lederman, this workshop will give educators at all levels a chance to replenish their professional souls. The weekend will include the following areas of exploration:

- Play and its relationship to human development and learning
- Ways of planning curriculum and observing children's development consistent with playful modes of knowing
- The growth of the professional self through dreams, dance, and movement

Participants will also explore their own childhood experiences insofar as these experiences influence their work with children and families. In addition, there will be time for massage and herbal baths, as teachers join with other teachers in an opportunity to nurture themselves and therefore the children they teach. $380

The Personal Growth and Development of the Clinician
Jeffrey Zeig
How do people in the helping professions become more effective? Two distinct training models are commonly used: didactic and experiential. Many trainers are didactic and provide students with conceptual models of theory and technique. Alternately, there are experiential teachers who develop the person of the practitioner rather than the practitioner's cognitive ability. Milton Erickson clearly was in the experiential camp. He used hypnosis, tasks, puzzles, symbols, and indirect communication to help students garner skills relevant to therapy, including sensitivity, flexibility, perceptual acuity, and the ability to use analogical communication.

Following Erickson's model, this experiential workshop will present PSYCHOAEROBIC growth exercises and group hypnosis to explore the merging of discipline and spontaneity that occurs in the most artful and effective clinical work. Participants will refine their lenses (perception), muscles (therapeutic power), heart (compassion), and hat (social role). $380

Practical Intuition: Introduction
Laura Day
We are all psychics. Every time we draw a conclusion, we work with intuition as well as linear and emotional processes. Identifying how our intuitive faculty works enables us to use it selectively for effective decision-making. A predominantly linear process may be preferable when clear, empirical information is available. But when little data is at hand, or if the question relates to how current choice might affect future results, an intuitive process may be more efficient.

"Practical Intuition," an experiential workshop, introduces intuitive methods for gaining empirical information. Participants will give and receive several present and future intuitive readings a day, focusing on predicting and retrieving verifiable data. Different intuitive styles, such as clairvoyance, clairaudience, and telepathy, will be taught, along with exercises for continued training at home.

Participants are requested to bring a few photographs of themselves and people they know well, their personal and business questions, and a willingness to work as if they already know how to do something that they in fact already know how to do. $380

Eighth Annual Children's Safari: A Music and Dance Festival
Babatunde Olatunji & Ensemble

Through storytelling, chanting, and learning rhythms in drumming and dance, children will work toward a performance guided by Babatunde Olatunji.

Olatunji's message is more than musical: it carries a dedication for the future: "We hope..."
This year there will be both beginner and advanced classes for children, and parents who wish to participate may do so as well. Please bring a drum and bells.

Massage Mbunde

Char Pias Brenner, Britta Ostrom & Guest Drummers

This workshop will join the fundamentals of Esalen massage with expressive movement and drum rhythms from many cultures. Participants will learn to give and receive soothing touch with emphasis on awareness, sensitivity, nurturing, and presence. A basic understanding of specific tension-producing patterns and how to relieve them will be presented.

Days will be spent in the Esalen baths, and the evenings will be shared with various live drummers for movement and rhythm exercises. This workshop is designed for those who want tools for reducing stress in their lives, for bodywork practitioners, therapists, and those in the creative arts interested in learning new skills with sound, rhythm, and expression. It is also a good introductory course in Esalen massage.

Letting Go — Moving On

Mary Goldenson (Devarani)

Beliefs, fears, and emotions from the past can continue into present relationships and interfere with spontaneous feelings of trust, love, and joy. The goal of this workshop is to experience and let go of these defenses and create new ways to relate — in the moment — to ourselves, our work, and those we love.

The workshop includes periods of intense bodywork for those who want to let go of past anger, fear, and pain, which are reflected in the body as armor and tension. As armor softens, feelings held in since childhood can be released, and positive feelings can be experienced more fully. By also using dream work, massage, dance, and group process, a new capacity for loving can emerge.

This workshop will have no more than thirty participants.

Taoist Chi Kung: Enhancing Vitality

Master Share K. Lew

Traditional Taoist concepts of health, longevity, and harmony with nature will be introduced by Master Lew, a monastery-trained Taoist priest from southern China. The core of the workshop will be instruction in the “Shen,” a set of twelve Chi Kung exercises (six standing, six sitting) whose primary purpose is self-healing. These rare exercises can also develop better concentration, increase visual and auditory acuity, and enhance sensitivity to oneself and others. Master Lew will discuss the use of everyday foods and Chinese herbs in healing, and tell stories from his life in the monastery.

Master Lew, now seventy-six, was among the first to openly teach Chi Kung (Taoist internal energy cultivation) to non-Chinese. His monastery style, Tao Ahn Pai, dates back 1300 years to Lui Dong Bin in the Tang Dynasty, who is one of the Eight Immortals of Taoism.

Body Rejuvenation

Dub Leigh & Audrey Nakamura

The goal of this workshop is to start rejuvenating the body, mind, and spirit. A fast way to do this is to work the body: transform the old, hard, short, nonresilient tissue into soft, lengthy, bouncy tissue free from trauma, stress, and pain; work on changing the despondent, hopeless, negative, grouchy person into an enthusiastic, positive, upbeat one.

The recipe for beginning to rejuvenate the body will be demonstrated in one session to everyone. The older you are, the more stuff you have to work with. Bring a swimsuit — a two-piece for women.

Please note: Since this is a hands-on class using particular methods, participants are asked not to receive bodywork outside of class until the workshop is over.

Big Sur Wilderness Experience: For Families
Kai, Kim & Steven Harper

In our modern world it is easy to overlook the importance of our relationship to nature and our relationship with our families. Using the natural world as the primary teacher, this workshop will offer an opportunity to play, work, and laugh together in nature. Big Sur's many moods — sometimes dramatic, sometimes subtle — inspire silence, playfulness, activity, thoughtfulness, awe. This will be a time to share these moments with your family.

This wilderness experience provides an opportunity for parents and children of all ages to explore the Big Sur backcountry on day hikes, returning each day to Esalen. The leaders will introduce exercises, games, and approaches to encourage awareness of how we relate to nature, ourselves, and our families. They will demonstrate methods for hiking as a family, introduce useful equipment, teach appropriate safety considerations, and encourage each family to find its own unique pace, style, and interest for being in nature together.

Previous wilderness experience is not necessary. Families of all configurations are welcome. $380

Self-Empowerment for Trauma Survivors
Carolyn Braddock & Christian Hendricks

This workshop for trauma survivors (emphasizing sexual trauma) will help facilitate integration of body, mind, and spirit into a healing journey. Breath, sound, movement, and selected centering and martial arts techniques will assist survivors in expressing their voice, the source of their power, while encouraging release through movement. Martial arts techniques also foster self-expression and self-empowerment, and can help survivors to move through difficult, intense feelings.

Participants will work with the three main embodiments of trauma (rigid, collapsed, and inanimate), and explore how each manifests in the body, mind, and spirit. They will learn ways to move through body memories, flashbacks, intensive feelings, and other ramifications of their trauma, while physically grounding and integrating. This process can help to break the anguished silence and barriers to voice and growth by releasing the pain, allowing more space for healing and creating new boundaries.

Honoring the body and empowering the survivor is the goal. The work is presented through experiential exercises and group process, physically empowering the survivor, helping to bring the cycle of trauma to completion.

Putting Your Muse to Work: Creating for the Stage and Screen
Michael Krasny

Creativity is a straight, if sometimes inaccessible or obstructed, highway to the unconscious. It is a source from which we can draw out language to embody characters who can cast real shadows upon the stage or page. Creative inspiration serves to open the self to imagination and memory.

This workshop guides participants to open up their creative forces and transform experience with language. Focus will be on creating character, action, and dialogue with the stage and screen in mind. Moreover, this will be an exploration of the routes to the unconscious and ways to release its power through characters and characterization, dialogue, and language. The process can be enterprising, exciting, and exhilarating. It requires not only learning how to access the flow of creativity and energetic thought, but also directing them and striving for mastery via words and character.

Participants will focus on writing scenes and dialogue and working with the created characters in a group setting. There will be the kind of individual attention that can allow for both the acquisition of elements of craft and the possibility for personal growth. $380

Healing the Healer: Self Care for Health-Care Professionals
Peter Finkelstein & Peter Ways

Work in health care involves intimate exposure to sorrow, death, and "failure." Although health-care professionals accumulate great emotional burdens, many of them do not pay enough attention to processing this charged material, nor to balancing work with other aspects of life, nor to remaining joyful and avoiding depression. In addition, institutional demands and work ethics foster stoicism, isolation, and withdrawal. Health care workers must find for themselves and one another the means to process fear, sorrow, and resentment wisely and with grace.

Because the heart of this workshop will be shared experience, special attention will be given to creating an atmosphere of trust. Participants will engage in the telling of stories... from the world of health care, as well as in viewing and listening to recorded material from film and other educational sources. Through these tellings and the reactions to them, participants can reveal and perhaps heal those sometimes invisible wounds that interfere with both personal growth and the ability to help others. Consideration will be given to both the positive and negative aspects of humor in the work situation. Drawings, dreams, readings, and didactic presentations will help enrich and deepen the learning. Time will be devoted to each participant to develop or enhance effective strategies for personal self-care.

CoHousing: Creating Your Own Community
Kathryn McCamant & Charles Durrett

Dramatic demographic and economic changes have created a mismatch between today's household and most conventional American housing. Households experience this mismatch as they face a child-care crisis, deepening isolation, and a chronic time crunch. Things we once took for granted — family, community, a sense of belonging — must now be actively sought out.

CoHousing addresses many of these needs. Developed by the residents themselves, CoHousing communities are made up of private dwellings complemented by extensive common facilities. Each dwelling is autonomous, yet the common house, with the opportunity for shared dinners and child care, is a focal point of the community.

This workshop gives participants an overview of organizing, planning, and designing a CoHousing community, from site acquisition, group process, development, and design, to construction and management.

Topics will include:
- An overview of the CoHousing development process, from initial meetings to moving in
- Development strategies and the advantages/disadvantages of working with a developer
- Forming and working with a group, and organizing for effective decision making
- Financial options — ownership structures and money realities
- Designing for community — architectural considerations
- The next steps — your role, the group's role, services of professionals
- What other CoHousing groups are doing — the network and how to plug in
- Emphasis will be on typological inner material, not personal process work. This is a highly interactive format. Bring your current relationship questions.

The Body and Zen
Dub Leigh & Audrey Nakamura

The goal of this seminar is twofold: (1) to use bodywork methods and principles for releasing tension, trauma, and toxins from connective tissue, and (2) to circulate the vital energy in an aligned body. The group will draw from Rolfing (structure), Feldenkrais (function), and Zen (energy), to obtain these goals.

This is a hands-on workshop. Participants will give and receive bodywork and learn methods to recognize, work with, and relieve some types of chronic muscle pain. Participants are asked to bring a swimsuit — a two-piece for women.

Please note: Since this is a hands-on class using particular methods, participants are asked not to receive bodywork outside of class until the workshop is over.

Decision, Decisions
Yossi Yassour

Most people have difficulty making decisions when faced with a problem that involves uncertainty or multiple and conflicting objectives. Choosing a job, a mate, or a place to live are typical choice decisions; getting a divorce, having a baby, or resigning a job are typical "to do or not to do" decisions.

The workshop will focus on the ways people make and should make decisions. Some practical methods like "decision trees" and "decision tables" will be presented. Special attention will be given to fear and risk taking, regret and disappointment, the status quo trap, and the psychology of decision making and of probabilities. Emphasis will also be given to the possible limitations of intuitive decision making. In addition, games and questionnaires will be used in a humorous and safe setting.

Participants are expected to have a major decision that they are willing to share and discuss with the group.

Sexual Trauma Survivors: Specific Strategies for Body, Mind, and Spiritual Healing
Carolyn Braddock & Guests

The body remembers sexual trauma because the body is the scene of the crime. It expresses these memories in how one breathes, moves, and speaks — or doesn't speak. Consequently, body sensations may be blocked and a protective body belief system developed. The child learns early not to have a voice to express the anger, sadness, pain, or frustration she or he suffers.

This workshop focuses on body-mind-spirit integration, adding new somatic dimensions to traditional strategies in the healing journey. It will identify three main body types (rigid, collapsed, and inanimate) that illustrate how survivors respond when they revisit the memories of their traumas.

Through eight guided teaching sessions, participants will be shown how to enhance their skills with new intervention strategies to empower wounded individuals to speak in a strong, new voice. Group members will be actively involved in interventions, demonstrations, discussion of legal/ethical issues, and case presentations from a body-oriented perspective. Breathwork, sound, movement, gestalt, bodywork, Tai Ji, role-playing, and creative cognitive work will also be used, creating a balance between work and play.

This approach is applicable for traditional psychotherapists, bodyworkers, and those in the medical profession.

Please note: This workshop is for professionals, those in training, and others who are interested in a new body-oriented approach to working with sexual trauma survivors. It is applicable for Braddock Body Process™ certification hours.

Intimate Connections
Mariah Fenton Gladis

Creating stable and fulfilling relationships is a challenge that everyone faces. To be successful, human relating must be understood and accepted as an activity, an ability that requires movement, purpose, emotional capacity, and extensive contact skills. People often believe that good relating evolves naturally, but they discover in the routine of living with families, friends, and lovers that, in truth, they have not been adequately prepared to meet the demands of loving relationships.

This workshop will focus on the nature and basic requirements of healthy relationships. It will offer participants opportunities to assess their abilities and disabilities, to develop awareness, and to practice risking positive action with others. It is for anyone who has "hit the wall" in a relationship or who has experienced being stuck at some seemingly impenetrable contact boundary and wants to break through. Particularly helpful for adult children of dysfunctional families, ACAs, and human relations professionals, this experiential and didactic workshop will blend individual and group gestalt work, spiritual healing, bodywork, and personal metaphor. $380

Getting Along Better: A Workshop for Teenagers and Their Parents
Frances Verrinder & Michael Griffith

"I can't talk to my parents" is a common complaint of teenagers. "They treat the house like a hotel" is a familiar lament from parents.

For teenagers, issues of privacy, friendships, love, sex, academic pressures, and future plans are of intense concern. They feel increasingly autonomous and yet still need parental love, understanding, and support as they do the important emotional work of becoming individual adults.

To parents, teenagers can seem moody, self-absorbed, and secretive. It is easy to feel left out and even abandoned by a teenager's distance. Sometimes it is hard to know when to set sensible limits, when and how much to let go, and when to reach out.

Using communication and conflict resolution skills, psychodrama, gestalt, and group work, this workshop sponsored by Esalen's Gazebo School Park can help parents and teenagers reconnect, listen better, appreciate their differences, and develop more mutual trust and respect.

The workshop is open to teenagers 13-18 years old accompanied by at least one parent or stepparent. Families of all styles with one or more teenagers are welcome. $380

Freeing Our Bodies/Our Selves Through Movement: A Feldenkrais® Approach
Patrick Douce

The work of Moshe Feldenkrais is based on the natural process by which we learned to move as children. During this workshop, soft, easy, gentle movements will be used to increase awareness of the body and to improve the ease and ability of movement. Special emphasis will be placed on the difficulties in movement that arise from chronic conditions such as lower back and neck pain, tension in the neck and shoulders, and knee injuries. Such conditions can be improved by approaching the difficulties as problems in learning rather than as therapeutic troubles. Situations which were "incurable" become "reeducable." Workshop participants will also be introduced to methods for improving their ability to sense each other's bodies through touch and massage.

Although this workshop is valuable for anyone interested in learning more about his/her body through direct experience, it may be of special interest and benefit to dancers, athletes, doctors, nurses, physical therapists, psychologists, health-care professionals, and elderly citizens who may discover new ways of moving with ease and increased flexibility — painlessly and immediately.

Precision Happiness
Kathleen Riordan Speeth

Life's delights befall us like drops of honey: the rapture of a kiss, the exhilaration of insight, the hilarity of friendly play, the flood of gratitude when trust is not betrayed. At these moments who is not happy? In fair weather even the weather vane has character. But who knows how to be of good cheer by an act of personal choice — not only to enjoy but also to nurture and protect one's bliss?

Does happiness just come and go according to circumstances? Is life a game of chance or a game of skill? We must stand firm between two kinds of madness: the belief that we can do anything, and the belief that we can do nothing. Precision happiness is possible but it demands emotional intelligence. Just as the immune system shields the body from infection, we can fashion a protective net of tender interior gestures and secure bodily postures that will support joy in living.

This is an experiential weekend. With personal work toward insight, structured interaction, gestalt, music, and stories, the group will explore just how to be — and stay — happy. Bring your journal, an open mind, and a willing spirit. Happiness is as near as your own warm palm on your once-troubled brow.

The Kabbalah: Doorway to the Mind
Edward Hoffman

For thousands of years, adepts of the Kabbalah, the mystical offshoot of Judaism, have explored the nature of the human mind and its vast potential. Its practitioners have focused extensively on such intriguing topics as consciousness, dreamwork, meditation, inward states of ecstasy and bliss, healing, and the mind/body unity. In recent years, a true renaissance of interest in the Kabbalah has been occurring. Throughout the world, men and women of all backgrounds are discovering the unique wisdom and power of this long-standing visionary system.

In this workshop, Dr. Hoffman will present specific Kabbalistic ideas and approaches for achieving greater joy and direction in our lives. The focus will be on the Kabbalah's understanding of our inner world, and ways to better identify — and actualize — our particular taken, or life purpose.

The workshop will highlight how to develop the key inner traits of kavanah (intentionality) and higher imagination. No previous background in Jewish thought is necessary.

Creating Exact Moments of Healing
Mariah Fenton Gladis

Adult children of alcoholic, dysfunctional, or abusive families (ACAs) must walk a road of recovery that requires determination, life-long commitment, and the creation of specific moments of healing. This workshop offers participants an opportunity to take a major step toward health, helping them define a plan for necessary moments they must create so they can move forward, transforming their personal history from one of liability to one of strength and wisdom. Focus will be on the promotion of healing in four fundamental relationships:

- With oneself — developing awareness, freedom from addictions, and healing of the body and soul from the residual effects of trauma
- With others — improving one's capacity for moving out of isolation and into direct, open communication and trust; expanding intimacy skills while securing healthy boundaries
- In the world — moving away from chaos and deprivation toward stability and abundance
- Spiritually — searching for the meaning of one's history and accessing that part of the self that can utilize universal blessings

This workshop will be experiential and didactic, blending individual and group gestalt work, music, spiritual practices, and bodywork. A step-by-step recovery process developed by the leader will be incorporated throughout the workshop. The atmosphere will be one of trust and mutual support. This workshop is also appropriate for professionals who work with ACAs.

Film and the Remembering of Love: Passion and Compassion
Francis Lu & Brother David Steinidl-Rast

Love must be told. Not that it may be forgotten, but so it can be woven into the tapestry of the present.

— GEORGE VALLIANT, M.D.

This seminar will explore the theme of love as passion and love as compassion. Joseph Campbell has written that these are "often represented as absolutely opposed — physical, respectively, and spiritual; yet in both the individual is torn out of himself and opened to an experience of rediscovered identity in a larger, more abiding format." The seminar will focus on the similarities, differences, and interrelatedness between these two forms of love across five types of relationships: servant-master, friend-friend, parent-child, spouse-spouse, and relationships of passionate, romantic love.

The seminar will utilize eight feature films which depict these various kinds of love through the characters' actions and memories. Through viewing the films and discussing them, the seminar will provide a place to remember our own loves, to experience the "rediscovered identity," and to integrate these experiences into our present lives. The focus will be on sharing the personal experiences of the film and then discussing the psychological and transpersonal themes which are evoked.

For the fifth consecutive year, this workshop will bring together film enthusiasts — be they private film buffs or film professionals — to view and discuss films as a group in the incomparable setting of Esalen.

Self-Inquiry
Joyce Lyke & David Silverstein

Our culture constantly delivers the message that happiness and success come from the outside — consumption and the attainment of material things. We tend to look outside ourselves for the things that will make our lives more fulfilling. But most of what we long for can’t be purchased from the world, only given to us from ourselves. When we recognize that all we yearn for is not outside us but really deep within us, a process of self-inquiry begins that helps us discover what it is that we truly long for.

This workshop is designed for people who want to know themselves in a deeper way, both emotionally and spiritually. We will create a safe place to deepen our awareness and explore whatever emerges, using Sufi self-remembering exercises, meditation, gestalt awareness practice, and a connection to the earth at Esalen. $740

Introduction to Hand Analysis: Blueprint for Life
Richard Unger

Since ancient times, people have gazed into their palms and sought to learn about themselves. There has always been a suspicion that each unique pattern inscribed in our hand might reveal something about our fate.

Research with electron microscopes confirms that dermatoglyphic (fingerprint) markings begin to form approximately thirteen weeks after conception, creating a topographic map of the developing fetal hand. There are five basic fingerprint patterns (plus subsets of these patterns), and eleven locations per hand where these patterns may be found. Articles published in medical, psychological, anthropological, morphological, genetic, and biological journals have attempted to detail the impact of these markings on human development.

If our physical bodies are but one expression of a higher vibrational energy (i.e. spirit), it seems reasonable to try and study this energy by the impressions left on our own skins during our formation process. By examining our dermatoglyphic formations, we could be examining our "blueprint for life." $740

Creating Intimacy
George Kohlrieser & Elisabeth Pringle

Intimacy is impossible without emotional bonding. The foundation and core of intimacy is the ability to create bonding to people, pets, places, and mutual goals. From cradle to grave, life involves a changing script of "affective bonds." A lack of intimacy is a way to explain many forms of physical, emotional, and spiritual distress, including emotional detachment, depression, and burnout.

Previous experiences in relationships, whether positive or negative, strongly influence how intimacy is created and maintained in the present. Life energy is connected to the quality and depth of intimacy in one’s life.

Attachment Theory is a theory of intimacy. This experiential workshop will focus on understanding intimacy by studying patterns of forming, maintaining, breaking, and renewing affectional bonds. Persons wishing to increase the depth of their intimate relationships and their understanding of bonding — or those experiencing difficulties in creating intimacy — may find this workshop particularly enjoyable and helpful. Methods include affective imagery, emotional release, group process, early bonding work, and current bonding work to understand, create, and celebrate emotional intimacy.

Getting to the Source of Wisdom
Peter Ralston

What constitutes wisdom? Where do we find it within ourselves? Wisdom — sensitivity, creativity, and real intelligence — may be based on some elementary dynamics that we would not, at first, associate with common notions of sagacity. For example, associating wisdom with knowledge, and therefore thinking that we have to “know” what to do, produces a negative relation to not knowing; paradoxically, “Not-knowing” may be a fundamental and necessary component of wisdom.

This workshop explores the possibility that wisdom is founded on some very basic principles: Not-knowing, Questioning, Listening, Inclusion, and Wholeness. These are functions often overlooked, even negated, because they don’t seem to get us what we want, assure our personal concerns, or give us more power to control our environment.

If we can discover the source of wisdom in our own experience, then we can become increasingly conscious of when we are being unwise, insensitive, and uncreative, and instead empower a different course of action. We see in the archetypes of wise people some concurrent dynamics and traits; perhaps we can use them to give us clues about what it is to be wise. This workshop will present verbal communication and exercises with a partner, physical exercises and games, guided meditations, and dialogue to investigate this matter, and to develop the building blocks of wisdom.

Building in a Sacred Way
Tom Bender

Many social problems, such as alcoholism, drugs, homelessness, and child abuse, share a common root. They arise from a lack of self-worth and self-respect, and a lack of opportunity to be of value to family and society. They are all diseases of the spirit, and of the absence of a sacred basis to society.

Similarly, our homes and communities embody our attitudes, good or bad, sacred or indifferent. Changes to our surroundings can reaffirm the sacredness of our world and reestablish the sense of respect, honor and value essential for social health and a sustainable society.

This workshop will examine how to build and transform homes and communities from a spiritual base, and the economics which make that essential. Group members will explore the modern application of feng-shui, involving the energy interactions of people and places. Participants will probe the reasons for rituals of founding and using places which sustain energy and the meaning they hold. The workshop will use the power of Easlen's setting to teach how to embody the same spirit in our homes and communities.

Making It Float
Robert Hall

There is no fixing a damaged childhood. The best you can hope for is to make the sucker float.
—Conroy

Robert Hall writes: “And so it is. This workshop is about making it float. How to. If you’re willing to spend some time with meditation, gestalt group process, making sounds, and experimenting with moving your body to your own rhythms, if you’re interested in how body awareness, psychotherapy, and meditation work together to loosen your identification with who you think you are, and if you still have your sense of humor, we’ll not only make it float, we’ll take a ride in it.”

Visual Thinking with the Polaroid Camera
Cay Lang

The joy of working with an instant camera is that the images are, well, instant. As quickly as the mind can process ideas, the camera can process the images. There’s no waiting around to get the film back from the lab — we know instantly what we have and can begin making truly personal images right away.

This class is for artists looking for a fresh window to their vision, writers who want to expand their visual sense, and anyone else who just always wanted to make pictures. To paraphrase Milorad Pavorik: We will photograph as we eat, using the right eye as a fork, the left as a knife, and tossing the bones over our shoulders as we go.

The workshop will have a different focus every day. Bring a Polaroid camera (any Polaroid with close-up capabilities will do), ten or more rolls of film, a bound journal with white paper, something to write with, and something of your essence to photograph — something larger than a cupcake and less valuable than your dalmation.

Please note: If there are questions regarding a camera, or anything else, please call the leader at 510-653-1655.

ESP in Life and Lab: An Introduction to Parapsychology
Marilyn Schlitz & Elisabeth Targ
This workshop will survey the development of modern parapsychology, including the latest research findings in the U.S., Russia, Europe, Asia, and Latin America. Integrating lectures and experiential approaches, the seminar will review and demonstrate important experimental protocols, including remote viewing, associative remote viewing, Ganzfeld (a sensory deprivation and imagery induction technique), remote mental influence on biological systems, and psychometry. Along with research methodologies and experimental results, the group will explore spontaneous psi experiences and the social and personal implications of psychic functioning. Participants will have the opportunity to practice and discuss their personal reactions to a number of different psychic methods, and to carry out demonstration experiments in the context of the workshop.

The weekend program is aimed at a broad range of people, including health professionals, scientists, and the educated layperson. $740

Weekend of August 5-7

Introduction to Gestalt Practice
Eric Erickson
The Way, when declared
Seems so thin and flavorless.
Nothing to look at, nothing to hear —
And when used — is inexhaustible.

Lao Tzu

Gestalt practice is a form — nonanalytic, noncoercive, nonjudgmental — evolving out of the work of Fritz Perls. The work integrates ways of personal clearing and development that are both ancient and modern. To the extent that awareness is made primary relative to action, gestalt practice has a strong relationship to some forms of meditation and visualization. This form is similar to some Reichian work as well, in that emotional and energetic release and rebalancing are allowed and encouraged.

The emphasis is interpersonal rather than intrapersonal. It is explicitly understood that participants are not patients but persons actively consenting to work (or play) in awareness. The leader functions to reflect, clarify, and respect whatever emerges in this process. The aim is unfoldment, wholeness, and growth, rather than adjustment, cure or accomplishment. Through group exercises, meditations, and open seat work, this workshop will introduce participants to the gestalt practice approach.

Ecopsychology: Healing the Human/Earth Relationship
Allen Kanner & Mary Gomes
Ecopsychology is a new field concerned with the emotional bond between humans and the natural world. It recognizes that the most difficult psychological issues facing us today — depression, dysfunctional relationships, spiritual emptiness, consumerism, oppression — have roots in our culture's extreme alienation from the earth.

This workshop will include a blend of presentation, discussion, and experiential exercises aimed at deepening our understanding of the multitude of psychological issues underlying modern society's alienation from the earth. The workshop is designed to speak to environmental activists, ecologists, psychologists, and all others interested in healing the human/earth relationship. $380

Forgiveness
Julie Bowden & Maria Nemeth
Every culture has its healing rituals, ways of letting go of old attachments to make way for new possibilities. An essential component is the practice of forgiveness.

As the years go by, many of us develop a hierarchy of incomplete relationships and unfulfilled expectations. As these experiences accumulate, our trust in others and ourselves diminishes, and our commitments in life become conditional. To release these burdens is to forgive the past.

This workshop will guide participants through exercises focusing on our judgments and characterizations, with emphasis on how these distorted perceptions affect us and interfere with our relationships. This work is preparation for a powerful forgiveness exercise, designed to facilitate letting go, allowing more joy and light into our lives. $380

Yoga for the '90s
Deborah Anne Medow
Today, more than ever before, many people are overwhelmed by the stresses and tensions that they experience in their daily lives. Yoga, the oldest science of life, utilizes body, mind, and breath to bring stress under control by revitalizing energy on physical, mental, and spiritual levels.

On the physical level, asanas (yoga postures) tone the muscles, joints, and nerves, massage the internal organs, increase circulation, and improve digestion, making the body strong, flexible, and proportionate.

On the mental and spiritual level, the regular practices of asanas and breathing methods not only cleanse the system and energize the body; they also help to calm the mind and develop an awareness of self. Meditation can then become a vehicle for focusing this awareness, allowing the spirit to flourish.

During this weekend, asanas, breathing exercises, integral movement, and meditation will be taught and practiced, with particular emphasis on the yoga postures (stretches). Participants will be assisted in building a solid basis for the further development of the physical, mental, and spiritual aspects of yoga practices. Yoga philosophy and theory will be presented. A healthy diet will also be discussed and encouraged. $380

Gerald Smith
How can we be close and vulnerable as partners, yet separate and free to grow as individuals? The dilemma of merging and yet still maintaining a strong sense of individuality is never completely resolved, because each partner is continually changing. But it can be dealt with in ways that add to the aliveness in the relationship. This workshop will focus on the necessity of dealing with this issue in order to keep a good relationship alive.

Much of the participants' time during this weekend will be spent with their partners, separate from other couples. The workshop will use verbal, nonverbal, and written exercises to enhance openness, support, and affection, as well as skills to resolve differences in ways that do not produce "scar tissue." Also, since play is an essential part of keeping a relationship alive, there will be experiences to spark the imagination and willingness to play together.

Enrollment is limited to 12 couples. $380 per participant
Self-Transformation: The Art of the Actor for Everyday Life

Jane Marla Robbins

Transforming feelings of anxiety and insecurity into feelings of self-confidence and joy is a miracle that can happen in all areas of one’s life — physical, emotional, spiritual. This transformation can help us fulfill our potential for the roles we have chosen to play — child, parent, artist, public speaker, shaman, sensualist, or spouse.

The group will explore and discuss a wealth of acting techniques, including: physical, mental, emotional, vocal, and spiritual preparations, relaxation, sense memory, the magic “as if,” animal exercises, overcoming self-consciousness, speaking the truth, perfect props, and psychophysical action.

Participants can learn how to replace old fears and paranoid projections with self-manufactured pleasures and positive projections. Many “real-life” situations ordinarily fraught with worry can easily be transformed using the Actor’s Imagination. The power and pleasure of being able to create a sense of well-being can be experienced by everyone, and, once discovered, it cannot be easily shaken.

No previous acting experience is necessary.

Zero Balancing: Basic I & II

Fritz Smith

Zero Balancing is a simple method for aligning body structure with body energy. Western science has shown that energy and matter are fundamentally coupled; advances in psychology have shown that the body and mind are interconnected. Zero Balancing is born out of these perceptions, with roots in both Eastern and Western concepts of body function and structure. It is based on the experience that the balance of energy and structure within the body has a direct effect on the physical, mental, emotional, and spiritual health of an individual.

The structural/energetic interface of the body is beneath conscious awareness. When imbalances occur at this level, the body tends to compensate for them rather than resolve them directly. These imbalances often lead to loss of vitality, chronic body pain, and decreased potential for vibrant health. Zero Balancing can assist in overcoming these imbalanced patterns through touch.

In this workshop, anatomy, physiology, and skills of touch will be reviewed. Eastern concepts of chi energy, its movement in the body, and the chakra system will be discussed. Zero Balancing methods will be presented, including those for evaluating and balancing the structural/energetic interface of the body.

The workshop will be both didactic and experiential, with emphasis on new bodywork skills, and is open to all people in the healing arts. It is approved for C.E. credit for acupuncturists and nurses, and as Z.B. I or II in the Zero Balancing certification program.

Australian Aboriginal Dreaming: The Eternal Life Cycle

Pat & Derek Fowell

The Aboriginal people of Australia are reputed to be the world’s oldest continuous living culture. Archaeologists say they have occupied the continent for at least 100,000 years. Aborigines say they have been there forever. They arose from the land in the period of creation known as the Dreaming. It was during this period that the great Creation Beings formed the physical environment, created flora and fauna, and made men and women. They also taught humanity how to live in harmony with all of creation. They gave Aborigines a spiritual path which would ensure their survival until the end of time. This path is called the Dreaming or simply the Law.

This workshop will introduce participants to the Dreaming by simulating the life cycle of Australia’s indigenous peoples. This cycle encompasses Death; the latent Dreaming state of the spirit; Birth into Innocence; Play; Initiation into the life of the Clan and bonding with Mother Earth; and the maturity of the Creative Beings.

The workshop combines Western scientific and rational methods with the wisdom and earth consciousness of the Aboriginal People, using group sharing, art, guided meditations, storytelling, slides, dance, exposition, and journalizing to recreate the life cycle.

The Dreaming cannot be understood as an intellectual concept. It must be experienced. This workshop has been designed for people who possess an adventurous spirit. It is recommended only for people who are willing to step outside the psychological safety of their cultural norms.

Spiritual Dimensions of Healing

Elizabeth Stratton

The desire to heal and be healed is a deep need within every human being. Seeing someone we love in pain brings out the instinct to touch that person in a compassionate way. Feeling or being ill ourselves can lead us to explore both spiritual and scientific dimensions of healing that we would otherwise not be open to.

Psychic healing, with its focus on the laying on of hands, understanding the meaning of the illness, and seeing into the heart of the person who is ill, brings a spiritual dimension to healing that can be a valuable adjunct to modern medicine and its high technology.

This workshop will provide both theoretical and practical tools to awaken the healer within. Self-healing methods such as opening the energy centers (chakras), communicating with the body, and guided healing imagery will be explored to assist participants in taking charge of their own health. In addition, participants will begin to learn to work with others in a healing capacity through laying on of hands and psychic healing.

Caring and Conflict

Joel Isaacs & Anne Clark Isaacs

The leaders write: "Our goal in this workshop is to help each person touch the deepest place of longing to be whole. Starting from this inner place, we will strive for group interactions of the same quality. Together, participants and leaders alike, the risks we take in knowing and revealing ourselves can create an intimate community.

"Feelings can provide self-knowledge, depth, and pleasure, especially when they flow freely. Relating to others is most gratifying when feelings are expressed openly and directly. We will work to realign the point of balance where the desire for contact and love is often countered by the fear of being engulfed or abandoned. We will explore ways to expand our options beyond isolation or losing oneself to be close."

The leaders have worked together for over a decade, sharing a commitment to relationship and community. Their training in numerous disciplines allows them to tailor each workshop to the needs and desires of the participants. Reichian emotional release, group process, play, nurturing, confrontation, and healing energy will all be used. When asked to characterize intimate relationship, one of them exclaimed, “It’s heaven and hell!” This workshop aims toward easier access to heaven and shorter time in hell.

The Healing Power of Humor, Compassion, and Gentle Touch
Ilana Rubenfeld

“Humor lightened the dark, painful places in my life and helped me onto a path of healing,” writes Ilana Rubenfeld. This workshop is for people who want to include humor, movement, body language, and compassionate touch as a way of taking care of themselves personally, professionally, and spiritually. Using the Rubenfeld Synergy® Method, a healing system for the dynamic integration of body, mind, emotions, and spirit, participants will have the opportunity to listen, recognize, and work through feelings and memories locked in their bodies.

The workshop will use body/mind exercises, individual demonstrations, hands-on practice, dreamwork, gestalt practice, humor, and music, all designed to support contacting, releasing, transforming, and balancing the energy of inner body language.

The workshop atmosphere will be one of caring, healing, laughter, tears, and inspiration — encouraging participants to experience empowerment, integration, and new possibilities.

Writing and the Act of Creation
George Leonard

Participants will be encouraged to break through ego-barriers and cultural conditioning that inhibit expression. In so doing, they will have a chance to experience the creativity that is inherent in all of life. There will be little in the way of theoretical discussion and no critiques of past works. Simple movement will serve to reduce stress, free the mind, and focus the will. Participants will have the opportunity to write furiously in the here and now and to get immediate feedback. Before the weekend has passed, they in all probability will have completed a short article or fictional work, and will have experienced some of the joys and heartaches that accompany publication. Bring pencils, pens, or portable typewriters — and plenty of paper.

The Heart of the Matter
David Schiffman

This workshop is for people who value a heartfelt, original, resourceful approach to life. It is intended for the suitably seasoned who know and trust their own rhythms of change and learning, and appreciate the value of imaginative self-inquiry. It is designed to provide a safe yet evocative mood for deep, honest, heartfelt self-appraisal. The aim is to create a climate for examining what it takes to sustain and manage our own deeper concerns.
It will also be a time of sanctuary, an opportunity to pause and be met by kindred spirits, a chance to be acknowledged for what we really feel, and a look at how we can mark and celebrate those hopes and visions we cherish for the future.

The work will involve:

- Emotional clearing — cultivating a mood of self-acceptance, clarity, and effective risk taking in dealing with ourselves as well as others
- Physical attunement — using simple, innovative movement and massage to enliven and illuminate physical presence; cultivating buoyancy, flexibility, tenderness, and ease, as well as ferocity, potency, and assertiveness
- The mysteries of the spirit — using poetry, prayer, music, and ceremony to mark the passages we face as we grow older  $380

Therapeutic Touch

Janet Quinn

Therapeutic Touch (TT) is an approach to healing that can be learned by anyone with the intent to help. It is a derivative of the laying on of hands, but need not be practiced within a religious framework. Beginning with the basic assumption that all human beings are energy fields, TT is a powerful tool for actualizing the innate healing capacities of both recipients and providers. Clinical research demonstrates that TT can decrease pain and anxiety, and increase human hemoglobin levels and the rate of human wound healing, among other beneficial effects.

The practitioner of TT embarks on a journey to empower the healer she/he already is, and in the process to be healed. The work of remembering how to care, how to connect in unconditional love and compassion, and how to heal is perhaps our only hope for personal, community, and planetary survival.

This workshop will explore the scientific, theoretical, and clinical foundations of TT. It will blend both didactic and experiential learning into a balanced, grounded approach to this new version of an ancient healing art.

Psychic Self Defense

Elizabeth Stratton

As most of us know from experience, working with or around people who are depressed, hostile, or anxious can affect our own moods and feelings. We are constantly affected by the emotions and thoughts of those around us, as well as by the accumulated moods of the environment in which we live and work. We can also be affected by the illnesses of people we are close to, sometimes to the point of actually manifesting their symptoms ourselves.

During this weekend, participants will have the opportunity to explore their psychic boundaries and discover how and when they can be overwhelmed into areas that cause emotional confusion. Group members will begin to learn how to release negativity and strengthen boundaries that can help them to be less vulnerable in the future.

Rituals of Transformation

Paul Rebillot

People are continually approaching thresholds, transition points from one state to another. To live is to change. Unfortunately, we have a tendency to resist change, to cling to the familiar, to remain stuck at the threshold. This resistance eventually causes us much stress and pain.

Rituals can prepare people for change and help heal the passages that were not completed in the past. A ritual awakens within the psyche the archetypal patterns of change — it teaches the participant how to change. By acting out the ritual, people learn, not only in their minds but in their hearts and the movements of their bodies, the process of transformation.

Participants will look at what they want to transform in their lives, what they need to say good-bye to, and what new steps they need to take in order to cross their present threshold.

Small groups will work together to design and enact individual rituals to support this healing process.

Just as the body can move from one position into another, so can the full being; hearts can move, minds can move. Joseph Campbell said that when someone discovers his or her authentic path, the way seems blessed with magic. To find this way is the work of "Rituals of Transformation." $740

Movement, Touch, and the Healing Process

Patrick Douce

This workshop will approach the concept of a free, effortless body through Moshe Feldenkrais's work in movement and touch. Balinese and other Indonesian systems of working with the human body's energy field will broaden the Feldenkrais work.

Participants will be introduced to the complexity and simplicity of the spinal column. They will use soft, conscious movement to increase their sensitivity for safe, hands-on explorations. Moving away from the notion of a straight, stiff, rod-like back, they will find that posture and overall flexibility of the spine improves.
This program is designed for both beginners and professionals interested in movement and touch. Individuals with chronic tension or stress, and those with lower back, neck, shoulder, or hip pain may find alternatives through learning more about the human body's possibilities.

Women's Wisdom
Lenore Lefer & Anne Yeomans

What is the nature of women's wisdom? What are the sources of our knowing? As women what does it mean to reclaim and trust again our wisdom and deep instinctive knowing in a culture which has neither sought our counsel nor valued our perceptions?

In this workshop we will explore:
- The wisdom of our bodies, including our relationship to sexuality
- Our relationship to cycles and seasons
- The knowing of our hands and hearts
- Our relationship to the unconscious as it comes to us through image and dream
- Our understanding of ritual and sacred places
- Our relationship to nature

We will look at the legacy handed down to us from our mothers and grandmothers, and how we carry their attitudes and beliefs, their wounds and their gifts, as well as our own. We will also spend time with images of ancient goddesses and see how they can help us in our efforts to recover and remember the depths of our knowing.

Our exploration will include words, silence, drawing, movement, yoga, and ritual. Bring something that expresses an aspect of women's wisdom, and also a fragment of a dream.

Creating a Workable Stepfamily
Frances Verrinder & Michael Griffith

Parents in stepfamilies often feel torn between the needs of the new partner and the needs of the children. Stepparents can easily feel rejected by both their mate and the stepchildren, who withdraw or act out their divided loyalties. Resolving this "normal" stepfamily crisis and creating workable relationships are crucial to the success of the new couple and the stepfamily.

This workshop combines fun, relaxation, and learning for all stepfamily members. It offers practical tools for nurturing the couple's primary bond, deepening all stepfamily relationships, and dealing with ex-spouses. It is especially useful for stepchildren coping with living in two families. Most important, the workshop is designed to help create a loving and flexible family structure based on conversation, humor, and good will.

Using gestalt, group process, art, psychodrama, conflict resolution, and communication skills, morning and late afternoon sessions will be devoted both to family groups and to smaller subgroups for couples, parents, stepparents, children, and stepchildren. Some afternoons there will be organized activities for kids (art, swimming, hiking) so that couples can have time to themselves. The group will meet some evenings for singing, storytelling, games, ad hoc performances, and hot chocolate.

This workshop is for stepfamilies with children age 7 to 18. Child care for children 6 and under is available through the Gateway School Park. Please call the school at 408-667-3026 for further information and fees. $740

Vision Painting
Helen Malcolm-Neeb

Trust your creative spirit. Vision Painting is a form that can enable you to move beyond the rational mind to deeper levels of motivation, intention, and desire. It is playful, creative, and expressive. It is also fun and profoundly educational.

Vision Painting is a form of active meditation. Through guided visioning the participant may witness a flow of images through which inner yearnings are prompted from the feeling center, through the hand, and onto paper. The vision painting becomes a meditation and affirmation of the participant's love that desire expression, change, or healing.

Vision Painting is a way to acknowledge your creative spirit and open a channel for the images to flow. Self-expression is evoked through feelings, color, music, movement, and dream images. The creative impulse is explored as an opportunity to play, take risks, face fears, and suspend judgment. Painting from creative spirit is a sacred journey into self.

Intimate Relationships: Keeping the Spark Alive
Ayala Pines

When two people are in love, it seems like the magical spark between them is going to last forever. More often than not, however, with the effects of everyday pressures and stresses, the love is eroded and eventually burns out. Burnout is not caused by individual pathology or inadequacy, or by major dramatic events. It is caused by a buildup of petty annoyances, minor dissatisfaction, and a gradual increase in boredom. How can this insidious process of love's erosion be prevented? How can a couple in love keep the romantic spark alive?

Participants will be encouraged to find the romantic images they shared at the beginning of their own relationships. This workshop is recommended especially for couples committed to keeping the spark alive in their relationships, and for marriage and family counselors. It may also be helpful for individuals who are trying to figure out what went wrong in a relationship that burned out.

Big Sur Wilderness Experience
Steven Harper

Located on a narrow stretch of land between the Pacific Ocean and the coastal ridge of the Santa Lucia Mountains, Esalen is the trailhead to one of the world’s most spectacular wilderness areas. With this natural reserve as the primary teacher, the group will walk into the Los Padres National Forest. Drawing on various traditions, participants can develop the quality of their awareness and open to the natural world.

Weeklong workshops will venture out on five hikes (4-10 miles long). Weekend workshops will take two hikes (3-6 miles long). Using Esalen as a base camp, the group will explore the different trails through the natural beauty of the Big Sur backcountry. Days will begin and end at Esalen with short stretching and sharing sessions. Each hike will begin after breakfast and conclude in time to enjoy the hot springs and dinner each evening at Esalen.

Dancing on the Body
Deborah Harrell

Deborah Harrell learned massage from a West African tradition that practices healing touch as a “dance on the body.” It is a tradition that teaches us how to surrender to the harmonizing force within ourselves, and this spirit can be awakened through dance. To dance, to loosen inhibitions, and to release repressed tensions and self-consciousness bring the mind and body into the present moment, allowing awareness to unfold and the practitioner to become a vehicle through which this harmonizing energy intuitively moves. This workshop examines how to surrender to this life force, and explores how to transpose that flow state from dance to massage.

The leader has developed a self-healing framework in which participants can discover how to dance from within, fluid and centered, through movement and awareness exercises and various massage approaches. Group members will explore exhilarating African dance with drumming accompaniment, Middle Eastern and Balinese dance, movements which invoke animal forms, breathwork, sound, and centering exercises which calm the mind and still the body.

The practices taught in this workshop are useful to couples and families, somatic practitioners, psychotherapists, and anyone working on self-healing and spiritual development.

Please note: Wear loose comfortable clothing and bring any percussion instruments you may have.

The Application of Altered States
Ronald Wong Jue

This workshop is for psychologists and health professionals who are interested in integrating transpersonal dimensions and strategies into their clinical practice. Participants will explore the multidimensionality of consciousness. They will learn how to articulate the trance state in order to gain a deepened sense of the integrated self, to work with repressed memories, and to access internal spiritual resources.

Drawing from various cultural traditions which utilize trance for the purpose of healing and integration, participants will delve into their own mystery, myths, and dreams to understand their own internal ecology. The quantum mechanics and holographic models of reality will be explored with the phenomenology of trance in order to understand how various levels of consciousness are interrelated. Emphasis will be on clinical pragmatics and the integration of this material into ordinary consciousness. The final experiential portion of the workshop will focus on the healing of the inner child and the internalized patterns of the parents, which are important components of the psyche and in the clinical work arenas of codependency, sexual violation, and addiction. Resource materials will be provided.

In time we realize that neither is true. Disappointed and disillusioned, we wonder — how is it that we choose who to fall in love with? And why are we so often wrong?

Many theories have tried to answer this question. In this workshop, participants will explore the theories and research findings as they apply to their own romantic choices, right or wrong. More importantly, participants will examine what they can do about these choices, both to enhance current romantic relationships and to avoid making the same mistakes in the future.

Through group discussions and a variety of experiential exercises, participants will have the opportunity to explore their romantic choices and increase their understanding of the causes, both conscious and unconscious, of these choices. In addition, they will be presented with tools to use this understanding to improve the quality of current and future relationships.

The workshop is for anyone who seeks better understanding of his or her romantic choices, especially people who seem unable to make the “right choice,” and counselors who work with couples or individuals with a problem in romantic choices.

Turning on the Light:
A Choice to Live Consciously
Laura DeNuccio & Guest Leaders

In the sunlight of awareness, each thought and action becomes sacred.

— THICH NHAT HANH

Laura DeNuccio writes, “To live fully is a choice only each individual can make moment-by-moment. This workshop is about honoring, empowering, and celebrating each person as we reclaim our wholeness/holiness as human beings making a conscious choice to live more fully.”

In this workshop, participants will investigate the many aspects of the unfolding self — physical, energetic, mental, sexual, and spiritual. Each of these aspects will be addressed through breath, sound, movement, music, and visioning. Guided meditations will be used to increase body awareness and aliveness, to dissolve and balance energetic blockages, and to quiet, still, and expand the mind.

Participants will engage in an exploration of growth as it relates to daily living. This will be presented primarily as an awareness practice for increasing self-understanding and the ability... to live in the here and now. There will be emphasis on cultivating compassion and patience, and on aligning personal truths in relationship to others and the planet. Applying the creative use of the power of the spoken word, participants will explore and expand a vision of possibilities for themselves and the world in which they live.

Spiritual Experience and Scientific Discovery
Brother David Steindl-Rast & Rupert Sheldrake

Benedictine monk Brother David, Teacher-in-Residence at Esalen, and biologist Rupert Sheldrake, best known for his controversial theory of memory in nature through morphic resonance, have known each other for over ten years. Both have had much previous experience of dialogue between the realms of science and religion — Brother David with Fritjof Capra in Belonging to the Universe, and Rupert Sheldrake with J. Krishnamurti, Fr. Bede Griffiths, and Matthew Fox. For the first time they come together to lead an exploration of such topics as:

- Gratefulness and nature
- Creation myths and evolutionary creativity
- Rituals and morphic resonance
- Rite of passage and the process of discovery
- Pilgrimage and gain

Join them for a weekend of discovery, bridge-building, and celebration. $380

Managing Your Stress, Your Heart, and Your Life
Mel Lefer

Dr. Dean Ornish produced the first major study showing conclusive evidence that reversal of heart disease and other disorders, such as high blood pressure, diabetes, obesity, and high cholesterol, was possible without the use of drugs or surgical intervention. This workshop will apply the tools developed by Dr. Ornish to provide the direct experience of how powerful, comprehensive lifestyle changes can affect one’s heart and overall sense of well-being.

The workshop will utilize many approaches, including diet, exercise, stretching, progressive relaxation, breathing practices, meditation, visualization, and group discussion. The goal will be for participants to transfer these good habits into every aspect of daily life, and to pave the way to the peace of mind that physical well-being can provide.

When Drummers Were Women
Layne Redmond

This century has seen a vast unearthing of the images of the Great Goddess and her priestesses. Throughout the ancient Mediterranean world, she is portrayed with her tambourine or frame drum. The frame drum is one of the oldest, most primal instruments and was predominantly played by women with their bare hands. A powerful trance-inducing instrument, it was used in the religious rites of many goddesses, including Inanna, Ishtar, Cybele, Hathor, Isis, Sekhmet, Aphrodite, Demeter, and Artemis.

This weekend will focus on hand drumming techniques and their relationship with the elements of earth, water, fire, and air. Working in a circle and using the force of gravity, participants will practice synchronizing with the energy of the earth and radiating a group pulse. These rhythmic rituals are an ancient technology for accessing higher levels of awareness and releasing a deeper feminine energy.

This workshop is for women only. No prior experience with frame drums is necessary. Drums will be provided. $380
The Myth of Male Power
Warren Farrell

Warren Farrell writes, "I've never had a couple come to me and say, "Warren I want a divorce; my partner understands me.""

This workshop can help both sexes to understand each other via role-playing in which men and women actually experience the pressures that mold the other sex's psyche. Men experience, for example, women's view of sexual harassment; women experience men's fears of sexual rejection and the powerlessness it engenders.

In a safe yet boundary-pushing environment, the leader introduces innovative ways of looking at the sexes — ways that are at first hard to hear because they are not only female-positive, but also more male-positive than is currently in vogue. The discussion is allowed to become emotional enough to simulate the way we communicate when we become defensive. The leader then facilitates experiential work on how both sexes can listen to criticism — even personal criticism — without becoming defensive, thus creating with our loved ones a safe environment to express those "tough to hear" feelings.

This workshop offers new data on everything from male power and powerlessness to date rape and sexual harassment; from why men are afraid of commitment to why men commit more suicide; from a new view of equality in the workplace.

A common response to this workshop, from both sexes, is "I've never felt so much love for the other sex." $380

The Subtle Self
Judy Blackstone

All spiritual traditions refer to an essential dimension of existence, calling it unity consciousness, emptiness, universal consciousness, and many other names. This dimension is not an abstract concept. It is the core of our own true nature and can be experienced by anyone who is willing to approach it with patience and openness. Unity consciousness is experienced as clear, mirror-like space, pervading our body and our environment, transcending the duality of self and object. It is deeper than the physical and energetic levels of our being and beyond our psychological defenses, projections, images, and archetypes. Subtle Self Work is a precise method for attuning to the clear space of unity consciousness.

In this workshop participants will explore how to relate to others in this clear space, how to commune with nature, how to experience and live in the inner depths of the body. Group members will use daily sitting meditation, sounds to stimulate the subtle channels in the body, verbal and movement process work to stabilize and expand the sense of unity consciousness, and subtle movement exercises. In this essential dimension of ourselves, we can find the source of our love, clarity, vitality, and peace.

Creating Exact Moments of Healing for Survivors of Abuse
Maria Fenton Gladis

There are moments in the lives of some people that never should have happened. Moments that should have happened and didn't. Moments from which we needed rescuing. All these moments have been and still are deeply embedded in our being until they are selectively addressed and transformed. They must be relived, rectified, and new memories must be etched into our cells and souls.

This workshop will offer each person an opportunity to do individual work tailored to suit his or her unique history and present manifestations. Music, gestalt work, and spiritual development will be the method. The healing environment will be one of love, safety, and clarity. This workshop is appropriate for survivors of emotional, physical, and/or sexual abuse who are at an advanced level of their healing journey. Partners of survivors and professionals working with them are welcome.

Continuum
Emilie Conrad-Da'oud

This workshop explores the idea that movement is something we are rather than something we do, that what we call a "body" is actually life expressing itself.

Using deep rhythms and intrinsic motion, participants can discover a sensitivity to movement at all levels — not just familiar movements, but what the leader calls the "dance of intelligent life." Both individually and in rapport with a partner, participants will explore the subtleties of breath and tissue, the undulation of the spine, and the effect of being witnessed by others. The goal will be to experience a visceral, neuromuscular connection to all life, celebrating a richness and depth that go far beyond social or cultural connections. Emilie Conrad-Da'oud writes: "As we enliven ourselves from the inside, our dynamic expressions in the world increase. This remarkable oscillation from intrinsic to extrinsic, this elegant movement of creativity from cell to action, this flow of life urging itself into new creative channels — this is Continuum."

As a movement specialist at UCLA, the leader has contributed to a study demonstrating that primary movement is essential to mediating disease and aging. Her work is incorporated into the fields of physical therapy, massage, and psychoimmunology. This workshop can give participants a deeper awareness of the body as a system where change, growth, and innovation are possible. No dance or movement experience is necessary. $740

Gender, Communication, and the Politics of Everyday Life
Paul Lounsbury & Nancy Winston

As fish live in water, we humans live in the ebb and flow of our conversations. We inhabit the relationships they bring forth. In dialogues both internal and with the outer world, we organize and are organized by the patterns of coordinations produced by these different networks of conversations.

How we learn to coordinate the flow of our emotions and behaviors in these conversations determines how we participate in the politics of everyday life, negotiating territory, defining relationships, creating shared space, and constructing consensual reality. In no area does the validation we receive have a greater impact than that in which we co-create and maintain our identities as "men" and "women."

To bring about relevant transformation, we must ask: How can we engage in these conversations with greater vitality, courage, and spontaneity, relying not merely on habitual patterns of organizing our conversations, but trusting in the creative intelligence of the unconscious mind?

With hypnosis as a metaphor, viewing each conversation as "trance"-producing, this workshop will explore everyday conversations as hypnotic inductions and will use these dynamics to investigate ways of enhancing our competencies, particularly those related to gender. Drawing from Milton Erickson and Gregory Bateson, the work will use group interaction, hypnotic inductions, and playful experiments to promote authenticity, variety, and choice.

Accessible to anyone, this workshop is of special interest to couples, therapists, and business professionals. Prerequisites include a sense of humor, willingness to be a group member, and a desire for novel experience.

The Dream Master: Dreams and Fantasies
Pierre Grimes
This workshop teaches how to understand the structure and function of dreams, and how fantasies, or spontaneous dream projections, are the doorway into the power and nature of the creations of the Dream Master, the massive intelligibility that presents us with our dreams. It is by coming to recognize how dreams select and represent the dynamics of our issues that we are brought to appreciate the intrinsic intelligibility of the Dream Master's reality. For the dream draws from our past those unresolved conflicts and offers them for reflection within an art form of unmatched artistry.

The drama presented through both dreams and fantasy has a common dynamic and structure which can unlock those personal blocks to our achievement of excellence. These blocks are conclusions we have learned to draw from our youthful experiences, but which now unknowingly misapply to the present; they are false beliefs about ourselves and our reality, and since they are, in principle, irreconcilable with our highest ideals, they can become the causes of our sense of dissatisfaction and failure in life.

Participants will be offered a new way of understanding themselves, their reality, and the profound nature and role of the Dream Master. This approach is philosophical rather than psychological, since it challenges the legitimacy of beliefs by exploring the conditions that first made them believable. $740

David Schiffman
To make effective, creative choices, you need courage, imagination, and the willingness to know your heart and be true to the dreams that live inside it. Choosing this deeper wisdom can often involve the risk of breaking set — the choice to move against the powerful grain of old fears, habits, and the constant pressure of other people's expectations. To foster this spirit means contacting the elemental-instinctual parts of our natures, befriending rather than suppressing or denying the sexuality and power out of which initiative and enthusiasm spring.

During this week we will focus on how to develop a more adventurous, resourceful, and buoyant way of living. In an atmosphere based on warmth and humor, we will explore our capacity for mutual tenderness, respect, and honesty. Traditional psychological practices such as gestalt, bioenergetics, and psychosynthesis will be used for intensive individual work, as well as nontraditional innovative approaches in bodywork, kinesthetic retraining, music, and guided imagery. $740

Endarkenment
Will Schutz
Sometimes in our search for enlightenment we become humorless, and our search becomes tedious. Growth demands a respite from intensive struggle.

This workshop can provide a vehicle for the turn downward. The group will explore: how to establish and maintain meaningless relations; what to worry about while meditating; advanced covert blaming and inducing guilt in loved ones; how to become the most sympathetic victim/martyr in your social group; guilt without sex.

This approach, similar to Feldenkrafs's "live the disasters" and the "homeopathic principle" (Will Schutz, Body Fantasy) can be as valuable for attaining enlightenment as the direct route — and more fun. In addition, participants will have an opportunity to explore, play with, and celebrate the shadow — that part of ourselves we usually hide. $380

Accepting Life's Transitions: Letting Go — Moving On
Mary Goldenson (Devarani)
The only certainty in life is change, yet we often resist our transitions because of patterns of fear and self-denial. Old beliefs keep us stuck in our resentments, unsuccessful marriages, friendships, and careers, and can cause illness, sorrow, and the inability to forgive.

Transitions are crossroads in our lives that give us the opportunity to take time out and reconnect with our truth. It is never too late to change. Transitions are doors to the renewal of our passions, courage, and commitments.

This workshop will present you with ways to help complete the past, be open to the present, and create a future. Participants will experience a safe, supportive environment that includes taking risks, intense body work, gestalt imagery, dance, and meditation, in order to support the transitions that keep us committed to the process of discovering ourselves.

The Healing Voice
Jill Purce

This workshop will teach practical explorations with sound for healing and the transformation of consciousness. By liberating the voice, it is possible to make contact with deep levels of the self and release an untapped source of energy.

Participants will work with the psychophysical effects of breathing, chanting, manic and sonic meditations, and learning to tune and listen together, moving from the intuitive level into meditative states. Breath and sound will be developed so that different parts of the body-mind come into resonance to give sonic massage, and to heal and tune the chakras and subtle body. Participants will be taught ways to find their own note and hear inner sound, entering directly into the subtle dimensions of sound by the magical voice practices of traditional cultures, including trance music, Mongolian and Tibetan overtone chanting, and other ancient group chants and vocal practices.

To enchant means to "make magical through chant." It is the aim of the workshop to inspire participants to re-enchant themselves and their world. This work is accessible to anyone, regardless of musical ability. $380

Creating from the Spirit
Dan Wakefield

Miracles...seem to me to rest not so much upon faces or voices or healing power coming to us from afar, but upon our perceptions being made finer, so that for a moment our eyes can see and our ears can hear what is there about us always.
— Willa Cather

Each of us has a rich source of creativity within us, a living well of ideas, stories, pictures, music, and dreams. This workshop, led by author Dan Wakefield, will guide participants through fascinating exercises in drawing, writing, music, and meditations on natural objects (trees, flowers, mountains), to appreciate and develop each individual's own creativity.

Breaking the myth of drugs and alcohol as stimulants to creative work, the workshop will show that the key to the natural process of creativity is getting in touch with our deepest sources, the "spirit" within us that comes from clarity. Together the leader and the group will share ideas in breaking the "creative slump," and participants will draw the continuing "road maps" of their own creative journeys. $380

Week of September 4-9

Self-Acceptance Training: Basic
Richard Olney & Heather Lynne Burch

Self-acceptance is defined as "the experiencing of whatever I am in a given moment, without the inhibitions of self-judgment, self-criticism, or self-evaluation." Self-acceptance training is a transpersonal practice that follows an educational model rather than a medical model. The goal of this work is to reach the inner self, the inner teacher, and to feel alive and real. Although its practice includes devices drawn from gestalt, bioenergetics, mythic fantasy, eidetic imagery, and hypnosis, it is also a philosophy, a value system, and a view of the individual's relationship with the universe.

Self-acceptance training is a holistic approach which emphasizes body awareness, emotional charge and discharge, and cognitive examination of the individual's "pretends" and illusions that obstruct self-acceptance.

This workshop is largely experiential; no time will be given to theoretical or didactic considerations. Limited to 25 people. $740

The Writer's Way: A Personal Adventure Through Writing
Nancy Bacal

The Jewish High Holidays offer people of all denominations an opportunity for community and reflection. This is an invitation for anyone with an open heart to turn this holy time into a satisfying ritual of creativity. Using the pen, we will explore together our individual stories. Beginning with a series of writing exercises designed to bypass judgment and self-criticism, we will tap our reservoir of experience. Daily excursions on the page will encourage each participant to transform the burdens of our lives into stories, the unwanted voices into characters, the failures and successes into material. Guidance will be specific enough to excite the imagination yet loose enough for each of us to experiment with form and image and remain open to surprise.

This workshop offers a supportive and stimulating environment for the non-writer, the would-be writer, and the professional. The schedule will include writing in and out of the group, walks, meditation, reading and discussion of pertinent material. The intention will be to coax the mind out of its cycle of expectation and disappointment into a positive, stimulating relationship with our work.

Life Energy Process
Stephano Sabetti

The Life Energy Process (LEP) is a spiritually-oriented approach to self-development and professional growth based on Eastern and Western energy dynamics. Specially designed subtle and intensive movements (micromotions) can increase energy flow and lead to the discharge of nonessential processes in the body (repressed emotions, chemical toxins, etc.). Each of us has an energy frequency that can be felt when attuned through LEP. This unique vibration helps to center and ground, as well as to find clearer direction and meaning in daily life. Each participant will have a chance to feel her/his unique energy process and explore it through process inquiry.

Life Energy Process includes: dance, theater, massage, pool work, and various other forms. The workshop is of particular interest to professionals and laypersons who are excited by the integration of theory, pleasure, and hands-on application of energy concepts. $740

Coming Out and Coming Into Relationships
David Hawkins

Our capacity to enter and sustain intimate relationships depends greatly on the role models and experiences we encountered in our families. For gay men in particular, adult loving relationships are shaped by the ways we "came out" and differentiated from our families, and by the ways we were able to remain involved with family and social values needed for our adult journey. They are also influenced by how successfully we found and joined a supportive community and exchanged inherited values for new values more appropriate to a changing lifestyle.

This workshop is for gay men who want to improve the quality of their relationships by:
• Reconstructing their journey to adult sexuality
• Reevaluating methods for seeking acceptance and avoiding rejection
• Reexamining the cost/benefits of strategies for managing stigma
• Rethinking limits on involvement and commitment

Facial Communication
Lillian Lesefko
Your face is your identity, the external manifestation of your inner personality. It contains the primary clues for visual communication through the expressions transmitted, and is a topographical map of life experiences. Learning to interpret these clues can give you insight into your own psychological process as well as the health and character of others.

Based on the ancient science of Chinese facial analysis, derived from Chinese medicine, this workshop will combine Chinese medical wisdom with modern research and methods. Participants will learn about the health indicators of the face, the personality traits shown in the markings, the emotional issues held, and the changing quality of chi in the eyes.

During this workshop, participants will learn to profile others, begin to understand the feelings others are expressing facially, and, ultimately, expand self-knowledge by attempting to unmask their real selves.

C.E. credit is available; see pages 60-61. $380

The Subtle Art of Meditation
David Streeter
The experience of insight, tranquility, inner strength, and aliveness can be found within our everyday life through the ancient art of meditation.

This workshop will approach traditional meditation practice in an unusual way. In our retreat atmosphere participants will prepare the body/mind for silent listening with fluid movement from the martial arts and yoga. The workshop will incorporate breathing methods (Prana-Yama) and energy work with Zazen (sitting meditation). Other activities will include group meditation in a nearby contemplative monastery and Zazen at our new meditation center nestled close to a waterfall.

This approach to the subtle practice of meditation through the body can inspire the student to discover his or her rich interior life and that crystal clear still point described so well in every spiritual tradition.

When Success is Not Enough
Peller Marion
If I had known what it would be like to have it all, I would have settled for less. — Lily Tomlin

Since 1950, materialism has skyrocketed in the United States. Indeed, many of us are wealthy beyond the wildest dreams of our ancestors, and yet we struggle more than ever for self-esteem and meaning in our lives.

When alternative measures of success are not available, the deep human need to be valued and respected by others is acted out through consumption. Buying things becomes a means to both self-esteem and social acceptance.

“The avarice of mankind is insatiable,” wrote Aristotle, who believed that as soon as one desire was satisfied, another would appear to take its place. If our wants are insatiable, there is simply no such thing as enough.

Peller Marion has designed a weekend that explores the questions: How much is enough? What is an achievement junkie? What is my definition of success at this time in my life? How do I create my own personal philosophy of life? How do I live by my own agenda?

Participants will explore the paradox of success in their own lives. A variety of experiential processes will be drawn from readings and discussion, games, dance, gestalt, imagery, and meditation.

Intuition and the Dance of Attention
Anne Armstrong & Randy Cherner
At the still point of the turning world, Neither flesh nor fleshless; Neither from nor towards; at the still point, there the dance is, But neither arrest nor movement. And do not call it fixity. Where past and future are gathered. Neither movement from nor towards, Neither ascent nor decline. Except for the point, the still point, There would be no dance, and there is only the dance.

— T.S. Eliot, The Four Quartets

Intuition is a gift that everyone possesses. It takes many forms. The foundation for intuitive practice is the process of shifting one’s attention in very precise ways to lead to enhanced awareness. Anne Armstrong’s intuitive opening came through the psychic intuitive process, Randy Cherner’s through movement and touch.

The aim of this workshop is for participants to reclaim their intuitive powers in all areas of their lives — personal, professional, and spiritual. Group members will learn to develop their intuitive styles through meditations, sensing practices, refined touch, aikido, and Feldenkrais exercises. This workshop is unique in its attention to intuitive style in both its psychic and somatic dimensions. $380

Brita Ostrom & Attila Vaas
This workshop is for partners who want to learn to massage each other. Emphasis will be on “hearing” with the hands, de-stressing the home, asking for what we need, and giving to those we love. Sessions will include demonstrations and hands-on guidance. Individual concerns will be addressed so participants can continue their practice at home. $380 per participant

Singing Gestalt: Solo or Duet
Nancy Kaye Lunney
Singing gestalt is singing about yourself, who you are, what you feel, who you’d like to be. Singing gestalt is about being yourself in front of other people without judging how well you sing. Singing gestalt is not about performance. It is about making contact, feeling, expressing, and being there, with and for yourself and others.

Come alone or bring someone who is important to you, perhaps a lover, friend, a parent, someone with whom you’d like to communicate.
in a different way things you've expressed before and possibly things you've never said. If you wish, bring photographs of significant people in your life, past or present. If the idea of getting up and singing in front of other people terrifies you more than anything, this workshop is for you. If you've been too shy to try, this is your chance.

Some guided imagery and gestalt may be used. Accompaniment and lots of music are provided. But the workshop is really about you — and about you singing.

Relationships: Letting Go — Moving On

Mary Goldenson (Devarani) & Gustavo Rabin

For one human being to love another: that is perhaps the most difficult of all our tasks, the ultimate test and proof, the work for which all the other work is but preparation. — Rilke

The fabric of our lives is made up of relationships. All of life's relationships will be the focus of this workshop: family, friends, lovers, co-workers, partners.

Often beliefs, defenses, fears, and emotions about past relationships continue into our present relationships and keep us from spontaneous feelings of love, trust, and joy. The goal of this workshop is to experience these patterns and create new ways to relate in the moment to ourselves, others, and our work. This workshop can help you:

- Find out how your relationships mirror you
- Get a clearer picture of what you want and how to get it
- Examine ways you sabotage yourself
- Learn more about how others see you
- Learn practical tools and knowledge that will help create empowered relationships

Change and Self-Esteem

Phylis Shankman

Change is an ever-present aspect of living which must be accepted and used creatively if one is to sustain a healthy, interesting, and exciting life. Many individuals talk about wanting change while actively or passively resisting it. Self-esteem, which includes self-acceptance, self-appreciation, and self-confidence, enables one to confront resistance and fear, and increases the willingness to change and take risks.

This workshop includes an in-depth process for finding and allowing self-acceptance and for creatively confronting opportunities for change and growth. Group activities include gestalt process work, discussion, massage, meditation, music, dance, art imagery exercises, and whatever else happens spontaneously.

Golf in the Kingdom:

An Exploration of the Inner Game

Stephen Cohen, Fred Shoemaker & Brian Bergstrom

Ye'll come away from the links with a new hold on life, that is certain if ye play the game with all your heart. — Michael Murphy, (Shivas Irons), Golf in the Kingdom

The game of golf provides many opportunities to enhance the journey of self-discovery. It can be experienced not only as an athletic endeavor, but also as a metaphor for the way one lives. Just as in life, issues of self-confidence, fear, trust, discipline, and awareness emerge in the conflict between the ego's desire for success and the inner self's ability to achieve. During these five days, teaching methods gleaned from a study of the inner game will be utilized, as well as principles from psychosynthesis and gestalt, to explore the inner self and how one interferes with its emergence. Two days will be spent on field trips to the Monterey Peninsula where participants will practice and play in some of the most beautiful golf country in the world. On other days there will be time to relax and enjoy the natural pleasures of Esalen and Big Sur.

The Jewish New Year: Ancient Traditions — Modern Responses

Rabbi William Cutter & Cantor William Sharlin

This five-day workshop includes study, meditation, and prayer. It begins with three days of study in which the leaders will take the group through the major literature of Yom Kippur and Rosh HaShanah, poems and stories related to the High Holiday season, and music which has formed the Jewish people in its various habitations. Participants will also be encouraged to create their own responses to the traditional messages and practices of Rosh HaShanah and Yom Kippur.

Yom Kippur will be observed from Wednesday evening at sundown through Thursday evening's "ne'ilah ceremony." The five-day session will conclude Friday morning with a review and critique of the experience. Personal stories will be part of this conclusion.

The service on the holiday itself will include traditional liturgy treated in a nontraditional way, and innovative text combined with music of generations past and present. Discussion groups will occur throughout, and time to be alone will be provided.

Although the Yom Kippur experience itself will be "devotional," non-Jewish participants are welcomed. Fasting and personal restriction traditionally mark the specific observance of Yom Kippur, but participants are invited to experience the holiday in their own way with their own commitments.

The workshop and service will be limited to twenty-five registrants.

Freeing Our Bodies/Our Selves Through Movement: A Feldenkrais® Approach

Patrick Douce

The work of Moshe Feldenkrais is based on the natural process by which we learned to move as children. During this workshop, soft, easy, gentle movements will be used to increase awareness of the body and to improve the ease and ability of movement. Special emphasis will be placed on the difficulties in movement that arise from chronic conditions such as lower back and neck pain, tension in the neck and shoulders, and knee injuries. Such conditions can be improved by approaching the difficulties as problems in learning rather than as therapeutic troubles. Situations which were “incurable” became “reeducable.” Workshop participants will also be introduced to methods for improving their ability to sense each other’s bodies through touch and massage.

Although this workshop is valuable for anyone interested in learning more about his/her body through direct experience, it may be of special interest and benefit to dancers, athletes, doctors, nurses, physical therapists, psychologists, health-care professionals, and elderly citizens who may discover new ways of moving with ease and increased flexibility — painlessly and immediately.

The Art of Ceremony

Cynthia Gale

Each of us may live more gently and harmoniously upon the planet by deepening our spiritual connections to the earth through ceremony. It is through ceremony that we connect our physical world to the spiritual realms. This workshop will offer experiential exercises in prayer, meditation, and ceremony, as well as practical approaches to living a life rich in the celebration of Mother Earth spirituality. The focus of the workshop will be:

- The intention and power of prayer and the prayer circle
- Creating sacred space in one’s physical world
- The art of creating ceremony
- Working with the medicine wheel of life

Group members will explore the art and significance of ceremony as well as the art of designing rituals that are appropriate for their needs.

The workshop will conclude with a ceremony for Mother Earth in which participants will be taught to create medicine wheels as an art form.

Clinical Program for Professionals: Integrating Self Psychology, Gestalt, and Mind-Body Healing

Ron Alexander

This weekend training program will combine didactic discussions with experiential exercises, role-playing of therapist-client dyads, and clinical demonstrations. A full-spectrum treatment cartography will be used to clarify how gestalt, self psychology, and mind-body healing can be effectively integrated to address early developmental trauma, narcissistic issues of the self, and contact boundary disturbances. Emphasis will be on:

- Improving skills of diagnosis
- Formulation of treatment plans that attend to the transition points of the healing process
- Improving intervention skills as they relate to handling resistance, the nurturing of the real self, and facilitation and activation of unconscious healing processes through the use of mirroring, pacing, and the language of mind-body healing

Particular attention will be paid to assisting therapists to become more aware and effective in dealing with countertransference and projective identification.

The Art of Talking and Listening

Mudita Nisker & Dan Clarman

Every day we swim in an ocean of words, talking and listening. Yet many people can barely tread water with their communication skills. Making yourself understood and understanding others is a subtle and precise art, yet it is often a neglected part of our education. Fortunately, you don’t have to be a born communicator; it’s something you can learn.

This workshop will teach you new ways to deal with many situations, from negotiating with your partner, boss, or associates, to engaging your child’s cooperation. Using discussion, demonstration, and role-playing, participants will explore ways to:

- Give and receive criticism skillfully
- Send clear, concise messages which invite cooperation
- Share difficult to express feelings and still maintain good will
- Improve listening skills even in tough situations
- Identify key assumptions and their effect on communication patterns
- Develop nonverbal skills to enhance spoken messages
- Experience more delight in being with others

This work draws from cognitive psychology, critical thinking, systems theory, and Eastern philosophy. The objective will be to help each individual cultivate the ability to identify communication hot spots and work them out constructively. In the process, you can discover your own truth and honor the truth of others.

Living a Spiritual Life in a Practical World

Judith Weaver

This workshop is based on the conviction that we are indeed whole right now. Our innate creativity is alive within us. The feeling and sensitivity that we were born with, and which society has taught us to suppress, can be reclaimed.

In this workshop, spirituality is not about adhering to any religion orism. It is about bringing more awareness and sensitivity to our daily processes, restoring the natural balance of body, mind, and spirit, and realizing the aliveness that is our birthright.

Using breath and the senses as guides, participants will practice being present, living one moment at a time, exploring and processing the experience of doing, and will investigate creative applications for daily living. The group will focus on the activities and relationships of everyday life, practicing them in more integrated, conscious modes. The workshop will present traditional meditation practices such as Zazen and vipassana, and nontraditional forms such as sensory awareness and inner movement. Participants may spend time in “noble silence” and may also engage in the Chinese energetic practices of T’ai Chi Ch’uan and Qi Kung.

These explorations can help participants decide if and what to practice in their daily lives, and how to integrate these practices to enhance health, well-being, and wholeness.

Five-Day Massage Intensive

Vicki Topp & Oliver Bailey

The basic approach of Esalen massage consists of long, flowing strokes which contribute to deep relaxation and a feeling of wholeness. To achieve these goals, participants will be instructed in fundamental methods of Esalen massage which include quality of touch, breath awareness, stress reduction, and grounding techniques. The workshop will also address the concept of working with another individual's essential being.

Meditation will be used to promote focusing abilities. The workshop is open to beginners as well as those who wish to brush up on their massage skills.

Playing the Edge
David Schiffman

In the early stages of growth, success seems to be its own reward. Excitement, vitality, and the willingness to face life boldly are often characteristics of those who are involved in new and successful ventures. To keep this spirit alive is not easy. The enormous pressure, the grinding routines, and demands of substantial involvement can dispirit even the healthiest people. To listen to one's heart and know what's real requires the courage to pause. In this willingness to stop and listen to the deeper self live the true resources that guide and protect us.

The purpose of this week is to create a mood of sanctuary for people who are in transition and facing major changes in career, relationship, or matters of the spirit; those in need of a break from demanding stressful responsibilities; individuals interested in breaking new ground in the areas of self-nurturance, intuitive functioning, and problem solving.

The process will be gently restorative, illuminating, and enlivening. The group intention will be to create a community based on trust and goodwill with emphasis on individual freedom. Traditional methods of self-inquiry (gestalt practice, bioenergetics, psychosynthesis) will be combined with innovative methods using music, meditation, poetry, and prayer to foster this spirit of living fully and comfortably. $740

Sim Van der Ryn

Is it possible to design environments — buildings, neighborhoods, cities — integrated into the beauty and function of living nature? How can nature and transformative processes including human consciousness serve as a model and analog for the design of human environments that, like nature, live off solar income, create no wastes, and provide biodiversity?

This workshop is for anyone interested in the principles of creating whole, healthy environments. The group will examine ways to weave basic natural processes and cycles — food and energy production, waste and water recycling — into the design of everyday life in homes, neighborhoods, and cities, thus reuniting production, consumption, and reuse in ways that inform and develop a new ecologically-based aesthetic. The instructor will illustrate with examples from his own architectural and sustainable design practice.

The Esalen environment will be used as a study site to examine design opportunities and our own awareness of environmental processes and the many possibilities for living in harmony with them. $740

Stepping into Your Body of Light
Julian Isaacs & Patricia Fields

"Lightbody activation" is a path that helps individuals work consciously with their own subtle energy systems, utilizing the healing and transformative powers of transpersonal energies to refine the energy centers of the body. Lightbody activation synthesizes many sources, including kundalini yoga, depth psychology, and the teachings of Aurobindo and Mother Mirra. These practices can catalyze the growth process, facilitating the release of old emotional and somatic patterns, thus extending the work of self-healing to all levels, from the physical body to the emotional, mental, and soul domains.

Participants will be shown how to differentiate among various energies and their applications, including the use of altered states of concern for the writing of new poems in an atmosphere of encouragement and adventure. The focus will be on the new poems written during the weekend and where they can lead us. There will be individual conference times as well as group meetings. The goal will be to help each other bring forth something fresh and alive from deep inside. Beginners as well as experienced writers are encouraged to apply.

Sharon Olds teaches in the Graduate Creative Writing Program of New York University. She has been a San Francisco Poetry Center Award, a National Book Critics’ Circle Award, a Lamont Award from the Academy of American Poets, and grants from the NEA and the Guggenheim Foundation.

To apply, please send a letter with your name and address, and between three and five pages of your poems, typed (no dot-matrix, please). Do not include a SASE; applications will not be returned. Send them to Sharon Olds, c/o Esalen Institute, Big Sur CA, 93920. Your poems must be received no later than July 15, 1994. Participants will be notified of their acceptance into the workshop on August 1, 1994.

The MAX: Stretching the Limits of Your Self-Expression
Paula Shaw
"The MAX" is an outrageous voyage through your own humanity — a journey to turn yourself inside out and explore the extent of your self-expressive power. It employs a variety of acting, observation, and communication methods designed to expand your limits "to the max" and move you into a new arena of personal creativity and self-expression.

Until recently offered only to Esalen's in-house community, "The MAX" is extremely challenging. Participants must commit to a rigorous exploration of the sources of their emotional limitations. Seminar hours will be longer than usual early in the week (and shorter later in the week). Participants will work individually in front of the group, playing to and with other members of the group. There will be exercises that use raw emotion, role-playing, and "dress-up" assignments.

This workshop is an opportunity to experience yourself in a way you may have dreamed about but never imagined possible. The game is risk, the premise: 'You're either daring or dead, and the most unsafe thing you can do in life is to play it safe. Clearly, this course is not for the faint of heart, but it is full of heart, humor, and irreverence, and is constructed with the understanding that this kind of risk-taking requires a very safe workspace.

"The MAX" is a thrilling celebration of who you are — light side, dark side, all of you. If your heart beats faster when you think of taking this workshop, then maybe it's just the thing to do. Come play!

Please note: Due to the intense and sequential nature of this workshop, attendance at all sessions is necessary.
Required: A 1-2 minute memorized piece — monologue, poem, passage, song, etc. $740

A Course in Miracles
Julian Silverman
A Course in Miracles is a curriculum for changing your mind so that you can enjoy life. Its basic premise is that the mind can learn to empower itself by learning to extend itself. According to the Course, "All confusion comes from not extending life."

In this workshop the vision of A Course in Miracles is set within a framework of three of its critical ideas. Each one is introduced with a quote which spotlights a basic human learning need:

1. "Instruction in perception is your greatest need."
2. "You do not know the meaning of love and that is your handicap."
3. "Your task is not to seek love, but merely to seek and find all the barriers within yourself that you have built against it."

Julian Silverman elaborates, "The first dovetails with my years of scientific research in the area of perception, in both the normal state and in altered states of consciousness. The second fits with my lifelong search for a conception of love which integrates the spiritual and the physical. The third enables me to draw on my more than twenty years of experience as a psychotherapist and supervisor of psychotherapists, and my abiding interest in spiritually-based self-examination."

The workshop uses a combination of conceptual and experiential learning methods.
Prerequisites: Own a copy of A Course in Miracles. Be interested in learning what's in it.

Five-Day Lomi Intensive
Kathryn Lydecker, Johanna Putnoi & Robert Sanoff

In the formative years of life, human beings learn to embody the beliefs and posture of their individual family system and the culture into which they are born. Many individuals unconsciously continue to shape their lives in reaction to these influences, often at the expense of their own creativity and vitality.

The aim of this workshop will be for participants to observe how they feel, think, and move themselves through life. By attending to bodily-felt experience, moment to moment, and by distinguishing between sensation and thinking, the path to reclaiming one's authentic self opens. Through this process of developing awareness, it is possible to make responsible choices in daily life and to live with integrity and gentleness.

This workshop provides an arena for developing mindful awareness and for unmasking habits that keep us from ourselves and hinder relationships. Lomi work includes meditation, movement, gestalt, aikido, and Reichian work.

Drawing the Mystic Light of Nature

Judith Cornell

Experience an initiation into the consciousness of Nature through meditative drawing and gentle nature walks. This workshop combines knowledge of integral yoga and shamanic art with esoteric skills of working with the subtle energies of plants. In the beautiful natural setting of Esalen Institute, participants will explore the gardens in a new way by working collaboratively with the flower and vegetable kingdoms to see and draw the inner light.

The workshop offers instruction in making a sacred connection to Nature by learning how to see and draw from an integral perspective. One's inner vision will be integrated with the outer physical perception of the colored lights reflecting from the surface of flowers and vegetables; this integration is then captured on paper as enchanted, luminous images. Innovative color theory will be given for blending rainbow-colored pencils to create radiant, vibrant works. There will be emphasis on understanding Nature as a living being.

The foundation of this workshop is a convergence of art, science, ecology, and spirituality, drawing from the Eastern yoga traditions rooted in the mystery of light, sound, and consciousness as the matrix of all existence. This workshop is a practicum in applied ecopsychology to reconcile the experience of Nature's consciousness with the scientific worldview.

This workshop is designed to accommodate those with or without previous art backgrounds or drawing skills. Participants should bring a notebook, a drawing board or smooth masonite board (approximately 18" x 18") with a large clip and rubber band to hold drawing paper, and a quality hand-held pencil sharpener. They may also bring any Berol Prismacolor drawing pencils they have.

Self-Empowerment and Purification: The Farther Reaches of Gestalt

Julian Silverman

"We badly need a new orientation, a new perspective," wrote Fritz Perls. "We have graduated from the infants', 'I can't help myself,' to the adults', 'I can't help myself because...'" But psychology and psychiatry were never meant to be after-the-fact justifications for continuing neurotic behavior, behavior which does not permit the individual to live up to the maximum of his capacities."

In his autobiography, Perls speculated that a new form of psychotherapy would emerge and that it would entail some kind of cleansing or purification process. He was not clear, however, how it would work. In actuality, he had prepared the way quite well for the next form.

In this workshop the boundaries of the "next form" are defined and examined using both didactic and experiential sessions. Two interrelated processes are emphasized: the first, a purification process, has the purpose of "washing the slate clean" of mental debris; the second has the purpose of identifying a personal center from which to act with power.

Introductory Workshop Principle #1: Take responsibility for every emotion, every movement you make, every thought you have.

The Ten Great Questions of Life

Jacob Needleman

Philosophy is the art of pondering the great questions of life, questions which the mind alone cannot answer nor the heart cease asking: Why do we suffer? How should we live? What can we hope for?

This workshop will identify and develop the ten basic questions of life which, taken together, define the whole search for life's meaning. Participants will discover why it is essential to go on pondering these "questions of the heart" and learn how great philosophers throughout the ages have responded to these questions.

An important aspect of the workshop will be to demonstrate that deeply felt philosophical inquiry can form the basis of a whole new dimension of friendship, mutual caring, and virtue. ($380)

Ethics in the Workplace: Living Your Values Without Losing Your Job

Sue McKibbin

Every day in the workplace, situations arise that intermingle the competing pressures of individual integrity, organizational interest, and the greater good. The modern workplace has become an ethical minefield—full of demands and questions for which there are few clear, black-and-white answers. Workers are continually expected to act in ways that put some people at a great advantage over others.

Finding one's way through these shades of gray is a formidable personal and professional challenge. This workshop will offer participants the insights and strategies they need to thrive in organizational settings without compromising their principles or sacrificing their careers.

Using guided imagery, group discussion, individual analysis, and teamwork, participants will reaffirm their deepest personal values, identify the ethical dilemmas they face at work, and discover ways to bridge the two. This exploration will help each individual connect with his or her own base of integrity and power to act from that place—both on and off the job.

The Nine Ways of Zhikr Ritual Ecstatic Movement

Michael Kramer & Martha Crawford

In both Sufism and Hasidic Judaism, repeating the name of God and the declaration of the Unity of God is a direct method for attaining liberated consciousness. Zhikr comes from the Sufi tradition and means "to repeat the name of God."

The Nine Ways of Zhikr Ritual is a powerful ceremony utilizing movement, breath, and voice in a ritualized manner in order to produce a state of ecstasy. Ecstasy in this context is that moment when consciousness becomes a single point without movement, while the Zhikr itself continues with the full force of its movement.

The Arica Zhikr is a one-hour ceremony comprised of nine distinct movements and mantras in which one repeats the name of God. Primarily the chant is "Toham Kum Rah," which is a name for the Divine Sparkle inside every human being. The ceremony is an exercise in deep and repetitive breathing that... enables those who perform it to absorb with maximum effect the vital energy surrounding us. This exercise then allows an experience of a state of awakened consciousness.

Participants will learn the techniques and movements of the Zhikr on Friday night and Saturday. Sunday morning the group will perform the full ceremony and Zhikr ritual itself as the conclusion of this weekend together.

The Nine Ways of Zhikr Ritual™ is a service mark of Arica Institute, Inc. $380

Meditation: An Alchemical Process of Integration
Robert Nadeau
Many people use meditation as a means of escape. Others have difficulty even getting started. For meditation to be truly effective, it must be integrated into every aspect of our lives — personal, professional, social, and athletic, as well as spiritual.

In today's high-tech, multifaceted world, we're faced with a myriad of daily challenges and opportunities, each calling forth different energies in our system. Often we resist these energies and find ourselves leading lives of angst and incompletion. Through meditation, we can directly experience and blend these various energies in an alchemical process of transforming common everyday material into gold, expanding our definition of ourselves and our experience of the world.

In this workshop, Robert Nadeau will combine meditation with functional centering, grounding, movement, and energy awareness in an alchemical process of integration. $740

Awakening Vision through Conscious Photography
Jeff Berner
Here was room enough for the imagination to work.
— Mark Twain

Whether you are starting out in photography as an advanced beginner, explore nature, people, and wildlife through the "mirror with a memory." This workshop will show how to follow the path of photography as a meditation, a hobby, and an art. Without technical jargon, learn how to make your camera serve your personal vision.

Author of five books in the field, the leader will help discover each individual's talent and provide a continuous flow of "Aha!" experiences with an informal, spontaneous teaching style. Turn looking into really seeing — and snapshotting into fine photography.

Easy-going projects include: The Psychology of Lenses, The Selective Eye (Composition), Looking at Seeing, A Still Life is Still Life, Depth of Field, The Click that "Kills," Creative Accidents, Visual Meditation, and Uses of Color. There will be creative critiques of each participant's work. The group will shoot and talk by day, and show and tell by night. There will be nonstrenuous photography safaris, including a morning at Pfeiffer Beach. The final evening will feature a group celebration of the projected results in a multimedia show.

The workshop will emphasize the use of color slide film, so that participants can see their day's work projected on an eight-foot-wide screen each evening. What is taught can be fully applied to all future photography, both print and slide. Bring at least 5 rolls of 36-exposure Fujichrome and/or Ektachrome slide film, rated ISO 100 or 200, plus $8 per roll for overnight processing. Any working 35MM SLR camera will be adequate; recent Pentax, Minolta, Canon, and Nikon models are recommended.

You can call Jeff Berner to discuss the workshop at 707-878-2000, weekdays, 9AM to 3PM Pacific Time. $740

Trigger Point and Esalen Massage
Arthur Munyer & C.J. Bradbury
Trigger point, the movement of myofascial tissue through soft, deep contact with pressure points, and Esalen massage are methods of working with the body that can help the practitioner contact areas of tension, chronically troubled areas, toxins, and trauma from connective tissue. This workshop will combine these techniques, along with joint release, movement, and studies in anatomy.

This workshop is designed for bodyworkers, physicians, physical therapists, chiropractors, health care practitioners, and individuals with some massage experience who want to expand their hands-on skills and awareness. As such it will also address concerns of burnout, nurturing, creativity, and peer support for those who have chosen a demanding profession.

Arthur Munyer adds, "The human body is a rich source of information and intelligence. I've experienced, after 20 years of doing bodywork and trigger point, that being present and sensitive to the deep feelings of sadness and the unheard feelings of the inner child are the most important areas of my work."

C.E. credit is available; see pages 60-61. $740

Melting the Frozen Heart
Rachel Harris
The leader writes, "In order to survive and make our way in the world, we develop defense mechanisms, rigid patterns of thinking, feeling, and behaving. We denigrate, dissociate, or sacrifice parts of ourselves during early childhood experiences, chronically stressful situations, or traumatic events. We then mistakenly assume we need to continue these limiting ways of being to maintain who we think we are.

"This workshop is about softening, melting, opening. We will create a safe opportunity to take a break from our self-creations and explore who we are underneath the personality structures we have worked to construct and maintain.

"An integrated approach using body awareness, breathing, creative expression, and dyadic exercises will be used with the intent of gently lifting off the layers covering our hearts and eyes. The opportunity is to stop being who we think we have to be and develop the process of who we might become. This workshop is for those who seek to become more objective about themselves and to increase their psychological freedom." $740

Healing From Our Spiritual Roots On Up: A Christian-Jewish Dialogue
Rabbi Leah Novick & Brother David Steindl-Rast

"If not now, when?"

Almost 50 percent of American Jews marrying in the 1980s wedded partners from Christian backgrounds. There is growing contact between churches and synagogues. In important areas of public life, Christians and Jews closely interact. It is increasingly important today to be open-minded toward the religious convictions of others. Has this situation led to a deeper understanding of the two spiritual traditions? Has it led to a progressive dilution of both?
Transpersonal Medicine

Jeanne Achterberg & Frank Lawlis

The concept of transpersonal medicine has been coined from two fields of study, transpersonal psychology and medicine. Transpersonal medicine is healing from beyond the self, and recognizes that there are many resources beyond what we consider our consensual reality. This definition honors the integration of many eras of health care, expanding to include the ancient practices of shamanic work as well as the contemporary frontiers of psychoneuroimmunology and imagery.

This workshop will present many of the doors to alternate realities and specific avenues for accessing the wisdoms that lie just beyond the boundaries of the limits of self. Altered states of consciousness, ritual, advanced imagery techniques, the experience of community through joy, and transcendence are the basic topics for presentation. The workshop is designed to be primarily experiential with clinical applications for dealing with physical and mental problems from a professional perspective.

Reinhabiting Your Body:
An Experience in Authentic Movement

Tina Stromstød

“Authentic Movement” is a meditative form of dance influenced by the psychology of C.G. Jung. This workshop offers a structure within which natural movement can bloom and be nurtured, allowing individuals to discover ways to engage their creativity and make soulful self-contact.

The body is the mediator for all of life’s experiences. Our bodies form our closest link to the unconscious, providing avenues for deep and lasting change. If we are locked into a muscular pattern held around a specific image, this can determine not only how we move but how we live. Uncovering images of the self that may have locked us into painful or dissatisfying ways of living can help us to heal wounds and find freedom of expression.

Through moving and witnessing in a safe space, participants in this workshop may explore their own inner dance as it unfolds. Body-related issues, unresolved developmental material, preverbal memories, and transpersonal experiences may emerge, leading toward integration and wholeness.

Designed for mental health professionals, educators, artists, and those interested in personal growth, this experiential process aids participants in bridging body and psyche through expressive movement.

The Future of the Self

Bruce Gregory

"In the future," writes Bruce Gregory, "the self will represent those resources aligned with the rhythms of nature, resources which reflect the natural cycles of the unconscious and the natural rhythms of learning. These rhythms will respect, appreciate, and honor the integration of the curiosity and joy of the child, the archetype of the hero, and the forces of nature—sun, wind, and water—which reflect the role of time."

This workshop will assist participants in recognizing and exploring the skills to address and disengage from the self-defeating patterns of the false self and the traumas of the past. Following this, participants will explore aligning with the principles of time, their own natural circadian rhythms, by contacting and developing a trusting relationship with the unconscious in order to access the resources of the core self. Adds the leader, "This alignment to the natural rhythm of time, without which we fight our own being, is the essence of healing."

The tools utilized to support the process include metaphor, gestalt, role-playing, and music; curiosity to engage the unconscious and the resources of the core self; and challenges to the patterns of the false self which facilitate a realignment with the natural rhythms of time. $380

Quantum Reality

Nick Herbert

More than fifty years ago Werner Heisenberg and his colleagues discovered a way of thinking about the physical world that has been immensely successful at dealing with natural phenomena at all scales from quark to big bang. Quantum theory, in the words of physicist Heinz Pagels, seems to be the universe’s “cosmic code,” the correct language, or a dialect of that language, in which nature can be fruitfully addressed by humans.

Participants will examine aspects of the physical world that have been rendered transparent by this new language as well as mysteries left unsolved, and explore possible applications of quantum thinking to other areas such as psychology and human relationships. Of particular interest is what quantum thinking might add to the issues of spontaneity, our perception of other people, and new models for human connectedness.

Focusing to Release Blocks to Action

Ann Weiser Cornell

Writer's block, procrastination, being a pack rat, the inability to get organized—all these are action blocks. Most people experience the pain of an action block at times; for some, the struggle dominates their lives.

This workshop teaches how to use Focusing, a gentle, powerful process of bodily attention, to release the dynamic that holds the action block in place. It presents a three-step process for communicating with your stuck places and allowing them to let go. This includes releasing the inner critic and learning how to listen nonjudgmentally to the action block. The goal is an action plan that you know you can carry forward because it feels right in your body, enabling you to move toward your goals more easily and confidently.

Based on research into successful psychotherapy, Focusing is a body-oriented technique shown to correlate with positive life change, enhanced self-esteem, and the experience of integration and wholeness. Those who aren’t familiar with the Focusing process can begin to learn it and use it immediately. Those who are familiar with it can go even deeper. Helping professionals can learn powerful tools for working with clients.

Handwriting Patterns: Possibilities for Healing and Change
Vimala Rodgers

From birth we listen to teachers, parents, friends, and relatives, and we interpret what they say about us. We begin to believe that this is who we really are, and shape our personality accordingly. As a result, we create a belief system that often prevents us from utilizing our natural resources. All of this is clearly reflected in our handwriting, which child psychologist William Preyer calls "brainwriting." When we write, each stroke of the pen not only reveals our personality, it reinforces it. A resentful person cannot write like a compassionate person, and vice versa. The brain won’t allow it.

Conventional handwriting analysis is the study and interpretation of writing patterns. This workshop in applied graphotherapy goes a step further and focuses on altering specific writing patterns as a means of restructuring and unlearning old beliefs and imprinting new ones that can expand our potential beyond what we imagine. Graphotherapy provides a powerful model of the mind and a set of behavioral tools that allow us to unlock some of the hidden mechanisms of our belief systems.

Participants will learn how to identify both limiting and expansive belief patterns in their writing, and will be given personalized stroke or letter changes that reinforce self-esteem and create the possibility of uncovering long-hidden talents and abilities.

Leela: No-Mind Teaching for Helping Professionals
Eli Jaxon-Bear

The personal entity which identifies its existence with life in the physical body and calls itself "I" is the ego. The physical body, which is inherently inert, has no ego sense. The Self, which is pure consciousness, has no ego sense. Between these two there mysteriously arises the ego sense, which is the "I" thought. This ego, or separate personal identity, is at the root of all suffering in life. Therefore it is to be destroyed by any means possible. This is Liberation or Enlightenment, or Self-Realization.

— RAMANA MAHARSHI

Eli Jaxon-Bear writes, “Leela is a Sanskrit word meaning 'the divine play of Self.' The tools of hypnosis, the Enneagram of Character Fixation, and Neurolinguistic Programming (NLP) will be used in the context of awakening from the trance of personal suffering. While anyone can attend and benefit from this workshop, the format is set in a client-therapist relationship. The depth of the therapist's awakening will be the ground for the possibility of the client. The techniques of therapy will be presented in such a way that the therapist is led to direct realization of Truth — that the ego doesn’t exist. In this way the structure of the trance of 'me' and 'mine' becomes obvious. Once the structure of egoic mind is known and experienced, the trance can be successfully modified, as in ego-strengthening, or finally ended.

Almost all therapy aims at a healthy functioning ego. Yet it is this ego that is the root of suffering. If you have had enough ego-strengthening and are hungry for what is beyond ego, then you are ready for the possibility of living in what the Zen and Taoist traditions call "no-mind" — the possibility of Leela is the end of suffering."

The Power of Voice
Arthur Samuel Joseph

This workshop introduces a method called Vocal Awareness, which includes vocalizing, sound meditation, movement, song study, and development of the speaking voice as a means for deepening contact with the self. Participants will work individually and in groups exploring breathing, toning, and a cappella and accompanied vocalizing with poetry, sonnets, and songs.

Vocal Awareness is an art form that addresses in precise ways how language affects the brain. It is now well-known in the field of psychoneuroimmunology that endorphins are released by the brain in response to verbal cues and visual imagery. Research also points to a strong correlation between language, breath, and psychophysical response. Knowing this, developing one’s own language becomes a means for self-integration.

The aim of the workshop is to explore the voice as metaphor, to tap into issues of self-expression and self-esteem, and to have fun while developing vocal abilities. It is valuable for lay people and professionals alike, and is open to beginners through advanced.

Please note: Tape recorders are required.

Living with Intuitive Wisdom
Nancy Rosanoff & Judith Alexander

Intuition is a valuable resource that remains inaccessible to many people. This workshop will help participants to discover, develop, and trust their intuition, and to understand how emotional wounds have affected their capacity to access inner wisdom. Understanding the impact of difficult life experiences can assist in clarifying the specific and personal ways each individual connects to and disconnects from her/his intuition.

Intuitive knowing happens when physical and emotional feelings are trusted and validated. Distorted perceptions can cloud both what we feel and our ability to trust our intuitive experience. The workshop will provide opportunities for participants to connect with their intuition and discover what memories, experiences, and beliefs are preventing their inner knowing from translating into action. With the emotional support and safety provided in this workshop, intuitive wisdom will become more available to respond to a variety of life situations, such as decision-making, intimate relationships, and career and lifestyle choices.

Through guided imagery, writing, drawing, interactive exercises, group process, and personal sharing, participants can find their intuitive "muscle," build strong and healthy emotional connections, and integrate both to strengthen their intuitive wisdom. The workshop will provide ample opportunity for participants to practice using their intuition, thereby increasing confidence in their own particular intuitive style. $740

Psychosynthesis: Personal and Transpersonal Growth
John Firman & Ann Russell

Psychosynthesis was born in 1910 when the Italian psychiatrist Roberto Assagioli became dissatisfied with psychoanalysis. Although Assagioli was a colleague of Freud and Jung and an early pioneer of psychoanalysis in Italy, he saw that psychoanalysis neglected the healthier and "higher" aspects of human nature.

A student of philosophical and spiritual traditions of both East and West, Assagioli sought instead an approach which would address not only psychological wounding and personal development, but, in addition, the "transpersonal" dimension — the dimension of inspired creativity, altruistic ideals, and peak experiences. Since that time, psychosynthesis has grown to become a compassionate and comprehensive psychology of the whole person, providing the practical means for examining one's life and for discovering how to grow more fully into one's true self.

This workshop will be an experiential overview of the theory and practice of psychosynthesis. It is an invitation to explore the heights and depths of human being, including subpersonality or "ego-state" work; object relations and family-of-origin issues; the superconscious and transpersonal self; and the experience of "vocation" or "call" in life. The intention is to gain a deeper feel for our unique psychological and spiritual journey, to get a sense for what our next steps on this journey might be, and, most essentially, to find a greater compassion for ourselves and others.

Rekindling the Spirit in Work
Howard Schecter & Barbara Lee

"Rekindling the Spirit in Work" is about reconnecting with yourself and the work you do. Through creative exercises and sharing with the group, you can gain clarity about your goals in work, the skills required to reach those goals, and a deeper awareness of your strengths. The process can help you to confront and dissolve major blocks to rewarding work and to integrate who you are with what you do. This process is far more effective than narrowly focused vocational perspectives. The emphasis is on the question "Who is working?" From an identification with our highest self, what we do can flow more easily and be a direct expression in the world of who we are inside.

This workshop is for people who are beginning new careers, in transition, dissatisfied, or simply bored with their work. Participants often come away with a sense of clarity and purpose, and seldom feel the need to make radical shifts in their job or profession. Rather, the subtle inner adjustments of identity, attitude, and perspective create greater job satisfaction and offer direction for taking the next steps in work.

The Clean Cut: The Art of Bokken
Erik Van Riswold

For the striking sword, there is no mind.

— ANONYMOUS

For the true warrior, the sword is not intended to cut another but rather to cut away one's own demons: fear, anger, hesitation, doubt. The sword is a powerful tool for bringing together mind, body, and spirit through concentrated practice and clear intention.

Participants will use the Japanese wooden sword or bokken (bō-'ken). They will practice balancing and centering through movement, and then learn to deliver clean, decisive, and loving strikes. Solo movements as well as partner practice will show how formal technique can lead to increased spontaneity and inspiration. Through noncompetitive and noncombative sword work/play, the participant can experience building, focusing, and extending energy. Sword "play" brings one into the present moment, leading to experiences which are enlivening, empowering, and fun. The sword "serves to sever the edge between before and after" (Takuan Soho, 17th century Zen monk).

This workshop is designed for people with little or no martial arts experience as well as those who would like to broaden their practice. The workshop will be active but not overly strenuous, with periods of gentle stretching and meditation throughout.

Although this is a martial arts weapons class, it is based on the principles of aikido: peace, harmony, and concern for the welfare of others. All practice is done in the spirit of love, cooperation, and enjoyment.

Bokkens will be provided on loan, or for sale at $20. $380

The Awakened Mind: Brainwave Training
Anna Wise

Inside each person there lives a wealth of knowledge, capacities, and power rarely transmitted to the conscious mind. Brainwave training combined with meditation and biofeedback monitoring helps develop these deeper resources, allowing access to greater creativity, reduced stress, and a deeper awareness and understanding of the inner self.

By assessing the brainwave patterns of hundreds of people who function unusually well, C. Maxwell Cade of the Institute for Psychobiological Research in London began to see similarities in the patterns of optimal states of mind. Drawing upon Cade's work, Anna Wise has developed a training program to help access these optimum states.

Different methods of meditation, visualization, and psychophysiological relaxation affect our brainwaves in particular ways, as do specific acts such as tongue, eye, and body positions. In this workshop you will learn techniques for brainwave development and management, and begin to determine which methods of practice are best for your particular brainwave pattern. You will also address how you can use these optimum states once you are achieved for your own creativity, mental flexibility, self-healing, problem solving, and spiritual development. The Mind Mirror EEG will be used to demonstrate brainwave patterns, and each participant will be able to use an Electrical Skin Resistance Meter to measure the depth of arousal or relaxation of the nervous system.

The Dark Cabinet of the Heart
Kathleen Riordan Speeth

The weekend will be a contemplation of personal history. In rummaging through the crucial moments in one's emotional life, it is possible to discern and cherish genuine feelings. For whom and what have I honestly cared? Where have I invested my deep self? Every torso, whether it holds a man's or a woman's heart, contains a dark cabinet full of mysteries. Treasures from childhood, shards of lovesickness, cameos of joy, fading photographs, and melting grudges are tossed together in this cabinet with other bittersweet reminiscences too private to reveal — perhaps even to oneself — and, regrettably, with much that is counterfeit.

Using gestalt, structured interaction, journalizing, poetry, and music, the group will explore what life has been and what we hope it could be. No one will be pressured to disclose anything unless it is freely wished. The aim is self-understanding. The hope is skillful relating that reflects one's innermost truth. Stendahl, Rilke, Orage, and Schumann will guide and comfort us.

At the end of this time together, group members will have cleaned, polished, and ordered some of the contents of the heart's dark cabinet and will conceivably be a little able to love with authenticity and good humor — and pleasure. $380

Intuition, Perception, and Altered States of Consciousness: Extending the Boundaries of Human Experience
Keith Harary & Darlene Moore

Most of us have had experiences in which we appeared to be aware of information that was not immediately available to our five familiar senses. Such experiences usually emerge spontaneously and can range from simple hunches, to feeling in touch with a loved one at a distance, to premonitions in which we seem to be inexplicably aware of impending events. Labeling such experiences "psychic" does not explain them, but makes this fundamentally normal aspect of human awareness appear to be some sort of occult or supernatural process. Yet such experiences most likely emerge out of a deep interconnectedness between consciousness and the physical world that is entirely natural. They are part of a broad continuum of altered states, transpersonal and other experiences that allow us to transcend the boundary between conscious, waking reality and the innermost self.

Specific techniques of extended perception will be taught in order to allow this capacity to become a consciously available resource in your everyday life, rather than a strictly spontaneous phenomenon. Starting with the basics of learning how to manage mental impressions, participants will practice separating their most relevant feelings and images from various forms of "mental noise" in a variety of extended perception scenarios. A more advanced technique that involves using your own "mental noise" to help guide your intuition will also be taught so you can develop your own inner language for processing intuitive information. Additional exercises will focus on exploring specific techniques for inducing lucid dreams and out-of-body experiences, and for consciously connecting with the broader transpersonal continuum that lies just beyond the threshold of ordinary awareness.

Pilobolus Technique: Choreographic Creation
Jonathan Wolken

Since its first appearance, Pilobolus Dance Theatre has been a pioneer in American contemporary dance, creating its own unique method of choreography. This workshop is based on Pilobolus's evolving understanding of technique as a creative collaborative process. Dance is approached not as an inflexible physical regime but as an expressive medium for people of all ages, backgrounds, and levels of experience.

Taught by Pilobolus founder Jonathan Wolken, this workshop will focus on the choreographic process that makes movement the powerful means of expression it truly is. The group will investigate the lively mixture of form and flow, abstraction and theatricality, strength, force, and balance that define the realm of dance.

Participants will explore a wide variety of movement through improvisation and will choreograph a number of short dances. It will be an opportunity to indulge in the incredible panorama of human motion.

Extensive dance training is not necessary, although a reasonable degree of fitness is advised. Participants should be willing to be physically energetic and enthusiastic. $740

Cortical Reeducation® and the Feldenkrais Method®
Harriet Goslins & Patti (Lawrence) White

The habitual way a person sits, stands, or moves reflects patterns that are "wired in" to the nervous system. This information can be erased or changed. By reeducating the brain-muscle connection, restrictions in movement are freed, freeing also the lifetime habits that have organized around that movement.

This work is a relearning of the ease and fluidity that was taken for granted as a child and lost somewhere along the way. Physical injury, emotional trauma, or ongoing stress all evoke a protective response from the body. These patterns, necessary at the time, remain when no longer needed, outside of awareness, and continue to cause discomfort and unnecessary limitations. Freeing them results in relief of chronic pain or tightness, a more restful sleep, and a higher energy level. By changing muscular holding patterns, the entire protective posture is altered, deeply affecting the body's habitual defense system. Thus, new movement possibilities mean new self-image possibilities.
Fears and anxieties have corresponding muscular habits. Verbal information, no matter how brilliant, or spiritual practice that fails to extinguish these muscular habits may fail to totally eliminate the toxic behavior.

This workshop is for those who are physically active and fit and want to increase their skills while learning to reduce risk or injury; for the sedentary or those dealing with after-effects of injuries; for the athlete, the dancer, and those who "live in their heads;" for individuals who feel chronically tired and stressed and want to learn how to take better care of their neck, shoulders, and back; and for those who want to improve their posture and breathing and live with more flexibility and comfort.

Ritual: Finding Our Way Home

Malidoma Patrice Somé & Brother David Steindl-Rast

Everyone longs to belong. Yet in the cold society we have created we live as aliens. Vital relationships freeze into alienation. We have somehow lost our way home, and in our exile from home we have even forgotten what we mean by home. Alienation debilitates our relationships, our self-understanding, and our orientation with an ultimate horizon.

Ritual provides the resourceful means by which earlier and healthier cultures found their way home to community, wholeness, empowerment, and ultimate belonging. Even here and now in our disenchanted world it is still possible to revive our instinct for ritual. It is this innate power of the soul which Malidoma Patrice Somé and Brother David Steindl-Rast will explore with participants in this workshop.

Malidoma is at home in the ritual world of his Dagara ancestors of Burkina Faso, West Africa; Brother David, a Benedictine, is at home in the ritual world of his ancient monastic tradition. They will bring these two worlds face-to-face with each other and with our world of disenchantment. Presentations, interactions, and group activities will have one goal: to awaken that dormant sense for ritual which is the healing instinct of the soul.

Psychoneuroimmunology and Its Implications

George Solomon & Margaret Kemeny

The rapidly developing field of psychoneuroimmunology (PNI) is concerned with the nature of complex interactions between the central nervous system and the immune system. The central nervous system mediates stress effects, coping, emotions, and other psychological processes that, by way of the immune system, affect the onset and course of many diseases.

Healing the Heart

Julie Bowden & Richard Balaban

This five-day workshop will be a journey into the vulnerable, tender part of the self that carries childhood traumas. Experiencing and integrating the pain from our past allows us to live more fully in relationship to ourselves and others, and helps us to acknowledge and nurture our inner voice. Enhancing intimacy and relationship skills is an important part of this work. Issues specific to both men and women will be explored.

We welcome adult children of alcoholic and dysfunctional families, people with a history of unfulfilling relationships, recovering alcoholics and addicts, codependents, and treatment providers. Participants are asked to forego alcohol and other mood-altering, nonprescription drugs for these five days. This will help create an atmosphere of safety, care, and respect for core issues to emerge, an environment to facilitate transformation.

If there is unresolved pain from your past or relationship issues in your present, this workshop is designed for you. $740

The Way of The Orisa

Philip John Neimark & Vassa Neimark

For 8,000 years the magical energy of the Orisa (Nature) has provided followers with practical instructions for improving both their spiritual and temporal lives. Recently this ancient African philosophy has made its way to the Western world with its universal message of the inherent partnership between the spiritual and practical aspects of our lives.

While monotheistic, Orisa worship is based upon our intimate relationship with nature and the energies therein. Although chiefly human, we embody small quantities of the same energies that exist in our larger body, the universe. Within each of us live the tree, the lion, the bird, the rock, and so on, and through the rituals of Orisa we can learn to connect our tiny amount of energy with the overwhelming energy offered by its counterpart in nature. In so doing we can make dramatic changes in our everyday lives. By focusing the energy of the Orisa we can address such issues as finding the right companion, improving health, and opening to opportunities we were unaware of. Indeed, Orisa teaches that, except for the day we are born and the day we are supposed to die, there is no event which cannot be forecast and, when necessary, changed.

Participants will learn about the different Orisa and their characteristics, including: Osun — Orisa of love, money, conception, and sweet waters; Obatala — Orisa of the head, skeleton, justice, and clarity; Yemonja-Olukun, Orisa of motherhood, nurturing, wealth and contentment; plus many others from the ancient Yoruba pantheon of energy. Group members will discover which Orisa "crowns their heads" and what that means in their lives. The workshop will teach the history, rituals, and ways of using the energy of the Orisa in daily life.

Self-Esteem through Endarkenment: Gain with No Pain
Will Schutz

The technology developed by Will Schutz in his "Endarkenment" workshops will be used for the first time in a specific area — self-esteem. One of the goals of the workshop will be to challenge the philosophy, "No pain — no gain." Like at least — those that reduce your self-esteem — it is possible to grow a great deal watching yourself playing your games. By exaggerating these parts, analyzing them, even teaching the other workshop members how to do them really well, new and more effective patterns can emerge. And this can happen without pain. It can be done with joy and excitement. From this viewpoint, participants will work in-depth on self-esteem.

Pre-homework: Practice your defenses — denier, critic, victim, helper, demander, intellectualizer, etc. Come prepared to demonstrate how a real pro performs them!

Proprioceptive Writing: Demystifying the Creative Process
Linda Trichter-Metcalf & Tobin Simon

"Proprioception" is a physiological term for kinesthetic sensation — feelings that originate in the body's interior. Proprioceptive Writing is a method through which inner intelligence is stimulated: meaning is approached through feeling. The originators of this method will lead participants in an experiential exploration of a simple yet richly subtle method of writing that demystifies the initial stages of the creative process. Proprioceptive Writing is practiced to music in 25-minute sessions under stress-free conditions, either in groups or alone. This process releases the writer from the painful pressure to produce form, it feels fluent, like meaning in motion. It lets you enter your own mind and forget the world.

This workshop is valuable for people who are seeking a form of written expression, a creative ritual, or a meditative discipline, and also for those who desire increased focus and personal meaning in their lives.

The Eastern Path to Long-Term Fulfillment
George Leonard

We've tried them all — the fast weight-loss diets, the shortcuts to enlightenment, the "ten easy steps" to wealth, wisdom, and a perfect sex life. One by one, we've seen the shortcuts fail, leaving us empty and disillusioned. At the same time, we've witnessed our entire nation brought close to bankruptcy by this same short-term thinking.

Now, at last, the news is in: The quick fix doesn't work. Long-term fulfillment takes long-term dedication. Success eventually comes not from obsessively pursuing short-term goals, but from living fully in the present and dedicating yourself to a never ending path of mastery. At best, you follow this path not so much for hope of achievement as for its own sake, because it represents the best of who you are. And that, paradoxically, is what often produces the highest achievement.

This workshop combines ancient Eastern wisdom with recent Western research to map a journey of self-development that is revolutionary for these times. Through lecture, discussion, and simple movement exercises inspired by the Japanese art of aikido, participants will be introduced to the basic mastery principles that apply to all non-trivial skills, whether one seeks to play tennis or play the...

Everyone dreams. If you've ever wondered about your dreams, or forgotten your dreams because they seem so real you're sure you'll remember, or only remembered your nightmares, this workshop is for you.

Dreams are candid. They are like a wonderful friend whose love allows you to look in places you fear. This friend will never desert you, will show you strengths you don't know you already have, and will teach you how to return to the freedom of your true self.

In this workshop, group members will tell their dreams and draw dream mandalas. No drawing skill is necessary, as participants will be drawing like children and dreamers with the hand not used for writing.

There will also be meditation periods, gestalt awareness exercises, and creative activities which will enhance the ability to share your deepest longings and concerns.

Couples Workshop
Jack Rosenberg & Beverly Kitaen Morse

Most couples are reluctant to seek help in their relationships. Instead they wait, hoping that the relationship will improve. If couples approached medical help the same way they approach marriage counseling, many of them would visit the doctor when they ought to be lining up at the mortician.

Designed on a preventive model, this workshop will deal with the underlying structures and defenses in relationships before they surface as terminal problems. It will also examine attitudes and beliefs about sexuality and how to make sex better.

Movement and Touch
Randy Chermer

Out beyond ideas of wrongdoing and rightdoing, there is a field. I'll meet you there. — ROMI

“Life is movement,” writes Randy Chermer, “and movement is the essence of what it means to be alive. The more we are able to refine our sensitivity to movement and attend to how we move, the more we experience the deeper dimensions of both our physical and spiritual life. This is true whether attending to very subtle and refined movements or everyday movements like getting in and out of a car. The development of one's palpation and movement skills are interwoven with the development of one's awareness, perception, and intuition.

“Life is ever changing; impermanence underlies our very existence. Aikido, Feldenkrais, and cranial work will guide our explorations into the domain of ever-changing life.”

Stone Age Solutions: Healing Practices of Our Ancient Ancestors
Jed Diamond

Our human ancestors have been on earth for some two million years. For over 99 percent of this period, they have lived as gatherer-hunters. Only in the last 10,000 years have humans begun to domesticate plants and animals, accumulate possessions, live in cities, and regard nature as their own private larder.

Although it has long been fashionable to describe it so, the Stone Age world of hunter-gatherers was not a vale of constant demonic threat and untold fears. In fact our ancestors developed a successful and healthy adaptation to the earth in which they perceived themselves an equal part of nature. At a time when so many people are unhappy and unhealthy and our planetary home is in danger of destruction, the call to reconnect with ancient healing ways is strong.

In this workshop participants will use the four healing salves of storytelling, singing, dancing, and silence. The workshop teaches why gatherer-hunters were called the “original affluent society” and how we can use this knowledge to work less and enjoy life more fully. Participants will explore ancient knowledge that taught the essence of what it meant to be a man or a woman. The workshop will unearth the traditions that united humans with the world of plants and animals and teach participants the ancient art of animal tracking.

Some say that we can't go home again. This workshop is based on the premise that we cannot go back to what we have never left. C.E. credit is available; see pages 60-61.

Surviving Success — Achieving Fulfillment

Joseph Chilton Pearce & George Jaidar

For some people, success in a chosen field, be it business, arts, science, crafts, or homemaking, reveals personal strengths as well as the limits of that success. Such individuals may long for a more fulfilling challenge but continue the same dull round by default. Others fall for that midlife deception, a "change of profession, mate, or habitat," which only cloaks the old in new dress.

Participants in this workshop will focus on a unique alternative: a potential second phase of maturation, innate but long misunderstood and neglected. "This lifelong adventure," write the leaders, "leads to a quiet power and dominion beyond all enculturated and biological constraints." The physical, psychological, and spiritual aspects of this will be discussed, as well as a simple approach to its unfolding.

In this workshop, Joseph Chilton Pearce, author of six books centered on higher stages of development, joins George Jaidar, whose recent book explores emergent human nature and consciousness in the post-religious era.

Ryukido: Movement from the Martial Arts

Yoshi Sakuyama

Ki, the vital energy that flows through the body, has been cherished by martial artists because it gives them the courage to conquer fear. They have devised special breathing practices and physical movements to enhance their ki energy. Yoshi Sakuyama, a sixth degree black belt and movement artist from Japan, will introduce Ryukido, which is a total movement training system extracted from the foundations of martial arts. These powerful yet simple movements amplify ki flow and refine one's actions.

Participants will be guided into awareness of bodily sensations through various practices such as basic movements (to feel and move from the body's center), pair work, breath, and Kiatsu massage. The fluid, dancerlike movements are fun to practice, and the teaching can be applied to everyday life. $380

Art and Physics: Parallel Visions in Space, Time, and Light

Leonard Shlain

The root of the word "physics" means nature. Both artists and physicists are engaged in an ongoing attempt to describe nature's reality. The artist uses chiefly image and metaphor; the physicist, number and equation. This seminar will explore the connections between the conceptual ideas inherent in revolutionary art movements and the visionary breakthroughs that have occurred in physics.

Throughout history, but particularly in the modern era, the artist sees the world in a new way. Later, the physicist discovers a new way to think about the world. When these two viewpoints are superimposed on each other, their images and insights are seen to have an uncanny similarity. In this seminar, Leonard Shlain will propose that they are but two different aspects of the same reality.

Through slide show and discussion, the workshop will explore the changing view of three basic concepts — space, time, and light — in various periods of art, science, and culture. From there, attention will turn to a theory of consciousness which posits the split-brain model in the individual as the source of the art/science division in the general culture. Emphasis will be on the need to combine the two hemispheric viewpoints.

There will be no equations and one need not have a background in either art or physics to enjoy this workshop. The only prerequisites are a sense of wonder, an open mind, and an innate curiosity. $380

Conscious Health: A Model for Ultimate Aliveness

Richard Helfant & Robert Corff

Thoughts in your mind have made you what you are and thoughts in your mind will make you what you become. — Ponder

Here is a new approach that makes the possibility of a healthier, more empowering life available to everyone. The Conscious Health Communication (CHC) model provides the tools to reenergize your sense of self, your body, your stress coping skills, and your preparation for a healthier future.

Health can be defined as the full, free flow of vital life energy throughout the mind and body. This energy is affected by one's internal and external communication. An unacknowledged inner voice can exist which controls the forces for health and vitality, or sickness and fatigue. This inner voice often contains strong beliefs and attitudes about your body's well-being. The body may respond to these messages with either enhanced energy and vigor or by constricting, shutting down, and blocking off.

This workshop will provide an exploration of your own CHC. Through simple exercises, participants can reawaken a healthy flow of energy throughout their internal and external worlds. Experiential practices will be used to help restore a sense of power, vigor, and control over the body/mind, and unlock the ability to achieve a higher level of ultimate aliveness.

ISHTA: The Yoga of Empowerment

Rod Stryker

Each of us is like a star in the universe — filled with potential and reaching for fulfillment. To realize our ultimate destiny we must develop an understanding of who we are and what our hearts truly desire. The practice of ISHTA (Integrated Science of Hatha and Tantric Arts) yoga sensitizes us to our natural physical, intellectual, energetic, and spiritual gifts and empowers us to utilize these gifts in our daily life.

This workshop will include daily yoga routines to strengthen and purify the body, breathing practices for rejuvenation and healing, and meditation (including yogic visualization practices) to still the mind and deepen the experience of the self. The course will also include open discussion and some theory to personalize the practices, and will employ the power and majesty of the Esalen surroundings to feed the journey toward wholeness and integration.

Previous yoga experience is recommended, but not necessary. For further information please contact: Yoga Works, 1426 Montana Ave., Santa Monica, CA 90230; 310-393-5150. $740

Dancing with the Shadow

Jeremiah Abrams & Linda Piscitelli

One does not become enlightened by imagining figures of light, but by making the darkness conscious. — C.G. Jung

The shadow is the thing a person has no wish to be. Shadow-work leads us back to our potential, to the treasure house where-in lies what we have rejected out of shame, out of fear, out of ignorance, or for lack of love. Realizing the shadow can heal the split between our conscious self-concept and all else we are or might be, enabling us to live more and more in the present and to embody an expanded, compassionate awareness. Whatever we can make conscious, we have power over; but what remains unconscious has the power to do us in.

This five-day workshop, primarily experiential, unites two complementary approaches to the shadow: the soul-centered view of Jungian archetypal psychology, concerned with the unique transformative path that each soul must follow, and the expressive work known as Integrative Breathwork.

At the core of the workshop is the activating process of Integrative Breathwork. In a setting of safety and compassion, participants will journey inward, allowing images to emerge and then process and integrate the experience through the evolving group dialogue, dreamwork, and bioenergetics.

There will be a ritual celebration at midpoint in the week — a Shadow Dance — so come prepared with costume and full shadow regalia. If you are feeling stuck or just feel like it's time to take the next step in your spiritual journey, this may be what you are seeking.

Please note: All participants attending this workshop must first make application to the Mt. Vision Institute to enroll. Please call 415-332-8411. This workshop is not appropriate for people with chronic physical or mental conditions.

Natural Genius: An Authenticity of Being

Elisa Lodge

Natural genius is a powerful creative force that arises when a deep sense of self-worth and trust is felt, and reflects a wholehearted acceptance of the many facets of our being. We are all geniuses in wonderful and mysterious ways that lie undiscovered within us.

Participants will have an opportunity to explore self-defeating patterns and beliefs that inhibit natural genius and learn practical tools to unleash untapped energy, passion, and creativity.

Individual and group exercises will be used, including a whole-body thinking process to balance right and left brain, stimulate intuition, and support more spontaneous "feeling"

As we regain the power to dance our unique dance, as we voice the wisdom buried in our bones, we open to the heart of our personal power. $740

Introduction to Vipassana Meditation

James Baraz

Vipassana (Insight) meditation is the practice described by the Buddha for developing wisdom, compassion, and peace. Vipassana, "to see things clearly," means being mindful of what is actually happening in the present moment. Using the breath, body sensations, thought, and emotions as objects of attention, we can learn to be fully awake and bring a balanced awareness to all aspects of our lives.

Through vipassana meditation we experience the nature of reality as continuous change. When we see that all phenomena are impermanent, we can begin to let go of clinging to the pleasant or avoiding the unpleasant. We are then more capable of meeting each situation with spontaneity, fearlessness, and love. Meditation also teaches us to see in each moment the interconnectedness of all things. Our hearts open to a natural expression of compassion and kindness.

Participants will be introduced to this method of meditation practice and the principles on which it is based. There will be periods of silent sitting and walking meditation, as well as discussion. As attention is brought to all activities at Esalen, individuals will continue to develop mindfulness through the weekend. This will provide a foundation for applying vipassana practice to everyday life.

Soul: From Socrates to Ray Charles
Phil Cousineau & David Darling

It is eternity in a person that turns the crank handle. — FRANZ KAPRA
From Australian aborigines to Parisian bohemian artists, Borneo headhunters to Manhattan psychologists, people everywhere have been fascinated with the uncanny life force, the soul. This workshop will explore the mysteries of soul as the depth dimension, taking themes from Phil Cousineau's new book Soul: Readings from Socrates to Ray Charles. They include a cross-cultural look at Soul Origin stories, Eros and Psyche, Soul Crisis, Soul Work, World Soul, and Soul and Destiny. The discussions will range from ancient world myths to poetry, literature, and philosophy, accompanied by David Darling’s soulful cello and improvisational music exercises. The workshop will also use film clips from The Man Who Fell to Earth and The Unbearable Lightness of Being, and documentary films on ecological design, sacred sites, the psychology of Carl Jung, and the lives of Ray Charles and Georgia O’Keefe. The focus will be on how to ensoul everyday life in our troubled times and places. $380

Sensory Awareness
Charlotte Selver

Some seventy years ago Charlotte Selver’s teacher, Elsa Gindler, began exploring the natural potential of the human being. The work that evolved was an approach through a disciplined practice, involving the person as total organism. Gindler’s innovative methods very often unearthed, liberated, and cultivated abilities and sensitivities which her students had never been conscious of possessing.

To “awaken” means that one’s energies — neuromuscular and perceptive — become altered, leading to greater movability, both psychologically and physically, and to a fuller use of the senses and intuitive powers. In order for this to occur, a deeper peace is needed so that sensations become clearer, and rigidities, pressures, and preconceptions can gradually dissolve. In becoming “tuned in” by another person, or by a task or given situation, powers arise and come into play which correctly to the demands of the occasion. This calls for permissiveness, subtle reactivity, and openness to the moment.

With the cultivation of these functions, our lives can unfold in a far richer and more responsive way than what we are used to. We can restore the delight of ever-new experiencing which was our birthright in childhood, but lost in the course of our education into adulthood.

Focusing: When Your Clients Feel Too Much or Too Little
A workshop for professional development
Ann Weiser Cornell

When working with clients doesn’t seem to be getting anywhere, it could be that the client is feeling too much — or too little. Positive change requires a right relationship with emotional experience, not too close (“I feel overwhelmed”) or too distant (“I feel nothing”).

Using Focusing, a gentle, powerful process of bodily attention, this workshop presents skills (comparable with others) for helping clients find the right relationship with inner experience. It teaches how to help clients easily overwhelmed by or scared of their own emotionality to feel more comfortable being with feelings. The workshop teaches how to help clients out of touch with their bodies or who report “no feelings” to feel something — and how to help those feelings lead to insight and change.

This workshop will also explore the ongoing process of healing past heartaches, reevaluating present and future expectations, and transforming unwanted relationship patterns into more satisfying and successful approaches to intimacy.

This workshop will not only offer an opportunity to journey inward, but it will also examine what it means to share reciprocally with another in a healthy manner. Using individual and group exercises, this workshop experience is designed to access and deepen the awareness of what propels us to seek a partner with whom we can share feelings of loving and being loved, heart to heart. $380

Heart to Heart: Seeking the Sacred, Transforming the Mundane
Madeline Nold

Most of us desire to find true love and live “happily ever after.” We want to share our love and to receive the assurance of being loved “forever.” We seek to unite with a partner as if it will heal our own heart, expecting that this union will be the source of all happiness. Even if we find a mate, how can we find success in the practical workings of living day-to-day in relationship?

“Heart to Heart” will address both the sacred and mundane aspects of relationship. It will center on our inner connections to the elusive, indefinable experience we term “love.” It will also explore the ongoing process of healing past heartaches, reevaluating present and future expectations, and transforming unwanted relationship patterns into more satisfying and successful approaches to intimacy.

This workshop will not only offer an opportunity to journey inward, but it will also examine what it means to share reciprocally with another in a healthy manner. Using individual and group exercises, this workshop experience is designed to access and deepen the awareness of what propels us to seek a partner with whom we can share feelings of loving and being loved, heart to heart. $380

Loving Presence: Psychotherapy as Spiritual Practice
Ron Kurtz

True love is no game of the faint-hearted and the weak. It is born of strength and understanding. — MEHER BABA

How do we become full human beings? Where do we find the strength for “true love,” and how do we develop “true love,” the kind of presence that tells clients, “nevertheless there is meaning”? How do we express all this first as qualities we bring to relationship and finally as method and technique? In what ways is psychotherapy basically a spiritual discipline?

This workshop will approach these questions using the wisdom of Buddhism and Taoism and the teaching methods of Hakomi Body-Centered Psychotherapy. The emphasis will be on discovery, particularly the discovery of how we do what we do by being who we are. The group will also study how the images and energies which give rise to this way of being are evoked, nourished, and sustained.

The work will be experiential, with short talks, exercises, and demonstrations. And of course there will be laughing, singing, dancing, and otherwise behaving with love and joy.

The Subtle Art of Meditation

David Streeter

The experience of insight, tranquility, inner strength, and aliveness can be found within our everyday life through the ancient art of meditation.

This workshop will approach traditional meditation practice in an unusual way. In our retreat atmosphere participants will prepare the body/mind for silent listening with fluid movement from the martial arts and yoga. The workshop will incorporate breathing methods (Prana-Yama) and energy work with Zazen (sitting meditation). Other activities will include a silent listening hike in the wilderness, group meditation in a nearby contemplative monastery, and Zazen at our new meditation center nestled close to a waterfall.

This approach to the subtle practice of meditation through the body can inspire the student to discover his or her rich interior life and that crystal clear still point described so well in every spiritual tradition.

A Retreat for Women of Experience: Midlife and Beyond

Lenore Lefer & Anne Yeomans

The gifts of woman are many. They have too often been undervalued and made invisible until we cannot see them ourselves. Today, more than ever, the earth needs these gifts.

This is an opportunity for women in midlife and beyond to come together to explore the issues that are on our minds and in our hearts. What are the challenges we each face? How can we support each other in reclaiming and honoring our passion, our tears, our outrage, our laughter, and our beauty? How can we express our deepest values at this time in our lives?

The retreat will include time to speak and tell our stories, time for silence, hatha yoga, walking meditation, and group process.

Themes to be explored include:

- Cycles and phases of women's lives
- Changing needs in relationship
- The wisdom of the body
- Sexuality and intimacy
- Menopause
- Power and self-expression
- Self-care in the midst of responsibilities
- Spiritual questions of midlife

It is our hope that these days together will strengthen our trust and renew our spirit, so that we can return to our lives with more joy, more tenderness toward ourselves and others, and more boldness in living all that is important to us. $380

Relationship Intensive for Sexual Abuse Survivors and/or Partners

Carolyn Braddock & Guest Staff

The objective of this workshop is to help release participants from the "victim" position in relationships, both verbally (spoken aloud) and nonverbally (spoken by the body). Focus will be on the areas and dynamics in relationships which are most commonly affected by sexual abuse and how they can become barriers to intimacy. These include body image, sexuality, trust, establishing clear boundaries, and taking responsibility for the kind of relationships one wants to create. Survivors often have great difficulty sharing what they think and feel because old patterns have prohibited them from "telling secrets" and expressing themselves emotionally.

Participants will explore new ways of being emotionally honest and "feeling" their experiences, and will work on developing new patterns that empower relationships. Using breath, sound, and movement, the group will role-play and take part in experiential exercises to demonstrate new patterns of reacting and relating. The goal will be to develop healthy ways of creating safety, trust, and aliveness in close relationships. Gestalt, bodywork, creative cognitive work, humor, and play will also be used.

Please note: This workshop is for couples and singles, as well as professionals who counsel.

Healing from Sexual Trauma: A Seven-Day Intensive for Survivors
Carolyn Braddock & Guest Staff

Healing does not have to be a struggle – healing can be gentle, sensitive, and friendly. This intensive will explore the belief systems of the survivor's body, mind, and spirit. Since the body was where the trauma occurred, the focus will be on body-oriented healing. Attention will be paid to ways in which the body, mind, and spirit carry sexual trauma, and how trauma affects flashbacks and dissociation, old patterns, addictions, and the ability to let go. Using a gentle approach, the group will learn and practice innovative, creative, and proven possibilities for healing.

The workshop will utilize specific tools for wholeness. Humor, energy awareness, gestalt, role-playing, breath, sound, movement, meditation, Tai Ji, and play will be used. Sessions will also focus on sexuality, relationships, touch and intimacy, and creating new patterns. New ways of establishing support, phasing back gently, and nurturing will be discussed. There will be video demonstrations and a Braddock Body Process™ Manual will be used. Individual work within the group will be possible. This will be a week of safety, exploration, and integration.

To register for this seminar, completion of an application questionnaire is necessary. This is to provide some history, and to help determine what issues are prevalent, what support could be available during the week, and what forms of bodywork and/or transformational work have been experienced. For an application, please contact the leader at: 333 S. Allison Parkway, #304, Lakewood, Colorado 80226-3115, or 303-985-7310.

Five-Day Massage Intensive
Carl Chase (C.C.) & Laurie Lioness Parizek

Esalen massage consists of more than the long, flowing strokes for which it is well known. In this workshop, Esalen bodywork in many of its forms will be demonstrated, practiced, and discussed. It will be a week of learning and relaxation.

The workshop is primarily experiential, and will introduce grounding techniques, pressure point work, meridian massage, and stretches and manipulations. The instructors will present a bodywork style that both addresses individual needs and integrates the whole person, focusing on the concept of working with and from our essential being. Special attention will be given to self-care, quality of contact, breath awareness, and stress reduction.

The workshop will also incorporate movement, dance, and rhythm to integrate the bodywork. Yoga and meditation will be taught to encourage focus and serenity.

Participants will make full use of Esalen's beautiful grounds and facilities. Please bring warm, comfortable clothing and your favorite music or instrument.

The Tao of Community
Fritjof Capra & Chungliang Al Huang

As the century draws to a close, environmental concerns have become of paramount importance. The challenge of our time is to create sustainable communities within which we can satisfy our needs and aspirations without diminishing the chances of future generations.

In our attempts to build and nurture sustainable communities, we can learn valuable lessons from ecosystems, which are sustainable communities of plants, animals, and microorganisms. Another approach would be to learn from indigenous cultures who, in turn, learned their wisdom from nature.

This workshop will pursue both of these approaches. Fritjof Capra will show that the basic principles of ecology — interdependence, partnership, diversity — are also basic principles of community. Chungliang Al Huang will demonstrate through Tai Ji meditation and through Chinese philosophy and calligraphy that the same principles are the basis of ancient Taoist wisdom.

Healing Consciousness, Healing the Planet
Andrew Harvey

This moment is unique in history, critical to the future of life on this planet. We still have the choice between collective transcendence or global disaster, and thus each individual's beliefs, decisions, and actions have a disproportionately large potential for impact.

For this reason, according to Andrew Harvey, personal transformation is critical to planetary survival. He believes it to be a transformative, patriarchal philosophies and institutions that have driven us to the edge of extinction. Harvey dedicates himself to "doing the work of the Mother in the world." Having steeped himself in the theory and practice of many spiritual traditions, he endeavors to help heal the split in global consciousness by revealing the universal essence within disparate religions and spiritual philosophies.

The focus of the workshop will be the importance of restoring the sacred heart of the Christian mystics, and Tibetan and other traditions from the greatest spiritual traditions, including the Upanishads, Rumi, the Christian mystics, and Tibetan and other Buddhist sources.

The workshop will include meditation, opportunities to write about inner experiences, and an exploration of the difficulties that arise on any spiritual path. Sacred music from many traditions will also be used.

Harvey hopes to assist participants to build “a radical and fearless confidence in their own power to take the inner journey — with awareness of the ordeals and splendors to be encountered along the path.”

Feldenkrais®: Life, Learning, and Movement

Mark Reese & Donna Ray-Reese

The Feldenkrais Method® was originally developed by Israeli physicist, judo teacher, and rehabilitation innovator Moshe Feldenkrais. Feldenkrais based his discoveries on a synthesis of physical, biological, and human science, and a self-guided movement reeducation prompted by crippling knee injuries. The Feldenkrais Method is a learning-based approach to change with profound implications for many professions — rehabilitation, psychology, education, performing arts, athletics, and gerontology. It is also an easy-to-use self-help method and a path for personal growth.

In this workshop the leaders will guide participants through an in-depth exploration of The Feldenkrais Method using subtle and effortless body/mind movement exercises, discussions, and demonstrations. The workshop will include specific exercises for care of the back, neck, shoulders, breathing, and posture, and introduce basic principles of the Feldenkrais hands-on work, Functional Integration®.

Physical awareness will be used to train coordination, flexibility, efficiency, sports performance, and grace of motion throughout the body. The movements of infants will be used to gain insight into adult movement patterns. The group will explore the relationship between motion and emotion. The workshop will also study movement-based approaches to psychological learning that parallel Milton Erickson’s hypnotic techniques.

The Medicine Wheel Way

Carol Proudfoot-Edgar & Bob Edgar

This workshop draws on the Native American Medicine Wheel ceremonies and teachings as resources for personal growth and renewed experiencing of ourselves within the larger web of the natural world. Just as Western psychological theory provides a framework for describing human stages of development, the Medicine Wheel offers a map for self-individuation. Both systems embody steps for healing. A primary difference, however, is that the Medicine Wheel way of living views humans as sacred beings and maintains that each individual must find his or her own path for “walking with beauty in the world.”

The Medicine Wheel Way illuminates the relationship of all things. Each direction on the wheel has its particular meaning and points to aspects needed for fuller integration and individuation. Ceremonies and rituals mark the passage of seasons and significant events of individual and group life, and connect the individual to the great mystery of life.

This experiential workshop will use these ancient teachings while providing a supportive means for participants to continue their process of self-development and to deepen their relationship with the natural world. Activities will include: learning the Medicine Wheel and making medicine pouches, learning about shamanism and using the shamanic journey method for finding power animals and spiritual teachers, and drawing upon ancient, ancestral knowledge available to all of us. The group will be drumming, rattling, and chanting throughout this time together. Participants are encouraged to bring a journal, a bandanna (to cover your eyes), and rattles (if you have them).

Please note: This workshop has a sequential structure in which each session builds on activities from the previous one. Participants are requested to be present for all sessions and to arrange for massages or other non-workshop activities between session breaks.

Weekend of December 2-4

The False Memory Debate: Current Controversies in Psychology and Recovery

Charles Whitfield

Remembering and naming what happened is a crucial part of the healing process, but there may be obstacles along the way. As child abuse treatment progresses, whether for children or adult survivors, there are doubters. Culminating from a backlash that arises from the most unbelieving among us, a group of accused parents, their lawyers, and some academics have formed the False Memory Syndrome Foundation. One of their anti-recovery claims is that delayed memories of abuse are false. The media have spread this view, fueling the denial of both survivors and abusers.

The objective of this weekend workshop is to increase participants’ understanding of the vicissitudes of memory in working with traumatized individuals. Charles Whitfield will present the associated arguments and debate. Sorting out this phenomenon is of crucial concern for people who work in the fields of recovery, psychology, social work, child abuse, law, and related helping professions, as well as for the survivors of abuse.

In this workshop, Dr. Whitfield will:

- Outline the clinical aspects of the psychology of memory, as well as the false memory defense and related boundary issues
- Differentiate ordinary memory from traumatic memory
- Describe guidelines for assisting in the process of healing of traumatic memories
- Differentiate true memory from untrue memory
- Describe how the opposing phenomena of denial and validation affect the healing process of the survivor of trauma

There will be lecture, discussion, videotapes, slides, handout material, and ample time for questions and answers.

Advanced Zero Balancing:
The Alchemy of Touch

Fritz Smith

In this advanced Zero Balancing weekend, participants will refine and expand their Zero Balancing skills, examine emotional and psychological content held in different tissues and energy fields of the body, and apply this knowledge to Zero Balancing sessions with each other. There will also be time for discussion and problem solving. This workshop will strive to present a broader understanding of the healing process as participants deepen their relationships with their work and each other, and explore new ways of interacting with the body/mind through touch.

Prerequisites for this program are the five-day Basic Zero Balancing program or its equivalent, a working knowledge of Zero Balancing, and the readiness to further develop one's effective use of touch.

Essential Peacemaking:
Women and Men

Danaan Parry & Jerilyn Brusseau

Throughout history the powerful forces of male and female energies have been aimed at each other in conflict and mistrust. “This conflict and mistrust,” write Danaan Parry and Jerilyn Brusseau, “are as deep as between any warring factions we have ever worked with. As conflict negotiators, we have been on the streets of Belfast and Jerusalem, yet never have we seen conflict more intense than between women and men in every nation of the world.”

The news is not all bad, however, since gender conflicts contain the potential for the deepest and most honest peacemaking. Men and women fight about conflicts that can usually be resolved.

Open to all women and men, as couples or individuals, this workshop will help participants find a common language between the sexes. The group will work to heal past and present hurts and misconstructions, and learn how to really listen to each other. This work is meant to focus “man-power” and “woman-power” on opening the gates to a world where we are partners in planetary healing in business, in relationships, and even in politics.

This gathering will not focus on individual relationships, although the peacemaking done in the workshop is the very work we all must do to bring health and joy to our intimate lives.

Spiritual Survival in the American Workplace:
Reclaiming Aliveness in Work

Jerry Johnson

Bill Moyers recently said that he is devoting his time and broadcast coverage of the '90s to the spiritual pursuits of increasing numbers of Americans. His statement comes at a time when, for many of us who value a spiritual life, work has become “spirit-less.” We question whether it is possible to continue working within a context of traditional corporate values.

This workshop will carefully and playfully examine the choices open to those whose working life lacks spirit, a sense of aliveness, and connection to basic inner values. The workshop will examine the following:

• Is my work contributing to my sense of being alive?

• What is my own spiritual practice and can work be a part of it?

• Is conflict between my job and spiritual life inevitable?

• How can I create a better work environment without compromising who I am?

• How can my spiritual values survive, even thrive, inside a company?

This workshop is designed for those who want to unite more fulfilling work with their spiritual life, who desire not merely “a living,” but “aliveness.”

Coyote Dance

Alberto Villoldo

Every night when the moon is full, Spider Woman sifts through the sands searching for coyote bones, and when she has assembled a full white skeleton and spun her silver threads through it, she blows her breath softly over each rib, each thigh and leg bone, until the flesh grows crimson and then flowered, like the desert sand. She then sings the song of life until its tail twitches and the coyote leaps into the air and bounds off into the dunes laughing like the morning wind.

This workshop will gather people together to collect those parts of themselves that are enduring, the whitened bones that Spider Woman gathers, and to spin the web of life around everyone's true life-force. The Soul-Mending Way will be explored through storytelling, magic theater, and ritual movement.

The Soul-Mending Way has been used for millennia by medicine peoples of the high Andes to heal ancient soul wounds and to quantum leap into their destiny, into whom they are becoming. The group will be immersed in the five rites of passage of the Soul-Mending Way:

• Emergence — renewal and regeneration

• Passage by Fire — purification and transformation through humanity's most ancient rite of passage

$740
• Provenance — return to the Mother-Goddess and claiming the Earth as mother and Sun as father
• The Luminous Warrior — Life/Death/Life — achieving the impeccability of the warrior who has conquered death
• Deliverance — return to the Father — surrendering the self, letting go, returning home

These mythic passages will be translated into contemporary journeys of transformation. In selective trance states unique to shamanism, participants can discover realms not bound by ordinary time, domains where there are no causes, only effects, and where one can hear the voices of the ancient ones in the wind, heal one’s past, and summon one’s destiny.

The Joy of Longing
Elliot Aronson & Vera Aronson

“Longing” involves the quest for something important in our lives that we either once had and lost, or that we always yearned for but have not yet been able to capture. Many of us long for a warm, communicative relationship with a parent, child, or sibling, the attainment of inner satisfaction from professional accomplishments, a greater spirit of adventure in our day-to-day lives, or a fulfilling love relationship. Although longing is usually associated with sadness and even with grieving, there can also be a special joy and lightheartedness that comes with the exploration of the longing process. The purpose of this workshop is to identify and learn to explore our deepest longings.

Some of our longings are within the realm of the attainable while others are fated to remain elusive. In either case, it is of great importance to uncover and explore these longings, for if they are denied and remain buried, the vacuum is usually filled with fear and resentment. Acquiring the ability to experience and express our longings is no less than a path toward knowing and loving ourselves. This opens the door to living a more joyous and fulfilling life.

A safe and supportive environment will be provided in which participants will be invited to make use of a variety of verbal and nonverbal approaches, including art, fantasy, and movement.

A Weekend with Terence McKenna

Are we merely empathogenetic creatures clinging futilely to a technotropic culture nourishing us with the same warm loving-kindness with which a dog hosts fleas? Is our voracious mad dash to gorge ourselves on a new millennium nothing but a crude approximation of the old snake-swallows-tail trick writ large on the scale of our post-historical ant-farm civilizations? Are our secret trysts with the Transcendent Other doomed to be scratched by fingernail upon the cold stone walls of our cybercultural prisons, or are they recorded upon the transpataphysical consciousness of Mama Gaia and the Seven Dwarfs?

Writer, explorer, shamanologist, neologist, and rave philosopher Terence McKenna may or may not acknowledge the authorship and relevance of these and other "great questions" in this weekend Baedeker's Tour of the universe and its suburbs.

Energy, Resources, Environment, Development, and Security
Amory Lovins

Energy policy is well along in a revolution which Amory Lovins's 1976 Foreign Affairs article helped to launch. That paper redefined the problem as not simply where to get more energy — of any kind, from any source, at any price — but rather how to find just the amount, type, scale, and source that would do each desired task at the least cost. This end-use/least-cost approach has proven fruitful in examining a wide range of other issues as well, from the efficient use of water and minerals to the interlinked problems of sustainable economic development (local to global), redefining security, rethinking agriculture, and protecting the earth.

Understanding the links between these subjects often makes it possible to solve many problems at once. Efficient energy use, for example, can simultaneously help the poor, displace insecure (or all) resources of oil, abate global warming and acid rain, stem nuclear proliferation, save wildlands, cleanse air and water, create wealth, and preserve the interests of our descendants.

This seminar will begin with energy — chiefly its efficient use and renewable supply — both as factual background and conceptual launching pad for related issues. It will then branch out in the directions of most interest to participants, emphasizing interconnections and vision across boundaries between various disciplines. Modest acquaintance with numbers and technical economic fundamentals will be helpful, though not essential, as the seminar is equally concerned with social, political, and ethical issues and with practical methods of implementation, drawing on participants' diverse perspectives and experience. $380

The Core Self
Ron Alexander

Resources for healing, such as spontaneity, curiosity, trust, creativity, and joy, are found in the core self. Time also heals and helps activate these resources. This workshop will assist participants, especially health professionals, in the process of healing and in acquiring new experiences and skills in the microdynamics of mind/body process. Participants will also work on cultivating a friendly relationship with the unconscious in order to heal old patterns; learning how to let go and move forward by releasing pain, fear, grief, and loss; and creating healthier pathways for new learnings connected to living, loving, working, and relating.

The goals of this work are to enhance self-esteem, to become free of trauma and self-images of the past, to become conscious in the present moment, to communicate well, to become empowered as a leader, and to develop a cohesive personal vision. The tools that will be used include gestalt practice, self-psychology, insight meditation, breathing skills, hypnosis and mind/body healing, dream work, deep music, group process, and immersion into nature.

Exploring the World of Lucid Dreaming
Stephen LaBerge

Dreams are worlds of wonder — anything imaginable can happen. However, most of the time we sleep through our nightly journeys, unaware of the opportunities available. Only upon awakening do we realize that we have been dreaming.

We are not bound, however, to forever sleepwalk through our dreams. Lucid dreams are dreams in which we know we are dreaming while we're dreaming. Lucid dreamers are fully conscious that the world they are experiencing in the dream is a mental creation, and are completely free to act in the dream without constraint by laws of physics or society.

Research has shown that people can develop the skill of lucid dreaming, and that it can profoundly affect our brains and bodies. Participants will learn methods for inducing lucid dreams and explore its uses: self-exploration, creative problem solving, enhancing self-confidence, healing, adventure, and self-integration leading to transcendence.

The scope of the seminar will extend beyond dreams and dream lucidity to investigate the nature of our experience of the world and our perceptions of "reality." Discussions will explore the concept that all perceptions are illusory and that waking reality is, like dreaming, a mental construction.

The seminar will combine lecture and experiential exercises. It is intended for avid dreamers and people seriously interested in self-exploration and the enhancement of consciousness.

Big Sur Ceramic Alchemy
Noel Mapstead & Keiko Suga
Almost all elements on earth melt at a given temperature. In this workshop participants will experiment with and discover the alchemical changes caused by the forces of heat.
The Big Sur Coast is endowed with many natural clay deposits and other raw materials. Conducting field trips along the Big Sur Coast, the workshop will provide the opportunity to explore the alchemy of clay and rock, seashells and tree ash, as well as other natural materials. Participants will learn to identify and work with natural clays. Using only nature's materials, group members will create glazes for handmade clay pottery, beads, and other objects. These works will be fired in electric kilns and open-pit bonfires. An added feature will be clay baths at Esalen's hot springs.
This workshop intends to challenge the senses by demonstrating that all matter is variable and subject to change. Plus, it offers a chance to create objects as holiday presents for those we love.
No prior ceramics experience is necessary. $740

Holiday Humbug
Paul Rebillot
For many people, the winter holidays are the time of maximum stress and deepest depression. Hospitals and mental health clinics fill with people seeking relief from the pressures of outer darkness and frantic social “cheerfulness.” In the northern hemisphere, darkness seems to have overwhelmed the light, inducing sadness within, while holiday festivities stir past disappointments and present loneliness. It is the time when we feel the loss of ones most sorely.
In traditional cultures, the time before the winter solstice is a time of turning inward in quiet introspection in preparation for the festival of the light’s return.
Paul Rebillot writes, “This workshop offers a chance to deal with the humbug by looking at our disillusioned dreams, our unfulfilled ideals, our past regrets and present sorrows. Through ritual and gestalt open seat, guided fantasy, music and play, we will each seek an inner solstice, our own turning from the darkness of past regret and future fantasy to the light-filled divine simplicity of our present being. Together we will create a celebration of our own that brings us into the light with our own joy and tunes us into the joy of the light’s rebirth that takes place each year at solstice time.” $740

Pre-Holiday Rest and Relaxation
Because there have been so many requests from people who want to book room and board in advance without participating in a workshop, Esalen is offering during this pre-holiday week a limited number of rooms for those who simply wish to enjoy Esalen’s grounds, baths, and facilities.
A minimum stay of two days is required. For room and board rates, please see Reservation Information on page 4.

December 23-30

The Painting Experience
Michell Cassou & Stewart Cubley
It is rare for most people to use painting for its qualities of inner adventure and self-discovery, to paint purely for the process of exploration, not for the result.
The purpose of this workshop is to provide a setting to explore the self through painting — to discover in form and color a powerful tool for uncovering and dissolving blocks to emotional and spiritual expression. Participants will be given the support and stimulation to develop a natural way of painting based directly upon feeling. The work takes place in an authentic studio setting with large white surfaces to confront the creative void, along with a rich spectrum of colors and brushes. The workshop may be of interest to persons involved in a wide variety of disciplines, including art, education, counseling, and meditative practices. No prior experience in painting is necessary. Please bring a smock.
For further information about this workshop, contact: The Painting Experience Studio, 2101 20th Avenue, San Francisco, CA 94116, 415-564-8515. $1110 (plus $30 materials fee paid directly to the leaders)

Weekend of December 23-25

Play, Spontaneity, and Performance Art
Nina Wise
The leader writes: “I read once that rats were put in a maze with one path leading to a small room with food, another leading to a room charged with an electrical current, and a third path leading to a room with playthings. The rats learned to avoid the electric shock, but the food room and the play room were equally popular. Play, it seems, is as essential to rats as nutrition.
“Play is also an integral part of human culture. In tribal societies, people sing, make music, drum, dance, and tell stories as part of their daily lives. With the advent of technology and specialization, we modernized folk have forgotten how to play together. Singers sing, dancers dance, actors act, while the rest of us sit and watch.
“This workshop is about remembering how to dance, how to sing, how to tell stories about our lives, how to make it up as we go along, how to be together in a way that is lively, spontaneous, and creative. The workshop will include meditation, chanting, relaxation, movement, singing, writing, drawing, and theater games. We will also do spontaneous performance with and for each other in a safe and supportive environment.
“Everyone is afraid of performing, even professionals. Don’t let your fear stop you. It’s fun, challenging, and rewarding.” $380

Zen Practice
Kathleen O’Shaughnessy
We can use the mind to penetrate thought to the place behind thought, where all thought begins. — Modern Zen Saying Kathleen O’Shaughnessy writes, “Zen is the sitting form which constitutes the heart, soul, blood, and backbone of Buddhist perspective. It is austere and direct. We strip awareness to the finite weavings of mind and breath — the two elements most basic to existence. From this place, the Large Mind can be examined.”
In this workshop, sitting practice will be enhanced with Hatha Yoga sessions as physiological meditation. Verbal exchanges, teaching stories, as well as some historical perspective will be utilized; however, the major portion of time will be directed toward establishing an equilibrium in the core practice.

Participants are asked to wear loose, layered clothing. $380

A New Beginning: Forgiveness and Freedom
Edith Eva Eger
Dr. Edith Eger is a survivor of Auschwitz. She took her brutal experiences and transformed them into an affirmation of life. She now guides people along the path from victimization to empowerment, from weakness to strength, from being stuck to seeking the highest levels of human potential.

This workshop asks the questions, “How have we imprisoned ourselves? Whom have we made the warden of our thoughts? How have we fled from freedom and self-responsibility?”

Using discourse, self-dialogue, visualization exercises, experiential work, and group discussion, the workshop will address the following themes:

- What are the inner resources available to us in order to become our own counselors?
- How can we move from resentment to forgiveness, from hate to love?
- How can we shed the comfortable and familiar cloak of victimization to give birth to our true selves?
- How can we let go of fears, prejudices, shame, and other ways of looking at the world that don’t get us what we want?

The workshop is about discovering the willingness to accept self-responsibility and find the starting point to make a new beginning. $380

Christmas Present
David Schiffman
'Tis a gift to be simple. — from A Shaker song

This weekend is intended as a gift for people who would like to give themselves a change from the usual clamor and commercialism of the holiday season. Its aim is to create a climate of mutual support and encouragement for exploring how we can best cultivate the spirit of real generosity and faith in dealing with ourselves and others.

This timely gift will embrace the following elements:

- Sanctuary — the opportunity to step away and pause, to create a mood of peace and personal clearing without haste or confusion.
- The company of kindred spirits — a chance to be met with honesty, empathy, and wisdom in an atmosphere of soulful, clear-eyed support.
- The emotional freedom to be — the right to let down and be sad or mad in order to clear the air and move on, making room in our hearts for new possibilities.
- The right to feel free and alive in our bodies — the use of innovative ways of moving and touching in order to restore the vitality of feeling truly alive and physically at ease.

The approaches utilized will be drawn from a wide variety of practices, both traditional and nontraditional, all aimed at restoring our gratitude and appreciation for being alive. $380

Enhancing Communication Hypnotically
Paul Lounsbury & Nancy Winston

We are often unaware of how deeply identified we are with the patterns that recursively tune our perceptions, color our emotions, shape our ideas, and inform our actions. If we act with courage to break out of these patterns, a new world can appear, bringing with it a fresh and inviting quality of relatedness.

This workshop is for people who would like to go beyond their current thresholds of awareness to develop more original, vital, and effective communication.

Methods developed from the leaders’ training in hypnosis and psychotherapy with Milton Erickson, conceptual tools crafted from Gregory Bateson’s communication research, and advances in cognitive neuroscience and the “New Cybernetics” will all be used to help participants increase the flexibility and control they have in their interpersonal communication.

Through group interaction, playful experiments, and hypnotic inductions, the leaders will guide participants through various dimensions of the communication process. There will be special attention given to the hypnotic relationship, recognizing individual uniqueness, utilizing conscious and unconscious awareness, and examining the dynamics of induction, influence, and suggestion.

Participants will explore ways to be more responsive, more willing to enter unknown territory, and more capable of extending the range and flexibility of sensory motor, emotional, and mental controls in their communication behavior.

Group process and hypnotic experiments will focus on expanding awareness and increasing appreciation of interpersonal differences. Prerequisites include tolerance for a modicum of confusion, willingness to be a group member, a sense of humor, and a desire for novel experience. $1110

Week of December 25-30

Improvisational Wisdom: Finding the Robin Williams Within
Paula Shaw

The nature of creativity is elusive and inexplicable. Our most creative moments often seem to come from nowhere and happen when we least expect them. Einstein’s theory of relativity came to him suddenly and scientifically, and Mozart saw many of his greatest compositions complete in a single vision. At the other end of the creative spectrum, we marvel at the lightning-quick humor of Robin Williams, a brilliance that seems boundless.

What are the conditions that put us in touch with our own creativity and brilliance, and how do we access them?

This weekend is a playful introduction to letting go of your programmed patterns and discovering the joy of spontaneous creation. The first premise of improvisational theater games (which Robin Williams claims unleashed him) is to “go in blank.” Within the game structures, participants are coached to be receptive — stop, look, and listen; deny nothing; release control; let go of planning ahead. This process can help you learn to trust your own intuition, sense of humor, eloquence, and physical grace, and lets you get out of your own way to make room for exhilarating flashes of creative brilliance.

The workshop is also just a lot of fun. $740

You Can’t Get Enough of What You Don’t Really Want
David Hawkins

We become who we are in an interpersonal world. Our lifestyles, our personalities, and our bodies are shaped by the relational strategies we develop in response to our needs and the demands/possibilities of our early environment. As adults, we often find that these strategies contain patterns that are repetitive, uncomfortable, and self-defeating. Nevertheless, they are temporarily rewarding enough for us to pursue them in an addictive fashion.

Unfortunately, these addictive patterns are substitutes for ways of being that could bring us closer to what we truly want.
We often avoid these ways of being because they can evoke our vulnerability and put us in touch with our most private shame.

A self-examining group can become a social microcosm in which we play out and observe our addictive patterns. More importantly, it can become the source of support for us to risk being more fully ourselves, to overcome shame, and to get what we truly desire.

The objectives of this workshop are to:

- Work together to create a climate for exploration
- Experience how the group can become a corrective lens through which to see ourselves and others more clearly
- Identify addictive interpersonal behavior patterns
- Come to appreciate the group’s extraordinary capacity to metabolize shame
- Learn to access the support needed for change

Weekend of December 30-January 1

Music for Everyone:
Finding Your Long-Lost Musician
David Darling

For 21 years the leader’s music improvisation workshops have touched many groups of people, including corporate executives, school children, teachers, professional musicians, prisoners, and therapists, and opened their hearts to the mystery of sound. A former member of the Paul Winter Consort, Darling has performed with such diverse artists as Bobby McFerrin, Jan Garbarek, Peter, Paul & Mary, The Western Wind, and Spyro Gyra. His most recent activity includes collaboration as solo cellist on Wim Wenders’s movie soundtrack, Until the End of the World.

“Music for Everyone” is an adventure into music making, rhythmic grooving, songwriting, laughing, and listening. Regardless of prior experience, this workshop will take you to a deeper, more powerful music level. Bring an instrument or play on David’s collection of world instruments. $380

Mark Gerzon & Shelley Kessler

The tradition of making resolutions at the beginning of a new year reflects a deep yearning for growth throughout life. From work based on Mark’s book about midlife titled Coming Into Our Own, as well as on the workshops they co-lead, the leaders invite participants to dig more deeply into the spiritual ground in which our New Year’s resolutions may be rooted. This workshop will provide a safe, healing space in which men and women can listen to their own and each other’s stories of midlife transformation regarding work, love, health, and spiritual growth.

The purpose of the workshop, however, is to see beyond our own biographies. As in the lives of Jesus, Moses, Buddha, Mohammed, and other spiritual pathfinders, the middle years of adulthood are a time when many of us are deepening our spiritual quest. This is more than an individual quest to come to terms with growing older. It is a transpersonal rite of initiation into another stage of the human journey, into what C. G. Jung called the “second half” of life — a time marked not by a particular number of candles on one’s cake, but by asking difficult, soul-searching questions about the direction of one’s life.

This workshop is about turning a time of confusion into a quest. The leaders will share the wisdom that can be gleaned from both the joys and sorrows of the journey through adulthood, and show that the so-called “midlife crisis” can be the beginning of a search for deeper love and meaning that becomes possible in life’s second half. $380

Couples Massage Weekend
Ellen Watson & David Streeter

This weekend couples workshop is designed for those who would like to bring the benefits of massage into their everyday lives. The workshop will teach simple massage techniques, developed by Esalen massage practitioners, which have proven valuable to anyone who wants to help a partner, friend, or family member feel better. Techniques that help relieve pain, increase vitality, or simply soothe the nerves will be demonstrated briefly and practiced with lots of hands-on instruction by the leaders.

This workshop is especially helpful for loving couples, as Esalen massage is greatly beneficial in its contactful and healing qualities. $380 per participant

Healthspring Outreach and Education

The Healthspring Project offers education and information that extends Esalen's work in the healing arts and sciences to the outside world. It is an independent service-oriented program of Esalen teachers and their associates.

Healthspring offers a global information network linking visitors to Esalen with centers, teachers, and health professionals focused in the fields of somatics and psychology that are located in their home area. Our listings are public information and are not meant to be an endorsement of any individual or institution.

The Healthspring library offers books on health and healing, bodywork, somatic studies, psychology, nutrition, and related studies, which may be borrowed by students for a given period while at Esalen. Donations of appropriate books are greatly appreciated.

For access to this program, write to Laurie Lioness Parizk at Esalen, c/o Healthspring.
With wilderness as the primary teacher, participants will work with local Native California Indian traditions and contemporary awareness practices to enhance contact with nature.

The group will journey directly into the heart of Big Sur's Santa Lucia Mountains to Pine Valley, the ancestral summer home of the Esselen Indians, whose village sites, stone tools, and sacred rock paintings are still found among the sandstone caves and boulders.

Mules will carry in food and equipment, giving participants the freedom to hike the six miles from the trailhead base camp in Pine Valley with only a light day pack. From base camp, there will be optional day hikes (averaging 6-10 miles) that lead to caves with Indian petroglyphs, along mountain streams to inspiring waterfalls, through valleys of oaks and pines, and to sacred mountain tops with expansive views.

There will be instruction and practice in local Native American traditions and culture, and an opportunity to participate in ceremonies, drumming, and chanting. There will be a time of cleansing (a sweat lodge) and contemplation, culminating in a 24-hour vision quest. In addition there will be an introduction to the area's natural history, including the geology, plants, and animals of the Ventana Wilderness.

All meals are provided and are of exceptional quality. Previous wilderness experience is not necessary, although participants should be prepared for some vigorous physical activity. The group will convene in Monterey on Saturday, October 8 at 7 p.m. A complete information packet will be sent upon registration.

IN ITS CONTINUING COMMITMENT TO the fields of education, religion, philosophy, and the physical and behavioral sciences, Esalen regularly sponsors invitational conferences that bring together experts who share their research and points of inquiry. As host, Esalen covers room and board expenses for participants as a way of advancing these particular studies. These are invitational conferences only and are not open to the public. Recently held programs and their conveners are listed here.

Ecopsychology: Theory and Practice June 13–18, 1993
This conference assembled twenty-two participants, mainly psychologists and environmentalists, to initiate an ongoing dialogue whose purpose is to reconcile two separate fields of thought and activity that have been working at two inseparable aspects of the same global project: defending the health of the planet, restoring the sanity of the person. The outcome of this conference included an Ecopsychology Newsletter, which recently received a grant from the Goldman Fund, and an anthology of articles on ecopsychology commissioned by Sierra Books.

Invited Conference on Creativity November 28–December 1, 1993
A small, focused group of writers, psychologists, artists, and scholars came together for three days to discuss various aspects of the creative process, including the roles of accident, chance, and fortune; killers of creativity; and paranormal examples of creativity. Holding in mind Rilke’s notion that “my devils are my angels,” participants discussed the forces which drive the creative process, and examined the often complicated connection between the creative urge and success.

Direct Mental and Healing Interactions December 5–10, 1993
The Direct Mental and Healing Interactions Working Group, founded by the Esalen Institute Center for Theory and Research, is a coalition of scientists from twelve areas of inquiry, including psychology, parapsychology, nursing, anthropology, physics, medicine, and computer science. The group studies direct interactions of consciousness with the physical world by exploring the nature, range, possible limits, and practical significance of physiological and other measurable effects that can be produced mentally from a distance.

During this Working Group meeting, participants discussed new theories, recent research, and future joint ventures, including experiments, publications, and workshops offered through Esalen.

Pacific Symposium on Psychedelic Drugs January 9–14, 1994
This conference assembled an eclectic group of leaders in the fields of psychology, pharmaceutical chemistry, medicine, neuroscience, ethnobotany, public policy, and business for the purpose of generating discussion on research with psychedelic drugs. The symposium centered around short presentations from the thirty invitees, followed by general discussion. The format was designed to promote further public and private discussion. It was developed in conjunction with Mark Kleiman, Associate Professor of Public Policy at Harvard’s JFK School of Government and federal government advisor on drug enforcement issues. The symposium included researchers from all three universities that have been approved by federal regulatory bodies to carry out preliminary research on the effects of psychedelic drugs on human beings.

The Work Study Program is for those who are interested in an intense and complete involvement with the Esalen environment. It is a work-oriented program, emotionally and physically, and only rarely is it restful. It is not for those who wish to take catalog workshops or for those who are unwilling to be fully engaged in the work life of the community. Participants will work 32 hours per week in one of Esalen’s departments (kitchen, garden, farm, housekeeping, maintenance, or grounds) and will participate, along with staff and long-term students, in that department’s program. It is necessary for applicants to be able to speak and understand English.

During most evenings and one weekend intensive, work students are together as a group exploring different practices and approaches available at Esalen, with specifically assigned leaders who will be with the group throughout the month coordinating the study schedule and facilitating many of the evening sessions.

Please note: This program is designed to explore and apply human values and potentials in both the evening groups and the workplace. It is not intended as a substitute for therapy or as a “cure.”

The selection of work students is done by Bette Dingman, the Work Study coordinator, in consultation with department supervisors. Since this is a work program, preference is given to applicants who are open and willing to learn about themselves within the work context as well as within the evening and weekend study/process groups. Applicants with particular skills or physically limiting conditions are urged to mention them on the application.

First-month work students, in particular, are assigned to departments largely on the basis of community need. No work students will be assigned to the office or Gazebo School Park until they have fulfilled a minimum of one month in one of the aforementioned departments.

The study portion of the program is usually divided into two sections each month: each emphasizes one type of growth practice, such as gestalt, meditation, Reichian work, massage or somatics work, and so forth. Participants must be prepared to stay at Esalen for the full duration designated for that particular program, assuming that they meet the standards of the Work Study Program. Two programs are planned for each month.

It is sometimes possible to receive college unit credit for participating in the work study program. Please check with your college or university for eligibility requirements.

Work study programs currently scheduled for 1994 include:

June 26-July 24

Anna Wise will present a program of Awakened Mind Brainwave Training. Different methods of meditation, visualization or “sensualization,” and deep psycho-physiological relaxation will help you learn to develop the intricate combinations of brainwave frequencies that underlie optimum mental states. Mind Mirror EEGs and Electrical Skin Resistance Meters will be available for biomonitoring and biofeedback.

Patrick Douce will share the essence of his work with Moshe Feldenkrais, Balinese healers, and Indonesian Silat Martial-Art-for-Health systems. This monthlong program will focus on movement and touch techniques to increase the sensitivity, flexibility, coordination, relaxation, and freedom of the body. Individual chronic problem areas will be approached in order to improve chronic stiffness and pain. Group experience and interaction will help facilitate balance in the overall growth of each participant.

July 24-August 21

Mary Goldenson’s (Devarani) program of letting go and moving on employs Reichian methods, dance, imagery, gestalt, and meditation.

Eric Van Riswold will lead a monthlong program devoted to the development of integral practices. Gestalt practice, meditation, movement exercises, and the experience of nature will be explored as complementary awareness practices which, when combined, integrate mind-body-spirit into a greater whole and enhance personal development and transformation.

August 21-September 18

Wendy Palmer will focus on intuition, boundaries, and relationships. Using the body as a reference point, we can experience boundaries energetically rather than emotionally. Principles from aikido, meditation, and attentional states are used to examine personal issues such as abuse, codependency, and the tendency to merge too much or engage too little.

Eric Erickson will lead a group devoted to the development of integral practices. Gestalt practice, meditation, movement exercises, and the experience of nature will be explored as complementary awareness practices which, when combined, integrate mind-body-spirit into a greater whole and enhance personal development and transformation.

September 18-October 16

Eduardo Eizner & Guests will lead a monthlong program on emotional release work and self-awareness, incorporating gestalt practice, group and individual process, rituals, movement, and bodywork.

September 18-November 13

Two-Month California State Massage Certification Program

Led by Kathleen O’Shaughnessy & Dean Marston, this two-month California State Massage Certification Program offers intensive professional instruction in massage technique, various approaches to movement and meditation, as well as self-care. Massage skills will be developed through lecture, demonstrations, hands-on practice between participants, and instruction in basic anatomy. Bodywork will be taught as a tool for optimal well-being, stress reduction, and as a valuable aid to personal and transpersonal growth. Gestalt awareness sessions will be offered regularly during the program as a means for self-understanding, although this is not the focus of the program.

Sessions, scheduled primarily during afternoons and evenings, are in addition to the 32-hour work week commitment. 120 hours of class attendance is mandatory to fulfill state certification requirements.

Upon satisfactory completion of this program... and after giving and recording thirty massage practice sessions within six months of the final day of the program, a California state-approved certification will be issued. This is a professional program with limited admission. Preference will be given to those applicants who have had a minimum of one month previous Work Study experience; however, this is not an absolute.

Along with your Work Study Program Application, please submit a handwritten letter stating why you want to learn massage and how you plan to use it in your life. Send both to Kathleen O'Shaughnessy, Massage Certification Program, Esalen Institute, Big Sur, CA 93920.

$1,940 (two-month fee)

October 16-November 13

A month with John Soper & Friends will focus on ways to improve the quality of life for participants. The group may practice gestalt, group process, meditation, sensory awareness, guided fantasy, movement, and stillness to bring into focus those areas of our lives that are ripe for change.

Kathleen O'Shaughnessy & Dean Marson. See September 18-November 13.

November 13-December 11

Steven Harper & Friends will lead an introductory month of "oldies and goodies." Exploring group process, gestalt practice, dance, movement work, bodywork, energy awareness, and meditation, the group will pay special attention to how these transformative practices may be integrated into the work aspect of the program and our lives outside of Esalen.

David Schiffman will focus on the theme of transition. It is geared for people who are contemplating changes in career, relationship, geographical location, or spiritual orientation.

December 11-January 8

Eric Erickson will lead a group devoted to the development of integral practices. Gestalt practice, meditation, movement exercises, and the experience of nature will be explored as complementary awareness practices which, when combined, integrate mind-body-spirit into a greater whole and enhance personal development and transformation.

December 11-February 5

Nina Wise will present a two-month program of "Motion Training," a technique that utilizes sound, movement, language, and visual elements in the creation of spontaneous performances that arise from the inner life of the actor. The work enhances the ability to integrate language and movement, respond physically to emotional impulses, and give voice in sound and language to personal truths. In addition to performance work, the leader will also use meditation practice, writing practice, and experiments with integrating spontaneity and play into daily life.

Please note: This special two-month program is limited to 16 people, and requires a commitment to both work scholar months.

January 8-February 5

Elaine Hughes will offer a month of intensive writing facilitated by gestalt practice, meditation, visualization, body awareness, sense perception, and evocative writing exercises. Participants will explore other possibilities for self-expression — such as art, music, dance, and theater — and discover how these experiences can become integrated into their writing.

Nina Wise. See December 11-February 5.

Esalen Institute is a center to explore work in the humanities and sciences that promotes human values and potentials. Its activities consist of public seminars, residential work-study programs, invitational conferences, research, and semi-autonomous projects.

We exist to sponsor, encourage, synthesize, and attempt evaluation of work in these areas, both inside and outside our own organizational framework. Since we are a center for experimental education, we ask that persons come to our programs out of an educational interest.

We ask that no one come whose interest is "cure." We point out here, as we have in workshops and seminars, that some people, particularly those with a history of psychiatric problems, may find some programs difficult, trying, or potentially risky. We recommend that in case of any doubt, a physician or trusted counselor be consulted.

GENERAL INFORMATION

Esalen lies 300 miles north of Los Angeles and 175 miles south of San Francisco, situated directly over the Pacific with the Santa Lucia Range rising sharply behind. The property, which has natural hot springs, was once the home of a Native American tribe known as Esselen. We are a 45-mile drive south from Monterey, 22 miles south of Nepenthe, on Coast Route 1. From the south, we are 50 miles north of San Simeon. A lighted sign on the ocean side of the highway reads: Esalen Institute, By Reservation Only.

There are various ways to experience Esalen, ranging from an overnight visit to a long-term stay as a seminarian. The weekend and five-day workshops described throughout the catalog are the standard route for coming to Esalen and learning the methods of personal growth available here. The "Experiencing Esalen" workshops, scheduled periodically, offer an introduction to practices such as gestalt, massage, sensory awareness, and meditation. From such a sampling, participants can then choose those approaches they are most attracted to and pursue them in subsequent seminars.

Another way of being at Esalen which allows a much greater involvement at a lower expense is the Work Study Program, an intensive twenty-eight day work-oriented program for individuals who want to make a directed, personal commitment to self-exploration and growth and a contribution to the Esalen community. Participants may enroll in the general interest track, which gives an overview of several disciplines, or choose a more specific course of study from the focused track, such as gestalt, meditation, Reichian work, or massage.

Information regarding special interest sections may be obtained by writing Bette Dingman, c/o Esalen. For a full description of the Work Study Program, please turn to page 62.

For those who wish an extended stay of a month or more, there are frequent long-term programs which involve didactic seminars or professional trainings as well as experiential workshops. Please see Special Programs.

Finally, there are other events that enrich life at Esalen. There are occasional forums in which writers and thinkers, both visiting and resident, share their ideas with the community. On Wednesday nights there may be lectures, films, dance performances, or other forms of entertainment. Bodywork of various kinds is available by appointment with individual practitioners. There is also a community event schedule offered. Please check the bulletin board for details when you arrive.

Catalog Subscriptions

If you would like to receive the Esalen Catalog, please refer to page 2 for subscription rates and send your check or money order (U.S. currency) in the enclosed subscription envelope, or mail it to: Subscriptions, Esalen Institute, Big Sur, CA 93920 (see Income Tax Regulations 1.162-5).

The Hot Springs at Esalen

We would like those people who are planning their first visit to Esalen to know that swimsuits are optional, and nudity common, in the hot springs, massage area, and swimming pool. We encourage each individual to choose what is most comfortable, either wearing a swimsuit or not, and emphasize that the environment we strive for at Esalen is one of personal sanctity and respect for the human body.

Accreditation

Many formal educational institutions recognize the time spent at Esalen as being worthy of credit in their own curricula; check with your university or college for further information. We would be glad to supply information to your school regarding any of our programs or series of programs. Please submit a written request to the office supervisor.

Continuing Education for Nurses

Some programs offered at Esalen qualify for continuing education credit with the California Board of Registered Nursing. For current C.E. listings, see pages 60-61.

There is a $10 processing fee for each certificate of completion requested.

Disabled Access

Esalen now provides a means of transportation to the baths for those with physical limitations which prevent them from walking. A vehicle was purchased, in part, through the generosity of Dr. John W. Harris, who believes, as we do, that those among us who are aged, infirm, or handicapped should also be able to enjoy the hot springs.

If you are disabled and would like to plan a visit to Esalen or participate in a workshop, please give the office as much advance notice as possible. While disabled access to some parts of the property is difficult, with enough planning, arrangements can be made for access to most of our facilities.

Recommended Reading and Mail Order Books

Most books listed as recommended reading for workshops are available through Esalen's bookstore. Other merchandise is also available. For ordering information please call 408-667-3049.

Ongoing Residence Program

Offered beginning mid-September and ending mid-June, the Ongoing Residence Program is designed for those who would like to have time and space in the Esalen environment for an intensive workshop program over a long term. A Residence Program stay is 26 days (four "weeks" and three weekends). Participants may select any of the five-day workshops offered during their stay with weekends free to enjoy room and board. Occasionally workshops are cancelled, so second choices are advised.

The cost is $3195 per 26-day period for standard accommodations and $2520 for bunk bed rooms.

I can remember distracting myself in a class at Berkeley with the vivid realization that the man at the lectern, expounding the subtleties of psychoanalysis, was naked beneath his clothes. The only difference between us, except that he was male and I am female, which is to say a lot, was that he was standing on a stage exposing himself before 500 students, and I had the relative safety of a back-row seat.

Not everyone I meet gets the x-ray treatment; sometimes I forget to look. And for the most part, I follow the convention of wearing clothes, taking comfort in the visceral sense of privacy they provide, particularly at business meetings. Wearing clothes is one of our most revealing traditions, as we leave our eyes and hands venturing our own efforts to conceal who we are. And yet we continue to perpetuate the “emperor’s clothes” myth that we are covered up when dressed—relying on clothes as a defense against being seen, even as we use them to display ourselves. The common anxiety dream about showing up naked at work or at a public gathering illustrates how intensely vulnerable we can feel when unveiled.

Being naked is a leveler—there will always be someone fatter, skinnier, whiter, more spotted, or hangier. For me, it’s a great relief to know I can put on or take off ten pounds and it doesn’t account for much. Breasts that have endured several years of breast-feeding have a special appeal, so I tell myself; and I don’t want to be Kate Moss, I want to feed her. Regardless of what I currently look like, when I go to the Esalen baths I see myself in other women: the young girls not yet in bloom, the full-bodied mothers embracing their babies, and the older women who have even more experience with gravity than I.

Along with our physical attributes, we bring to nude communal bathing less tangible but even more important characteristics: invisible burdens of expectations, experiences, family histories, and wherever we are in the hormonal present. We carry with us what we think about our bodies and what we’ve been told to think; what we think about sex, whether or not we’re thinking about sex at precisely this moment, and our anxiety concerning what other people are thinking. We can also bring to one another a warm acceptance that makes being naked in a communal setting pleasant and reaffirming. For better or worse, one person can make all the difference at the baths.

At Esalen, the convention of clothing has long been challenged, and although the times and the clientele have calmed down a bit from the sixties, for the most part guests go nude at the hot springs, and ardently defend their right to do so. During my first year as Esalen’s CEO, I’ve asked staff, workshop leaders and guests about their experiences at the baths, trying to gauge the importance of nudity at Esalen. I have learned that it is very important, although the actual significance of being naked varies widely among individuals. Both men and women spoke to me about how comfortable and easy they have found being at the baths, and their surprise and delight in how quickly they became acclimated to the Esalen custom. But I also received comments from participants in emotionally challenging workshops who are reeling from the intensity of accelerated process work and feel especially vulnerable; who find the communal dressing room and showers, and the simple act of choosing a tub, to be intimidating; who, by going to the baths, put themselves into what feels like a threatening situation and are unsure how to make it safe for themselves.

As a woman, I know that quickening sense of panic, the feeling of being crushed by a remark that is meant to be funny but isn't, and the pressure to be more open—or what another person is trying to convince me is open—when I am not ready and don't want to be. I understand and sympathize with those who have been more deeply affected by abuse than by love, who carry with them undiminished memories of the horror one person can inflict upon another.

I also know that shame, guilt, and fear can be transformed into something wiser, kinder, and useful. I know from watching others, and from retraining myself, that healing is possible. Some of the work done at Esalen can be extremely helpful in this transformative process, but it is difficult, painful, and the transition period can be lengthy. At times, it can seem hopeless.

When going to the baths, it's important to keep in mind that not everyone there is ready to be naked in public. Some people are experiencing nude communal bathing for the first time, and it feels okay. Some are experiencing it for the first time, and it's not okay.

At Esalen, where one learns to speak one's own truth, it is a temptation to think that one's process is not intimately hooked up to everyone else's, but it often is, and in significant ways. It may be one person's truth to reach out and touch someone in the baths, and it is just as likely to be another person's truth that he or she needs not to be touched.

I don't think one can be too respectful of another human being.

People often remark that although Esalen has a "clothing optional" policy for its baths, almost everyone goes nude, making the choice to wear clothing even more difficult. Several times I have been asked why we don't have some hours which are "women only" or "men only" or "suits only." The answer, quite frankly, is that we don't have the police force it would take to enforce such rules. The majority of people who come to Esalen want the freedom of coming to the baths, day or night, without restrictions on the baths' use. Attempts to segregate the tubs have failed. Massage crew practitioners have always had the option not to wear clothing while giving massages if the client is comfortable with the practitioner's nudity. In the massage reservation book it is stated, "Clothing has always been optional at the Esalen baths. We respect the wishes of our clients. If you are uncomfortable with your practitioner's nudity, please tell him or her. We will honor your preference."

The massage crew policy reinforces the concept of self-responsibility. For a few people, self-responsibility—responsibility for stating one's preferences directly, and for making arrangements to ensure one's comfort and sense of safety—is a new, and quite difficult, experience. But being given the opportunity to exercise self-responsibility is one of the best gifts Esalen has to offer. Make good use of it.

About the baths, playwright Lynne Kaufman wrote, "I've been at the baths naked for a period over 25 years. It was at Esalen, through the baths and through the massage, that I saw my body as natural. The amazing thing is that once people take off their clothes, there is more commonality. It was the clothing that made for differences, when released from that, they were just other organisms. What I saw was an acceptance of all kinds of body types, which was a very different experience: it was evolutionary. You see the youthful bodies, the old men and women—you see life."

Brother David Steindl-Rast, a Benedictine monk, writer, and spiritual teacher-in-residence at Esalen, wrote to me: "The spontaneous comment of many people when they see Esalen for the first time is, 'This is like Paradise.' We associate Paradise with innocent nudity. To wear clothes is not necessarily more 'modest' than to go naked. Latin 'modestus' means 'keeping the right measure' or 'acting appropriately.' A person who refuses to undress at a doctor's office does not act modestly, but prudishly, precisely inappropriately.
What makes nudity modest at the Esalen baths? Not that everybody does it. (That would be mere peer pressure, which could lead to puerile, immodest behavior.) Rather, for decades, Esalen has been an oasis of healthy acceptance of the body in the midst of a society whose attitude toward the body is puritanical, prurient, or both at the same time. (These two compulsive attitudes feed on each other and are both expressions of contempt for the body.)

Personally, I experience my freedom to be modestly (i.e. appropriately) nude at the Esalen baths, not as 'matter-of-fact' (as in a doctor's office), but as celebrative. Every time I take off my clothes here, I experience anew the joy of childlike simplicity.

A frequent Esalen guest relayed to me what being nude in the baths has meant to him. "I'm embarrassed to say that I was ever embarrassed about nudity. I grew up with nuns covered from head to foot. Esalen took the explosiveness out of nudity. Here, people didn't behave as if it were something special – there was a relaxed feeling. It helped break down a barrier that I wish never had been there in the first place.

'In the Judeo-Christian culture, there are only three figures that traditionally have been depicted naked: Adam and Eve, and Jesus on the cross. In these cases, the nudity is meant to emphasize their shame and degradation. In the case of Adam and Eve, it's the sign that they are fallen mortals; and in the case of Jesus, nudity is a sign of his humiliation by the Romans. There are some instances of Adam and Eve naked before the fall, but even that indicates a long-gone state of grace which is unattainable to us. Paradise is irretrievably lost, and you can't get it back, even by going all the way to the west coast of the United States.'

Psychologist Allen Kanner addressed some of the potential difficulties of being naked in the baths: "Touching others may mean nothing to you, but it can cause of lot of discomfort to another person: many people who come to the tubs are bathing nude for the first time. Gestures, and subtle but inviting language, can be ambiguous in nature. Their meaning may be clear to you, but not to others, and it best to err on the cautious side. Kanner goes on to say that men and women experience power differences and a woman is more vulnerable naked. "You have to stick your head in the sand to ignore the differences in gender attitudes and experiences. Women can feel threatened on the streets by the gaze of a man. How much more difficult, then, to be looked at by men while naked at the baths?"

Along the same line, workshop leader Laura Day urged guests to develop effective defenses to make the experience of communal nudity safe. "In an odd way, Esalen is about being at one with the environment. But even nature has to protect itself: roses have thorns."

Workshop leaders Judith Alexander and Nancy Rosanoff wrote the Esalen management a detailed letter about the experiences of participants in their recent workshop. "For some people, being at the baths brought up a sort of psychological distress and duress derived from a perception of having limited options regarding nudity and personal boundaries. We were told that the co-ed nudity at the baths was such a powerful personal shame trigger, that it led to a sense of inadequacy, disempowerment, and lack of choice. Some people in our group felt that even though the upfront Esalen policy was that clothing at the baths was optional, the actual use of bathing suits was so rare as to be perceived as weird and would be an embarrassing thing to do."

One participant in the above-mentioned workshop was uncomfortable being at the baths; as unfortunate as this was, it prompted a collaborative process in the group which had several beneficial results. The intensive group process led to increased empathy and understanding in a number of participants, especially the men, by allowing an intimate look into another person's sense of shame; the group developed an excellent strategy for going to the baths; and the individual who felt uncomfortable was given positive reinforcement for approaching difficult problems with hope.

For many guests, these feelings and issues don't come up at all. Some may be surprised to know that there are rules, but there are, and they are simple: Be respectful of others, and restrict your nudity to the following locations on the grounds: the baths (including dressing room and massage areas); within the pool enclosure; inside guest and staff housing; and inside workshop meeting rooms, on the few occasions when nudity is incorporated in the workshop content. Nudity is not permitted on the lawn, in the lodge, in the parking lots, etc. Your process may hinge on baring all on a given day, but the location of your unveiling must be in one of the above-mentioned preserves.

Further, we should not overemphasize nudity as a symbol for freedom and enlightenment, a temptation which represents a backlash against the Western convention of associating nudity with humiliation. Nudity is not freedom: we are always naked, and draping ourselves does not make us less free. Our need to hide, all of the time, behind a variety of decorative devices and professional excuses and whatever status we've managed to fluff up around ourselves, our need to avoid one another at all costs, is what makes us less free. Taking our clothes off lies a few steps short of authentic liberation.

Somewhere between humiliation and enlightenment lies the ordinary experience of going to the baths: spending a quiet hour in proximity to a few dozen naked strangers and possibly some friends, and watching one's reaction to that; observing what is easy and what is not; and both challenging and being gentle with one's own sense of boundaries.

Brother David Steindl-Rast has said, "God knows how urgently our deep innocence needs to be encouraged today. Nudity is a simple way of experiencing this innocence. Esalen is one of the rare places in our warped world where this can be done safely, festively, naturally."

Everyone who comes to Esalen has the opportunity to contribute toward making this possible, both for themselves and others. We welcome you in this spirit.

—Sharon Thom serves as Esalen's Chief Executive Officer.

Suggestions for Self-Care at the Esalen Baths

- Practice self-responsibility, reviewing your attitudes and needs in advance of going to the baths.
- Go to the baths with friends or other members of your workshop. It only takes the kindness of one other person to make everything go smoother.
- Wear a swimming suit to the baths. This is most effective if several friends wear suits together. No one has to know which of the group feels the need to be covered.
- If the communal showers and dressing areas are intimidating to you, shower in your room before going to the baths and after receiving a massage. Wear a terry cloth robe to the baths, and you can remain veiled to the edge of your tub.
- Visit the baths at the less popular times, during meals and while workshops are in session. Being given the opportunity to exercise self-responsibility is one of the best gifts Esalen has to offer.

The Esalen Catalog (1962-1993) available via the Educational Resources Information Center (ERIC)

Since 1962 there have been 106 issues of The Esalen Catalog. A Friends of Esalen project, organized by Ted Brandhorst and Deborah Miller, has collected these issues and entered them into the bibliographic database of the U.S. Department of Education's Educational Resources Information Center (ERIC), where it is identified by the Accession Number/Order Number ED 347118. ERIC records are announced in the monthly abstract journal Resources in Education (RIE) and the entire database can be searched online via DIALOG and BRIS, and on CD-ROM via SilverPlatter and DIALOG products.

Anyone interested in The Esalen Catalog as human potential movement historical source material for research purposes can now obtain the complete thirty-one year set from ERIC's document delivery arm, the ERIC Document Reproduction Service (EDRS, 7420 Fullerton Road, Suite 110, Springfield, Virginia 22153-2852; 1-800-443-3742).

ESALEN SEMINARS

Week of January 1-6

The Tao of Music Improvisation and Movement Meditation
Chungliang Al Huang & David Darling
The leaders will continue their traditional New Year’s celebration with music and Tai Ji during the southern migration of gray whales and monarch butterflies. Chungliang Al Huang will lead participants each morning in Tai Ji meditation and Chi Gong breathing exercises in the fresh ocean air while David Darling plays Bach on the cello. Everyone is invited to rediscover the fundamentals of creative expression and the revitalization of body, mind, and spirit through Tai Ji dancing and music.

Recommended listening: Darling, Cycles, Journal October, Minor Blue, and Rhythm and Blues Suite.

Recommended reading and viewing: Huang, Embrace Tiger, Return to Mountain and Quantum Soup: Fortune Cookies in Crisis; Living Tao Videos (217-337-6113).

Feeling and Innovation
Dale Cummings & Karel Samsom
When we liberate our capacity to respond emotionally, new realms of creativity open up to us. Discovering new solutions in private and work-oriented settings can transform leisure and job activities and enliven our experiences. How these two themes interconnect will be the focus of this workshop.

The workshop will use a neo-Reichian approach to emotional release, as well as play, creativity, role-playing, music, dance, and discussion, to tap into feelings and innovative capacities. A period of individual Radix work in a small group setting will provide a safe environment of emotional support and release. As negative feelings are worked through, active creativity can emerge.

Dale Cummings, a neo-Reichian therapist, and Karel Samsom, a teacher of innovation, have for many years integrated these themes into their personal and professional lives. Through their focus on feelings and creativity, this workshop offers encouragement and practical ideas for reinvigorating personal and work experiences and for pursuing exciting ideas and new (ad)ventures in daily life.

Mending the Fragmented Self: Soul Retrieval and Shamanic Practices
Sandra Ingerman & Carol Proudfoot-Edgar
Shamanism is the oldest spiritual system used for healing, problem-solving, and the general well-being of both the individual and the community. From a shamanic perspective, emotional and physical “dis-spiritedness” often results from “soul-loss,” a trauma that keeps us dissociated from life, our bodies, our relationships, and from feeling our connection with the natural world.
This workshop will involve both soul retrieval and shamanic methods for integrating retrieved parts. Workshop space is available for 12 participants, each of whom will have a private session with a workshop leader acting in the role of the shaman to spiritually retrieve parts lost in life traumas. Workshop space is also available for others who have already had a soul retrieval done.

The major focus of the workshop involves elements of core shamanism and practices involved in the reintegration of retrieved parts. The shamanic journey method and other practices for accessing important information for one's healing will be taught. Activities will include rituals and ceremonies focusing on "release and renewal" as each individual discovers her/his own personal vision of well-being. There will be an emphasis on raising and using the power of the circle for personal healing and growth.

Please bring a bandanna, a journal, and drums and rattles (if you have them).

Sports Massage

David Streeter & Esalen Massage Staff

This workshop will focus on aspects of sports massage that prove useful in other massage modalities. The curriculum includes: anatomy, to provide understanding of the rhythmic coordination of muscles working together; cross-fiber or cross-friction massage, simple strokes that promote healthy muscle tissue; and trigger point massage, to locate and relieve sensitive and congested points in muscle bundles and tendons. Trigger point work has proven beneficial in reducing myofascial pain caused by chronic tension.

Participants will progress through a study of the entire musculoskeletal system via brief lectures, hands-on practice, and one-to-one instruction. This workshop takes a simplified approach to what is usually a complex subject. It will give participants a better idea of just what lies beneath their hands, and how to communicate more effectively for the individual participant.

Contact is the appreciation of differences.

— Fritz Perls

And the recognition of similarities.

— Richard Price

This workshop is designed to introduce the various practices of Esalen to first-time participants or to those renewing their acquaintance with Esalen. Emphasis is on finding those approaches to self-awareness that work most effectively for the individual participant. Sessions may include: meditation, sensory awareness, gestalt practice, group process, art, movement, and massage. There is also time to explore the natural magnificence of the Big Sur coast.

Somatics: Mastery of Muscles and Emotions

Eleanor Criswell Hanna

This workshop will explore the neuromuscular responses to emotional states—the somatics way to internal mastery of muscles and emotions—and the joy that comes with the body's renewed awareness and freedom. Guided somatic exercises and individual sessions with practitioners trained by Thomas Hanna will give participants the opportunity to experience this wonderful work. Dyad practice is included.

C.E. credit is available; see pages 60-61. $380

Embrace Tiger, Return to Mountain: Tai Ji Intensive

Chungliang Al Huang & Living Tao Staff

This workshop offers New Year renewal with fundamentals of Tai Ji practice. Chungliang Al Huang will share the crystallization of his most essential learnings. He will lead participants in sunrise movement meditation, five elements form, Chinese Chi Gong breathing, and life force revitalization exercises. There will also be Taoist philosophical and aesthetic dialogues and discourses.

Join the music, dancing, and celebration!

Recommended reading: Huang, Quantum Soup: Fortune Cookies in Crisis and Embrace Tiger, Return to Mountain; with Watts, Tao: The Watercourse Way.

Reinventing Love

Robert Solomon & Heather Maycock Ogilvy

"Reinventing Love" is an interpersonal probe into the most highly valued of all passions, its promise and its disappointments. The workshop will emphasize the essential creativity of love and the need to express and "reinvent" an emotion that is not torn between defensive individualism and independence. The group will explore the myths of love in order to find out why love goes wrong, why we choose the wrong partners, and how to choose the right one in order for love to succeed.

Participants will examine the connection between intimacy and anger, and the fragile connection between love and dependency. Individuals will be encouraged to explore their own experience and discuss the myths and images that have contributed to our most intimate (and sometimes most dangerous) feelings. Above all, the aim will be to understand why love is so important to us and why it cannot be abandoned.

Rituals of Transformation

Paul Rebillet & Audrey Savage

People are continually approaching thresholds, transition points from one state to another. To live is to change. Unfortunately, we have a tendency to resist change, to cling to the familiar, to remain stuck at the threshold. This resistance eventually causes us much stress and pain.

Rituals can prepare people for change and help heal the passages that were not completed in the past. A ritual awakens within the psyche the archetypal patterns of change—it teaches the participant how to change. By acting out the ritual, people learn, not only in their minds but in their hearts and the movements of their bodies, the process of transformation.

Participants will look at what they want to transform in their lives, what they need to say goodbye to, and what new steps they need to take in order to cross their present threshold. Small groups will work together to design and enact individual rituals to support this healing process.

Just as the body can move from one position into another, so can the full being: hearts can move, minds can move. Joseph Campbell said that when someone discovers his or her authentic path, the way seems blessed with magic. To find this way is the work of "Rituals of Transformation." $380

Week of January 8-13

Body Poetry East and West

Chungliang Al Huang & Brother David Steindl-Rast

The first Esalen workshop that Chungliang and Brother David gave together turned into a feast of aliveness. This year, these two bridgebuilders between East and West will lead participants through the basic sequence of the great Taoist Book of Changes. Through both Tai Ji body movement and poetry, participants will explore the flow of Tao in the I Ching as a power to transform and to heal mind and body.

Esalen provides a unique environment for this weeklong celebration of life: ocean, garden, hot springs, ancient trees, and human companionship all help us to find once again the hidden springs of deep joy and to release the powers of creativity. $740

Mary Goldenson (Devaranti) & Gustavo Rabin

The only certainty in life is change, yet we often resent our transitions because of patterns of fear and self-denial. Old beliefs keep us stuck in our resentments, unsuccessful marriages, friendships, and careers, and can cause illness, sorrow, and the inability to forgive. Transitions are crossroads in our lives that give us the opportunity to take time out and reconnect with our truth. It is never too late to change. Transitions are doors to the renewal of our passions, courage, and commitments.

This workshop will present you with ways to help complete the past, be open to the present, and create a future. Participants will experience a safe, supportive environment that includes taking risks, intense body work, gestalt imagery, dance, and meditation, in order to support the transitions that keep us committed to the process of discovering ourselves. $740

Drawing on the Right Side of the Brain

Lynda Greenberg

In order to draw, previous art training is not needed and manual dexterity is not required. All that is necessary to draw is to learn to see. This workshop teaches basic strategies of seeing with an intensive combination of lectures and studio exercises that pack a semester-long art course into five days.

Following the lesson plan of Drawing on the Right Side of the Brain by Dr. Betty Edwards, the lectures explain the principles of visual perception and creativity that allow the student to successfully master the studio exercises. The studio exercises in turn lead to the integration of perceptual skills and the ability to produce high-quality finished drawings. Since it is the right side of the brain that processes spatial information, exercises are presented to "trick" the left—domain of linear data like language, naming, and categorizing—into surrendering control.

In a carefully sequenced process, participants are taught ways of seeing that enable them to skillfully draw their perceptions. More important, these new strategies of thinking are useful in general problem-solving. Consequently, the workshop does not teach "techniques of drawing" in a narrow sense; it teaches how to see in the broader sense, and how to record one's perceptions in drawings.

The Art of Talking and Listening

Mudita Nisker & Dan Clurman

Every day we swim in an ocean of words, talking and listening. Yet many people can barely tread water with their communication skills. Making yourself understood and understanding others is a subtle and precise art, yet it is often a neglected part of our education. Fortunately, you don't have to be a born communicator; it's a skill you can learn.

This workshop will teach you new ways to deal with many situations, from negotiating with your partner, boss, or associates to engaging your child's cooperation. Using discussion, demonstration, and role-playing, participants will explore ways to:

- Give and receive criticism skillfully
- Send clear, concise messages which invite cooperation
- Share difficult to express feelings and still maintain good will
- Improve listening skills even in tough situations
- Identify key assumptions and their effect on communication patterns
- Develop nonverbal skills to enhance spoken messages
- Experience more delight in being with others

This workshop draws from cognitive psychology, critical thinking, systems theory, and Eastern philosophy. The objective will be to help each individual cultivate the ability to identify communication hot spots and work them out constructively. In the process, you can discover your own truth and honor the truth of others.

C.E. credit is available; see pages 60-61. $740

Toward an Embodied Wisdom

Brita Ostrom & Staff

The significant problems we face cannot be solved at the same level of thinking we were at when we created them.

— ALBERT EINSTEIN

The growing field of somatics—from soma, the experienced body—can help individuals to identify and open new sources of personal guidance. Rather than abide by the old adage "Use your head!", this workshop focuses on the body/mind reservoir of experienced knowledge to find creative solutions and direction in life. $740
The Awakened Mind:
Brainwave Training
Anna Wise
Inside each person lives a wealth of knowledge, capacities, and power rarely transmitted to the conscious mind. Brainwave training, combined with meditation and biofeedback monitoring, can help develop these deeper powers, allowing access to greater creativity, reduced stress, and a deeper awareness and understanding of the inner self.

After assessing the brainwave patterns of drives of unusually highly functioning people, C. Maxwell Cade of London's Institute for Psychobiological Research began to see similarities in the patterns of optimal states of mind. Drawing upon Cade's work, Anna Wise has developed a training program to help access these optimum states.

Different methods of meditation, visualization, and psychophysiological relaxation affect our brainwaves in particular ways, as do specific acts such as tongue, eye, and body positions.

In this workshop you will learn techniques for brainwave development and management, and begin to determine which methods of practice are best for your particular brainwave pattern. You will also address how you can use these optimum states for your own creativity, mental flexibility, self-healing, problem solving, and spiritual development.

The Mind Mirror EEG will be used to demonstrate brainwave patterns, and each participant will be able to use an Electrical Skin Resistance Meter to measure the depth of arousal or relaxation of the nervous system.

Weekend of January 13-15
The Further Evolution of Human Nature
Michael Murphy & George Leonard
This weekend seminar will be a wide-ranging discussion of universal and human evolution, based upon Michael Murphy's The Future of the Body and George Leonard's The Transformation.
Among the topics to be explored:
• The relations between this evolving universe and world-transcendent realities
• Human capacities for extraordinary life
• The elements of transformative practice

The leaders will explore their latest ideas about our possibilities for growth and radical transformation. Suggestions for practice, as well as theoretical material, will be presented.

$380

Introduction to Gestalt Practice
Eric Erickson
The Way, when declared
Seems so thin and flavorless.
Nothing to look at, nothing to hear —
And when used — is inexhaustible.
— Lao Tzu

Gestalt practice is a form — nonanalytic, non-coercive, nonjudgmental — evolving out of the work of Fritz Perls. The work integrates ways of personal clearing and development that are both ancient and modern. To the extent that awareness is made primary relative to action, gestalt practice has a strong relationship to some forms of meditation and visualization.

It is explicitly understood that participants are not patients but persons actively consenting to work (or play) in awareness. The leader functions to reflect, clarify, and respect whatever emerges in this process. The aim is unfoldment, wholeness, and growth, rather than adjustment, cure, or accomplishment.

Much of the power of the practice is brought forth by concentrating attention on the seeming simplicity of our moment-to-moment experience.

Through group exercises, meditations, and open seat work, this workshop will introduce participants to the gestalt practice approach.

Recommended reading: Perls, Gestalt Therapy
Verbatim; Lao Tzu, Tao te Ching.

Noble Visions: The Committed Life
Bill Puka
What is required to follow our sense of right work and right living, to live inspired lives as inspiring people? This seminar seeks to affirm and rekindle the commitment to living our values and pursuing our ideals.

The group will share its visions of personal integrity — what it means to live up to oneself, to do worthwhile work, to treat all people with respect and concern. Participants will discuss how to enhance and pursue these visions in everyday life, sharing their own practical methods. The group will also draw pragmatic lessons from such exemplary models as Gandhi, M.L. King, Mother Theresa, and Dorothy Day, plus a host of obscure "local heroes" who put extraordinary ideals into "mundane" daily practice — and love it. There will be videos of many of these models, known and unknown.

In addition, the group will consider spiritual and conceptual views of personally inspiring values, nonjudgmental ethics, and graceful "character" development. Psychological research on moral development across the life cycle will be presented.

Bring any personal dilemmas being faced at work, at home, or in self-explorations that the group might address together. $380

Week of January 15-20

Advanced Training in Shamanism and Shamanic Healing
Michael Harner & Sandra Ingerman

Intimate Connections
Mariah Fenton Gladis

Creating stable and fulfilling relationships is a challenge that everyone faces. To be successful, human relating must be understood and accepted as an activity, an ability that requires movement, purpose, emotional capacity, and extensive contact skills. People often believe that good relating evolves naturally, but they discover in the routine of living with families, friends, and lovers that, in truth, they have not been adequately prepared to meet the demands of loving relationships.

This workshop will focus on the nature and basic requirements of healthy relationships. It will offer participants opportunities to assess their abilities and disabilities, to develop awareness, and to practice risking positive action with others. It is for anyone who has "hit the wall" in a relationship or who has experienced being stuck at some seemingly impenetrable contact boundary and wants to break through. Particularly helpful for adult children of dysfunctional families, ACAs, and human relations professionals, this experiential and didactic workshop will blend individual and group gestalt work, spiritual healing, bodywork, and personal metaphor.

Vipassana Meditation and the Teachings of Thich Nhat Hanh
Christopher Reed

How is it possible to live with the awareness of what is happening in our society and to our world? This is an extraordinary time to be alive on Earth. Either we destroy ourselves or we awaken together to our true nature, our profound interconnectedness — our Interbeing, as Thich Nhat Hanh calls it.

For many there is a deep grief, for all of us a nagging malaise. We are destroying our environment, our own home, and neither denial nor activism can fully address the pain and discontent of it.

The practice of Buddhism is a way of transforming old notions of self and self-interest so that we may truly live. Vipassana means "looking deeply." When we truly look we see that we are a part of life, that it is ours, that we also belong to it. We have the capacity, the right, even the obligation to respond to its call, rather than to just react out of fear, anger, loneliness, compulsivity.

This practice is an invitation to engage with life, to break down notions of separation. The workshop will include instruction in sitting and walking meditation as well as interactive exercises and dialogue.

Finding Inspired Work in Midlife
Peller Marion

At the age of 93, as he was accepting the American Comedy Award, George Burns said, "The first half of my life has been good, and I look forward to the second half being even better." While most people don't live to the age of 93, some, like George Burns, remain charismatic and magnetic. Others are drawn to them, largely because their life seems effortless, playful, and meaningful.

How we define ourselves and what success means is important to what kind of individuals we grow into as we age into the second half of our lives. Participants in this workshop will explore these issues through structured exercises and open exploration of topics such as, "What am I dissatisfied with? Who am I? What's my definition of success?" The leader will coach participants to create a vision for the second half of their lives based on internal values that are meaningful and significant.

What this workshop offers is a playful and rich way to reevaluate one's work and relationships to gain clarity, focus, and direction.

Creating Exact Moments of Healing
Mariah Fenton Gladis

Adult children of alcoholic, dysfunctional, or abusive families (ACAs) must walk a road of recovery that requires determination, lifelong commitment, and the creation of specific moments of healing. This workshop offers participants an opportunity to take a major step toward health, helping them define a plan for necessary moments they must create so they can move forward, transforming their personal history from one of liability to one of strength and wisdom. Focus will be on the promotion of healing in four fundamental relationships:

- With oneself — developing awareness, freedom from addictions, and healing of the body and soul from the residual effects of trauma
- With others — improving one's capacity for moving out of isolation and into direct, open communication and trust; expanding intimacy skills while securing healthy boundaries

It is recommended for professionals in diverse areas who want to revitalize and renew their vision.

- With others — improving one's capacity for moving out of isolation and into direct, open communication and trust; expanding intimacy skills while securing healthy boundaries

It is recommended for professionals in diverse areas who want to revitalize and renew their vision.

Finding Inspired Work in Midlife
Peller Marion

At the age of 93, as he was accepting the American Comedy Award, George Burns said, "The first half of my life has been good, and I look forward to the second half being even better." While most people don't live to the age of 93, some, like George Burns, remain charismatic and magnetic. Others are drawn to them, largely because their life seems effortless, playful, and meaningful.

How we define ourselves and what success means is important to what kind of individuals we grow into as we age into the second half of our lives. Participants in this workshop will explore these issues through structured exercises and open exploration of topics such as, "What am I dissatisfied with? Who am I? What's my definition of success?" The leader will coach participants to create a vision for the second half of their lives based on internal values that are meaningful and significant.

What this workshop offers is a playful and rich way to reevaluate one's work and relationships to gain clarity, focus, and direction.

It is recommended for professionals in diverse areas who want to revitalize and renew their vision.

Creating Exact Moments of Healing
Mariah Fenton Gladis

Adult children of alcoholic, dysfunctional, or abusive families (ACAs) must walk a road of recovery that requires determination, lifelong commitment, and the creation of specific moments of healing. This workshop offers participants an opportunity to take a major step toward health, helping them define a plan for necessary moments they must create so they can move forward, transforming their personal history from one of liability to one of strength and wisdom. Focus will be on the promotion of healing in four fundamental relationships:

- With oneself — developing awareness, freedom from addictions, and healing of the body and soul from the residual effects of trauma
- With others — improving one's capacity for moving out of isolation and into direct, open communication and trust; expanding intimacy skills while securing healthy boundaries

It is recommended for professionals in diverse areas who want to revitalize and renew their vision.

C.E. credit is available; see pages 60-61.
• In the world — moving away from chaos and deprivation toward stability and abundance
• Spiritually — searching for the meaning of one's history and accessing that part of the self that can utilize universal blessings

This workshop will be experiential and didactic, blending individual and group gestalt work, music, spiritual practices, and bodywork. A step-by-step recovery process developed by the leader will be incorporated throughout the workshop. The atmosphere will be one of trust and mutual support. This workshop is also appropriate for professionals who work with ACAs.

Life Energy Process

Stephano Sabetti

The Life Energy Process (LEP) is a spiritually-oriented approach to self-development and professional growth based on Eastern and Western energy dynamics. Specially designed subtle and intensive movements (micro-motions) can increase energy flow and lead to the discharge of nonessential processes in the body (repressed emotions, chemical toxins, etc.). Each of us has an energy frequency that can be felt when attuned through LEP. This unique vibration helps to center and ground, as well as to find clearer direction and meaning in daily life. Each participant will have a chance to feel her/his unique energy process and explore it through a step-by-step process inquiry.

Life Energy Process includes: dance, theater, massage, pool work, and various other forms. The workshop is of particular interest to professionals and laypersons who are excited by the integration of theory, pleasure, and hands-on application of energy concepts. $740

Song of the Soul: A Workshop for Singers and Musicians

William Pennell Rock & Arthur Samuel Joseph

Is there a way to make music with the freedom of a child at play while expressing the very depths of the soul? Here is a multifaceted approach that answers this question with a resounding "Yes!"

Participants will receive vocal training using Vocal Awareness, taught by its creator, Arthur Samuel Joseph. This method approaches voice as a metaphor for life, so that participants can not only have a profound vocal/musical experience, but also learn how to begin to unlock the door to the self — to self-expression, to self-esteem, to the core of who we are and how we express it through voice.

William Pennell Rock will lead participants through structured exercises designed to enable individuals to express themselves musically without censoring or inhibition. Participants will then be guided on an adventure in which they will sing their various subpersonalities — the hero, the monster, the magic helper.

This blend of gestalt, archetypal psychodrama, and vocal technique will culminate in an opportunity for each participant to bring together the subpersonalities and sing the story of her/his life essence in a short improvised "psycho-opera."

This experience is designed to benefit the most experienced singers as well as those who have never sung before. All musicians interested in improvisation are welcome and should bring their instruments.

Weekend of January 27-29

Ritual and Sacred Space

Malidoma & Sobonfu Somé

Malidoma Somé was raised in the village of Dano in Burkina Faso, West Africa, and initiated in the ancestral tribal traditions of the Dagara culture as a medicine man and diviner. His name means "seeks friendship with strangers," which is his assignment from the tribal elders. Sobonfu Somé is also an initiated member of the Dagara tribe. She has experienced being invited and embraced into womanhood, as the Dagara welcome each girl upon her first menstruation in an ancient rite of passage. Village elders sent Malidoma and Sobonfu to the West to carry on the teachings of their culture.

The Dagara practice ritual to connect with the hidden ancestral realm, with the vibration of nature, with oneself, community, and Spirit. It is the presence of Spirit and one's connection with it that distinguishes between true ritual space and mere ceremony.

This workshop offers practical experiential work that serves to open participants to the art and craft of ritual practices common to the indigenous world of Africa and elsewhere. Group members will be shown how to be ritual-alert, how to heal with ritual, and how to design and perform it.

This is an experience for all who would like to strengthen their sense of community through the design and enactment of ritual. $380

Powerfully Presenting Yourself

Mary Goldenson (Devarani), Paula Shaw & Robert Corff

Why are some people so inspiring and impactful when they speak? What inhibits us from delivering our message? This workshop will explore the inhibitions to self-expression and communication, and help participants move beyond them with more freedom in both personal and professional life. It is designed for people who want to develop a more powerful personal and public presentation, and better professional and business communication skills.

The workshop leaders combine their expertise in the fields of psychology and the performing arts to guide you through this exciting adventure. The focus will be on self-exploration through individual and group work. Participants will use voice and body to express themselves with more power and passion.

Courage, passion, and clarity need not be restricted to rare moments in life. Learn to express yourself more fully and experience the satisfaction of being more authentic and self-assured. This process can help awaken your dreams and invigorate your life.

Intuition and Perception: Extending the Boundaries

Keith Hanary & Darlene Moore

Most of us have had experiences in which we appeared to be aware of information that was not immediately available to our five familiar senses. Such experiences usually emerge spontaneously and can range from simple hunches, to feeling in touch with a loved one at a distance, to premonitions in which we seem to be inexplicably aware of impending events. Labeling these experiences "psychic" does not explain them, but makes this fundamentally normal aspect of human awareness appear to be some sort of occult or supernatural process. Yet such experiences most likely emerge from a deep interconnectedness... between consciousness and the physical world that is entirely natural and independent of any single philosophical or religious system.

This workshop will teach specific techniques of extended perception to allow this capacity to become a consciously available resource in everyday life, rather than a strictly spontaneous phenomenon. Starting with the basics of learning how to manage mental impressions, participants will practice separating their most relevant feelings and images from various forms of "mental noise" in a variety of extended perception scenarios. The workshop will also present a more advanced technique that involves using one's own "mental noise" to help guide intuition so participants can develop their own inner language for processing intuitive information. In addition, a specialized series of exercises will also focus on combining extended perception with focused relaxation to induce out-of-body experiences.

A Massage Workshop for Women
Ingrid May & Ellen Watson

This is a weekend massage workshop for women of all ages and backgrounds who wish to learn in a nurturing and supportive setting how to give and receive massage. The MAX: Stretching the Limits of Your Self-Expression
Paula Shaw

"The MAX" is an outrageous voyage through your own humanity — a journey to turn yourself inside out and explore the extent of your self-expressive power. It employs a variety of acting, observation, and communication methods designed to expand your limits "to the max" and move you into a new arena of personal creativity and self-expression.

Formerly offered only to Esalen's in-house community, "The MAX" is extremely challenging. Participants must commit to a rigorous exploration of the sources of their emotional limitations. Seminar hours will be longer than usual early in the week (and shorter later in the week). Participants will work individually in front of the room, playing to and with other members of the group. There will be exercises that use raw emotion, role-playing, and "dress-up" assignments.

This workshop is an opportunity to experience yourself in a way you may have dreamed about but never imagined possible. The game is risk, the premise: You're either daring or dead, and the most unsafe thing you can do in life is to play it safe. Clearly, this course is not for the faint of heart, but it is full of heart, humor, and irreverence, and is constructed with the understanding that this kind of risk-taking requires a very safe workspace.

"The MAX" is a thrilling celebration of who you are — light side, dark side, all of you. If your heart beats faster when you think of taking this workshop, then maybe it's just the thing to do. Come play!

Please note: Due to the intense and sequential nature of this workshop, attendance at all sessions is necessary. $740

Dzogchen — Awakening the Buddha Within: A Silent Meditation & Self-Inquiry Retreat
Lama Surya Das

Buddhism teaches awareness techniques for awakening to inner freedom. Dzogchen directly introduces the inherent freedom, purity, and perfection of innate Buddha-Mind. Dzogchen — Tibetan for "the Natural Great Perfection" — is considered the summit of all Buddhist teachings: swift, easy, joyful, and direct.

Through meditation, chanting, energy exercises, self-inquiry, and personal instruction (including talks and individual interviews), this quintessential Vajrayana path will be introduced and practiced according to the nonsectarian way of the Practice Lineage of Tibetan Buddhism, relying on authentic Tibetan texts, meditation manuals, oral tradition, and personal experience. Constant themes of this nondual awareness practice include appreciating the true joy of meditation, the incredible lightness of being, and opening to effortless.

This silent meditation retreat offers a unique opportunity for experienced practitioners of meditation as well as beginners to better know themselves through the timeless wisdom of this ancient Tibetan teaching. Much of the day will be devoted to sitting practice, interspersed with both guided and walking meditations, chanting, self-inquiry, question-and-answer periods, and breath/energy relaxation exercises.

Please note: This retreat will be conducted in silence. $740

Self-Empowerment and Purification: The Farther Reaches of Gestalt
Julian Silverman

"We badly need a new orientation, a new perspective," wrote Fritz Perls. "We have graduated from the infant's, 'I can't help myself', to the adult's, 'I can't help myself because...'. But psychology and psychiatry were never meant to be after-the-fact justifications for continuing..."
neurotic behavior, behavior which does not permit the individual to live up to the maximum of his capacities."

In his autobiography, Peels speculated that a new form of psychotherapy would emerge and that it would entail some kind of cleansing or purification process. He was not clear, however, how it would work. In actuality, he had prepared the way quite well for the next form.

In this workshop the boundaries of the "next form" are defined and examined using both didactic and experiential sessions. Two interrelated processes are emphasized: the first, a purification process, has the purpose of "wiping the slate clean" of mental debris; the second has the purpose of identifying a personal center from which to act with power.

Introductory Workshop Principle #1: Take responsibility for every emotion, every movement you make, every thought you have.

The Joy of Working from Home: Making a Life while Making a Living

Jeff Berner

Aware business and professional people are making the transition to corporate telecommuting, and some are earning a living entirely where they live: at home — many by choice, others for career and emotional survival.

In this workshop, Jeff Berner becomes your "personal trainer," helping you balance the practical nuts and bolts of working from home with the larger lifestyle issues of managing and enhancing the quality of your personal, family, and leisure time.

For the entrepreneur, the workshop covers marketing your service, product, or skill, selecting equipment, negotiating, money management, and everything that makes "the rubber meet the road." And for those telecommuting for a corporation, the workshop teaches the politics of remaining "in the loop" while out of sight.

The emphasis for both the independent contractor and the "flextime" employee is on the human factors that bedevil everyone, whether starting out or already working part- or full-time at home: controlling space and time; helping family and friends understand your new way of life; if, when, and how to work with a spouse; avoiding workaholism — or sloth; and reaching customers and clients.

This workshop is for anyone interested in taking advantage of the more independent "workstyle" that was the traditional American way of life until just a few generations ago. You can call Jeff Berner to discuss the workshop at 707-878-2000, weekdays, 9 a.m. to 3 p.m., Pacific Time. $740

Fire in the Earth: Poetry, Silence, and the Heart's Desire

David Whyte

This is a workshop concerned with remembering the half-forgotten and neglected desires that are central to our personal creativity and destiny. Fire has been an abiding image for creativity throughout human history, but the first steps into that flame depend upon our ability to rest in the silence present in our own bodies. These disciplines of silence are a way of understanding desire at a level deeper than we ordinarily experience.

Much of modern life distances us from our bodies, presenting the body as a problem to overcome rather than the center of our experience. In hard times we often find it more difficult to remember rest and silence, and it's during these times that we need them most. This will be a time to remember, through poetry, silence, voice work, and movement, the priorities closest to our heart's desire.

Ability or knowledge of poetry is welcomed, but not the least bit necessary. $380

Acupressure Energy Workshop

Pauline Kirby

Traditional acupuncture is a healing art and science that teaches one how to see the entire human being in relationship to the body, mind, and spirit. It is a form of healing that emphasizes balance and harmony, focusing on health rather than disease.

This workshop will explore the five elements used in traditional Chinese medicine, following the metaphor that the body is like a garden rather than a machine. The group will look closely at the body's energy system and discuss how these meridian pathways can enhance one's health. Concepts of traditional acupuncture and acupressure will be demonstrated and discussed, including pulse diagnosis, the flow of meridian pathways, point location, an in-depth study of the five elements, and special application for stress reduction and health maintenance.

Surfing the Internet: On the Digital Frontier

Douglas Rushkoff

The computer is more than a tool: it is a gateway to entirely new realms of experience. Immersion into the data ocean need not be cold, impersonal, or confusing. In fact, for over 25 million people worldwide, cyberspace... is as comforting as sitting around a campfire telling stories, as liberating as embarking on a shamanic vision quest, and as engaging as forming a grassroots network of like-minded community members.

Douglas Rushkoff believes there is only one prerequisite for taking the leap into "virtual community": a willingness to take part. In two short, user-friendly days, he can bring even the most rigid technophobes to a theoretical and practical understanding of the way computers can provide access to facts, ideas, social action, and spiritual insight. No former computer knowledge is necessary; beginners and "power" users alike can delight in this refreshingly organic approach to the datasphere.

By the end of this "hands-on" workshop, participants can be proficient with computer equipment and online networks. Further, as newly active members of the online community, they will have gained a deeper understanding of how technology serves to forge new connections between people, promoting a Gaian sensibility, a less hierarchical social order, and a new renaissance of spirituality.

This week qualifies as a foundational training for the Four-Fold Way, a cross-cultural shamanic training program by Angeles Arrien.

Simple Truths about Struggle vs. Suffering

Alan Schwartz

When the human potential movement was transformed into New Age commerce, its simple truths were transformed into purchasing concepts. Example: Hundreds of millions of dollars are spent for foods and machines that will give the illusion of health. Example: We immerse ourselves into anything labeled "transpersonal" to locate some apex of self.

This week will be a return to the simple truths of the human potential movement. To get there is to recognize that struggle equals freedom and suffering equals bondage. There is pain on both paths! The difference is that struggle provides the freedom of enhanced contact with the universe, unfathomable though it may be; suffering leaves us in the bondage of futility if we choose to surrender to the commerce of fear-based lives. Struggle is characterized by movement, suffering by none.

Participants are asked to bring some thoughts about the following:

- Is my continual life process fueled by an active spirituality?
- Do my emotions eventually strengthen me or do they cause me continual pain?
- Does my physical movement ground me to contact with all living things?

Hoped for: as much risk as you can muster to produce as much honesty as you can. The workshop's spiritual/gestalt base will include connecting the physical with the emotional to produce a strengthening of that substance we call soul. We might even locate some pleasure in the struggle.

Introduction to Vipassana Meditation

James Baraz

Vipassana (insight) meditation is the practice described by the Buddha for developing wisdom, compassion, and peace. Vipassana, "to see things clearly," means being mindful of what is actually happening in the present moment. Using the breath, body sensations, through, and emotions as objects of attention, we can learn to be fully awake and bring a balanced awareness to all aspects of our lives.

Through vipassana meditation we experience the nature of reality as continuous change. When we see that all phenomena are impermanent, we can begin to let go of clinging to the pleasant or avoiding the unpleasant. We are then more capable of meeting each situation with spontaneity, fearlessness, and love.

Meditation also teaches us to see in each moment the interconnectedness of all things. Our hearts open to a natural expression of compassion and kindness.

Participants will be introduced to this method of meditation practice and the principles on which it is based. There will be periods of silent sitting and walking meditation, as well as discussion. As attention is brought to all activities at Esalen, individuals will continue to develop mindfulness through the weekend. This will provide a foundation for applying vipassana practice to everyday life.

C.E. credit is available; see pages 60-61. $380

Intuition and the Dance of Attention

Anne Armstrong & Randy Cherner

At the still point of the turning world, Neither flesh nor fleshless; Neither from nor towards; at the still point, there the dance is, But neither arrest nor movement. And do not call it fixity.

Where past and future are gathered. Neither movement from nor towards, Neither ascent nor decline. Except for the point, the still point, There would be no dance, and there is only the dance.

— T.S. Eliot, The Four Quartets

Intuition is a gift that everyone possesses. It takes many forms. The foundation for intuitive practice is the process of shifting one's attention in very precise ways to lead to enhanced awareness. Anne Armstrong's intuitive opening came through the psychic intuitive process, Randy Cherner's through movement and touch.
The aim of this workshop is for participants to reclaim their intuitive powers in all areas of their lives — personal, professional, and spiritual. Group members will learn to develop their intuitive styles through meditations, sensing practices, refined touch, aikido, and Feldenkrais exercises. This workshop is unique in its attention to intuitive style in both its psychic and somatic dimensions.

Crazy Wisdom: A Weekend of Philosophy and Laughter

Wes "Scoop" Nisker & Paul Krassner

Seriousness is the only refuge of the shallow.
— Oscar Wilde

This is an opportunity to spend a weekend having a real good time while exploring your own sense of humor and ability to play. Through the use of improvisational theater games, writing exercises, leader presentations, and group discussion, participants can become clowns, jesters, tricksters, and fools as they examine the lighter side of their life and times.

Workshop presentations will include coyote stories, Taoist and Zen humor, the writings of Mark Twain, as well as audio and videotape excerpts from great humorists such as Charlie Chaplin, Lenny Bruce, Nichols and May, Robin Williams, and Richard Pryor. Participants will also work in groups to develop a humorous theatrical presentation for our traditional Saturday night gathering.

You don't have to be funny to join this workshop, simply open to the playful possibilities of the moment. At least one belly laugh is guaranteed. $380

Writing About Our Lives: A Workshop for Women

Ellen Bass

The leader writes: "The philosophy behind this workshop experience is best expressed by Martha Graham who said, 'There is a vitality, a life-force, an energy, a quickening that is translated through you into action. And because there is only one of you in all time, this expression is unique. And if you block it, it will never exist through any other medium, and be lost. The world will not have it. It is not your business to determine how good it is, nor how valuable, nor how it compares with other expressions. It is your business to keep it yours clearly and directly, to keep the channel open.'"

"This workshop will help keep the channels open. It will be a supportive place to share our lives and work, our voice, our creativity. There will be time for writing and time for sharing and feedback. From beginners to experienced, all women writers are welcomed. Whether you are interested in poetry, fiction, nonfiction, journal writing, or just jotting down your thoughts, this workshop can help you open up and expand your world through writing.”

Note: Although Ellen Bass in known for her work with survivors of child sexual abuse, the focus of this workshop will not be on healing from trauma. Rather, it is a creative writing workshop in which women are free to write on any subject they choose. $380

Week of February 12-17

Craniosacral I

Robert Harris & Alix McLaughlin

Craniosacral Therapy is a gentle, non-invasive, hands-on technique that helps detect and correct an imbalance in the Craniosacral System, which may be the cause of sensory, motor, or intellectual dysfunction. It is used to treat a myriad of health problems including headaches, neck and back pain, TMJ dysfunction, chronic fatigue, motor coordination difficulties, eye problems, endogenous depression, hyperactivity, and central nervous system disorders.

Participants will learn the detailed anatomy and physiology of the Craniosacral System, its functions in health, and its relationship to the disease processes. Approximately one half of the class time will be "hands-on," developing the sensitive palpatory skills needed to detect subtle stimuli in the human body.

Class material will concentrate on palpation and its potential range as an evaluative and therapeutic process; fascial and soft tissue release techniques; and the pressurestat model which explains the mechanism of the Craniosacral System. Participants will learn a concise 10-step protocol for evaluation and treatment of the entire body. By the end of this intensive program, participants will be able to discover and localize significant restriction and imbalances in the Craniosacral System.

Playing the Edge

David Schiffman

In the early stages of growth, success seems to be its own reward. Excitement, vitality, and the willingness to face life boldly are often characteristics of those who are involved in new and successful ventures. To keep this spirit alive is not easy. The enormous pressure, the grinding routines, and the demands of substantial involvement can dispirit even the healthiest people. To listen to one's heart and know what's real requires the courage to pause. In this willingness to stop and listen to the deeper self live the true resources that guide and protect us.

The purpose of this week is to create a mood of sanctuary for people who are in transition and facing major changes in career, relationship, or matters of the spirit; those in need of a break from demanding stressful responsibilities; and individuals interested in breaking new ground in the areas of self-nurturance, intuitive functioning, and problem solving.

The process will be gently restorative, illuminating, and enlivening. The group intention will be to create a community based on trust and goodwill with emphasis on individual freedom. Traditional methods of self-inquiry (gestalt practice, bioenergetics, psychosynthesis) will be combined with innovative methods using music, meditation, poetry, and prayer to foster this spirit of living fully and comfortably. $740

The Dance of Tennis

Jena Marcovicci

How can we grow and expand our consciousness through athletics? The tragedy of sports in the West is that winning too often overshadows personal growth and the simple pleasure of playing. The participant is constantly bombarded with messages like "You won't be loved if you don't win." Nothing interferes with the joy of the athletic experience more than constantly focusing on the score while being totally at the mercy of the mind's inner critic.

In this workshop, participants can learn to break through the illusions and conditioning of our culture's win-lose syndrome. A supportive environment, gleaned from Eastern and Western meditative practices and sports psychology, will help participants access that state of mind called "the Zone," a state of grace, rhythm, and flow full of joy and clarity.

Through music and dance, yoga and Tai Chi, and using transformational psychology, participants will turn inward to their own authentic Un Viaje Interior

Gustavo Rabin & Sara Szpektor

Muchas veces emprendemos un viaje como una expresión metafórica de nuestra necesidad de un cambio interior. Es el momento en el que buscamos en el afuera, la respuesta que yace en nuestro interior. La claridad nos llega cuando tenemos el conocimiento, y con el conocimiento buscamos la comprensión. Así encontramos la armonía entre nuestro ser interior y el mundo exterior, lo aprendido y nuestra propia verdad.

En el conocimiento de uno mismo se encuentra la puerta por la cual salir de nuestros programas inconscientes, para relacionarnos desde un estado de libertad. Este workshop proveerá a los participantes la oportunidad de recorrer un proceso de exploración y crecimiento personal, afirmando la base sobre la cual ejercemos esa libertad y construimos nuestra vida, nuestros vínculos, nuestro ser.

Con este workshop, Esalen abre sus puertas a la comunidad de habla hispana para ofrecer el marco en el que recorrer ese viaje interior. A través de ejercicios gestálticos, proceso grupal, meditación y trabajo corporal, crearemos el medio adecuado y protegido en el cual transitar el sendero interior. Habrá también tiempo de explorar la espectacular Naturaleza que rodea a Esalen, los bosques y la costa de Big Sur.

Creado un puente con la comunidad de Esalen, invitados especialistas presentarán diferentes ideas y técnicas de desarrollo personal. Este workshop tendrá lugar totalmente en español, las presentaciones de los invitados serán traducidas simultáneamente.

Learning the Craft of Dreamwork

Stephen Aizenstat

Dreams can be imagined as looking-glass parables, each a complex story that reflects the personality and soul of the dreamer. This weekend's program will emphasize the healing potential of dreamwork. In so doing, the leader will review methods of dreamwork that consider both the personal and the collective unconscious.

New methods of dreamwork that take into account the world unconscious will be described. The world unconscious is seen as a deeper and broader dimension of the psyche and is imagined to contain the subjective inner natures (and subtle body) of all phenomena. It is believed that these inner subjective properties are reflected in the images of dreams and are, at an essential level, interrelated. It is at this level of the psyche that dream images provide access to an interconnected source of healing energy. This view, grounded in modern research and ancient wisdom, has practical implications for the use of dreams in physical and psychological healing.

Participants will learn how to employ specific methods of dreamwork which honor and actualize the healing potential of the psyche. Common dream themes, nightmares, lucid dreaming, archetypal imagery, and the recurring dream will all be discussed.

Chaos, Gaia, Eros: The New Biospheric Mentality and the Evolution of Consciousness

Ralph Abraham & William Irwin Thompson

This seminar will be a series of dialogues on the shift from the earlier Modern-Oceanic cultural ecology articulated between London, Paris, and New York, to the new Gaian-Biospheric mentality expressed in the emerging global consciousness, in which art, science, and religion converge. In this shift from the Galilean Dynamics of modernism to the Chaos Dynamics of the present, old oppositions such as mysticism and technology interact to create the evolutionary architecture of posthuman worlds. Join us for the first public dialogue of these well-known figures, chaos mathematician Abraham and cultural historian Thompson, on the most significant events of our time.

The Fire in the Dragon: On Being a Person in a Violent World

Stuart Twemlow and Ron Alexander

To survive and grow in this increasingly complex and violent world requires new skills, especially for leaders. This workshop will introduce those skills — in theory and in practice.

This is a program developed from a variety of successful projects designed to improve the quality of life and reduce violence in communities. These studies distilled two factors that enabled people to control violence and improve the quality of personal interactions: 1) an appeal to altruistic instincts, and 2) physical and attitudinal training similar to that of medieval warriors. This training enabled individuals to experience the truth of such concepts as the transience of phenomena, the basic similarity of all human beings, and the idea that "there is no enemy," i.e. all conflict is the externalization of an internal state. These concepts form the core of this workshop.

Elements from meditative arts and martial arts, both hard and soft, will be used to develop focus, integration of body/mind/spirit, enhancement of ki energy, self-defense, and attitudinal sets derived from Eastern and Western thought.

There will be intensive group work to highlight insight and reflection, to release outdated concepts of self, and to better appreciate the present moment as the place to live. The workshop will also utilize gestalt practice, meditation, and deep music to help release powerful emotions and create more strength, vitality, and fearlessness within the mind/body process.

Freeing the Poetic Imagination: Poetry Writing at Esalen
David Richo

Since ancient times, poetry has been associated with healing and intuitive wisdom. Poetry remains the soul’s language and everyone is capable of speaking it. It has the power to render immediate feelings in compelling rhythms of the imagination.

In this workshop, the group will use Jungian active imagination methods to locate personal metaphors and to visit the unopened rooms of the psyche. Images will be revealed — some that have lain dormant for decades, some that are lively in this moment.

The group will work with images that visualize — not words that conceptualize — in order to access the full spectrum of our inner colors. These images will be fashioned into a poetic diction faithful to our unique needs, visions, and goals. Participants will see how their story and especially its present chapter fit into a vaster volume of destiny. As Jung wrote: "Whoever speaks in primordial images evokes the beneficent forces...behind them."

No previous experience is necessary. Please bring ample paper. Your journal or dream journal may be helpful as a resource. No one will be obliged to share what he/she has written, but everyone will be welcomed to do so. We will write together, read aloud, receive feedback, and, most of all, follow our poet guide.

Tantra: The Art of Conscious Loving
Charles Muir & Caroline Muir

Few of us have been blessed with healthy childhood conditioning and education regarding the mysteries of sexual love and sexual energy. This can leave many individuals less aware and conscious about their sexuality than they are in other aspects of their lives. Tantra can transform sex into a loving meditation, putting more consciousness, energy, intimacy, joy, and love into sexual exchanges.

Participants will learn and discuss various ways to increase intimacy and passion in their relationship. Tantric meditation and ways to exchange sexual energy in a safe, nonsexual manner will also be taught in the workshop. These methods can then be practiced in a sexual way in the privacy of your own home.

This workshop is open to couples only. $740 per participant

Your Deep Mythology: Tap Into Its Mystery and Magic Stanley Krippner & David Feinstein

Introduction to Gestalt Practice
Christine Stewart Price & Guest Leaders

The Way, when declared
Seems so thin and flavorless.
Nothing to look at, nothing to hear —
And when used — is inexhaustible. — LAO Tzu

Gestalt practice is a form — nonanalytic, noncoercive, nonjudgmental — evolving out of the work of Fritz Perls. The work integrates ways of personal clearing and development that are both ancient and modern. To the extent that awareness is made primary relative to action, gestalt practice has a strong relationship to some forms of meditation and visualization. This form is similar to some Reichian work as well, in that emotional and energetic release and rebalancing are allowed and encouraged.

The emphasis is intrapersonal rather than interpersonal. It is explicitly understood that participants are not patients but persons actively consenting to work (or play) in awareness. The leader functions to reflect, clarify, and respect whatever emerges in this process. The aim is unfoldment, wholeness, and growth, rather than adjustment, cure, or accomplishment. Through group exercises, meditations, and open seat work, this workshop will introduce participants to the gestalt practice approach.

Rx Massage:
For Health Care Practitioners
Sherry Sanders Galloway & Dean Marson

The American health care system is changing profoundly as more “high touch” approaches are being integrated into a very “high tech” medical industry. Hospitals are beginning to implement massage programs with verifiable success. As an adjunct to medical treatment, massage brings a humanistic balance necessary to the will to survive and thrive.

Psyche and Cosmos
Stanislav Grof & Richard Tarnas

During the ten years they worked together at Esalen, Richard Tarnas, former director of programs, and Stanislav Grof, onetime scholar-in-residence, repeatedly encountered an extraordinary correlation between specific planetary positions and a wide range of psychological states. These planetary synchronicities not only provided invaluable insight into both the timing and the specific archetypal character of psychotherapeutic transformations, but also suggested that the relationship... benefits of massage to the bedridden, health precautions, guidelines for ethical conduct, and appropriate use of bedside massage for specific conditions. This last concern recognizes that many massage techniques are designed for relatively healthy people and must often be modified for those who are debilitated.

Feldenkrais and Musical Improvisation: You Don't Have to Suffer to Sing the Blues
Phil Cardillo

The Feldenkrais Method is becoming well-known throughout the world as a subtle and powerful tool for growth. Its usefulness is wide-ranging. It is extremely effective for dealing with back and neck pain, for children with learning disabilities, for athletes who want to move more elegantly and gracefully, for artists who want to stimulate their creativity, and for anyone who wants to increase sensitivity and kinesthetic awareness. The work is effective in all these settings because of a process that it stimulates in the nervous system: a process of learning.

This workshop will focus this powerful learning method on the art of musical improvisation. In a safe, supportive environment, we will explore simple jazz standards, blues, and modal improvisation. Players of all instruments (including voice) at all levels are welcome, especially beginners. We'll spend lots of time singing and jamming, tuning into our bodies, allowing music to flow through us — music that will surprise and delight us with its beauty and passion. Come prepared for two days of deep work, cleverly disguised as lots of fun. $380

Babatunde Olatunji & Friends

Nigerian musician Babatunde Olatunji has been bridging the gap between American and African culture for thirty years. In this workshop he will show how drum sounds and rhythms communicate, stimulate, and pace the activities of traditional African life. He will teach the consonants of the Yoruba language, reproducing its sounds on drums and through chants, body percussion, and dance. This workshop is for dancers, percussionists, musicians, and anyone who wants to speak the language of the drums. Drummers can experience the dance and dancers can experience the drums. Bring a drum if you have one.

Please note: This has always been a popular workshop, with lots of people drumming and dancing in a small area. The energy runs high -- be prepared for a crowded, exuberant atmosphere. $740

Living with Chronic Back Pain
Don Hanlon Johnson

This workshop is exclusively for people with unspecified chronic back pain, i.e. pain which has recurred for over two years whose specific causes are unknown or only suspected (not, for example, originating from a recently fractured vertebra).

The vast body of research into the causes and treatments for this affliction offers little promise. But the picture is not totally dark. Several studies point to multi-modal approaches encompassing exercise, nutrition, physical manipulation, psychological counseling, and workplace adjustments. There is promise from homeopathy, acupuncture, yoga, Rolfing, and meditation, to name a few. Using such approaches, many have been able, if not to cure, to move the pain from the foreground of daily awareness to the background, changing its role from debilitating tyrant to stern but clear teacher.

This workshop will be based on using various awareness practices to locate the history of the pain in the context of one's life, with the goal of developing an individualized approach to self-care. Each day the group will explore various forms of movement, hands-on work, visualizations, and storytelling. Participants will reflect on the relation between work, personal relationships, and the cycles of pain. There will be some didactic material on studies of back pain and various therapies. By week's end, each participant should have gained tools to help develop a daily practice to deal with back pain, and to discern the kinds of therapies that might be useful.

Enneagram of the Passions
Helen Palmer

Each of the Enneagram personality types is centered in one of the passions described in sacred tradition. It is the passions that unite the thoughts, feelings, and motives of each personality, usually with the effect of creating a systematic bias about life. We think that we're seeing the full picture, but our perceptions are influenced by our passion. The Pride type sees that people are in need of help, the Envy type sees that something is missing, and so on through all nine types. Attention migrates to information that supports each bias, effectively focusing attention on one sector of a 360 degree picture of life.

Although named in the negative, the passions are a primary source of energy for spiritual liberation. They are the raw material, the qualities of human nature that link personality to aspects of the human essence.

Good self-observers can describe their passion and their key behaviors. They are living experts about the hidden forces that direct their lives. Their insights are presented in the oral tradition, with a panel of speakers for each of the nine types. The conversation between teacher, panelists, and audience highlights both the many ways in which the passions are acted out and how the passions can provide an access point to the dimensions of higher consciousness.

Emphasis will be on inner material rather than personal process work. This intensive can be applied as one of the prerequisites for the Enneagram Professional Training Program.

Writing through Loss
Nancy Bacal

To write from the heart is to heal the heart...

One of life's unavoidable realities is that we all experience loss. Whether it be with love, death, youth, health, marriage, work, or a moment of pure grace, we are all subject to the rules of impermanence. Loss inevitably involves pain. Pain becomes suffering when we shut down and resist the natural rhythms of mourning and change.

A time of loss is a time of vulnerability. It can also be an opportunity to awaken to a new perspective of life. This workshop is intended to help participants reopen to joy through surrender and the expression of our deeper feelings. Rather than feel diminished by what is gone, we will utilize it as material for writing. Even the cruelest tragedy can be transformed through the practice of writing and the telling of story. As we write, we come to know ourselves; as we share, we move out of isolation. As the dark riches of our lives are released, they deepen our emotional and creative lives and inspire the journey of our companions.

Meditation and movement will be included, but our primary tools will be pen and paper. More than skill, enthusiasm for the writing process and a desire for change are the main requirements.

Weekend of March 3-5

The Language of the Drum: Intermediate Level
Babatunde Olatunji
This workshop is designed for those who would like to further explore the polyrhythmic aspect of African music. It will include exploring varying combinations of rhythmic patterns, the ability to play rhythmic patterns on two drums, rhythmic exercises to help develop stamina and dexterity of the hands and fingers on the drum, and the use of sticks in playing. Participants will also be introduced to different styles of playing the agogo (cow bell), shekere (African maracas), and body percussion.

There will be time devoted to open discussion of the healing power of the drum through history. The group will learn how to meditate with drumming and chanting. No special dancing is involved in this class except for occasional movements conducted by the leader.

Please note: This class is open to those who have taken at least two full workshops with Babatunde Olatunji or a professional percussionist.

Weekend Massage Intensive
Peggy Horan & Arthur Munyer
This workshop is designed for individuals who want to explore the art of touch. Participants will be instructed in the basic methods for giving a pleasurable and beneficial full-body massage. Fundamental elements of bodywork, such as breath awareness, grounding, quality of touch, movement, and stress reduction will be included.

This workshop is designed for beginners as well as those who wish to brush up on their massage skills.

Keeping a Good Relationship Alive
Gerald Smith
How can we be close and vulnerable as partners, yet separate and free to grow as individuals? The dilemma of merging and yet still maintaining a strong sense of individuality is never completely resolved, because each partner is continually changing. But it can be dealt with in ways that add to the aliveness in the relationship. This workshop will focus on the necessity of dealing with this issue in order to keep a good relationship alive.

Much of the participants' time during this weekend will be spent with their partners, separate from other couples. The workshop will use verbal, nonverbal, and written exercises to enhance openness, support, and affection, as well as skills to resolve differences in ways that do not produce "scar tissue." Also, since play is an essential part of keeping a relationship alive, there will be experiences to spark the imagination and willingness to play together.

Enrollment is limited to 12 couples.

You Don't Have to be Good
Kim McCourt
You do not have to be good.
You do not have to walk on your knees for a hundred miles through the desert, repenting.
You only have to let the soft animal of your body love what it loves.

MARY OLIVER

By listening to our bodies we can know what is right for us, rather than what we "should" do. We knew this as children but were encouraged to ignore our inner truths and obey the critic. Always having to be “good” restricts and censors the richness of who we are. Buried beneath all the “should’s” and “don’ts” is a true, wise self that longs for expression.

To get there, the group will play with different doorways to somatic knowing: emotional, visual, auditory, kinesesthetic, olfactory, or general sensing. The intention will be to identify which doorway opens up our personal intuitive self, and then go on in.

Using movement and meditation, play and process, art and journal writing, participants will explore the indomitable aliveness beneath the censoring critic and conditioned tendencies. The focus will be: listening, accepting, and expressing what is true. The atmosphere will be nonjudgmental and light-hearted. Come and discover what feels so “good” about being “bad.” $380

Stoneware and Wetware
Terence McKenna & Rudy Rucker
This is a unique chance to spend a weekend with two of the Archaic revival’s most hyperactive minds: Rudy Rucker, the swashbuckling science fiction superstar and take-no-prisoners mathematician who made “cellular automata” a household phrase; and Terence McKenna, the eschatological botanical ambassador from the Absolute Other, cunning linguist, altered statesman, and psychedelic crusader. Lively discussion of the approaching exfoliation of the human species into a collectivity should be anticipated. Bring a friend, Bopper or Meatie. $380

A Workshop for Couples
Daniel Brown & Marushka Glissen
This is a workshop for couples who want to improve their communication skills and increase their understanding of each other. It will teach ways to resolve conflict and practical methods for becoming both self-assertive and self-transcending in a partnership. Some of the work will address how family of origin and past conditioning contribute to the bonding as well as to the conflicts. Time will also be devoted to learning how to find satisfaction, mutual support, relaxation, solitude, and play in day-to-day living as partners. The overall emphasis will be on helping couples to discover the wider purpose of being together through a sharing of values, love, and, perhaps, a spiritual vision. $380

Yoga Works: Tools for Well-Being
Chuck Miller & Maty Ezraty
Yoga is an ancient system that uses the body, breath, and mind to energize and transform all aspects of living. It is not only an excellent source of physical exercise, but a unique and powerful tool for self-realization. The practice of yoga can help release blocks that cause mental and physical pain and prevent us from knowing our divine nature. It is also a great way of dealing with the stress of daily living.

The invigorating effects of yoga become readily apparent as the body opens and stretches. Breath is the link between mind and body, and various breathing methods will be taught to help reduce tension and cleanse the system. The serenity and clarity that is the goal of yoga will be sought through meditation exercises that can calm and focus the mind. Yoga philosophy and theory will be discussed, as well as nutrition and its role in overall physical health.

All levels are welcome and no prior experience is required, only an adventurous spirit. For further information contact the leaders at 310-393-5550. $740

The Future of the Self
Bruce Gregory
"In the future," writes Bruce Gregory, "the self will represent those resources aligned with the rhythms of nature, resources which reflect the natural cycles of the unconscious and the natural rhythms of learning. These rhythms will honor the integration of the child's curiosity and joy, the hero's archetype, and the forces of nature—sun, wind, and water—which reflect the role of time."

This workshop will first help participants to recognize and explore the skills necessary to address and disengage from self-defeating patterns of the false self and traumas of the past. Following this, participants will explore aligning with the principles of time, their own natural circadian rhythms, by contacting and developing a trusting relationship with the unconscious in order to access the resources of the core self. Adds the leader, "This alignment to the natural rhythm of time, without which we fight our own being, is the essence of healing."

The tools used to support this process include metaphor, gestalt, role-playing, and music; curiosity to engage the unconscious and the resources of the core self; and challenges to the patterns of the false self which facilitate a realignment with the natural rhythms of time.

Week of March 12-17

Continuum
Emilie Conrad-Da'oud
This workshop explores the idea that movement is something we are rather than something we do, that we call a "body" is actually life expressing itself.

Using deep rhythms and intrinsic motion, participants can discover a sensitivity to movement at all levels—not just familiar movements, but what the leader calls the "dance of intelligent life." Both individually and in rapport with a partner, participants will explore the subtleties of breath and tissue, the undulation of the spine, and the effect of being witnessed by others. The goal will be to experience a visceral, neuromuscular connection to all life, celebrating a richness and depth that go far beyond social or cultural connections.

Emilie Conrad-Da'oud writes: "As we enliven ourselves from the inside, our dynamic expressions in the world increase. This remarkable oscillation from intrinsic to extrinsic, this elegant movement of creativity from cell to action, this flow of life urging itself into new creative channels—this is Continuum."

As a movement specialist at UCLA, the leader has contributed to a study demonstrating that primary movement is essential to mediating disease and aging. Her work is incorporated into the fields of physical therapy, massage, and psychoimmunology. This workshop can give participants a deeper awareness of the body as a system where change, growth, and innovation are possible.

No dance or movement experience is necessary. $740

The Path of Transformation through Meditation
Daniel Brown
This workshop is designed both for beginners wishing to establish a solid foundation in meditation and for experienced meditators wishing to refine their practice. Participants will explore how the path of meditation unfolds from the very beginnings of practice to the stages of enlightenment. The workshop will be practice-oriented, presenting a wide range of meditations in order to determine the best match for each individual. The fundamentals of both concentration and awareness styles of meditation will be stressed. Emphasis will be on establishing a sound basis in posture and mental stabilization.

Meditation is not just a means to sit quietly. Its purpose is to gain fundamental insight into self, reality, and time. A form of standard insight meditation (examination meditation) will be taught, as well as some of the more subtle “quick path” instructions, such as meditating on the movements of the mind and “awareness of awareness” meditations.

Specialized meditations for transforming bodily states, affect, and thought will also be presented.

Daniel Brown draws upon twenty-five years of meditation practice in various Eastern traditions, ten years of translating meditation texts from Sanskrit and Tibetan, and ten years of scientific research on meditative states.

Change and Self-Esteem

Phyllis Shankman

Change is an ever-present aspect of living which must be accepted and used creatively if one is to sustain a healthy, interesting, and exciting life. Many individuals talk about wanting change while actively or passively resisting it. Self-esteem, which includes self-acceptance, self-appreciation, and self-confidence, enables one to confront resistance and fear, and increases the willingness to change and take risks.

This workshop includes an in-depth process for finding and allowing self-acceptance and for creatively confronting opportunities for change and growth. Group activities include gestalt process work, discussion, massage, meditation, music, dance, art imagery exercises, and whatever else happens spontaneously.

Sensory Awareness

Charlotte Selver

Some seventy years ago Charlotte Selver’s teacher, Elsa Gindler, began exploring the natural potential of the human being. The work that evolved was an approach through a disciplined practice, involving the person as total organism. Gindler’s innovative methods very often unearthed, liberated, and cultivated abilities and sensitivities which her students had never been conscious of possessing.

To "awaken" means that one’s energies—neuromuscular and perceptive—become altered, leading to greater movability, both psychologically and physically, and to a fuller use of the senses and intuitive powers. In order for this to occur, a deeper peace is needed so that sensations become clearer, and rigidities, pressures, and preconceptions can gradually dissolve. In becoming “tuned in” by another person, or by a task or given situation, powers arise and come into play which correspond exactly to the demands of the occasion. This calls for permissiveness, subtle reactiveness, and openness to the moment.

With the cultivation of these functions, our lives can unfold in a far richer and more responsive way than what we are used to. We can restore the delight of ever-new experiencing which was our birthright in childhood, but lost in the course of our education into adulthood.

Clinical Program for Professionals: Treatment of Post-Traumatic Stress Disorder and Dissociative Disorders

Daniel Brown

This workshop is for clinicians actively treating patients with post-traumatic stress disorder (PTSD) or dissociative personality disorder who wish an overview of the assessment of PTSD and DD and a detailed account of treatment. The workshop includes a model for assessing simple and complicated post-traumatic sequelae and an integrative phase-oriented treatment plan.

As a treatment-focused workshop, the course will cover in depth specific psychotherapeutic strategies for each stage in the overall treatment course: stabilization, systematic uncovering of traumatic memories, integration of fragmented representations, self development, attenuating physiological reactivity, and self/affect integration. A rationale will be given for systematic treatment selection from a wide range of interventions (psychodynam-ic, developmental, behavioral, hypnotherapeutic, systemic, somatic, and cultural), according to the specificity of PTSD or DD sequelae and the stage of recovery.

The format will be both didactic and experiential and will include: lectures, group discussion, demonstration and practice of therapy methods, verbal and video case presentations, and selected consultation on case vignettes by participants.

Ritual, Ecstasy, and Women’s Spirituality

Margot Adler

This workshop for women explores the ideas, rituals, and celebrations that spring from the women’s spirituality movement. Margot Adler uses chants, songs, and sacred circles as ways for women to explore the healing power, joy, and ease that comes from doing rituals with women. The basic philosophy informing this workshop is neopaganism and goddess spirituality. The perspective is non-hierarchical and begins with the idea that we, ourselves, are sacred, flowing with potential.

Ritual is a tool that can end our alienation from nature and from each other. The workshop explores paths to reclaim the vitality and mystery of ecstatic religions without the dogmatic and patriarchal attitudes that have caused so many women to leave their own religious traditions.

The workshop will combine joyful exuberance (chants, laughter, songs, and drumming) with time for quiet meditation, including a voyage to meet the Goddess within. This should be two days filled with joy and fun. Please bring drums, rattles, instruments, plus one or two personal items of special significance to place on a community altar as a way of sharing your own stories. $380
Presence
Tandy Beal

Presence is the gift that the performing arts can give us, whether we're bankers, teachers, naturalists, or just plain humans. Being present—in the body, in the moment, in the action—is the foundation of this workshop. Participants will use tools gleaned from years of work in dance, theater, music, and circus to develop the ability to sense the creative spirit and possibility in each moment. Starting with the panoply of experiences sensed in the body, this work can open up new avenues for focusing and playing. For increasing observation and communication skills, and for rediscovering the joy in moving. Working with presence seamlessly and organically unites our bodies with our minds and spirits.

Jon Scoville, percussionist and composer, will accompany some of the exercises and will also lead the group in rhythmic and listening practices.

Couples Workshop
Jack Rosenberg & Beverly Kitsuen Morse

Most couples are reluctant to seek help in their relationships. Instead they wait, hoping that the relationship will improve. If couples approached medical help the same way they approach marriage counseling, many of them would visit the doctor when they ought to be lining up at the mortician.

Bodywork Intensive: Strategies for Healing Post-Traumatic Stress
Carolyn Braddock & Christian Hendricks

Some day the body will present its bill, for it is as incorruptible as a child who, still whole in spirit, will accept no compromises or excuses, and it will not stop tormenting us until we stop evading the truth.

—Alice Miller, Thou Shalt Not Be Aware

A new kind of pain is among massage practitioners, body-workers, and other helping professionals. The body was the scene of the crime, and this is reflected directly in the way a survivor breathes, speaks, and moves. When a bodyworker places hands on a survivor, memories may flood in and body sensations may be blocked, resulting in rigid holding and movement patterns. Releasing these patterns allows the body to unravel and expand, freeing the individual.

This workshop will focus on working with post-traumatic stress, particularly in sexual trauma survivors. It is an invaluable course for massage practitioners, bodyworkers, medical professionals, and anyone interested in learning specific body-oriented intervention techniques.

The workshop will present an understanding of victimization and specific strategies for the different embodiments of trauma, strategies which do not revictimize the survivor. The instruction is designed to heighten awareness of and sensitivity to all of the psychological and physiological manifestations of post-traumatic stress, including dissociation, flashbacks, energy blocks, and breath patterns. Special emphasis will be placed on establishing safety, trust, and confidence in the client/practitioner relationship. There will also be a presentation of martial arts techniques that can help survivors move through difficult, intense feelings.

This will be primarily an experiential week with extensive video analysis and practical hands-on experience. A training manual is included.

Please note: This workshop is applicable for Braddock Body Process™ Training hours for certification.

Making Crucial Life Choices and Major Life Changes
Michael Broder

Achieving fulfillment is a lifelong process which involves both recognizing and making many choices along the way. Taking the risks that make major life changes possible is the essence of the personal growth experience. Relationship transitions, career changes, and new lifestyle options all challenge us to choose between our comfort zone and a new level of fulfillment.

Using self-assessments, visualizations, and meditation practices, as well as both group and individual work, this workshop will present each participant with the opportunity to identify the next major step along his or her path. Then participants will be encouraged to explore the risks that could potentially become blocks to their change processes. This workshop is especially recommended for anyone in the process of transition or desiring to sharpen their risk-taking skills.

The Embodied Life: Feldenkrais® Movement and Zen Meditation
Russell Delman

The embodied life refers to our natural condition when mind and body are unified. Moving beyond cliché, what does it mean to have body and mind functioning in coordination? How can the habits of both muscular tension and incessant internal chatter be worked with so that an essential unlearning and relearning can occur?

Moshe Feldenkrais created hundreds of ingenious movement experiments that allow us to rediscover the grace and ease inherent in a well-organized brain. Zen meditation offers a sophisticated, simple practice for the movement toward our "original nature." Together these approaches help us to more fully embody life.

The group will practice Awareness Through Movement® (ATM) lessons, mindfulness meditation, and mental imagery designed to connect the learning to everyday life. This workshop is valuable for both active, mobile people and those with injuries. Beginning and experienced explorers can learn at their own level.

C.E. credit is available; see pages 60-61.

Self-Empowerment for Trauma Survivors
Carolyn Braddock & Christian Hendricks

This is a workshop for trauma survivors (emphasizing sexual trauma), designed to facilitate integration of body, mind, and spirit into a healing journey. The tools will be breath, sound, movement, and selected centering and martial arts techniques. The intention is to assist survivors in expressing their voice, the source of their power, while encouraging release through movement. The martial arts techniques foster self-expression and self-empowerment, and can help survivors to move through difficult, intense feelings.

Participants will work with the three main embodiments of trauma (rigid, collapsed, and inanimate), and explore how each manifests in the body, mind, and spirit. They will learn ways to move through body memories, flashbacks, intensive feelings, and other aspects of their trauma, while physically grounding and integrating.

This process can help to break the anguished silence and barriers to voice and growth by releasing the pain, allowing more space for healing and creating new boundaries.

The goal is to honor the body and empower the survivor. The work is presented through experiential exercises and group process, physically empowering the survivor and helping to bring the cycle of trauma to completion.

Our Ways: For Women Who Love Women

Jean McLendon & Carol Holcomb

Write the leaders, "Few opportunities are available for lesbians to dialogue with each other about our unique challenges and joys. Even fewer opportunities exist for us to get down to real sharing and deep work at the level of our souls longings. In this workshop the leaders will facilitate processes and exercises using family of origin, communications, and psychodramatic methodologies of the late family therapist Virginia Satir.

Participants can increase their awareness about the power of early learnings to shape how we care about ourselves, how we deal with others, and how we cope with the world around us.

"The goal will be to enliven and enlarge our sense of choice and possibility. When we allow ourselves to truly and courageously know our vulnerabilities, we are on a path to authoring a different tomorrow. The leaders will work to create the necessary safety and support for participants to enter the exciting, sometimes frightening arenas of change, healing, and learning.

"If you want to be with others of us who want more fun, intimacy, power, peace, sex, and community, then come home to this group. The leaders have been together in a committed relationship for more than thirteen years and are eager to respond to a diverse group of adventurous women. Expect to be supported and challenged!"

'Tis a Gift to be Simple

David Schiffman

This weekend is intended as a gift for people who would like to return to the simplicity of the values we treasure most. Its aim is to create a climate of mutual support and encouragement for exploring how we can best cultivate the spirit of real generosity and faith in dealing with ourselves and others.

This timely gift will embrace the following elements:

- Sanctuary — the opportunity to step away and pause, to create a mood of peace and personal clearing without haste or interruption
- The company of kindred spirits — a chance to be met with honesty, empathy, and wisdom in an atmosphere of soulful, clear-eyed support
- The emotional freedom to be — the right to let down and be sad or mad in order to clear the air and move on, making room in our hearts for new possibilities
- The right to feel free and alive in our bodies — the use of innovative ways of moving and touching in order to restore the vitality of feeling truly alive and physically at ease

The approaches utilized will be drawn from a wide variety of practices, both traditional and nontraditional, all aimed at restoring our gratitude and appreciation for being alive. $380

Painting and the Art of Perception

Margot McLean & Laura Sewall

Thinking is more interesting than knowing but less interesting than looking. — Goethe

What stands between you and painting what you see? Going deeper, what are the veils between you and really seeing what you're looking at? This course combines painting in the studio, the latest theories of perception, practical exercises, and excursions into the Esalen grounds. The workshop will explore the influence of perception on our experience of the natural world. By practicing 'ways of seeing,' and allowing the landscape to reveal itself, the group will explore ways of translating the resulting experience into image-making and art.
How we perceive, both as artists and as humans, plays an inestimable role in the creation of culture. With an emphasis on developing an ecologically sensitive culture, the workshop will ask: How do our perceptual choices affect nature? How can we engender a radical re-visionsing of the landscape, so that image-making becomes a collaboration with the natural world rather than an appropriation of it?

This course is open to anyone interested in painting, perceptual practice, and a desire to re-perceive the landscape and the human relationship with it. The only requirement is a willingness to grapple with the uncertainty inherent in new ways of seeing.

Exorcising the Demon “Should”
Paul Rebillot & Audrey Savage

Within each of us there lives a demon — our personal critic — whose greatest joy comes from criticizing, denigrating, and destroying every experience we have. We're either too old or too young, too fat or too thin, too early or too late. When we fall in love, we're never good enough.

This demon, who commands us to be who we aren't in order to satisfy someone we can never satisfy, is the demon this workshop will seek to exorcise. This will be an opportunity to profoundly explore the images behind the "shoulds," to recognize the stranglehold both of ideal images and of the unpleasant aspects of ourselves that we want to cast out.

Writes Paul Rebillot, "How do we face what we want to hide? Why not take the chance of looking inside ourselves to find the completeness of who we are instead of trying to limit ourselves with who we think we should be and who we hope we are not? It is my impression that when we discover the truth about ourselves, our natural response is to want and to work for the best that we can be."

People in the helping professions who have experienced this form have found it adaptable and useful in their own work.

The Healing Power of the Dream: A Dreamwork Seminar for Professionals
Joyce Frazee

This seminar will reveal how simple approaches to the art and artfulness of dreams can reveal the healing power of the dream.

Joyce Frazee writes: "As health-care professionals, we receive many questions from clients about their dreams. Also, we ourselves wonder about our dreams. Who are these strangers and acquaintances, friends and lovers who come to visit us at night — often bizarrely different from their daytime roles? Who are these monsters and attackers?"

This weekend workshop will focus on techniques for working with dreams, including how to use dreamwork for therapeutic intervention and how to use dreams to uncover body memories. Storytelling, role-playing, drawing, dancing, meditation, and gestalt will also be used to learn how the dream itself — and the understanding of the dream — can be the healer.

Please note: Nonprofessionals are welcome.

The Way of Passion: An Exploration of Rumi
Andrew Harvey

Rumi, the Sufi spiritual genius who lived, taught, and died in Southern Turkey in the 13th century, is considered by many to be the greatest mystic poet who ever lived, and a crucial guide to the mystical renaissance that is now sweeping the planet. His profoundly inspiring message of universal tolerance, adoration, divine love, and spiritual action transcends all dogma and theology, and speaks to our dangerous contemporary situation with urgent and poignant authority.

Drawing on material from his three books on Rumi, Love's Fire, Speaking Flame, and especially The Way of Passion, Andrew Harvey will focus special attention on four essential themes of Rumi's work and of the mystical journey: longing for God, adoration of the divine Beloved, passion, and ecstatic union. All participants will be encouraged to use the inspiration of Rumi's vision and imagery to write their own meditations and poems, and periods of time will be given over to prayer, music, and movement to ensure that this exploration of Rumi is as rich, varied, and "embodied" as possible.
The principle underlying the TA KE TI NA experience is the simultaneous performance of several different rhythms with basic stepping, clapping, vocal rhythms, and chanting. The workshop takes on the quality of a ritual as participants, standing and moving in a circle, clapping and chanting rhythmic syllables, gradually create a group unity.

For many of us, the knowledge that we are naturally connected with rhythm has disappeared. TA KE TI NA reestablishes the connection with this “forgotten power of rhythm,” revealing a new range of qualities to life, enhancing the development of human potential. Natural confidence can grow through increased abilities in movement, rhythmic competence, and musical creativity. The skills presented in TA KE TI NA can be applied to daily life as well as to all musical fields.

Courage
Joyce Frazee

In the mouth of the dragon there are many jewels.
—Buddhist Proverb

For some of us it takes courage just to live our daily lives. Every day we awaken to face the demons in our lives—demons that come in many forms: perfectionism, guilt, avoidance, shame, despair, failure. Time passes and we become skillful at living despite the constant awareness that these demons are preventing us from experiencing the fullness of life. Their existence drains our energy and limits our joy and freedom. But getting close to them, allowing ourselves to confront them, is very difficult to do.

This week will give us an opportunity to find the courage to face our demons. Participants will be encouraged to look at the things in their lives that are difficult to face and will be given support to help recognize and confront them. This will be done through gestalt practice, dreamwork, and bioenergetics. Drawing, dance, and meditation may also be used to recover the jewels from the dragon. $740

Embodyment: Theory and Practice
Don Hanlon Johnson & Candace Pert

In many quarters of the healing arts, there are struggles to overcome the mind/body split, which, despite all efforts, remains deeply embedded in many therapies which strive to be holistic. In this seminar, Don Johnson will introduce practical exercises to explore a truly unified experience of self in breathing, moving, touching, and sensing. Candace Pert will focus on the individual, this workshop views the intimate male/female relationship as a more effective path to healing and personal self-completion. Exploring the thesis that the purpose of the unconscious in a relationship is to complete one’s childhood, participants will be introduced to Imago Relationship Therapy and guided through exercises that will enable them to:

- Reinterpret conflict as an unconscious attempt at self-healing
- Use their relationship to achieve personal wholeness
- Create a conscious partnership characterized by safety and passion.

Arica Protoanalysis: The Nine Ego Fixations
Michael Kramer & Christian Intemann

This workshop introduces the Arica theory and method of protoanalysis as authored by Oscar Ichazo, founder of the Arica Institute and original source of the enneagon of the nine ego fixations. In the Arica theory, the ego fixations are revealed by muscular tensions in the face, and Oscar will determine each participant's fixation from photographic slides submitted prior to the workshop.

The ego fixation is the area of the psyche in which a person is most sensitive. We defend this over-sensitivity with a cluster of reactions which becomes a fixated pattern during childhood. These nine fixations distort our perception of reality and veil our natural, spontaneous, essential natures. Once we recognize our fixation and begin to detach from our habitual identification with one subjective point of view, we enormously enrich the rest of our psyche.

An understanding of the fixations enneagon is vital for opening the process of self-observation. The transcendence of one's fixation provides an opportunity for the realization that we are One Humanity, and it is this experience of the oneness of the human spirit which is one result of the Arica work.

The group will study enneagons which are harmonic with the enneagon of the nine fixations. The workshop will also include meditations, diakath breathing, essential movement, and theater exercises designed to nourish our natural personas.

Please note: Four 35mm transparencies of each person's face must be received by March 8, 1995. A letter of explanation about lighting and photography of the slides is available from Esalen.

Comedy, Chaos, and the Dharma

Robin Menken

Writes Robin Menken: "Comedy is a centuries-old healing. The expression of the Comic Spirit (in a group context) is one of hope, solutions, the tribe, Utopia, a doorway into a world of impossible, improbable solutions. Even the blackest comedy reveals everyday victories wrestled from a sometimes dark world.

"In this workshop (a synthesis of theatre, psychology, and trancework), we spend time together in deep syntony, in a place of heightened consciousness. While practicing Dharma, we're practicing art -- finding forms. This approach focuses the mind, frees the spirit, and orchestrates heightened collaboration. The warm-ups, a series of moving meditations, split the awareness into two paths. The mind, craving distraction, is fed with technique. The technique, calming the mind, (neously) produces clear, focused comic theater. The calmed mind becomes the Watcher, the Allowee, as the Actor pours him/herself into the Moment. Freed of ego, the Actor becomes shamanic, the audience proxy, a vehicle for their energy. The result is group 'discovered' material, revealing the poignancy of humanistic comedy, the playfulness of satire, the charged arena of family scripts, the mystery of archetypes.

"The process is not abstract. It is a concrete working model, a rehearsal for life. Comic Theatre is a collage of specific human traits and situations, a laboratory of observation, and a doorway to the Universal. It is an invitation to the Clown in each of us."

Harmonizing with the Spirit of the Universe: Introduction to Aikido

Erik Van Riswold

In his book _The Future of the Body_, Michael Murphy writes that "certain martial arts facilitate a many-sided integral development of human nature. Some, such as Aikido, are superior to modern sports in their reliance upon spiritual principles, and superior to quiet meditation in their cultivation of stillness in action."

Aikido is a strong self-defense art, yet is non-aggressive, non-competitive, and does not rely on muscular strength. It is a way of being as well as doing. This workshop offers the opportunity to experience this unique martial art that helps foster grace, flexibility, power, and overall awareness. You will learn to sense and direct the flow of energy, locate and move from center, relax under pressure, and use alternative ways of dealing with conflict.

The workshop is designed for people with little or no martial arts experience as well as those who would like to broaden their practice. The class will be physically active, but not overly strenuous.

And finally, the group will follow the injunction of Aikido's founder, Morihei Ueshiba, to "always practice in the spirit of joy." $380

From the Congo to Dreamtime

Titos Sompa & Ione

Titos Sompa, master dancer, choreographer, and percussionist from the Congo and psychotherapist/author/director Ione recently collaborated on Ione's internationally acclaimed play _Njinga the Queen King_, which premiered at the Brooklyn Academy of Music's Next Wave Festival.

Together they have created a special workshop that teaches Congolese movement and rhythms while accessing participants' deepest dream themes. A vocabulary of ancient Congolese movement will be created to assist participants in expressing the most important aspects of their inner journeys, discovered through overnight dream incubations and shamanistic journeying.

The workshop is open to all levels of experience. $380

Co

Kathleen Riordan Speeth

This is a workshop for people helpers.

Everyone has seen duets in ballet in which the male dancer follows the prima ballerina, supporting her leaps and turns. Many human dyads are similar. One person is in the foreground while the other, the "co,' accepts the background position. The concerns of the focal person come first. They define the relationship either by explicit agreement, as in psychotherapy and medicine, or implicitly, as in many marriages.

The focus acts; the co tracks. The focus makes a movement and the co, like a dance partner, adjusts. What the focus needs, the co provides. The co is receptive, responsive, attentive, enabling, facilitating.

Cos can be found nurturing the young and the frail elderly, ministering to the disturbed, nursing the sick, designing houses for the wealthy, and in many other situations throughout society. Sometimes these co relationships are a vocational choice and charitable way of life. Sometimes, as with codependencies and co-alcoholics, they are dysfunctional and harmful.

The group will spend the weekend studying, through experiential exercises and discussions, when, where, why, and how to co, and the politics of both entering into and refraining from such relationships.

The Visionary Life: The Quest of Your Life
Robert Maurer

In the past, psychology's usefulness has traditionally been limited by its focus on people with problems. Recent studies, however, have centered on those who have succeeded in the major challenges of life, from vocation to relationships. How did they achieve and sustain success? Current research has provided surprising insights into the pursuit of success.

This weekend program explores one of the key attributes common to all successful people: vision — the clear sense of purpose that guides and sustains actions and emotions, particularly during times of crisis. During these challenging times, people of vision and commitment are extraordinary and essential.

What are the skills of the visionary and how are these skills developed and maintained? This program will not only provide the remarkable research findings but will demonstrate these qualities in filmed and live interviews.

The quest for a visionary life is a journey that each of us is capable of. The focus of this workshop will be on creating vivid dreams, discovering the path to get there, and finding the courage to travel the road.

Enhancing Communication Hypnotically
Paul Lounsbury & Nancy Winston

Embedded in a world of our own constructions, we easily habituate to conversations that come from a personal framework and unique make-up. We are often unaware of how deeply identified we are with the patterns that recursively tune our perceptions, color our emotions, shape our ideas, and inform our actions. If we act with courage to break out of these roles, a magical new world can appear, bringing with it a fresh and inviting quality of relatedness. This workshop is for people who would like to go beyond their current thresholds of awareness to develop more original, vital, and effective communication.

To help participants increase their flexibility and control in interpersonal communication, the leaders will use methods developed from their training in hypnosis and psychotherapy with Milton Erickson, conceptual tools crafted from Gregory Bateson's communication research, and advances in cognitive neuroscience and the "New Cybernetics."

Through group interaction, playful experiments, and hypnotic inductions, the leaders will guide participants through various dimensions of the communication process. Special attention will be given to the hypnotic relationship, recognizing individual uniqueness, utilizing conscious and unconscious awareness, and examining the dynamics of induction, influence, and suggestion.

Participants will explore ways to be more willing to enter unknown territory and more capable of extending the range and flexibility of sensory motor, emotional, and mental controls in their communication behavior.

Prerequisites include tolerance for a modicum of confusion, willingness to be a group member, a sense of humor, and a desire for novel experience.

Expressive Drawing and Painting
Leigh Hyams

Artwork comes straight through an open mind and adventurous spirit. With it come clarity of vision, increased awareness of oneself in relation to the environment, and a deepening understanding of the world of art and its meaning in one's life.

Leigh Hyams's unique teaching methods help students to work fearlessly, exuberantly, sensitively, and observantly from the very first session. Using a wide variety of art materials, many techniques and ideas about image-making will be explored. Participants will work from Esalen's natural landscape, still lifes, models, dreams, myths, fantasies, and memories.

Demonstrations, slides, and discussions of art from many cultures will be used to give the group a broader understanding of visual language. Participants will complete portfolios of their own drawings and paintings and work toward developing a new sense of themselves as artistic, creative human beings.

This is a workshop for people who want to revitalize their connection with art and their environment — to develop fresh eyes — as well as those who have had no previous experience. The only prerequisites are curiosity about the creative process and a willingness to explore the rich possibilities inherent in the act of making marks.

Soul Dramas: Past-Life Regression and Spiritual Healing
Roger Woolger

Soul dramas are the daily emotional patterns, roles, and scripts we get stuck in and habitually act out. Some believe that although the soul first staged its dramas around childhood trauma, it had already rehearsed them in utero and had written them long ago from the ancient store of past-life melodramas we all carry.

Soul dramas can be tragic, pathetic, humorous, or banal, and when left unrecognized can cause anxiety, depression and rage, or a deep sense of dissatisfaction or alienation. The leader's unique method of releasing and transforming these compulsive dramas involves regression to buried memories and past lives, as well as profound after-death encounters in

The Nature of Movement
Steven Harper & Wendy Palmer

In this workshop, participants will work with energy awareness and principles derived from aikido, and outdoors on short day-hikes into Big Sur's backcountry to explore the movement that nature inspires. Both aikido and hiking are moving meditations which, when done well, require the individual to be in harmony with the natural world. There will be an opportunity to take what is learned on the aikido mat out into the natural world and bring what is learned from nature onto the aikido mat. Participants can then begin to integrate what they learn from both aikido and nature into their lives.

All evenings and most meals will be at Esalen. Participants need not have previous experience in aikido or hiking. $380

"Western Civilization is caught in a phase transition to the first planet-wide, species-wide civilization. Does the emergence of a shared set of universal values, democracy, and free markets have to mean the end of diversity and pluralism? What does human self-imaging through technology portend for each of us? Is the human race down for the count, or on the brink of its greatest adventure?" Topics for discussion will be psychedelics, virtual reality, rave culture, and the transformative power of magic and language. This is a unique chance to experience consciousness as an informational creature loose in an environment of meaning.

Healing the Heart

Julie Bowden & Richard Balaban

This workshop will be a journey into the vulnerable, tender part of the self that carries childhood traumas. Experiencing and integrating the pain from our past allows us to live more fully in relationship to ourselves and others, and helps us to acknowledge and nurture our inner voice. Enhancing intimacy and relationship skills is an important part of this work. Issues specific to both men and women will be explored.

We welcome adult children of alcoholic and dysfunctional families, people with a history of unfulfilling relationships, recovering alcoholics and addicts, codependents, and treatment providers. Participants are asked to forego alcohol and other mood-altering, non-prescription drugs for these five days. This will help create an atmosphere of safety, care, and respect for core issues to emerge, an environment to facilitate transformation.

If there is unresolved pain from your past or relationship issues in your present, this workshop is designed for you.

Golf in the Kingdom: An Exploration of the Inner Game

Stephen Cohen, Fred Shoemaker & Brian Bergstrom

"Ye'll come away from the links with a new hold on life, that is certain if ye play the game with all your heart. —MICHAEL MURPHY (as Shivas Irons), Golf in the Kingdom

The game of golf provides many opportunities to enhance the journey of self-discovery. It can be experienced not only as an athletic endeavor, but also as a metaphor for the way one lives. Just as in life, issues of self-confidence, fear, trust, discipline, and awareness emerge in the conflict between the ego's desire for success and the inner self's ability to achieve.

During these five days, teaching methods gleaned from a study of the inner game will be utilized, as well as principles from psychosynthesis and gestalt, to explore the inner self and how one interferes with its emergence. Two days will be spent on field trips to the Monterey Peninsula where participants will practice and play in some of the most beautiful golf country in the world. On other days there will be time to relax and enjoy the natural pleasures of Esalen and Big Sur.

Wild Heart Dancing

Elliot Sobel

It requires enormous courage and vulnerability to resurrect one's innate creative flow once it has been stifled in early childhood. Heavy clouds of fear and self-consciousness prevent access to the joyful, spontaneous expressions which at one time were native to all of us.

"Wild Heart Dancing" will explore the expressive arts — singing, dancing, writing, and painting — as vehicles of healing and conduits for the expression of the unfolding self. Against a backdrop of contemplative silence, the workshop will generate an atmosphere of safety necessary for participants to risk stepping forth, be it through a gentle, poetic fragment, an explosive, primitive dance, a poignant, heartfelt love song, or a childlike, impressionist painting.

Very few two-year olds have ever been known to say, "I can't carry a tune," or "I can't draw." On the contrary, the crudest scribblings of children are proudly displayed on refrigerators across the land! And with good reason — they reflect a freshness of vision, unfiltered by the painful inhibitions of a rigid, adult personality. We will explore the origins of these inhibitions and develop tools for defending against them and their source, the inner critic.

It is possible for the hidden artist to re-emerge; for the careful, constructed grown-up to give way to the passionate, unrehearsed outpourings of the soul. The elements required for such a transformation are a quieting of the mind and inner critic, gentle permission, and curiosity. "Wild Heart Dancing" will provide an opportunity for these qualities to arise and rekindle the very heart of creativity and authentic self-expression.

Relationship in the '90s

Hal & Sidra Stone

We walk the path of relationship with all the people in our lives — with family members, friends, the people at work, lovers, and spouses. Our relationships can be a source of great joy or much discomfort. Hal and Sidra Stone have created a simple way to look at relationships that helps to better understand them and to walk this path with greater ease.

Some of the questions explored in the workshop are:

• What destroys intimacy in relationships?
• Why are we drawn to certain people and why do others turn us off?
• What makes passion die in relationships?
• Where do these patterns come from and what can we learn from them?

Through discussion and experiential exercises participants will discover what different parts of themselves — the critic, the judge, the good mother/father, the playful child — are activated by children, spouse, parents, lover, or boss; learn new, powerful, and fun tools for happy relationships; and find out how to deal with two common "ifs" — "if you think the problem is them, it's not!" and "if you wish certain people would just go away, they won't!"

The workshop is open to couples and individuals. $380
The Subtle Self
Judith Blackstone

All spiritual traditions refer to an essential dimension of existence, calling it unity consciousness, emptiness, universal consciousness, and many other names. This dimension is not an abstract concept. It is the core of our own true nature and can be experienced by anyone who is willing to approach it with patience and openness. Unity consciousness is experienced as clear, mirror-like space, pervading our body and our environment, transcending the duality of self and object. It is deeper than the physical and energetic levels of our being and beyond our psychological defenses, projections, images, and archetypes. Subtle Self work is a precise method of attuning to the clear space of unity consciousness.

In this workshop participants will explore how to relate to others in this clear space, how to commune with nature, how to experience and live in the inner depths of the body, and how to integrate the body, authentic self, and unity consciousness. Group members will use the Subtle Self Work attention exercises, daily sitting meditation, and sound, breath, and movement exercises to stimulate the channels in the vertical core of the body and expand the sense of unity consciousness. In this essential dimension of ourselves, we can find the source of our love, clarity, vitality, and peace.

The work is profound, intellectually stimulating, spontaneous, and fun.

Bring your dreams and psychic/mystical experiences — or be prepared to have some — and an open mind. Also bring a notebook for dreams and journalizing, and a pad of art paper with crayons, felt-tips, or colored pencils. In addition, there will be tribal ceremonies, so bring a drum or other instrument if you have one.

Emotional Elimination: The Pathway to Self-Respect
Michael Barnett

We ingest the experiences of our lives through our senses. We digest the experiences of our lives with our bodies. How can we absorb just what nourishes us and eliminate the waste?

In our culture, we suffer from a lack of self-respect, a devaluation of our internal experience. Instead, cultural expectations define what we're supposed to be and supposed to experience. We sit in judgment of our own experience, trying to alter it to conform to institutional generalizations. How can we remain aware of what our internal experience is so that we can accept it and be true to it?

This workshop aims to increase awareness of the emotional ingestion, digestion, absorption, and elimination processes from a natural point of view, in order to enable participants to experience that which our emotional blockages protect: our spirits.

The workshop will use didactic presentations to create a vocabulary for communication and semi-hypnotic relaxation methods to generate material to process. Eclectic group techniques to process and understand the material will be used.

This workshop is for everyone who eats, feels, and lives in a culture. Come with an agenda or allow an agenda to evolve. As you can see from this workshop description, a Western medical psychiatric approach will not be employed.

Rekindling the Spirit in Work
Howard Schecter & Barbara Lee

"Rekindling the Spirit in Work" is about reconnecting with yourself and the work you do. Through creative exercises and sharing with the group, you can gain clarity about your goals in work, the skills required to reach those goals, and a deeper awareness of your strengths. The process can help you to confront and dissolve major blocks to rewarding work and to integrate who you are with what you do. This process is far more effective than narrow vocational perspectives. The emphasis is on the question "Who is working?" From an identification with our highest self, what we do can flow more easily and be a direct expression in the world of who we are inside.

This workshop is for people who are beginning new careers, in transition, dissatisfied, or simply bored with their work. Participants often come away with a sense of clarity and purpose, and seldom feel the need to make radical shifts in job or profession. Rather, the subtle inner adjustments of identity, attitude, and perspective create greater job satisfaction and offer direction for taking the next steps in work.

An Introduction to the Living Brain
Bonnie Bainbridge-Cohen
& Seymour Levine

As the infant's brain develops in utero, corresponding basic patterns of movement appear. Gaps in these movement patterns can affect many aspects of brain function, such as perception, organization, sequencing, and movement.

In this workshop Bonnie Bainbridge-Cohen will cover the embodiment and repatterning of the brain and spinal cord in relation to cellular awareness and basic developmental patterns of movement. Seymour Levine will discuss basic principles of brain organization and neuroanatomy. Participants will explore experientially how movement can repattern the brain and how the brain in turn can support the development of movement.

How can we regain the experience of wholeness known by our ancestors? How can we touch again our ancestors' roots?

In this workshop for women only, you can explore through ancient natural ways the experience of group process. Explore from a spiritual perspective the impact of our history and culture on our identity and how we live today.

Following a Native American psychological and spiritual process, participants can experience, at least momentarily, what it was like to be in the minds of our ancestors.

Using ceremony, prayer, star-gazing, group, and discussion, the group will embark upon a journey to regain tribal consciousness. Participants are asked to bring an object that expresses their family tree or represents their cultural identity. $380

Yoga: A Week of Learning and Rejuvenation
Ganga White & Tracey Rich

Presenting East/West teachings in a way that is contemporary, humorous, and applicable to modern living, the leaders will offer a week of physical, mental, and spiritual rejuvenation. Days will begin with instruction in an ancient Hatha yoga movement series that is new to this country and combines grace and flow with posture, pranayama (breath), and meditation. Participants will be shown a 45-minute balanced, aerobic yoga practice they can continue at home. Afternoons and evenings will be for group discussion and exploration into the teachings and principles of the art of enlightened living.

Topics will include diet and nutrition, how yoga works, aligning and restructuring the body, and awakening subtle energies.

Through Jhana (the yoga of wisdom and perception), participants will begin observing the thought processes and patterns that dictate their lives. They will look at the areas of love, responsibility, relationship, freedom, and death.

Participants at all levels are welcome; no previous experience is necessary. For additional information, contact the leaders at 805-964-1944. $740

Self-Hypnosis: Methods, Practice, and New Learning with Brainwave Feedback
Marc Lehrer & Guest Leaders

This workshop will present a wide variety of approaches to self-hypnosis, which can be perfected and modified to suit particular needs. The sessions will include: the teaching and practice of methods, group trance experiences, demonstrations, and discussions about applying the learning to everyday situations and problem areas. Special emphasis will be given to issues of perfecting performance skills, habit control (such as smoking and weight control), improving self-image, executive stress management applications, dream programming, and pain reduction and pleasure enhancement.

Participants will have the opportunity to experience some of the most recent computerized brainwave stimulation and biofeedback equipment to help deepen trance states. Native American healing trances, such as the use of the sweat lodge and preparation for vision quests, may be introduced. The leaders will also share information on ways to teach self-hypnosis classes and create self-hypnosis tapes.

Meetings will be in the mornings and evenings with afternoons free. Marc Lehrer will teach some of the sessions and will select experienced hypnosis teachers to teach their favorite methods in other sessions.

Endarkenment and Beyond
Will Schutz

Will Schutz writes: "The Endarkenment Workshop began as a semi-humorous (half-witted?) reaction to spending years searching for enlightenment, making progress, but falling woefully short (references: my wife). There must be alternate ways, I thought. Why not invert everything: Seek out the imperfections, look at them, make contact with them, exaggerate them to the point of ridiculousness, and go beyond. Over the past several years this evolution has been growing to the point of convergence with the paths to enlightenment, but with more fun and less pain. This workshop will continue this odyssey through appreciating the seriousness of problems by taking them beyond seriousness to humor, and appreciating the fair witness humor allows.

Vision Painting
Helen Jerene

Trust your creative spirit. Vision Painting is a form that can enable you to move beyond the rational mind to deeper levels of motivation, intention, and desire. It is playful, creative, and expressive. It is also fun and profoundly educational.

Vision Painting is a form of active meditation. Through guided visioning participants can witness a flow of images through which inner yearnings are prompted from the feeling centers, through the hand, and onto paper. The vision painting becomes a meditation and affirmation of areas in the participant's life that desire expression, change, or healing.

Vision Painting is a way to acknowledge your creative spirit and open a channel for the images to flow. Self-expression is evoked through feelings, color, music, movement, and dream images. The creative impulse is explored as an opportunity to play, take risks, face fears, and suspend judgment. Painting from creative spirit is a sacred journey into self.

What we focus upon, conscious or unconscious, continually creates the life we experience. This is a transformative adventure recreating aspects of your life spiritually, professionally, and physically. Through the visioning process, a vision of the future you intend may be crafted from its highest potential.

Gestalt Practicum
Christine Stewart Price & Gail Stewart

This workshop is designed for people who would like to further explore the gestalt practice form in theory as well as through personal experience. It is especially appropriate for those in the helping professions, such as counselors, bodyworkers, and teachers who are interested in integrating this approach into their current practice. The format will include open seat sessions with the leaders, structured exercises where participants work with each other, didactic presentation, and discussion.

The prerequisite for admission into the workshop is previous participation in a workshop specifically in gestalt practice led by one of the Esalen gestalt staff (Eric Erickson, Christine Price, or Joyce Lyke). Persons without this previous experience can fulfill this requirement by attending one of the gestalt practice workshops offered throughout this catalog. Others may send a letter of application to Christine Price, 31 Onyx Street, Larkspur, CA 94939, and will be considered if there is space available.

The Painting Experience
Michell Cassou & Stewart Cubley

It is rare for most people to use painting for its qualities of inner adventure and self-discovery, to paint purely for the process of exploration, not for the result.

The purpose of this workshop is to provide a setting to explore the self through painting — to discover in form and color a powerful tool for uncovering and dissolving blocks to emotional and spiritual expression. Participants will be given the support and stimulation to develop a natural way of painting based directly upon feeling. The work takes place in an authentic studio setting with large white surfaces to confront the creative void, along with a rich spectrum of colors and brushes. The workshop may be of interest to persons involved in a wide variety of disciplines, including art, education, counseling, and meditative practices. No prior experience in painting is necessary. Please bring a smock.

Please note: Portions of this workshop will be videotaped for the leaders.

Cortical Reeducation® and the Feldenkrais Method®

Harriet Golsins & Patti (Lawrence) White

The habitual way a person sits, stands, or moves reflects patterns that are "wired in" to the nervous system. This information can be erased or changed. By reeducating the brain-muscle connection, restrictions in movement are freed, freeing also the lifetime habits that have organized around that movement. This work is a relearning of the ease and fluidity taken for granted as a child and lost somewhere along the way. Physical injury, emotional trauma, or ongoing stress all evoke a protective response from the body. These patterns, necessary at the time, remain when no longer needed, outside of awareness, and continue to cause discomfort and unnecessary limitations. Freeing them results in relief of chronic pain or tightness, a more restful sleep, and a higher energy level. By changing muscular holding patterns, the entire protective posture is altered, deeply affecting the body's habitual defense system. Thus, new movement possibilities mean new self-image possibilities.

Fears and anxieties have corresponding muscular habits. Verbal information, no matter how brilliant, or spiritual practice that fails to extinguish these muscular habits may fail to totally eliminate the toxic behavior.

This workshop is for those who are physically active and fit and want to increase their skills while learning to reduce risk or injury; for the sedentary or those dealing with after-effects of injuries; for the athlete, the dancer, and those who "live in their heads," for individuals who feel chronically tired and stressed and want to learn how to take better care of their neck, shoulders, and back; and for those who want to improve their posture and breathing and live with more flexibility and comfort.

Creating Health Through Imagery

Jeanne Achterberg & Frank Lawlis

The power of the imagination has historically been recognized as a vital key in determining whether people stay well, become ill, or respond positively to a diagnosis of disease. Currently, an impressive and expanding body of clinical and research evidence supports its use in a broad range of treatment settings, for many medical disorders, and as a preeminent factor in the psychological, emotional, and spiritual issues confronted in the wake of crisis.

This program will focus on imagery as a health care tool for the seriously ill. The common threads of imagery in ancient rituals will be related to modern settings; new research on the physiological and biochemical pathways of the imagination will be discussed. Imagery will be demonstrated as mental rehearsal for challenging events or treatments, diagnosis, and as an adjunctive treatment procedure for catastrophic and chronic conditions such as cancer, AIDS, autoimmune disorders, and injuries. A major section will deal with methods for enhancing immunity. The discussion material will be accompanied by demonstrations, experiential sessions, case studies, and role-playing. Participants will view slides and two important films, have the opportunity to ask questions, and network.

This program is designed primarily for the helping professions, although health consumers who take an active role in their treatment and recovery will also find it useful.

The Ultimate Yes

George Leonard

Life has one ultimate message, "Yes", repeated in infinite number and variety. Human life, channeled for millennia by Civilization, is only just beginning to express the diversity and range of which it is easily capable.

— Education and Ecstasy

The ultimate "Yes" is to life itself in its every moment, whatever that moment might bring. The ultimate gift to any friend or loved one is to be totally present for him or her. This gentle May weekend will be dedicated to saying "Yes" to life and the present moment. Through breathing, chanting, meditation, imaging, and movement, this seminar will seek to affirm our oneness with nature, the cosmos, and one another, to remind ourselves of the brevity.
and vividness of the miracle of existence. Bring a friend or a loved one or come alone. All that is needed is a generous spirit and a willingness to participate wholeheartedly.

Recovery
Howard Kornfeld
Recovery from addiction and depression encompasses different stages. After acute detoxification and pharmacotherapy, the recovering individual often faces the most difficult hurdle: the restoration of a sense of beauty and meaning in life.

The Esalen/Big Sur environment symbolizes the earth’s beauty in all its fragility and splendor. The link between personal and planetary healing becomes coherent in this setting. The restoration of beauty and meaning may become possible after a pattern of chronic somatic pain is released through massage therapy and exercise. Or meaning may be restored during an experience of meditation or gestalt awareness.

This workshop is for those professionals or members of the general public who would like to experience how established recovery can be integrated with the beauty and ambiguity of the Esalen environment and curriculum. The workshop will also explore the interface between modern addiction medicine practice and a recovery philosophy based not only on the venerable 12-step surrender process, but also on several further sets of principles. These include those of ecopsychology, as articulated by Theodore Roszak, and those of the ecology of the mind, as developed by Gregory Bateson.

Time-Shifting: Creating Time for Your Life
Stephen Rechtschaffen
As we constantly strive to be "on time" in our fast-paced, over-scheduled lives, we lose touch with living in the flow of time. We are a society plagued with time-sickness. Caught up in the stress of running to work, home, recreation, or other responsibilities and interests, we don’t have time for the important things. Anxious about the future, regretful of the past, we miss the fullness of the moment.

This workshop will help participants understand their own attitudes toward time and how those attitudes affect their lifestyle, health, and longevity. It will introduce methods that move perception away from societal time pressures and into the often unexplored territory of freedom-within-time. The workshop will also offer meditation, visualization, time-evaluation, and planning (not scheduling).

From this vantage point, participants can explore how dysrhythmic, hurried schedules affect their relationships, work, and creativity; use their newly expanded sense of time to define what they really want in their lives and what their real priorities are; and enjoy the simple power and pleasure of being present in each moment.

Lomi Somatic Intensive: An Active Exploration of Presence
Kathryn Lydecher, Johanna Putnow & Robert Sanoff
You have slept for millions and millions of years. Why not wake up this morning? — KABIR

Write the leaders: "The awareness we bring to each moment is the key to our deep freedom. Most of us get stuck in habits of body, heart, and mind. These habits are unconsciously formed in our family of origin and become etched onto our essential infrastructure. This matrix imprints on our body language, our emotional climate, and our state of mind, ultimately creating our worldview. Unexamined belief clouds the reality of each moment, and we become prisoners in a body/mind cell.

"In this workshop, awareness, presence, and practice will be our lanterns. We will use meditation, conscious movement, breath awareness, informed touch, and principles from aikido and gestalt as ways to experience ourselves richly and to participate with integrity, courage, and gentleness."

C.E. credit is available; see pages 60-61. $740

"The Esalen environment and our group experience there, however, are only a beautiful laboratory in which to practice interrupting our habits and expanding our capacity to tolerate deep feeling. The greater our commitment to the process, the more intrinsic the change. But the real challenge of our time together is to discover how to bring our embodied insights home."

The leaders are dear friends. They have been teaching together for more than a dozen years and bring their sense of community and affection for one another to the group process. $740

Intuition, Perception, and Altered States of Consciousness: Extending the Boundaries of Human Experience
Keith Harary & Darlene Moore
Most of us have had experiences in which we appeared to be aware of information that was not immediately available to our five familiar senses. Such experiences usually emerge spontaneously and can range from simple hunches, to feeling in touch with a loved one at a distance, to premonitions in which we seem to be inexplicably aware of impending events. Labeling such experiences “psychic” does not explain them, but makes this fundamentally normal aspect of human awareness appear to be some sort of occult or supernatural process. Yet such experiences most likely emerge out of a deep interconnectedness between consciousness and the physical world that is entirely natural and independent of any single philosophical or religious system.

Specific techniques of extended perception will be taught in order to allow this capacity to become a consciously available resource in everyday life, rather than a strictly spontaneous phenomenon. Starting with the basics of learning how to manage mental impressions, participants will practice separating their most relevant feelings and images from various forms of “mental noise” in a variety of extended perception scenarios. A more advanced technique that involves using one’s own “mental noise” to help guide intuition will also be taught so participants can develop their own inner language for processing intuitive information. Additional exercises will focus on exploring specific techniques for inducing lucid dreams and out-of-body experiences, and for consciously connecting with the broader transpersonal continuum that lies just beyond the threshold of ordinary awareness.

CranioSacral II
Suzanne Scurlock-Durana
This workshop further explores the CranioSacral System and its function in relationship to other patho-physiological body systems. The course will begin with the study of cranial base dysfunctions as perceived, diagnosed, and treated by Dr. William Sutherland, the father of cranial osteopathy. In this course students will learn how to integrate Sutherland's techniques for identifying and evaluating lesions into our "10-step protocol" and how to apply individual correction treatments when needed.

Evaluation and treatment processes of the hard palate, the mandible, and temporomandibular joint will be presented and practiced to complete the exploration of the masticatory system. Emphasis will be directed to whole body evaluation, as discussions will center on various "physiological phenomena" that occur within the body.

The SomatoEmotional Release process will also be introduced with discussion and demonstration of an "energy cyst." Before participating in this course, students must complete CranioSacral Therapy I, either at Esalen (see February 12-17) or elsewhere.

Pottery at Esalen
Noel Mapstead & Keiko Suga
The Big Sur coast is uniquely endowed with numerous deposits of raw clays which have been decomposing from granite rock for millions of years. In this workshop we will come to the Big Sur clays to create form and metamorphosis.

The group will explore parts of the Big Sur coast to gather clays, make pottery, and bake the clay in open-pit fires using cow dung. Participants will be taught to identify natural clays, process and work clay, and fire by traditional methods using Esalen's natural surroundings as an open studio. Other sessions will include clay hot baths and a sweat lodge.

This workshop will demonstrate how to transform ostensibly valueless natural materials into treasured objects. No prior experience is necessary. Emphasis will be on completing handmade works to take home and give to loved ones.

Refilling the Chalice: Time Out for Healers
Joan & Myrin Borysenko
The leaders write: "We are offering this workshop as much for ourselves as we are for you. Several times each year we retreat in a solitary or protected group setting to enjoy nature, open to the still small voice within, and refill the chalice of caring love from which others sip throughout the year. Esalen is a wonderful setting for such a retreat. We will schedule time for group meditation and yoga, prayer, silent mindful walking in the beauty of Big Sur, dreamwork, listening to sacred music, and discussing the nature of healing. This is a time to nourish ourselves and to honor the sacred trust we have been given by taking time to welcome and thank the Spirit that we serve."

The Story of the Tasaday: Learning What is Essential
John Nance
Can you imagine life without agriculture or the wheel, engines or indoor plumbing? Suppose there were no mirrors and you'd never seen your own image. Most of the time humans have walked the earth such things did not exist. So what is essential to survival and well-being?

Answering this question is the aim of this workshop, which explores the story of the gentle Tasaday people of the Philippines. The workshop offers an intimate glimpse into the Tasaday way of life — described as "as close to nature as any people known in modern times" — and an appreciation of who we may have been in the distant past and who we have become today.

The Tasaday's incredible journey of the last twenty-three years has taken them from cave... dwellings in a tropical rain forest to the teeming city of Manila. Their determination to survive in the wilderness and adapt to the modern world offers an inspiring demonstration of the strength, love, and flexibility of the human body, mind, and spirit.

John Nance has been documenting the Tasaday since 1971, when they came to their edge of the forest, looked into the tree-harvested flatland beyond, and called it "the place where the eye sees too far." Through a collection of stories, photographs, and films, you are invited to explore the truths and metaphors of the Tasaday's world — and to find meanings in your own search into who you are. It may even help you get in touch with your soul, which the Tasaday described as the "part of you that sees the dream." $380

Big Sur Wilderness Experience

Steven Harper

Located on a narrow stretch of land between the Pacific Ocean and the coastal ridge of the Santa Lucia Mountains, Esalen is the trailhead to one of the world's most spectacular wilderness areas. With this natural reserve as the primary teacher, the group will walk into the Los Padres National Forest. Drawing on various traditions, this wilderness experience will help participants develop the quality of their awareness and open to the natural world.

Weeklong workshops will venture out on five hikes (4-10 miles long). Weekend workshops will take two hikes (3-6 miles long). Using Esalen as a base camp, the group will explore the different trails through the natural beauty of the Big Sur backcountry. Days will begin and end at Esalen with short stretching and sharing sessions. Each hike will begin after breakfast and conclude in time to enjoy the hot springs and dinner each evening at Esalen. Basic outdoor skills such as map reading and minimum impact concepts will be practiced. Participants will be taught enough skills to begin exploring the wilderness on their own after these outings. More information will be sent upon registration. $740

Pilobolus: Collaborative Creativity Method

Michael Tracy

Pilobolus Dance Theatre, the company that pioneered a unique collaborative method of choreography, has performed worldwide for nearly twenty-five years, and has taught widely in universities and institutes around the country.

This workshop, taught by Pilobolus' co-Artistic Director Michael Tracy, will offer a unique opportunity to see into the choreographic method of this innovative company, and to learn how to use this method as a means of developing your own creative ideas.

The workshop will begin each day with an introduction to this collaborative method. A part of each day will then be devoted to guided movement experimentation: another part will be dedicated to developing collaborative ideas into short choreographic pieces. The workshop will provide a lively, supportive environment in which to develop your creative skills, and guidance and feedback as you refine your ideas into a more powerful dramatic form. There will be daily opportunities to create new work, and a dynamic sharing of artistic ideas. By the end of the week, you may be surprised by your creative work.

This workshop is open to people of all ages and levels of experience. Come prepared to move. $740

Awakened Mind: Five-Day Brainwave Training Intensive

Anna Wise

The Awakened Mind is a state of consciousness that releases deep inner resources, capacities, and powers that often lie dormant and inaccessible. This workshop will help you develop the intricate combinations of brainwave frequencies that underlie optimum mental states. Biofeedback monitoring, combined with different methods of meditation, visualization, "sensualization," and deep psychophysiological relaxation, will help you learn how to master your own brainwaves.

The workshop will present methods for accessing repressed memories and creating a bridge between your conscious and your unconscious mind. Bridging this gap and making this connection with your innermost self allows you to begin a process that encourages healing and integration. Emphasis will also be on the importance of the interrelationship between brainwaves and the human energy system, specifically the kundalini process.

Throughout the workshop, the Mind Mirror EEG will be used to demonstrate brainwave patterns, and Electrical Skin Resistance Meters will be used to measure the depth of arousal and relaxation of your autonomic nervous system, illuminating the interrelationship between your body and your mind.

Conscious Loving: A Body-Centered Approach to Relationship Transformation

Gay & Kathlyn Hendricks

Relationships are the primary arena in which our deepest selves are either concealed or revealed. This workshop is designed for couples, professionals, and singles who are interested in the ability of close relationships to catalyze the creativity of each person. It has two major purposes: 1) to expand the experience of love past previous limits; and 2) to learn to rest in the essence that underlies persons.

Based on the leaders' experience with over 1,500 couples, they will present breath and movement practices that can accelerate the process by which people in close relationships can attain their goals. Participants will work on the transformation of present relationships while exploring the three key principles of conscious relationship: living in integrity, claiming creativity, and embracing life. Group members will be given methods designed to make it easier to tell the truth and take healthy responsibility for feelings and issues.

Among the tools to be used: videotapes, movement processes, breathwork, and dyadic communication activities.

Medicinal Herbology: An Esalen Garden Workshop

Jeanine Pollak

This weekend workshop will present in-depth coverage of forty useful plants growing fresh in the Esalen garden. It will include how to identify, prepare, and formulate these plants with respect to the medicinal, nutritional, and cosmetic aspects of each.

Using the garden as a classroom, participants will learn to make fresh infusions, sun teas, liniments, and tinctures. The group will discuss safe and effective formulas for common colds, flu, sore throats, headaches, and digestive/respiratory systems. The workshop will draw from modern scientific research and herbal pharmacology, as well as from tradition and folklore, as the uses and energetics of each plant are explored. Participants will also be given detailed knowledge of many other common plants and the safe and effective use of herbs in daily life.

Opening the Feelings

Dale Cummings

Participants will employ Radix® and neo-Reichian methods of emotional release, the most important of which is the Radix® intensive, a period of individual work within a small group setting which can provide emotional support among participants. Grief, pain, fear, and rage that have been held in since childhood can emerge. As the participant accepts and works through these negative feelings, he or she may discover a new capacity for pleasure, trust, and love. In time, the sexual experience may change as feelings of tenderness and sexuality intensify and merge.

Dreaming: The Magic Mirror that Never Lies

Jeremy Taylor

The basic language of dreams is symbol and metaphor. Dreams address everyone in essentially the same way, regardless of the uniqueness of our individual lives and circumstances. Participants will share and work with their dreams, drawing on the mythological/archetypal images that shape our contemporary individual and collective lives. Although the focus will be dream interpretation in a collective context, the methods are designed to give participants the ability to engage in their own dreamwork upon returning home.

Everyone is welcome — those who are just beginning to explore the world of their dreams, as well as professionals who work with dreams. As the leader comments: "Only the dreamer can say with any certainty what meanings his or her dreams may hold, and dreamwork is one of the few activities that puts beginners and experts on an equal emotional footing from the outset."

Optimum Health: Theory & Practice

Nick Hall & Jim Loehr

The effects of stress on the body are still largely unknown, but research over the past decade has indicated that it may be linked to various diseases. This workshop will explore the theoretical and practical issues relating to stress and outline a training program for optimum health and stress reduction.

Nick Hall, a pioneer in research exploring the relationship between the brain and the immune system, will review the practical issues concerning stress and psychoneuroimmunology. He has published over 100 articles on psychoneuroimmunology and has been featured on "60 Minutes" for his work using imagery with cancer patients. Participants will explore behavioral-based techniques such as relaxation, guided imagery, conditioning, and nutrition as anti-stress interventions.

Today, more than ever before, many people are overwhelmed by the stresses and tensions that they experience in their daily lives. Yoga, the oldest science of life, utilizes body, mind, and breath to bring stress under control by revitalizing energy on physical, mental, and spiritual levels.

On the physical level, asanas (yoga postures) tone the muscles, joints, and nerves, massage the internal organs, increase circulation, and improve digestion, making the body strong, flexible, and proportionate.

On the mental and spiritual level, the regular practices of asanas and breathing methods not only cleanse the system and energize the body; they also help to calm the mind and develop an awareness of self. Meditation can then become a vehicle for focusing this awareness, allowing the spirit to flourish.

During this weekend, asanas, breathing exercises, integral movement, and meditation will be taught and practiced, with particular emphasis on the yoga postures (stretches). Participants will be assisted in building a solid foundation for the further development of yoga practice. Yoga philosophy and theory will be presented. A healthy diet will also be discussed and encouraged.

Sexual Trauma Survivors: Specific Strategies for Body, Mind, and Spiritual Healing

Carolyn Braddock & Guests

The body remembers sexual trauma because the body is the scene of the crime. It expresses these memories in how one breathes, moves, and speaks—or doesn't speak. Consequently, body sensations may be blocked and a protective body belief system may develop. The child learns early not to have a voice to express the anger, sadness, pain, or frustration she or he suffers.

This workshop focuses on body/mind/spirit integration, adding new somatic dimensions to traditional strategies in the healing journey. For example, it will identify three main body types (rigid, collapsed, and inanimate) that illustrate how survivors respond when they revisit the memories of their traumas.

Through eight guided teaching sessions, participants will be shown how to enhance their skills with new intervention strategies to empower wounded individuals to speak in a strong, new voice. Group members will be actively involved in interventions, demonstrations, discussion of legal/ethical issues, and case presentations from a body-oriented perspective. Breathwork, sound, movement, gestalt, bodywork, Tai Ji, role-playing, and creative cognitive work will also be used, creating a balance between work and play.

This approach is applicable for traditional psychotherapists, bodyworkers, and those in the medical profession.

Please note: This workshop is for professionals, those in training, and others who are interested in a new body-oriented approach to working with sexual trauma survivors. It is applicable for Braddock Body Process™ certification hours.

Recovering from the Loss of a Parent

Jack Engler

In the mind of a child, whatever the age, it is incomprehensible that parents can die. When they do, especially later in life, we may be surprised by how shocked, unprepared, and overwhelmed we can feel, and for how long. The death of a parent confronts us with issues and feelings we have never faced before.

This is a workshop for those who have lost a parent in adult life, and who still find themselves working through related issues. In a safe, supportive setting, the workshop will offer a chance to explore these issues and feelings, identify blocks to grieving and healing, and learn how this painful event can be an opportunity for a deeper understanding and appreciation of life as well as death.

The workshop will address specific issues associated with the loss of a parent: the nature of grief; the process of grieving someone we always assumed would be there; dealing with anger and guilt; the impact on relationships with family and friends, work and home; new attitudes toward death; and our own spirituality and mortality.

The workshop will be based primarily on personal sharing and interaction. It will include written assignments and exercises, as well as guided meditations. Because this work depends on everyone having an opportunity to share and interact, it will be limited to twelve participants.

Chakra Integration: A Complete Approach to Health and Healing

Laurie Lioness Parizek & The Esalen Teaching Staff

The chakras are vital, life-enhancing centers that have their roots in the physical body, along the spine, and deep in the brain. They open into the energy field and are a complete three-dimensional system of the body. When integrated, they refine the mainstream current of energy in the central nervous system, bring balance to the endocrine system, and help to integrate one's physical, spiritual, and energetic life.

This workshop will use movement, sound, awareness exercises, and supportive hands-on work to balance the chakras and mainstream spinal current, and to gently and consciously open this channel that connects heaven and earth through our bodies. Participants will be guided in grounding and breathwork. The workshop will explore and integrate personal healing work, gentle energetic touch, and associated hands-on skills to enable participants to work more consciously with themselves and others. Meditation will be used throughout the week to bring serenity and a deeper personal understanding of the chakras. Participants are invited to bring their favorite musical instrument and/or personal healing tools.

This workshop addresses everyone and is of special interest to health care professionals and those interested in developing a working knowledge of this ancient time-tested way of healing. Please bring warm clothing as some of this workshop will be outdoors.

Developing a Fitness Regime for Optimal Well-Being

Carl Chase (C.C.) & Deborah Anne Medow

Everyone wants to feel more flexible, toned, and energized — stronger and more powerful. This workshop can help you develop and practice a daily fitness regime to achieve just those goals.

This seven-day workshop will provide an opportunity to start to unlock your potential and develop the positive thoughts and attitudes that can create health and optimal well-being. The keys will be a combination of meditation, yoga, “ballistic” stretching, movement, dance, and a healthy diet.

During the workshop, participants will practice the above activities to help establish a daily fitness routine — fitness on physical, mental, and spiritual levels. The group support will be especially helpful for those who have a difficult time keeping such a fitness practice going.

There will also be quiet time for reflection, integration, and the peaceful enjoyment of the beautiful Big Sur coast and Esalen property.

Please bring loose, comfortable clothing, tapes and CDs, even musical instruments, an open mind, a good sense of humor, and a warm heart.

Please note: This workshop is not recommended for the seriously ill or the "faint of heart".

Meditation, the Self, and Healing

Ron Alexander & Lobzang Rappay

"Learning to observe experience from a place of stillness enables one to relate to life without fear and clinging. One begins to accept pleasure and pain, fear and joy, and all aspects of life with increasing equanimity and balance. Life is seen as a constantly changing process."

— Jack Kornfield, Seeking the Heart of Wisdom

Meditation helps to cultivate self-regulation through relaxation and the development of attentional skill. Mindfulness training helps develop awareness of self and psychic processes. It can also enhance affective and cognitive states of mind/body awareness to promote insight and individuation.

This workshop will provide instruction in the essential practice and understanding of meditation from both a psychological and spiritual perspective. The focus will be on the practice, experience, and benefits of meditation in daily life.

The meditative techniques of the various Buddhist schools, particularly Tibetan, Kundalini, Vipassana, and Zen, will be explored in detail. Tibetan meditation seeks to use mindfulness, insight, and visualization to activate physiological and psychological energies whose merger can produce powerful states of mind to penetrate into the reality of our being and experience. The principles of Buddhist psychology and Tibetan medicine amplify and integrate the full spectrum of mind/body healing.

This workshop can help participants acquire skills to calm the mind, directly experience affect, and enhance the creative activation of the mind. It is designed for everyone, from beginning to advanced.

Songs of Innocence—Songs of Experience

Nancy Kaye Lunney

Singing can be an experience of great joy or overwhelming terror. It can provide illuminating moments of pure expression or a smoke screen of performance camouflage.

"Songs of Innocence — Songs of Experience" is singing about yourself, who you are, what you feel. It is about being yourself in front of other people without judging how well you sing. This workshop is not about performance. It is about making contact, feeling, expressing, and being there, with and for yourself and others.

If you've never sung in front of people, then this workshop can provide you with an opportunity to explore a new avenue of expression. If you and singing are old friends, this workshop can be a forum to expand the limits of that expression. It is a chance to take your singing self out of the shower, out of the car — out of the closet.

If the idea of getting up and singing in front of other people terrifies you more than anything you can think of, this workshop is for you. If you love to sing in front of other people and want to stretch yourself further, this workshop is for you.

Some guided imagery and gestalt may be used. Bring lyrics to songs that express thoughts and feelings you'd like to explore. Accompaniment and lots of music are provided. $380
EMDR: Treating the Trauma Victim; A Workshop for Psychotherapists
Francine Shapiro & Margot Silk Forrest

The effects of trauma can be disastrous for the client and can lay the cornerstone for a variety of pathologies and presenting complaints. The remarkable success of EMDR (Eye Movement Desensitization and Reprocessing) in the rapid treatment of trauma has caused many to reexamine the assumptions about the nature of pathology. EMDR is an interactive, standardized approach and method that can accelerate the treatment of post-trauma symptomatology.

In this workshop, topics for discussion will be traumatic wounding, the mechanisms of processing, the role of clients in their own healing, and what this means for clinicians. While not constituting a training, the workshop will explore theoretical assumptions, the model, and its discrete elements and clinical applications.

Part of the Dancing Heart: The Body as a Map
Sara Shelton Mann

This is an unusual workshop that presents improvisational movement as a disciplined practice that can provide access to and awareness of essential states — those states of trust, joy, vulnerability, curiosity, and openness.

People generally operate out of primarily one physical system — bone, muscle, nerves, fluids. By exploring different physical systems, one's personal experience can expand and become a source through which movement, writing, storytelling, and singing can act as transformative agents. The group will start with balancing the visual, sensing, listening body, then dive into the physical systems that can bring forth essential states — strength, joy, peace — past the ordinary to the extraordinary, revealing our relationship to self and others. Participants can produce a personal body map, which, when viewed objectively, encourages a natural spirit of investigation to arise spontaneously.

The workshop will offer a movement practice designed for all ages and levels of experience. The practice can provide a new map of awareness and physical skills to track personal experience, especially experience of the unnameable. The workshop will also include writing, processing, and contemplation.

Acts of Courage
David Schiffman & Susan Kuttner

This workshop is designed for people who are facing change. It will be a time to pause and step away from the deadlines, demands, distractions, and interruptions of daily life.

These five days will be an opportunity to come back to your own heart in the company of kindred spirits. Participants will work to gather strength and clarity for making simple, effective plans for dealing with changes and uncertainties.

The pace will be gentle and restorative, with ample time to consider each individual's dreams, desires, and dilemmas. The intention will be to see how the process of transition can be approached in a heartfelt, open-minded, and courageous spirit. Together the group will create a mood of sanctity, balance, and peace for reflecting and acting on each individual's deepest concerns. Resources and influences will be drawn from a variety of traditional psychological approaches, as well as movement, music, ritual, and ceremonial practice.

Body Rejuvenation
Dub Leigh & Audrey Nakamura

The goal of this workshop is to start rejuvenating the body, mind, and spirit. A fast way to do this is to work the body: transform the old, hard, short, nonresilient tissue into soft, lengthy, bouncy tissue free from trauma, stress, and pain; work on changing the despondent, hopeless, negative, grouchy person into an enthusiastic, positive, upbeat person.

The recipe for beginning to rejuvenate the body will be demonstrated in one session to

This seminar is recommended for anyone and everyone. The older you are, the more stuff you have to work with. Bring a swimsuit—a two-piece for women.

Please note: Since this is a hands-on class using particular methods, participants are asked not to receive bodywork outside of class until the workshop is over.

Caring for the Dying: What Really Works?
Zoketsu Norman Fischer & Frank Ostaseski

This workshop explores a mindful and compassionate approach to caring for those with chronic or life-threatening illness. Drawing on the experience of the Zen Hospice Project, a nationally innovative model of conscious care, the aim is to demystify the care-giving process, investigate our response to suffering, and clarify our intention in service.

The leaders will introduce traditional meditation practices of awareness, impermanence, and forgiveness; provide exercises designed to explore accumulated grief; and discuss the importance of ritual and memorials. Through silence, writing, storytelling, and the collective wisdom of the group, we will discover ways of encouraging our innate generosity and skillful means to stay present in difficult or impersonal care-giving situations.

The workshop offers renewal and a fresh perspective on service to professionals or individuals caring for friends or family. All are invited, but those caring for people with AIDS or cancer are particularly encouraged to attend. Wear comfortable clothing and please bring writing materials.

Natural Genius: An Authenticity of Being

Elisa Lodge

Unleashing the creative spirit will happen only when we recognize that natural genius lies within everything and everybody. — Buckminster Fuller

Natural genius is a powerful creative force that arises when a deep sense of self-worth and trust is felt. It reflects a wholehearted acceptance of the many facets of our being. We are all geniuses in wonderful and mysterious ways that lie undiscovered within us.

Participants will have an opportunity to explore self-defeating patterns and beliefs that inhibit natural genius and learn practical tools to unleash untapped energy, passion, and creativity.

Individual and group exercises will be used, including a whole-body thinking process to balance right and left brain, stimulate intuition, and support more spontaneous “feeling” aspects of our thinking. By freeing and integrating breath, sound, feelings, energy, and movement as the nonverbal expression of our aliveness, participants can contrast the difference between self-imprisonment and inner freedom, pretense and presence, acting and being.

As we regain the power to dance our unique dance, as we voice the wisdom buried in our bones, we open to the heart of our personal power.

Jewish Renewal: Finding and Healing the Jewish Part of Your Soul

Michael Lerner

You don’t have to be Jewish to learn from the spiritual and psychological wisdom of the Jewish people. Though Christianity portrayed Judaism as rigidly stuck in legalisms, and the oppression of Jews sometimes caused Jews to revert to a Judaism more aimed at survival than celebration, today the post-Holocaust world is seeing a remarkable renewal of Jewish spirituality and insights. Politically progressive and psychologically sophisticated Jews are reclaiming Judaism from the conservatism, conformism, and spiritual deadness that dominates some segments of the organized Jewish community.

Michael Lerner has been called “America’s preeminent liberal Jewish intellectual” after the publication of his book Jewish Renewal and been described by the Washington Post as “the guru of the White House” because of his role in developing “the Politics of Meaning” which was adopted by Hillary Clinton. Lerner presents a weekend seminar that combines psychological processes to reclaim the Jewish part of your soul (even if you didn’t know you had that part), Jewish religious observance (Sabbath meals and celebrations, reading of the Torah, etc.), and reflections on the Jewish approach to care for the soul, the relationship between spirituality and politics, and the psychodynamics of compassion and transformation.

Practicing in the Marketplace: The Diamond Approach—A Spiritual Teaching for Our Times

Sandra Mahtir & Joyce Lyke

God has made non-existence appear solid and respectable;
He has made existence appear in the guise of non-existence.
He has hidden the sea and made the foam visible,
He has concealed the wind and shown you the dust.
— Jalal al-Din Rumi

There is something within each of us that cannot be seen or touched with our ordinary senses, yet many of us intuit that this dimension is more important than anything else — it is the fathomless source of who we are.

Through our conditioning, opaque inner veils have come to obscure our contact with these depths, leaving us to reside on the surface of ourselves and our lives, in at best a state of discontent, and at worst deep suffering. We look outside of ourselves for happiness and fulfillment, but when we finally recognize that what we long for is really deep within, a great turning begins.

This is the beginning of the spiritual journey. The Diamond Approach evolved as a way of making that journey for those of us leading ordinary lives of work and family in our modern world. Combining traditional spiritual understandings and practices with the most current knowledge of depth psychology, we are able to contact dimensions of reality and of the human potential traditionally accessible only to a very few.

In this workshop, students will be introduced to the fundamentals of the Diamond Approach. Specific practices and exercises focusing on presence, awareness, and inquiry will be taught to encourage participants to sink more deeply into themselves, and the obstacles and barriers that are generally encountered as we make the inward journey to our true Home will be worked with.

The Body and Zen

Dub Leigh & Audrey Nakamura

The goal of this seminar is twofold: (1) to use bodywork methods and principles for releasing tension, trauma, and toxins from connective tissue, and (2) to circulate the vital energy in an aligned body. The group will draw from Rolfing (structure), Feldenkrais (function), and Zen (energy), to obtain these goals.

This is a hands-on workshop. Participants will give and receive bodywork and learn methods to recognize, work with, and relieve some types of chronic muscle pain. Participants are asked to bring a swimsuit — a two-piece for women.

Please note: Since this is a hands-on class using particular methods, participants are asked not to receive bodywork outside of class until the workshop is over.

Letting Go—Moving On
Mary Goldenson (DeVannani) & Gustavo Rabin
Beliefs, fears, and emotions from the past can continue into present relationships and interfere with spontaneous feelings of trust, love, and joy. The goal of this workshop is to experience and let go of these defenses and create new ways to relate—in the moment—to ourselves, our work, and those we love.

The workshop includes periods of intense bodywork for those who want to let go of past anger, fear, and pain, which are reflected in the body as armor and tension. As armor softens, feelings held in since childhood can be released, and positive feelings can be experienced more fully. By also using dreamwork, massage, dance, and group process, a new capacity for loving can emerge.

This workshop will have no more than thirty participants.

Turning on the Light:
A Conscious Choice to Live
Laura DeNuccio & Guest Leaders
In the sunlight of awareness, each thought and action becomes sacred.

Laura DeNuccio writes: "What would you love to see in your life? In your world? What is meaningful to you? What is truly of value? To live fully, mindful of these questions, is a choice we can make moment-by-moment.

This workshop is about honoring, empowering, and celebrating each person as we reclaim our wholeness/holiness as human beings making choices to live fully.

"Through the creative use of breath, sound, music, movement, and visioning, we can explore and discover what our spirit longs to express. Guided meditations will be used to increase body awareness and aliveness, to dissolve and balance energetic blockages, and to quiet, still, and expand the mind.

"Interpersonally, the emphasis will be on cultivating compassion, patience, and understanding as we learn to come into alignment with our own truths in relation to others and the planet. Through attunement with the Earth, we can deepen our capacity to listen to our innate wisdom and intelligence. Nature will become our teacher as we take gentle walks and light hikes in Big Sur.

"Applying the creative use of the Spoken Word, we will explore and expand a vision of possibilities for ourselves and the world in which we live."

Disarming the Ogre: Recognizing and Transforming the Inner Critic
Sarah La Saulle
The Ogre—also known as the inner negative voice, the committee, the dark and hopeless perceptions, black-and-white thinking—is the voice of old belief systems. Many people experience their Ogre as a feeling of malaise or heaviness. Often it goes unrecognized by posing as the voice of reason, of ultimate reality. The Ogre judges. It counsels by criticism and continually re-inflicts wounds. The fundamental goal of the Ogre is to protect from pain and further loss. Unfortunately, the voice is cruel and distorted in its effort to preserve.

In this workshop, participants will catch their Ogre, illuminate him, and utilize various methods to transmute his negative influence. Writing, drawing, partnering, and group discussion will be utilized to deal with conscious and unconscious self-hatred. $380

Jim Dodge
This writing workshop will be a journey into the realm of figurative language, or tropes, and its core expressions—metaphor, simile, image, and symbol. It will concentrate on metaphor-making, emphasizing the craft and art of imaginative associations. Particular regard will be given to the skills and strategies of giving interior forces (emotion/idea/spirit) exterior density in the physical world through what Aristotle called "the art of the likely impossible."

Art from the Heart: Communication Beyond Words

A Workshop for Families

Janet Greenwood

For centuries families naturally created and worked together to provide food, clothing, and shelter for survival. This teamwork was also a way for family members to connect with each other, play, talk, and learn to appreciate each other’s talents. Today our sophisticated technology has allowed us to lighten our workload but also has reduced opportunities for families to create together and naturally strengthen interdependence, cooperation, and trust.

Through an approach Janet Greenwood calls “Art from the Heart,” families will participate in specific art experiences — using drawing, play, collage, and music — that are designed to deepen understanding, communication, and joy in being together. Art creations also become symbols to learn about ourselves and teach each other about what most contributes to our feeling loved and cared about.

Symbolic art can be used to heal past wounds. By creating and understanding our personal color and symbol vocabulary, combined with words and psychological understanding, we can become more conscious of behavioral patterns and more intentional in developing loving, healthy relationships.

No prior art experience is necessary. The workshop is designed for families of all configurations, appropriate for most children over age five. Students and professionals in psychology or education may find these processes to be useful personally as well as professionally.

Emotional Healing: From Codependence to Aliveness

Terry Hunt & Hazel Salk

Children who grow up in alcoholic, abusive, or otherwise unhealthy homes often develop disabilities that last a lifetime unless these disabilities are deliberately addressed. These difficulties can include: an inordinate need to control, an overdeveloped sense of responsibility, fear of authority figures, inability to trust, difficulty having fun, compulsive behavior, fear of abandonment, and chronic lack of self-esteem.

All addictions and codependency are diseases of denial. This includes workaholism and other compulsive activities, as well as substance abuse. Sufferers of addictions and their offspring tell themselves that it really wasn’t so bad, and they learn not to feel what they cannot tolerate. As they deny pain, they screen out joy, and their adult lives can be filled with depression and loneliness. These same individuals are also survivors, however, and most have emerged as successful-appearing adults. Yet they often spend so much energy managing and controlling work and relationships that they have little left for themselves and their own fulfillment.

A necessary part of healing is moving from being codependent toward a state of emotional sobriety. Through self-exploration, participants will have the opportunity to access, express, and release blocked emotions that they still carry from childhood, and to tap the aliveness that was sacrificed when they buried their anger, fear, and grief.

Points of focus for this workshop will include:

- Emotional sobriety: Having a personal sense of balance and physical boundaries from which to find peace and a capacity for genuine sharing and pleasure
- Pleasure/addictions: Learning that true pleasure is a life-affirming, non-addictive experience
- Sexuality: Separating the unmet needs of the wounded child from adult intimate sexual relationships; learning basic tools for nurturing and sustaining healthy relationships
- Boundaries: Looking at the tendency to alternate between fusing with another and then completely isolating oneself
- Spirituality: Learning to have faith despite the horror experienced in childhood
- Learning new behaviors: Identifying and overcoming old ways of reacting
- Looking beyond the label: Knowing when to stop calling oneself codependent

Certification in Clinical Hypnosis

Marc Lehrer with Norman Katz,
Adam Burke, Art Dann & Rainya Dann

This course is a synthesis of Ericksonian and Direct Hypnosis, neurolinguistics, and bi-hypnotic monitoring. It satisfies the hypnosis course requirements for the MFCC and complies with the California State Requirement for Hypnosis Certification. It is designed to help develop hypnотic skills for counseling, medicine, nursing and other health areas, education, and bodywork. This program is also an opportunity for personal growth and transformation for anyone interested in hypnotic phenomena and the uses of suggestion in daily life.

Hypnotic suggestion, advanced imagery, and relaxation methods will be explored. There will be daily presentations, numerous practice sessions, video examples of Erickson and other practitioners, and extensive written support materials. A hypnosis library will be available for in-depth learning of advanced topic areas, and there will be an opportunity to explore personal goals with trance and biofeedback equipment.

The scientific basis of hypnosis as well as its practical applications will be emphasized. Topic areas will include: induction methods, hypnotic testing, symptom and habit removal, individual and family counseling applications, pain control and psychosomatics, nonverbal and pendulum methods, biomedical hypnotic monitoring, and storytelling methods, hypnosis with children, regression and uncovering, redecisioning and reframing, self-concept enhancement, stress management, fears and phobias, early trauma, hypnotic dream programming, imagery conditioning, NLP methods, enhancing performance in sports, music, and sensation, self-hypnosis methods, teaching self-hypnosis classes, and other topics related to therapy, health, and personal growth. Selected ongoing exercises drawn from aikido, Feldenkrais, movement, massage, and shamanistic traditions will complement the traditional topic areas.

Since each of the leaders will present for a number of days, there will be an opportunity to model different ways of deepening your own hypnotic potential, trance induction, and utilization skills. This monthlong experience with various faculty members will allow each participant an in-depth opportunity to develop vivid personal imagery, make lasting self-suggestions, and relate more completely with the unconscious mind.

The Hypnosis Certification is offered through the American College of Hypnosis, Biofeedback, and Neurotherapy Practices, approved by the Department of Private Post-Secondary and Vocational Education of the State of California. Certification is granted upon faculty review of assignments, class participation, practice, and knowledge of ethical guidelines necessary for offering hypnosis to the general public. There is a $120 certificate review fee, payable to the American College, due upon registration at the first day of the program.

Healthspring Outreach and Education

The Healthspring Project offers education and information that extends Esalen's work in the healing arts and sciences to the outside world. It is an independent service-oriented program of Esalen teachers and their associates. Healthspring offers a global information network linking visitors to Esalen with centers, teachers, and health professionals focused in the fields of somatics and psychology that are located in their home area. Our listings are public information and are not meant to be an endorsement of any individual or institution.

The Healthspring library offers books on health and healing, bodywork, somatic studies, psychology, nutrition, and related studies, which may be borrowed by students for a given period while at Esalen. Donations of appropriate books are greatly appreciated.

Big Sur Wilderness Journey: From Esalen to Tassajara Zen Mountain Center

Steven Harper & Steven Waldrip

Nature can provide opportunities to stretch one's limits and explore one's inner wilderness. By living in a natural environment it is possible to expand and realize a deeper sense of self and richness of being.

The group will spend a day and a night at Esalen, leaving the next morning to hike through the Ventana wilderness. Participants will travel "light," with instruction in minimum impact camping, ecology, geography, and cultural history of the area.

Wilderness will be a mirror and primary teacher as the group lives simply and in direct contact with nature. Participants will explore their feelings and sensations as they emerge, using gestalt awareness practice and group process. Taking inspiration from natural and native purification practices, they will create a time of cleansing and contemplation, culminating in a 24-hour period alone. The group will hike on to Tassajara Zen Mountain Center, deep in a rugged wilderness valley with natural hot springs, for their last night together. Meditation instruction will be available at Tassajara for those who wish it.

Backpacking experience is not necessary, though participants should be prepared for the challenge of vigorous physical activity. More information will be sent upon registration.

Esalen Wilderness Programs
Refund Policy

Most expenses in wilderness programs are incurred preparing for your arrival. The standard refund policy reflects the fact that few of these expenses can be recovered.

To reserve a space in a wilderness workshop, a deposit of $200 is required. The balance of the fee is due 24 days before the program begins. If you cancel prior to 30 days before the program begins, your nonrefundable deposit may be applied to other Esalen programs, to be used within one year. If you cancel from 30 days up to the starting date of the trip, your deposit is forfeited.
In its continuing commitment to the fields of education, religion, philosophy, and the physical and behavioral sciences, Esalen regularly sponsors invitational conferences that bring together experts who share their research and points of inquiry. As host, Esalen covers room and board expenses for participants as a way of advancing these particular studies. These are invitational conferences only and are not open to the public. Recently held programs and their conveners are listed here.

New Directions in Meditation Research VII
May 1-6, 1994

WORK STUDY PROGRAM

The Work Study Program is for those who are interested in an intense and complete involvement with the Esalen environment. It is a work-oriented program, emotionally and physically, and only rarely is it restful. Participants work thirty-two hours per week in one of Esalen's departments (kitchen, garden, farm, housekeeping, maintenance, or grounds) and participate, along with staff and long-term students, in that department's program.

During most evenings and one weekend intensive, work students are together as a group exploring different practices and approaches available at Esalen, with specifically assigned leaders who will be with the group throughout the month coordinating the study schedule and facilitating many of the evening sessions.

The selection of work students is done by Bette Dingman, the Work Study Coordinator, in consultation with department supervisors. Since this is a work program, preference is given to applicants who are open and willing to learn about themselves within the work context as well as within the evening and weekend study/process groups. Applicants with particular skills or physically limiting conditions are urged to mention them on the application. It is necessary for applicants to be able to speak and understand English.

First-month work students, in particular, are assigned to departments largely on the basis of community need. No work students will be assigned to the office or Gazebo School Park until they have fulfilled a minimum of one month in one of the aforementioned departments.

The study portion of the program is divided into two groups each month: each emphasizes one type of growth practice, such as gestalt, meditation, Reichian work, massage or somatic work, and so forth. Participants must be prepared to stay at Esalen for the full duration designated for that particular program, assuming that they meet the standards of the Work Study Program.

Please note: This program is designed to explore and apply human values and potential in both the evening groups and the workplace. It is not intended as a substitute for therapy or a "cure."

It is sometimes possible to receive college unit credit for participating in the Work Study Program. Please check with your college or university for eligibility requirements.

Work Study Programs currently scheduled for 1995 are:

January 5-February 5

Elaine Hughes will offer a month of intensive writing facilitated by gestalt practice, meditation, visualization, body awareness, sense perception, and evocative writing exercises. Participants will explore other possibilities for self-expression—such as art, music, dance, and theater—and discover how these experiences can become integrated into their writing.

Nina Wise will continue with the second half of a two-month "Motion Training' program begun on December 11. New work scholars are not eligible to join this program at midpoint.

February 5-March 5

During this month Julian & Cynthia Silverman's program will provide a format for mindfulness in everyday life using the teachings of A Course in Miracles, meditation, movement, and massage.

Eduardo Eizner & Guests will lead a month concentrating on emotional release work and self-awareness, incorporating gestalt practice, group and individual process, rituals, movement, and bodywork.

March 5-April 2

Dianne Lawrence and participants will explore their relationship with themselves and others through acting, writing, theater, and painting. The group will create a communal performance to be presented at month's end.

With an emphasis on the practice of massage, David Streeter will explore the inner power of the human being. He will combine the essence of Zen meditation with movement from the martial arts and yoga. These principles will be applied to the art of massage and the art of being in the world.

April 2-April 30

A month with John Soper & Friends will focus on ways to improve the quality of life for participants. Gestalt practice will be the vehicle for personal growth in a group setting. The group may also experience other practices, including games, to bring into focus those areas of our lives that are ripe for change.

Vicki Topp & Friends will lead a month-long journey exploring ourselves and our environment in a weaving of integral healing practices which may include massage, sensory awareness, imagery, storytelling, gestalt, creative movement, and spiritual nourishment.

April 30-May 28

Lenore & Mel (Rudra) Lefer will lead this program. Lenore will offer an exploration of the inner journey within the framework of psychosynthesis, using guided imagery, journal writing, dreams, ritual, storytelling, and nature to create a supportive environment in which healing and transformation can occur. Mel will teach all levels of Integral Yoga, including postures, progressive relaxation, breathing practices, meditation, and visualization.

The basis of this month with Seymour Carter will be the gestalt method, supported by studies in various body disciplines, including sensory awareness, bioenergetics, and aikido. Each participant's process of development will be honored, encouraged, and treated as unique.

May 25-June 23

Maria Lucia Sauer Holoman & Anita Donovan will invite the creative spirit to come alive during this monthlong by combining music, art, movement, and ritual with the practice of the fundamental healing art of laying-on-of-hands.

David Streeter. See March 5-April 2.

June 25-July 23

This month with Gideon Dreyer will focus on the experience of becoming immobilized when confronted with certain obstacles and using these situations for inner enrichment and education. Participants will focus on spiritualizing their thoughts, feelings, and actions, and cultivating the will to act accordingly.

Eduardo Eizner. See February 5-March 5.

July 23-August 20

Patrick Douce will share the essence of his work with Moshe Feldenkrais, Balinese healers, and Indonesian Silat Martial-Art-for-Health systems. This program will focus on movement and touch to increase the sensitivity, flexibility, coordination, relaxation, and freedom of the body. Individual problem areas will be approached in order to improve chronic stiffness and pain. Group experience and interaction will help facilitate balance in the overall growth of each participant.

In the tradition of Milton Erickson, Nancy Winston & Paul Lounsbury will use cybernetic principles and hypnotic techniques to help participants bring about new forms of spontaneous interaction, novel experience, and more satisfying outcomes in everyday life. The focus will be on mobilizing and utilizing unconscious capacities to increase variety and choice in the patterns that organize our ways of bringing forth our world. This will include formal and informal trance inductions, group interaction, and exploitation of individual styles of organizing and communicating experience.

INASMUCH AS the Work Study Program is a complete program in itself, please do not plan to take regularly scheduled catalog workshops during your stay. Professional services, such as massage, are available at staff rates.

Fees: A deposit of $400 in U.S. currency is required with your application. The work scholar fee is $750 for the first month, $700 for the second month, and $650 for the third month. Work students may be invited to remain for a second or third month depending on space available and community needs. There are no scholarships available for the Work Study Program.

Note: Application is not registration in the program. Registration is made only after approval of application and upon receipt of deposit. The balance of the fee is due on arrival. Of the original deposit, $100 is non-refundable and may be transferred to other programs within one year of receipt. Please return the application form (see next page) with your deposit to:

The Dolphin Tape Series

This tape list continues to honor the 1994 centennial of the birth of Aldous Huxley, the first and perhaps most eloquent spokesman for the human potential movement. There are a number of titles by Huxley, and several by his own mentor Gerald Heard.
