An instructor who teaches composition, poetry, and creative nonfiction at Delta Community College in central Michigan language makes connections and helps people imagine their way fully into subjects. People have a deep, if unconscious and unfocused, need to discover and tell the truth. For one semester his students act like writers. They keep journals; look at the world and their own interior life in an observant, writerly way; read good writing; are as objective as possible about their drafts; and welcome feedback. Classroom and conference talk often returns to the central theme of truth-telling. The best student writers gravitate to imaginative ways of saying what needs to be said. Eventually good student writers develop the will and the stamina to revise, eventually writing with more "author"-ity. (CR)
Authority and Imagined Truth: 1
Notes on Teaching Creative Nonfiction

I teach composition, poetry, and creative nonfiction at Delta Community College in central Michigan. As writers, my students and I have a lot in common, beginning with a world of language that "gives and gives," as William Stafford says in his essay called "Writing." Generating words, for us, is almost as natural as breathing; we've spent our lifetimes, my students and I, using words to move back and forth between experience and reflection. Our language makes connections, helps us imagine our way fully into our subjects, and we have a deep, if unconscious and unfocused, need to discover and tell the truth.

We talk about much of this in the first few class periods. We also discuss what we don't, as yet, have in common; few of my students have developed, as I have to some degree, the habits and attitudes of a working writer. For one semester, I recommend that they act like writers. Among other things, I ask them to keep a journal; look at the world and their own interior life in an observant, writerly way; read good writing; be as objective as possible about their drafts; welcome feedback.

As my students produce narratives, memoirs, poems, reading responses, and research-based pieces, our classroom and conference talk often returns to the central theme of truth-telling. We're surrounded by a culture that promotes lies, evasions, distortions, creating a media-generated miasma that pervades minds and souls. Writing gives us an opportunity to cut through, clarify, uncover, discover. Writing frees us to attempt truth—maybe not the truth, but our authentic response to experience. Most student writers who persist find a basic need they hadn’t fully recognized—truth hunger.

Not that writing must always be an angst-ridden, depth-dredging trial—Stafford, by contrast, called it "one of the great, free human activities." One of my students, Stephanie Heit, a tall, rangy young woman, a dancer and a French major, writes in her course self-evaluation, "Life is a first draft you can never revise. Unlike writing, where you can go back and fill in the rough spots, cut a little, find the perfect word...It’s nice to tell a word it doesn’t belong and scratch it out--no hard feelings."

Stephanie recognizes the freedom that writing allows, and she often writes pieces that embody what I’m calling "imagined truth." She knows that most creative nonfiction weds the power of imagination with hunger for authenticity. "The empty page," she says, contains "Endless possibilities...I get to turn nothing into something, negating every rule I learned in 12th grade physics." Among other subjects, she writes about the thrill of driving too fast, an eclipse of the moon, and walks across her lawn to the mailbox, the highlight of her days during a relentless depression. She, like other good nonfiction writers, taps all her imaginative resources. She’s pragmatic. She’s ready to use whatever literary devices come to mind for her purposes--dialogue, characterization, setting, conscious pacing. The kernel, the essence of the truth, its spirit more than its letter--this is what she's after. Her particular spirit of truth "bloweth where it listeth," and if imaginative, even non-logical, non-linear, associative approaches are at hand, it uses them without compunction.

My best student writers, sometimes with a slight teacherly nudge, gravitate to imaginative ways of saying what needs to be said. Margaret Goka, a nurse, writes about a near-comatose, hospital-bound woman in her early 20's, Lou Ann, who is dying of cancer. Margaret begins the piece "Only the eyes had movement... Chestnut brown with flecks of reflected light, moving momentarily to one side, then switching to the other, and finally focusing on the square tiled ceiling." Her piece is unified by these haunting eyes, which unexpectedly look right into Margaret's moments before the young woman dies. Another student, Melissa Deevers, writes "The alcoholic me was a very different person from the real me. Where I was awkward and self-conscious, she was graceful and confident." Melissa's seven-page piece uses the two selves idea to explore her identity and her need. The devices such people as Margaret, Melissa, Annie Dillard, or Scott Russell Sanders employ are not so much "literary" as necessary; they're often the only means by which the spirit of truth can have its way with these writers.

However, truth rarely alights on the unprepared. In an essay called "Why Memoir Now?", Vivian Gornick says "Truth...is achieved when the reader comes to believe that the writer is working hard to engage with the experience at hand." This work ethic gradually permeates good student writers; they develop the will and the stamina to revise. Eventually they write with more "author"-ity. Some writers shy away from the word "author," perhaps because it conjures up a tweed-jacketed, pipe-smoking fellow with an abstracted air. But the first definition in my unabridged Webster's says an author is "one who produces, creates, or brings into being." This authoring can feel, to students, both awesome and humbling. The world has given them words to shape into something with meaning. This something that never existed before on any page is a sign of growing authority over ideas, feelings, their own lives; when the piece works, it wakes others up, moves them, makes them think. Such students of writing become authors. They bring something new into being; they use their imaginations to tell the truth.
Title: Paper presented at the 1998 4Cs Convention (Chicago, IL)

Author(s): F.W. (Skip) Renker

Corporate Source: Publication Date: April 1-4, 1998

II. REPRODUCTION RELEASE:

In order to disseminate as widely as possible timely and significant materials of interest to the educational community, documents announced in the monthly abstract journal of the ERIC system, Resources in Education (RIE), are usually made available to users in microfiche, reproduced paper copy, and electronic media, and sold through the ERIC Document Reproduction Service (EDRS). Credit is given to the source of each document, and, if reproduction release is granted, one of the following notices is affixed to the document.

If permission is granted to reproduce and disseminate the identified document, please CHECK ONE of the following three options and sign at the bottom of the page.

The sample sticker shown below will be affixed to all Level 1 documents

PERMISSION TO REPRODUCE AND DISSEMINATE THIS MATERIAL HAS BEEN GRANTED BY

Sample

TO THE EDUCATIONAL RESOURCES INFORMATION CENTER (ERIC)

Level 1

The sample sticker shown below will be affixed to all Level 2A documents

PERMISSION TO REPRODUCE AND DISSEMINATE THIS MATERIAL IN MICROFICHE, AND IN ELECTRONIC MEDIA FOR ERIC COLLECTION SUBSCRIBERS ONLY, HAS BEEN GRANTED BY

Sample

TO THE EDUCATIONAL RESOURCES INFORMATION CENTER (ERIC)

Level 2A

The sample sticker shown below will be affixed to all Level 2B documents

PERMISSION TO REPRODUCE AND DISSEMINATE THIS MATERIAL IN MICROFICHE ONLY HAS BEEN GRANTED BY

Sample

TO THE EDUCATIONAL RESOURCES INFORMATION CENTER (ERIC)

Level 2B

Check here for Level 1 release, permitting reproduction and dissemination in microfiche or other ERIC archival media (e.g., electronic) and paper copy.

Check here for Level 2A release, permitting reproduction and dissemination in microfiche and in electronic media for ERIC archival collection subscribers only.

Check here for Level 2B release, permitting reproduction and dissemination in microfiche only.

Documents will be processed as indicated provided reproduction quality permits. If permission to reproduce is granted, but no box is checked, documents will be processed at Level 1.

I hereby grant to the Educational Resources Information Center (ERIC) nonexclusive permission to reproduce and disseminate this document as indicated above. Reproduction from the ERIC microfiche or electronic media by persons other than ERIC employees and its system contractors requires permission from the copyright holder. Exception is made for non-profit reproduction by libraries and other service agencies to satisfy information needs of educators in response to discrete inquiries.

Signature: F.W. 'Skip' Renker

Printed Name/Position/Title: F.W. 'Skip' Renker/Prof. of English

Organization/Address: Delta College

Telephone: 517-631-6009

E-Mail Address: FrenkewoR@ALPHA.DELTA.EDU

Date: SEPT. 13, '98
III. DOCUMENT AVAILABILITY INFORMATION (FROM NON-ERIC SOURCE):

If permission to reproduce is not granted to ERIC, or, if you wish ERIC to cite the availability of the document from another source, please provide the following information regarding the availability of the document. (ERIC will not announce a document unless it is publicly available, and a dependable source can be specified. Contributors should also be aware that ERIC selection criteria are significantly more stringent for documents that cannot be made available through EDRS.)

Publisher/Distributor:

Address:

Price:

IV. REFERRAL OF ERIC TO COPYRIGHT/REPRODUCTION RIGHTS HOLDER:

If the right to grant this reproduction release is held by someone other than the addressee, please provide the appropriate name and address:

Name:

Address:

V. WHERE TO SEND THIS FORM:

Send this form to the following ERIC Clearinghouse:

ERIQ/EC
2805 E. Tenth Street
Smith Research Center, 150
Indiana University
Bloomington, IN 47408

However, if solicited by the ERIC Facility, or if making an unsolicited contribution to ERIC, return this form (and the document being contributed) to:

ERIC Processing and Reference Facility
4106 West Street, 2nd Floor
Laurel, Maryland 20707-3598

Telephone: 801-497-4080
Toll-Free: 800-799-3742
FAX: 318-933-6263
E-mail: ericfee@inet.edu.gov
WWW: http://ericfac.ptcard.csc.com