To help postgraduate students find resources for their studies or research, a World Wide Web page was created to provide information about language testing. Although the Web page is intended for people who do not have much knowledge and information about language testing, it is useful for anyone who is doing research in the area of language testing and for teachers who are preparing students for English language tests. The Web page includes information and links to resources such as materials in the TESL-L archives, organizations and universities, mailing lists, publications, English language tests used internationally, and non-English language tests. The resources include gateways to many links related to language testing. The best known is the "Resources in Language Testing WWW Page." Some suggestions are made about efficient ways to use the Web page, and the contents of the following sections are briefly described: (1) Resources; (2) Organizations and Universities; (3) Mailing Lists; (4) Publications; (5) English Language Tests; and (6) Tests of Non-English Languages. A list of the topics under each of these headings is included. (SLD)

This article is based on a web site found at:

Introduction

There are many postgraduate students who are interested in language testing, and language testing courses were among the most popular classes at the Department of Linguistics of Lancaster University. The Language Testing Research Group is one of the most active research groups, and many faculty members, research associates, and students attend the meetings every week.

In order to help those postgraduate students find resources for their studies or research, including writing MA dissertations, we made this web page, “Language Testing” (URL: http://ilc2.doshisha.ac.jp/users/kkitao/online/www/test.htm). This web page is intended for people who do not have much knowledge and information about language testing. However, there are great many resources which are useful even for specialists in language testing, and this web page is useful as a quick reference for anyone studying or doing research in the area of language testing. It is also useful for EFL/ESL teachers who prepare students for English language tests, such as IELTS, TOEFL, and TOEIC.
We will explain how this web page is organized and how to use it efficiently.

Organization of "Language Testing
Resources on the World Wide Web"

This web page includes information and links to resources such as materials in the TESL-L archives, organizations and universities, mailing lists, publications, English language tests used internationally, and non-English language tests.

The resources include gateways to many links related to language testing. The best known one is "The Resources in Language Testing WWW Page" (URL: http://www.surrey.ac.uk/ELI/ltr.html). It has an enormous amount of information about testing, including organizations, publications and tests. If you are a specialist, it is worth visiting "Assessment & Evaluation on the Internet" (URL: http://www.cua.edu/www/eric_ae/intass.html). It has a great deal of information related to assessment, including language testing.

Since TESL-L has many resources in language testing, we included the list of all items there.

We also included information about organizations that administer English language tests, professional organizations related to language testing, and universities which have special projects or activities related to language testing. You may find some of them useful for obtaining information on various language tests, events, and trends in the profession.

LTEST-L is the mailing list most directly related to language testing. However, TESL-L is the largest mailing list in ESL/EFL and has a huge archives. We included the link to the explanation of how you can make use of it. We also included "Useful Mailing Lists for TEFL/TEFL" (URL: http://ilc2.doshisha.ac.jp/users/kkitao/online/list/lis-tefl.htm), with links to about 40 mailing lists related to foreign language teaching, since they have occasional discussions on language testing.

We included a publications section. You will find information on articles published in Language Testing Update and Language Testing. We included links to various papers, articles, and reviews on language testing. If you are interested in publishing articles or papers related to testing, you can submit them to one of these journals or to the ERIC Clearinghouse on Assessment and Evaluation.

We included www sites of various English language tests, such as Cambridge, IELTS, TOEFL, and TOEIC. We included www sites in "Various English Language Tests" if they have information for more than one particular test. "Other English Language Tests" includes information about tests other than Cambridge, IELTS, TOEFL, and TOEIC. They have information about what types of tests they are, what is included, who they are intended for, where and when they are administered, some sample questions, exercises for those tests, etc. You can get information about those tests and how to prepare for them or help your students to prepare for them.

Finally, we included some information on a German language test.

Efficient Ways to Use "Language Testing Resources on the World Wide We"

We would like you to understand how this web page is organized. Then you will know what to look at according to your purpose.

If you do not have any specific purpose, and you are interested in finding some useful information in general about language testing, we suggest to go through www sites in resources. You will find fairly large amount of interesting information.

If you do not know much about testing, we suggest to skip anything technical. Some technical information about testing will not be of much interest to people who do not have much knowledge about testing. Also, if your interest is in language testing, try to avoid getting sidetracked, because testing sites may include information about measuring other subjects and all human behaviors, and they are fairly complicated. Of course, if you want to specialize in testing, you need much more background in measurement, psychology, education, etc.

If you need to review previous publications for your studies or research, the publication section is very useful. You will find many useful articles in two journals, Language Testing and Language Testing Update. However, you need to check to see whether your library has those journals. There are some articles available online.

If you are interested in any particular English language test, you can visit sites related to that test. We suggest that you skim all sites related to that particular test. Then if you find any information which might be useful, read that part very carefully.

If you are interested in English language testing, we strongly suggest to subscribe to two mailing lists, LTEST-L and TESL-L. If you are interested in using computers for research or testing, we suggest to subscribe to TESLCA-L, a branch list of TESL-L which handles topics related to computers.

Conclusion

Though "Language Testing" is a small web page, we hope that this gives you useful information on language testing. Since it includes some basic information, it should be informative to postgraduate students and ESL/EFL teachers who do not know much about English language testing or tests. If you need more information related to resources for ESL/EFL, we have developed "On-line Resources and Journals Related to ELT and Linguistics" (URL: http://ilc2.doshisha.ac.jp/users/kkitao/online/), which includes information about resources for teachers and students, keypals, journals and newsletters, organizations, useful mailing lists, job information, publishers and teaching English in Japan. Each section has a great deal of information which might be useful for you.

The Resources in Language Testing WWW Page

The Resources in Language Testing Page was first published on 1 May 1995. Its purpose is to act as a reference guide to language testing related resources on the Internet. On this page you will find all the Language Tester's Guide to Cyberspace. Instead of randomly visiting sites, you can select those which are most likely to provide the information you are looking for. Underneath the links, there is the Language Testing Database button, which leads to a searchable index of articles published in the journal Language Testing. And don't leave this site without trying the very first internet Language Testing Test. There's even a chance to win something. If you have any comments about this site there is a feedback form at the bottom of the page. All constructive criticism gratefully received!
