Wordless picture books are a gift to the student of English as a Second Language (ESL). A strong story line is delivered through illustrations which are thoughtfully prepared. These books free the ESL student to draw from personal experience and write the story at his own ability level from personal vocabulary. Self-expression and creative thinking are encouraged, and students can share the books with non-English-speaking adults. The student is introduced to reading skills, and these skills are reinforced. Wordless books provide a rich source of material for student-centered, authentic language development activities that are satisfying and successful. Possible activities using the books and students' interpretations of them include: creation of an audiotape from students' written stories; having the teacher tell the newly-written story to non-English-speakers; having students, working alone, arrange photocopied pictures in their own order; having the students "read" the pictures, then listen to the teacher tell the story; having the group create a sentence per page; having one student tell the whole class the story; and having students match teacher-created sentences to the pictures. A bibliography lists 215 wordless books and rates them on a scale of one to five. (MSE)

Wordless Books

Wordless books are a gift to the ESOL student. A strong storyline is delivered through the use of beautiful illustrations which are carefully and thoughtfully prepared. The images are the text, and everything in them contributes to the advancement of the plot and the revelation of the personalities of the characters. Each character's posture, gestures and facial expressions reveal so much of his emotions and feelings.

Look at the illustration on the cover, taken from Mercer Mayer's A Boy, A Dog, A Frog and a Friend. See how it invites you to become an active participant, to use your own voice to recount the narrative.

Since wordless books actively engage the reader's thought and imagination, they stimulate creative writing and are an ideal medium for initiating writing activities. Their attractiveness draws one in. The reader is required to be an active composer, to bring his personal interpretation to the story telling.

The partnership between the author and reader is exciting. The reader is given the opportunity to participate in creating meaning in collaboration with the author. This helps to develop sophistication in story making and gives the student a great sense of satisfaction in the professional result.

These books include familiar elements of the student's own environment, but they have complex themes and emotions. The reader who glances quickly through the pages may miss significant details that enrich the story and characterizations. The reader is encouraged to slow down, become involved in the story and craft his writing carefully.

The ESOL student often knows how to express himself in writing in his first language. These books free him to draw from his personal experiences and write the story at his own level of ability using his personal vocabulary. He is given the independence of guiding himself through the book.

Self-expression and creative thinking are encouraged through a natural peer-level experience. He can share the book with a non-English speaking adult. The non-reader is introduced to reading skills. The reader has them reinforced. Wordless books provide a rich source of material for student-centered, authentic language development activities which are satisfying, enjoyable and successful.

Resources

   Wordless/Almost Wordless Picture Books: A Guide

   Comprehensive annotated bibliography of hundreds of wordless books

2. Tuten-Puckett, Katharyn E. and Virginia Richey
   Using Wordless Picture Books: Authors and Activities
   1993
   Each chapter focuses on one author and one or more of his books.
   Activities abound.
1. Make an audio tape
   After the student writes his story, he practices telling it to another class member. Then he makes an audio tape. He can keep a copy of the tape and take the book home for a day to share with his family.

2. Teacher tells the story to non-English speakers
   This is an enjoyable way to teach English. The teacher tells the story in very simple sentences and encourages the student to add what he knows. Language patterns are established and reinforced, reading skills are introduced and vocabulary is developed.

3. Cooperative learning
   Reduce 9 pages from a wordless book. Give a set to each student. One student acts as the leader and arranges his pictures in a particular order. He works behind "office walls" made of manilla folders so that no one else can see his pictures. He then describes his pictures and their location while the other students try to arrange their own pictures the same way. They, too, work behind "office walls". The teacher offers help to clarify instructions since they can become rather difficult to understand.

4. Non-English speakers read the book to themselves
   Students are given the book to read to themselves. Later the teacher tells it to them. I find they are quite interested in hearing the teacher read it after they have already read through it themselves.

5. Group reading
   Show the book to the group page by page. Either ask the group to come up with one sentence per page, or ask individuals to make up a sentence for each page.

6. Oral reading by one student
   One student tells the entire story to the others in the group. I limit his output to one sentence per page because of the time it takes to make up sentences for 32 pages and keep the others' attention.

7. Individual story writing
   Each student chooses a different book. He writes one sentence per page, trying to capture the essence of the action. He writes a sloppy copy, skipping lines. He edits once, then confers with the teacher. Then he writes his final copy on a sheet of paper or on sentence strips.

8. King for a day / Queen for a day
   This project follows nicely after #7. Write each sentence on a sentence strip. Spread them out in random order on a table. The other students have a few minutes to read them over to themselves. The king or queen wears a crown and carries a scepter. He taps the other students, one at a time, to match up the sentence strip with the appropriate picture. If the correct sentence strip is chosen, the king or queen gives him a cardboard cut-out heart or other token. Prizes are returned after the story is completed. (The king or queen is the person who wrote the story.)
