This directory lists Hispanic organizations in the United States. Each listed organization serves and represents local Latino communities. Over the years, however, the directory has come to include more than organizational listings. Recent editions have included census data that provide a demographic profile of the national Latino community and a count of elected Hispanic officials nationally and for states with high concentrations of Latinos. Also included is information on how a bill becomes a law, how to write to a member of Congress, and how to obtain campaign financial data. National statistics are provided for Hispanic social, economic, employment, and educational attainment. Organizations are grouped by location into: (1) Washington, DC (34 organizations); (2) Puerto Rico (2 organizations); (3) the western United States (48 organizations grouped by state); (4) the southern United States (33 organizations, also by state); (5) the Midwest (11 organizations); and (6) the Northeast (20 organizations, by state). A "Building New Challenges" section discusses resources for community programs. (SLD)

I am honored to present the 1997-1998 edition of the National Directory of Hispanic Organizations. Philip Morris Companies Inc. has generously supported this important community resource since 1984.

Over the years, this directory has grown to include more than organizational listings. Recent editions have included census data that provide a demographic profile of the national Latino community. We honored such historical Hispanic men and women as Puerto Rican humanitarian and writer Eugenio María de Hostos, Cuban educator Félix Varela, and Mexican-American journalist Jovita Idár, whose lives made a difference within their communities.

In the 1993-1994 edition, we began to include a count of Hispanic elected officials nationally and for those states with high concentrations of Latinos. When you open this current edition to the National page, take a moment to savor our success. The number of Hispanic elected officials grew from 4,202 reported in the earlier edition to 4,787. The number of Latinas in elected office has grown by more than 753 since the publication of the 1993-1994 edition. Our strength and influence in Congress and at the state and local levels of government have grown significantly.

The purpose of this directory has remained consistent over the years. We offer it as a resource to organize around issues of concern to all of us. Each organization in this publication serves and represents local Latino communities. Imagine the collective strength of these organizations if they were to share information and mobilize their communities around common concerns!
Watch for a special version of this directory on the World Wide Web. It will be posted on the CHCI Web Site, which can be accessed at http://www.chci.org. I hope that as we find new avenues to provide this resource, we can develop the coalitions necessary to move forward on such important issues as quality education for our children and greater representation in the formulation of public policy for all Latinos. I am hopeful that the National Directory of Hispanic Organizations continues to be an integral part of that endeavor.

Hon. Xavier Becerra
Congressional Hispanic Caucus Institute, Inc.
The United States is a mosaic of many proud and diverse cultures, and among the proudest and most diverse of all is the Hispanic culture. That's why Philip Morris, itself diverse in products and employees, once again is honored to sponsor the publication of the National Directory of Hispanic Organizations. The wide variety of organizations represented in this edition symbolizes the untold ways in which Hispanics continue to enrich and energize America.

People sharing information and working together in pursuit of common goals is a cornerstone of the democratic process and fundamental to the well-being of our communities and our country. We believe this directory helps to make that happen. It is a critical tool both for the members of our many Hispanic-American communities and for all Americans interested in this growing and productive segment of our population.

Philip Morris is dedicated not just to the principle, but also to the practice of diversity. And so we applaud the Congressional Hispanic Caucus Institute for continuing to make this directory possible. And we are privileged to be a part of its continuing effort to advance the interests and rights of Hispanic-Americans everywhere.
The Congressional Hispanic Caucus Institute offers the information contained in the following pages to encourage greater participation in the political process.

There are two articles in this section that are intended to give the readers of this directory a greater understanding of the formulation of public policy (How a Bill Becomes a Law) and how to make one's concerns known to his/her elected officials (How to Write a Member of Congress). The United States is a nation of laws and it is important to understand the process by which laws are established.

The United States is also a democracy, which is, by definition, a government by the governed. Our elected officials have the responsibility to represent us. It is the responsibility of each individual, however, to ensure that his/her Congressperson is aware of his/her position on the various issues.

How a Bill Becomes a Law

When someone has an idea for a bill, the very first step to take is to find a Member of Congress (the House or Senate) who will introduce the bill. When a bill is introduced, it is assigned a number by the clerk, and referred to the Congressional committee with jurisdiction over the subject matter in the legislation.

The committee Chair will determine the subcommittee to which the bill will be referred. The legislation is scrutinized through hearings at the subcommittee level — where witnesses with expertise in the subject, agency officials, and other Members of Congress will testify in support of or in opposition to the legislation. A majority of the members of the subcommittee must approve the bill before it is referred by that subcommittee to the full committee.

The full committee is the most critical test of the legislation. The full committee is charged with "marking up" the bill, which means adding final improvements to it. These improvements take the form of amendments at both the subcommittee and committee levels.

If the committee approves a bill, it may choose to recommend consideration of the bill to the Leadership. The Leadership in the House of Representatives works closely with the Rules Committee, which will often determine the time parameters of consideration, and which amendments may be offered to the bill when it is considered on the House floor.

After a bill passes both the House and the Senate by a majority vote, the Leadership of each chamber appoints a small number of Senators and Representatives (called "conferees") to comprise a "conference committee" charged with ironing out any differences in the legislation passed by both Houses of Congress. (There will always be differences in the language of separate bills.)

When the Conference Committee completes its work, it presents a "Conference Report" to each Chamber, which must pass the Conference Report. The Conference Committee is a little-known legislative entity, one that wields enormous power. Often, conferees will change whole aspects of a bill — usually out of the public eye.

After both the House of Representatives and the Senate have passed the Conference Report, the legislation is transmitted to the President for Executive action. The President can sign it, and the bill will become law. The President can veto the legislation by sending it back unsigned to the Chamber from which it originated, noting the objections to the bill. Congress can then either be resigned to the fate of the bill, or it can attempt to override the veto. To override a President’s veto, each
Chamber of Congress must marshal two thirds of the votes of the Members of each Chamber on a constitutionally required roll call vote.

Given the complications inherent in the process, it is important to give some perspective to the probability of a bill actually passing Congress. Of the bills introduced, just over 10% are actually reported out of committees to the House floor — and below 5% ever become law. If a bill does not become law in one session of Congress, it must be reintroduced in the next session; it is not held over for the next Congress.

How to Write a Member of Congress

House Members and Senators often gauge their votes on legislation on how their constituents respond to it. They know that their response may dictate how you vote in the next election. A personal letter is the most effective form of written communication, not a postcard or a form letter. Your letter should be brief, informed and polite. Here are some tips:

- If your letter is typewritten, keep it to one page. If you are writing longhand, be sure it is legible and do not write on the back of a page.
- State the purpose of your letter in a short first paragraph. Be sure to deal with only one subject. Use the rest of the letter to support your position.
- If you refer to a bill in your letter, give the name and number of the bill. You should also specifically mention the general area of concern to you (i.e., the environment, immigration, the budget, civil rights, the military, etc.).
- Use facts and figures to support your position and use information relating to how the bill will affect you and those you know. Avoid emotional or heated arguments.
- Indicate the adverse effects of the legislation you oppose, and suggest a better way to approach the problem.

- Request the legislator's views on the subject matter, but do not be demanding. Even if the legislator does not agree with you on this matter, he or she may agree with you on another.
- Write your name and return address legibly. The suggested address and salutation is:
  The Honorable _____________
  United States Senate
  Washington, DC 20510
  Dear Senator _____________:
  The Honorable _____________
  United States House of Representatives
  Washington, DC 20515
  Dear Congress(wo)man ____________:
  - Under your signature write your name and include your address and zip code.
  - Check to see if your Senator or Congress(wo)man maintains a site on the World Wide Web. If so, you might send your letter via e-mail.
Information relating to the campaign finances of a federal public official is available to the public through the Federal Election Commission (FEC) in Washington, DC. The names of those who contribute to political campaigns (both individuals and groups like Political Action Committees), and the amount of money contributed, are recorded at the FEC. You can get information about the FEC and the information they provide by calling, toll free, (800) 424-9530; or you can write or visit the FEC at 999 E Street, NW, Washington, DC 20463. The Federal Election Commission Web Site can be accessed at http://www.fec.gov.

ASPIRA was founded by a group of community leaders and professionals concerned by the alarming dropout rate of Hispanic students and social and economic conditions in the community. It is the first nonprofit organization in the United States dedicated to encouraging and promoting education and leadership development among Hispanic youth. Local ASPIRA offices in New York, New Jersey, Illinois, Florida, Pennsylvania, Puerto Rico and Connecticut offer youth leadership development and community service opportunities, and educational counseling for high school and college students. They also provide a forum for group discussion, workshops and tutoring. Local offices also provide assistance in applying for college admission, scholarships and loans. ASPIRA sponsors the following national community programs: the National Health Careers Program, the Public Policy Leadership Program, the ASPIRA/AMERICORPS Program, the ASPIRA Parents for Educational Excellence (APEX) Program, the ASPIRA Mathematics and Science (MAS) Initiative, and the Teachers, Organizations and Parents for Students (TOPS) Program. These programs are designed to improve the quality of living and educational opportunities for the Hispanic community.

AYUDA's mission is to serve the foreign-born, low-income community by providing high-quality legal services in the areas of immigration and domestic violence; advocating for and defending their legal and human rights; and empowering through education. AYUDA is a nonprofit, community-based organization, which has been providing bilingual and culturally sensitive services for the past 20 years. It has provided legal assistance on immigration matters to thousands of refugees and immigrants fleeing violence and persecution in their homelands. Assistance is given for political asylum, filing for family petitions, naturalization, advance parole, work authorization, and adjustment of status. Since the enactment of the Violence Against Women Act in Crime Bill 1994, AYUDA has served increasing numbers of battered immigrant women, who now may obtain legal status without the cooperation of their abusive spouse. AYUDA's policy and advocacy staff works at local, regional and national levels to strengthen the legal rights of battered immigrant women and children. Through training, publications, technical assistance on cases, and the participation in national coalitions, AYUDA provides information on the latest changes affecting the legal rights of battered immigrant women and children, as well as model programs for serving them.

CARECEN provides legal, educational, and advocacy services for Latinos in the District of Columbia metropolitan area. Our legal services focus on the immigration needs of Central Americans as well as assisting all Latinos with the naturalization process. In addition, the legal department provides counseling in such areas as employment and labor law, civil rights law, and housing. The educational and advocacy services offer courses to help permanent residents prepare for the naturalization exam and facilitate the process of leadership development within the area's Latino population.
Casa Del Pueblo is a community program in Washington, DC's Mount Pleasant/Columbia Heights neighborhood. It serves the educational, social, cultural, self-improvement and empowerment needs of Latin Americans, particularly those who have recently arrived in the United States from rural Central America. Casa del Pueblo has evolved into a pivotal community-based organization, uniquely able to serve the specific needs of Washington area Latinos. Through its language, cultural, children, and youth programs, Casa seeks to address such issues as the Central American community's limited access to and participation in the processes of self determination because of cultural, linguistic, economic, educational and social isolation, alienation and discrimination.

The Commission has been serving as an advocate for the Latino community throughout Pennsylvania. The Commission makes recommendations to the Governor on policies, procedures and legislation, which would make the state more responsive to the Latino community. It also assists local Latino communities in developing strategies and programs which will enhance their social and economic status. It serves as a resource to all departments, commissions and agencies to ensure that the Latino community benefits in an equitable fashion from their respective services and programs. Our focus is community empowerment and grassroots building.

Notes
The Mauricio Gastón Institute was established at the University of Massachusetts at Boston through the initiative of Latino community activists, academicians, and the state legislature responding to the need for improved understanding of the Latino experience. The Institute seeks to inform policy makers about issues vital to the Commonwealth's growing Latino community and to provide this community with information and analysis necessary for effective participation in the formulation of public policy.

The Centro has promoted disciplined inquiry into matters of significance to Puerto Ricans and, as a result, its work has emerged as a critical force in the ongoing debate about Puerto Ricans and other excluded minorities. In addition, it is becoming increasingly recognized that the particularities of the Puerto Rican experience shed light on such global issues as the internationalization of the world economy, decolonization, inter-ethnic conflict, and enduring class, race and gender inequality. Over the years, the Centro’s task forces—political economy, history, language and education, cultural studies and higher education, as well as the support units on media and the Centro Journal—have published materials that are original contributions to their respective fields and also serve the practical needs of the Puerto Rican community. The Centro’s Library and Archives, which are open to students, researchers and the general public, contains extensive holdings related to the Puerto Rican experience. The Centro also houses the following programs: the Centro Faculty Fellows and Internship Program, the CUNY-UPR Academic Exchange Program, the CUNY-Caribbean Exchange, and the Puerto Rican/Latino Education Roundtable.

The National Latinas Caucus (NLC) deals primarily with issues of concern to Latinas. The principal goal of this organization is to empower women in local communities by organizing and developing networks around issues of common concern; to provide opportunities for personal and professional advancement; and to foster a stronger sense of self-awareness.

Special projects include "El Barrio Renaissance"—an effort to create low and moderate income residential units by renovating city-owned vacant buildings, and Economic/Leadership Development mini-courses for Latinas.

Publications:
A community newspaper—Vision, published bi-monthly

Special Event:
Annual Conference – March

NPRF is a nonprofit organization that strives to advance the socioeconomic conditions of Latinos and other disadvantaged groups through programs, research, advocacy and direct services in education, economic development, job training and placement. The Forum offers programs in Chicago, Illinois as well as the Bronx and Manhattan in New York. NPRF is a member of the Hispanic Association on Corporate Responsibility, the National Hispanic Leadership Agenda and various other groups working to increase Latino participation in the public and private sectors. 1997 marks the Forum's 40th year of service. The organization will continue to present a national series of symposia on public policy topics related to workforce development in America.

The Puerto Rican Association for Community Affairs is an advocacy and social services organization which focuses primarily on the needs of children. The original mission of PRACA was to assist newly arriving Puerto Rican families to adjust to the complexities of life on the mainland, while maintaining the integrity of their cultural heritage.

PRLDEF is a national civil rights organization established to protect the civil rights of Puerto Ricans and other Latinos and to ensure their equal protection under the law. PRLDEF accomplishes its mission through litigation, advocacy, and creative legal education programs. Through the Legal Education Division, PRLDEF strives to increase the number of Latino attorneys serving our community. The Division offers workshops and counseling to students interested in pursuing a legal career.

As we rapidly approach the beginning of a new century, the Congressional Hispanic Caucus Institute offers the following resources for Latino communities. Creative solutions to many problems faced by our community traditionally have been found at the local level, through strong grassroots organizing. This directory contains many organizations that began as small, locally-based efforts. CHCI encourages the community activists of the 21st century to get busy and, more importantly, to get back to basics.

Start with your local library. See if you can find the following two books:

Pick is a veteran activist who has directed her efforts at environmental issues. Her book reflects that activism, but it addresses fundamental activism at the grassroots level, and offers basic “how to” strategies that can be easily adapted to local issues.

Shaw is director and supervising attorney for the Tenderloin Housing Clinic in San Francisco, California. His book emphasizes the importance of community activists being proactive, rather than reacting to others’ agendas. Creating a community agenda and then focusing resources to achieve it is key to successful community building.

Contact the following organizations for information on community building and grassroots organizing:
The National Association of Neighborhoods (NAN)
1651 Fuller Street, NW
Washington, DC 20009
Tel: (202) 332-7766

NAN can assist with entrepreneurial development programs in public housing, community policing programs, peer advisory programs, and more.

Community Organizing and Family Issues (COFI)
3136 North Seminary
Chicago, IL 60657
Tel: (312) 477-3847
E-Mail Address: cofi312@aol.com

COFI is working in Chicago neighborhoods to combine traditional community organizing with the support of community empowerment programs. Co-founder Ellen Schumer says that building stronger families and building stronger communities are part of the same process. To get a better sense of how COFI approaches community organizing, read the article "Community Building & Community Organizing: Issues in Creating Effective Models." This can be accessed on the Internet at http://www.nhi.org/online/issues/85/com-build.html.

Using the Internet for Community Organizing
In July 1996, the CHCI Web Site was launched, allowing the Institute to take an initial step into technologically advanced methods of communication. Our site can be accessed at http://www.chci.org. Watch for announcements on upcoming online conferences for discussion of legislative issues that affect our communities.

A growing number of organizations listed in this edition of the National Directory of Hispanic Organizations maintain Web Sites. How can community organizing be served by the Internet and the World Wide Web? A number of organizations are addressing this issue in very creative ways.

LibertyNet is a local Internet access provider in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania. It is sponsored by...
Philadelphia's economic development agencies, public radio, libraries and school districts. In 1994, LibertyNet unveiled “Neighborhoods Online,” a project that recruits and trains neighborhood-based nonprofit organizations to use the Internet. For more information, visit the web site at http://libertynet.org. Ed Schwartz, the creator of “Neighborhoods Online,” has written “NetActivism: How Citizens Use the Internet,” published by O'Reilly and Associates (1996). For more information, contact:

Institute for Civic Values

Another useful booklet is “The Internet: What It Can and Can't Do for Activists,” written by Larry Yates of Social Justice Connections. For more information, contact:

These are only a handful of examples of how communities across the country are beginning to harness the organizing capabilities of the Internet. Let us know how your community is doing via e-mail: chci@chci.org.
The Congressional Hispanic Caucus Institute, Inc. (CHCI/Institute) is a nonprofit and nonpartisan educational organization established in 1978. The Institute was founded as the vehicle for the development of the next generation of Hispanic leadership. This is accomplished through programs designed to familiarize Hispanic students with policy-related careers in both the public and private sectors, as well as afford them the opportunity for professional growth and development. CHCI has also dedicated significant resources to the development of a national clearinghouse on educational opportunities for Hispanic students.

The Hispanic Leadership Opportunity Program (HLOP) and the Graduate Fellowship Program (GFP) offer nine-month internships to college graduates and graduate students. Participants are placed in congressional offices, federal agencies, the media, and national advocacy organizations, as well as government-related institutions. Fellows are afforded the opportunity for substantive research and written work on policy issues.

The Summer Internship Program is a two-month program offering college-bound high school graduates and currently enrolled college undergraduates the opportunity to work on Capitol Hill.

The National Clearinghouse: CHCI serves as a national clearinghouse for educational programs and financial aid opportunities. Through its toll free line, 1-800-EXCEL DC, the Institute provides Hispanic students with information on scholarships, grants and loans. The Institute publishes and distributes the Educational Quarterly, a newsletter aimed at high school students, containing college profiles and other information related to attaining higher education.
The CHCI Web Site: Accessed at http://www.chci.org, this site offers a range of information on CHCI programs and events. It also contains helpful links to legislative information on the World Wide Web.

Legislative Briefings: The Institute periodically convenes meetings during which Hispanic Members of Congress, government officials and community leaders discuss issues of importance to the Latino community.

The CHCI Annual Gala is the highlight of Hispanic Heritage Month celebrations in our nation's capital. This is the largest national gathering of Hispanic elected officials, community leaders and corporate representatives.

CHCI neither solicits nor accepts federal funding. Support for these programs is donated by corporations and philanthropic foundations.

For more information on the work of the Institute, call (202) 543-1771 or toll free, 1-800-EXCEL DC.

The 1997-98 National Directory of Hispanic Organizations is arranged geographically and includes organizations which are considered to be national in either membership or in scope. Also included are organizations that serve statewide or regional Latino populations. The Institute has made every effort to maintain accurate and current organization listings.

The Congressional Hispanic Caucus Institute recognizes the value of a great many community-based organizations whose work is to be commended, and whose number is far too large to be included in this publication. An excellent source for local organizations is the publication "Anuario Hispano-Hispanic Yearbook," published by T.I.Y.M.
