Spiritual Growth and Development

Few things are as disheartening to ministers as spiritually handicapped, dysfunctional, or "dead" believers. Such members are usually the result of arrested spiritual development. Spiritual living demands growth, for there is no maintaining the status quo in the Christian life. Grow or die appears to be a law of nature that has implications for ministers who daily relate to developing Christians in a hostile world.

As ministers we are often viewed as spiritual guardians of congregations. Like parents raising large families, we are faced with meeting the spiritual needs of each member of our congregation. One of the chief difficulties in raising a large family is balancing parental expectations a child's abilities. Conscientious ministers do well to understand the various stages of spiritual development and acknowledge their responsibility in helping a spiritual baby develop into a mature Christian.

Spiritual development has many parallels with human development. The notion of development suggests our members go through predictable stages from spiritual conception through maturity. Each stage brings milestones, opportunities, and concerns. Ministers who are knowledgeable of these various stages are best prepared to assist and optimize spiritual growth. The primary benefit of nurturing believers through developmental stages is assured spiritual health and maturity in the context of a strong church family.

Just as sound prenatal care is essential for future physical growth, conscientious "pre-birth" care for future believers is essential. Spiritual birth should be the result of a covenant relationship between God and a believer based upon unconditional love. This marriage is the foundation for a Christian family. If a commitment to a covenant of unconditional love and spiritual childrearing are absent, irresponsible evangelism will result. Just as newborns face insurmountable survival problems when abandoned, spiritual newborns will almost certainly fail to reach spiritual maturity if abandoned to the world after a successful evangelistic experience. "Promiscuous evangelism" is probably the primary reason why the majority of new believers fail to survive.

Once the seed of the Gospel has taken root in a new believer a period of careful, protective nurturing is essential. This period of nurturing is the responsibility of the new believer's spiritual parents or guardians and should probably precede a public declaration, though many churches choose to present their newborns before spiritual survival is adequately insured. Many Asian cultures do not consider newborns as having survived birth until they have lived one-hundred days. At the Hundredth Day Celebration the parents present their new child to the extended family and community.

The Spiritual Growth and Development Table briefly outlines seven stages of spiritual development. Ministers and church volunteers should be aware of the developmental characteristics of the groups with which they are working. Progress from dependence (childhood), to independence (youth), then interdependence (adulthood) is a reoccurring theme in development. Treating all church family members in the same manner will likely result in unbalanced individuals and weak churches.

Values Rationale suggests approaches different age groups often use in making moral decisions and is loosely based upon research conducted by Lawrence Kohlberg (Kohlberg, 1969). Children are most likely to ask, "What will happen to me?" Youth ask, "Will I fit in and be accepted?" Mature adults are concerned with order and inner principles for living. Knowing how humans reason in different stages of development can assist ministers in reaching and appealing to specific groups. For example, Heaven and Hell are very significant concepts to children. Peer group consensus is more important than punishment or rewards to most youth. Adults focus upon the personal rights of others and eventually upon universal principles for living, such as the Two Great Commandments outlined by Jesus in the Gospels. Moral concern usually moves from a consideration of “me” (selfish) as child, to “us” (my group) as a youth, and then eventually includes “them” (those outside my group) as adults.

_Bible Study/Nutrition_ suggests Bible study is "spiritual eating." Continued health and growth requires the selection, preparation, and eating of a balanced diet. Infants and children find this an impossible task. Most youngsters prefer Twinkies to sound nutrition. Adults enjoy a balanced diet that meets a wide variety of nutritional requirements. If one considers Bible study as “food” the notion of eating, selection, method of preparation, recipes, restaurants, atmosphere, and a variety of other culinary concepts take on new meaning. How does your congregation "dine?"

_Prayer and Communication_ deals with a believer's ability to communicate spiritual ideas and complete spiritual tasks. Development in this area moves from virtual inability, to imitation, then onward to personally defined action. Ministers should not underestimate the value of imitation in teaching children. Youth grow when they become involved _with others_ in ministry. Adults need continued involvement and opportunities for leadership.

_Nurture, Shelter & Protection_ addresses a believer’s need for protection and an overtly Christian environment. The family or the church is the protective environment God has provided for spiritual development. The church family represents shelter and a safe environment for growth. Children require a home and nurturing family, youth want to venture outward, and adults are able to build or find new homes as needed.

_Evangelism_ deals with a believer's ability to share the Gospel effectively and follow-up with the intensive nurturing a new believer will need. Children have limited effectiveness as evangelists and must rely heavily upon others. Youth have a tendency to evangelize with zeal, but are rarely committed to long-term nurturing and may abandon new converts. Adults have the ability to evangelize effectively and provide the spiritual nurturing necessary for survival.

_Ministry Opportunities and Concerns and Danger_ generalize about the pros and cons of each stage of development. As ministers become familiar with the nature of each developmental stage, ideas for ministry will follow. The major area of concern is providing room for growth and development.

Spiritual guardians will find raising future ministers and a strong spiritual family much easier if they are aware of a believer’s passage through these stages. Spiritual guardians should also be aware of their own developmental goals and needs. Interdependency between local ministers and church families enhances growth. Continued maturity relies upon moving through each stage and emerging as a balanced, responsible believer who is able to be discerning and lead others as they grow. Those who integrate their lives into the lives of others face exciting growth and are a blessing to all they encounter.
