This performance guide is designed for teachers to use with students before and after a performance of the one-act musical based on Lucy Maud Montgomery's novel, "Anne of Green Gables," with music by Richard DeRosa and book and lyrics by Greg Gunning. The guide is designed to help teachers foster students' appreciation of theatre, dance, and music. The activities involve students in high-level thinking skills, accommodate differing learning styles, and draw connections to various parts of the curriculum. The guide, called a "Cuesheet," offers five activity pages for students. Materials for teachers address using the reproducible student activity pages and offers background information on author Lucy Maud Montgomery, Prince Edward Island (where the story takes place), on theatre conventions, adapting the novel into a musical play, and on audience collaboration. They also list resources about Lucy Maud Montgomery. Students' reproducible activity pages include a story synopsis, a look at the characters in the play and how actors double roles, lines from the play and character insights, items from the Victorian era, and the role of imagination in the theatre and in the character Anne. (SR)

by Rosalind Flynn
Welcome to Cuesheet, one of a series of performing arts resource guides published by the Education Department of the John F. Kennedy Center for the Performing Arts, Washington, D.C. Cuesheet is designed to help teachers foster students' understanding and appreciation of theater, dance, and music. The activities involve students in high-level thinking skills, accommodate differing learning styles, and draw connections to various parts of the curriculum.

This Cuesheet contains:

For Teachers, pages 1–3
- Information for Teachers on the use of student activity pages
- Background Information on people, places, and ideas, and Resources about Lucy Maud Montgomery.

For Students, pages 4–8
- Five reproducible activity pages

Cuesheet contains many questions and activities. Pick and choose those that best suit your purposes and time constraints.

This Cuesheet is designed for students to use independently, in pairs, small groups, or as a whole class.

Information for Teachers
Using the student activity pages:
Synopsis, Characters, Listen for These Lines, Look for These Things, Use Your Imagination.

The reproducible student activity pages are designed as a series of communications (letter, FAX, postcard, etc.) written by an Anne of Green Gables enthusiast to a friend who has moved away. The text and activities alert students to events and songs in the play, characters, dialogue, lyrics, themes, objects, and how theatrical problems are solved.

Each activity section has two components: something to do before the performance and suggestions for follow-up after the performance.

The activities involve students in reading, recalling, predicting, categorizing, imagining, discussing, using background knowledge, thinking visually and creatively, and building vocabulary.

The activities can be done individually or cooperatively. Each can serve as an impetus for classroom discussion or as a theme to explore through writing, drama, or visual art.
Lucy Maud Montgomery

Lucy Maud Montgomery, author of the novel Anne of Green Gables, was born on Prince Edward Island, Canada, in 1874. Her mother died when Maud (she was called by her middle name) was only 21 months old. Her father left her to be raised by her maternal grandparents when he moved off the island in search of work. He never returned.

Her grandparents were in their 50s when she went to live with them. They were strict and required their high-spirited young granddaughter to be quiet and well-behaved. Therefore, like her character Anne Shirley, Maud often used her vivid imagination to create companions and to entertain herself.

She loved to read and began writing when she was quite young. At age 15 she had a poem published in a local newspaper.

She became a teacher and continued writing poems and short stories. Anne of Green Gables, her first book, was published in 1908. It was an immediate success, and Montgomery became internationally famous. The first Anne book and its nine sequels have been translated into many languages; they remain popular today.

Montgomery married a minister named Ewan MacDonald in 1911, but continued to write under her maiden name. Before her death in 1942, she had published more than 20 books and hundreds of short stories and poems.

It is for Anne of Green Gables, however, that the author is primarily remembered. No one was more surprised than she at its popularity. She thought that young girls might like her story, but received letters from school boys and college students, grandparents, monks, missionaries, and red-headed people all over the world telling how much they loved Anne.

Theater Conventions

An implicit understanding between audience and performer is the agreement to "suspend disbelief," to pretend together that the action is real and is happening for the first time. This agreement is often maintained through the use of theatrical conventions (practices accepted as a part of playmaking).

These theatrical conventions are evident in Anne of Green Gables:
- Performers who play more than one role in the play: Called "doubling," in theater terminology
- Actors who "freeze" in position on stage in full view of the audience, indicating that the audience should not focus on them until they begin to move and speak again
- Split stage effect: The technique...
Adapting the novel into a musical play

Readers familiar with the novel Anne of Green Gables should be aware of several differences evident in this stage adaptation. Because it is a touring production for school audiences, it is an extreme encapsulation of the novel. With a running time of only 55 minutes, the adapters had to make choices about which events and characters to include and which to exclude.

- While the novel covers five years of Anne's life, the play covers only several days. The play uses dream sequences to touch upon events that occur in the novel, but are too lengthy to treat fully on stage. For example, in Anne's school dream sequence, she goes to college, wins a scholarship, and becomes a teacher. All of these events, that unfold over many pages in the novel, are treated briefly in one musical scene.

- In both the novel and the play, Anne calls a person with whom she has a special connection or relationship a "kindred spirit." Her friend Diana is her foremost kindred spirit in the book. In the play, Matthew receives that honor.

- Anne's red hair is integral to her character in the novel. According to ArtsPower, the producer of this show, Anne's red hair will only be mentioned if an actress who has red hair or is willing to dye her hair red is cast as Anne.

- If your students have read Montgomery's novel, you may want to discuss other variations in the book and the play. Focus on trying to imagine why the playwrights made certain artistic choices when adapting this story for the stage.

Audience Collaboration

Theater is a collaborative art which requires the work of many people — playwright, director, designers, actors, and the final collaborators — the audience. Therefore, students should know that the audience is an important part of every theatrical performance. A play is prepared for an audience, but the audience needs to be prepared for its part, too.

Help prepare your students to pay close and quiet attention during the performance. Encourage them to laugh and applaud at appropriate times, but stress that their job is to watch and listen. There are good reasons for this:

- plays take longer to unfold than 30-minute television programs; that means that to appreciate plays fully, it is necessary to pay attention to what the actors say and do
- other members of the audience who are listening and watching closely are easily distracted
- actors in a play are in the same room as the audience and are therefore affected by audience behavior. Unexpected noise and activity can destroy their concentration

Part of the success of any live performance rests on how well the audience does its part.

Resources

About Lucy Maud Montgomery:

Dear Chris,

Remember how we loved those Anne of Green Gables specials that were on TV? And after we watched them, we read all the Anne books? Well, the other day I got to go to the theater and see a musical play of Anne of Green Gables! It was presented by ArtsPower, Inc. of Ridgewood, New Jersey. How I wish you still lived here so you could have gone with me!

But guess what? ArtsPower is a touring theater company, and they are going to perform the show in your town! I just knew you'd want to go, so I decided to write and tell you some things about it!

First of all, the play is a one-act musical based on the book. That means that some of the characters and events in the play are the same as in the book, but some things have been changed or left out. I guess they couldn't fit everything from a 300-page novel into an hour-long play.

So, here's what happens in the play. I cut out this synopsis from the program. (Oh, by the way — all the musical numbers are in bold print.)

Your friend,

Terry

---

Synopsis

It is the early 1880s. In a town called Avonlea on Prince Edward Island in Canada, a train conductor talks to a young girl sitting at his train station. She is an orphan waiting to be picked up by the elderly Mr. Matthew Cuthbert. He and his sister Marilla are going to adopt her. Her name is Anne Shirley, and she loves to talk and "imagine."

As she waits, she imagines a scene from her unhappy days at the orphanage. She was treated poorly by the Headmistress and by two people who only wanted to adopt her to make her their servant. They called her a "Problem Child."

Shy and quiet Mr. Cuthbert is surprised to find a girl waiting for him at the train station. He and Marilla are going to adopt her. Her name is Anne Shirley, and she loves to talk and "imagine."

At the same time, Mrs. Rachel Lynde, the town gossip, visits Marilla. Rachel warns Marilla about the dangers of adopting orphans while Anne tells Matthew everything she imagines about her new life in Avonlea. Both Anne and Rachel are known for "Talkin' Too Much."

Matthew and Anne arrive at the Cuthbert house, Green Gables. Anne is told that she will be sent back to the orphanage in the morning. Because Matthew has heart problems, Marilla wants a boy to help with the farm work. However, Matthew protests and Anne is permitted to stay for a testing period.

On a visit, Rachel insults Anne by saying she's homely and an orphan. Anne loses her temper, insults Rachel, and must be convinced to apologize.

Anne's imagination runs wild when she thinks about her first day at school. She dreams up schoolmates, Gilbert and Diana, and her teacher. All of these characters take part in Anne's imagination of her years of success in school. They call her "The Smartest Girl in Avonlea."

The morning of Anne's first real day of school, Marilla discovers that her amethyst brooch, which Anne liked, is missing. Anne says that she tried the pin on, but put it back. Marilla accuses Anne of lying and sends her room until she tells the truth. Anne is heartbroken at the thought of missing school.

Matthew goes to the General Store to buy Anne a dress with "Puffed Sleeves." He is too shy to ask for it at first. He buys many things before he gets what he really came shopping for.

Anne invents a confession that she lost Marilla's brooch. Marilla tells Anne to pack her bags. Just then, Rachel arrives with the sad news that Matthew has died of a heart attack. She tries to hurry Anne off to catch the train back to the orphanage. However, Marilla realizes that she needs Anne and her vibrant imagination to stay at Green Gables, especially now after the loss of her brother.
October 15, 1994

Dear Chris,

So, how many characters did you count in that synopsis? There are only four actors in Anne of Green Gables, but there are eleven roles. All performers, except the one who plays Anne, "double" on roles.

How do you think the actors will change roles quickly, and how will the audience know when an actor is playing a different role?

Why do you think the production company has actors double on roles instead of hiring eleven actors?

I'll give you the names of the three characters played by actors who double on roles. Try to guess which of these seven other roles each of them also plays:

Train Conductor          Headmistress of Orphanage          Man at Orphanage
Woman at Orphanage       Diana                      Gilbert          Teacher
Actor who plays MATTHEW CUTHBERT also plays:  Actor who plays MARILLA CUTHBERT also plays:  Actor who plays RACHEL LYNDE also plays:

After the performance, you can see if you guessed right! Hint—you may be surprised!

I have to go finish my homework now. I'll add to this tomorrow.

Your friend,

T.

Terry
TO: Chris
FROM: Terry
DATE: October 16, 1994
NUMBER OF PAGES: 1

Dear Chris,

I'm back again! Last night I was thinking about some of my favorite lines from the play. I decided to type them up on the computer and get you to think about them, too.

Anne: Which would you rather be: divinely beautiful; dazzlingly clever; or angelically good?

That's a tough one! What do you think and why? Ask your friends. Write back and tell me.

Headmistress: (sings) You're a problem child! You're a dreamer, a trial, a pain, you're a pest! The Headmistress calls Anne a problem child because she daydreams, reads, writes, and talks too much. Things sure have changed since the 1880s!

I made a list of what might make somebody call a kid a "problem child" today. I'll send you my list if you'll send me yours.

A 1990s Problem Child:

Matthew: Maybe we need her more than she needs us.

It turns out that Matthew was right. Does it seem strange that a shy old man and his strict and sensible sister might need a child in their peaceful lives? An energetic, talkative, imaginative young girl?

How do you think that their lives might change for the better? Talk it over with a friend and fill out this chart.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>MATTHEW AND MARILLA CUTHBERT</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Life at Green Gables BEFORE Anne</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

After the performance, think about whether you would change or add to any of your ideas about these lines. Do you have favorite lines that I didn't include?

I'm tired so I'll sign off! I've got more to add tomorrow! Until then!

Your friend,

Terry
Dear Chris,

I just finished a report on Queen Victoria, who lived from 1819 to 1901. Since Anne of Green Gables takes place during the Victorian era, I got my stickers and stamps out to decorate this postcard in the style of a Victorian greeting card. Look closely — I even used pictures of some things seen or mentioned in the play:

- Strychnine
- Gables
- A Girl in the Glass (a mirror)
- Amethyst Brooch
- Butter Churn
- Horse and Buggy Pick-Ax
- Carpetbag
- Furbelows
- Puffed Sleeves
- A Straw Hat
- Horse
- Watch

If you look or listen for these things when you go to the play, you may need to look up a few of them in the dictionary. I did — especially “Furbelows!” After the performance, let me know if my list and pictures helped you understand more about that time period.

Hope so! Gotta catch the bus to school now. Guess who?

best copy available

Chris Shirley
1234 Northumberland Road, NW
Washington, DC 20002
October 18, 1994

Hi again, Chris!

Since Anne uses her imagination all the time, I thought I would challenge you to do the same. Imagine that you are the director of this play. There are two scenes that happen in Anne’s mind, but you have to show them on the stage:

- Anne remembers the people at the orphanage who ordered her around and said mean things to her.
- Anne imagines the teacher and two classmates she will meet in school. Together they sing and act out Anne’s dreams of a successful future.

Before you go to the play, think about how you could show clearly that these scenes happen in Anne’s imagination. Remember, you can use music, lights, sound effects, voices, costumes, scenery, furniture, and objects (props).

After the performance, compare your ideas with those of the director of Anne of Green Gables.

Well, I hope all that I sent you makes you eager to see Anne of Green Gables. Write back soon and tell me what you think!

Your friend,

Terry

P.S. You could also write to the people who presented the show, if you want. Address your letter to: Kennedy Center Youth and Family Programs, Washington, DC 20566.
NOTICE

Reproduction Basis

☐ This document is covered by a signed "Reproduction Release (Blanket)" form (on file within the ERIC system), encompassing all or classes of documents from its source organization and, therefore, does not require a "Specific Document" Release form.

☑ This document is Federally-funded, or carries its own permission to reproduce, or is otherwise in the public domain and, therefore, may be reproduced by ERIC without a signed Reproduction Release form (either "Specific Document" or "Blanket").