The program of studies for a reading elective course for avid or potentially avid readers at the junior high school level contained in this guide represents an attempt to address problems experienced by young adult readers. The program would provide time for them to read, and it would allow students the opportunity to value reading whether it be periodicals, newspapers, novels. Additionally, the program would allow students to progress through the stages of reading that would enhance their chances of becoming lifelong readers, and it would allow them the opportunity to discuss what they are reading and extend themselves in the process. Most importantly, the program will also allow students to make their own reading selections, an issue that is often overlooked in language arts classes. The program guide contains the following sections: General Introduction; Course Assessment; Community Service Projects; On-going Individual Reading Assignments; Award Winning Books; Film/Novel Study; Book Challenges and Censorship; and Author Interviews. Reading Elective for the Grades 7-9

General Introduction

In considering the options currently provided for students at our school, it becomes obvious that the needs of some students are not being addressed. We have options available to students who have abilities or interests, such as art and music. However there is not an option for avid or potentially avid readers. This document is a program of studies for a reading elective course at the junior high level. The reading course is not meant to be remedial in nature, but rather an exploration into areas of literature not offered in concentration in regular language arts classes, while at the same time providing an opportunity for students to enhance and expand their experiences with reading. It is an enrichment of aspects of the language arts curriculum.

Intentions of the Course

This reading course is an attempt to address problems experienced by young adult readers. It would provide time for them to read, and it would allow students the opportunity to value reading whether it be periodicals, newspapers, novels. Furthermore this course would allow students to progress through the stages of reading that would enhance their chances of becoming life-long readers. It would allow students the opportunity to discuss what they are reading and extend themselves in the process. Most importantly this course will also allow students to make their own reading selections, an issue that is often overlooked in language arts classes.
The Importance of a Reading Option

This course is potentially important because it directly reflects the value of reading in our school system. It is particularly important at the junior high level, because it is during these middle years that students begin to read less (Beers & Samuels, 1998). In addition this course is important because it will reach beyond the traditional methods of novel study that focus on comprehension questions and teacher-directed instruction. Also it has the potential to give students a chance to experience reading for different purposes. Furthermore this course is important to allow students the opportunity to connect with reading materials and perhaps, by extension, better connect with school and their peers.

The Importance of Adopting a Flexible Construct

We contend that literature and reading education must be driven by students' needs. Consequently in terms of what we want to see students doing, we believe that they must be given time during the day to read, and must be allowed the opportunity to respond to texts. (Beers, K. & Samuels, B., 1998).

This program of studies is not intended to be prescriptive. Its purpose is to serve as an initiative from which each teacher and class of students can construct the program that best suits their needs and directions. Reading is at the core of this program and reading activities and discussions serve as its complement.
Options to be considered for a class that meets three periods a week for 50 minutes a typical week:

Teachers should involve their students in the process of determining the class schedule and revisit the schedule as the year progresses. Individual students may choose to use the class time to read and complete assignments/projects as homework.

Location

Ideally this course would take place in the library surrounded by reading materials. However, due to facility constraints, flexible versus block scheduling in the library, and regular traffic from other classes this may not be possible in practice. Suffice to say, hold the class in the library whenever possible. This environment will not only suit the needs of the students, but their presence and activities in the library will also be witnessed by other potential and/or avid readers. While most activities are geared to novels class time can be devoted to the reading of materials other than novels.

Community Service Projects

Community service projects may take many forms. Three suggestions are offered here – a used-book drive for donations to other communities, a used book exchange for the schools community, and/or a reading out-reach project in conjunction with a nearby elementary class. Students should be involved in at least one project per year.

Reading Out-Reach Project

Students are paired with elementary students. In reading pairs they read orally to/with each other from materials they select.

Used Book Drive

Student organizers

- Brainstorm possible charitable organizations that would benefit from book donations
- Contact charitable organizations
- Determine the types of materials that would be appropriate for donation
- Draft the letter to go to student homes regarding the event
- Promote the event
- Gather and organize the materials as they arrive
- Contact the organizations regarding suitable delivery times
- Deliver the materials
Possible organizations in Edmonton include The Mustard Seed Foundation, The Youth Detention Centre, The Emergency Women's Shelter, and The WIN Foundation.

Used Book Exchange

Students from the entire school are involved in the book exchange. As each student brings in a book for exchange they receive a ticket. On the days of the actual exchange students may redeem their tickets for the books of their choosing. The role of the students involved in the project is to visit each class regularly to promote the event, receive exchange books, and give out the tickets. In addition they are responsible for sorting the books into categories (adult, young adult and children). These students are also responsible for the facilitating of the exchange on the days of the event. Further promotion of the event may take place in the schools newsletter, web site and community areas.
Written Response to Reading

A reading response is intended to be an exploration/discussion of a particular aspect of a book. The writer uses a response to display insight and depth of understanding. The evaluation of a written response to reading is not concerned with the mechanics of writing.

One response is due each week and will be evaluated out of 30. This rubric can be negotiated and adjusted with student input. All responses should be kept in a file or duotang and will provide a platform for teacher/student conferences on an informal or formal basis.

Database of Book Reviews Project

Using a program such as FileMaker Pro students will generate a database of book reviews that will be highly accessible to other students in the school. Students will be able to search the database according to

- Author
- Title
- Rating
- Genre
- Theme
- Reviewer
- Reading difficulty
Award Winning Books

Research Activity

In groups have students research a number of book awards. For each award they must provide the following information:

- The literary category, e.g., children's literature, young adult, etc.
- The make-up of the people who create the short list
- How and by whom the winner is selected
- The prize for each award
- At least five of the recent winners should be listed by author and title for each award
- Web site address

The information for each award should be displayed on chart paper in the room. Formal and informal discussions should take place based on the information gathered.

Culminating Activity

As a class develop a book award.

- Give the award a title
- Design a logo
- Determine possible sponsors
- Determine literary category, e.g., children's literature, young adult, etc.
- Determine the short listing, judging and voting procedures and participants
- Create advertisements for the award – audio, video, bookmarks, posters
- Determine a winner

Evaluation will be based on participation and apparent effort as determined by peer and self evaluation.

Film/Novel Study

Introduction and Discussion

The film/novel study will be completed in small groups. However it may take place on an individual basis depending on the interests of the students.

Brainstorm with students novels that have been made into films for the theatre or made for television.

Explore their reactions to the films versus the novels.

Possible questions for the class:

- Which did you do first – read the book or view the film? Does the order make a difference as to how you perceive either one? Why or why not?
- What book would make an extremely poor film? Why?

Give students a handout of novels that have been made into films. Have students add to their lists from the titles brainstormed in class. Go to the library and book talk some or all of the novels. Have the students form their own groups based on what novel/film they choose to study. Multiple copies of the novels will be required either as purchases or through inter-library loans.

Each group will have a discussion and reach a consensus as to whether they will read the novel first or view the film first.

All assignments may be completed individually or as a group. If completed as a group all members of the group will receive the same mark. However, all members of a group must adhere to the order in which the book and film will be experienced.
All rubrics are suggestions and can be negotiated and altered through student input.

Reflection Assignment

In a few paragraphs reflect on the differences and similarities and their possible explanations or present your reflections orally to the class.

The reflection segment of the assignment may also work well as a dialogue (written or oral) between two or more people who are comparing the plot as depicted in the novel and the film.

Rubric to be developed in negotiation with students.
Setting Assignment

Discuss the setting as it is depicted in the novel and the film. Identify the differences and similarities in setting between the novel and the film. Individuals in each group will choose whether the setting is stronger and more meaningful in the novel or the film and present their arguments. Possible formats that this assignment may take should be brainstormed in class (dioramas, maps, oral presentations, multi-media presentations, dialogues, essays, video, posters).

Conflict Assignment

Individual students should write a response that discusses the conflict as portrayed in the film and in the novel. Written response rubric may be used for this assignment.

Concluding Reflection Assignment

Write a response reflecting on your perceptions throughout this unit of study. Include recommendations for improving the unit and identify the strengths of the unit. Written response rubric may be used for this assignment.

Book Challenges and Censorship

Research Activity

Each student could select a title from one of the sites below and research the book in terms of

- Reasons for the challenge
- Reason for the banning
- Group or individual behind the challenge
- Location of the case
- Outcome

Findings should be presented to the class and must include some personal insight and supported opinions.

Author Interviews

Interview Response

Students select an author and read at least one interview of that author. In a response students determine at least three questions that should have been asked but weren't, and provide possible explanations for their absence. Evaluation for written response may be used.

Possible Follow-up Activity

Writing to the author

- identifying the interview you read
- explaining what you felt was missing from the interview
- asking for the author's response to one or more of your questions

Self evaluation in a response following the process.
