This teacher's and student's guide is part of a series of content-centered packages of supplemental reading, activities, and methods adapted for students who have disabilities. Parallel Alternative Strategies for Students (PASS) materials are designed to help these students succeed in regular education content courses. The content in PASS differs from standard textbooks and workbooks in several ways: simplified text, smaller units of study, reduced vocabulary level, increased frequency of drill and practice, less cluttered format, and presentation of skills in small, sequential steps. The material is designed to supplement state-adapted textbooks and other instructional materials. This guide is intended for teachers and students of American history and covers the time period from 1924 to the present. The content is based on the Florida Curriculum Frameworks and correlates to the Sunshine State Standards. It is divided into 11 units of study that correspond to the social studies strands. Each unit in the teacher's guide contains: a description of the unit focus, suggestions for enrichment, an assessment, and an answer key. The teacher's guide appendices include instructional strategies, teaching suggestions, inclusion suggestions, and a chart that correlates relevant benchmarks from the Sunshine State Standards with the course requirements. The student workbook contains vocabulary, an explanation of the content, and practice exercises designed to evaluate comprehension. (Contains 30 references.) (CR)

Foreword

Parallel Alternative Strategies for Students (PASS) books are content-centered packages of supplemental readings, activities, and methods that have been adapted for students who have disabilities and other students with diverse learning needs. PASS materials are used by regular education teachers and exceptional education teachers to help these students succeed in regular education content courses. They have also been used effectively in alternative settings such as juvenile justice educational programs and second chance schools, and in dropout prevention and other special programs that include students with diverse learning needs.

The content in PASS differs from standard textbooks and workbooks in several ways: simplified text; smaller units of study; reduced vocabulary level; increased frequency of drill and practice; concise directions; less cluttered format; and presentation of skills in small, sequential steps.

PASS materials are not intended to provide a comprehensive presentation of any course. They are designed to supplement state-adopted textbooks and other instructional materials. PASS may be used in a variety of ways to augment the curriculum for students with disabilities and other students with diverse learning needs who require additional support or accommodations in textbooks and curriculum. Some ways to incorporate this text into the existing program are as

- a resource to supplement the basic text
- a pre-teaching tool (advance organizer)
- a post-teaching tool (review)
- an alternative homework assignment
- an alternative to a book report
- extra credit work
- make-up work
- an outside assignment
- part of an individual contract
- self-help modules
- an independent activity for drill and practice
- general resource material for small or large groups
- an assessment of student learning

The initial work on PASS materials was done in Florida through Project IMPRESS, an Education of the Handicapped Act (EHA), Part B, project funded to Leon County Schools from 1981–1984. Four sets of modified content materials called Parallel Alternate Curriculum (PAC) were disseminated as parts two through five of A Resource Manual for the Development and Evaluation of Special Programs for Exceptional Students, Volume V-F: An Interactive Model Program for Exceptional Secondary Students. Project IMPRESS patterned the PACs after curriculum materials developed at the Child Service Demonstration Center at Arizona State University in cooperation with Mesa, Arizona, Public Schools.

A series of 19 PASS volumes was developed by teams of regular and special educators from Florida school districts who volunteered to participate in the EHA, Part B, Special Project, Improvement of Secondary Curriculum for Exceptional Students (later called the Curriculum Improvement Project). This project was funded by the Florida Department of Education, Bureau of Education for Exceptional Students, to Leon County Schools during the 1984 through 1988 school years. Regular education subject area teachers and exceptional education teachers worked cooperatively to write, pilot, review, and validate the curriculum packages developed for the selected courses.

Beginning in 1989 the Curriculum Improvement Project contracted with Evaluation Systems Design, Inc., to design a revision process for the 19 PASS volumes. First, a statewide survey was disseminated to teachers and administrators in the 67 school districts to assess the use of and satisfaction with the PASS volumes. Teams of experts in instructional design and teachers in the content area and in exceptional education then carefully reviewed and revised each PASS volume according to the instructional design principles recommended in the recent research literature. Subsequent revisions have been made to bring the PASS materials into alignment with the Sunshine State Standards.

The PASS volumes provide some of the text accommodations necessary for students with diverse learning needs to have successful classroom experiences and to achieve mastery of the Sunshine State Standards. To increase student learning, these materials may be used in conjunction with additional resources that offer visual and auditory stimuli, including computer software, videotapes, audiotapes, and laser videodiscs.
User's Guide

The American History–Part 2 PASS and accompanying Teacher’s Guide are supplementary resources for teachers who are teaching social studies to secondary students with disabilities and other students with diverse learning needs. The content of the American History–Part 2 PASS book is based on the Florida Curriculum Frameworks and correlates to the Sunshine State Standards.

The Sunshine State Standards are made up of strands, standards, and benchmarks. A strand is the most general type of information and represents a category of knowledge. A standard is a description of general expectations regarding knowledge and skill development. A benchmark is the most specific level of information and is a statement of expectations about student knowledge and skills. Sunshine State Standards correlation information for American History–Part 2, course number 2100310, is given in a matrix in appendix E.

The American History–Part 2 PASS is divided into 11 units of study that correspond to the social studies strands. The student book focuses on readings and activities that help students meet benchmark requirements as identified in the course description. It is suggested that expectations for student performance be shared with the students before instruction begins.

Each unit in the Teacher’s Guide includes the following components:

- Unit Focus: Each unit begins with this general description of the unit’s content and describes the unit’s focus. This general description also appears in the student book. The Unit Focus may be used with various advance organizers (e.g., surveying routines, previewing routines, paraphrasing objectives, posing questions to answer, developing graphic organizers such as in appendix A, sequencing reviews) to encourage and support learner commitment.

- Suggestions for Enrichment: Each unit contains activities that may be used to encourage, to interest, and to motivate students by relating concepts to real-world experiences and prior knowledge.

- Unit Assessments: Each unit contains an assessment with which to measure student performance.

- Keys: Each unit contains an answer key for each practice in the student book and for the unit assessments in the Teacher’s Guide.
The appendices contain the following components:

- Appendix A describes instructional strategies adapted from the Florida Curriculum Frameworks for meeting the needs of students with disabilities and other students with diverse learning needs.

- Appendix B lists teaching suggestions for helping students achieve mastery of the Sunshine State Standards and Benchmarks.

- Appendix C contains suggestions for specific strategies to facilitate inclusion of students with disabilities and other students with diverse learning needs. These strategies may be tailored to meet the individual needs of students.

- Appendix D contains the Florida public school statute mandating the instruction of the history of the Holocaust (1933-1945) into various existing courses within the school curriculum. The Holocaust is to be taught in a manner that leads to an investigation of human behavior; an understanding of the ramifications of prejudice, racism, and stereotyping; and an examination of what it means to be a responsible and respectful person, for the purpose of encouraging tolerance of diversity in a pluralistic society and for nurturing and protecting democratic values and institutions.

- Appendix E contains a chart that correlates relevant benchmarks from the Sunshine State Standards with the course requirements for American History–Part 2. These course requirements describe the knowledge and skills the students will have once the course has been successfully completed. The chart may be used in a plan book to record dates as the benchmarks are addressed.

- Appendix F lists reference materials and software used to produce American History–Part 2.

American History–Part 2 is designed to correlate classroom practices with the Florida Curriculum Frameworks. No one text can adequately meet all the needs of all students—this PASS is no exception. PASS is designed for use with other instructional materials and strategies to aid comprehension, provide reinforcement, and assist students in attaining the subject area benchmarks and standards.
Section 1: War and its Aftermath (1924-1960)

Unit 1: Background Causes of World War II (1924-1941)
Unit 2: World War II (1935-1945)
Unit 3: Life in America during World War II (1941-1945)
Unit 4: Cold War Conflicts (1945-1960)
Unit 5: Postwar America (1952-1960)
Unit 1: Background Causes of World War II (1924-1941)

This unit emphasizes the economic and political conditions in Europe after World War I and the unrest that led to the rise of new and dangerous political ideas and dictators, resulting in World War II.

Unit Focus

- impact of Europe's new political ideas and rise of socialism, communism, and fascism
- effects of rise of Adolf Hitler and Nazi Germany
- ways United States foreign policy contributed to Hitler's success during administration of President Franklin D. Roosevelt
- events in Far East
- description of Allies and Axis Powers
- reasons United States entered World War II with Axis Powers

Suggestions for Enrichment

1. Have students prepare a chart in which they compare and contrast socialism, communism, fascism, and democracy based on four basic questions: Who owns the factories and farms? Who decides what goods will be produced? How are goods distributed? How much freedom of choice is there?

2. Have students make a map of the world color coding the countries to indicate which were the aggressors and which were conquered before and during World War II.

3. Have students find news items about communism or socialism today to determine if these ideas are gaining or losing support in the current industrial world or the underdeveloped world. Repeat with military dictatorships.
4. Assign students one of the following events to create a news item for a television news broadcast covering that event: Mussolini’s rise to power in Italy; Hitler’s ascent to the position of Chancellor of Germany; Japan’s invasion of Manchuria; United States recognition of the Soviet Union.

5. Have students choose one of the following leaders and create a résumé for that leader: Adolf Hitler, Benito Mussolini, Joseph Stalin, Hideki Tojo, Winston Churchill, and Franklin Roosevelt.

6. Have students create posters illustrating the rise of dictatorship in the 1930s. Ask students to include reasons why dictators gained power.

7. Have students create a flow chart of Axis actions and Allied and American responses from 1935 to 1941.

8. Ask students to note the physical sizes of Italy, Germany, and Japan and then list the reasons why those countries were interested in territorial expansion.

9. Ask students to research and discuss how Japan’s lack of resources influence its move toward militarism and territorial expansion.

10. Ask students to analyze the events that were going on in the United States prior to its entry to the war and in detail report the major cause of the United States entry into World War II.

11. Discuss with students the following: Are there good reasons to go to war? Ask students to predict what the United States would be like if we had not experienced the Civil War, World War I, and World War II.

12. Ask students to think about their views on World War II and whether they are more likely to be an interventionist (ready for the country to go to war) or an isolationist (against getting involved in war because there are more urgent matters to deal with at home). Ask students to write a persuasive essay on his or her views for or against United States involvement in World War II and list three reasons why.
13. Order the following free materials listed below.

- Introductory Packet of Resources
  Teaching about the Holocaust: A Resource Book for Educators containing photographs of six artifacts from the Permanent Exhibition of the United States Holocaust Memorial Museum, an Oral History Interview Guidelines order form, and a Teacher's Catalog from the museum shop

- Victims of the Nazi Era, 1933-1945 containing five brochures about non-Jewish victims

- Resistance during the Holocaust

- Identification Cards containing a set of 37 cards

Order the above materials from the address listed below.

United States Holocaust Memorial Museum
Education Resource Center
Division of Education
101 Raoul Wallenberg Place, SW
Washington, D.C. 20014-2126
Fax: (202) 314-7888
Telephone: (202) 488-0400

14. Obtain the Artifact Poster Set from the United States Holocaust Memorial Museum. Post the Artifact Poster Set throughout the room to allow students to note all the symbols used by the Nazis to identify their victims. Discuss why a government would identify its citizens with such markings and how it was not just the Jews who suffered in the Holocaust. Ask students: What effect do you think these markings had on society and on the individuals who had to wear them? How did these markings help the Nazis achieve their goal? Do we label people in our society? How do the symbols still affect people today?
15. Locate A Teacher Guide to the Holocaust on the Internet (http://fcit.coedu.usf.edu/Holocaust/). The site contains the headings for timelines, people, the arts, teacher resources, and activities. The guide is also available on CD. The CD and site were produced by the University of South Florida’s College of Education and the Florida Center for Instructional Technology, and was funded by the Florida Department of Education.

16. For a free copy of A Holocaust Mini-Catalog: Children of the Holocaust—Tools for Teachers, call 800/343-5540 or fax 201/652-1973. The catalog, sponsored by the Anti-Defamation League, has ordering information for publications, books written for and by children, videos, curriculum guides, newspapers, magazines, and CDs containing the stories of children who were hidden during the Holocaust.

17. In a classroom discussion, analyze the motivations for, and implications of, Nazi censorship in the fine and literary arts, theater, and music (e.g., the banning of books and certain styles of painting; the May 1933 book burnings).

18. In a classroom discussion, examine the values and beliefs of the Nazis and how the regime perceived the world as evidenced by Nazi symbols of power, Nazi propaganda posters, and paintings and drawings deemed "acceptable" rather than "degenerate."

19. In a classroom discussion, analyze the corruption of language cultivated by the Nazis, particularly in the case of euphemisms to mask their evil intent (e.g., their use of the terms "emigration" for expulsion, "evacuation" for deportation, "deportation" for transportation to concentration camps and killing centers, "police action" for round-ups that typically led to the mass murders, and "Final Solution" for the planned annihilation of every Jew in Europe).
20. Ask students to evaluate how symbols, flags, slogans, rituals, and music are used by governments to build, protect, and mobilize a society. Then discuss how such elements can be abused and manipulated by governments to implement and legitimize acts of terror and even genocide.

21. Give groups of students a Web address from different national and international organizations with strong views on Nazis and Nazism. Have students explore the site and find its organizational view of Nazism. Discuss the finding with the class. Have students discuss the variety of information sources available and the reliability and the bias of the information found at each site. Types of sources of information may include the following: organizations that describe Nazi atrocities during World War II; organizations that deny Nazi atrocities during World War II; organizations that seek to destroy Nazis for their current actions and beliefs; organizations that seek to destroy Nazis for their past beliefs; and organizations that agree with Nazism's fundamental principals.

22. Discuss the results of the passing of the Enabling Act of March 23, 1937. List anti-Jewish regulations from 1937-1939 and how they impacted day-to-day living. Discuss the motivations behind Kristallnacht.

23. Have students research and describe events in Germany that preceded the Holocaust, including the destruction of synagogues in major German cities.

24. Have students research and discuss the St. Louis incident. On May 9, 1939, the ship St. Louis left Germany with 937 Jewish refugees seeking asylum in the Americas. They were denied entry, and 907 had to return to Europe where they died at the hands of Nazis in concentration camps.

25. Have students create a newspaper in which significant events of the Holocaust are reported: required wearing of bright yellow Star of David, book burning, concentration camps and death camps, Nuremberg Laws, Olympic Games of 1936, Kristallnacht, forced labor, ghettos, deportations, Wannsee Conference, etc.
26. Have students create a timeline focusing on the 10 events of the Holocaust they believe to be the most important. Ask them to select one event and write a summary that reflects its significance and provide an illustration.

27. Jews had a vibrant culture and long history prior to the Nazi era. Expose students to some of the cultural contributions and achievements of 2,000 years of European Jewish life to help balance their perception of Jews as victims and to better appreciate the traumatic disruption of Jewish history caused by the Holocaust and previous pogroms.

28. Have students research the history of Passover and how it pertains to the Jewish people’s experience of the Holocaust. Discuss what a Seder is and how it tells the history of the Jewish people. Ask students: What relationships can be drawn between the parts of the Seder and Jewish history? Who is Elijah and what is the reason for opening the door for him? How could Passover help the Jewish people to survive the Holocaust or cope with its memory?

29. Ask students to list responses to the following: What do you need to live? Then ask students to add to the list: What do you need to live happily? Next list all responses on the board and discuss why each is needed. Build a hierarchy of needs, categorizing the types of needs.

30. Use the list below to encourage students to think of the freedom the following rights allow them and their families. Ask them to think of ways they and their families would be affected if these rights were revoked. Then ask students to rank the list from one to six, one being the most important to them.

- own or use a public library
- date or marry whomever you choose
- own a radio, CD player, or computer
- go to a movie or concert
- leave your house whenever you choose

Unit 1: Background Causes of World War II (1924-1941)
31. Help students develop a deeper respect for human decency by asking them to confront the moral depravity and the extent of Nazi evil (e.g., Nazi cruelty to victims even prior to the round-ups and deportations; the events of Kristallnacht; the deportation in boxcars; the mass killings; and the so-called medical experiments of Nazi doctors).

32. Help students visualize the crowded conditions in the ghettos. Identify an area within your community that is about the size of the Warsaw ghetto in Poland, about 1 1/2 square miles in area (e.g., a university campus or residential neighborhood). Estimate the number of people living in this area. Then explain that in this area where [use the statistics for your community] people live, the Nazis put anywhere from 330,000 to 500,000 people.

33. Have students estimate the calorie content they consume in a given day and compare with the intake of 184 calories for the Jews in concentration camps.

34. Have students assess diaries describing historical events (e.g., Anne Frank: The Diary of a Young Girl, which recounts how Anne Frank and her family hid from Nazis during World War II; Zlata’s Diary: A Child’s Life in Sarajevo, which is Zlata Filipovic’s account of childhood in war-torn Sarajevo).

35. Show the film The Diary of Anne Frank or read the book, Anne Frank: The Diary of a Young Girl. Discuss Frank’s life as a Jewish girl in Amsterdam, Holland during the time of Nazi Germany. Read selected sections of Anne Frank: The Diary of a Young Girl to lead discussion on the dangers confronted by the Franks and the people who helped to hide them. Have students visit the Anne Frank Web site. Ask students what is the most important thing Anne Frank has to say to our society at the beginning of the 21st century.

36. Have students write a letter to the editor from the perspective of Anne Frank, Otto Frank (Anne’s father), or Edith Frank-Hollander (Anne’s mother). Ask the students to discuss issues from the selected person’s perspective.
37. Have students choose a specific historical event and make the following lists.

- list important details about this historical event
- list well known people associated with this historical event and their roles
- list others who may have been affected by this historical event (such as a soldier's wife, or a weapon maker) and how they were affected

Now have students select one of these people as the "writer" of a series of journals about this event. Then have students use a thesaurus to create a list of descriptive words they think would be accurate for recounting the historical event and for describing the emotions of that person. Ask students to write two to four diary entries from the point of view of the person they chose, including facts, clear narration, and accurate descriptions of the individual's feelings detailing the event during different moments in time.

38. Ask students to write a journal entry about a major historical event they have experienced.

39. Write for a copy of the videotape and/or publication South Carolina: Lessons from the Holocaust with personal testimonies and interviews with Holocaust survivors and liberators (like the ones in the unit). Request copies on letterhead stationery to the following address listed below.

South Carolina Department of Education
South Carolina Council on the Holocaust
1429 Senate Street, Room 801
Columbia, South Carolina 29201

40. For links to Web sites on various topics about the Holocaust, go to the Florida State University Holocaust Institute Web links (http://www.freenet.tlh.fl.us/~ervin01/).
41. Discuss the Holocaust and the systematic bureaucratic annihilation of six million Jews (as well as millions of other judged "unworthy of life") by the Nazi regime and its collaborators. Discuss the ramifications of silence and indifference in the face of prejudice and hate then and today. Have students list ways to become more tolerant of others, regardless of any perceived differences.

42. See Appendices A, B, and C for other instructional strategies, teaching suggestions, and accommodations/modifications.

Unit 2: World War II (1935-1945)

This unit emphasizes the events that led to the United States joining the Allies in World War II against the Axis Powers.

Unit Focus

- United States foreign policy toward Soviet Union during administration of President Franklin D. Roosevelt
- reasons World War II began in Europe
- reasons United States declared war against Japan, Germany, and Italy
- events leading to defeat of Germany during administration of President Harry S Truman
- ways horrors and extent of Holocaust were revealed
- reasons United States dropped atomic bomb and Japan surrendered

Suggestions for Enrichment

1. Divide class into two groups, one representing isolationists, the other interventionists. Have students write individual essays and combine them into a single document, distilling the text to essential bullet points. Choose a presenter from each side.

2. Have students interview someone who lived during World War II or served in the military. Have them describe battles, strategies, weapons, or living conditions for soldiers. Have students present their report to the class and provide items from the war to illustrate the report.

3. Show the film The Longest Day, about the invasion of Normandy. Discuss the hardships and fears of soldiers on both sides.

4. Have students research the atomic bomb and compare the power of the atomic bomb with a modern nuclear bomb. Have them draw a diagram to demonstrate the two weapons.
5. Have students make maps to show military strategies used on the European Front or the Pacific Front.

6. Have students locate and analyze songs written during and about the events of World War II, describing their themes and messages, and what the music says about the society in which it was created.

7. Have students research other countries' involvement in World War II and create a timeline of events.

8. Give each student a map of pre-World War II Europe. Assign individual students or groups particular European countries. Give students a piece of blank paper and ask them to tear out the shape of their country. Have them consult with groups or individuals creating countries bordering their own so they can gauge proportions (simulating the forming of alliances).

Have students put their desks in a circle. Beginning with Germany, have each student attach a bordering country until the map of Europe is lying on the floor in the middle of the desks. As students fill in the map, discuss such topics as the Maginot Line, the Nazi-Soviet Non-Aggression Pact, isolationism, and the effectiveness of the Blitzkrieg when used against Poland. Have students respond in writing to what and how they learned, what was important to them, and what conclusion they drew from the experience.

9. Have students research how newspapers in the United States and around the world remember the bombing of Pearl Harbor. Using the Internet visit Ecola.com (http://www.ecola.com) to link to English-language newspapers and magazines worldwide.

10. Have students use the Internet or history resources to design an accurate, detailed map of the route the Japanese planes used during the attack on Pearl Harbor.

11. Ask students to interview a person who can recount the attack on Pearl Harbor. Have students find out how the person was involved.

12. Have students create a timeline with events in World War II that led to the attack on Pearl Harbor.
13. Have students read and evaluate other accounts of the Pearl Harbor attack on different Internet search engines, using the keywords: Pearl Harbor.

14. If you or your students know a Holocaust survivor who is willing to discuss his or her experiences, invite the individual to class to share his or her perspective on the Holocaust. Students may also locate survivors who have shared their stories on the Internet and request an e-mail interview.

15. Invite a member of the Anti-Defamation League to speak to the class.

16. Have students research and create a timeline of events leading up to the Holocaust or use one already created. Ask students to label each event social, political, or economic. Then write a five-paragraph essay, answering the question: What is the Holocaust? Then discuss why it is important to be involved in the political process.

17. Discuss the size of the railroad cars (31 feet long and 11 feet wide) taking the Jews from the ghettos to the concentration camps and the number of Jews (80 to 100) placed in each railroad car. Tape off an area equaling one-fifth or 20 percent of the railroad car size on the classroom floor. Determine what one-fifth or 20 percent of 80 to 100 people would be in a car. Have students visualize that number of people in the size of the area taped off on the floor.

18. Have students complete the calculations below, so they may begin to comprehend and attempt to gauge the magnitude of the mass murder of six million Jews in the Holocaust.

- If you decided right now to observe a minute of silence for each of the six million Jews who died in the Holocaust, when would you speak again? (Answer: One minute of silence for each Jewish victim would mean that you would not speak for about 11 years and five months: 60 victims per hour = 1,440 per day = 4,166 days.)

- If you typed out a list of the names of all the six million Jews who died in the Holocaust and put 250 names on each page, how many pages long would your list be and how high would a stack of your pages be? (Answer: A list of victims' names would contain 24,000 pages; a pile would be about eight feet tall.)
• There were slightly more than 1,100 names on Oskar Schindler's list. At 250 names per page, how many pages would his list be? Compare Schindler's list to the list of six million Jews who died. If you were Schindler looking at the lists, what would you feel? (Answer: Schindler's list at 250 names per page would have been less than five pages long; answers will vary.)

19. Have students research Gypsy (Roma and Sinti) history and culture to gain an understanding of the diverse ways of life among different Gypsy groups.

20. Discuss the different roles which were assumed or thrust upon people during the Holocaust, such as victim, oppressor, bystander, and rescuer. Discuss how individuals and groups often behaved differently upon changing events and circumstances.

21. Examine the moral choices or "choiceless choices" which were confronted by both young and old, victim and perpetrator.

22. Discuss the deeds of heroism demonstrated by teenagers and adults in ghettos and concentrations camps (e.g., the couriers who smuggled messages, goods, and weapons in and out of the Warsaw ghetto; the partisans who used arms to resist the Nazis; the uprisings and revolts in various ghettos including Warsaw and in killing centers such as Treblinka); also see Stolzfus' Resistance of the Heart).

23. Explore with students the dangers of remaining silent, apathetic, and indifferent in the face of others' oppression; also see Stolzfus' Resistance of the Heart.

24. Discuss different forms of resistance during the Holocaust (e.g., smuggling messages, food, and weapons to actual military engagement; willful disobedience in continuing to practice religious and cultural traditions in defiance of Nazi rules; creating fine art, music, and poetry inside ghettos and concentration camps; simply maintaining the will to remain alive as an act of spiritual resistance in the face of abject brutality; also see Stolzfus' Resistance of the Heart).

25. Explore the spiritual resistance to the Holocaust evidenced in the clandestine writing of diaries, poetry, and plays that portray the irrepressible dignity of people who transcended the evil of the murders.
26. Discuss how people living under Nazi control used art as a form of resistance, examining the extent to which the victims created art; the dangers they faced in doing so; the various forms of art that were created and the setting in which they were created; and the diversity of themes and content in this artistic expression.

27. Examine art created by Holocaust victims and survivors and explore how it documented diverse experiences, including life prior to the Holocaust, life inside the ghettos, the deportations, and the myriad experiences in the concentration camp system.

28. Examine interpretation of the Holocaust as expressed in contemporary art, art exhibitions, and memorials.

29. Discuss the Nuremberg Trials and how the judges rejected the defense used by the majority of Nazis who had carried out extermination orders and claimed that they were just following orders. Then discuss that many people under Nazi rule were apathetic concerning the oppression of the Jews. Are those people as guilty of persecuting the Jews as the soldiers who carried out the extermination orders? Discuss personal responsibility and a person's choice to act or not. Is choosing not to act the same as choosing to act? Ask students: What has the Holocaust taught about human decency and showing indifference in the face of prejudice and hate?

30. Make reference to such movies as Schindler's List, explaining that less than one-half percent of the total population under Nazi occupation helped to rescue the Jews. Discuss that the Holocaust was not inevitable, but that it happened because individuals, groups, and nations made decisions to act or not. Refer to the United States not allowing Jews to emigrate. Read the poem by Martin Niemoller on page 582 of the student book.

31. Emphasize that each person killed in the Holocaust was once a living, breathing human being. They were the fathers, mothers, sisters, brothers, sons, and daughters of others. Emphasize that whole families were wiped off the face of Earth and that 1.5 million children were murdered from 1939-1945 because they could carry on their "race." Read poem by Yitak Katzenelson who died in Auschwitz in 1944. Show Shoah: Survivors of the Holocaust video.

32. Have students write an essay or poem describing how they think they would have felt had they been a survivor of the Holocaust.
33. Have students make a sketch of what the Holocaust means to them, with a written caption explaining the symbols used in the sketch.

34. Have students visit the United States Holocaust Memorial Museum (USHMM) home page (http://www.ushmm.org/) and write an opinion about the importance of the USHMM to the victims of the Holocaust and society as a whole. Discuss why it is important to have witnesses to the Holocaust (http://www.cicb.be/shoah/ and http://remember.org/). Show One Survivor Remembers and For the Living: The Story of the United States Holocaust Memorial Museum video.

35. Discuss the ramifications of silence and indifference in the face of prejudice and hate. Analyze what is needed from citizens to sustain democratic institutions and values (e.g., the Bill of Rights, the First Amendment, checks and balances). Have students compare their rights today with those of a Jewish person living in Germany in the late 1930s.

36. Describe events similar to the Holocaust that are still taking place in the world today.

37. Brainstorm ways to combat man's inhumanity to man in everyday life.

38. Ask students to interpret what the British statesman Edmund Burke (1729-1797) meant when he said, "The only thing necessary for the triumph of evil is for good men to do nothing." Have students respond to the following questions: What does the quotation mean? What does it have to do with the people of the free world during the Holocaust? What responsibility do we have when it comes to helping someone in trouble? For example, what could we do when we see someone on the side of road whose car has broken down? What should we do in a situation when helping someone else puts us at risk? What might happen to society if people did not help one another? What responsibility do the United States and other countries have to protect groups of people from mass annihilation?

39. Ask students to write a eulogy for the millions of victims of genocide throughout history. Have them read it to the class. Suggest they select a piece of classical music to play softly in the background while they read their eulogies.
40. Discuss why it is important to learn about and remember the Holocaust. Discuss what the lessons of the Holocaust are and how they apply to all people.

41. Have students create essays, poems, or artistic designs in reaction to the following statement concerning guilt and responsibility of the people of Europe during the Holocaust: "Some are guilty, all are responsible."

42. Have students create a "Wall of Remembrance." Give each student a 4" x 4" square of white ceramic tile and paint. (Optional: use 4" x 4" pieces of paper or fabric squares.) First have students create a rough draft on paper of how they will decorate their square to express their thoughts and feelings about what they have learned about the Holocaust and to pay tribute to those who perished. Mount the squares on a wall.

43. Ask students the following: Do you think it was possible for survivors of the Holocaust to forget their past and forgive those who committed acts of atrocity against them? Nazi hunter Simon Wiesenthal wrote a novel called the Sunflowers in which such an issue is raised. A 21-year-old soldier lies on his deathbed just after the war. Wiesenthal is called in to hear the soldier's last words in which he confesses his acts during the war and begs Wiesenthal to forgive him so that he can die in peace. What should Wiesenthal have done?

44. As a culminating activity to studying the Holocaust, ask students the following: If you could communicate one thing about the Holocaust to persons living 100 years from now, what would it be and what would be the best way to communicate your message? Have students create a message for future generations. (Optional: gather the messages and place them in a time capsule and bury it in a remembrance ceremony.)

45. Have students do journal writing that they will not have to share with anyone. Some questions for beginning journal writing could include the following: What is your culture or racial or ethnic background? Where are your parents and grandparents from? Have you ever made someone else the victim of prejudice or discrimination? Describe this experience and how it made you feel during and after. What would you like to see happen in the world today so that there would be less hatred, prejudice, and discrimination? What can young people do to make this a reality?
46. Discuss the following with students: What would be different today if the Holocaust had not happened? What would be different today of Germany had won World War II?

47. Have students search newspapers for a week and collect articles about intolerance (e.g., manifestations of racial, ethnic, and religious hatred; discrimination, persecution, oppression; human rights violations). Use these articles to engage students in discussion about “here and now” public attitudes toward intolerance, not just those that were “long ago and far away.”

48. Have students share examples of propaganda that they either read, hear, or see in the media. Then have students brainstorm strategies that could be used to separate fact from opinion or fiction.

49. Discuss the following with students: What are some of your prejudices? Where do they come from? Are you comfortable with your prejudices? Has there ever been a time when you were completely wrong about another person because of a prejudice?

50. Ask students to read a newspaper and look at ads, or listen to a popular music recording or watch the video. Have students examine and look or listen for any prejudicial remarks.

51. Discuss what the school is doing to increase understanding of racial and cultural diversity. Then discuss what students could do to help.

52. Ask students to think about what issues they feel strongly about (e.g., racism, sexism, homelessness) and what small steps could they take toward being a positive force for change.

53. Ask students if they have ever seen classmates making fun of a students who was “different” from them in some way. Discuss the following with students: If you ignored the incident, how might the student have felt? How might the student have felt if you had stepped in and taken his or her side? The last time you heard a racist, sexist, or otherwise biased joke, what did you do or say?

54. Have students discuss whether the First Amendment (guaranteeing freedom of speech) gives public figures like David Duke, a former Louisiana legislator, a former national leader of the Knights of the Ku Klux Klan, and the founder of the National Association for the Advancement of White People the right to tell others his belief that the Holocaust never happened?

55. Ask students to write down as many stereotypes about themselves they can think of and then ask which ones they believe.

56. Have students keep a notebook for two weeks and write down all incidents of hate or prejudice they see or hear firsthand. Then have students discuss their feelings about keeping a notebook and describe their experience in writing.

57. Discuss the reality that racism and intolerance remain major problems in the United States today, despite an abundance of legislation enacted to protect minorities. Have students make a list of five strategies or actions that would build peace in communities.

58. Anti-Semitism in Germany led to terror and mass murders. Have students consider the following question: Do you think that apparently minor forms of racism like slurs and ethnic jokes are therefore dangerous? Explain.

59. The Nazi attempt to annihilate all Jews and their creation of death camps was a unique event in human history. Ask students to consider whether or not they think it could happen again and explain their answers.

60. Give students a copy of Maurice Ogden's poem "The Hangman" to read aloud and/or show the film The Hangman available on loan from such places as the South Carolina Department of Education Audiovisual Library. Write on the board the following quotation from the British philosopher Edmund Burke: "All that is necessary for the forces of evil to win is for good men to do nothing." Ask students what they think the quotation means. Have students suggest reasons why otherwise good people might not act when confronted with behavior they know to be wrong.

61. Ask students to imagine that they were friends or acquaintance of the perpetrators of hate crimes or observers or witnesses to such crimes. Explore what they might have done to stop the hate crime or prevent a reoccurrence of such a crime. Discuss punishment they would recommend for juveniles who commit acts of vandalism as hate crimes.
62. In 1992 newspaper and news magazine accounts of events in the former Yugoslavian republic of Serbia suggested parallels between Serbian treatment of Muslim minorities in that country and Germany's treatment of Jews. Have students research and report on the more recent events. Discuss reasons for the comparisons and compare and contrast the response of the international community to these events in Germany during World War II and more recent events in Yugoslavia.

63. Explore with students some of the difficult choices listed below that a democracy faces in determining the limits of dissent.

- Should a civil rights group be allowed to hold a protest march or rally?

- Should the same rights be given to the Ku Klux Klan, the Aryan Nation, skinheads, and other neo-Nazi groups?

- What are the free speech rights of a former Nazi party member like David Duke, who ran for governor of Louisiana and sought the Republican nomination for President?

64. Encourage students to think of periods in American history when government legislation treated citizens unfairly because of prejudice and discrimination. Compare and contrast the Nuremberg Laws with such laws as the Indian Removal Act during the presidency of Andrew Jackson, the black codes and Jim Crow laws during the period following Reconstruction, and the policy of internment camps for Japanese-Americans during World War II. Focus on the purpose or aims of such laws, the groups affected by the laws, responses of citizens to such laws, legal repercussions at the time the laws were passed or at a later period, and differences in ways citizens in a democracy and authoritarian society can respond to such laws.

65. Examine with students ways people with strong prejudices attempt to make the victims of their bigotry seem less than human (e.g., ethnic and racial jokes and cartoons, segregation, denial of access to economic and educational opportunities). Parallels may be drawn with attitudes and beliefs about African Americans during slavery and depictions of Chinese Americans in cartoons published by California newspapers in the late 1800s.
66. Have students research and report on why such countries as Denmark and Italy were able to save so many of their Jewish citizens.

67. Encourage students to discuss or write about experiences which have made them question stereotypes or misconceptions that they had about groups of people. Ask students to discuss how their attitudes have changed after meeting or getting to know people from other parts of the state or country, people from a different neighborhood, people who dress differently from the way they do, or people from a social group in school different from their own.

68. Have students compare and contrast the rescuers of slaves during the pre-Civil War period in American history and the rescuers of Holocaust victims. Discuss the following: What risks did those Southerners and Northerners take who provided way stations on the Underground Railroad? How might they have been treated by neighbors if discovered? What motivated participants in the Underground Railroad to help slaves escape to freedom?

69. Have students research and report on Holocaust rescuers such as Raoul Wallenberg, a Swedish diplomat who helped save thousands of Hungarian Jews.

70. Have students interview family members, friends, or neighbors who participated in World War II or if no one is available, review letters, diaries, or firsthand documents in books, newspapers, or periodicals and compare the oral histories in this book to the experiences of other survivors and liberators.

71. Have students research and report on the reasons the Nobel Peace Prize was awarded to Elie Wiesel, a Holocaust survivor, or to such people as Bishop Desmond Tutu of South Africa, Daw Aung San Suu Kyi of Myanmar (Burma), and Andrei Sakharov of the former Soviet Union.

72. Have students research and report on the following: recent trials of Nazi war criminals; the trial of Adolf Eichmann or Klaus Barbie; famous Nazi hunters such as Simon Wiesenthal or Beate Klarsfeld; explanations given by Serbian soldiers during the war in the former Yugoslavia for their participation in ethnic cleansing; Communist leader of the state of East Germany Eric Honecker's trial for his shoot-to-kill orders for East Germans attempting to escape across the Berlin Wall; or the defense of Lieutenant William Calley for his behavior at My Lai massacre in Vietnam.

73. Nazi hunter Simon Wiesenthal has identified six conditions that he believes made it possible for the Holocaust to take place. These conditions are as follows:

- the existence of a feeling of overpowering hatred by the people of a nation
- a charismatic leader able to identify the feelings of anger and alienation that exist within the nation and able to convert these feelings into hatred of a target group
- a government bureaucracy that could be taken and used to organize a policy of repression and extermination
- a highly developed state of technology that makes possible methods of mass extermination
- war or economic hard times
  - a target group against whom this hatred could be directed

Discuss with students the following.

How many if any of these conditions exist in Germany or any other country today?

Should governments play a role in ending outbreaks of violence and hate crimes?

What can students do to encourage others to speak out against actions that affect or take away the rights of citizens and minorities?

74. Have students read eye-witness accounts of the bombing of Hiroshima on the Internet at http://www.inicom.com/hibakusha/.

75. See Appendices A, B, and C for other instructional strategies, teaching suggestions, and accommodations/modifications.

Unit 3: Life in America during World War II (1941-1945)

This unit emphasizes how the United States shifted its industry to wartime production and how this shift affected life in America.

Unit Focus

- effects of wartime production on science and technology during administration of President Franklin D. Roosevelt
- social, political, and economic effects of World War II on life in America
- contributions of minorities in military during administration of President Harry S Truman
- effects of war on Japanese Americans
- effects of war on American culture

Suggestions for Enrichment

1. Have students research the weaponry and communication of naval ships of World War II and create visual displays of their research.

2. Have students conduct research into any of the new items discussed in the chapter, or suggest others which became available as a result of the war. This might include medicines, space ships, synthetics, etc. Have students write a paper describing what life would be like without these items.

3. Have students enact life in America during World War II. Have them make a list of items which are valuable today, but are in short supply. Set up a system for rationing the items. Use the system for a week. Find out if a black market develops. Have students discuss their behaviors.

4. Have students bring music from the war period. Have them compare it to modern music. Read the words to the songs. Find out what has caused the change. Consider popular taste, new musical technology, and social change.
5. Have students imagine they were a woman with two children who had taken a factory job during the war and was laid off from work when the men returned from World War II. Ask them to respond in a diary to this situation. Would they be relieved? Angry?

6. Have students prepare a bulletin board that shows gains by minorities and women during World War II.

7. Have students imagine they were Japanese children during World War II and that they and their families had been rounded up and imprisoned in internment camps for more than three years. Have them imagine that today they are 65+ years old with children and grandchildren of their own. Ask students to write a dialogue they would have with their grandchild today about their experience in the internment camp and what lessons they would teach their grandchild about this experience.

8. Ask students to interview a veteran from a war about his or her experiences before, during, and after the war.

9. Ask students to brainstorm as many thoughts, images, and examples that come to mind when they hear the term “nuclear bomb.” Compare lists and discuss the effects of nuclear bombs. Next have students brainstorm possible reasons behind the development and stockpiling of nuclear bombs.

11. Have students make a graph of the signatories of the Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty and chart the number of nations involved on each continent in the signing, and the number of nations that signed each month. A list of signatories can be found on the Internet (http://www.acda.gov/treaties/npt3.txt).
12. Have students write an editorial on nuclear disarmament.

13. Assign students different historical periods to research military technologies developed in different cultures and eras. Ask students to create a poster of these technologies. Hang the posters in chronological order around the classroom.

14. Have students examine the rules of war, (e.g., for use of weapons, tactics, alliances) and how these rules have changed throughout history.

15. Have students research the amount of money spent by different countries on national defense and security. Ask students to graph their findings. Have students compare countries and discuss why the amounts are so varied.

16. Have students graph how the United States government allocates and spends money for defense and national security.

17. Have students choose one of the more than 40 countries located along the Pacific Rim and write an essay on one of the following topics.

- culture: a contemporary look at continuity and change among the people of the country

- education: values, ideals, and current trends in schools and universities

- government: the form, substance, and public policy of the country’s political system

- industry and agriculture: imports and exports along the Pacific Rim

18. Have groups discuss material covered in the unit. Ask each group to choose a person to write down ideas and a second person to report a summary of the discussion to the class.
19. Have students design and illustrate a timeline depicting major time periods or interesting facts covered in the unit.

20. See Appendices A, B, and C for other instructional strategies, teaching suggestions, and accommodations/modifications.

Unit 4: Cold War Conflicts (1945-1960)

This unit emphasizes reasons the United Nations was formed and how increasing tensions between the Soviet Union and the United States led them into a Cold War.

Unit Focus

- reasons for post-war formation of United Nations
- aspects of United Nations
- events leading to beginnings of Cold War during administration of President Harry S Truman
- reasons United States developed anti-Communist alliances

Suggestions for Enrichment

1. Have students make a bulletin board display on the UN and its various agencies and a chart of the UN successes and failures in world conflicts. Ask students to use newspaper clippings that show current activities of the UN.

2. Have students write to the UN to obtain information, materials, or resources that may be available for use in class.

3. Have students draw a cartoon that shows the rivalry between the United States and the Soviet Union during the 1950s, using appropriate symbols for each country.

4. Have students draw cartoons which depict the Cold War, the Iron Curtain, or the Berlin Airlift. Be sure the symbols and the message can be understood.

5. Ask students to prepare for a debate on the following two arguments:
   - The Cold War began because of Soviet aggression followed by American containment policies.
• America was the aggressor; the Soviets reacted to protect their interests.

6. Ask students to assume the role of United States Cold War policy advisor to President Harry S Truman in 1952, and consider the economic, political, ideological, and strategic factors of one of the policy alternatives below. Ask students to write a persuasive essay on this plan to present to the American people.

• military rollback of Soviet territorial gains in Eastern Europe

• continue the containment policy as outlined in George Kennan's 1947 memorandum while continuing military buildup

• unilaterally halt the military buildup and launch a new diplomatic initiative aimed at establishing lasting peace and friendship between the superpowers

7. Ask students to briefly outline how a chief economic advisor to President Truman in 1947 would advise Truman, who was concerned that the winding down of wartime production and spending might send the American economy back into depression.

8. Ask students to research, identify, and explain the major causes of the Red Scare.

9. Have students find news articles about NATO today. Have them prepare a report about the history of this military alliance.

10. Have students prepare a map showing the countries that benefited from the Marshall Plan or the Truman Doctrine or that belonged to NATO or SEATO.

11. Have students research United States foreign aid policy today to find out how much foreign aid the United States provides to a particular country and how the money is spent. Ask students to write a letter to their congressional representative expressing their point of view about the issue.

Unit 4: Cold War Conflicts (1945-1960)
12. Review concepts taught in the unit through a silent Jeopardy activity. Select 10 categories of topics, five for the first round and five for the second round. Have each student divide a piece of paper into the first and second rounds of Jeopardy. Assign point values of 1, 2, 3, 4, 5 for the first round and 2, 4, 6, 8, 10 for the second round. Randomly read questions from any topic and ask students to silently write the answers on the divided paper. After a set time, do a final Jeopardy question and allow students to wager from 0-10 points. Check papers and tally.

13. Ask students to create a diorama or mural depicting a time period or event in history from this unit.

14. Have students research examples of political cartoons from magazines and newspaper. Then have students draw cartoons related to past or current events and give their interpretations of the cartoon.

15. See Appendices A, B, and C for other instructional strategies, teaching suggestions, and accommodations/modifications.

Unit 5: Postwar America (1952-1960)

This unit emphasizes the many foreign problems the United States faced during President Dwight D. Eisenhower's two terms in office, along with fear of communism (or the Red Scare), and the issue of civil rights.

Unit Focus

- United States foreign relations with Korea, Soviet Union, and Indochina during administrations of Presidents Harry S Truman and Dwight D. Eisenhower
- Social, political, and economic events in America during administration of President Eisenhower
- Reasons for growth of education, technology, arts, and literature
- Reasons John F. Kennedy won presidential election over Richard M. Nixon

Suggestions for Enrichment

1. Ask students to interview or invite someone to class who was in the Korean War. Have the guest discuss the conditions under which the war was fought.

2. Have students prepare a map which shows hot spots around the world in this period. Ask student to include Korea, Hungary, Egypt, Israel, Berlin, and Indochina and to use symbols to show the wars in which the United States became involved.

3. Have students research the new Red Scare of the McCarthy era. Prepare a video documentary which shows the actions and effects of this period.

4. Ask students to choose one of the situations below and create a narrative dialogue using specific factual information from the Cold War to respond to the following question: How would the effects of the Cold War and Red Scare affect the responses of people in the situation below?
• a movie producer in 1957 telling one of his writers why a film stressing the United States-Soviet alliance in World War II will not be made

• a movie producer in 1958 explaining to an Academy Award-winning director who had been blacklisted during the McCarthy era why he cannot hire the director to work on a mainstream film

• a high-school teacher in 1960 explaining “duck-and-cover-drills” to students

• a public-school teacher in 1960 holding a class discussion about the Truman Doctrine

• a United States President in 1963 explaining to a nationwide television audience why a small and strategically insignificant Asian country must be saved from Communism

• a candidate for the United States Congress in 1964 explaining to a campaign crowd why his college-day membership in a communistic youth organization during the 1930s was a forgivable mistake.

• a United States soldier in Vietnam in 1965 explaining to a European journalist why his country is involved in a war in Vietnam

5. Ask students to make a persuasive case for or against one of the policies listed below, in the form of a letter to the editor.

• FBI surveillance of all known communists and sympathizers

• exclusion of known Communists and sympathizers from state and federal government jobs

• creation of a Congressional committee to investigate Communist infiltration into political and cultural institutions

• aggressive military action to roll back Communist gains in Europe and Asia
6. Ask students to interview at least five people who lived in the 1950s about inventions and improvements of that era that had an impact on the lifestyle and culture on the American people. Ask students to create questions that cover economic impact, cultural impact, and political impact. After students have gathered the responses, ask them to draw conclusions about the impact of technological change in the 1950s.

7. Ask students to assume the role of a feature writer in 1957 and write a piece detailing how and why the lifestyle and economic situation of a typical local resident has changed in the past 20 years.

8. Collect and record a series of standard songs from the 1950s. Play the tape a few times, giving the artist and the title. Fast forward the tape until students say stop, then play about 10 seconds of the song. Have students state the title and the artist.

9. Invite a member of the NAACP or National Urban League to discuss problems of discrimination in the 1950s.

10. Discuss the Equal Rights Amendment and women in the 1960s. Have students research women in the 1960s (e.g., Gloria Steinem, Gertrude Stein, Betty Friedan, Angela Davis, Janis Joplin, Joan Baez, Tina Turner).

11. Have students create a newspaper on “Notable Women” for National Woman’s History Month.

12. Ask students to evaluate the impact and importance of the 1954 Brown v. Board of Education decision on civil-rights law. Have students write a brief summary of the Brown case identifying the most important issues, outlining arguments from both sides, and explaining the legal and constitutional implications (Fourteenth Amendment, Plessy v. Ferguson).

13. Have students role-play being NAACP (National Association for the Advancement of Colored People) attorneys who were given leverage by the 1954 Brown decision in their efforts to dismantle “Jim Crow” segregation.
14. Discuss how in the 1950s the African-American civil rights movement ultimately made great strides in achieving civil rights and inspired other movements such as the women's rights movement. Discuss the obstacles that have blocked the achievement of full social and economic quality for African-American women and ethnic minorities such as Hispanic Americans, Asian Americans, and Native Americans.

15. Have students interview an attorney; a state legislator; a member of the American Civil Liberties Union; or a person knowledgeable about federal, state, and local laws guaranteeing civil rights enacted between 1954 and 1975. Ask students to prepare a poster depicting the measures.

16. Give each student a copy of Dr. Martin Luther King's "I Have a Dream" speech to refer to as they listen to his speech. Ask students to research the civil rights movement, including Dr. King's leadership role.

Discuss and define rhetorical devices such as simile, metaphor, allusion, alliteration, and anaphora (the repetition of a word or phrase at the beginning of a sentence, verse, or paragraph), used in poetry and prose to make ideas memorable and forceful. Ask students to find two examples each of allusion, alliteration, metaphor, simile, and anaphora (other than the "I have a dream" phrase) and list two possible effects each might have on the listener. Then ask students to write a paragraph about which image he or she found most powerful and appealing and explain why this image had meaning for him or her.

17. Have students write a paragraph summarizing Dr. Martin Luther King's "I Have a Dream" speech in their own words.

18. Ask students to list and discuss some of the specific acts of injustice against African Americans which Dr. Martin Luther King cites in his "I Have a Dream" speech.

19. Dr. Martin Luther King cites "the American dream" as a source for his own dream in his "I Have a Dream" speech. Ask students to write a composite definition of the American dream after discussing that concept with friends and family members.
20. Explain that Dr. Martin Luther King was assassinated for his work in civil rights. A Biblical quotation on the memorial at his graveside reads, "Behold the dreamer. Let us slay him, and he will see what will become of his dream." Ask students to write two paragraphs, one describing in what ways the dream had been fulfilled and one describing what yet remains to be accomplished.

21. Discuss what makes a hero. Have students discuss qualities that make a person a hero as distinct from those that make a leader. Ask students to research the lives of three very different people they think of as heroes and support their contention that these three are heroes.

22. Have students find photos of the United States Presidents and important people of the decade. Have them prepare a bulletin board with the materials collected.

23. Have students get a map of the interstate highway system begun in 1956. Have them report how these highways have influenced life in their city and in the country.

24. Have students find out more about the efforts to desegregate public schools in the South. Show documentary films on these efforts. Discuss the importance of television in bringing changes in attitudes in the country.

25. See Appendices A, B, and C for other instructional strategies, teaching suggestions, and accommodations/modifications.

Unit 7: The Stormy Sixties (1963-1968)

Unit 8: America in Turmoil (1968-1976)
Unit 6: The New Frontier (1960-1963)

This unit emphasizes the foreign problems faced during President John F. Kennedy's three years in office, passage of new civil rights legislation, and President Kennedy's assassination.

Unit Focus

- aspects of conflict with Cuba
- United States foreign policy in Latin America, Europe, and Asia
- social, economic, and technological achievements during administration of President John F. Kennedy
- assassination of President Kennedy

Suggestions for Enrichment

1. Have students interview a person in their parents' or grandparents' generation about his or her reactions to President Kennedy's assassination.

2. Have students choose one of the following events and take on the role of a presidential advisor offering advice at the time of that crisis: the entry of the United States into World War I, the bombing of Hiroshima, or the Cuban Missile Crisis. Have students prepare a short position paper with their advice for the President during the crisis, stating the action they recommend and reasons for their recommendations. Since Presidents are often conscious of how history books will later represent them, suggest to students that one argument could stress how a particular decision might be viewed by future generations. Once position papers are presented, either orally or written, discuss with students if they would give the same advice today. Why or why not? Discuss what advice the students would give the President on an important issue today (e.g., healthcare, welfare reforms, deficit spending, Social Security). Optional activity: Have students write to the White House, 1600 Pennsylvania Ave., Washington, D. C. 20500 and give their advice on an important issue today.
3. Have students prepare a report on the Cuban Missile Crisis and its effect on Florida. Have them interview people who experienced the crisis. Discuss air raid alert practice and bomb shelters.

4. Have students find out about qualifications, training, and the work of Peace Corps volunteers. Have students find out about similar government programs.

5. Have students research the space programs of the United States and Russia, tracing their history and important events. Have students prepare a report or a bulletin board with their findings. If you live near the space center or near a military base, take a field trip to see the facility.

6. Have students draw a map of Indochina showing Laos, Cambodia (Kampuchea), and Vietnam before, during, and after the Vietnam War.

7. Have students find out more about the efforts to desegregate public schools in the South. Show documentary films about the events. Discuss the importance of television in bringing changes in attitudes in the country. Have students gather statistics on racial distribution in your school district.

8. Pick a topic that evokes interest and ask students to find related articles. Discuss and list arguments on both sides of the issue. Draw an imaginary line on the floor, one end representing "for" and the other "against" the issue. Ask students to literally "take a stand" on the line where they feel they belong depending on the strength of their belief. (If all stand on one side, play "devil’s advocate" and stand on the other side.) When everyone is standing, open the debate with spokespersons for each side. The goal is to have students move closer to one point of view. At the end, students may stand anywhere but in the "undecided" middle position. After students are seated, have students write their views on the above issue in an editorial format.

9. Have students research specific historical figures and write their obituaries. Provide an example of an obituary from the newspaper, discussing the information provided and organization of the paragraphs.
10. In a class discussion, choose various topics for a debate.

11. Have students recite a historical speech.

12. Conduct a discussion on heroism. Have students list a set of criteria or standards by which to judge and choose great American heroes. Ask students to choose one hero to research and create an American hero trading card. Design and develop a template for a series of American hero trading cards. Ask students to explain and defend their American heroes. (Optional: Make five copies of each card for students to use for trading.)

13. See Appendices A, B, and C for other instructional strategies, teaching suggestions, and accommodations/modifications.

Unit 6: The New Frontier (1960-1963)
Unit 7: The Stormy Sixties (1963-1968)

This unit emphasizes the foreign and domestic issues of President Lyndon B. Johnson’s administration, the war in Vietnam, and legislation passed to improve life for many Americans.

Unit Focus

- reasons Vice President Lyndon B. Johnson became President
- reasons Warren Commission was created to investigate President John F. Kennedy’s assassination
- social, environmental, and economic legislation begun during administration of President Kennedy and passed during administration of President Lyndon B. Johnson
- reasons President Johnson won presidential election against Barry M. Goldwater
- social, economic, and political issues during President Johnson’s administration
- reasons President Johnson did not run for reelection

Suggestions for Enrichment

1. Have students stage a debate on the desirability of having federal government legislate social welfare reform. Identify welfare reform specific programs. Identify specific programs and discuss the advantages and disadvantages of using legislation to end poverty, discrimination, or bad urban living conditions. Should these problems be left to private individuals to solve, or should the government take control?

2. In the 1960s, Presidents like Kennedy and Johnson believed government could and should fix society’s problems. Some people agreed, others disagreed, and people still argue about it today. Discuss with students what they think and how they think government can help people best. What should the federal government's role be in curing America's social ills? What should be left up to individual state governments? What should be left up to free enterprise, individual effort, and the market forces and why?

3. Ask students to trace the history of the civil rights movement from 1950 to 1970. Find out how and why the movement split into nonviolent and violent groups. Record names of people and organizations who supported each group. Report in writing, orally, or by constructing a bulletin board.

4. Assign a year from the 1960s (1963-1968) for groups of students to investigate the music, cultural attitudes, civil rights, politics, lifestyles, etc., of that time. Have students select a song from their year and discuss its lyrics, write down their thoughts or feelings about the song, and create a record cover or CD cover for the song that reflects its meaning. Have students submit a reflection on their thoughts about the 1960s as a whole.

5. Ask students to research and list three notable African-American men and three notable African-American women who have made contributions in the following areas: abolition, civil rights, literature, sciences, arts and entertainment, sports, business, military, religion, and law. Describe their contributions, including key events in history when appropriate.

Unit 7: The Stormy Sixties (1963-1968)

7. Have students use the Internet to research biographical information and events in which specific African-American historical figures (Rosa Parks, Martin Luther King, Jr., Fannie Lou Hamer, Queen Nzinga, Harriet Tubman, Joseph Cinque, local figures) were involved. Ask students to develop an oral presentation about their individual using imagery. Have students sit in a circle and make their presentations. Afterwards, have students describe how they felt during the imagery presentation.

8. Ask students to write an editorial on why the American public should or should not celebrate Black History Month.

9. Have students discuss the following: What are the three most important priorities of the civil rights movement today and what is the best way to achieve them?
10. Have students conduct a survey of their parents to learn about the baby boom generation. Find out how new technology—especially television—influenced their attitudes and behavior. (Ask about some of the events they remember watching on television in the 1960s.)

11. Have students research the division between the antiwar protesters and those that supported the Vietnam War. Have them interview people who took either side. Ask students to present their findings to the class, and have students decide which position they would have taken in 1968.

12. Show a film about Vietnam. Have students discuss their feelings on the draft, the war, and the war’s destruction of the environment.

13. Invite a Vietnam War veteran to class. Have him tell his views on the war and what it was like for him to return home.

14. Have students research the policy of containment adopted by the Truman administration and followed by subsequent United States Presidents. Have students determine how United States actions in the following situations followed that policy: intervention in Korea, support of Chinese Nationalist forces, and military and economic aid for French in Indochina.

15. Ask students to explain from the points of view of Presidents Eisenhower and Kennedy the importance of the Communist threat in Indochina in the 1950s and 1960s.

16. Have students discuss why the Nixon administration kept the Vietnam War going for four years even after it was clear that we had lost.

17. Have students discuss why the 1960s and 1970s saw a huge upsurge in student activism.

18. Ask students to prepare a written evaluation (not a persuasive essay taking only one side) of the following statement: What made United States involvement in Vietnam a tragedy was persistence in mistaken efforts long past the point where irreversible damage to United States society and institutions had occurred, and not the initial intent to save South Vietnam from Communism.

19. Have students research why the Vietnamese Communists were motivated to fight so fiercely for their cause and why the United States underestimated their determination.

20. Have students research why the United States failed to defeat the Vietcong guerrillas and their North Vietnamese allies and failed to build a stable anti-Communist government in South Vietnam.

21. Ask students to evaluate any movies, videos, or television shows that have dramatized the Vietnam War.

22. Have a “60s” day. Dress in your favorite 1960s style. Ask students to bring the music of Elvis, the Beatles, Bob Dylan, Jimi Hendrix, etc. Discuss political statements found in the lyrics of some of the songs.

23. See Appendices A, B, and C for other instructional strategies, teaching suggestions, and accommodations/modifications.

Unit 7: The Stormy Sixties (1963-1968)
Unit 8: America in Turmoil (1968-1976)

This unit emphasizes the many internal troubles and conflicts of the two terms of President Richard M. Nixon, the end of the Vietnam War, and the easing of Cold War tensions.

Unit Focus

- reasons President Richard M. Nixon was elected President on a platform of law and order
- social, political, economic, and technological events during the two administrations of President Nixon
- major events of Watergate investigation and reasons for resignation of President Nixon
- reasons Gerald R. Ford became President
- foreign problems during administration of President Ford
- reasons Jimmy Carter defeated Ford to become President

Suggestions for Enrichment

1. Invite a lawyer to come to class to discuss any of the first six amendments to the Constitution. Have him or her discuss the status of civil rights based on recent Supreme Court decisions.

2. Discuss what freedom of speech means, what cannot be done in the name of freedom of speech, and what symbolic freedom of speech means. Assign groups to research some of the following cases: Smith v. Coguen (1975); Halter v. Nebraska (1970); Breen v. Kahl (1969); Cohen v. California (1971); United States v. Daniel O'Brien (1968), Tinker v. Des Moines School District (1969); Wooly v. Maynard (1977). Have groups tell what was happening in the year of their case and in the United States that may have influenced the Supreme Court to rule as they did. Next have students describe the court case without telling the outcome. Have students discuss the case and vote for or against the defendant. Then ask the group representing the case to tell the outcome and reasons for the outcome.
3. Discuss the following situations related to symbolic freedom of speech listed below.

- A student has taken an American flag and sewn a piece of it to a jeans jacket. The school has expelled the student for defacing the American flag. Is the student guilty or innocent? Why?

- A religious group wants to ban the sale of all magazines with sexually explicit material. If this group is successful, the magazines would not be sold at all within the city. Does this group have the legal right to do this? Why or why not?

- Tomorrow, the school will expel any student wearing a T-shirt depicting a beer or alcohol theme. Convince the school that they might be in violation of freedom of speech.

4. Make four or five primary source documents on a relevant topic available to each student through the Library of Congress American Memory Web site at http://www.loc.gov/, or have students locate primary source documents related to a historical event and create a visual display or poster of the event. Ask students to summarize what the document says or what the photo shows and respond to the following: What is the historical significance of this document to the United States and to the world as a whole? How does the author’s style reflect the period of history? What does the photo tell about the event and the photographer’s perception of the event? Why should the document or photo be preserved in its original form? What aspect or piece of history might be lost if this document or photo were misplaced or only available through secondary or tertiary accounts?

5. Show the film All the President’s Men. Discuss Watergate. Did President Nixon make the right decision when he resigned rather than face impeachment? Should President Ford have pardoned Nixon, as he did?
6. Have students draw a timeline on poster board of events in the Watergate affair from the break-in discovered on June 17, 1972 through the cover-up, investigation, and the prosecution, ending with the resignation of President Nixon on August 8, 1974 and President Ford's pardon of the former President on September 8, 1974.

7. Play the song "Where Have All the Flowers Gone?" and ask students to describe who or what the flowers are; what the lyrics are asking us to recall; and why the songwriter used flowers as a metaphor.

8. Have students work in groups to describe and analyze the role that one of the following groups or constituencies played in the Watergate crisis: the press, the judiciary, the party organizations, the Congress, and the Special Prosecutor's office. Ask students to use each segment of the timeline created in suggestion number six to describe the ways a particular constituency took part in the events, the constituency's purposes and goals, and the other groups or constituencies with which their constituency were involved. Have student design a flow chart of these interactions, using an array of well-defined geometric shapes to represent the five major constituencies and different kinds of lines (e.g., solid, dotted, dashed) to represent different kinds of interactions among the groups.

Have groups display their charts. Discuss how their charts clarify the following statement: In the exposure, investigation, and prosecution of the Watergate break-in and cover-up, the Congress, the judiciary, and the prosecutors carried out their constitutionally mandated roles and the press performed the vital watchdog function envisioned by the founders of the American republic.

9. Have students collect information from newspapers, magazines, and other printed media over the past 20 years that provide evidence for the following.

- There was a reversal of the trend toward concentrating power and initiative in the presidency.
• The public developed a growing suspicion of government as a corrupt and dishonest entity hostile to the people.

• The press became ever more aggressive in its scrutiny of government officials and the political process.

10. Have students build a model showing the landing of the first successful lunar module. Label the parts of the module and explain how each worked.

11. Have students interview people who remember the first moon walk. Have them record their reactions and write a report on the results of their interview.

12. Ask students to find out more about American dependence on foreign oil. Have them make a map or chart showing how much oil we use, where it comes from, and how much it costs. Discuss energy conservation or conduct a school-wide energy conservation assignment.

13. See Appendices A, B, and C for other instructional strategies, teaching suggestions, and accommodations/modifications.

- social and environmental movements of 1970s
- changes in American values
- social, political, economic, and environmental problems during administration of President James Earl “Jimmy” Carter
- reasons President Carter was defeated by Ronald Reagan in presidential election

Suggestions for Enrichment

1. Obtain a copy of the Equal Rights Amendment (ERA). Divide the class into groups to debate the amendment. Determine whether the class would support or oppose such an amendment today. Have students write a letter to their legislator expressing their opinion.

2. Have students research individual leaders in the women’s movement in the United States and report on how she helped improve the status of women in society (e.g., Lucretia Mott, 1793-1880; Sojourner Truth, 1797-1883; Dorothea Dix, 1802-1887; Margaret Fuller, 1810-1850; Elizabeth Cady Stanton, 1815-1902; Lucy Stone, 1818-1893; Susan B. Anthony, 1820-1906; Harriet Tubman, 1820-1913; Carrie Chapman Catt, 1859-1947; Nellie Ross, 1876-1913; Alice Paul, 1885-1977; Shirley Chisholm, 1924-; Gloria Steinem, 1934-; Margaret Sanger, 1883-1966; Naom Wolf, 1962-).

3. Women have made gains in 20th century industrialized countries. Ask students to list questions that they would ask women in other countries about women’s roles in that society and what predictions they would make about the future of women in that country.
4. Have students make a chart with examples of changes or improvements as these relate to women's changing status in 20th century society in political status, interests, education, legislation, expectations, and in the workplace.

5. Have students locate and compare the Bill of Rights for Modern Women (first delivered in 1967 at the first conference of the National Organization for Women) with the Seneca Falls Declaration of 1848 (Declaration of Sentiments). Ask student to answer the following: What does The Bill of Rights for Modern Women reveal about the nature of the modern women's movement and to what extent have the major goals been realized in the 20th century? Many leaders of the Seneca Falls Convention were also involved with the anti-slavery movement. What connections do you see between abolition and women's suffrage?

6. Have students poll other students about the following topics: interest in attaining leadership positions; interest in running for political office; interest in pursuing traditionally male or female lines of work; interest in traditionally male or female hobbies. Have students analyze differences among male and female responses. Ask students to conduct follow-up interviews to examine reasons behind responses.

7. Have students contact Amnesty International or have a guest from that organization speak to the class on the status of human rights in the world today. Have students write a letter to the President based on their findings.

8. Prepare a map of the Middle East. Use symbols to indicate which countries are rich from oil and which have none. Have students find out living conditions in both groups. Have them defend the position that the wealthy countries should (or should not) have to share with the poor.

9. Have student research the various histories, governments, economies, and cultural forces in Middle Eastern countries that make this area so politically, economically, and socially volatile.
10. Have students research the Iranian Islamic Revolution and the hostage crisis of 1979. Ask them to obtain current opinions about the event.

11. Have students research the 1972 international treaty banning germ warfare: What was the name of the treaty? Who signed the treaty? Who did not? How did Iran ratify this treaty?

12. Have students research the history of post-World War II Iran; the political, economic, social, and cultural changes that have occurred there; and how have these changes affected Iran today.

13. Have students create a timeline of United States involvement in Iraq from March 1991 to present.

14. Have students research events in Iraq in the past 30 years and their effect on the United States: the Arab-Israeli Six-Day War (1967); fighting between the Iraqi government and Kurdish nationalists in northern Iraq (1975); Iraqi invasions of Kuwait and the Gulf War (1990s); the rule of the Shah of Iran; the oil crisis in the 1970s; the Iran hostage crisis.

15. Have students research the Islamic festival of Ramadan and the practices and beliefs connected with this holy time in the Muslim calendar.

16. Have students research what is being done in their community to conserve energy and to preserve the environment. Have them develop a plan to help in these areas. (Documents from the Department of Energy or Environmental Protection Agency may be a good resource.)

17. Have students compile a list of essential resources used in the United States. Have them note whether or not these resources are controlled by other countries and what the United States would do if these resources were cut off or depleted.

18. See Appendices A, B, and C for other instructional strategies, teaching suggestions, and accommodations/modifications.

Unit 10: The Republican Years (1980-1992)

This unit emphasizes the Republican presidential terms of Ronald Reagan and George H. Bush and the social, political, and economic concerns of the 1980s.

Unit Focus

- reasons Ronald Reagan was elected President
- domestic and foreign policy issues during two administrations of President Reagan
- reasons Vice President George H. Bush was elected President
- domestic and foreign policy issues during administration of President Bush
- reasons President Bush was defeated by William Jefferson "Bill" Clinton after one term

Suggestions for Enrichment

1. Have students draw a poster which shows the Star Wars weapon system. Find out about the costs and benefits.

2. Have students refer to news magazines in the reference section. Find articles about the following: the invasion of Grenada, the air strike on Libya, the invasion of Panama, or Desert Storm. Have students write papers stating their position on whether or not the battle was justified and why.

3. Invite a Desert Storm veteran to class to discuss the war.

4. Ask students to conduct research to learn more about deregulation of airlines or banking institutions. How has deregulation affected his or her family’s life?

5. Have students relate the past to the present by tracing main events of the Cold War on a bulletin board. Or have them keep a news journal describing events in Eastern Europe and the new relationship between the United States and the Commonwealth of Independent States.
6. Have students prepare a series of montages on the contributions of presidents since 1945. Give the political party affiliation and their final vote count, if possible.

7. Have students research issues such as AIDS, homelessness, national debt, or some other current topic and present their findings orally or in writing.

8. Ask students to develop a survey about presidential candidates in the next election. Interview people age 18 or over. Have students report their findings to the class.

9. Have student examine popular magazines from the 1920s through the 1980s and analyze and report on advertisements in each magazine. Discuss the following: In each decade, how were women portrayed? Were they in work roles? What kind? What sex role stereotypes were reinforced in the advertising? Were any of the stereotypes challenged? How were cigarettes promoted? What proportion of smokers depicted in the ads were women? What age did the smokers appear to be? What appeals did the advertiser employ in their ads—status; security, sex appeal, patriotism, celebrity testimonials? How were minorities depicted in the advertisements? How many? In what roles? For what products?

10. Ask students to analyze and critique news articles and media news using comparison and contrast.

11. Have students use the Ecola site on the Internet (http://www.ecola.com/) to link to English-language newspapers worldwide and compare newspaper coverage of the same current event in different cities, states, and/or countries.

12. Have students answer who, what, where, when, why, and how concerning an article from a current newspaper. Then have students use their answers to rewrite the article from another viewpoint. Challenge students to find follow-up articles.

13. Have one student stand up and start a debate or discussion. The student can outline an opinion or write it on the board. Then select the next person to speak or write until all students have had a chance.
14. Have students examine a current political cartoon to assess the meaning of the cartoon. Who is being lampooned? What point is it making? Is it funny? Why or why not? Then have students critique political cartoons from another era.

15. Have students create a detailed timeline of the history of Palestine. Assign specific time periods and have students create posters. Display posters chronologically.

16. Have students research the role of the United States in peace talks between Israel and Palestine, why and how the United States has intervened, and what the results have been of these peace talks.

17. Ask students to discuss what they think Martin Luther King, Jr. would think about the tactics used by both Palestinians and Israelis.

18. Have students write a biography about a world leader who has been instrumental in relations between Arabs and Israelis in the past or present.

19. Have students research the roots of the Arabic and Hebrew languages and compare the similarities between the two.

20. Have students research the cultural histories of the Palestinian and Israeli peoples. What fundamental differences exist between those cultures? What similarities exist between the two cultures?

21. Have students locate Web sites of organizations that are sympathetic to either Israeli or Arab and Palestinian views. Ask students to detail how these Web sites present historical information differently.

22. Have students work in groups to create a government brochure on a specific Middle Eastern area for United States diplomats. The brochure should cover political systems: current leaders, military; educational levels: languages; gross national product (GNP): economics, trading partners; geography: transportation; brief history: focus in country; religion: customs, cultural patterns; women’s roles; social and political conditions today; foreign policy: focus on how the present government gets along with the United States; health conditions and issues.
23. Organize the class into groups to take on the roles of representatives from Israel, Jordan, and Syria. Suggest that the most valuable resource in the Middle East in the coming years may be water. Have students use the Internet and other resources to record the following information about each country's: highlands, plains, bodies of fresh water, sources of largest rivers, climate, and rainfall patterns.

As a group, have students discuss sources of water in the region; how physical geography limits water resources; and why political geography makes regional cooperation over water necessary. Ask students to record information about each country's population, including population doubling time at current rate and population percent in rural and urban areas; gross domestic product (GDP); and annual withdrawal of water. Have students respond to questions concerning each country's primary uses of water; reasons for population growth; why each country is a heavy or light user of water; and how a decrease in water supplies might affect each country's standard of living.

Now have students outline the main reason each country needs water and why the country is at odds with its neighbors. Then as a group discuss possible ways to resolve water problems and formulate a plan. Extend the method of investigation to explore water-saving techniques being developed in the Middle East, including drip irrigation and the recycling of treated wastewater for irrigation; and water problems shared by Turkey, Syria, and Iraq.

24. Have students generate a list of categories universal to all cultures. Ask students to create a chart from the list. Ask students to use the Internet and other sources to gather and record information on the chart about countries in the Middle East. Have students respond to the following questions: Which universals seem to have the greatest impact on the conflict of the Middle East? Allow students to present the information. Then ask students to establish criteria to address the most challenging problems facing the countries of the Middle East and create a potential solution to the enduring conflict in the region.
25. Have student research historical figures or contemporary political and/or social leaders in one or more of the Central American countries and create a multimedia presentation.

26. Using a newsroom format, have students create a current-event presentation on one or more countries in Central America.

27. Discuss historical events shaping Russia's current economic picture (e.g., the collapse of the communist-based Soviet republic, the rapid conversion to a capitalistic, free market-based economy). Have students speculate about the future of the Russian economy.

28. On a world map, have students identify the countries that border Russia or Iran. Ask students to investigate the relationships between these bordering countries.

29. See Appendices A, B, and C for other instructional strategies, teaching suggestions, and accommodations/modifications.

Unit 11: Changes and Challenges in Today's World (1992-Present)

This unit emphasizes the two terms of President William Jefferson "Bill" Clinton and the concerns of Americans for the 21st century.

Unit Focus

- reasons William Jefferson "Bill" Clinton became first Democratic President in 12 years
- economy of 1990s
- social, political, and economic issues during two administrations of President Clinton
- causes for impeachment trial
- concerns about programs for persons 65 or over
- opportunities and concerns at the end of the century

Suggestions for Enrichment

1. Have students find articles about the invasion of Bosnia or the air strikes in Yugoslavia. Ask students to write a paper stating his or her position on whether or not the conflict was justified and why.

2. Have students research and report briefly on different current events. Have someone start the discussion with his or her current event presentation. The second student to speak must repeat the main idea or ideas from the previous presentation and get an "okay" from that presenter to indicate the message was received and interpreted accurately. The second student then presents his or her current event presentation. The third student continues the process so each speaker will interpret the message of the previous presenter before delivering his or her presentation.

3. Have students create a family tree, and include great great-grandparents if possible. Ask students to parallel a timeline of presidential candidates to the timeline of family members. Have students continue the analysis with other noteworthy individuals, discoveries, inventions, and events.

4. Have students select one individual from his or her family tree and write a diary entry to reflect what impact well known individuals, discoveries, inventions, and events possibly had on that person's life. (If possible, a relative may be interviewed to expand the activity. As an extension, a younger child—maybe a third or fourth grader—can be interviewed to gain perspective on the changing perception of time as a person lives longer.)

5. Have students alter their own timeline by "sliding" their birth date backward or forward 10 years. Ask students to predict changes in clothing styles, activities, career goals, etc. Have students imagine a possible marriage and family of his or her own. Next, have students predict events, discoveries, and inventions that might be experienced during their lifetime. (The activity may be projected to predict the year the student will become a grandparent and predict what events might be occurring at that time.)

6. Ask students to research events that occurred during their birth year (local, state, national, or international) and write an editorial about one of the events.

7. Ask students to find a political cartoon on an issue from their birth year and describe it to the class.

8. Have students make a drawing or poster of events in their birth year and/or make a tape of music that was popular during that year.

9. Have students prepare specific questions to interview an adult concerning his or her birth year and record the answer on paper or in a tape recorder.

10. Discuss the following: If you could communicate one thing we have studied to persons living 100 years from now, what would that be? What would be the best method of communication? Have students create these messages to future generations.
11. Have students role-play a panel discussion featuring the last five Presidents of the United States being interviewed by a White House correspondent. First assign groups a president and research 10 issues or programs important to that President and how that President planned to balance the military budget and the national debt. Have class members brainstorm questions and then have groups prepare answers recapping their President's foreign and domestic policies.

12. Have civic officials, legislators, and other public service representatives visit and share information about their professional background, education, changes their lives might have taken, professional accomplishments, and personal goals.

13. Have students write a “help wanted” ad with a job description for the man or woman who will be our next President.

14. Ask students to identify their position on a controversial issue. Have groups develop an argument to support an opinion opposite to their position and present the argument to the class.

15. Ask students to read a news article and list 10 sentences from it. Have students exchange lists and write next to each statement whether they think it is a fact or an opinion. Then have students choose any three of the statements and explain their reasonings.

16. Invite a guest speaker from a special interest group to talk to your class about the group's objectives. Have the speaker explain how the group presents its issues to government and if they have met with victory or defeat.

17. Ask students to recall some of the biggest local, national, and world events of the year. Which stories affected them directly, indirectly, or not at all?

18. Present students with the following value examination matrix for analyzing perspectives in editorials (or newscasts). Have students record statements or concepts they strongly support (or oppose) and assign a value, plus or minus, reflecting their opinion. Next have students record their reasoning or logic behind their assigned value to point out that there is usually a system of logic or reasoning underlying their values.

Unit 11: Changes and Challenges in Today's World (1992-Present)
19. Present students with the following conflict clarification matrix for analyzing values and perspectives relative to particular topics in editorials (or newscasts). Have students record a statement they support (or oppose) in the first row of the matrix and assign a value, plus or minus, reflecting their opinion of it beside the “Assigned Value” in the second row. In the third row, have students identify the logic behind their assigned value. In the fourth row, have students identify an opposing value for the concept or statement. In the fifth row, ask students to describe the logic behind the opposing value. In the last row, have students describe a conclusion or awareness they have come to and identify some current events for which this process might be useful.

20. Discuss leadership and brainstorm with the class what qualities a leader should posses. Have students name some great leaders. Next, have students compare the qualities needed as a national leader, such as a President, to those needed by a leader in some other field, such as fashion, the arts, religion, or sports. Have students discuss what makes a President a great leader and list those qualities that define leadership in a President. Assign students a President to research their leadership qualities, background, and experience before they became President. Have them consider why they may have been elected even though they had not shown great qualities of leadership.

21. Discuss the problems associated with applying United States laws to a hypothetical “moon colony.” Discuss how the moon colonists might be compared with the early American colonists. Discuss potential problems and suggestions for solutions.

22. Present students with the following decision-making matrix to analyze a teacher-generated “decision question” with choices or alternative to be considered. Have students rank or weight the criteria in the first column using a three-point numeric ranking or weighting system, as follows.

| 3  | = very important |
| 2  | = somewhat important |
| 1  | = not very important |

Next, ask students to determine the degree to which each alternative possesses each of the criteria, as follows.

| 2  | = somewhat |
| 1  | = a little |
| 0  | = not at all |

Finally, have students calculate the quality points each alternative has by multiplying the criterion weights by the alternative weights. (In other words, multiply the number in each cell by the number at the beginning of each row and then enter that product in each cell.) Tally the quality points. (Explain to students that after seeing the results of the matrix process, they may legitimately change the weights they are assigned.) Have students make a decision based on their quantification and explain the reasoning behind their decision.
Decision-Making Matrix

23. Have students create a mobile based on inventions or technology used from the 1940s or 1950s (e.g., the transistor, rockets, computer, television, heart-lung machine used in surgery) to the 2000s. Ask students to build the mobile, with each level representing one of the following:

- a new development in the chosen technology
- a new use of the chosen technology
- a social change that resulted from the chosen technology

Have students present the mobile, explaining how technology has changed over time and how it has affected society.

24. Have students to develop a list of major problems facing American government and society today.

25. Ask students to select a major problem of interest and identify factors related to the problem. Next form a tentative hypothesis as to which factors may have been the cause or causes of the problem. Then devise a historical study drawn from the presidencies from the period 1975-1993 (Ford through Bush) to test the hypothesis.

26. Have students debate or write a persuasive essay about the most significant event or discovery in a given area from last year.

27. Discuss what people in developed countries should do, if anything, to assist people in less developed countries. Do developed countries have a responsibility to help less developed countries? Why or why not?

28. Have students research and report on the policies and positions of the United States government toward China over the past 10 years with emphasis on trade and issues of human rights.

29. Have students investigate past examples of uses of biological warfare. Discuss these events and compare details given about the person or persons responsible, the physical effects on individual, and the actions taken against those found responsible.
30. Ask students to write a persuasive essay supporting or condemning the development of biological weapons.

31. Have students research and discuss weapon treaties that the United States has refused to sign.

32. Since many world conflicts have been marked by terrorist incidents when peace negotiations are conducted, have students discuss if representatives of suspected terrorist groups should be included or excluded.

33. Ask students to choose a President and create a mini-biography of his life. (See Appendix A in the student book. You could choose to limit the choices to the first 16 Presidents and have students include a map of the United States during his term.) Have students include the following: his life before presidency; the election year; highlights and issues faced as president; and a timeline.

34. Have students research, discuss, and make an educated guess about outcome of current issues (e.g., peace negotiations, political issues, election results, passage of specific bills in Congress). Record answers and check results.

35. Have students bring in political cartoons and offer interpretations of their meanings.

36. Have students examine a caricature of a popular figure and compare it with a photograph of that person to see what is being exaggerated. Discuss whether the caricature is positive or negative.

37. Give students a political cartoon without a caption and ask them to write one.

38. Have students create a flow chart to analyze a situation.

39. Ask students to identify their position on a controversial issue. Have groups develop an argument to support an opinion contrary to their own and present the argument to class.
40. Have students brainstorm ways to make their opinions heard (e.g., e-mail politicians, write local or national newspapers or journals, inform friends about issues, organize and take part in projects, make posters, speak to groups, go to town meetings, publish a Web page). Ask students to choose two activities to take part in. Have students write a brief paragraph on the activities they choose and the outcome of their actions.

41. Set up an inner circle and an outer circle of chairs. Have students in the inner circle debate an issue for 10 minutes. Then have students in the outer circle respond to what they have heard.

42. Have groups discuss a topic from the unit. Ask each group to choose a recorder to write down ideas and a second person to summarize the discussion to the class.

43. See Appendices A, B, and C for other instructional strategies, teaching suggestions, and accommodations/modifications.
Unit Assessment

Write True if the statement is correct. Write False if the statement is not correct.

1. Clinton was the third President to be impeached.

Appendices
Instructional Strategies

Classrooms include a diverse population of students. The educator’s challenge is to structure the learning environment and instructional material so that each student can benefit from his or her unique strengths. Instructional strategies adapted from the Florida Curriculum Frameworks are provided on the following pages as examples that you might use, adapt, and refine to best meet the needs of your students and instructional plans.

Cooperative Learning Strategies—to promote individual responsibility and positive group interdependence for a given task.

Jigsawing: each student becomes an “expert” on a topic and shares his or her knowledge so eventually all group members know the content.

Divide students into groups and assign each group member a numbered section or a part of the material being studied. Have each student meet with the students from the other groups who have the same number. Next, have these new groups study the material and plan how to teach the material to members of their original groups. Then have students return to their original groups and teach their area of expertise to the other group members.

Corners: each student learns about a topic and shares that learning with the class (similar to jigsawing).

Assign small groups of students to different corners of the room to examine and discuss particular topics from various points of view. Have corner teams discuss conclusions, determine the best way to present their findings to the class, and practice their presentation.

Think, Pair, and Share: students develop their own ideas and build on the ideas of other learners.

Have students reflect on a topic and then pair up to discuss, review, and revise their ideas. Then have the students share their ideas with the class.

Debate: students participate in organized presentations of various viewpoints.

Have students form teams to research and develop their viewpoints on a particular topic or issue. Provide structure in which students can articulate their viewpoints.
Brainstorming—to elicit ideas from a group.

Have students contribute ideas about a topic. Accept all contributions without initial comment. After a list of ideas is finalized, have students categorize, prioritize, and defend their contributions.

Free Writing—to express ideas in writing.

Allow students to reflect on a topic, then have them respond in writing to a prompt, a quotation, or a question. It is important that they keep writing whatever comes to mind. They should not self-edit as they write.

K–W–L (Know–Want to Know–Learned)—to provide structure for students to recall what they know about a topic, deciding what they want to know, and then after an activity, list what they have learned and what they still want or need to learn.

Before engaging in an activity, list on the board under the heading “What We Know” all the information students know or think they know about a topic. Then list all the information the students want to know about a topic under, “What We Want to Know.” As students work, ask them to keep in mind the information under the last list. After completing the activity, have students confirm the accuracy of what was listed and identify what they learned, contrasting it with what they wanted to know.

Learning Log—to follow-up K–W–L with structured writing.

During different stages of a learning process, have students respond in written form under three columns:

“What I Think”
“What I Learned”
“How My Thinking Has Changed”
Interviews—to gather information and report.

Have students prepare a set of questions in interview format. After conducting the interview, have students present their findings to the class.

Dialogue Journals—to provide a way to hold private conversations with the teacher or share ideas and receive feedback through writing (this activity can be conducted by e-mail).

Have students write on topics on a regular basis. Respond in conversational writing to their writings with advice, comments, and observations.

Continuums—to indicate the relationships among words or phrases.

Using a selected topic, have students place words or phrases on the continuum to indicate a relationship or degree.

Mini-Museums—to create a focal point.

Have students work in groups to create exhibits that represent, for example, the setting of a novel.

Models—to represent a concept in simplified form.

Have students create a product, like a model of a city, or a representation of an abstract idea, like a flow chart of governmental procedures.
Reflective Thinking—to reflect on what was learned after a lesson.

Have students write in their journals about a concept or skill they have learned, comment on the learning process, note questions they still have, and describe their interest in further exploration of the concept or skill. Or have students fill out a questionnaire addressing such questions as: Why did you study this? Can you relate it to real life?

Problem Solving—to apply knowledge to solve problems.

Have students determine a problem, define it, ask a question about it, and then identify possible solutions to research. Have them choose a solution and test it. Finally, have students determine if the problem has been solved.

Predict, Observe, Explain—to predict what will happen in a given situation when a change is made.

Ask students to predict what will happen in a given situation when some change is made. Have students observe what happens when the change is made and discuss the differences between their predictions and the results.

Literature, History, and Storytelling—to bring history to life through the eyes of a historian, storyteller, or author, revealing the social context of a particular period in history.

Have students locate books, brochures, and tapes relevant to a specific period in history. Assign students to prepare reports on the life and times of famous people during specific periods of history. Ask students to write their own observations and insights afterwards.
Graphic Organizers—to transfer abstract concepts and processes into visual representations.

Consequence Diagram/Decision Trees: illustrates real or possible outcomes of different actions.

Have students visually depict outcomes for a given problem by charting various decisions and their possible consequences.

Flowchart: depicts a sequence of events, actions, roles, or decisions.

Have students structure a sequential flow of events, actions, roles, or decisions graphically on paper.
Venn Diagram: creates a visual analysis of the similarities and differences among, for example, two concepts, objects, events, and people.

Have students use two overlapping circles to list unique characteristics of two items or concepts (one in the left part of the circle and one in the right); in the middle have them list shared characteristics.

Webbing: provides a picture of how words or phrases connect to a topic.

Have students list topics and build a weblike structure of words and phrases.
Concept Mapping: shows relationships among concepts.

Have students select a main idea and identify a set of concepts associated with the main idea. Next, have students rank the concepts in related groups from the most general to most specific. Then have students link related concepts with verbs or short phrases.

Portfolio—to capture the extent of students' learning within the context of the instruction.

Elements of a portfolio can be stored in a variety of ways; for example, they can be photographed, scanned into a computer, or videotaped. Possible elements of a portfolio could include the following selected student products:

Appendix A
Learning Cycle—to engage in exploratory investigations, construct meanings from findings, propose tentative explanations and solutions, and relate concepts to our lives.

Have students explore a concept, behavior, or skill with a hands-on experience and then explain their exploration. Through discussion, have students expand the concept or behavior by applying it to other situations.

Field Experience—to use the community as a laboratory for observation, study, and participation.

Before the visit, plan and structure the field experience with the students. Engage in follow-up activities after the trip.
Teaching Suggestions

The standards and benchmarks of the Sunshine State Standards are the heart of the curriculum frameworks and reflect Florida’s efforts to reform and enhance education. The following pages provide samples of ways in which students could demonstrate achievement of specific benchmarks through the study of American History.

Time, Continuity, and Change

1. Have small groups of students research the way in which the Roman Empire was viewed during a particular time period (e.g., the Italian Renaissance and 18th-century America) and report their findings in a presentation. (SS.A.1.4.1.a)

2. Have students analyze the failure of institutions over time to adequately confront serious problems resulting from the relocation of peoples. (SS.A.1.4.2.a)

3. Have students analyze a major global trend, such as immigration, by identifying connections among individuals, ideas, and events within and across a region or a span of time. (SS.A.1.4.2.b)

4. Have students examine foreign newspapers or magazines (in translation) that report on the same event. (SS.A.1.4.3.a)

5. Have students research and report on alternative systems of recording time (e.g., Egyptian, Indian, Mayan, Muslim, and Jewish), and the astronomical systems upon which they are based (e.g., solar, lunar, or semilunar). Have students provide an example for comparison, such as how the same astronomical event might have been recorded in each system. (SS.A.1.4.4.a)

6. Have students compare the economic and cultural characteristics of Native American tribes and the motives and strategies of the explorers and settlers. (SS.A.4.4.1.a)

7. Have small groups of students discuss the impact of European settlement on different native American tribes and the legacies of contact, cooperation, and conflict from that period and present their findings in a report to the class. (SS.A.4.4.1.b)
8. Have students prepare material for a documentary about the interaction of Native American tribes and European explorers and settlers prior to 1880. In order to present a comprehensive and unbiased account, have the students analyze the perspectives of European explorers, European settlers, and various Native American tribes. Have students use a variety of primary and secondary sources to address the following questions: How did each group view the interaction? How did each group’s way of life change? Have students identify areas in which the different groups disagreed about what took place and explain how each group influenced the other. (SS.A.4.4.1.c)

9. Have students choose a group of immigrants to the colonies and research the problems they encountered once they arrived in the colonies. Have students write a paper that discusses how this group overcame the problems faced and how or if it evolved to the present day. (SS.A.4.4.2.a)

10. Have small groups of students discuss changes in British polices concerning the colonies and the debate over separation. (SS.A.4.4.3.a)

11. Have students write a paper that discusses the Declaration of Independence and its relevance in past and present society. (SS.A.4.4.3.b)

12. Have small groups of students plan a historical-society exhibit that highlights the causes of the American Revolution. Have students analyze different primary and secondary sources to portray the perspectives of a variety of people who were involved in this event, including military leaders, soldiers, and women, in order to present a well-rounded exhibit. (SS.A.4.4.3.c)

13. Have students compare and contrast the Articles of Confederation with a selected state constitution. Next, have students make an oral presentation in which they discuss how this state constitution has evolved. (SS.A.4.4.4.a)

14. Have students describe the issues and policies affecting relations among existing and future states, including the Northwest Ordinance. (SS.A.4.4.4.b)
15. Have students write a research paper in which they analyze the Constitutional Convention, including the leadership of James Madison and George Washington; the struggle for ratification, the Federalist Papers and the arguments of the Anti-Federalists; and the addition of the Bill of Rights. (SS.A.4.4.4.c)

16. Have small groups of students prepare an oral presentation in which they compare the early national government under the Constitution to the present government and also present their interpretations of the Constitution on a significant issue such as states rights or judicial review. Have students identify the issues that define each period and trace how the Constitution has evolved since that time. (SS.A.4.4.5.a)

17. Have students examine and explain major domestic and foreign issues during the administrations of the first Presidents including the development of political parties, the War of 1812 and the Monroe Doctrine, and the Louisiana Purchase and the acquisition of Florida. (SS.A.4.4.5.b)

18. Have students assume the role of Supreme Court Justices in discussing decisions that affected the interpretation of the Constitution, including Marbury v. Madison and McCulloch v. Maryland. (SS.A.4.4.5.c)

19. Have students work in small groups and discuss events leading to the Civil War such as slavery, States’ Rights Doctrine, tariffs and trade, the settlement of the West, and succession. Have each group make a presentation to the class. (SS.A.4.4.6.b)

20. Have students write a research paper in which they construct an argument for why the South lost the Civil War and why the North won. Have students use a variety of resource materials to back up this argument. (SS.A.4.4.7.b)

21. Have students write a research paper that discusses the types of problems and obstacles freed slaves faced during Reconstruction and how or if they overcame those obstacles. (SS.A.4.4.7.c)
22. Have students choose one of the following economic, political, and/or cultural effects of the Industrial Revolution listed below and present an oral report that describes how it changed life around the turn of the century and how it continues to affect life in our society now. (SS.A.5.4.1.a)

- new inventions and industrial production methods
- new technologies in transportation and communication
- incentives for capitalism and free enterprise
- the impact of immigration on the labor supply and the movement to organize workers
- government policies affecting trade, monopolies, taxation, and the money supply
- expansion of international markets
- the impact of industrialism, urbanization, and immigration on American society

23. Have students choose and research a specific immigrant group and prepare an oral presentation on the contributions and impacts this group has had on American society since 1880. (SS.A.5.4.2.a)

24. Have students describe ethnic conflict and discrimination as it has affected a particular immigrant group. (SS.A.5.4.2.b)

25. Have students explain the reasons for the end of the Ottoman Empire and describe the creation of new states in the Middle East. (SS.A.5.4.3.a)

26. Have students explain reasons for the declining role of Great Britain and the expanding role of the United States in world affairs. (SS.A.5.4.3.b)
27. Have students select one of the topics listed below and present an oral report in which they explain the topic's significance to society in the 1920s and 1930s and present society. (SS.A.5.4.4.a)

- music, dance, and entertainment
- the Harlem Renaissance
- the automobile
- prohibition, speakeasies, and bootlegging
- women's suffrage
- racial tensions and labor strife
- urban and rural electrification

28. Have students identify key factors that contributed to the 1929 Stock Market Crash and the Great Depression and explain how these factors affected the economy leading up to the Depression. (SS.A.5.4.4.b)

29. Have students write an essay describing how the Depression affected a family (real or imaginary) in a specific part of the United States and explaining how specific government policies designed to counteract the effects of the Depression impacted this family. (SS.A.5.4.4.c)

30. Have students write a research paper about the impact of the Great Depression on the state of Florida (e.g. in terms of social, political, economic, environmental, or cultural impacts), present their findings in an oral presentation, and field questions from the class. (SS.A.5.4.4.d)

31. Have students research and write a report in which they construct an argument regarding the significance of a topic to World War II and society in the United States during that time. Have the students use a variety of sources to support their findings. Some suggested research topics are listed below. (SS.A.5.4.5.a)

- the rise and aggression of totalitarian regimes in Germany, Italy, and Japan
- the role of the Soviet Union
• appeasement, isolationism, and the war debates in Europe and the United States

• the impact of mobilization for war at home and abroad

• major battles, military turning points, and key strategic decisions

• the Holocaust and its impact

• the reshaping of the role of the United States in world affairs

32. Have students construct an argument that supports or critiques the decision to use the atomic bomb on Hiroshima at the close of World War II. Have students identify the criteria upon which to base the argument, gather information from a variety of sources to support the ideas, and address a variety of different perspectives on this event. (SS.A.5.4.5.b)

33. Have students research the impact of World War II on the state of Florida and trace the legacy of the war to the present, including the significance of the Cold War and the space age, or the tourist industry. Next, have students make a presentation to the class, using a variety of visual aids, such as photographs, to illustrate how the war affected Florida. (SS.A.5.4.5.c)

34. Have students use the following topics listed below to debate the effectiveness of United States foreign policy since World War II. (SS.A.5.4.6.a)

• the origins of both foreign and domestic consequences of the Cold War

• Communist containment policies in Europe, Latin America, and Asia

• the strategic and economic factors in Middle East Policies

• political and economic relationships with South Africa and other African nations

• the collapse of communism and the end of the Cold War
35. Have students analyze and describe Brown v. Board of Education, reapportionment cases, and voting rights legislation, and the influence these have had on political participation and representation and affirmative action. (SS.A.5.4.7.a)

36. Have students examine and describe civil rights demonstrations and related activities leading to desegregation of public accommodations, transportation, housing, and workplaces. (SS.A.5.4.7.b)

37. Have students compare conservative and liberal economic strategies. (SS.A.5.4.8.a)

38. Have students explain current patterns in Supreme Court decisions and evaluate the impact of these patterns. (SS.A.5.4.8.b)

39. Have students compare the positions of major and minor political parties and interest groups on major issues. (SS.A.5.4.8.c)

People, Places, and Environment

1. Have students develop maps to illustrate how population density varies in relationship to resources and types of land use. (SS.B.1.4.1.a)

2. Have students develop maps, tables, and charts to depict the geographic implications of current world events. (SS.B.1.4.1.b)

3. Have small groups of students discuss how maps developed by the media, business, government, industry, and the military might differ in their depictions of how a recently closed military installation could be used for civilian purposes. (SS.B.1.4.2.a)

4. Have students prepare maps that indicate the approximate locations of different political cultures in the United States in order to predict voting patterns. (SS.B.1.4.3.a)

5. Have students select appropriate maps to analyze world patterns of the diffusion of contagious diseases and compare these maps to their own mental maps of these patterns. (SS.B.1.4.3.b)
6. Have students gather and present examples of how language, ethnic heritage, religion, political philosophies, social and economic systems, and shared history contribute to unity and disunity in regions. (SS.B.1.4.4.a)

7. Have students find examples of how various technologies have been used to reinforce nationalistic or ethnic elitism, cultural separateness and/or independence in different places in the world and discuss with others how these factors have led to the division of geographic regions. (SS.B.1.4.4.b)

8. Have students develop and conduct a survey to illustrate how differences in life experiences, age, and gender influence people's housing preferences or their view of public transportation in a city and post the results. (SS.B.1.4.5.a)

9. Have students examine the characteristics of regions that have led to regional labels and how they have changed over time and present their findings to the class. (SS.B.2.4.1.a)

10. Have students write a short report on how regional landscapes reflect the cultural characteristics of their inhabitants as well as historical events. (SS.B.2.4.1.b)

11. Have students participate in a group discussion about how technological advances have led to increasing interaction among regions. (SS.B.2.4.1.c)

12. Have pairs of students examine how social, economic, political, and environmental factors have influenced migration and cultural interaction in a selected area and organize the information into a written report including illustrative charts, graphs, or tables where appropriate. (SS.B.2.4.2.a)

13. Have students use world maps to examine how control of various areas on Earth has affected free-trade agreements. (SS.B.2.4.3.a)

14. Have students participate in a debate regarding how human activities have or have not led to tropical soil degradation, habitat destruction, air pollution, or global warming. (SS.B.2.4.4.a)
15. Have students investigate how people who live in naturally hazardous regions use technology and other adaptation techniques to thrive in their environments and compare their findings with those of other students. (SS.B.2.4.5.a)

16. Have students conduct research to investigate the abundance of fur, fish, timber, and gold in Siberia, Alaska, and California and the settlement of these areas by the Russians and organize the information into a written report. (SS.B.2.4.6.a)

17. Have pairs of students research some of the consequences of mining the rutile sands along the coast of eastern Australia near the Great Barrier Reef and develop some possible solutions to this problem. (SS.B.2.4.7.a)

18. Have small groups of students discuss some of the consequences of cutting the rain forests in Indonesia in response to a demand for lumber in foreign markets and brainstorm possible solutions to this problem. (SS.B.2.4.7.b)

Government and the Citizen

1. Have students outline the development of political parties in the United States and evaluate their role in resolving or contributing to conflict between majority and minority groups. (SS.C.1.4.4.a)

2. Have students evaluate the extent to which popular media influence, and are influenced by, the political system. (SS.C.1.4.4.b)

3. Have students develop generalizations about the sources of political power in the community, state, and nation. (SS.C.2.4.3.a)

4. Have students use generalizations about sources of political power to explain an issue at each of the levels of government. (SS.C.2.4.3.b)
Production, Distribution, and Consumption

Using the following scale—A = very positive; B = somewhat positive; C = neutral; D = somewhat negative; E = very negative—have students evaluate the effect the following policy changes would have on the economy of Florida and on the economy of Kentucky.

- federal government greatly increases military spending
- federal government decreases aid to schools in large urban areas
- federal government stops tobacco exports to another country
- federal government loosens restrictions on illegal immigrant workers

Have students explain their reasoning for the rating chosen and describe the effects of these policy changes on the economy of Florida and Kentucky. (SS.D.2.4.3.a)
Accommodations/Modifications for Students

The following accommodations/modifications may be necessary for students with disabilities and other students with diverse learning needs to be successful in school and any other setting. Specific strategies may be incorporated into each student’s individual educational plan (IEP) or 504 plan, or academic improvement plan (AIP) as deemed appropriate.

Environmental Strategies

Provide preferential seating. Seat student near someone who will be helpful and understanding.
Assign a peer tutor to review information or explain again.
Build rapport with student; schedule regular times to talk.
Reduce classroom distractions.
Increase distance between desks.
Allow student to take frequent breaks for relaxation and small talk, if needed.
Accept and treat the student as a regular member of the class. Do not point out that the student is an ESE student.
Remember that student may need to leave class to attend the ESE support lab.
Additional accommodations may be needed.

Organizational Strategies

Help student use an assignment sheet, notebook, or monthly calendar.
Allow student additional time to complete tasks and take tests.
Help student organize notebook or folder.
Help student set timelines for completion of long assignments.
Help student set time limits for assignment completion.
Ask questions that will help student focus on important information.
Highlight the main concepts in the book.
Ask student to repeat directions given.
Ask parents to structure study time. Give parents information about long-term assignments.
Provide information to ESE teachers and parents concerning assignments, due dates, and test dates.
Allow student to have an extra set of books at home and in the ESE classroom.
Additional accommodations may be needed.
Motivational Strategies

Encourage student to ask for assistance when needed.
Be aware of possibly frustrating situations.
Reinforce appropriate participation in your class.
Use nonverbal communication to reinforce appropriate behavior.
Ignore nondisruptive inappropriate behavior as much as possible.
Allow physical movement (distributing materials, running errands, etc.).
Develop and maintain a regular school-to-home communication system.
Encourage development and sharing of special interests.
Capitalize on student's strengths.
Provide opportunities for success in a supportive atmosphere.
Assign student to leadership roles in class or assignments.
Assign student a peer tutor or support person.
Assign student an adult volunteer or mentor.
Additional accommodations may be needed.

Presentation Strategies

Tell student the purpose of the lesson and what will be expected during the lesson (e.g., provide advance organizers).
Communicate orally and visually, and repeat as needed.
Provide copies of teacher's notes or student's notes (preferably before class starts).
Accept concrete answers; provide abstractions that student can handle.
Stress auditory, visual, and kinesthetic modes of presentation.
Recap or summarize the main points of the lecture.
Use verbal cues for important ideas that will help student focus on main ideas. ("The next important idea is....")
Stand near the student when presenting information.
Cue student regularly by asking questions, giving time to think, then calling student's name.
Minimize requiring the student to read aloud in class.
Use memory devices (mnemonic aids) to help student remember facts and concepts.
Allow student to tape the class.
Additional accommodations may be needed.
Curriculum Strategies

Help provide supplementary materials that student can read.
Provide Parallel Alternative Strategies for Students (PASS) materials.
Provide partial outlines of chapters, study guides, and testing outlines.
Provide opportunities for extra drill before tests.
Reduce quantity of material (reduce spelling and vocabulary lists, reduce number of math problems, etc.).
Provide alternative assignments that do not always require writing.
Supply student with samples of work expected.
Emphasize high-quality work (which involves proofreading and rewriting), not speed.
Use visually clear and adequately spaced work sheets. Student may not be able to copy accurately or fast enough from the board or book; make arrangements for student to get information.
Encourage the use of graph paper to align numbers.
Specifically acknowledge correct responses on written and verbal class work.
Allow student to have sample or practice test.
Provide all possible test items to study and then student or teacher selects specific test items.
Provide extra assignment and test time.
Accept some homework papers dictated by the student and recorded by someone else.
Modify length of outside reading.
Provide study skills training and learning strategies.
Offer extra study time with student on specific days and times.
Allow study buddies to check spelling.
Allow use of technology to correct spelling.
Allow access to computers for in-class writing assignments.
Allow student to have someone edit papers.
Allow student to use fact sheets, tables, or charts.
Tell student in advance what questions will be asked.
Color code steps in a problem.
Provide list of steps that will help organize information and facilitate recall.
Assist in accessing taped texts.
Reduce the reading level of assignments.
Provide opportunity for student to repeat assignment directions and due dates.
Additional accommodations may be needed.
Testing Strategies

- Allow extended time for tests in the classroom and/or in the ESE support lab.
- Provide adaptive tests in the classroom and/or in the ESE support lab (reduce amount to read, cut and paste a modified test, shorten, revise format, etc.).
- Allow open book and open note tests in the classroom and/or ESE support lab.
- Allow student to take tests in the ESE support lab for help with reading and directions.
- Allow student to take tests in the ESE support lab with time provided to study.
- Allow student to take tests in the ESE support lab using a word bank of answers or other aid as mutually agreed upon.
- Allow student to take tests orally in the ESE support lab.
- Allow the use of calculators, dictionaries, or spell checkers on tests in the ESE support lab.
- Provide alternative to testing (oral report, making bulletin board, poster, audiotape, demonstration, etc.).
- Provide enlarged copies of the answer sheets.
- Allow copy of tests to be written upon and later have someone transcribe the answers.
- Allow and encourage the use of a blank piece of paper to keep pace and eliminate visual distractions on the page.
- Allow use of technology to check spelling.
- Provide alternate test formats for spelling and vocabulary tests.
- Highlight operation signs, directions, etc.
- Allow students to tape-record answers to essay questions.
- Use more objective items (fewer essay responses).
- Give frequent short quizzes, not long exams.
- Additional accommodations may be needed.

Evaluation Criteria Strategies

- Student is on an individualized grading system.
- Student is on a pass or fail system.
- Student should be graded more on daily work and notebook than on tests (e.g., 60 percent daily, 25 percent notebook, 15 percent tests).
- Student will have flexible time limits to extend completion of assignments or testing into next period.
- Additional accommodations may be needed.
Required Public School Instruction of the History of the Holocaust

Florida Statute 233.061

(2) Members of the instructional staff of the public schools, subject to the rules and regulations of the commissioner, the state board, and the school board, shall teach efficiently and faithfully, using the books and materials required, following the prescribed courses of study, and employing approved methods of instruction the following:

(f) The history of the Holocaust (1933-1945), the systematic, planned annihilation of European Jews and other groups by Nazi Germany, a watershed event in the history of humanity, to be taught in a manner that leads to an investigation of human behavior, an understanding of the ramification of prejudice, racism, and stereotyping, and an examination of what it means to be a responsible and respectful person, for the purposes of encouraging tolerance of diversity in a pluralistic society and for nurturing and protecting democratic values and institutions.

Introduction

Between 1918 and 1940, the world experienced a severe depression. In Europe, the depression caused political unrest. People living in Europe looked to new leaders to help them solve their problems, just as people in the United States did. Sometimes, the new leaders became dictators, or rulers with complete power and control over their country. Many of these dictators believed in denying people their rights. They also led their countries in war against other countries. In the mid-1930s, the dictators in Germany, Japan, and Italy began to attack other nations to expand their own power.

Europe Looks to New Political Ideas to Solve Its Problems

Europe had not recovered from World War I when the Great Depression began. There were few jobs, and many people were hungry. Europeans blamed their governments for these problems. In general, governments were unable to end the Depression. The people wanted a change in government and were ready to try different political ideas.

Socialism

One of these ideas was socialism. Under socialism, factories and farms are owned by the government instead of by private individuals. The government gives people jobs and tries to make sure that no one is poor. Many Europeans found this idea attractive.

Some Socialists were moderates. This means they wanted the government to take over factories and farms in an orderly and gradual manner. Moderate Socialists also believed in free elections and freedom of speech.
Communism

Other Socialists were revolutionaries. They wanted a radical change in their country’s governments, and they demanded the changes take place immediately. Their system of beliefs was communism, and they wanted to take private businesses from their owners at once. These Socialists formed their own group and called themselves Communists. The Communists tried to take over governments through violent revolution.

A Communist revolution took place in Russia in 1918, during World War I. The leader of the Russian revolution was a man named Vladimir Ilyich Lenin. He belonged to a group of Communists who called themselves Bolsheviks. People in Europe did not want a similar bloody revolution to take place in their countries.

Vladimir Ilyich Lenin

Lenin (1870-1924) was the Russian revolutionary who founded the Bolshevik (later Communist) Party. He became a revolutionary after his older brother was executed for participating in a plot to assassinate the tsar. Lenin was by then a follower of Karl Marx. Lenin wrote a famous pamphlet What Is to Be Done? in which he argued that only professional revolutionaries trained to lead a proletarian-peasant rising could bring Marxist socialism to Russia. Against overwhelming odds, Lenin brought about the birth of Soviet Russia. Lenin influenced Communism more than anyone except Karl Marx. Lenin adapted Marxist theory to the realities of Russia’s backward economy and dreamed of worldwide socialist revolution. Before Lenin died, he warned against Stalin’s growing ambition for power.

The Communists took control of the government, industries, and farmland. They forbade religious beliefs and closed the churches in Russia. They killed many people who opposed their revolution. During Lenin’s reign, the name of the country was changed from Russia to the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics (U.S.S.R., until 1991, when it became known as the Commonwealth of Independent States).
After Lenin died in 1924, the U.S.S.R’s new leader was Joseph Stalin. Stalin was one of the first dictators to gain power after World War I. Stalin used harsh methods that resulted in the death of millions of Russians. He tortured those who disagreed with him or sent them to prisons in remote Siberia.

Joseph Stalin

Joseph Stalin (1879-1953) was dictator of the Soviet Union from 1929 until 1953. He was the son of a shoemaker and was intended for the priesthood. Stalin joined the Georgian Social Democratic Party in 1901 and in 1917 was elected to the Bolshevik central committee.

Stalin advanced rapidly after the Russian Revolution and in 1922 was elected general secretary of the Russian Communist Party. After Lenin’s death, there was a struggle for leadership, but Stalin ousted several leaders. He tried to “Russianize” the Soviet Union by getting rid of the separate identities of minorities through force. Anyone who opposed him or his tactics were met with powerful secret police, executions, informers, and show trials. Stalin was ruthless at home and in foreign affairs, and his reign of terror continued until his death.

Rise of Fascism

In 1924, Benito Mussolini became Italy’s dictator. Like many other European countries, Italy had economic problems after World War I. Consequently, many farmers and workers wanted a revolution. Some Italians became Communists, but Mussolini was the leader of an anti-Communist group, the Fascist Party. This group fought against communism. Mussolini’s followers called their system of beliefs fascism. Fascism is a system of government that places all power in the state and its leaders. Mussolini wanted complete power, but he believed that industries and land should be privately owned. He did not attempt to control farms and factories.

Mussolini took over the government in Rome, Italy. He quickly outlawed all other political groups and ended elections. He took away freedom of speech and of the press. People who were against Mussolini were either killed or sent away.
Benito Mussolini

Benito Mussolini (1883-1945) was dictator of Italy (1924-1943) and founder of fascism. He was the editor of the Socialist party paper, but he split with the Socialists when he advocated that Italy join the Allies in World War I.

Mussolini formed a Fascist group in 1919 which attracted many Italians because it blended nationalism and socialism. The Fascist Party was nationally organized in 1921, and in 1922 the Fascist militia threatened a march on Rome which led the king to make Mussolini premier. Mussolini eliminated opponents and began a brutal foreign policy. In 1940 he joined Hitler and declared war on the Allies in 1943. Italy suffered many defeats in the war, and Mussolini was captured by the Allies. He was rescued by the Germans and headed the Fascist puppet regime in Northern Italy, but on its collapse, Mussolini was shot. His body was hung upside down (by the feet) in a public place in a small town in Italy.

By 1925 Mussolini controlled all of Italy. He increased the size of the Italian army and navy. In 1935 Italy invaded the African country of Ethiopia. No one tried to stop Italy's expansion.

Spain also underwent a Fascist revolution. In 1936 General Francisco Franco led a rebellion against the Spanish monarch, or king. Three years of fighting took place in which Franco used troops, weapons, tanks, and fighter planes. People in the United States protested, but by 1939 Franco had become the Spanish dictator with the help of Italy's Mussolini and Germany's Hitler.

Francisco Franco

Francisco Franco (1892-1975) was a Spanish general and the head of state of Spain from 1939 until shortly before his death. He joined the 1936 military revolt in Spain from Morocco and in 1937 became the leader of the Falange party and head of the anti-republican army. Franco became the head of state after the fall of Madrid in 1939. He was able to retain all of his power until shortly before his death in 1975, after which Prince Juan Carlos became king.
Adolf Hitler

In Germany the Great Depression caused high unemployment and made German money worthless. The government was weak, and its leaders were unable to end political and economic unrest. The National Socialists (Nazis) were a Fascist party organized in the 1920s largely by Adolf Hitler. They became the most important political party in Germany.

Hitler promised to make Germany a strong nation again. He appealed to the unemployed and the social outcasts in his country. He hated the French and English because they had defeated Germany in World War I. Hitler planned to take back the land Germany had lost in World War I.

Adolf Hitler

Adolf Hitler (1889-1945) was the Austrian-born dictator of Germany from 1933-1945. History has judged Hitler an evil, unstable man but a political genius. Hitler grew up in Austria and left school at age 16 to make a living as an artist. He was drafted into the military during World War I and was twice awarded the Iron Cross. Hitler joined the German Workers' Party, which he turned into the National Socialist Workers' or Nazi Party. After a failed attack against the Bavarian government, he served nine months in prison where he wrote Mein Kampf, which set out his plans to restore greatness to Germany. By 1932 he was able to make the Nazi Party into the largest national party in the country. Hitler became chancellor in 1933 and prepared his country for war. He paid little attention to Germany's affairs except to intensify his persecution of the Jews.

Hitler seized much foreign land, and his invasion of Poland on September 1, 1939 began World War II. His war plans were effective at first, but in 1941 he was unable to maintain two fronts. German forces lost North Africa and were pushed back on both sides after D-Day. Hitler was able to still maintain popular support but became increasingly unbalanced. He committed suicide on April 30, 1945, after realizing his cause was a failure and he was losing the war.
Persecution Begins

Hitler was able to persuade people to obey him. For generations, Germans had been seeking a scapegoat, or someone to blame for their failures and frustrations. Through his deep personal hatred for Jews, Hitler brought anti-Semitism to the surface in Germany. Although his accusations were false, Hitler convinced many Germans that the Jews were to blame for all of Germany’s economic problems. He promised to kill the Jews and create a master race.

In January of 1933, Hitler was elected chancellor of Germany. By August of 1934, Hitler had become the Führer or leader of Germany. He quickly did away with personal freedoms. A series of laws in 1935 known as the Nuremberg Laws were passed. This order was Hitler’s first move toward creating a German “master race.” This mass destruction based on racial grounds would become known as the Holocaust. His first targeted group was the Jews. The Holocaust refers to the state-sponsored, systematic persecution and annihilation of 11 million people, including six million European Jews by Nazi Germany and its collaborators between 1933 and 1945.

The Nuremberg Laws forbade Jews to practice law or medicine. Jews were not permitted to hold any government job. The laws called for segregation on public transportation and restricted Jews from shopping except during specified hours. They were forbidden to marry non-Jews. Thus in 1935, Jewish people in Germany were stripped of their citizenship, civil rights, and property. They were required to wear a yellow Star of David so they could be easily identified.

The 1936 Summer Olympic Games in Berlin, Germany provided Hitler with a prime opportunity to show the superiority of the Aryan race, which according to the Nazis was a non-Jewish white race. However, the games provided Hitler only with embarrassment and humiliation as Jesse Owens, an African-American athlete, won four gold metals. Owens broke three world records and tied one world record. Hitler refused to take part in honoring Owens, and the world got a taste of his bigotry. Few people realized the extent of his hatred, but the Jews did not have to wait long to feel it.
Between 1933 and 1938, thousands of Jewish refugees came to America, including Albert Einstein and future United States Secretary of State Henry Kissinger. However, by the end of 1938, isolationist and anti-immigrant feelings were so strong that Congress and President Franklin D. Roosevelt refused to relax immigration laws and thus contributed to Hitler’s success (see Appendix A for a list of the presidents).

Kristallnacht: Night of the Broken Glass

In November of 1938, a night that became known as Kristallnacht (or Night of the Broken Glass) gangs of Nazi storm troopers, members of a private Nazi army, broke into Jewish homes and beat up occupants. They destroyed more than 8,000 Jewish businesses and almost 200 synagogues across Germany. Not even hospitals or schools were spared. Over a hundred Jews were killed; thousands were tortured, and 30,000 Jewish men were sent to concentration camps, where most of them died, leaving 20,000 children homeless and fatherless. The Nazis blamed the Jews and fined them one billion marks, 20 percent of their property.

The sign read: “Germans! Defend yourselves! Do not buy from Jews!”

After 1938 Jews lost their right to leave Germany. They could not hold any jobs. All Jewish shops were destroyed. All Jewish workers were fired. Jews who owned homes had their homes and possessions taken away.

Trude Heller

Following is an account by Trude Heller, a concentration camp survivor who lives in South Carolina today. After Hitler took over her hometown in Austria in 1938, Trude was sent to a concentration camp until 1945. She, other Holocaust survivors, and liberators have shared their experiences to help teach about the consequences of intolerance and apathy in the face of bigotry. (See pages 20-24, Unit 2 pages 65-67, Appendix B, C, D, and E for other personal Holocaust survivor, liberator, and Nazi war criminal accounts.)
Trude Heller was born in Vienna, Austria in 1922. She was 15 years old in March 1938 when Hitler took over Austria. Trude’s parents were merchants, leading a comfortable, middle-class life. They lived in an area of Vienna occupied by many Jewish families. In the following account she describes how life changed for her and her parents after the Nazis gained control of her country.

Trude in Austria

The first week that Hitler took over they came and got our car. An Austrian Storm Trooper carrying a rifle came to our apartment. He knocked on the door and said, “Car keys.” And that was that. We handed them over.

A little while later a non-Jewish couple wanted our apartment. A uniformed official came with the people who wanted the apartment. He told us whatever is not out in six hours stays and if you’re not out by then, you get killed. So my mother went to look for an apartment. My father went to get boxes and I started packing. Within six hours we were out. Of course, we had to leave almost everything behind. There were several buildings that were not so nice anymore where people like us could move. We moved to one of those places. The people there were mostly Jews who had been displaced from their homes.

The Final Solution

Finally, in 1939, Hitler announced the Final Solution. The Final Solution was the outright killing process and meant that Hitler intended to kill every Jewish man, woman, and child in Germany and in Europe. Although not all victims were Jews, all Jews were victims. Nazi murder squads were assigned to round up Jews and shoot them in cold blood. When shooting was found to be too slow and not psychologically desirable for the shooters, new methods were tried. After the Einsatzgruppen, or the commanders of the mobile killing squads from the German middle class, had tried using carbon monoxide gas piped into mobile gas vans, the death factories were started. Instead of the killers rounding up the victims, the victims were sent to the ghettos and then to the killing centers.
SS St. Louis

On May 13, 1939, the SS St. Louis set sail from Hamburg, Germany for Havana, Cuba. On board were 937 passengers, of whom 930 were Jewish refugees fleeing persecution from Nazi Germany after the horror of Kristallnacht, the pogrom of burning, mass arrest, and murders in November of 1938. The SS St. Louis was one of the last ships to leave Nazi Germany before war began in Europe.

Upon reaching Havana, the Cuban government refused entry to the passengers. Appeals to allow passengers into Miami also failed even though the American Jewish community was willing to help with the cost of their maintenance. President Roosevelt and the legislature were not willing to lift immigration limitations in the 1930s. The ship was forced to return to Hamburg with its passengers. While en route to Europe, Great Britain, Belgium, France, and the Netherlands, each agreed to grant temporary refuge until homes in other countries could be found. Following the German invasion of Europe, many of the former SS St. Louis passengers found themselves under Nazi rule again. They became victims of Hitler's Final Solution and did not survive the Holocaust.

Ghettos and Genocide

Most Jews were herded into small sections or ghettos which were sealed in by barbed wire or walls. They were confined in overcrowded conditions, forced into heavy labor, and provided little to eat. Jewish people were not permitted to leave without permission. Many were left to starve or die of disease. The Nazi ghettos for Jews became transition areas and used as collection points for shipment to larger ghettos or to death camps and concentration camps. All ghettos had horrible, inhumane living conditions. Warsaw, the largest ghetto, held 400,000 people. The large ghettos were closed in by stone or bricks, wood, and barbed wire.

Jews were dragged from their homes and herded onto trucks and trains for shipment to death camps and concentration camps. Healthy Jews would be sent to labor camps to perform slave labor. The rest would be sent to extermination camps. The horrifying result of this plan was a cold-blooded and systematic genocide, or deliberate killing of an entire people. In 1933 approximately nine million Jews lived in the 21 countries of Europe that Germany would occupy during the war. By 1945 two out of every three or two-thirds of the European Jews had been killed.
The Offensive Begins

Hitler’s main goal was to rebuild the German military by adding many new weapons to his arsenal, or store of arms. Soon, Hitler was ready to retake former German land. The Germans had developed methods of combining the speed and firepower of tanks with the precise bombing of fighter planes.

The German fighting style was called blitzkrieg, which means “lightning war.” They carried out invasions swiftly and with great force. In 1936 Hitler’s army invaded the Rhineland. In 1938 he sent his troops into Austria. Next, he wanted to take Czechoslovakia.

The Munich Pact

Three million Germans lived in western Czechoslovakia. Hitler wanted to reunite them with Germany. If Hitler invaded Czechoslovakia, then Great Britain and France would have to go to war against Germany. Great Britain and France had signed an alliance or agreement with Czechoslovakia. Neither Great Britain nor France, however, wanted to go to war with Germany.

In September of 1938, leaders from Great Britain, France, Italy, and Germany signed the Munich Pact. The pact said that Hitler could have an area of Czechoslovakia known as the Sudetenland (sudat n land), where the Germans lived. In return, Hitler agreed to take no more land. Hitler signed the pact, but on March 15, 1939, Hitler took all of Czechoslovakia.

Great Britain and France did not declare war on Germany, but they no longer trusted Adolf Hitler. Now, they feared he would take Poland. Great Britain and France also had a treaty of alliance with Poland. If Hitler invaded Poland, Great Britain and France would have to enter the war.
The German-Soviet Treaty

Germany and the Soviet Union were enemies, and the Soviets feared the Germans would invade Russia. But in August of 1939, the Soviet Union and Germany suddenly signed a German-Soviet treaty or agreement: Hitler and Stalin agreed not to attack one another. They did this for several reasons. Hitler knew he would have to fight France and Great Britain soon. He did not want to have to fight the Soviet Union at the same time. Stalin knew the Soviet military was not ready to fight the Germans at this point.

Poland Falls

On September 1, 1939, Hitler’s armies invaded Poland. Two days later, Great Britain and France declared war on Germany. Germany’s new ally, the Soviet Union, entered Poland from the east. Within two weeks, Poland was divided between Germany and the Soviet Union. World War II had begun in Europe.

Conditions in Asia

Meanwhile, important events were taking place in the Far East. Japan was committing aggression, or hostile and unprovoked action, in China. Japan wanted China’s raw materials for Japanese industries. In 1931 the Japanese Army took Manchuria, a northeastern part of China.

China was too weak to stop Japan. The United States protested Japan’s actions, but neither the United States nor any other country went to help China. In 1937 Japan made a move to control all of China.

The United States voiced their protests and sympathized with the Chinese but continued to remain neutral. Within a year, Japan controlled most of China’s main cities.
The Axis Powers

In 1940 Japan signed a military alliance with Germany and Italy, forming the Axis Powers. Encouraged by German success in Europe, Japan continued to expand into Asia and the Pacific.

United States Reacts

The United States decided to try to stop the Japanese expansion. In 1941 President Roosevelt placed an embargo on all trade with Japan. An embargo is a government order that prevents ships from entering or leaving another country’s port. The embargo hurt Japan’s economy. The United States demanded that Japan get out of China.

By October of 1941, Japan was planning to attack the United States. American military experts were reading secret Japanese messages and knew something was going to happen. However, they did not know where Japan would attack. They thought it might be the Philippine Islands.

Pearl Harbor

Instead, on Sunday morning, December 7, 1941, Japanese planes attacked the United States naval and air base at Pearl Harbor, Hawaii. That same day they attacked other American military bases in Wake Island, Midway Island, Guam, and the Philippines. On December 8, 1941, Congress declared war on Japan.
Three days after the Japanese attack, the European Axis Powers—Germany and Italy—declared war on the United States. For the second time in the 20th century, the United States had to go to war.

Summary

Economic and political conditions in Europe were very bad after World War I. Unrest led to the rise of new and dangerous political ideas and dictators. The Axis Powers such as Italy, Germany, and Spain began wars in Europe. The wars helped Hitler to carry out his deliberate plan to kill European Jews and others.

Japan attacked countries in Asia. The United States tried to halt Japanese expansion. In response, on December 7, 1941, the Japanese attacked the United States fleet at Pearl Harbor, Hawaii. Then, on December 11, 1941, Germany and Italy declared war on the United States.
Practice

In the chapter, you read about the dictators, Joseph Stalin and Benito Mussolini. Read the characteristics listed below under the word dictatorship. Write Yes by each characteristic that would exist in a government run by a dictator. Write No by each characteristic that would not exist in a government run by a dictator.

A dictator is a leader who takes complete power over a country and its people.

Dictatorship

_______ 1. little individual freedom

_______ 2. any citizen can run for office

_______ 3. people have no say in the government

_______ 4. decisions made by one person

_______ 5. citizens able to criticize the leader
Practice

Read the statements below about economic and political problems in Europe to classify each problem. Write E for economic problem or P for political problem.

Economic refers to the way people make a living.
Political refers to the way people govern themselves.

______ 1. Europe was experiencing a depression.
______ 2. Many new leaders became dictators.
______ 3. Europeans blamed their governments for the problems.
______ 4. Many people had no jobs and were hungry.
______ 5. Dictators took command in some European countries.
______ 6. During the Great Depression, German money was worthless.
Match each description with the correct name. Write the letter on the line provided.

____ 1. group of Russian Socialists led by Lenin; formed the Communist Party in 1918
   A. Axis Powers

____ 2. Russia’s name during Stalin’s reign (and until 1991)
   B. Bolsheviks

____ 3. led the Bolshevik Revolution
   C. Communists

____ 4. took over Russia through violent revolution
   D. General Francisco Franco

____ 5. organized the National Socialists (Nazis)
   E. Adolf Hitler

____ 6. dictator of Italy
   F. Vladimir Ilyich Lenin

____ 7. a military alliance in 1940 between Japan, Germany, and Italy
   G. Benito Mussolini

____ 8. dictator of Spain
   H. Joseph Stalin

____ 9. a Russian dictator
   I. Union of Soviet Socialist Republics (U.S.S.R)
Practice

Write True if the statement is correct. Write False if the statement is not correct. If the statement is false, rewrite it to make it true on the lines provided.

1. In a Socialist government, the factories are owned by the government.

Who's Who in World War II

Winston Churchill         Josef Mengele
Adolf Eichmann           Benito Mussolini
Dwight D. Eisenhower      George Patton
Adolf Hitler              Franklin D. Roosevelt
Douglas MacArthur         Harry S Truman
Introduction

When the war broke out in Europe and Asia, the United States publicly adopted a policy of isolationism. Many Americans did not want to become involved in the problems of Europe and Asia. They felt this way for several reasons. The Depression was still on, and most Americans were more concerned with their own economic well-being than with the fighting on foreign soil. In addition, many Americans still remembered World War I and its terrible destruction. Also, many Americans believed that the Atlantic and Pacific oceans would protect the United States from attack by the dictators of Germany, Italy, and Japan.

The United States Policy toward the Soviet Union

The United States had severed relations with Russia following the Russian Revolution in 1918. In 1933 President Franklin D. Roosevelt restored diplomatic relations with the Soviet Union. The United States wanted to begin trading with the Soviet Union. In addition, the United States hoped the Soviet Union might help stop Japanese expansion in Asia.

The United States and Europe

The United States was worried about the new dictators in Europe, especially Adolf Hitler in Germany and Benito Mussolini in Italy. These countries were building up their militaries and by 1935 were attacking and attempting to take over other countries. The United States feared that the aggression of Germany and Italy would lead to another world war.

Neutrality Acts

In 1937 the United States Congress passed the Neutrality Acts to keep the country neutral and prevent it from being drawn into war. A neutral nation does not take sides in a war. The laws prevented Americans from traveling on ships of warring nations. They also prevented Americans from selling munitions to warring countries.

"A Good Time to Look at Them"

The United States was very concerned about the aggression of Hitler, Mussolini, and the Japanese but was not yet ready to do much about it.

However, the United States secretly shipped supplies to the Allied forces. The military also spied on the Axis Powers of Germany, Italy, and Japan. Many ships were attacked in the Atlantic Ocean including United States cargo, passenger, and navy ships, but this was largely kept from the United States citizens so they would not be alarmed. The United States needed more time to build their military before total involvement in World War II.
World War II Begins in Europe

In 1939 Germany invaded Poland. As allies of Poland, Great Britain and France immediately declared war on Germany. World War II had begun in Europe.

Germany's leader, Adolf Hitler, continued to invade other countries. Between 1933 and 1942, Hitler invaded and took over 15 countries. France surrendered to Germany in 1940, leaving Great Britain to fight Germany alone. Germany began to attack Great Britain by bombing its cities, factories, and seaports.

The United States Prepares for War

In 1940 Franklin Roosevelt was elected President for the third time. The President and the Congress grew more concerned as Hitler’s “war machine” marched through Europe while Japan captured countries in Asia. The Axis Powers’ military success prompted the Congress to spend money to increase the American military. They began spending one billion dollars to build a navy large enough to battle on both the Atlantic and Pacific oceans. They also passed the Selective Service and Training Act. This law drafted men between the ages of 21 and 35 into military training.

In 1941 Congress passed the Lend-Lease Act. This law allowed the United States to ship war materials to any country that was important to the defense of the United States. The law let the United States aid countries fighting the Axis Powers.

In December of 1941, Japan attacked the United States at Pearl Harbor. The President asked the Congress for an immediate declaration of war against Japan. Germany and Italy then declared war on the United States.

Wartime Conferences

The Allied Powers included the United States, Great Britain, France, and the Soviet Union. These countries became Allies after each was attacked by an Axis country. The leaders of the Allied Powers held several conferences during World War II. At these conferences, they discussed plans for the war and for the postwar, or period after the war.

One agreement between President Roosevelt and Winston Churchill, the Prime Minister of Great Britain, was called the Atlantic Charter. In this charter, they agreed to work together to establish a just peace after the Axis Powers were defeated.

Winston Churchill, the Prime Minister of Great Britain
War on Two Fronts

The United States had to fight the war on two fronts, or in two places. One front was in Europe and North Africa against Germany and Italy; the second front was in Asia and the Pacific against Japan. On either front, the United States military had to transport soldiers and supplies across the oceans. The United States decided to fight the war in Europe and North Africa first and then move against Japan in the Pacific.

The American Allies fought Germany and Italy first in North Africa. By July of 1943, the Allies were in control of North Africa and had invaded southern Italy. The Allies lost 70,000 men in the invasion. In September of 1943, the Italian government surrendered to the Allies. In 1945 Benito Mussolini was captured and shot by a group of Italians.

The Normandy Invasion

One of the most important battles of the entire war was the invasion of France at Normandy. The Allied Supreme Commander, General Dwight D. Eisenhower, sent the largest military force in history into France to battle Germany. An army of 176,000 men aboard nearly 5,000 ships crossed the English Channel on June 6, 1944. They received air cover from 11,000 planes.

Fighting was bloody, but the invasion, called D-Day, was a success. It allowed the Allies to begin its main attack into Germany. Eleven more months of fighting lay ahead.

The War Continues and President Roosevelt Dies

In 1944 President Roosevelt won his fourth term in office. The pressures of the war, however, caused Roosevelt to fall ill. He went on vacation to Warm Springs, Georgia, where on April 12, 1945, he died suddenly. The nation was saddened by his death. The new President was Harry S Truman, who had been Vice President under Roosevelt.

Germany Is Defeated

The United States, Great Britain, and France continued to invade Germany from the west. The Soviet Union invaded Germany from the east. The two forces met at the Elbe River in central Germany on April 25, 1945. The German army was crushed. Adolf Hitler escaped capture by killing himself.

V-E Day

Germany surrendered to the Allies on May 7, 1945. The next day, May 8, was declared V-E Day, or Victory in Europe Day in Great Britain, France, and the United States. May 9 was celebrated as V-E Day in the Soviet Union. The Allies had won the war and began preparing to help Europe establish the peace.

Concentration Camps

When the Allies entered Germany, they discovered more than 100 concentration camps like Auschwitz and Maidanek, and death camps like Treblinka and Chelmno and their horrifying truth. These concentration camps served as death prisons and death camps, or killing centers, with large gas chambers and crematoriums, or ovens, to burn the bodies of the victims.

The healthy Jews, or about 10 percent of the new arrivals, had been made to work as slaves and were then eventually starved and killed. All others, including all children and older people, were sent immediately to be killed at death camps.
Note the following two maps. The first one shows the locations of concentration camps and killing centers. The second map shows the deaths per country.

Pincus Kolender

Following is an account by Pincus Kolender, a concentration camp survivor who lives in South Carolina today. Pincus and his wife Renee Kolender, also a concentration camp survivor, said,

"When our children were young, they always used to ask how come people have grandfathers and grandmothers and we don’t. So we explained to them our experiences and they understood."

Pincus Kolender lived in Poland and came from a very religious, poor family. He was born in Bochnia, one of Poland’s largest cities, in 1926. He had two brothers and a sister. Bochnia had a large Jewish community with many synagogues, Jewish houses of worship, and many schools for Jewish children. Although his family always experienced some anti-Semitism, his early life was happy. Pincus was 14 years old when his family was forced to move to the Bochnia ghetto. Unlike some other families, his family was not required to move to another city because the ghetto was in his hometown.

In 1942 Pincus and his brother were taken from the Bochnia ghetto where they had lived for about two years to the Auschwitz (Ow-Switch) concentration camp in Poland. In the following account he describes his life in Auschwitz and how he survived and eventually served in the United States Army.

Pincus at Auschwitz

When we left the ghetto, they put us on cattle trains. They packed 100 to 120 people into a sealed car. There was no food on the train. Fortunately it took us only about two days to get to the concentration camp. Trains from places farther east or south, like Greece, sometimes took 10 days. Many of the people on these trains did not survive the trip.

When we got to Auschwitz, we had to undress completely and line up before the gate. We had to line up in fives. A Nazi officer was pointing left, right, right, left. I was fortunate. I went to the right. The ones to the left went to the crematorium. The ones to the right went into the camp.
It was dark, but I could see the people to the left were mostly elderly or young children, so I realized that we were going into the camp. Inside the camp first they shaved our hair. We were stark naked and they tattooed us. I am 161253. They gave us cold showers. It was November. Bitter cold. Then they put us in striped uniforms and took us into Birkenau (Beer-Kin-Now), the killing center at Auschwitz. I was fortunate. After I had been there four weeks, they picked several hundred men to go to Bunno, another part of Auschwitz. It was a labor camp and they gave us a little better food. The barracks were a little nicer. There were about 300 or 400 men to a barrack. We had double or triple bunks. The bunks were actually single beds, but two people had to sleep on one bunk.

The capos woke us at five o’clock each morning. The capos were prisoners who were in charge of the barracks and the work groups. They were mostly Germans, Poles, and some Jews. The Nazis assigned them to guard us. In the morning they gave us one piece of bread mixed with sawdust to eat. We also got a piece of margarine and a cup of coffee. It was not real coffee. We had to work until the evening. In the evening we got soup. If we were fortunate, we might sometimes find a few potatoes and a piece of meat in the liquid. Most of the time it was just hot water and a few potatoes. For that we had to work nine or 10 hours a day. When we first came there, we worked unloading gravel and coal from trains. If you didn’t finish your assigned task, you got a beating.

"If we were fortunate, we might sometimes find a few potatoes and a piece of meat in the liquid."
The first few months I thought I wouldn't make it. For me at Auschwitz the worst enemy was the cold. It was bitter cold. There was also hunger and there were the beatings. But the worst thing was the cold. I had one striped jacket, no sweater, just an undershirt and a thin, striped coat. We worked outside when it was often 10 to 15 below zero. People just froze to death.

The hunger was also terrible. We used to search for a potato peel and fight over it. We were constantly, 24 hours a day, always hungry. We would think about food and dream about it.

To survive in Auschwitz you had to get a break. My break came when I met a friend of mine from my hometown. He gave me the name of a man who had been in Auschwitz for a long time and was a good friend of my family. At Auschwitz, he supervised other inmates. I went to see him and asked if he could give my brother and me different jobs. Lucky for me, he gave us work making metal cabinets. Our job was to carry things. We were not cabinet makers, but we did the lifting. It was indoors. I don't think I could have survived the winter doing more outdoor work. I think he saved my life.

Every few months we had what they called a selection. They came into the barracks and picked out the people who looked very skinny and couldn't work anymore. They looked you over, and if they didn't see much fat on you, they put down your number. The next morning they came with trucks, picked up these people and put them right in the crematorium. It was heartbreaking.

In January, 1945, the Russian offensive started. When the Russians came close to Auschwitz, the Germans took us from the camp and marched us west away from the approaching army. They moved us out in a dead march. We marched a whole night to the Polish city of Gleiwitz, about 70 miles away. My brother kept saying to me, "Let's escape." I kept telling him that this was not the time because I knew we were still in German territory.
I said, "Where are you going to hide? The population, they are not friendly." But he wouldn't listen. Suddenly I didn't see him anymore. Since then I lost him. I was with him the whole time in Auschwitz.

They put us on a cattle train in Gleiwitz and took us to Germany. It took 10 days. They packed us about 150 people to a car with no food. Fortunately for us the cars were open. Everybody had eating utensils. I had a string. At night while the German guards were sleeping, we attached the string to a plate and scooped up snow. That kept us alive. You can live without bread for a long time but not without water. Finally we got to Nordhausen, a large German concentration camp. We were there about 10 days, and then they sent us to a camp called Dora in the mountains. The Germans were making V2 missiles there. We did hard labor, digging tunnels into the mountains. We worked there from the end of January until April, 1945.

Pincus Is Liberated

It was a Friday morning, April 20, Hitler's birthday. The SS came and gave us an extra pat of margarine in honor of the Führer. The British army was approaching so they began moving us again. We were on the train packed 100 to a car. All of a sudden we heard sirens. American fighter planes came and started strafing our train. [Strafing means to attack with machine gun fire from an airplane.] They didn't know there were prisoners on the train. While they were strafing us, the two SS guards hid under the wagon.

Something told me, maybe it was instinct, "This is your chance. Run." I jumped out of the train and ran about three miles. Several others jumped too. The fighter planes strafed us. I could see the bullets flying.
practically right by my nose. But I kept going. This was my only chance. All I had on was shorts. I didn’t even have a shirt because it was very hot in the train and I was barefooted. But I kept running.

I met another fellow who had also escaped. We started walking. It was already late in the morning. We were hungry and cold. We saw a farmer’s hut. We went into the farmhouse. The Czech farmer helped us a lot. He gave us food and clothes and kept us warm for about a day. We were skin and bones. If the Germans had caught the farmer hiding us, he would have been executed.

The next morning we had to leave because the Germans were searching for us. Although the war was almost over, they still came into the village looking for prisoners. The farmer found out about it. That night he took us into the forest and gave us a shovel. We dug a deep hole. He gave us blankets, and we slept there for two weeks. Every night he brought us food until the American soldiers came.

The Americans came on May 5, 1945 to Czechoslovakia. The Fifth Army, General Patton’s army, liberated us. Five years later when I came to America, I was drafted. I served in the Fifth Army.

The Genocide

By 1945 two out of every three European Jews had been tortured, gassed, shot, or burned, as were five million Gentiles or other targeted groups considered “undesirables.” Between 1933 and 1945, more than three million Soviet prisoners of war were killed because of their nationality.

Poles, as were other Slavs, became targets for slave labor, and almost two million died. Up to a half million Roma and Sinti (Gypsies) and at least 250,000 people who were mentally and physically challenged were also victims of genocide. Homosexuals and others considered to be “anti-social” were also persecuted and often murdered. In addition, thousands of political and religious dissidents such as Communists, Socialists, trade unionists, and Jehovah's Witnesses were persecuted for their beliefs and behavior, and many died as a result of maltreatment.

Over 11 million people had died; six million of them were Jews, and between one and a half million and two million were Jewish children. The Jews were not the only victims of Hitler but the only group the Nazis wanted to destroy entirely. Most of the systematic genocide, or deliberate killing of a particular group of people, took place in only four years. Each person was an individual, an individual who had dreams, who had a life, who had a family.

The Holocaust, as the mass murders became known, shocked the world as its gruesome details were discovered. The Nazis had deliberately set out to destroy the Jews for no other reason than their religious and ethnic heritage. The record of the Holocaust's mass murders serves as a reminder of the monstrous results of prejudice and intolerance.

German doctors had dictated life or death at the railroad sites carrying trainloads of Jews. The doctors chose adults and children (many of them twins) on which to perform horrifying criminal medical experiments that were certain to kill their subjects (see Joseph Mengele on next page). The experiments had little scientific value but to discover how much torture a victim could endure until death. No place on Earth had such an unlimited availability of people whose cries went unheard.

In 1945 and 1946, the Allies held war crime trials in Nuremberg, Germany. As a result of the Nuremberg Trials, 12 Nazi leaders were sentenced to death. Thousands of other Nazis were found guilty of war crimes. The Nuremberg Trials were published around the world. The testimony went on for 10 months. It revealed evidence of slave labor, medical experiments on human beings, forced starvation, and mass murder. Trials of less important Nazi officials, such as guards at concentration camps, German military officers, and doctors who conducted medical experiments, continue to this day. Similar trials took place in Japan and Italy. (See Appendix D for excerpts from the prison diary of Nazi war criminal Adolf Eichmann, who was in charge of the Final Solution.)

Joseph Mengele

Joseph Mengele (1911-1979) was a German war criminal. From 1943 to 1944 he was a chief physician at Auschwitz concentration camp. There Mengele selected 400,000 persons to be killed. Inmates called him “The Angel of Death.” He conducted terrifying, inhumane experiments on Jews, twins, dwarfs, giants, and many others. Some of the experiments were to see how long someone could survive in ice cold water. He also tried to change children’s eye color by injecting chemical into their eyes. After World War II, Mengele was captured but escaped to South America. Despite international efforts to track him down, he was never captured again. He lived in Argentina, Paraguay, and Brazil under various aliases. In 1985 an international team of forensic scientists identified the body of a man who had drowned at a Brazilian beach in 1979. While the body was identified as Mengele, many do not believe he is dead because the evidence was inconclusive.

American Soldiers Liberate Buchenwald Concentration Camp

The following reading is part of an interview with a South Carolinian who helped liberate concentration camps in Germany and Austria at the end of World War II. Most people know Strom Thurmond for his close to 40 years as a United States Senator from South Carolina. However, in 1944, he was serving his country in the army as a member of the 82nd Airborne Division. In the following interview he describes what he saw at Buchenwald (Boo-Kin-Wald) concentration camp in Germany (see Appendix E for another liberator’s account).
Senator Thurmond at Buchenwald

Thurmond: I was with the First Army all through the war in Europe. The First Army uncovered the Buchenwald concentration camp, which is located some miles from Leipzig, Germany.

In looking over the camp, I was told that most people died from starving. There must of been several hundred people who had died from starvation stacked up like cordwood. A big pile of dead people and some of them were not dead. Some were barely living, and some of our doctors were able to save some of those people. I never saw such a sight in my life.

Interviewer: When did you get over there?

Thurmond: I landed on D-Day with the 82nd Airborne Division in Normandy, and we took that part of the country there in France. We went through Paris and into Belgium. That’s when the Battle of the Bulge occurred. We were stopped in Belgium, and we had to drop back. That was a terrible fight, the Battle of the Bulge, but we stopped them.

Then we went back through Belgium and on from one place to another until we finally crossed the Rhine River into Germany. Then we got near Berlin and sat on the banks of the river while the Russians took it. That was the order General Eisenhower gave. We were disappointed we didn’t have the honor of taking Berlin.

Interviewer: Then you went on from Berlin to Buchenwald?

Thurmond: That’s right.
Interviewer: The First Army came to Buchenwald and you liberated the camp.

Thurmond: We got there right after it was liberated. Some troops ahead of us had just liberated it. That’s when I witnessed these things I’m telling you about. I just can’t imagine how any person could be so inhuman as to do to those people what I saw.

Interviewer: At Buchenwald did you have an opportunity to speak to any of the survivors or have contact with any of the survivors?

Thurmond: The survivors were lying on the ground and were so weak they couldn’t talk. The doctors had a difficult time telling whether they were living or dead, but they could detect that a few of them were living, and, of course, they were taken and treated and helped anyway they could.

Interviewer: Did you remain there some time?

Thurmond: No, we remained there long enough to survey the situation and to determine it was stabilized. Then others came in and took over the actual work of removing the bodies. The medical corps was still trying to tell who was dead or alive among those who were piled up like cordwood, a great high wall of people, some barely living, others dead.

Interviewer: Could you tell me some more about how people reacted in your group?

Thurmond: We wondered why the German people in Leipzig didn’t know what was going on. If they did know, why they didn’t do something about it. Some of them claimed they didn’t know about it, and they may not. But others were scared to do anything or take any part. Some of course were indifferent and were trying to save their own lives.

Interviewer: Do you have any idea how many people were left there by the time you got there?

Thurmond: They disposed of them as they died. This particular pile of people must of been several hundred.

Consequences of Acting or Not Acting

The Holocaust was not simply the logical and inevitable consequence of unchecked racism. Various factors contributed to the Holocaust and had been built upon gradually from racism:

- combined with century-old bigotry
- renewed by a nationalist trend in Europe during the last half of the 19th century
- fueled by Germany’s defeat in World War I and its national humiliation following the Treaty of Versailles after World War I
- made worse by worldwide economic hard times, the ineffectiveness of the German Weimar Republic (1919-1933), and international indifference
- ignited by the political charm, strong military control, and manipulative propaganda of Adolf Hitler’s Nazi Germany

Just because the Holocaust happened does not mean it was inevitable. The Holocaust took place because individuals, groups, and nations made decisions to act or not to act. At best, less than one-half of one percent of the total population of non-Jews under Nazi occupation helped to rescue Jews.

Decades later, the Holocaust stands to remind the world of the consequences and what can happen if hate, xenophobia (unreasonable fear and hatred of strangers and foreigners), and anti-Semitism are tolerated. Today, the world still receives reports of the suffering of innocent people at the hands of governments. No person or nation can afford to turn their eyes or ears away without expecting a repeat of genocide in some part of the world.
The War in the Pacific

In the Pacific, the Japanese had captured one island after another. The war against Japan had to be fought across the Pacific Ocean. This required a vast fleet of ships and aircraft. The Japanese attack at Pearl Harbor had destroyed or damaged many American ships and planes. The Japanese won a series of victories after the bombing of Pearl Harbor, December 7, 1941. Consequently, the United States had to rebuild its fleet. However, after the Battle of Midway, the Allies took the offensive in the Pacific.
By 1943 The United States was defeating Japan in the Pacific. The navy and marines captured Tarawa, Kwajalein, and Saipan. United States General Douglas MacArthur defeated the Japanese in the Philippine Islands in October of 1944 but at a high cost in American lives. Five thousand men died taking the tiny island of Iwo Jima in early 1945. The battle for Okinawa cost 11,000 American troops.

The Atomic Bomb

The United States military had to decide on a strategy, or plan, for forcing Japan to end the war. The military estimated an invasion of Japan would result in the deaths of millions of people on both sides.

President Truman learned that scientists had developed a powerful new weapon called the atomic bomb. The atomic bomb could destroy Japan's ability to fight. It would also, however, kill and wound thousands of Japanese civilians. On the other hand, if the United States had to invade Japan, thousands and thousands of American and Japanese lives might be lost on both sides. After much thought, President Truman gave the order to use the bomb to end the war. The decision to use the bomb reflected the reasoning that the bomb would bring a speedy end to the war and help determine the grounds for peace.

On August 6, 1945, the first atomic bomb was dropped on Hiroshima, Japan (see Appendix F for eye-witness accounts of the bombing of Hiroshima). The city was destroyed and almost 80,000 Japanese died instantaneously in the blast. By the end of 1945, more than 140,000 people would die as a result of the attack. In spite of the devastation, Japan did not surrender. Three days later, a second bomb was dropped on the city of Nagasaki. In that bombing, 35,000 died instantaneously. By the end of 1945, more than 200,000 had died as a result of injuries and radiation poisoning caused by the atomic blasts. Environmental and psychological effects of these bombings are still felt today.

Faced with this awesome destruction, the Japanese finally decided to surrender. The victory over Japan, or V-J Day, took place on August 14, 1945. With the defeat of the last Axis Power, World War II came to an end.
The Cost of the War

World War II was the most destructive war in history. Hundreds of billions of dollars were spent to fight the war, but the loss of life was a greater cost. It is estimated that 60 million soldiers and civilians died. The United States lost 292,000 lives in the fighting, and more than 670,000 Americans were wounded.

Summary

The United States tried to remain neutral when war broke out in Europe in the 1930s. But President Roosevelt and the United States Congress grew concerned about the threat to American allies. Then, after Pearl Harbor was attacked by Japan, the United States joined the Allies in the war against the Axis Powers—Germany, Italy, and Japan. Germany surrendered to the Allies on May 8, 1945, and the horrors of the Holocaust were revealed in detail, with the genocide of six million Jews and millions of others, including Poles, Gypsies (Roma and Sinti), Soviet prisoners of war, Jehovah’s Witnesses, homosexuals, and people with disabilities. The Allies finally defeated the Axis Powers in August of 1945, after the dropping of two atomic bombs on Japan.

The term holocaust refers to a total destruction and loss of life. Adolf Hitler wanted to develop a master race in Germany. He hated Jews and wanted to kill all of them. His special police rounded up Jews all over Europe and imprisoned them in concentration camps. The Nazis tortured and murdered Jews in the camps. Some were shot, hung, and injected with poison. Others died as a result of horrible medical experiments by Nazi doctors in search for ways to improve the master race.

The Nazis used gas chambers to kill men, women, and children. They shaved the victims' heads and used the human hair to make blankets. They took the gold from the teeth of the dead people. They burned the bodies in huge crematoriums, or ovens, and used the ashes of the dead as fertilizer in the fields.

Six million Jews and millions of others considered undesirable were murdered in the Nazi concentration camps. The camps were discovered when the Allies entered Germany. The truth of the camps was so awful, many people refused to believe they existed. However, photographs and films revealed the horrors of the Holocaust in Nazi Germany. The record of the Holocaust continues to serve as a reminder of the devastating results of prejudice and intolerance. The lesson of the Holocaust cries out in two words: never again.

One Vote: One Person Can Make a Difference

Elections are losing popularity, though they have become more important than ever. One reason people often give for not voting is that they believe that one vote won't make a difference. They are wrong. In England, King Charles I was beheaded in 1610, and King George I was placed on the throne in 1714, both by one vote. Six American Presidents were placed in office by one electoral vote or by one vote cast in a handful of election precincts: Thomas Jefferson, John Quincy Adams, Rutherford Hayes, Woodrow Wilson, Harry S Truman, and John F. Kennedy. One vote saved President Andrew Johnson from impeachment. The United States Senate approved a Declaration of War by one vote sending America to war against Mexico back in 1846. The military draft was approved by Congress in 1941 by one vote. In one year, 1962, Maine, Rhode Island, and North Dakota all elected governors by a margin of, you guessed, one vote per precinct.

Adolf Hitler, a man whose evil destiny set the world on fire, was elected head of Germany's fledgling Nazi party by one single vote.

It has been said that people should "act as if the whole election depended on your single vote.... History shows that it occasionally does."

Abraham Lincoln, in his Gettysburg Address, said that we have a "government of the people, by the people, and for the people." But if government is truly to belong to the people—rather than the reverse—the people must take an active and educated role in shaping their government.

Who's Who in Life in America during World War II

Charles Drew Franklin D. Roosevelt
Albert Einstein Harry S Truman
J. Robert Oppenheimer
Introduction

Even before the Japanese attacked Pearl Harbor in 1941 and drew the United States into the war, President Franklin D. Roosevelt had begun creating agencies to oversee wartime production. As the United States entered the war, additional agencies were set up to plan and regulate the production of war supplies for the United States military and its allies.

The victory by the United States in World War II could not have happened if the entire civilian population had not worked hard at home. A civilian is a person who is not in the military.

Wartime Production

The nation needed ships, airplanes, munitions, and other fighting equipment. Industry in the United States quickly converted, or changed, to produce supplies for fighting the war. Factories and farms produced enough to supply both the United States and its allies. By 1942 the United States was producing as many wartime products as Germany, Italy, and Japan combined. By 1944 the country was producing twice as many wartime products as the Axis Powers. These products included thousands of planes, armored cars, tanks, and artillery, as well as millions of rounds of ammunition.

Science and Technology

World War II required new inventions and technology such as improved radar, sonar devices, and rocket weapons. In 1939 Albert Einstein, a Jewish refugee from Hitler’s Germany, alerted Roosevelt to the possibility that Nazi scientists were seeking to develop an atomic bomb. This perhaps contributed to the setting up of the Manhattan Project which was a plan to develop the atomic bomb for the United States. The Manhattan Project’s scientific director was J. Robert Oppenheimer, and by 1945 many scientists had worked long hours to develop the atomic bomb. Interest in space technology grew in part because the military wanted to produce an answer to the deadly V-2 rocket used in the war by Germany.

Scientists also were developing television and computers to aid the military effort. Laboratories produced synthetics, or artificial materials, such as nylon and plastic for use in military supplies. In medicine, researchers introduced the "miracle drugs" penicillin and sulfa as new treatments for disease.

Full Employment

Over 15 million men and 350,000 women served in the military during the war. This caused a labor shortage at home, which was filled by minority groups and women. However, there was discrimination against minorities in the federal government. Therefore, in 1941 President Roosevelt issued Executive Order 8802, which outlawed discrimination against federal employees on the basis of race, creed, or color.

The Fair Employment Practices Commission (FEPC) was set up to enforce the order and to insure that minorities were not discriminated against in defense factories. As a result, many African Americans from the South went north to work in factories. Mexican Americans from the Southwest also moved in to fill jobs.
Almost 19 million women worked in the wartime labor force. They handled a wide variety of jobs held previously by men. They became lumberjacks, welders, and blast furnace operators, and learned to operate heavy and complex machinery. Many worked as doctors, chemists, and lawyers for the first time. During World War II, women began overcoming the stereotype that they were not as able workers as men.

For most Americans, World War II ended the long economic depression. After many years of low employment and difficult economic times, the United States was beginning to prosper.

This post–World War II political cartoon depicts women in the wartime labor force. Half of the women were homemakers who had never before worked for wages. Women proved they could perform jobs traditionally held by men and by the end of the war, women made up one third of the work force.

Government Controls

Government agencies were created to oversee the economy during the war. The War Production Board (WPB) was formed to control the production of war materials. This board was essential to the country’s victory in the war. It was in charge of switching the country’s production from a peacetime one to a wartime one.

The Office of Price Administration (OPA) helped control the rising cost of living in the United States. The OPA had the right to control wages and prices of goods and services. There was a shortage of many goods such as gasoline, sugar, and meat. The OPA set up a rationing system of distributing goods to be sure everyone received a fair share. The OPA issued coupon books to help regulate purchases.

Paying for the War

Between 1941 and 1945, the federal government spent more than $320 billion on the war. This was twice as much money as the federal government had spent from 1788–1941 which was 10 times the cost of World War I. To raise that much money, the government increased taxes and sold war bonds.

Minorities in the Military

At least 500,000 Mexican Americans joined the armed services. Almost 25,000 Native Americans, including 800 Native American women, served in the war. Another 75,000 Native Americans worked in defense plants and shipyards. American women also played a large role in the military. More than 350,000 women served in noncombat jobs in the Army, Navy, Coast Guard, and Marines. Noncombat personnel did not take part in the actual fighting.
About one million African Americans served in every theater of the war. Despite a segregated military, more than 80 African-American officers and pilots were awarded the Distinguished Flying Cross. Dr. Charles Drew, an African-American doctor, developed a system for storing blood plasma, which was badly needed by those wounded in fighting. The contributions of African Americans led President Harry S Truman to end segregation in the military in 1948; however, segregation was still practiced in schools, housing, and public facilities all over the United States. Many African-American leaders thought that efforts in World War II would help their cause more than it did.

Dr. Charles Richard Drew (1904-1950)

Dr. Charles Richard Drew (1904-1950) was born near Burlington, North Carolina. Dr. Drew, an African American physician and surgeon, was an authority on the preservation of human blood for transfusion. He conducted research into the properties and preservation of blood plasma while earning his doctorate at Columbia in the late 1930s. He developed efficient ways to process and store blood plasma in “blood banks.” In the early years of World War II, he directed and organized the blood-plasma programs of Great Britain and the United States. He tried to get the authorities to stop excluding the blood of blacks from plasma-supply networks.

Japanese Americans

Japanese Americans were one group that did not benefit from the growing opportunities in wartime America. When the war broke out, many Japanese Americans lived on the West Coast of the United States. Although most were United States citizens, they faced severe discrimination. Many Americans feared the Japanese Americans would act as spies for Japan. Some Americans and government officials suspected them of planning to sabotage, or destroy, American war plants.

There was no evidence that Japanese Americans had worked against the United States. However, frightened politicians and military men pressured President Roosevelt into removing them from the West Coast. In 1942 there were 112,000 Japanese Americans who were sent to internment camps in the West. Two-thirds of the Japanese Americans sent to internment camps were native-born United States citizens.
Internment camps differed from the concentration camps of Nazi Germany. Japanese Americans were not tortured or murdered. However, the internment camps were like prisons. They were wooden shacks and had only the barest necessities. Food, medical care, and schools were inadequate. The internment camps were also surrounded by barbed-wire fences. Japanese Americans were kept under armed guard until 1944.

Japanese Americans had to sell their homes and businesses at a financial loss. Life in the American camps was extremely unpleasant. The people suffered and were humiliated by the government's actions. Without just cause, the government had violated these people's rights.

Despite this harsh treatment, 25,000 Japanese-American men volunteered to fight for the United States. One-third of the men were from the internment camps; the rest were United States Japanese-American citizens from Hawaii where there was no internment policy. They served heroically as a unit in the 442nd Regimental Combat Team in Italy and France. The second-generation Japanese Americans were called Nisei (ne sa). The Nisei soldiers suffered more than 9,000 casualties and earned more than 18,000 individual awards. This unit received more awards than any other division in the history of the United States. President Truman welcomed the 442nd home in 1946 with these words: "You fought not only the enemy, you fought prejudice—and you won."

Many Americans were ashamed of the treatment of the Japanese Americans during the war. In recent years, the government has attempted to make up for the discrimination. In 1988 a sum of $20,000 was paid to each survivor of the internment camps, who also received an apology from the United States government for the harm caused in violating their civil rights during World War II. Their personal and financial losses, however, were far greater.

American Culture

The war renewed prosperity for many Americans. Full employment provided workers with money—a welcome change from the depression years. Marriages increased and the birth rate rose rapidly. However, many of these romances did not survive the long separation. Bad news came in
"Dear John" letters ending relationships. The United States had the highest divorce rate in the world of 31 percent in 1945, double the prewar rate. As a result of the population increases, housing was scarce, and so were desirable goods such as automobiles and chocolate.

In 1944 to ease returning servicemen into civilian life, Congress passed the GI Bill of Rights. This provided education and training for veterans paid for by the federal government. It also provided federal loans to veterans buying homes, farms, or businesses.

African Americans made many gains in jobs and in the military. Schools, housing, and public facilities, however, remained racially segregated. Riots occurred in several northern cities where many African Americans had moved to find jobs.

City dwellers found entertainment at movies, theaters, and supper clubs. "Swing" music made Benny Goodman and Glenn Miller popular leaders of dance bands. Teenagers, called "bobby-soxers," made a young singer named Frank Sinatra famous during the war. USO clubs, often hosted by movie stars, assisted and provided entertainment for servicemen.

Summary

The United States shifted its industry to wartime production to prepare for war. Government agencies were created to help direct wartime production, regulate the economy, and pay for the war. Wartime brought new opportunities in labor and the military for women and minority groups. The rights of Japanese Americans, however, were violated.

Scientists invented new weapons, and researchers introduced important drugs. Almost every American was affected in some way by World War II.

Who’s Who during the Cold War

Winston Churchill
George Marshall
Joseph Stalin
Harry S Truman
Introduction

The United States emerged from World War II as a world power. Its factories and land had not been damaged, and its economy was stronger than ever. Americans looked forward to a peaceful and prosperous future. Some wanted the country to return to a position of isolation. To do so, however, would have cut off the United States from trading with other countries. Equally important, the United States realized that all countries needed to work together to ensure that the weapons of mass destruction developed during the war would not be used again. The nations of the world needed to cooperate with one another to establish world peace.

United Nations

In 1945 the former Allied Powers and 50 other nations established the United Nations (UN). The organization worked to solve postwar problems. Today it continues to work for peace in the world and to solve world problems. The UN has six major branches with special duties, as shown on the diagram on the following page.

The UN also has other agencies: the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development promotes world trade; United Nations Educational, Scientific, and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) tries to promote understanding between people of different nations; and the Office of United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) distributes food, clothing, and health supplies to poorer, war-torn countries; and the United Nations Children’s Fund (UNICEF).

The Strength of the UN

The greatest strength of the UN is its desire to help keep the peace between nations. The organization brings member nations together so they can try to solve their problems without going to war. Its special agencies have shared important health and agricultural ideas and aided poor countries.

The greatest strength of the UN is its desire to help keep the peace between nations.
The United Nations

Security Council
Made up of 15 members. There are five permanent members: United States, Russia, Great Britain, France, China; each of these has veto power. The other 10 members have no veto power and are elected to two-year terms.
- investigates situations that threaten peace
- tries to enforce world law
- sets UN policy
- takes action only if no permanent member uses veto power

General Assembly
Made up of delegates from all member nations; each member has one vote.
- serves as main meeting place
- discusses world problems
- suggests actions to Security Council
- votes on actions
- controls UN budget

Secretariat
Made up of the Secretary General and his or her staff. The Secretary General is appointed by the General Assembly for a five-year term.
- handles day-to-day affairs
- coordinates work of all UN agencies

Economic and Social Council
Made up of 54 elected members.
- deals with nonpolitical matters
- coordinates work of special agencies
- cooperates with member nations to improve standards of living
- operates commissions on children, refugees, and human rights
- works for improved economic and social conditions

Trusteeship Council
Made up of members administering trust territories, permanent members of Security Council, and elected General Assembly members.
- administers territories that are not self-governing
- helps these territories work toward independence

International Court of Justice
Made up of 15 members who decide cases by majority vote. They meet in the Hague in the Netherlands.
- tries to settle legal disputes between nations
- gives legal opinions to General Assembly
Checks and Balances of the UN

One aspect of the UN is the veto power of the five permanent members that sit on the Security Council. A veto is a vote against something. Any UN action can be stopped if only one permanent member uses its veto. Because of this, some consider the power of veto a weakness of the UN.

Beginning of the Cold War

At the end of World War II, the United States and the Soviet Union were the two most powerful countries in the world. Their wartime alliance, however, ended. The two countries began a struggle to influence other countries. They did this partly to better their trade relations with those countries. The Soviet Union also wanted to spread communism; the United States wanted other countries to develop democratic governments. The two nations did not use military force against one another in this war. Instead, this was a war of ideas. This battle between the United States and the Soviet Union is called the Cold War.

Atomic Energy Controls

The growing differences between the United States and the Soviet Union became clear at the United Nations. The United States was the only nation with the atomic bomb. Other countries wanted their own atomic bomb. The United States, however, wanted to use atomic energy for world good. The United States was also afraid of what other countries would do if they had atomic bombs.

The United States proposed a plan to set up a world agency to control and inspect atomic energy plants everywhere. In return, the United States would destroy its atomic bombs. Russia vetoed the plan but demanded that the United States destroy its atomic bombs anyway. The United States refused.
Broken Agreements

The Allied Powers agreed on plans to handle the problems of the defeated nations such as Poland and Germany. Soon after the war, the Soviet Union began to break these agreements. For example, the Soviet Union broke its promise to allow for democratic elections in territories it had occupied after the war. The Soviet Union felt justified in staying in Eastern Europe. They had suffered more than 20 million deaths and much damage. They felt open to attack from the west and needed friendly neighbors—Communist countries they could control.

The Iron Curtain

Joseph Stalin, the leader of the Soviet Union, wanted to control the countries around the Soviet Union. He felt that the Soviet Union would be safer with Communist neighbors. At the end of the war, Soviet soldiers occupied seven Eastern European countries. The soldiers would not allow those countries to hold free elections. The Soviets stayed in control and, one by one, the nations became Communist. Prime Minister Winston Churchill of Great Britain warned that the Russians were dividing Europe with an Iron Curtain, or an imaginary line separating Communist and non-Communist countries that could not be crossed. See map of Iron Curtain countries on following page.

After the war, Germany was split into a Communist and non-Communist country. The Allies divided Germany and its capital city, Berlin, into four zones. The zones would be governed by the Allies until the Germans held free elections. The Soviet Union controlled East Germany and East Berlin. The United States, France, and Great Britain controlled West Germany and West Berlin.

Berlin Airlift

The Soviets wanted East Germany to have a Communist government. They also wanted to take over all of Berlin. In 1948 Stalin decided to force the three other Allies out of Berlin. Soviet soldiers placed a blockade at the border of East Germany and around West Berlin. The Soviet Union did not allow food or supplies to enter West Berlin. Starting in June of 1948, the United States decided to airlift, or fly in, supplies to break the blockade around West Berlin. The Berlin Airlift lasted almost a year before Stalin lifted the blockade.
The conflict between the United States and the Soviet Union developed gradually. Each side tried to win over other countries to their way of government. Both the United States and the Soviet Union built many nuclear weapons, which they used to threaten each other. The Cold War lasted from the end of World War II until 1989, when Soviet Communism ended and the Berlin Wall was torn down.

The Truman Doctrine

Stalin wanted to spread communism around the world. He tried to set up Communist governments in Greece and Turkey. President Harry S Truman feared that if Greece became Communist, then Turkey would also fall behind the Iron Curtain. In early 1947, President Truman acted quickly to send both countries military and economic aid. The aid helped weaken the power of the Communists there. His effort to keep Greece and Turkey free was called the Truman Doctrine. The Truman Doctrine led to the containment policy against the Soviet Union. It was an attempt to stop the spread of communism around the world.

The Marshall Plan

Americans feared that Communists would try to set up Communist governments in the war-torn countries of Europe, including West Germany. The United States government believed that by helping European countries, it could stop the spread of communism. In June of 1947, United States Secretary of State George Marshall announced a plan to send economic aid to Europe. Congress approved $5.3 billion to help rebuild Europe. The European Recovery Program (ERP), which became known as the Marshall Plan, lasted until 1951. The total cost was $12 billion, but it helped Europe to rebuild and remain an American ally.
In the following years, the United States offered economic and technical aid to the poor, free nations of the world. Billions of dollars went to promote better lives for poor people and stop the spread of communism.

Tensions Increase

At the end of World War II, only the United States had an atomic bomb. In September of 1949, however, the Soviet Union exploded its first atomic bomb. The British arrested a scientist who confessed to giving important secrets about the bomb to the Russians.

In the same year, the Chinese Communists forced the non-Communist Chinese out of China. The head of the non-Communist government was a World War II American ally. The Chinese Communists, friends of Russia, now controlled China. Communist China, too, soon exploded its own atomic bomb.

Tensions between the United States and the Soviet Union continued to grow in the postwar period. While their conflicts remained a Cold War, people feared that the tensions would lead to a nuclear war.

NATO and Other Anti-Communist Alliances

The United States developed a system of alliances, or agreements, to halt the spread of communism. The first alliance was the North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO) set up in 1949 between the United States and 11 Western European countries. Members of NATO promise to help each other if an enemy attacks.

The United States joined into other major alliances to protect regions of the world. In 1954 the United States and other world military powers set up the Southeast Asia Treaty Organization (SEATO) to protect Southeast Asia against Communist takeover. In the 1960s, the United States renewed the Organization of American States (OAS), an alliance between the United States and Latin America since 1889. For almost 50 years, the United States continued to work to prevent the spread of communism in the world.
Summary

After World War II, the United Nations was formed to help keep peace in the world. However, increasing tensions between the Soviet Union and the United States led them into a Cold War. The Soviet Union wanted to spread communism to other nations. The United States wanted to block the spread of communism. Consequently, the United States offered aid to war-torn and poor countries to help them resist communism. The United States also entered into alliances to protect other countries against Soviet and Communist aggression.

Use the information below to answer the following using short answers.

Cold War

A cold war takes place when two countries engage in war without firing weapons. Instead, the countries fight in other ways. Both try to impose their economic and political systems on other countries. Both want to control territory and wealth. Each country continues to amass large arsenals, or stores of arms, for national defense. In the Cold War between the United States and the Soviet Union, these arms often were nuclear missiles.

This situation developed between the United States and Soviet Union at the end of World War II. The United States was a democratic country in which the people were free to make personal decisions. The Soviet Union was a Communist nation in which the government controlled the people. The Cold War later spread to other countries.

Introduction

President Harry S Truman, a Democrat, was in office in the first years of the Cold War, from 1945–1952. In 1952 the Republican candidate, former General Dwight D. Eisenhower or "Ike," was elected President by a large number of votes. During his two terms in office, the Cold War between the United States and the Soviet Union continued. In the United States during the 1950s, African Americans protested unfair treatment and expanded their civil rights movement.

Foreign Relations

During the 1950s, the United States government faced many foreign problems. In Korea, a civil war broke out. An American spy plane was shot down over the Soviet Union, and the United States entered the war between Communists and American allies in Indochina, or Southeast Asia. To complicate world affairs, the United States and the Soviet Union developed the potentially devastating H-bomb, or hydrogen bomb—a bomb that used hydrogen to create a more powerful blast.

Civil War in Korea

In 1950 Communist North Korea, aided by Communist China, invaded non-Communist South Korea. At President Truman's request, the United Nations Security Council agreed and sent an international force under UN support to defend South Korea. The UN forces, however, were unsuccessful in restoring peace in Korea.

After his election in 1952, Eisenhower arranged an armistice, or a cease-fire, between North Korea and South Korea. They agreed to stop fighting and hold talks. The talks resulted in the division of Korea at the 38th parallel in July, 1953. North Korea remained Communist, and South Korea would stay non-Communist. Despite many years of fighting and many lives lost, Korea remained divided as before.

America's experience in Korea is important for several reasons. First, it was the first time the United Nations sent forces to fight in a war. Second, it was the first hot conflict, or military engagement, between the United States and a Communist country.

Third, the United States Congress supported President Truman's decision not to declare war on North Korea and to limit America's military actions. Fourth, the United States had the atomic bomb but chose not to use it. Korea was not an American victory, but it did stop Communist expansion without starting a world war.

Relations with Soviet Union

Nikita Khrushchev became the Soviet leader in 1953 after Joseph Stalin died. Khrushchev and Eisenhower held talks to try to ease tensions between the Soviet Union and the United States. Khrushchev wanted to be able to live peacefully with the United States. The desire for peaceful coexistence improved relations between the two countries.

Other Foreign Problems

New foreign problems faced President Eisenhower during his second term in office. In 1956 a democratic uprising against the Communist government in Hungary was crushed by the Soviets. In the oil-rich Middle East, there was fighting between Egypt and Israel, and unrest in Iran and Lebanon. In 1958 the Soviet government again told the Western powers they had to get out of West Berlin.
Eisenhower also had to decide how to deal with problems in Indochina. Indochina is a region in Asia that contains three countries: Laos, Cambodia, and Vietnam. France controlled the area until the Japanese drove them out during World War II.

When the war ended, the French returned, but the Vietnamese wanted their independence. They turned to the Chinese Communists for help in fighting the French. The Vietnamese defeated the French in 1954, and the country was divided into North and South Vietnam. North Vietnam was Communist; South Vietnam had a non-Communist government.

A man named Ho Chi Minh (hoh chee mihn) was the leader in North Vietnam. His followers were called Vietminh. South Vietnam was controlled by the former Vietnamese emperor. The emperor mistreated the people, and by 1957 Communists in South Vietnam began to fight him. The South Vietnamese Communists called themselves Vietcong.

The United States first became involved in Indochina by sending France money and supplies to fight the Vietnamese Communists. When the French were defeated, the United States government believed the Communists would take over the region. The United States decided to help South Vietnam fight the Vietcong. The emperor was replaced by Ngo Dinh Diem (noh din zee em), a leader with a more favorable attitude toward the United States, and President Eisenhower continued to send aid to South Vietnam.
The H-Bomb Increases the Threat of War

By 1953 both the United States and the Soviet Union had developed a new bomb—the H-bomb. It was 500 times more powerful than the atomic bomb. The United States also had a fleet of new long distance B-52 planes which could deliver the bomb to Russia. There were fears that the new global conflicts would result in a nuclear war, a war in which atomic weapons would be used.

People were relieved when, in 1959, President Eisenhower and Premier Khrushchev agreed to hold a series of peace talks. Their talks ended in 1960 when the Soviets shot down an American spy plane, the U-2, over Russia. The United States had to admit it was spying on Russia. Khrushchev refused to meet again with Eisenhower.

Events in Latin America

In 1958 the United States tried to prevent communism from spreading to the Western Hemisphere by improving relations with Latin America. Vice President Richard M. Nixon went on a goodwill tour to South America, but he received an angry reception. Some countries in Latin America viewed the United States unfavorably for taking advantage of the Latin American people. Meanwhile, Fidel Castro led a revolution in Cuba and set up a Communist government there, only 90 miles from the United States.

Events in the United States

Problems and events within the United States were as important as those occurring overseas. A United States senator was increasing Americans' fears of communism. African Americans continued their civil rights movement. American culture was equally affected by the changing world: technology influenced art, and the automobile continued to change how and where people lived.
A New Red Scare

At home, in 1953, many Americans were alarmed by the worldwide Communist threat. Republican Senator Joseph McCarthy used this fear to further his own career. He accused the Democrats of letting Communists have jobs in the United States government. McCarthy claimed he could prove his charges.

President Eisenhower did not believe McCarthy, but he issued an order concerning government employees. The order said that anyone suspected of Communist activity could be fired. During this new Red Scare, or fear of communism, many people lost their jobs because they were accused of being a Communist. Investigations showed that McCarthy had lied. In 1954 the Senate censured him, or condemned his misconduct.

The Civil Rights Movement Begins

America's schools and public facilities were still segregated, or separated on the basis of race, in the 1950s. The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People (NAACP), a leading civil rights organization which began in 1909, used court cases to end segregation. In 1954 the NAACP won its most important victory when the Supreme Court decided that segregated schools were unconstitutional. This important decision was called Brown v. Board of Education of Topeka, Kansas. The Court insisted that schools must be desegregated, or open to all races. The Southern states tried to resist integration. White mobs became violent when African-American children tried to enter public schools. President Eisenhower sent federal troops into Little Rock, Arkansas, to protect African Americans entering schools. Across the South, several schools closed to prevent African Americans from attending them.

Meanwhile, in Montgomery, Alabama, African Americans began to actively protest segregated public facilities. In Montgomery and throughout the South, city buses were segregated. African Americans had to sit in the rear of the bus or make room for white passengers when necessary. In 1955 an African-American woman named Rosa Parks was arrested because she would not give up her bus seat to a white man. African Americans decided to boycott, or refuse to use, the Montgomery buses until they were desegregated.

Rosa Parks (1913- )

Rosa Parks was born in Tuskegee, Alabama and is best known for protesting the segregation laws, which led to the 1955 Montgomery bus boycott in 1955. After briefly attending Alabama State College, she married Raymond Parks, a barber and activist. Parks worked as a seamstress and was involved in several African-American organizations—the Montgomery chapter of the NAACP, the Montgomery Voters League, and other civic groups.

On December 1, 1955, Rosa Parks was arrested for refusing to give up her seat on a public bus to a white man. This was a violation of the city's racial segregation ordinances. The African-American community was inspired by Parks' strength, and a young pastor, Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., led the Montgomery bus boycott. For 381 days, the majority of the African-American community refused to use public transportation. The boycott lasted until December 20, 1956, when the United States Supreme Court declared that Montgomery's segregated seating was unconstitutional.

For Rosa Parks' role in igniting the successful campaign and for her role in the anti-segregation movement, she became known as the "mother of the Civil Rights Movement." In 1957, she and her husband moved to Detroit, Michigan where she later founded the Rosa and Raymond Parks Institute for Self-Development. Parks also received the Congressional Gold Medal, the highest honor a civilian can receive in the United States.

The boycott, which lasted over a year, was led by an African-American Baptist minister named Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. This encouraged boycotts throughout the United States. The Supreme Court finally ruled that segregation on buses was not legal. The federal government began to make laws which protected the civil rights of African Americans. For years to come, African Americans continued to use nonviolent protests in the civil rights movement. Nonviolent refers to the use of peaceful methods.

American Society Experiences Change

By 1960 the American population reached 179 million. One reason for the increase was that the American birthrate was up. Another reason was the arrival of thousands of refugees from wars. Refugees are people seeking safety from hostile or unfair political situations. These refugees came from countries all over the world.

People were on the move in the United States. They were moving from farms to cities. By 1960 over half of all Americans lived in urban areas. City dwellers were moving to the suburbs, or residential areas near cities. People in the North were moving to the South and Southwest. African Americans continued to move from the South to find jobs in the factories of the North. Most people moved in order get better jobs and improve their lives. Unfortunately, jobs were filled quickly and many African Americans met discrimination in the North as well.

A Growing Economy

Modern technology, or machines, made work faster and more productive. This made it possible to keep up with the increased demand for goods and technical services. The Gross National Product (GNP)—the value of all goods and services produced in a year—rose from $350 billion in 1945 to $720 billion in 1965.

The computer was one of the new technological advances. The computer enabled industry to become automated, or self-moving, and also required workers with better educations. There were many opportunities for those with training; unemployment rose, however, among untrained and unskilled people.

Salaries increased, and the standard of living for most Americans continued to improve. People were able to buy new machines that made life easier. They could buy television sets, washing and drying machines, deep freezers, and many other new products.

Impact of the Automobile

For many, the most important item was a new automobile complete with radio and turn signals. Increased use of the automobile created a need for new highways. In 1956 the federal government began to build a modern interstate highway system across the United States called the National...
System of Interstate and Defense Highways. One of the main purposes of the interstate highway system was to offer quick mobilization of United States military troops in case of an attack on United States soil by Cold War enemies.

As more people traveled, gasoline companies began to sell gas on credit cards, which allowed people to make purchases on credit. The automobile made travel from work to home faster. This increased the growth of suburbs around cities and led to two new problems—traffic jams and air pollution.

Growth of Education

After World War II, more people than ever began to enter schools and colleges. The government provided money for a program called the GI Bill of Rights that helped veterans go to college or technical schools.

A Russian achievement spurred America's interest in science education. In 1957 the Soviets sent Sputnik, the first artificial satellite, into space. Fearing the United States could not compete with the Soviets, the federal government funded new programs in space and engineering.

American Art and Literature

Modern technology also influenced the arts. Adventurous new artists like Jackson Pollack created a new painting style called abstract expressionism. These paintings did not look like photographs or copies of their subjects. They did not present people or landscapes in their natural forms. Instead, these paintings showed their painters' own private visions. This led some people to wonder if these works could be called art.

Writers tried to explain complex issues about the changes taking place in American life. Their work ranged from books about the war to the loneliness of individuals in modern society.
Election of 1960

President Eisenhower could not run for a third term in the 1960 election. The 22nd Amendment, ratified in 1951, limited a President to two terms in office. Vice President Richard Nixon became the Republican candidate. His Democratic opponent was Senator John F. Kennedy from Massachusetts.

The 1960 campaign was the first in which candidates held televised debates, or arguments. Millions of American voters watched the Kennedy and Nixon debates. Television greatly affected the American election process. It gave millions of people the chance to both hear and see their candidates simultaneously. Some say this benefitted Kennedy because he was viewed as being more handsome and charismatic than the elder Nixon.

The 1960 election results were close, but John F. Kennedy defeated Richard Nixon and became America’s 35th President.

Summary

The Korean War ended with an armistice which left North and South Korea divided between Communists and non-Communists. President Eisenhower and Soviet Premier Khrushchev tried to ease Cold War tensions with their agreement to peacefully coexist. Khrushchev broke off the dialogue with Eisenhower when an American spy plane was shot down over Russia. In addition, fighting began or continued in a number of countries in the world, including Vietnam, throughout the 1950s.

In the United States, people experienced a Red Scare when Senator Joseph McCarthy claimed that Communists had gained government jobs. During the Eisenhower administration, the issue of civil rights grew to a large political movement to ultimately end segregation through needed legislation. American society underwent many changes during this period as new technology became available. Technology inspired new interests in education and new styles of art and literature.

Introduction

John F. Kennedy, at age 43, was the youngest man ever to be elected President of the United States. He also was the first President born in the 20th century, and the first to be a Roman Catholic. Kennedy was a popular figure who was handsome, intelligent, and a hero of World War II. He called his administration the New Frontier and set his sights on making the United States a better place for the rich and the poor, the young and the elderly, and white and African Americans alike.

He took office in 1961, the beginning of a decade that looked bright with promise. His short administration, however, was filled with many of the same problems previous Presidents had faced. The United States and the Soviet Union were still fighting the Cold War in many parts of the world. And at home, African Americans were still working for fair and equal treatment.

Conflicts with Cuba

Fidel Castro had set up a Communist government in Cuba, an island just 90 miles south of the tip of Florida. Castro accepted financial and military aid from the Soviet Union. This meant that the Soviet government had gained a foothold in the Western Hemisphere. The United States saw this relationship between Cuba and the Soviet Union as a potential threat.

The Bay of Pigs

In April of 1961, the Central Intelligence Agency (CIA)—the agency set up to gather information on foreign countries and affairs—informed President Kennedy of a plan to invade Cuba, which had been formulated by the previous President. The CIA believed that, with American help, the Cuban people would overthrow the Castro government. President Kennedy approved the plan for 1,500 anti-Castro Cubans trained by the United States to carry out the invasion. Anti-Castro Cubans opposed Fidel Castro and the government he led.

The invasion took place at the Bay of Pigs in Cuba on April 17. However, the anti-Castro Cubans did not receive enough support from the Cuban people. Instead, all anti-Castro forces were captured or killed. The next day Soviet Premier Nikita Khrushchev told the United States to stop any further military action against Cuba or the Soviet Union would help Castro.

Embarrassed, President Kennedy halted any further invasion. The remaining 1,113 troops captured by Cuba were ransomed, or exchanged for money, and freed. The Soviets continued to help Cuba and cause problems for President Kennedy.

The Cuban Missile Crisis, October 1962

The Soviets were secretly building missile bases on Cuba and some missiles could reach United States cities in minutes. If missiles had been launched from Cuba, they could reach 1,000 miles in 12 minutes, 1,500 miles in 15 minutes, and 2,000 miles in 17 minutes.

The Cuban Missile Crisis

The next big conflict with Cuba came in October of 1962. Photographs taken by an American U-2 spy plane showed nuclear missile bases in Cuba. The Soviet Union was moving nuclear missiles onto these bases. Once in place, these missiles could be fired at American cities. Advisers urged President Kennedy to attack Cuba and take the nuclear missiles, but Kennedy resisted because he feared the Soviet Union would attack the United States as a result.
Instead, on October 22, he went on television to tell Americans about the missiles. He also warned Khrushchev to stop sending missiles into Cuba. He announced that the United States would place a naval quarantine, or blockade, around the island. No ships carrying nuclear weapons would be allowed to dock at Cuban ports.

Some Soviet ships were already on their way to Cuba. For three days, the world waited to see what Kennedy and Khrushchev would do. Nuclear war seemed likely. Then Khrushchev made personal contact with President Kennedy, and the two men discussed a solution. The Soviet ships heading for Cuba turned back at the blockade. On Sunday, October 29, Khrushchev announced that the missiles would be removed from Cuba. The Cuban Missile Crisis had ended. After this incident, Kennedy and Khrushchev set up a hot line between Washington and Moscow. This telephone line would enable the two leaders to discuss a future problem before it turned into a crisis. This incident struck fear in many Americans. Some families even constructed bomb shelters, or reinforced underground dwellings, to protect themselves from possible attack by other countries.

Hot Line

In 1963 the United States and Russia established a hot line between the White House and the Kremlin. The hookup enabled leaders of the two countries immediate teletype communication should another crisis arise. This was another indication that the Cold War was thawing.

Alliance for Progress

In August of 1961, Kennedy arranged for a program of financial aid to many Latin American countries. He called his program the Alliance for Progress. The United States gave Latin American countries $80 billion to help reduce their poverty and build their industry. The nations accepted this aid, but some people felt that the leaders of these nations often misspent and wasted the money.

Much of the money went to governments who were anti-Communist but were headed by dictators. Many Latin Americans felt the alliance was aimed more at stopping communism than improving their lives. In the end, the Alliance for Progress did little to end poverty or improve relations with Latin America.
The Berlin Wall

A divided Germany continued to cause problems between the United States and the Soviet Union. Khrushchev wanted all of Berlin. He demanded that France, Great Britain, and the United States leave West Berlin by the end of 1961. In response, Kennedy decided to increase military support of West Berlin to protect it from Soviet takeover.

Suddenly, in August of 1961, the East German and Soviet soldiers began to build a wall to separate East and West Berlin. Khrushchev wanted the world to see the wall as a symbol of Communist strength. He really built the wall, however, to keep East Germans from escaping to West Germany.

Kennedy responded to the wall by sending an additional 1,500 soldiers to West Berlin. In 1963 Kennedy made a personal trip to West Berlin to show that the United States intended to stand by the city. The Berlin Wall remained, but the President had stood up to the Soviet Union without going to war.

Trouble in Asia

During the 1960s, the United States sent troops and money to Asia to fight the spread of communism. The United States tried to help countries who were America's friends. The Soviets, Chinese, and other Communist groups were doing the same to gain allies.

Laos

Laos is a small country in Indochina next to Vietnam. During Kennedy’s administration Laos had a pro-Western government, or one that was friendly to the United States and its allies. Some Laotians, however, were Communists. They wanted to overthrow the pro-Western government. These Communists were supported by the Soviet Union.

President Kennedy was advised to send in American troops to defend Laos’s anti-Communist government. To help avoid any military confrontation, the British arranged for United States and Soviet representatives to meet at a conference. The representatives worked out a plan for a coalition government in Laos. In a coalition government, opposing political parties take part in running the country’s government. The coalition worked for two years. Then the Communists withdrew, and fighting began once more.

Vietnam

Another Asian country, Vietnam, also was the target of a Communist takeover. North Vietnam had a Communist government that was supported by the Soviet Union. The leader of North Vietnam was Ho Chi Minh. The government of South Vietnam was pro-Western. Its leader was Ngo Dinh Diem. South Vietnam received aid from the United States.

Communist groups in South Vietnam, called Vietcong, wanted to overthrow Diem. The Vietcong wanted to reunite North and South Vietnam under one Communist government.

In 1959 Ho Chi Minh began supplying military arms to the Vietcong along a network of paths. The paths used the border of Vietnam, Laos, and Cambodia and became known as the Ho Chi Minh Trail. (See map above.)

President Kennedy sent United States military advisers to help South Vietnam resist the Vietcong. By 1963 there were 16,000 American military advisers in South Vietnam. However, Ngo Dinh Diem and his corrupt administration became very unpopular with his people. They said he was not doing enough to improve their lives. On November 2, 1963, Diem was overthrown and murdered. After his death, the war between the Communists and pro-Western forces increased as the Soviet Union and the United States increased their military and financial support of North and South Vietnam.

A major factor which led to further United States involvement was the belief in the domino theory. The domino theory was the idea that the fall of one nation to communism would lead to the fall of its neighbors. The United States, therefore, felt that it was important to stop the spread of communism in Vietnam before it spread to the rest of southeast Asia.

Achievements of the Kennedy Administration

Not all of President Kennedy’s time was spent on Cold War problems. He had many new ideas and programs to improve Americans’ lives in the United States.

The Peace Corps

One of President Kennedy’s favorite programs was the Peace Corps. The Peace Corps trained and sent thousands of young Americans to work in underdeveloped countries. They served as teachers, doctors, and engineers. They tried to help poor countries improve their way of life.

The Space Program

When President Kennedy took office, the Soviets were ahead in space research. They had sent Yuri A. Gagarin, a Soviet cosmonaut, into full orbit around the world. On May 5, 1961, Alan B. Shepard became the first American astronaut to experience space flight. However, his flight only went 115 miles into the sky and lasted about 15 minutes.

Kennedy had a vision of an American pioneer space effort. He asked Congress to provide $40 billion for the space program. He promised the United States would land a man on the moon by 1970. The National Aeronautics and Space Administration (NASA), set up under Eisenhower in 1958, was in charge of America’s space program.
The Nuclear Test Ban Treaty

By 1963 countries belonging to the Communist alliance began to split apart. This new climate encouraged President Kennedy to try to ban, or stop, certain kinds of nuclear testing.

In September, the United States Senate approved a treaty between Great Britain, the United States, and the Soviet Union. The countries agreed to outlaw nuclear testing above ground and underwater. More than 100 nations eventually signed the Nuclear Test Ban Treaty.

A New Frontier

President Kennedy called his domestic plan the New Frontier. He sent many bills to Congress he hoped would improve life for many Americans. Congress did approve funds for urban renewal and job training. Congress also agreed to increase the minimum wage to $1.25 an hour and cover more workers under the Social Security Act. Congress, however, did not approve many of Kennedy’s other plans such as providing medical care to the people who were 65 or over and giving financial aid to needy college students.

Civil Rights

Kennedy wanted to do more for African Americans, but southern members of Congress opposed his ideas. In 1962 he signed an order to desegregate public housing. In addition, he appointed several African-American men to serve on federal courts. He also set up a committee to study equal employment opportunities.

In 1961 people of different races called freedom riders rode buses from the North to the South to protest segregation in bus stations. When they reached the South, white mobs attacked and burned their buses. The Interstate Commerce Commission, however, banned segregation in interstate bus terminals.

In 1962 riots broke out when an African-American man, James Meredith, enrolled at the University of Mississippi. President Kennedy sent in several thousand federal troops to restore peace. Throughout the South, sit-ins and demonstrations were staged to end segregation in schools, hotels, and restaurants.
Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. and the Southern Christian Leadership Conference (SCLC)—an organization committed to ending racism across the United States—led nonviolent demonstrations in Birmingham, Alabama, in 1963. They were attacked by the police, who used electric cattle prods and fire hoses on them. In June, Medgar Evers, head of the Mississippi National Association for the Advancement of Colored People (NAACP), was murdered. The same month, Alabama Governor George C. Wallace prevented two African Americans from enrolling at the University of Alabama. Wallace promised to uphold segregation forever.

Americans no longer could ignore the racism against African Americans in the United States. Television brought each violent event directly into their homes. It was clear that new federal laws were required to provide civil rights protection for African Americans. President Kennedy sent a new civil rights bill to Congress in June of 1963 to increase and protect the rights of African Americans.

The March on Washington

Supporters of the new bill organized a march on Washington to put pressure on Congress. The chief organizer was Bayard Rustin, who had helped King form the SCLC and was now his main advisor. The march in Washington on August 20, 1963 became known as the March on Washington for Jobs and Freedom. Estimates on the size of the crowd varied from between 250,00 to 400,000. Speakers included Phillip Randolph, Floyd McKissick, John Lewis, Roy Wilkins, Whitney Young, and Walter Reuther. King was the final speaker. He made his famous speech “I Have a Dream,” and he described his vision of an America where everyone was free and equal.

The march was televised. Viewers all over the country could see and hear Dr. King give his powerful speech. Television was helping slowly to change the way Americans felt about civil rights and equal opportunity in the United States.
The President Is Assassinated

In the fall of 1963, President Kennedy traveled through the South to build support for his domestic programs. He went first to Florida and then to Texas. He received an enthusiastic welcome.

On November 22, 1963, President Kennedy planned to make a short stop in Dallas, Texas. He drove in a motorcade through Dallas. As his car passed Dealey Plaza, the President was shot in the head and through the neck. President Kennedy was pronounced dead by the time his car reached the hospital.

An investigation was set up by Chief Justice Earl Warren to establish the facts surrounding the President's murder. The Commission found that a gunman named Lee Harvey Oswald acted alone in the killings. Since the investigation, evidence has been found that has led some to believe a larger conspiracy was behind the act.

Summary

President John F. Kennedy's administration faced many of the same foreign problems President Dwight D. Eisenhower had encountered. Kennedy was able to solve some of them, including the Cuban Missile Crisis and Khrushchev's threat against West Berlin. However, the United States continued to be drawn deeper into the Vietnam conflict and its civil war.

At home, President Kennedy worked to improve the lives of Americans. He persuaded Congress to fund many programs that helped people. During his administration, television became an important source of information for everyone and helped alert people to some of the injustices practiced against African Americans. African Americans organized marches and other protests that led to fairer treatment. President Kennedy was assassinated before the end of his first term in office.

Introduction

Vice President Lyndon B. Johnson became President on November 22, 1963, when John F. Kennedy was assassinated. He continued many of the programs begun by President Kennedy to help improve life in the United States. He continued this effort after he was elected President in 1964. His programs aided the country’s poor and elderly, and helped African Americans continue their civil rights movement. He was unable, however, to survive the political unrest that resulted from the Vietnam War.

President Johnson’s First Task

President Johnson’s first task was to lead the United States through the days following Kennedy’s tragic death. The man arrested in Dallas for murdering President Kennedy was Lee Harvey Oswald. Oswald had a mysterious history and had once lived in the Soviet Union. His past eventually raised many questions about the Kennedy assassination. Oswald, however, never had a chance to talk about his part in Kennedy’s murder. Two days after Kennedy’s assassination, Oswald was shot and killed.

Television carried 24-hour coverage of the events following Kennedy’s death. Americans watched in disbelief as Jack Ruby shot Oswald while the police were moving him from a police station to a more permanent jail.

The Warren Commission

President Johnson appointed a commission headed by Chief Justice Earl Warren to investigate Kennedy’s murder. After nine months, the Warren Commission concluded that Oswald was the lone assassin: they believed Oswald was the only person to shoot Kennedy.

However, they could not answer all the questions about Kennedy’s assassination. In the years that followed, people continued to wonder about the assassination. As recently as 1992, new investigations suggested that more than one person acted to assassinate the President.
President Johnson and the Kennedy Legislation

President Johnson served 30 years in the House of Representatives and the Senate before becoming Vice President in 1961. He was skilled at passing legislation, or laws, through Congress. President Johnson persuaded Congress to pass many of the programs of the late President Kennedy. Johnson’s social and economic programs were nicknamed the Great Society.

Civil Rights Act of 1964

One of the most important pieces of legislation passed during the Johnson administration was the Civil Rights Act of 1964. This act said there could be no racial discrimination where federal funds were used. The law opened public places and facilities to African Americans and tried to protect their right to vote.

Congress Strengthens the Right to Vote

Some southern states had a poll tax. This was a tax people had to pay in order to vote. It kept poor people and African Americans from voting. Congress ratified the 24th Amendment in July of 1964, ending the poll tax.

War on Poverty

Johnson persuaded Congress to set aside money to provide for job training programs and loans to needy college students. In addition, the food stamp program was enlarged to help people on welfare, and states received money for hospitals and health centers.

Wilderness Act of 1964

Cities received millions of dollars to improve mass transit and highways. Congress also cut personal income taxes, which gave people more money to spend. Congress showed its concern for the environment by passing the Wilderness Act of 1964. This act set aside nine million acres of land for national forests.
Election of 1964

Lyndon B. Johnson was the Democrats' choice in the election of 1964. His Republican opponent was Barry M. Goldwater. Goldwater had voted against many of the Kennedy-Johnson bills. He also seemed to favor the use of small nuclear weapons in the Vietnam War. Goldwater scared voters and was badly defeated by Johnson.

![Flags of the Democratic and Republican parties]

Lyndon B. Johnson was the Democrats' choice. Johnson won 44 states in the 1964 election. Barry Goldwater was the Republicans' choice. Goldwater won only six states.

The Great Society

As part of the Great Society, President Johnson talked of waging a War on Poverty, his program to aid the poor. One important bill passed by Congress was the Medicare bill. This bill provided low-cost hospital insurance for citizens over the age of 65. Another important bill was a one billion dollar aid program for education. It helped needy students attend school. Schools receiving any of these funds were required to obey desegregation laws.

In 1965 the Appalachian Regional Development bill gave over one billion dollars to help people in the poor areas of the Appalachian Mountains. A Housing and Urban Development bill provided funds to build public housing and help low income families pay rent.

Other acts by Congress and President Johnson aimed at improving housing, transportation, and the environment. Congress created two new cabinet positions—the Department of Housing and Urban Affairs (HUD) and the Department of Transportation (DOT). A rising concern about pollution prompted Congress to take first steps toward cleaning up the nation's air and water.
Johnson and Kennedy Legislation

DISCRIMINATION

1964 Civil Rights Act of 1964 said there could be no racial discrimination where federal funds were used. It outlawed discrimination in jobs, housing, and public accommodations.

1964 Twenty-fourth Amendment ended the poll tax in federal elections.

CITIES AND ENVIRONMENT

1964 Department of Housing and Urban Development was created to improve housing by creating federal housing programs.

POVERTY

1965 Medical Care Act established Medicare and Medicaid programs.

1965 Appalachian Regional Development Act set aside money for highways, health centers, and resource development in poor areas of the country.

Inflation

The 1964 tax cut gave Americans more money to spend on goods and services. At the same time, the government also was spending more money on new programs. As a result, there was inflation. In other words, prices and the cost of living were rising. The government was going into debt. The national debt—money owed by the government—grew from almost four billion dollars in 1966 to over $25 billion in 1968.

A Social Revolution

The pace of social change increased in the 1960s. Two major groups led the fight for social changes—African Americans and America’s youth.
African Americans

The President and Congress were slowly desegregating the South. They passed a strong Civil Rights Act in 1964 that opened public places, including restaurants, to African Americans. Schools in the South were desegregating. At the same time, civil rights groups worked to register African-American voters. Some whites violently worked against desegregation. In 1964 three civil rights workers were murdered in Mississippi. Others were beaten, or their homes were burned. The violence frightened some African Americans away from voting.

In March of 1965, Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., helped support African-American voter registration. He led peaceful marches through Selma, Alabama. As Americans watched on television, the marchers were attacked by the Selma police. Governor Wallace did not try to protect the marchers.

Bus boycotts continued around the South. Protesters staged sit-ins on college campuses and at segregated lunch counters.
President Johnson finally ordered the Alabama National Guard, federal marshals, and the Federal Bureau of Investigation (FBI) to protect the marchers. Federal troops escorted the marchers on the four-day walk from Selma to Montgomery.

Voting Rights Act of 1965

Six months after the marches in Alabama, Congress passed the Voting Rights Act of 1965. The act provided federal protection at voter registration sites. African-American voter registration rose 50 percent over the next year.

Urban Revolt

Change for African Americans was slower in the North and in large cities. Many African Americans were becoming frustrated, or upset. They wanted conditions to improve much faster. As a result, the urban civil rights movement began to split apart. One group wanted to continue to protest in a nonviolent way. Another decided violence was the only means to end racial discrimination.

In the summer of 1965, riots broke out in Watts, an African-American neighborhood in Los Angeles. In 1967 riots by African Americans destroyed areas of Newark, New Jersey, and Detroit, Michigan. Forty-three people were killed and 5,000 left homeless in Detroit.

The riots caused a white backlash, or turnaround in white opinion. Many white people condemned the riots. Congress failed to pass any new civil rights legislation in 1966–67.

The Youth Rebellion

Children born during the baby boom shortly after World War II grew up in the 1960s. Many of their parents were affluent, or well off. These children had been surrounded by countless technological gadgets and were the first television generation. Many tended to be aware of social and environmental problems. They knew about the threat of nuclear war and, in the 1960s, they were concerned about the Vietnam War.

Some of these young people rebelled against their parents’ way of life and the institutions they felt were responsible for many of the country’s problems. They left home to join the counterculture, or a culture different from their parents. They were called hippies. They grew their hair long and dressed in different ways. Drug use was a feature of the lifestyles of some of the hippies.

Many youths throughout the country became involved in political movements. College campuses became centers for the New Left, groups who wanted to change American politics. The followers of the New Left blamed the United States for many problems in the world.

Organizations such as the Students for a Democratic Society (SDS) called for revolution in America. Their heroes included well-known Communists. They held frequent antiwar protests against American involvement in Vietnam. Their protests received a lot of television coverage. Many ordinary Americans disliked these outspoken young people.

Vietnam and the Antiwar Protest

Although the United States was fighting in Vietnam, the United States Congress had not declared war on North Vietnam. Instead, in August of 1964, Congress approved the Gulf of Tonkin Resolution. This gave President Johnson the power, as Commander-in-Chief, to wage war against North Vietnam.

By the end of 1965, President Johnson had sent nearly 200,000 American troops to Vietnam. By 1968 casualties, soldiers who were either killed, wounded, or missing in action, numbered more than 100,000. In February of 1968, the Vietcong and North Vietnamese launched a powerful attack against the South Vietnamese called the Tet Offensive. The North Vietnamese gained control of many South Vietnamese cities. Eventually, American troops and the South Vietnamese Army regained most of South Vietnam. This victory, however, was at a great cost. Many people were killed and much land was destroyed. In 1969 the number of American troops in Vietnam reached 545,000. The Tet Offensive is considered a turning point in favor of the Vietcong and North Vietnamese.

Television brought the horror of Vietnam directly to American viewers. As time passed, they were becoming divided over Vietnam. Some people believed the United States should fight Communist aggression. Some felt the United States was not fighting aggressively enough to prevent the Soviets and Chinese from aiding North Vietnam, and as a result, more American lives were being lost fighting a war that could not be won. Others, however, believed the United States had no business fighting in Vietnam. The antiwar protesters—people against the war—grew louder and more violent. Many feared Johnson was not telling them the truth about the war.

The Democrats Split

Democratic candidates for the 1968 presidential election debated the Vietnam War. Democratic Senator Eugene J. McCarthy decided to run against President Johnson. McCarthy wanted to end the war in Vietnam. Another Democrat, Robert F. Kennedy, who was also against the war, entered the race. Robert Kennedy was the brother of John F. Kennedy. McCarthy and Kennedy received strong support. President Johnson had lost his support because he had continued the war in Vietnam.

On March 31, 1968, President Johnson made a television address. He discussed the war in Vietnam and called for peace talks. However, he surprised everyone when, at the end of his address, he announced that he would not run for reelection. Three days after Johnson dropped out of the campaign, North Vietnam agreed to peace talks.

A Violent Campaign Year

On April 4, 1968, the day after North Vietnam agreed to peace talks, Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., was assassinated in Memphis, Tennessee. Riots, burning, and looting took place in 100 cities, including Washington, D.C. Americans watched both the assassination and the riots on television.

The country was reeling from President Johnson’s announcement, the death of Dr. King, and the riots. Then, on June 5, Senator Robert F. Kennedy also was assassinated after making a campaign primary victory speech in Los Angeles. As Americans mourned the deaths of these men, they tried to make sense of the sudden violence.
The Chicago Convention

Vice President Hubert H. Humphrey announced after President Johnson dropped out of the election that he would enter the Democrat’s campaign for President. The Democratic Convention was held in Chicago in July of 1968 and was unlike any ever seen. The Chicago convention hall was ringed with barbed wire and protected by armed guards.

Large groups of antiwar protesters camped out on the grounds around the convention hall. Police squads were on hand to control the angry protesters. The antiwar groups yelled at and made fun of the police, calling them pigs. The protesters and police wound up fighting before television cameras.

Summary

President Johnson was successful in getting Congress to pass legislation to improve life for African Americans and citizens who were poor or elderly. He also tried to fight an unpopular and costly war in Vietnam. He served during a violent period in American history. Finally, he decided not to run for reelection in 1968.

In the United States, African Americans organized to end racial discrimination. Their frustrations led to riots in many cities. Rebellious youths organized against the Vietnam War and worked for other social changes.

Understanding the National Debt

The federal government gets most of its money from taxes. The money is used to pay for government. Sometimes the government makes more money than it spends. This is called a surplus. When government spends exactly what it makes, there is a balanced budget.

When government spends more money than it makes, there is a deficit or debt. The deficit is called the national debt. The national debt refers to how much money the government owes.

Introduction

The United States experienced many problems as the 1968 presidential election approached. The Vietnam War had caused many American casualties, yet the American forces fighting along with the South Vietnam Army were no closer to victory than when the United States had first entered the war. At home, antiwar protesters marched in the streets and held rallies to voice their opposition. The Republican candidate for President in 1968 was Richard M. Nixon. Nixon promised to end the Vietnam War and to return law and order to the streets of America. He had served in Congress and as Vice President under Eisenhower. He narrowly defeated Democrat Hubert H. Humphrey in the election and took office in January of 1969.

Nixon and Law and Order

In the 1968 presidential campaign, Richard M. Nixon ran on a platform that included law and order. Many Americans felt that crime in the 1960s had gone unchecked. Indeed, statistics showed that crime had risen. During the 1968 Democratic convention, potential voters watched on TV as protesters of the Vietnam War battled with Chicago police. This TV scene helped to uphold Nixon’s argument.

Some people felt that the Supreme Court had been too lenient, or easy, on people accused of crimes. In May of 1969, President Nixon nominated Warren Burger as Chief Justice. Nixon said that Burger would strictly follow the Constitution. This was understood to mean that Burger would stand up for old American values such as belief in law and order.

During the 1960s, some Americans criticized the decisions of the Supreme Court. Some were unhappy about the Court’s decisions to end segregation. Some Americans objected to the Court’s decisions on separation of church and state. In 1962 the Court had decided school prayer was unconstitutional. The next year, it outlawed Bible reading in the classroom. The Court was accused of weakening religious faith in young people.
Some Americans disagreed with the Court's decisions about the laws for treating people who were accused of crimes. In Gideon v. Wainwright (1963), the Court made states provide legal counsel for poor defendants. Under Miranda v. Arizona (1966), the Court ruled that police had to inform an accused person of the right to remain silent. The accused also had the right to have a lawyer present when questioned by police.

The Vietnam War Ends

During his campaign for the presidency, Nixon had also promised to end the Vietnam War. His plan was to gradually turn the fighting over to the South Vietnamese and withdraw American forces. Nixon did begin withdrawing small numbers of troops after his election. Antiwar protesters, however, wanted the United States out of Vietnam immediately.

Although Nixon had withdrawn some troops, he also expanded the Vietnam War into Cambodia. He believed that North Vietnam was using Cambodia as a base for its operations. When this information became public, many antiwar protesters became violent. On May 4, 1970, four students were shot by National Guardsmen during an antiwar demonstration at Kent State University in Ohio. Congress responded to the invasion of Cambodia by trying to limit the President's power to make war. Instead, the President ordered massive bombings on North Vietnam.

Peace talks between the United States and North Vietnam already were taking place in Paris. Nixon hoped the stepped-up bombing would force...
North Vietnam to stop fighting and sign a treaty. Then, on December 30, 1972, without an explanation, Nixon halted the bombing. In January of 1973, the two sides finally signed a cease-fire. United States Secretary of State Henry Kissinger received the Nobel Peace Prize for his work on the cease-fire and treaty.

Results of the War

The United States lost an estimated 58,000 soldiers in Vietnam. Over 1,200 were missing in action (MIA). As the United States withdrew, the North Vietnamese took over South Vietnam. The country was united under a Communist government. For the first time in over 10 years, the United States was no longer fighting in Vietnam. And for the first time the United States had experienced defeat in war.

Efforts at Détente

Détente (day tahnt) is a French word that means to ease up or relax. It came to mean a relaxing of the Cold War tensions between the United States and the Soviet Union. In 1971 President Nixon surprised the American people by going to China to meet with Chinese Communist leader Mao Zedong. The United States had never recognized the Communist government in China. Nixon’s historic trip improved relations with the Chinese.

In 1972 the President made another historic trip. He went to Russia to meet with Soviet leader Leonid Brezhnev. They signed a treaty to work together to limit nuclear arms. The treaty was called the Strategic Arms Limitation Treaty (SALT).

Both China and the Soviet Union had supported North Vietnam during the Vietnam War. Nixon’s official visits to these countries were efforts to create peaceful relations or a spirit of détente.
Americans in Space

As the United States moved into the 1970s, it made great strides in its space program. On July 20, 1969, the first men set foot on the moon. Neil Armstrong and Edwin "Buzz" Aldrin, Jr., left the Apollo 11 spacecraft and landed the tiny space module, Eagle, on the moon. Astronaut Michael Collins, the pilot aboard Apollo 11, circled the moon while the two other astronauts conducted research on the surface. After a decade of research, John F. Kennedy's vision had come true. The United States space program was a success. Americans experienced a great feeling of pride in their country.

Nixon Wins Reelection

President Nixon ran against the Democratic nominee Senator George McGovern in 1972. Nixon easily won reelection, winning the majority of votes in 49 of the 50 states. In 1971 the 26th Amendment had lowered the voting age to 18. Of the few new voters who cast ballots, most voted for Nixon.

Republican "Dirty Tricks"

A lot of people were unhappy because of some "dirty tricks" the Republican Committee to Reelect President Nixon (CREEP) had played on Democrats. After the election, it was discovered that the Republicans had committed many secret, illegal acts against Democrats. One group broke into the Democratic National Committee offices located in the Watergate Apartment complex in Washington, D. C., to steal information on how the Democrats planned to run their campaign. The burglars were caught and a national scandal began.
The Watergate Investigation

The burglary of Democratic headquarters was exposed by two Washington Post newspaper reporters: Robert Woodward and Carl Bernstein. The break-in and subsequent events were known as the Watergate Affair.

President Nixon denied the crime had occurred and helped cover it up. He ordered the Federal Bureau of Investigation (FBI) not to help investigate the crime. Nixon even arranged to pay bribes to the burglars so they would not admit the truth. Meanwhile, the United States Senate set up the Ervin Committee to look into the crime.

The Ervin Committee learned that President Nixon had a tape recording system in his office. The tapes showed that the President had worked to prevent an investigation of the Watergate Affair. At the same time, the Committee learned that the President had helped cover up other crimes his colleagues had committed.

The Vice President Resigns

In 1973 while the Watergate investigation was going on, Vice President Spiro T. Agnew was accused of crimes. He had accepted kickbacks —illegal payoffs—when he was governor of Maryland. As Vice President, he was still receiving kickbacks. The Vice President made a deal with the prosecutors. Agnew resigned, and the court did not press charges. Agnew added to Nixon’s problems.

Nixon Faces Impeachment

To impeach means to charge a high public official with a crime. A special committee of the House of Representatives accused President Nixon of three crimes: (1) obstructing, or preventing, justice in the Watergate crime; (2) abusing presidential powers; and (3) failing to answer questions for the House of Representatives.

The only Presidents to be impeached were Andrew Johnson and Bill Clinton, but the Senate did not convict and both remained in office until their term ended.
President Nixon Resigns

The President’s colleagues advised him to resign before he was impeached. On August 9, 1974, President Nixon submitted his resignation. He was the first President ever forced to leave office.

Gerald Ford Becomes President

When Vice President Agnew resigned in 1973, Representative Gerald R. Ford, Jr. was appointed to take his place. Gerald Ford then became President when Nixon resigned. Ford appointed—and Congress approved—Nelson A. Rockefeller as Vice President. For the first time, the country had a President and a Vice President who had not been elected to their respective offices by the people.

President Ford served the remaining two years of the presidential term. His first major act was to pardon, or to forgive, President Nixon for any crimes he may have committed. This cost Ford much public support in the next election.

Foreign Problems

President Ford kept Henry Kissinger as secretary of state. The two men worked to improve relations with the Soviet Union. They also tried to ease tensions between Egypt and Israel in the Middle East. However, the countries of Indochina—Laos, Cambodia, and Vietnam—continued to fight. President Ford helped many refugees from Indochina come to the United States to escape the war.

The Oil Crisis

In 1973 foreign oil-producing countries formed an organization called the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries (OPEC). They agreed to reduce oil production and raise the price of oil. This caused oil shortages in the United States. As oil prices suddenly soared, inflation also rose.
Election of 1976

In 1976 the United States was 200 years old. The Republican candidates for President were Gerald Ford and Ronald Reagan. Ford narrowly defeated Reagan for the Republican nomination. The Democrats nominated James Earl "Jimmy" Carter, Jr. from Georgia. Carter won the election by a small margin. Many cast their vote for Carter because he was not considered a Washington, D.C. insider who may have been involved in scandal. He took office in January of 1977.

Summary

While President Richard Nixon held office, the first men traveled to the moon, and the Vietnam War ended. Nixon met with the leaders of China and the Soviet Union in efforts to ease the Cold War. Nixon's Vice President Spiro Agnew was forced to resign when it was discovered he had received bribes. Then Nixon resigned rather than face impeachment over the Watergate Affair. Gerald Ford became President, and Nelson Rockefeller became Vice President. Their administration was the first in American history which had not been elected to their respective offices by the American people.

Introduction

In 1976 the United States celebrated its bicentennial, or 200th birthday. The United States is the world’s oldest republic. During the 1970s, Americans could celebrate more than just their country’s birthday. Many movements by the people led to changes in the legal system and social practices that lessened discrimination against minorities and women.

As the Cold War between the United States and the Soviet Union began to wind down, the people of both countries and their governments became interested in limiting the growth of nuclear weapons. This movement to reduce weapons was just one example of Americans’ interest in protecting the environment and making the country and the world a safer place to live.

Ensuring Equal Opportunities for Everyone

We think of the United States as a country built on the ideal of equal opportunity for everyone. By equal opportunity, we mean that everyone will have an equal chance to succeed as a member of our society. Throughout the country’s history, however, this has not always been the case. African Americans spent many years as slaves, living as human property who could be owned. Even after being legally freed, African Americans faced discrimination in the work place, in the courts, and in education.

Other minorities such as Asians and Hispanics have faced similar discrimination. And women, who made up over half of the population and nearly half of the work force in the late 1970s, experienced discrimination in much of their daily life.

Today, a large percentage of minorities, including women, live in poverty. Living in poverty is often a way of life from one generation to the next, and sometimes it is very difficult to break the cycle. Although various social movements have helped change the legal system to insure equal opportunity for everyone, some people are still victims of discrimination.
Ending Discrimination against Minorities

By 1979 the courts had ended legal segregation. Students were often bused across towns to end segregation in schools. Affirmative action programs gave preference to qualified African Americans when they applied for jobs or schools. Later, these programs included women and other minorities such as Native Americans and Hispanics—people from Spanish-speaking nations and cultures—and were designed to create more opportunity for these groups.

Equal Rights for Women

Women made up over half of the population of the United States. They were not a minority group; however, they experienced discrimination in the workplace. Forty percent of American women held jobs, yet women received about half the pay of male workers. Many professions were closed to women.

Women called feminists—believers in equal opportunities for women, particularly in the workplace—organized to advance their status, or situation. To gain fair opportunities, Betty Friedan organized the National Organization for Women (NOW). NOW worked for an Equal Rights Amendment (ERA) to the Constitution. The ERA was intended to end discrimination based on sex. The ERA was never ratified, but women began to turn to the United States courts for justice. The Justice Department sued large businesses to end discrimination against women. And the Equal Opportunity Act of 1972 required businesses to pay equal wages for equal work, regardless of whether a worker was male or female. Although legislation has improved the situation, some problems do still exist.

The Environmental Movement

As early as 1962, the book Silent Spring, by Rachel Carson, had warned about damages to the environment. All over the country, air and water were becoming polluted by wastes from automobiles, industry, and pesticides. During the 1970s, Americans began to show their concern for the environment.
In 1970 President Richard M. Nixon created the Environmental Protection Agency (EPA). The EPA was set up to investigate practices that damaged the environment and to develop ways to protect the environment in the future. Congress passed the Clean Air Act in 1970 and the Water Pollution Control Act in 1972. By the mid-1970s, cities and states were passing laws to regulate the use of a variety of dangerous wastes. National, state, and local governments, along with citizens, were trying to clean up America's soil, water, and forests. Senator Gaylord Nelson helped establish a single day dedicated to environmental awareness. The first Earth Day was held on April 22, 1970.

American Values

The social revolution of the 1960s resulted in changes in American values. Subjects such as nudity, sex, and abortion were openly discussed for the first time. Easy divorce laws resulted in the growth of single-parent families. Religion was still important, but religious services began showing a decline in attendance when compared to the growing population.

Many older Americans were upset by the new values in American society. They feared traditions that the United States had been built on were being lost. These Americans longed to return to simpler times. The phrase generation gap was often used to describe the difference in beliefs between the younger and older generations.

The Carter Administration

President James Earl "Jimmy" Carter, Jr., elected in 1976, believed that the presidency had lost touch with the American people. To bring the presidency back to the people, President Carter wanted an open administration. That is, he wanted to keep in touch with the American people through small town meetings or by call-ins on special radio and TV programs. President Carter's plan was to restore the faith in public officials that was lost due to recent scandals in the federal government. The demands of his office, however, left him little time to stay in direct contact with citizens.

Carter’s administration had many ambitious goals to improve life in the United States. Carter soon found, however, that making changes in government was difficult and that world events were unpredictable.

Panama Canal Treaties

President Theodore Roosevelt had leased the Panama Canal Zone from the government of Panama in 1902. The lease granted the United States control of the Canal Zone for an unlimited time. In 1978 President Carter signed treaties to return the Canal Zone to Panama. He was sharply criticized for the treaties, but the Senate ratified them.

Human Rights

President Carter emphasized protecting human rights all over the world. He protested the way some foreign governments treated their citizens. Many foreign leaders said Carter had no right to interfere in their country’s affairs. Some of these leaders were dictators who had helped the United States prevent the spread of communism. Carter’s critics accused him of increasing international tensions through his efforts to promote human rights.

Camp David Accords

President Carter’s greatest success in foreign affairs came in the Middle East. Since Israel’s birth as a state in 1948, there had been a constant threat of war between Egypt and Israel. President Carter arranged for the leaders of the two countries to meet at Camp David, near Washington, D.C. President Anwar Sadat of Egypt and Prime Minister Menachem Begin of Israel signed a formal peace treaty in 1979. The treaty was called the Camp David Accords. This is considered one of President Carter’s greatest accomplishments.

The Economy

In 1976 the year President Carter was elected, the economy was coming out of a recession, or a downturn, in business. Unemployment was high. So was inflation. Carter’s administration considered increasing government spending to ease unemployment. Government spending, however, would raise inflation. A sharp increase in the cost of oil also was raising inflation. Improving the economy was a constant struggle for the Carter administration.

<td>1970 36¢</td>
<td>$42.90</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1980 $1.19</td>

</tbody>

An Energy Crisis

Having to rely heavily on foreign oil for energy lessened the nation’s control of its economy. President Carter saw the need for energy conservation, or using less energy. A federal Department of Energy (DOE) was created to find ways to conserve and develop new energy sources. Often, the DOE reports were published so the American public could help with the problem.

Revolution in Iran

In 1979 the pro-Western government of Iran was overthrown in a revolution. Iran, located in the Persian Gulf region, had been an important source of oil for the United States. The revolutionaries stopped oil shipments. Americans soon felt the impact of the oil shortage. Oil and gas products became more expensive, and there was a gasoline shortage. Consequently, people had to wait in long lines to buy gas.

American Hostages in Iran

The revolution in Iran was led by the Ayatollah Khomeini, a devout Muslim. A Muslim is a person who believes in Islam. Islam is a religion that believes in Allah as the sole deity, or God. The Muslims overthrew the government of the Shah, or ruler of Iran, who then fled the country. The Iranians wanted the Shah returned to stand trial in Iran.

President Carter allowed the Shah to come to the United States to receive medical care. This angered the new leaders of Iran. In November of 1979, Iranians seized 53 American hostages in the American Embassy in Iran. A hostage is a person kidnapped and held until certain conditions have been met. President Carter and his advisors devised a plan to rescue the hostages, but the mission failed. Meanwhile, Iran went to war with its neighbor Iraq, another Persian Gulf country.
The Carter Doctrine

In January of 1980, the Soviet Union invaded Afghanistan, a country near Iran. (See map on previous page.) President Carter announced that the United States would use force to protect the Persian Gulf region. This was called the Carter Doctrine.

Elections of 1980

Economic inflation and the hostage crisis badly hurt President Carter’s chances for reelection. His Republican opponent was Ronald Reagan, a former movie star and governor of California. Governor Reagan won 489 electoral votes to 49 for Carter. In 1981 Ronald Reagan became the 40th President of the United States.

Summary

During the 1970s, minorities and women worked to gain protection under the law from discrimination. People began to focus more on the problems within the United States. In particular, Americans began conserving the environment from pollution.

President Carter wanted to improve conditions in the United States and the world. However, he had to deal with inflation, unemployment, and a major energy crisis that was made worse by problems in the Persian Gulf region. After serving only one term, he was defeated by Ronald Reagan in 1980.

Introduction

Ronald Reagan was one of the most popular Presidents in America's history. He had been a movie actor who photographed well and spoke with a commanding voice. His popularity increased when he survived an assassination attempt shortly after taking office. He entered office at age 70; his second term ended when he was 78. His remarkable energy inspired confidence in the American people. His programs both at home and abroad, however, had mixed results.

After Reagan served two terms, his Vice President, George H. Bush, was elected in 1988. During the first three years of his term, Bush faced a weakening economy and military action in foreign countries. His administration was unable to improve economic conditions, and as a result, he was defeated after one term, ending 12 straight years of Republican presidency.

The Reagan Administration

When Ronald Reagan was elected President in 1980, the United States faced many problems, both at home and abroad. The country's economy was sluggish, and the cost of living was rising quickly. The Iranian government was still holding American hostages, and the Cold War with the Soviet Union was intensifying. In addition, the United States was openly involved in the political and military affairs of civil wars in El Salvador and Nicaragua.

On January 20, 1981, President Reagan took the oath of office. On that same day, the Iranian government released the American hostages who had been held for 444 days, the result of intense negotiations by the Carter administration during its last days. Reagan's administration had begun on a joyous note.

Reagan’s Domestic Policy

When President Reagan first took office, the American economy was experiencing both inflation and a recession. To strengthen the economy, Reagan began cutting federal spending for social programs. He hoped this cut in spending would lessen the national debt. He then cut personal and corporate taxes, hoping people and businesses would invest more money and stimulate economic growth. He also wanted to increase military spending. His economic plan was called Reaganomics or trickle-down economics.

Congress approved his plan, and inflation came down. The economy, however, stopped moving. People neither bought goods nor invested in business. In addition, decreased government spending for the poor led to the highest levels of unemployment since the Great Depression. After 1982 the economy began to recover, and wealthier Americans began to spend more money. Increased military spending, however, caused the government to sink deeper into debt.

President Reagan strongly believed in private enterprise. This means he believed private businesses should own the industries and farms, and the government should own as little business as possible. Reagan wanted to let private industry handle the nation’s energy needs. He allowed private businesses to lease federal lands to search for gas and oil. Environmentalists strongly disagreed with his strategy. They believed business would damage the environment in its efforts to find energy sources.

Reagan also believed there was too much government regulation of business. He pushed for the deregulation, or ending any government control, of many industries such as the airlines and some banks. He hoped that greater competition would lead to lower prices and better service. The following years saw an upsurge in mergers, or large businesses buying out smaller ones.

Although Reagan’s policies were very beneficial to large companies and affluent individuals, they did not help small businesses or low-income citizens. Despite this, Reagan’s approval rating remained high.
The Election of 1984

President Reagan and Vice President Bush won the Republican nomination without opposition. The Democratic candidates for President and Vice President were Walter F. Mondale and Geraldine Ferraro. Other women had been candidates for the executive office before, but Ferraro was the first serious candidate.

A vast majority of American voters were happy with President Reagan, and he was returned to the White House for his second term by a landslide.

Reagan’s Foreign Policy

President Reagan had long been strongly anti-Communist. American-Soviet relations had declined rapidly in the year following the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan (see Unit 9). The United States foreign policy in the early 1980s was marked by intense hostility toward the Soviet Union. America began a massive arms buildup clearly designed to strengthen its position in a possible war with the Soviet Union.

Soviet-American Relations

Relations between the United States and Soviet Union grew worse. President Reagan warned the Soviets not to interfere in the problems of Poland, where the independent labor union, Solidarity, threatened the power of the Communist Party. Meanwhile, he planned to install modern nuclear missiles in Europe. The missiles would be a part of NATO’s defense against a Soviet attack.

Fearing further Soviet expansion, Reagan began to build a strong defense system. He also wanted a new weapons system, nicknamed Star Wars, that could defend the United States from enemy attack by placing defense systems in outer space. The usefulness of this program has been questioned in recent years.

In 1984 President Reagan agreed to new talks with the Soviet Union, and relations between the two countries began to improve. Relations with the Soviet Union continued to improve after Mikhail Gorbachev became general secretary of the Communist Party and leader of the Soviet Union in 1985. The Soviet Union began a drastic move toward democracy, and Gorbachev represented a new generation of Soviet leaders. He and President Reagan held several important meetings in which they agreed to arms control and signed the Intermediate Range Nuclear Forces Treaty (INF) in December 1987. This treaty eliminated two types of weapons systems in Europe and allowed on-site inspections of military installations. Gorbachev's new policies were just the beginning of the massive changes which would take place in the Soviet Union. Once again, the Cold War appeared to be ending. Americans began to talk about the enormous savings that would result from decreased defense spending.

The Middle East

The Middle East had long been an important region to the economy of the United States. Much of the oil used in the country's automobiles and industries was imported from the Middle East. Consequently, the price of oil had a strong influence on the American economy. During unstable or wartime periods in the Middle East, oil became scarce and its price rose.
After his election, President Reagan said that he wanted a strong United States presence in the oil-rich Middle East. Iran and Iraq were at war, and Lebanon was in a civil war. American marines were sent with an international force to Lebanon to prevent the spread of war. In 1983, terrorists attacked the United States Marine barracks, killing 241 marines. Terrorists are groups who use violence to intimidate a government into granting their demands. Following the attack, the United States pulled its troops out of Lebanon. Later, several Americans were taken hostage in Lebanon. They remained in captivity until 1991.

The President decided to respond to terrorist attacks in the Middle East. He believed that many terrorists were supported by Libya’s President, Mohamar Khadaffi. A quick air attack by the United States on Libya seemed to slow terrorism for a while.

Latin America

The United States also became involved in civil wars in Nicaragua and El Salvador, two poor Central American nations. In Nicaragua in the early 1980s, President Reagan supported the rebels, called Contras, in their efforts to overthrow the Communist government. Congress however, passed the Boland Amendment banning further military aid to the Contras for two years.

In the middle of Reagan’s second term, it was learned that members of his staff had secretly sold arms to Iran with the funds being used to aid the Contra rebels in Nicaragua. A congressional committee investigated this illegal activity in 1987. Oliver North, a lieutenant in the Marine Corps, John Poindexter, the President’s national security advisor, and others were found guilty of supplying arms to the rebels. North’s conviction was overturned, but Poindexter received a six-month jail term. Although President Reagan was never tied directly to the Iran-Contra affair, the scandal damaged his popularity, and many Americans began to believe that Reagan was not sufficiently involved in the affairs of his own government.

Reagan also increased aid to the government of El Salvador, the smallest nation in Central America. He accused the rebels there of being Communists and receiving aid from Cuba and the Soviet Union. The Reagan administration insisted that a rebel victory in El Salvador would give the Soviet Union a foothold in Latin America.
In the tiny Caribbean island of Grenada, pro-Communist rebels overthrew the government. Reagan believed that the Soviets and Cuba were going to use the island as a military base, so in October of 1983, he sent an invasion force to retake Grenada. The rebel government was replaced with a new government who was friendly to the United States. Eighteen American soldiers died in the attack, but many Americans believed that the invasion was necessary for the security of the United States.

The Election of 1988

In 1988 the first African American became a serious candidate for President. He was Jesse Jackson and he called his supporters the Rainbow Coalition. He called his coalition a rainbow because it was composed of people from many different races and cultures, and represented minorities and women. Jackson ran a vigorous, but unsuccessful, campaign for the Democratic nomination, and the eventual Democratic candidate was Michael S. Dukakis, the three-term governor of Massachusetts.
Despite an increasing national deficit, rising inflation, and foreign-policy scandals, most Americans were economically comfortable, and they gave credit to Reagan and Bush for their comfort. Vice President, George Bush, was nominated as the Republican candidate for President over Senator Robert Dole of Kansas in the early primary. Bush selected Danforth Quayle III as his vice presidential running mate.

Bush handily won the presidency primarily with a promise of no new taxes and a balanced budget, despite running what many believed to be a negative campaign. The Democrats kept control of both Houses of Congress, and this would later prove to be a stumbling block for the passage of Bush's programs.

The Bush Administration

President Bush took office at a time when economic recovery that had begun under President Reagan appeared to be stable and strong. Bush began his term committed to not raising taxes, but he soon began to realize that balancing the budget would require taxes to be raised. Bush spent much of his time between 1988 and 1991 trying to solve foreign problems.

President Bush's Foreign Policy

Although the sagging economy was the main problem during Bush's first two years in office, political tension in other parts of the world often overshadowed it. Bush took office amid incredible changes in the Communist bloc nations. Ongoing problems in the Middle East would also require military involvement on the part of the United States.

Eastern Europe and the Soviet Union: The Cold War Ends

The most dramatic changes in world politics in recent times began in March of 1985 when Gorbachev became head of the Communist Party. He restored private ownership of land, ended most government censorship, and held free elections. He reduced the number of troops in Eastern Europe and allowed non-Communist parties to organize in East Germany and Poland.
The Cold War finally came to an end when the people in Eastern European countries rebelled and broke away from Communist control. In the winter of 1989, democratic revolutions took place in all of the Eastern European countries. One of the most dramatic revolutions was the peaceful revolution in East Germany. The people tore down the Berlin Wall that had been built in 1961. East and West Germany were reunited as one Germany in 1990.

By 1990 the United States and the Soviet Union continued friendly relations as Soviet Party leader Mikhail Gorbachev and President Bush met several times to discuss continued plans for arms controls. The United States government agreed to provide economic assistance if the Soviet Union followed its policy of glasnost. "Glasnost" is a Russian term meaning openness. It referred to the Soviet's new efforts at bringing democratic reforms to the Soviet Union.

Old-line Communist leaders were opposed to reform and attempted to take over the party and force Gorbachev out. Fourteen non-Russian republics declared their independence and became known as the Commonwealth of Independent States. Gorbachev resigned and by the end of 1991, after 74 years, the Soviet Union no longer existed. In February of 1992, Boris Yeltsin, President of Russia, and President Bush declared an end to the Cold War and a new beginning of friendship and partnership.

The Soviet Union was not the only nation to break apart in the early '90s. In 1991, Yugoslavia dissolved as ethnic hatreds among Muslims, Serbs, and Croats turned into a brutal civil war, and in 1993 Czechoslovakia peacefully split into two republics. The Cold War was over, but conflict in the nations of Eastern Europe would continue to be a problem for the United States in the years to come.

Invasion of Panama

The end of the Cold War did not mean the end of all wars. President Bush became aware of corruption in the government of Panama in Central America. Manuel Noriega, the dictator of Panama, was accused of operating a large drug ring. Angry that Noriega was misusing his office and shipping illegal drugs to the United States, President Bush decided to take action.
In December of 1989, he sent American military forces on a surprise invasion of Panama. Noriega was captured and a new government was installed. The new government promised to end corruption and restore democracy in Panama.

The Persian Gulf Crisis

Iraq and Kuwait: Operation Desert Storm

In August of 1990, Iraqi dictator Saddam Hussein invaded neighboring Kuwait, defeated Kuwait's small army, and announced to the world that he had annexed Kuwait. Iraq and Kuwait are located in the oil-rich Persian Gulf region. Iraq had the largest military in the Middle East. It also was believed that Iraq had nuclear and chemical weapons that it would use against their enemies. Kuwait, with Saudi Arabia who was afraid it was next to be invaded by Iraq, appealed to the United States for military aid (see map on page 304).

President Bush quickly launched Operation Desert Shield, a plan to send a large number of American troops to Saudi Arabia. President Bush also asked for, and received, United Nation assistance to form an international coalition of 28 nations, including Britain, France, and the Arab nations of Saudi Arabia, Egypt, and Syria, who opposed Iraq's aggression and pledged troops. The United Nations also passed a resolution giving Iraq until January 15, 1991 to withdraw or United Nations' forces would use all necessary means to remove Iraq from Kuwait. The coalition worked frantically for the next five months hoping to resolve the conflict peacefully. Economic sanctions against Hussein were put in place, but neither diplomacy nor sanctions worked as Hussein’s army continued to occupy Kuwait.

Meanwhile, the United Nations began a massive military buildup in the Persian Gulf area. Continued efforts at a peaceful solution failed, and fueled by reports of the atrocities being committed against the people of Kuwait, the war began.

On January 16, the United Nations' forces began intense air strikes against Iraq as the world watched live Cable News Network (CNN) television coverage. Iraq responded with resistance by launching short range ballistic mobile missiles called SCUD missiles against civilian and military targets in Saudi Arabia and Israel. United States Patriot missiles destroyed most of the SCUDs before they could reach their target. The air war lasted for 37 days.

On February 23, the much-anticipated ground war began, and on February 27, Saddam Hussein accepted a cease-fire. Kuwait was liberated. The entire war, which was called Desert Storm, lasted about six weeks. The Iraqi army was devastated. Problems with Iraq, however, did not end. Saddam Hussein was still in power, and United Nations' weapons inspections and economic sanctions provided for in the cease-fire truce continued to be a source of conflict even after Bush was no longer President.

Domestic Issues during the Bush Administration

In the spring and summer of 1991, President Bush attempted to solve some of the problems in the United States. He promised to improve education and to continue to fight illegal drugs and crime. Other issues facing the country included rising costs of health care and the spread of the disease called Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome or AIDS—a contagious disease that limits the body's ability to fight off disease. There is no cure at this time, but new drugs that slow the spread of the virus in a person's system gives doctors and patients new hopes that a cure will soon be found.

The economy was in recession, and the national debt had risen to almost $4.5 trillion. Major cities were experiencing severe economic difficulties. Many American businesses were moving operations to other countries where the price of labor was cheap, leaving many American workers without jobs. In every city, the number of unemployed and homeless people continued to rise.

Hundreds of savings and loan associations (S & Ls) and banks collapsed due to bad investments and corrupt practices by their managers. The taxpayer had to pay for the billions of dollars lost by these companies.
The Election of 1992

President Bush’s popularity with American voters seesawed between 1991 and 1992. His approval rating reached an all-time high in 1991 after Desert Storm, and he was the Republican candidate in the presidential election of 1992. William Jefferson Clinton, governor of Arkansas, was the Democratic candidate, and Ross Perot, a businessman, ran as an Independent candidate. Bush’s lack of attention to the sinking domestic economy and his broken promise of no new taxes led to his loss in the 1992 election in which Clinton received 43 percent of the popular vote. Bush received 38 percent of the vote, and Perot received 19 percent.

Summary

President Reagan began his presidency on a high note as American hostages were released by Iran. Reaganomics, however, did not improve the American economy until 1982. Although his plan reduced inflation, it increased recession. By the end of his presidency, the economy had grown stronger. Reagan believed that the federal government had too much power. He worked to cut back federal spending and regulations. His poor relations with the Soviet Union gradually improved.

The Cold War ended when democratic revolutions took place in Eastern Europe. During President Bush’s first three years in office, he sent United States troops to fight in Panama and Iraq. In Bush’s third year in office, he faced many problems in the United States, including a faltering economy, an increase in crime, and a decline in the public opinion polls. President Bush was defeated for reelection in 1992, ending 12 years of Republican control of the White House.

Introduction

William Jefferson "Bill" Clinton, the Democratic governor of Arkansas, defeated George H. Bush in 1992 and became the 42nd President of the United States. He was the first Democrat in 12 years to hold that office. Clinton's campaign was based on economic issues, tax policies, health care, welfare-cost concerns, and the large national debt. Even as he waged his campaign, Clinton's character and integrity were questioned and this issue would surface again. However, after he took office, the economy began to improve, and the scandals that threatened the Clinton presidency seemed to have little negative effect on his ability to run the country.

The Economy of the '90s

President Clinton's economic program offered in February of 1993 targeted reduced government spending, especially in the defense budget and new programs to aid economically deprived individuals and regions of the country. Clinton's economic program included the North American Free Trade Agreement, or NAFTA. This pact admitted Mexico to the free-trade zone created by the United States and Canada. Critics of this agreement warned that low wages would cause industries to move to Mexico, but backers of the agreement predicted a gain in jobs as Mexican markets opened to United States products. NAFTA passed in November of 1993, and the critics and advocates were both right as trade with Mexico increased, but manufacturing plants moved to Mexico, taking with them many low-wage jobs.

The Federal Deficit

Clinton had better luck with a deficit-reduction bill in 1993. In August of 1993, Congress passed a five-year plan that included spending cuts and tax increases designed to reduce the federal deficit or shortage of revenue. Without cutting funded entitlement programs such as help for middle-class people who are elderly, poor children, and people with disabilities, the Clinton plan, modified by Congress, was able to cut the yearly federal budget deficit by one-third between 1992 and 1995. The most effective tool in reducing the federal debt, however, was a growing economy. By 1996, unemployment continued to fall, the stock market prospered, and inflation remained low. Toward the end of the century there was a prominent shift in global demand for information services, rather than industrial and manufacturing services, which also helped the economy. As the century drew to an end, American businesses were doing well, and stocks rose to record high trading prices, though many feared that the stocks were overvalued.

The First Clinton Term

When Clinton took office in January of 1993, the most pressing issues were not related to foreign affairs but rather to problems within the United States. Crime and welfare were the main concerns of voters. Clinton's campaign had stressed rising welfare costs, health care, the recession, and the poor economy, so he immediately began to address these issues. Clinton's Vice President Albert "Al" Gore, Jr., was a former member of the United States House of Representatives (1975-1985) and the United States Senate (1985-1993). Clinton and Gore were the first members of the baby-boom generation born after World War II between 1946 and 1964 to be President and Vice President. Both belonged to the New Democratic Coalition, a group of moderates who wanted to stop wasteful spending on social programs and stress Middle America concerns.

Clinton named women to head the Justice Department (Janet Reno); the Department of Energy (Hazel R. O'Leary); the Department of State, (Madeleine K. Albright); the Department of Health and Human Services (Donna E. Shalala); the Surgeon General (Joycelyn Elders); the Council of Economic Advisors (Laura D'Andrea Tyson); the Environmental Protection Agency (Carol M. Browner); and the Supreme Court (Ruth Bader Ginsburg). He also appointed his wife, Hillary Rodham Clinton, to head the Task Force on National Health-Care Reform. Clinton also named women to the United Nations delegation and the Bureau to the Budget. In his second term he named a woman to head the Department of Labor, Alexis M. Herman.

Welfare Reform

Clinton had campaigned on a pledge to "end welfare as we know it." He proposed giving $10 billion for training, education, and child care so welfare recipients could seek higher-paying jobs. However, Congress refused to approve the increased spending. Congress also legislated restrictions on federal laws that put new obligations on state and local governments without providing funds. As the midterm elections approached, Clinton took no more action on welfare.

Health-Care Reform

Health-care reform, which was a campaign promise, proved to be a difficult task to achieve. A special task force headed by First Lady Hillary Clinton, was given the task of devising a national health care plan. The plan set caps on health insurance premiums and on Medicare and Medicaid payments. The plan also created a national health board to monitor costs and called for employers to pay 80 percent of workers' health insurance costs. To cover the start-up costs, stiff new taxes on tobacco were proposed.

Launched with great fanfare, the 1,342-page health-care bill failed because of public confusion; congressional politics; and intense lobbying by the insurance industry, tobacco companies, retired persons, business and hospital organizations, and the medical profession.

In a less controversial action, Clinton signed a bill that both parties supported which made health care portable. The law made it so workers could transfer their health insurance when they left their jobs, even if the person had a preexisting condition. However, the bill did not establish health care as a part of a federal entitlement program. Lawmakers are hoping to complete the reform of health care before the large baby-boom generation ages to the point of needing health-care assistance.

Crime Bill

Clinton pushed the Brady Bill through Congress in 1993, making it more difficult to buy a handgun. The bill was named after presidential aide James Brady, who had been wounded and disabled by gunfire in a 1981 assassination attempt on President Ronald Reagan. In 1994 Clinton introduced an anticrime bill which provided $30 billion to fund drug treatment, more prisons and police officers, boot camps, a ban on assault weapons, and various prevention programs. After much debate, Congress finally passed a crime bill similar to Clinton’s proposal.

The Election of 1996

Clinton was reelected in 1996, becoming the first Democratic President to be reelected since Franklin D. Roosevelt. He defeated Republican candidate Robert J. “Bob” Dole and the newly established Reform Party candidate Ross Perot. The Republicans kept control over both houses of Congress, and President Clinton and the Republicans leaders promised to set aside the bitter differences that marked Clinton’s first term. They agreed to cooperate in facing the challenges of the 21st century—the expanding global economy and widespread insecurity.

The Second Clinton Term

A strong economy and good working relationship with Congress helped Bill Clinton win his second term as President in November of 1996. Although Republicans kept control of both houses of Congress, they and President Clinton began to cooperate and compromise on legislation. To further assist him in his second term of office, Clinton once again put together a diversified cabinet.
Welfare Reform

In 1996 the Republican Congress created a bill that completely overhauled the welfare system. Welfare reform was passed, giving more power to the states rather than the federal government. This was done in the belief that each state would be able to meet the needs of people in their state better than the federal government. More sweeping welfare changes failed because some opponents thought they were too harsh. Clinton signed the bill, which deeply cut welfare grants and required able-bodied welfare recipients to find employment.

Foreign Issues

Clinton had first taken office at a time when the world was still reeling from the collapse of the Soviet Union. Clinton continued good relations with Boris Yeltsin, President of Russia, which had begun with President Bush at a summit in Vancouver, British Columbia. Yeltsin would later surprise his nation and the world by resigning as President on the last day of 1999. Yeltsin turned power over to Prime Minister Vladimir Putin. In late March 2000, Putin won a first-round landslide to become Russia’s youngest new leader since Joseph Stalin and its second democratically elected President. The breakup of the Soviet Union and the active involvement in the recent Gulf War had placed the United States in a special leadership role as the only remaining world superpower.

During Clinton’s first term, the conflict in the Middle East continued and in September of 1993, he was instrumental in persuading Palestine and Israel to agree to a framework for peace negotiations after years of war. Clinton also took measures to stop North Korea’s development of nuclear weapons and to remove Haiti’s military dictatorship.

United Nation weapons inspections which began after Desert Storm (see Unit 10) continued. However, in December of 1998, a four-day operation called Desert Fox used United States and British planes and cruise missiles to force Saddam Hussein, the dictator of Iraq, to comply with the terms of the treaty concerning the United Nations’ weapons inspections.

In addition to the ongoing problems in the Middle East, the United States was also involved in international movements to aid in other foreign crisis situations. The main areas of concentration were in Africa and Eastern Europe. Protection against terrorism was also an issue.
Human rights issues around the world brought the United States and other North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO) countries into action in Haiti, Bosnia, Somalia, Rwanda, and Kosovo to help protect citizens against either their own governments, or against rebel groups.

The war in Bosnia proved to be the biggest foreign policy challenge Clinton would have to face. Without the strong Soviet government to keep things in check, age-old conflict among ethnic and religious groups surfaced. The United States, along with the United Nations and NATO, tried various diplomatic alternatives that were rejected by the Serbs. The Bosnian Serbs continued their policy of ethnic cleansing which included systematic massacre, rape, concentration camps, and relocation of Muslims. Ethnic cleansing is reminiscent of Nazi Germany’s campaign of genocide against Jews in World War II. In 1996 Clinton sent 20,000 American troops to Bosnia in a peacekeeping effort as thousands and thousands of refugees began to leave their homes and search for a safe place to live.
NATO forces waged an air war against Yugoslavia throughout the first half of 1999 in an effort to stop the ethnic cleansing of Albanian Muslims in Kosovo being carried out by the government of Yugoslav President Slobodan Milosevic. In 1990 Milosevic had been nicknamed “Butcher of the Balkans” because of his support of violence in Bosnia and Croatia, and for war crimes against humanity in Kosovo. In May of 1999, the International Criminal Tribunal in The Hague, Netherlands, indicted Milosevic. Also indicted were four top Serbian aides. Finally, after 78 days of air strikes over Belgrade, a peace plan was offered. NATO suspended the air war and authorized the heavily armed United Nations security force to restore peace and escort more than one million refugees back to their homes. However, the United States refused to help rebuild as long as Milosevic was in power. In September 2000, Milosevic was defeated in Yugoslavia’s presidential elections by Yojislav Kostunica, a law professor. When the new democratic administration of Kostunica took over, the United States and the European Union (EU) worked to lift sanctions imposed against Milosevic’s government and to have Milosevic tried in The Hague, the Netherlands, as a war criminal.

Impeachment Trial

Throughout both of Clinton’s terms, his tenure was blemished by allegations surrounding misuse of campaign funds, illegal business operations, and involvement with other women. In 1998 Clinton was charged with perjury or lying under oath and obstruction of justice by the House of Representatives and impeached. To be impeached means a government official has been charged with “treason, bribery, and other high crimes and misdemeanors” by the House and must face trial in the Senate.

The Senate after much deliberation voted that Clinton’s charges, while serious, did not rise to the level of high crimes and misdemeanors as defined by the Constitution. On February 12, 1999, Clinton was acquitted on the perjury count by a 55-45 majority and on the obstruction of justice count by 50-50. Neither voting result came close to the two-thirds guilty vote necessary to convict. Clinton did not have to leave office, but many experts wondered if he would be an effective President for the remainder of his term. Clinton was the second President to be impeached. Andrew Johnson was impeached in 1868, but the Senate failed to find him guilty by one vote. President Nixon also faced impeachment charges in 1974 for his role in the Watergate scandal, but resigned before his trial date (see Unit 8 page 241).

Social Security Concerns

The graying of America continues to place new demands on programs such as Medicare and Social Security. Social Security pays benefits to retired Americans. In 1996 it took Social Security contributions from three workers to support one retiree. By 2030, however, with an increase in the number of retired persons and the expected decline in the birthrate, there will be only two workers contributing to support one senior citizen. Experts predict that by 2040, one in five Americans will be over 65, and the older-than-85 category will grow at an even faster rate. If Congress fails to restructure, eventually the Social Security system will be paying out more money than it takes in. Some suggestions for Social Security reform are raising deductions, taxing benefits paid to wealthier Americans, and raising the retirement age.

The End of the Century

At the end of the 20th century, America found itself sandwiched between two age groups—the aging baby-boom generation born between 1946 and 1964, and Generation X, composed of persons born between 1965 and 1978. Generation X is the second largest generation after the baby boomers. However, Generation X is a considerably smaller group compared to the baby-boom generation and Generation Y. The largest group so far is Generation Y, made up of persons born between 1979 and the present.
The 21st Century

Each century brings challenges and changes. The 18th century created national institutions and extended our borders to the West. The 19th century created new empires abroad, new cities at home, and industrialization. The 20th century saw medical advances, technological advances, and space exploration.

The new century will bring many challenges. With new challenges come new opportunities. To meet these challenges, Americans have invested in improved education and new technologies. With cooperation and effort, these changes will foster growth and tolerance. The previous centuries brought new ways to either destroy or enrich lives. The outcomes of the 21st century depend on all of us—the voters and decision-makers of the future. New challenges will require each of us to put forth clear thinking, and commitment, and actively involve ourselves as citizens and policymakers as we approach our third century as a nation.

America from One Millennium to the Next

As we head into the next millennium, which begins the year 2001, Americans are faced with new and old concerns. Events around the world and at home helped remind Americans that world problems often have domestic consequences. Terrorism continues to be a growing concern. The bombing of the World Trade Center in New York City in 1993 by Shiite Muslim fundamentalists linked to a radical Egyptian sheik killed six people. Other acts of terrorism by either foreign radical groups or American radicals included bombings of a federal office building in Oklahoma City in 1995 (killing 169 people), the Olympic Centennial Park in Atlanta in 1996 (killing two people), and United States Embassy buildings in Kenya and Tanzania (killing 224 people, including 12 Americans) in 1998. The increase of violence in schools around the country is also a major concern. Many leaders blame violence shown on television, in movies, and in video games, and unlimited access to questionable material on the Internet. Others cite a lack of proper parental guidance, while some blame the easy access to guns. Overall, in America, there is a question of whether or not there is a lack of respect for others and a failure to take responsibility for one’s actions. Lawmakers have been looking for ways to control what children see in the media without violating First Amendment free speech rights.
New opportunities for addressing these concerns call out each day on our streets; in the eyes and hands of artists; in the minds and ideas of inventors and scientists; and in the never-ending search for social justice, individual fulfillment, and international peace.

Summary

Bill Clinton defeated George Bush in 1992 to become the 42nd President of the United States and defeated Bob Dole in 1996. Clinton was the first Democratic President to be reelected to a second term since Franklin D. Roosevelt. Although plagued by scandals, the charismatic President Clinton was successful in aiding the recovery of the nation's economy. By the end of his second term in office, foreign aid, military actions, and domestic violence continued to dominate Clinton's agenda as he struggled to leave a presidential legacy which included something more than controversy.

Leo Diamantstein

Leo Diamantstein was born in Heidelberg, Germany in 1924. He was the middle child in a family of three boys. His family moved to the city of Frankfurt where the following events he describes took place.

Leo Adjusts to Life under Hitler

All went relatively well for our family until 1933. That was the turning point. That year Hitler came to power, fair and square, winning an election. Other right-wing political parties supported him. It wasn’t just the Nazi party who wanted a candidate who stood for law and order. Shortly after he came to power, little by little, Hitler took over. The Parliament was dissolved and a puppet parliament created.

Things started to be very bad for us. One day my brother Maurice and I were walking down the street when a group of Nazi Storm Troopers marched by singing a song which translates, “The heads are rolling, the Jews are crying.” It is very vivid in my mind because I was shivering. I was eight years old. Jewish people were beaten. It became common practice when we saw a bunch of kids coming to go to the other side of the street. There was always a good chance they would attack us, and there were always more of them than us. They carried knives and wore the uniforms of the Hitler Youth.

In 1934 my father decided there was no future for us in Germany, and we decided to leave. Whoever would let us in; that’s where we were going to go. We had our things packed to go to France; at the last moment the French decided they didn’t want any more Jews, and they wouldn’t let us in. The only country that would let us in was Italy. They didn’t even require a visa. In June 1934 we left without taking anything. We were required by Hitler to leave everything behind.
Read the following account about Leo and his family after they move to Italy.

Leo Diamantstein’s family was living in Frankfurt, Germany when Hitler and the Nazi party came to power in 1934. Leo’s father soon saw that there was no future for the family in Germany, and they moved to Italy. Four years later, Germany and Italy formed an alliance called the Axis, and in June 1940, Italy entered the war on the side of Germany. One month later, the Italian special police began arresting all foreign Jews in Italy. In 1941 Leo’s family spent many months in a large Italian prison and lived for about a year in a small village in northern Italy as part of a less strict form of imprisonment known as free internment. Then in September 1943, the Germans occupied Italy and life became much more dangerous for Leo and his family. To escape almost certain arrest by the Nazis and deportment to concentration camps, Leo’s family decided to take the train to Milan, Italy where they had many friends who would help them.

Answer the following to discuss the experiences of Leo.

- How did Hitler’s takeover of the government affect Leo?
- What made Leo’s father decide to leave Germany?
- Do you think Leo’s family would have been successful if they tried to protest, complain to the police, or go to court about their treatment? Why or why not? Would these same actions aid a family under duress in the United States today? Why or why not?
Bert Gosschalk

Bert Gosschalk was born in 1920 in a little village called Wihe in Holland. When he was two or three years old, his family moved to the nearby town of Deventer where he went to school and college. He came from a family of five, two brothers and two sisters. All five survived the war.

In May 1940, the Germans marched into Holland, and it became a part of Occupied Germany. For Jews living in Holland, life changed slowly, but in 1942, Bert and his wife decided to go into hiding to avoid capture by the Nazis. Read the following by Bert as to why they decided to go into hiding.

Bert Recalls Restrictions

On May 10, 1940, when I woke up at six o’clock in the morning, I was already behind the German lines. The Germans had run through town, crossed the river, and we were in an occupied country. It came as a surprise. We were now in occupied territory. It took five years to get to liberation.

For the first few months after occupation, the Germans were busy waging and winning a war. They didn’t have time yet to start with the civilian population. But gradually after a few months, they started tightening up a little bit at a time. It took a while for us to realize what was happening. First Jews were not permitted in the movie theaters. A little sign said Jews Not Allowed. A little while later the Nazi Dutch government started issuing identity cards. If you were Jewish, they put a J on it. Later on we were not allowed in restaurants. Then Jewish kids could not go to public schools. Jews could not go to non-Jewish doctors. There was a special curfew for Jews. The regular population could not leave the house after 11 o’clock at night. Jews were not allowed out after seven o’clock.

Many of these things we could live with. It is only unpleasant, but the bigger things came a little later. First we couldn’t have an automobile or a horse and a cart. Then we couldn’t have bicycles. All bicycles were taken away. We were not allowed to have a radio. All the radios were confiscated. Money and any bank accounts that we might have or stocks and bonds had to be deposited in a certain bank controlled by the Nazis. Jews could only go to stores between five and six in the evening. This was after everybody else had bought out what was available that day. Then we could buy the wilted lettuce or rotten tomatoes, if there were any.

Jews could not have a job so there was no income. We were all moved. We couldn’t live in our own homes anymore. We were told that we had to move to a certain area, a ghetto. We had to start wearing a star on our clothes. Any time we were outside we had to wear a yellow star, the Star of David, with the word Jew in it.

- Make a list of the restrictions Bert describes.
- Imagine such laws were applied today in your community to all families with children ages 11 to 17, and that you must follow the laws or face serious penalties. Write a paragraph, a letter to a friend, or a diary entry describing how your life would suddenly change if faced with such restrictions.
- Describe a typical day and a weekend day. How would your after-school activities change? How would your relationships with friends and other people who were not subject to these laws change?
Rudy Herz

Rudy Herz was born in a very small town called Stommeln on the outskirts of Cologne, Germany in 1925. He came from a family of six children. In the years before Hitler came to power, Rudy rarely experienced any open anti-Semitism. In the following reading, Rudy describes how the Nuremberg Laws affected his family and explains why the family moved from Frankfurt, Germany to the even larger city of Cologne.

Rudy and the Nuremberg Laws

In 1936 the Nuremberg Laws decreed that Jews could no longer have a German, an Aryan, of childbearing age in the house. You had to hire a woman of over 45. We had some young girls cleaning the house for us. They had to leave.

The treatment we got in school also changed. We were not permitted to join the youth groups. Our textbooks changed as well. The textbooks no longer agreed with what my parents and my grandparents told us about world history. The new textbooks took a nationalistic slant. They emphasized the Germanic heritage. We did not have the judgement to know that much of what was in our books was false. Its only purpose was to glorify the Germans. We accepted it because, thinking of ourselves as Germans, we felt that we also had been fighting the Romans with the German national hero Herman the Cherusk. We pictured ourselves among the brave German fighters in the Teutonberg Forest, defeating the Roman General Varus and his superior army.

Before long the local Nazi authorities told my father it would be healthier for us if we moved into the larger Jewish community in Cologne. Those that didn’t move voluntarily were forced to do so in 1938 by an edict from the Reich, the German government. The law stated that all Jews must leave villages of less than 80,000 or 100,000 and move to larger population centers.
In Cologne, my father was no longer allowed to have his grain business. He took over a small transport business. We had two small pick-up trucks and we did hauling until 1940 when all business activity was forbidden to Jews by the German government.

We began seeing signs in the store windows: swastikas and the words, Jews Are Not Welcome Here. People who did not wish to say that on their windows said instead, Aryan Proprietors or Aryan Business. Most merchants had small flags with swastikas flying in front of their stores.

- What was the purpose of these changes? Why might such changes have been popular among the German people, particularly after the signing of the Versailles Treaty?

- What did Rudy think about the way German history had been rewritten in his textbooks? Examine both the positive and negative aspects of strong nationalistic feeling. Consider ways nationalism helps a nation grow by uniting its people. Then consider the negative consequences intense nationalism might have for minorities within a nation.

- In what ways was the daily life of Rudy and his family changing? Why do you think merchants agreed to put up signs saying Aryan Business or Aryan Proprietor? What effect did these signs have on the way people thought about Germans who were Jewish? How did such actions help the Nazis build support for anti-Semitism?

- What might have happened if all the merchants in a community had agreed not to put such signs in their windows and had taken a stand against this treatment of the Jews? Were the merchants who put signs in their store windows in any way responsible for the growth of anti-Semitism?
When the war began, Rudy and his family were living in Cologne, Germany. In this account, Rudy describes his family’s forced move to the ghetto and their separation from other family members.

Rudy in the Ghetto

On September 1, 1939, the newspaper on the corner proclaimed that Germany was at war with Poland. Three days later Germany was fighting France and England as well. I had just turned 14 and to me this was all marvelously exciting. There was a small overpass near my house and I saw a German sentry guarding the railroad with bayonet and rifle.

We had many relatives in Cologne. My father had three sisters. My cousins were also there. In 1941 the resettlement orders began coming. All of our relatives were taken away. We were spared to about the beginning of 1942.

On May 30, 1942, Cologne suffered a devastating bombing raid by Allied forces. Around 1,000 British and American bombers took part. Cologne turned into a rubble heap.

Two months later we received our notice to report to the railhead with 50 pounds of personal baggage. They had old railroad cars with wooden seats, and we were given one compartment for ourselves. We did not know where we were going. We were nervous, but we were still together. My grandmother was with us. We had my small baby sister with us. We had a baby carriage and food. We had taken some water.

I don’t think the train stopped anywhere in Germany for anything: for food, for water, anything. It reached its destination in about three days.

We arrived somewhere in Czechoslovakia. We were told to get out of the railroad car. None of us knew where we were. We got out and started marching. Each of us marched with 50 pounds of baggage. We trudged some five miles to an old fortress where we were met by Czech militia. All of our belongings were inspected for valuables. They were very thorough. Not very many people came through with anything but the bare belongings and some food.
It was still daylight when we passed through the outer gates. We had to pass through a checkpoint. At the other end, families were separated, male and female. My mother with the two youngest children went one way. My father, three brothers, and I went another way. We were sent to an old, two-story house with six or seven rooms. We were assigned a room in which there were already eight men. Several days later we learned that our mother and the two younger children were in a large stone barrack for women.

We did not know where we were until the next day when we saw Czech writing on old stores. We were in Czechoslovakia in the Theresienstadt (Tur-Ray-Zen-Stat) ghetto. Over 60,000 people were crowded into a space that had never housed more than 8,000. By the end of 1944 around 120,000 people were crammed into this ghetto. No privacy whatsoever. We did have our small, assigned space. Our suitcases were there and a few blankets that we put on the floor.

The next morning we were given a ration card for food. A man stood there and clipped our coupons. We were given one cup of coffee, a pat of margarine, two slices of coarse bread, and a teaspoon of marmalade for our breakfast.

After two or three days we were assigned work. All the new male arrivals that were capable had one assignment—grave digger. Because we were young and able to lift a spade, we were marched out to the huge burial grounds. There we dug graves. People, especially the older people, 80- and 90-year-olds, were dying like flies. No food or medical attention. We did this job just long enough to learn the ropes. In the ghetto we learned the ropes very fast. You had to know what to do and where to trade what for what.

Then I found out about a separate building within the ghetto where young people ages six to 18 lived and worked. The work was less horrible than our first job. I was able to get into this with my brothers. My father did not go with us. My mother was still in a barracks for women, with the smaller children.

We made the best of our new life. Books were smuggled in to us by Czechoslovakian Jews newly arrived in the ghetto. We had sort of a library. But we were very much restricted in what we could do. We thought that now that we were in the ghetto we would no longer have to wear the yellow star as we had been forced to do in Germany. But no, even in the ghetto with only Jews around, we still had to wear that hateful yellow star.

Answer the following to discuss Rudy’s life as a teenager in a ghetto.

- Who sent Rudy to a ghetto? What happened to his personal belongings and household goods when he was forced into the ghetto?
- Where was the ghetto located? How did Rudy get there?
- What kept Jews from leaving the ghetto? Why was it difficult to escape?
- What rights, if any, did Rudy have in the ghetto?
- What were the most serious problems the people in the ghetto faced? How did they get food? What kind of work did they do?
- What strategies if any did Rudy use to stay alive and to keep his spirits up?
- What do you think would be the worst part of ghetto life for you—loss of home, isolation from friends, lack of privacy, crowding, hunger, or fear of the future?
- What contact did ghetto residents have with people living outside the ghetto? What can you infer about how non-Jews, living in the communities where ghettos existed, felt about the treatment of the Jews? Why might non-Jews have been reluctant to help Jews in the ghetto? Were the non-Jews in the communities where ghettos existed responsible in any way for loss of the rights of those held captive in the ghettos?
Rudy and his family stayed in the Theresiendstadt ghetto for almost two years. Then in 1944, they were told to prepare to move. In the selection below, Rudy describes what happened next.

Rudy at Auschwitz

In March or April, 1944, we got the dreaded notice that we had been selected for resettlement farther east. The train cars they took us in were actually cattle cars. We entered the cars and sat on our baggage. There was not very much room between us and the roof of the cattle car. Our car had from 80 to 100 people in it so it was quite crowded. We were sitting tight on tight. We had some water and some food but no comfort whatsoever. The cars were sealed. We could not open them from the inside. The windows were small, open rectangles. Perhaps we could have jumped off the train and run into the countryside, but we did not know if anyone on the outside would help us. We thought most civilians would probably turn us in. We could not speak the Czech language. It seemed better to go along with the SS and do what they wanted. By that time the war had been going on four or five years. We thought the end might be in sight and we would be liberated.

Our train left the ghetto at six o'clock in the evening. At night as we traveled, we heard gun shots. We did not know why these shots were fired. After the war, I learned the SS troops were on the roofs of the cattle cars shooting past the windows to discourage people from sticking their heads out. The train was moving at a fairly great speed. We did not know what country we were going through. There was no stopping.

At four o'clock the next afternoon, we arrived in Auschwitz (Ow-Switch) in Poland. When the train stopped, we again thought of trying to escape. But we knew that in Germany most Germans would turn us over to the local authorities for a reward of money or food. We had no way of knowing if the Poles would be any different. Someone would have to hide us or bring us food. We had no money to pay for our keep. So in the end, to keep our family together, we dropped any plans of attempting to escape.
The doors of the cattle car were yanked opened. The first thing we heard was shouts of, “Out, as soon as you can, out. Your belongings you leave there!” Despite this we grabbed what we could and assembled outside. Before us stood an immense rectangle of land surrounded by electrically charged barbed wire. This was the Auschwitz death camp.

We were assembled in long rows and marched between the troops of the SS special death-head division into the camp. We were marched up and down a broad avenue for four or five hours between posts of barbed wire with a huge sign, EXTREME DANGER, HIGH VOLTAGE ELECTRICAL WIRES. We saw guard towers high above us. We saw men with machine guns inside them, but even then we did not know that we were in a death camp. Back and forth and back and forth, they just kept us in motion. As it got closer to one o’clock in the morning, we were more and more desperate. You could hear more and more cries for food.

Finally they set out large boxes. Everybody had to put in their valuables. Women and men were forced to strip off their wedding rings and hand over their prized possessions like lockets of relatives no longer there. Whatever we had, we lost. Those who did not give up their possessions willingly or quickly were beaten. Then we were separated into male and female groups and walked to what they called the B camp of Auschwitz. The women’s camp was separated from the men’s camp by a wide road. There were about 24 barracks for men and the same number for women.

The men in charge were called barracks’ elders or capos. They were German criminals taken from German prisons and sent to oversee the people in the barracks. They made us walk by a crate again and put in our valuables. The only thing I had that they wanted was a leather jacket. I told my father that I regretted having to give my jacket. He said, “Child, if we ever get out of here, I’ll buy you 10 of these.”

The bunks we slept in were in three tiers, lower, middle, and upper. The mattress was just burlap filled with straw. We had not eaten at that time, and we were not to get anything to eat until the next morning.
The Daily Routine at Auschwitz

In the morning we got metal cups and spoons. We were each given two slices of bread and sometimes a pat of margarine or a little bit of marmalade. The coffee was toasted acorns ground up. It tasted terrible. The midday meal was potato soup with maybe a little bit of meat. Potatoes were the main ingredient and the kind of beets you normally feed to cattle. We were already hungry in the Theresienstadt ghetto because we did not get enough to eat. In Auschwitz we were beginning to starve. In the evening we got another slice of bread, some coffee, no marmalade, no butter, no nothing.

Every morning we had the counting of the prisoners. We were arranged in groups of five with just small distances between us. The SS trooper would come by and start counting one, two, three, four, five. If he miscounted, he went over it again. Sometimes we stood there two hours. I kept wondering why none of us tried to overpower this lone guard who had just a small pistol. But what could we have done? There were guardposts on either end and high tension wires in between. We would all have been killed.

We did not know that Auschwitz was an extermination camp or that we could be put to death. We did know that there was always this sickly sweet smell in the air. We saw a large chimney belching smoke 24 hours a day. We saw German military ambulances with the Red Cross symbol on them going back and forth. The Germans had painted the symbol on the vehicles to hide their true purposes from the camp prisoners and from overflying airplanes. Much later we found out these ambulances were carrying military personnel or cyanide poison gas canisters for use in the gas chambers.

We made the best we could of the situation. My younger brother had hidden a book by the German poet Goethe. We read it twice. We read it three times. We memorized it. We quoted from it. We had a deck of cards. We played card games. There wasn’t anything else we could do. Eventually my brother got a job laying a stone road. They gave him a half a portion of food more. But the work was excruciating.
Nothing grew in Auschwitz. There was not a bird, not a living thing, no grass or anything. A drainage ditch ran through the B camp. Daily the SS guards sent prisoners from other camps to lay sod along the banks of this ditch. We were desperate for food. My mother remembered seeing in our small village the geese eating the wild grasses. She knew there were plants growing in the sod that we could eat. She gathered them and whenever we could we ate them. We were starving. We were dreaming of food. We were talking about food. We had not had enough to eat for three or four months already. Yet we hoped in 1944 that the end of the war was in sight.

At Auschwitz people died of hunger because they had come to the camps already weakened. The people who had died were thrown or stacked at the very end of the barracks row underneath the watchtower. They were stacked like cordwood, naked, without dignity. Nobody to close their eyes. They were stacked four feet high. Every 24 hours a cart came. People were simply grabbed by the hand and foot and tossed on there. We knew they were taken to the crematory to be incinerated, but we still had no knowledge of the gas chambers and that people were killed or gassed in such numbers as they were.

Rudy Is Liberated

Around April 24 or 25, officials at the underground factory in Gusen, where we were working, started to burn and destroy documents. We knew then the end was near. The first Red Cross packages began to arrive and the SS disappeared. They silently stole away. They were replaced by Austrian military police, who guarded the camp from then on. We still couldn't get out. We were prisoners, but there was no more work, and we waited.

On May 5, 1945, a tank came up to the barbed wire area where my barracks was located. The conversation was in Yiddish mixed with some English. “We are the American army. Your camp is being liberated. Stay here. You will get soup. The soup column is right behind us. You are free. The American army is behind me, but stay in the camps so that there is no confusion. We assure you that you will be fed." This tank was followed by some jeeps and trucks. The Americans picked up the Austrian military police and took them away. The guards’ rifles were thrown on a pile and set afire by the American troops.

I felt truly like a bird who has flown out of a cage. I did not know what the future would bring. I made my way to Linz, Germany. I went to a hospital. I got number one American food. The first time I ate it, I could not even keep it down. After a while I could eat white bread, some toast. I gradually got a little bit of strength back.

Answer the following to discuss Rudy’s life at Auschwitz and his liberation.

• What part did Auschwitz and other concentration camps play in Hitler’s Final Solution?

• What evidence can you find that the Nazis tried to hide what they were doing at these camps from both the prisoners and the outside world? Why do you think they tried to hide their actions?

• What kept most people from trying to escape from the trains going to the camps? From the camps? How successful do you think escape attempts were?

• What parts of this experience seemed to be most unbearable for the survivors whose testimonies you have read? What parts do you think would be the most terrible for you? Other members of your family?

• How do you think the liberators felt about what they saw?

Abe's Story

Abe Resnick survived the Holocaust to become one of South Florida’s most respected leaders. The following describes portions of his life during the nightmare years, including the years he spent in the Kovno Ghetto.

Abe’s Life before and after Nazi Attack Russia

Abraham Resnickowitz was born in 1924, in Rokishki, Lithuania, a town of 7,000 citizens—50 percent of whom were Jewish. Life in Rokishki before World War II was good. Abe’s family, including his father, a governmental insurance inspector, his mother, and two younger sisters, enjoyed an active social life. Rokishki was a quiet, peaceful town, paved with cobblestone streets. A small lake was situated in the middle of the town, surrounded by shade trees. Once a week the town attracted people from neighboring villages to its outdoor market, which sold delicious foods and beautiful clothing.

As a young teen-age boy, Abe had many friends. Often, they went on outings, riding their bikes from the town into the countryside. There they would meet other friends and sit around campfires singing songs and sharing their future plans. They could not know then that most of their plans would never come true. They could not know then that the peace and serenity of their world would soon erupt into chaos and destruction.

When it was time for formal education, Abe was sent to the Gymnasium, a private institute of higher learning, located in Lithuania’s capital city, Kovno. The years there were good to Abe. He studied hard, focusing on medicine, but also led an active life, filled with cultural pursuits. In 1941, after completing eight years at the Gymnasium, he was ready to apply to a university in Italy to study medicine. Before he had the opportunity to attend medical school, before he even had the opportunity to visit with his parents at the end of the school year, the Nazis attacked Russia, including Lithuania. Kovno was bombed. Abe tried to flee, hoping he could reach home. He was only 150 miles away, but it might as well have been thousands of miles. The roads were shelled and surrounded by the Nazi Army. Abe had no recourse but to return to his apartment in Kovno, where his grandmother, aunt, and uncle also lived.

Abe in the Kovno Ghetto

The Nazis immediately began their campaign of cruelty against the Jews, aided by Nazi sympathizers and local Lithuanian anti-Semites. Women were raped. Children were shot on sight. Within a few weeks, the Nazis formed a small ghetto in an area of about two square miles to hold between 20,000 and 25,000 Jews. Abe, his grandmother, uncle, and aunt were forced into the Kovno Ghetto. Soon after the family was imprisoned in the ghetto, the Nazis announced they needed 500 educated people for a special assignment with a promised reward of extra food. Abe tried to volunteer but was too late, as the quota was quickly filled. Disappointed at a missed opportunity, later to discover that the special assignment was execution. The Nazis had wanted to rid the ghetto of its most educated prisoners, those that might prove to be the most difficult to control. Abe had escaped death, for the first time.

The Nazis demanded that all Jews in the Kovno Ghetto relinquish all their valuables. If any valuables were found on anyone at anytime, all members of that person’s family were hanged. To prove they meant business, the Nazis hanged an innocent Jew in the center of the ghetto. Abe was forced to watch. These and other images of terror and brutality were to become the memories of childhood that would never leave him. Over 50 years later, these memories still haunt Abe.

Four months after the horror began, in October 1941, the Nazis began separating people—some were motioned to the left, others to the right. Abe realized that the older and weaker people were on one side, while the younger and stronger were ordered to the other. He quickly grabbed his mother and pushed her to the side he was on. For a time, he was able to save her.
By now, Abe had heard rumors that most of the Jews in the small towns like Rokishki, his home, were being shot and buried in ditches they had been forced to dig. Witnesses from other ghettos who were transported to the Kovno Ghetto verified these rumors, and Abe heard the devastating news that his entire family had perished—his mother, his father, his sisters. He would never again see their faces. He was 17. He felt completely alone.

Answer the following to discuss the Kovno Ghetto.

- The Kovno Ghetto is one of the most well-known of the ghettos established by the Nazis. Research this ghetto to learn what life was like for those imprisoned within its boundaries.

Abe Escapes the Ghetto and Joins the Russian Army

Abe remained in the Kovno Ghetto until May 1944. He worked hard in forced labor brigades with little food to sustain him. His only goal was self-preservation—to survive—hour by hour, day by day. At this time, only 7,000 of the original 38,000 Jews were still living in the ghetto; the rest had either died due to the inhumane conditions in the ghetto or had been transported to death camps. Now, the Nazis began liquidating the ghetto to rid it of the remaining few, because the Russian armies were approaching. Abe and a few of his comrades knew they had to escape. After careful planning, they eluded the guards and hid in an abandoned house in the ghetto. When night fell, they cut through the barbed wire surrounding the ghetto, and moved quickly in the darkness of the woods. In the morning, they made their way to a nearby village. They were immediately spotted and one of his group was killed by the local militia. Abe and three companions escaped—another reprieve from death.

Abe and his friends decided it would be safer if they moved in different directions. Once they split up, Abe never saw or heard of any of the others again. It was not long before Abe found a group of partisans (underground fighters who banded together against Nazi occupation forces, usually operating in Russia, Poland, and Lithuania) in Lithuania and joined their efforts for a short period of time. A few months later, the army liberated Kovno and Abe then joined the Russian Army, hoping to avenge the death of his family by fighting against the Nazis. Abe became an interpreter for the Russians and subsequently was promoted to a lieutenant in the Russian Army. He participated in liberating Berlin and the concentration camp of Sachsenhausen. Years later he would say that this was one of the momentous occasions in his life.

Answer the following to discuss the role of partisan groups.

- After escaping from the ghetto, Abe joined one of the partisan groups. Who were the partisans? What part did they play in the war effort against the Nazis?

Abe Immigrates to Cuba, Then Must Flee to Florida

Abe remained with the Russian Army until 1947. When he saw the opportunity to escape, he made his way to France and eventually immigrated to Cuba, where he knew a few of his relatives lived. Abe spent 13 productive, happy years in Havana, Cuba. He was able to find some of his relatives; he married, raised two sons, and became a prominent business and community leader.

But his security was short-lived. In 1959, with Fidel Castro’s rise to power as the head of a Communist regime in Cuba, Abe’s freedom was threatened. He and his family were forced to flee from Cuba, arriving in Miami Beach, Florida, in 1961. Abe was 36 years old and was forced to build a new life for himself and his family—again.

Survival was an old game for Abe. He held many types of jobs to keep his family fed, until one day he discovered his talents in real estate. By 1965, he owned many properties in Miami Beach, Florida, and once again rose to prominence in the community as a respected business leader and a dedicated community activist. In 1985, Abe Resnick was elected commissioner of Miami Beach, the first Cuban-Jewish Holocaust survivor to be so honored. He was reelected three times and served until 1993, when he chose to retire. Abe was appointed to the Executive Council of the Holocaust museum.
in Washington, D.C., by President Bush in 1992, and is one of the founders of the Holocaust Memorial in Miami Beach.

Today, Abe is a man at peace with himself, living in Miami Beach with his wife, two sons, and six grandchildren—all of whom are very proud of their grandfather. As Abraham Resnickowitz, he survived the horrors of the Holocaust. As Abe Resnick, he built a life dedicated to serving others—a life based on a commitment to humanity. How proud his parents and sisters would be.

Answer the following to discuss Abe's life.

- What is your definition of a “survivor”? How does Abe meet this description?
- What impressed you most about Abe and the way in which he has lived his life?

Holocaust Survivor Revisits Auschwitz

My Father’s Shoes

By Jeff Jacoby, Boston Globe Newspaper Columnist, 04/15/99

It was in September 1997, during a trip he’d always insisted he wouldn’t take. He never wanted to go back to his native Czechoslovakia, he’d said; never wanted to revisit Auschwitz, where his parents, his brothers, and his two younger sisters were murdered by the Germans in 1944.

But in recent years the hard line softened. He began to talk about showing us the world he had come from. So here he was, back at Auschwitz, arriving not in a sealed boxcar but in a rented van with a driver, accompanied not by his father and mother and hundreds of dazed and famished Jews but by his wife, three of his children, and a guide.

We entered the main administration building, where we hoped to find some documentation of my father’s entry into Auschwitz. But Krysztof Antonczyk, head of the computer unit, had bad news—his staff hadn’t been able to locate any records for Markus Jakubovic, as my father was called in 1944. Disappointing. Suddenly we remembered something. Immediately after the “selection” at the train platform in Auschwitz, those who were not sent to the gas chambers—the lucky ones, the ones who were merely going to be starved and enslaved—were registered and tattooed with a number. And on an impulse, my father at that moment gave a last name that wasn’t his own.

A staff member went to chase down A-10502. We were ushered into a little room to wait. There was a table and some chairs, a colorful tablecloth, framed pictures of kittens and puppies on the wall. A woman poked her head in and asked if we’d like some tea or coffee. Sure, my father said, he’d have some coffee, and she returned with it a few minutes later. And as he sat there, sipping his coffee in the cheery room with kittens and puppies on the wall, I got up restlessly, walked over to the window, and peered out. Below me was the main entrance, and the words over the gate said: ARBEIT MACHT FREI.
In the end Antonczyk wasn’t able to find documentation of my father’s arrival at Auschwitz. But he did turn up evidence of his departure: a page from one of the long lists of Jews who were herded out of Auschwitz on death marches in January 1945. Page 630, Line 21: “Jakubovic, Markus - Slovak Jude.” And something more: a copy of the card recording my father’s entry into Mauthausen, a concentration camp in Austria.

Written evidence. Markus Jakubovic of Legina, Slovakia, had been in Auschwitz; on a death march; at Mauthausen. There it was, in black and white.

After so many years, we had a piece of paper. What we never had, my siblings and I, were a grandfather and a grandmother. What we never had were two uncles and two more aunts. What we never had was a family tree with living branches instead of withered stumps. What we never had were the cousins who would have been born, the stories that would have been told, the memories that would have been preserved.

What we never even had were graves to visit.

Between 1938 and 1945, while the world looked the other way, the Germans and their collaborators murdered one-third of all the Jews on earth, 6 million of them. And my father’s family - David and Leah Jakubovic and their children Franceska, Zoltan, Yrvin, and Alice - accounted for 1 one-millionth – 0.000001 – of the total.

Once I asked my father what had been uppermost in his mind when he was in the camps. Had there been something he always concentrated on, a mantra he clung to, a goal he never lost sight of?

I was hoping, I suppose, for something lapidary. Something like the exhortation of Simon Dubnov, a renowned Jewish historian, who was murdered by a Latvian guard in the Riga ghetto in 1941. Dubnov’s last words were, “Yiddin, schreibt un farschreibt” – “Jews, write it all down.” Perhaps my father would say that he never stopped thinking about one day bearing witness to what he had seen. Or that he was always looking for ways to sabotage the Nazis. Or that he dreamed of revenge. Or that every morning and evening he whispered the Sh’ma, the Jewish credo - “Hear, O Israel, the Lord is our God, the Lord is One.”
This is what my father told me: “I was always careful to watch my shoes. I slept with my shoes under my head, because if you lost your shoes you wouldn’t survive for long.”

It was hardly the answer I had imagined. Shoes? He’s in the middle of the Holocaust, and he’s thinking about his shoes?

But my father was right. If shoes were absolutely essential – and when you are force-marched from Poland to Austria in the middle of winter and you will be shot dead if you fall or lag, they are – then shoes were precisely what he had to think about. The Jakubovic family, awash in blood, was nearly extinct. My father had to survive. The Jews had to survive. Somehow, despite everything, they had to go on, and if shoes could keep this Jew alive, then nothing was more important than shoes.

My father, God willing, will turn 74 this year. He has five children and so far – 13 grandchildren. He keeps the Sabbath and fasts on Yom Kippur and eats matza on Passover. Every morning and every evening, he says the Sh’ma. He is a Jew who survived, and who survived as a Jew. May the memory of those who perished be a blessing.

Nazi War Criminal Diary Excerpts

Nazi War Criminal Adolf Eichmann

Adolf Eichmann was the principal military officer in charge of the Nazi’s mass murder of six million Jews during World War II. After the war, Eichmann escaped from a prisoner of war camp in Germany. In 1960 he was captured again in Argentina by agents of the Israeli government. Eichmann was transported to Israel and put on trial for his Nazi war crimes. The 1961 trial of Eichmann was the first trial televised in the history of television. For many people, this was also their first education about the Holocaust.

Eichmann freely admitted to most of the charges against him. He admitted his role in sending millions of Jews to their deaths. However, he claimed he was powerless to resist orders from his military superiors.

The trial lasted 16 weeks and included testimony from many survivors whose lives were shattered. Eichmann was found guilty on all 15 counts of criminal charges against him. He was hanged and cremated in 1962. His ashes were scattered in the Mediterranean Sea.

Excerpts from prison memoirs of Adolf Eichmann

by The Associated Press, 03/01/00

About the Holocaust:

“I said (in court) that what happened with the Jews, which the government of the German Reich brought about during the last great war, was the most enormous crime in the history of mankind.”

“And I witnessed the gruesome workings of the machinery of death; gear meshed with gear, like clockwork.”

“It was the biggest and most enormous dance of death of all times.”
About his beliefs:

"I had thousands of ideals and I slid, like many others, into a situation from which there was no exit. Time has given me distance to the events....Many things that were valid then, are no longer valid now. Things I considered to be basic values, I have thrown overboard over the years."

About his involvement in the Holocaust:

"Because I have seen hell, death and the devil, because I had to watch the madness of destruction, because I was one of the many horses pulling the wagon and couldn’t escape left or right because of the will of the driver, I now feel called upon and have the desire, to tell what happened."

About his relationship with Jews:

"I was never an anti-Semite."

About the division of labor in his early days in the "Jewish Department" of the Nazi security services:

"Mr. von Mildenstein dealt with the Zionists, I had the Orthodox Jews, and a third employee handled the assimilated Jews."

About the first phase of the deportation of Jews:

"The result was terrible chaos...the timetables of trains were being upset."

Quoting one of his superiors, deputy SS leader Reynhard Heydrich, who he says informed him in the fall of 1941 about the planned genocide:

"The Fuehrer has ordered the physical extermination of the Jews. (A Nazi official in Poland) has received from the Fuehrer the necessary instructions. He was told to use the trenches dug as tank traps. I want to know what he does and how far he has come. Go see him and report back to me on what you have seen and heard."
About his role in the killings:

"I personally had nothing to do with this. My job was to observe and report on it."

"My sensitive nature revolted at the sight of corpses and blood."

About mass executions he witnessed in January 1942 in the town of Minsk in Nazi-occupied Belarus:

"When I arrived at the place of the execution, the gunmen fired into a pit the size of several rooms. They fired from small submachine guns. As I arrived, I saw a Jewish woman and a small child in her arms in the pit. I wanted to pull out the child, but then a bullet smashed the skull of the child. My driver wiped brain particles from my leather coat. I got into the car. Berlin, I told the driver. I drank schnapps like it was water. I had to numb myself. I thought about my own children. At the time, I had two."

About one of his assignments:

"I still remember the work I had concerning a very secret investigation, the background of the dietitian of the Fuehrer...It turned out that the dietitian, based on the Nuremberg (race) laws, was one in 32 parts Jewish. At the time there was such a fuss about it that my boss asked for all the files in the matter. I never heard about this again. Only one thing, that Hitler married his dietitian shortly before his death. Her name was Eva Braun."

Testimony of a Liberator

Leon Bass

Dr. Bass is an African-American soldier who helped liberate Buchenwald Concentration Camp at the end of World War II. The following are excerpts from a talk Dr. Bass gave to students at English High School in Boston.

...The war appeared to be over, and our unit went to a place called Weimar. Weimar today is in East Germany, but at that time there was no East Germany—just Germany.... Immediately about five or of us took off with one of our officers to a place called Buchenwald.... Buchenwald was a concentration camp. I had no idea of what kind of camp this was. I thought it might have been a prisoner-of-war camp where they kept soldiers who were captured. But on this day in 1945 I was to discover what human suffering was all about. I was going to take off the blinders that caused me to have tunnel vision. I was going to see clearly that, yes, I suffered and I was hurting because I was black in a white society, but I had also begun to understand that suffering is universal. It is not just relegated to me and mine; it touches us all. And so I walked through the gates of Buchenwald, and I saw the dead and the dying. I saw people who had been so brutalized and were so maltreated. They had been starved and beaten. They had been worked almost to death, not fed enough, no medical care. One man came up and his fingers were webbed together, all of his fingers together, by sores and scabs. This was due to malnutrition, not eating the proper foods. There were others holding on to each other, trying to remain standing. They had on wooden shoes; they had on the pajama-type uniform; their heads had been shaved. Some had the tattoos with numbers on their arms. I saw this. I saw them with the wooden bowls. Some of them were standing waiting for food and hitting on the fence (this was wire fence) and making guttural sounds—not words,—just sounds.

I said, "My God, what is this insanity that I have come to? What are these people here for? What have they done? What was their crime that would cause people to treat them like this?" You see, I wasn't prepared for this. I was only 19; I had no frame of reference to cope with the kind of thing I was witnessing....

I didn't come up to Boston just to tell you the horror story; as horrible as it is, the story must be told. History can not be swept under the rug. It shouldn't be and you must not permit it to be. We have things in our history that are ugly; slavery was ugly.... It was an evil, horrible institution and the Holocaust is just as evil, if not more so. There was a planned, organized, systematic approach to annihilating a whole group of people. They killed not only six million Jews but millions of others. There were Gypsies there, there were Catholics there, there were Communists, trade unionists, homosexuals; anyone who didn’t fit the scheme of things for the Nazis was in Buchenwald and all the other camps to be annihilated. They came pretty close to doing it too. But somebody had to stand up, somebody had to dare to be a Daniel and walk into the den and say, ”This evil cannot continue....”

Answer the following to discuss Dr. Bass’s life.

- What do you think Dr. Bass thought he would find when he liberated Buchenwald? How did his expectations differ from reality?

- Dr. Bass said, ”...I was going to take off the blinders that caused me to have tunnel vision. I was going to see clearly that, yes, I suffered and I was hurting because I was black in a white society, but I had also begun to understand that suffering is universal....”

What did he mean when said he had had tunnel vision? What important lessons did Dr. Bass discover about after his experiences at Buchenwald?

- Why does Dr. Bass tour the country, making students aware of the Holocaust?

- What do you believe is the most important message the students at English High gained from Dr. Bass’s talk?

Eye-Witness Accounts of the Bombing of Hiroshima

The following testimonies are from three of the 100 A-bomb survivors who were interviewed by the Hiroshima Peace and Cultural Foundation in Japan to commemorate the International Year of Peace 1986. After many years of struggling, those who survived the bombing are rapidly aging. Each person agreed to be interviewed to hand down an accurate record of their experiences to future generations.

Testimony of Taeko Teramae

Ms. Taeko Teramae was 15 years old when the bomb was dropped. She was in the central telephone office, 0.5 kilometers away from the center of the explosion. Many mobilized students were working in the central telephone center that day. Some 7,000 mobilized students were killed by the A-bomb in the city of Hiroshima.

Teramae: When the bomb fell, I was 15 years old. I was a third grader at the girls' junior high school. I saw something shining in the clear blue sky. I wondered what it was, so I stared at it. As the light grew bigger, the shining thing got bigger as well. And at the moment when I spoke to my friend, there was a flash, far brighter than one used for a camera. It exploded right in front of my eyes. There was a tremendous noise when all the buildings around me collapsed. I also heard people crying for help and for their mothers.

I was caught under something which prevented me from moving freely. I was so shocked that I couldn't believe what had happened. I thought maybe I was having some kind of nightmare, but of course, I wasn't. I felt pain when I pinched myself to see if it was real. I thought the bomb had been dropped on the central telephone office. The dust was rising and something sandy and slimy entered my mouth. I couldn't figure out what it was since I couldn't move or see. I couldn't see anything in the dark. A little later, I smelled something like sulfur. It smelled like the volcano, Mt. Aso, and I threw up.

I heard more voices calling "Mother! Mother!" But when our class teacher, Mr. Wakita, told us to behave like good students and stop crying, all the cries for help and for Mother stopped all of a sudden. We began to calm down and try to behave as Mr. Wakita told us to. I tried very hard to move my arms and my legs, and finally I was able to move a little.
I was so surprised to see the dark sky with all the red flames through the window because it was only a few minutes before when the sky was blue and clear. It was all quiet. The city was wrapped, enveloped in red flames. Mr. Wakita came to help me. He asked me if I wanted to swim across the river. The bridge was burning and the river was very high. I had no choice. I could barely see by then, though. And Mr. Wakita took my arms and told me to swim across the river together with him, so together we went into the river and began to swim.

When we reached the middle of the river, I could no longer see anything and I was starting to feel faint. And as I began to feel faint, I also began to lose control. Mr. Wakita encouraged me and helped me to reach the other side of the river. Finally, we reached the other side. What surprised me so much was all the cries of the students for help and for their mothers. It just didn't stop. I couldn't see anything. All I could do was listen to their cries.

I asked my teacher, I asked him what was going on. Mr. Wakita explained to me how the high school students were burnt and crouching in pain in the streets. I couldn't see anything. There were many students who were mobilized to destroy buildings to widen the streets in the area of Tsurumi Bridge, City Hall, and the Chugoku Newspaper on that day. And since they were outside, they were directly exposed to the bomb. Many of them died, many of them died right there. Someone called for help in vain, and some jumped into the river and drowned to death. If my teacher, Mr. Wakita had not come to help me, I would have died in the river.

Interviewer: How were your wounds?

Teramae: If my wounds had been on my arms or my legs, I would have known, but my wounds were on my face, so I had no idea for some time. I just didn't know. I asked my parents how I looked, but they just said that I had only minor wounds. They didn't tell me the truth. After I got better, I found a piece of mirror and looked into it. I was so surprised, I found my left eye looked just like a pomegranate, and I also found cuts on my right eye, on my nose, and on my lower jaw. It was horrible. I was very shocked to find myself looking like a monster. I even wished I had died with my sisters. I was just overcome with apprehension when I thought about it.

Interviewer: What is your biggest hope or dream now that you want to realize?

Teramae: Well, my hope is to have a comprehensive meeting of A-bomb survivors. That's what I want. We had such a meeting the other day and in that meeting, both male and female A-bomb survivors repeatedly said that they wanted their health back again, even for just one day. They said they can't even wear short sleeve shirts because of the scars on their arms left from the bomb. Lonely A-bomb survivors include those who lost their families and also the mobilized students who have remained single because of the wounds caused by the A-bomb. There are great many of them. So, I do hope to do something to support always lonely people.

Testimony of Yoshitaka Kawamoto

Mr. Yoshitaka Kawamoto was 13 years old. He was in the classroom at Zakobacho, 0.8 kilometers away from the center of the explosion. He is now working as the director of the Hiroshima Peace Memorial Museum, telling visitors from all over the world what the atomic bomb did to the people of Hiroshima.

One of my classmates, I think his name is Fujimoto, he muttered something and pointed outside the window, saying, "A B-29 is coming." He pointed outside with his finger. So I began to get up from my chair and asked him, "Where is it?" Looking in the direction that he was pointing towards, I got up on my feet, but I was not yet in an upright position when it happened.

All I can remember was a pale lightening flash for two or three seconds. Then, I collapsed. I don't know much time passed before I came to. It was awful, awful. The smoke was coming in from somewhere above the debris. Sandy dust was flying around. I was trapped under the debris and I was in terrible pain and that's probably why I came to. I couldn't move, not even an inch. Then, I heard about 10 of my surviving classmates singing our school song. I remember that. I could hear sobs. Someone was calling his mother. But those who were still alive were singing the school song for as long as they could. I think I joined the chorus. We thought that someone would come and help us out. That's why we were singing a school song so loud. But nobody came to help, and we stopped singing one by one. In the end, I was singing alone.

Then I started to feel fear creeping in. I started to feel my way out pushing the debris away little by little, using all my strength. Finally I cleared the things around my head. And with my head sticking our of the debris, I realized the scale of the damage. The sky over Hiroshima was dark. Something like a tornado or a big fire ball was storming throughout the city. I was only injured around my mouth and around my arms. But I lost a good deal of blood from my mouth, otherwise I was okay.
I thought I could make my way out. But I was afraid at the thought of escaping alone. We had been going through military drills every day, and they had told us that running away by oneself is an act of cowardice, so I thought I must take somebody along with me. I crawled over the debris, trying to find someone who was still alive. Then, I found one of my classmates lying alive. I held him up in my arms. It is hard to tell, his skull was cracked open, his flesh was dangling out from his head. He had only one eye left, and it was looking right at me. First, he was mumbling something, but I couldn't understand him. He started to bite off his finger nail. I took his finger out from his mouth. And then, I held his hand, then he started to reach for his notebook in his chest pocket, so I asked him, I said, “You want me to take this along to hand it over to your mother?” He nodded. He was going to faint. But still I could hear him crying out, saying “Mother, Mother.”

I thought I could take him along. I guess that his body below the waist was crashed. The lower part of his body was trapped, buried inside of the debris. He told me to go away. And by that time, another wing of the school building, or what used to be the school building, had caught on fire.

I tried to get to the playground. Smoke was filling in the air, but I could see the white sandy earth beneath. I thought this must be the playground, then I started to run in that direction. I turned back and I saw my classmate Wada looking at me. I still remember the situation and it still appears in my dreams. I felt sorry for him, but it was the last time I ever saw him.

As I was running, hands were trying to grab my ankles, they were asking me to take them along. I was only a child then. And I was horrified at so many hands trying to grab me. I was in pain, too. So all I could do was to get rid of them, it’s terrible to say, but I kicked their hands away. I still feel bad about that.

I went to Miyuki Bridge to get some water. At the river bank, I saw so many people collapsed there. And the small steps to the river were jammed, filled with people pushing their way to the water. I was small, so I pushed on the river along the small steps. In the water were dead people. I had to push the bodies aside to drink the muddy water. We didn't know anything about radioactivity that time. I stood up in the water, and so many bodies were floating away along the stream. I can’t find the words to describe it. It was horrible. I felt fear.
Instead of going into the water, I climbed up the river bank. I couldn't move. I couldn't find my shadow. I looked up. I saw the cloud, the mushroom cloud growing in the sky. It was very bright. It had so much heat inside. It caught the light and it showed every color of the rainbow. Reflecting on the past, it's strange, but I could say that it was beautiful. Looking at the cloud, I thought I would never be able to see my mother again, I wouldn't be able to see my younger brother again. And then, I lost consciousness.

When I came to, it was about seven in the evening. I was at the transportation bureau at Ujina. I found myself lying on the floor of the warehouse. And an old soldier was looking in my face. He gave me a light slap on the cheek and he said, "You are a lucky boy." He told me that he had gone with one of the few trucks left to collect the dead bodies at Miyuki Bridge. They were loading bodies, treating them like sacks. They picked me up from the river bank and then, threw me on top of the pile. My body slid off. When they grabbed my by the arm to put me back onto the truck, they felt that my pulse was still beating, so they reloaded me onto the truck carrying the survivors.

I was so weak. My hair came off, even the hair in my nose fell out. My hair, it started to come off about two weeks later. I became completely bald. My eyes, I lost my eye sight, probably not because of the radioactivity, but because I became so weak. I couldn’t see for about three months. But I was only 13, I was still young, and I was still growing when I was hit by the A-bomb. So about one year later. I regained my health. I recovered good health.

Today I am still working as you can see. As the director of the Hiroshima Peace Memorial Museum, today, I am handing my message over to the children who visit. I want them to learn about Hiroshima. And when they grow up, I want them to hand down the message to the next generation with accurate information. I'd like to see him conveying the right sense of judgment so that we will not lead mankind to annihilation. That is our responsibility.
Testimony of Akira Onogi

Mr. Akira Onogi was 16 years old when the bomb was dropped. He was at home 1.2 km away from center of explosion. The house was under the shade of the warehouse, which protected him from the first blast. All five members of the Onogi family miraculously survived the immediate fire at their house.

Onogi: I was in the second year of junior high school and was in mobilized work with my classmates at the Eba Plant, Mitsubishi shipbuilding. On the day when A-bomb was dropped, I happened to be taking the day off and I was staying at home. I was reading lying on the floor with a friend of mine. Under the eaves I saw blue flash of light just like a spark made by a train or some short circuit. Next, a steam-like blast came.

Interviewer: From which direction?

Onogi: Well, I'm not sure, anyway, when the blast came, my friend and I were blown into another room. I was unconscious for a while, and when I came to, I found myself in the dark. Thinking my house was directly hit by a bomb, I removed red soil and roof tiles covering me by hand and for the first time I saw the sky. I managed to go out to open space and I looked around wondering what my family were doing. I found that all the houses around there had collapsed for as far as I could see.

Interviewer: All the houses?

Onogi: Yes, well, I couldn't see anyone around me but I heard somebody shouting “Help! Help!” from somewhere. The cries were actually from underground as I was walking on. Since no choices were available, I'd just dug out red soil and roof tiles by hand to help my family; my mother, my three sisters, and a child of one of my sisters. Then, I looked next door and I saw the father of neighboring family standing almost naked. His skin was peeling off all over his body and was hanging from finger tips. I talked to him but he was too exhausted to give me a reply. He was looking for his family desperately.

When we were escaping from the edge of the bridge, we found this small girl crying and she asked us to help her mother. Just beside the girl, her mother was trapped by a fallen beam on top of the lower half of her body. Together with neighbors, we tried hard to remove the beam, but it was impossible without any tools. Finally a fire broke out endangering us. So we had no choice but to leave her. She was conscious and we deeply bowed to her with clasped hands to apologize to her and then we left.

About one hour later, it started raining heavily. There were large drops of black rain. I was wearing a short sleeve shirt and shorts and it was freezing. Everybody was shivering. We warmed ourselves up around the burning fire in the middle of the summer.

Interviewer: You mean the fire did not extinguish by the rain?

Onogi: That's right. The fire didn't subside it at all. What impressed me very strongly was a five or six-year-old boy with his right leg cut at the thigh. He was hopping on his left foot to cross over the bridge. I can still record this scene very clearly. The water of the river now is very clean and clear, but on the day of bombing, all the houses along this river were blown by the blast with their pillars, beams, and pieces of furniture blown into the river or hanging off the bridges. The river was also filled with dead people blown by the blast and with survivors who came here to seek water. Anyway, I could not see the surface of the water at all. Many injured people with peeled skin were crying out for help. Obviously they were looking at us and we could hardly turn our eyes toward the river.

Interviewer: Wasn't it possible to help them?

Onogi: No, there were too many people. We took care of the people around us by using the clothes of dead people as bandages, especially for those who were terribly wounded. By that time, we somehow became insensible to all those awful things. After a while, the fire reached the river bank and we decided to leave the river. We crossed over this railway bridge and escaped in the direction along the railway. The houses on both sides of the railroad were burning and railway was the hollow in the fire. I thought I was going to die here. It was such an awful experience. You know for about 10 years after bombing I always felt paralyzed whenever we saw the sparks made by trains or lightning. Also, even at home, I could not sit beside the windows because I had seen so many people badly wounded by pieces of glass. So I always sat with the wall behind me for about 10 years. It was some sort of instinct to self-preservation.

II. REPRODUCTION RELEASE:

In order to disseminate as widely as possible timely and significant materials of interest to the educational community, documents announced in the monthly abstract journal of the ERIC system, Resources in Education (RIE), are usually made available to users in microfiche, reproduced paper copy, and electronic media, and sold through the ERIC Document Reproduction Service (EDRS). Credit is given to the source of each document, and, if reproduction release is granted, one of the following notices is affixed to the document.

If permission is granted to reproduce and disseminate the identified document, please CHECK ONE of the following three options and sign at the bottom of the page.

The sample sticker shown below will be affixed to all Level 1 documents

PERMISSION TO REPRODUCE AND DISSEMINATE THIS MATERIAL HAS BEEN GRANTED BY

TO THE EDUCATIONAL RESOURCES INFORMATION CENTER (ERIC)

Level 1

Check here for Level 1 release, permitting reproduction and dissemination in microfiche or other ERIC archival media (e.g., electronic) and paper copy.

The sample sticker shown below will be affixed to all Level 2A documents

PERMISSION TO REPRODUCE AND DISSEMINATE THIS MATERIAL IN MICROFICHE, AND IN ELECTRONIC MEDIA FOR ERIC COLLECTION SUBSCRIBERS ONLY, HAS BEEN GRANTED BY

Level 2A

Check here for Level 2A release, permitting reproduction and dissemination in microfiche and in electronic media for ERIC archival collection subscribers only.

The sample sticker shown below will be affixed to all Level 2B documents

Level 2B

Check here for Level 2B release, permitting reproduction and dissemination in microfiche only.

Documents will be processed as indicated provided reproduction quality permits. If permission to reproduce is granted, but no box is checked, documents will be processed at Level 1.

I hereby grant to the Educational Resources Information Center (ERIC) nonexclusive permission to reproduce and disseminate this document as indicated above. Reproduction from the ERIC microfiche or electronic media by persons other than ERIC employees and its system contractors requires permission from the copyright holder. Exception is made for non-profit reproduction by libraries and other service agencies to satisfy information needs of educators in response to discrete inquiries.
