Developed by classroom teachers during the development phase of Minnesota's Graduation Standards, this performance package is made up of locally designed assignments that, taken together, show whether a student has learned and can apply the knowledge and skills related to writing short stories and letters for a variety of academic and technical purposes and audiences. It begins with reference to the particular content standard addressed in the package, the educational level of the package (intermediate), and a summary statement of the content standard. It then describes the tasks associated with the student performances: (1) write three short stories based on direct observation or experience; and (2) write three formal letters. It then offers specific statements from the standard regarding what students should know and should do, the products, task description, special notes, and feedback checklists for each task enumerated in the package. Content Standard: Write and Speak: Writing
Title of Package/Activity: Publication Portfolio

Summary Statement of Content Standard:
Write for a variety of academic and technical purposes and audiences.

Description of Student Performances:

Task 1: Write three short stories based upon direct observation or experience.

Task 2: Write three formal letters.

FINAL ACHIEVEMENT: Use the following scoring criteria when evaluating student performance.

Scoring Criteria
4 - Performance on this standard achieves and exceeds expectations of high standard work.
3 - Performance on this standard meets the expectations of high standard work.
2 - Work on this standard has been completed, but all or part of the student's performance is below high standard level.
1 - Work on this standard has been completed, but performance is substantially below high standard level. No package score is recorded until ALL parts of the package have been completed.
Specific Statement(s) from the Standard:

A student shall demonstrate the ability to write for a variety of academic and technical purposes and audiences by:

1. writing a story based on direct experience or observation including:
   a. a problem solved, a conflict resolved, or a lesson learned
   b. a description of setting using vivid details
   c. a flow of action leading to a logical ending
   d. an image of at least one character
   e. dialogue that captures authentic oral expression.
2. editing the finished product for correct mechanics and spelling

Product(s):

- Pre-writing materials
- Working drafts of three stories
- Three short stories

Task Description:

Overview: Students write three short stories based on direct experience or observation. Students will demonstrate use of a writing process, including pre-writing, drafting, conferencing, revising, and editing. This task may extend over the course of a school year. Students will save all documents created and used in the writing process. The following steps should be followed for each of the three stories.

Teachers should model the steps below and give regular feedback to students on each step.

Steps:

1. Students complete a series of pre-writing exercises to prepare for and gather ideas for their story.
   Exercises may come from your existing writing curriculum, focusing on the elements listed here:
   - a problem solved, a conflict resolved, or a lesson learned
   - detailed observation of settings
   - a flow of action that leads to a logical ending
   - detailed images of characters
   - dialogue that captures authentic oral expression.

   Exercises may take the form of webs, idea maps, lists, drawings, and writings.
   (pre-writing)

2. Using ideas from their pre-writing exercises, students select a topic or focus for their short story. The topic should be based upon either direct experience or observation, but it need not be autobiographical. Have students select a topic which they can develop most fully in the areas of:
   - conflict
   - setting
   - characterization
   - dialogue.
   (pre-writing, focusing)

3. Students plan their writing using a mapping, clustering, or outlining strategy.
   (focusing)

4. Students draft a short story. If possible, have students word process their work, either transposing handwritten copies or composing directly on the computer. Stories should include use of the bulleted elements in Step 1.
   (drafting)

5. Students read each other's work to give feedback on the content of the story. It is helpful for students to have multiple peer readings of their work to ensure quality review. Feedback should focus on use of the story elements bulleted in Step 1.
   (conferencing)

   Give students feedback on their story.

6. Students revise their story based on feedback from peer and adult readers.
   (revising)

7. Students edit their own story. An effective way to do this is to have students quietly read their piece aloud, listening for and circling any mistakes or things they are uncertain about in the areas of:
   - punctuation
   - spelling
   - sentence structure
   - paragraphing.

Students then may receive editing help from peer or adult readers. These readers should use a different colored pen or pencil to distinguish their marks from those of the student.

(editing, conferencing)

8. Students prepare a final draft of their story using the editing remarks of peer and adult readers. Students should consult with peers regarding other editorial uncertainties.

(drafting, conferencing)

9. Students should repeat any of Steps 1-8 as needed to bring their stories to "publishable" form.

10. Students submit final drafts to you and, if possible, publish their stories more widely. Possibilities for publication include: creating a class compilation of stories; binding the story as an illustrated picture book; contributing the story to an anthology; entering the story in a contest for young writers; submitting the story to a magazine, journal or organization that publishes student writing.

Overall Comments (information about student progress, quality of the work, next steps for teacher and student, needed adjustments in the teaching and learning processes, and problems to be addressed):
Specific Statement(s) from the Standard:

A student shall demonstrate the ability to write for a variety of academic and technical purposes and audiences by:

2. writing to request an action or a product with final edit suitable for a real world audience including:
   a. necessary information and detail using appropriate vocabulary
   b. use of formal structures and courteous conventions
3. editing the finished product for correct mechanics and spelling

Product:

- Working drafts of three letters
- Three formal letters

Task Description:

Overview: Students will write three formal letters requesting an action or a product. Topics for the letters may be taken from existing curriculum in any content area. Students will demonstrate use of a writing process, including pre-writing, drafting, conferencing, revising, and editing. This task may extend over the course of a school year. Students will save all documents created and used in the writing process. The following steps should be followed for each of the three letters.

Teachers should model the steps below and give regular feedback to students on each step.

Steps:

1. Students identify a person or organization to whom they will write for an action or product. The topics for student letters can arise from the context of existing curriculum in any content area. For example, students may write to a local elected official about a political issue, to a scientist about a theory or experiment, to a store or company for a sample product, or to a state or national park for tourist information.
   (pre-writing)

2. Instruct students on the structure and format of formal business letters and explain standard courteous conventions. Format should include use of:
   - correct heading
   - correct inside address
   - appropriate salutation
   - consistent paragraphs
   - correct spacing
   - appropriate closing.
   (pre-writing)

3. Students write a draft of their letter, focusing on:
   - having a clearly stated purpose
   - using appropriate vocabulary and courteous language
   - organizing their information or ideas
   - following a designated format.

   If possible, have students word process their work, either transposing handwritten copies or composing directly at a computer.
   (focusing, drafting)

4. Students read each other’s work to give feedback on the content of the letter. It is helpful for students to have multiple peer readings of their work to ensure quality review. Feedback should focus on the items listed in Step 3.
   (conferencing)

   Give students feedback on their letter.

5. Students revise their letter based on feedback from peer and adult readers.
   (revising)

6. Students edit their own letter. An effective way to do this is to have students quietly read their piece aloud, listening for and circling any mistakes or things they are uncertain about in the areas of:
   - punctuation
   - spelling
   - sentence structure
   - paragraphing
   - format.

   Students then may receive editing help from peer or adult readers. These readers should use a different colored pen or pencil to distinguish their marks from those of the student.
   (editing, conferencing)

7. Students prepare a final draft of their letter using the editing remarks of peer and adult readers. Students should look up questionable spellings in a dictionary and consult with peers regarding other editorial uncertainties.
   (drafting)

8. Students should repeat any of Steps 1-7 as needed to bring their letters to "publishable" form.

9. To prepare for mailing the letter, students address the envelope and fold the letter appropriately. If students are sending their letters to an authentic audience rather than a simulated one, ensure that a copy of the letter is stored with the student's other written works.
   (publishing)
The purpose of the checklist is to provide feedback to the student about his/her work relative to the content standard. Have the standard available for reference.
